A. I'd say that morning, on September 11th, it was 8:48 a.m., one gentleman at house watch, one of the firefighters, saw on the news flash that Tower 1 was hit, the north tower was hit by a plane. Everybody started getting their gear ready because we knew we were going. I was actually kind of excited because I thought it was going to be a big job. We didn't know the size of the plane that hit it. We just saw a lot of smoke. Our tones went off and it was a voice alarm and they were basically just calling companies off. It basically ran up the west side. I remember it going from 35, 40, 74, 25, straight up the west side they were calling us, and we responded. I'm almost 100 percent sure that we were en route pretty much when the second plane hit. I don't remember seeing it on the news when the second plane hit. So I'm almost 100 percent sure we were en route.

When we got down to the scene, it was pretty hectic. We pulled up close to the north tower and then saw that it was pretty ugly, a lot of debris falling, a lot of people running. We moved the rig and went to the west side command post. Ladder 22 and Ladder 25 I remember seeing go to the north tower. I mean, I apologize, the south tower. We were basically standing fast just watching what was going on.

I remember hearing people shouting about a third plane being in the air. I don't know if that's what held us back from going right away. But we waited basically until I saw our Lieutenant Farrington coming back and we thought he had our orders where we were going. So we were grabbing our gear and we were walking out to meet him and we were in front of the parking garage in front of 2 World Financial Center, the Merrill Lynch building, which is basically on the southwest corner of the north tower and right across the street from the Vista International Hotel, and that's when we heard a tremendous noise and it was coming from the south tower, and we looked up and it was coming down.

I basically froze and Rich Banaciski shoved me and told me to run, and I remember there being a large number of people behind us as we turned to run. I remember making it into the tunnel and it was this incredible amount of wind, debris, heat. I remember falling down, getting back up, and the guys were just falling all over each other. It wasn't like we were trying to kill each other, but it was all bets were off, just run.

I made a right in the tunnel. I was with some other guys. I can't remember the engine company. They're from the east side. They were trying to force a door in the right of the tunnel and it turned out to be a storage shed. I remember when I fell down, I picked up a mask and I put the mask on and I was buddy breathing with a few of the guys because the air was so thick and pulling out like baseball clumps of debris out of your mouth. We knew that we couldn't force that door.

My Lieutenant, Farrington, from Engine 76, we heard him screaming and banging his tool against something metal and I distinctly remember hearing his voice. He had found the exit to the back of 2 World Financial Center, and it was a maze of stairways, but we got out. He found the exit, set up a search rope, brought it back, and he got out about I'd probably say 40 guys out of the tunnel.

Then we exited out by the marina, the North Cove Yacht Harbor, where we all basically just took a knee and we waited a couple of minutes. Everybody was in shock. We didn't know what happened. We just thought it was debris or an explosion or a secondary explosion or another bomb inside the building or another plane.

We got up and we made our way around through what turned out to be the North End Avenue and we hit Vesey. I'd say probably 25 minutes had elapsed by now. We were walking up Vesey and we got to Vesey and the West Side Highway and we were making the turn. I remember seeing the bridge as we turned and somebody came running by us saying the north tower was leaning. I didn't even know the south tower fell yet. I looked up and I actually saw the antenna coming down.

I just took off running again. I headed straight down Vesey. I wound up breaking up with the rest of my company, and I wound up by the railing by the water. I remember there was a bunch of senior men there and they were getting out of their bunker gear and they were getting ready to jump in the water because you could see ferries out in the distance waving us on. They said, "Get out of your gear. We're going in the water."

When I was younger, I used to work out in the Hamptons on people's boats and I remember currents. I knew the currents down there would just kill us, you know, they'd find us in South Jersey. So I just buried myself in the fence and hoped for the best.

The debris cloud pretty much caught us, but it seemed like right by the time it hit North End it stopped. I think the wind was blowing a different direction. It was pulling it all east. That's what it turned out to be because I remember the command post, everything that was set up later was set up on the west side because the wind was taking all the smoke and debris east.

I wandered around looking for the rest of my company, which was Rich Banaciski, Richie Batista, Billy Reynolds, George Rodriguez, and George was with the rig and we were sure that he was under it, and Lieutenant Farrington. It took me, if I had to guess, I'd probably say about 45 minutes before I found the rest of my company and that was on the West Side Highway and everybody was just lying on the West Side Highway. By that time there was just hordes of firemen coming down the West Side Highway whatever way they could get there. I guess it was the recall. I don't know if that was hours later, but I remember seeing guys that weren't working that day that came down, and we were all just waiting to get back in.

When they let us back in, it was early afternoon. I'd say it was probably 1:30, 2:00 o'clock. We searched 140 West, the New York Telephone Company building, for 15, 16 floors. It was myself, George Rodriguez, Doug Robinson, a battalion aide, and Captain Pellegrinelli. We forced numerous amounts of doors, but we were basically searching in the wreckage of, if you were on West Side Highway, it would be the exposure four side of the telephone company building. It had gaping, massive holes that you could fit a house in, you know, what it looked like from the inside. So we basically crawled in the rubble there and looked for victims on each floor because the holes took up several floors.

We heard a Mayday for everybody to get out of the building -- no, I'm sorry, an urgent, three urgents, and we came out of the building. I'd say that was like an hour and a half, two hours later. We were then positioned on Vesey Street between North End and the West Side Highway because there was an imminent collapse on 7 World Trade, and it did collapse.

As far as other companies, I don't know. I knew from sticking my head out the window going down that we were by 35 and 40. I think they were ahead of us when we pulled in. I'm sorry. 35 Truck and I can't remember the engine down there, 25, 74, I think 47 was there.

Q. These are all the rigs that were on West street?

A. Yes. We were headed down together. From what I saw, we all pretty much met up on the West Side Highway at the same time because the alarms went off and we're all fairly the same distance from the on ramps.

That's about it. That's my story. I wish I could be more helpful.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: No, that's been fine. You've been very helpful. Thank you for your cooperation.

THE WITNESS: No problem.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 4:10 and this interview is completed.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER LOUIS GIACONELLI

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 6, 2001. The time is 6:52 p.m. and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Louis Giaconelli.

Q. Please tell us anything you remember about the events of September 11th.

A. I reported in for work before the change of tours and I was already ready to drive. I was assigned chauffeur that day in Engine 53. I was upstairs in the bunk room when the first plane hit the first tower. I heard some of the other firefighters talking about it. I slid the pole, made sure I had all my gear on the rig and made sure that the rig was full of fuel.

Then the second plane hit the second tower. I was pretty sure after the first plane had hit the first tower that we'd be going down there, and when the second plane hit, I definitely knew we were going down there. Then we were assigned on the second fifth alarm to the second tower that was struck.

I started to drive down there. I went on various streets. I do remember going down Lexington Avenue to 97th Street, I believe, and then I went down 5th Avenue to the 90th Street entrance to Central Park, and I went down Central Park Drive on the east side to 72nd Street, across 72nd Street, and I got on the West Drive and came out of the park by Tavern on the Green on 66th Street, I think, and Central Park West. I went down Broadway to 57th Street, made a right, and I went to 11th Avenue, where we started to pick up radio transmissions that we were to respond down 11th Avenue because the police had opened up lanes for us or they had corridors open for us. So I went down 11th Avenue and, sure enough, we picked up a few police cars in front of us or vans and we made it down there pretty quick.

When I got there, there were already a significant amount of rigs there, and I found a parking spot along the right-hand side, along the west side of West Street, and I actually was close to a hydrant that I could have hooked up to if I had to. I noticed that rigs were parked on both sides of the street and that there was a lane open straight down.

So when we got there, we were driving down, obviously, we had a clear view of the towers. We knew that both of them were on fire. There were thousands of people running up West Street when we were driving down, thousands of people. So I parked the rig.

Everybody got out, got their masks on, and I yelled to my officer, I said, "I'm not going to stay here with the rig." I said, "I'm going to come with you guys." He said, "Yeah, definitely." So I had all my bunker gear with me and I had a spare mask. So I put it all on and I went down with the company. We walked down West Street and we reported in to the command post staging area.

As we were walking down, I was just looking up and I saw it was a lot of smoke, but it was up high. It was a crystal clear day and there was a lot of stuff in the air, in the sky, floating around, and I was trying to get my bearings. I saw something weird coming off the building and I looked up and I didn't know what it was and I was trying to get a sense of what was happening, if things were falling on us, but it turned out they were bodies. There were people jumping off the top of the buildings. So then I realized how bad it was up there.

We got in to the command post staging area and my officer Reported in and tried to get us an assignment. So we stood in the staging area, which was in the driveway to an underground garage going into the World Financial Center. We stood there for a few minutes and made sure we had all our gear on, and we were trying to figure out what was going on and it was a calamity. A lot of smoke, a lot of debris coming down, bodies coming down, landing right in front of us.

So while we were waiting to get our assignment, Captain John Sudnik, who I knew from 23 Engine, I think, was giving out the assignments and he asked my officer if we could move some rigs to make sure the lanes were clear coming down to the World Financial Center. So it was myself -- I wasn't the only chauffeur working. I know Kevin McGovern was working, too. He was a chauffeur. Eddie Cachia was working also and he was a chauffeur. So we had those two guys and two probies with us.

So between the three of us, we dropped our masks and all our gear, we kept our bunker gear on, though, and we walked back up West Street to see if any rigs had to be moved, like he asked us to do, and we found one or two. I know I myself moved one or two, I don't recall, that were blocking the path a little bit, and I got them out of the way. Then we got together again and we all started walking back down West Street.

I remember passing underneath that north pedestrian bridge, and I was just about to get back to the entrance to the driveway to the staging area and I heard this sound, and it was like a train, like a huge train rumbling, and I knew that something was coming off the building, but I didn't know what it was. So I think Lieutenant Doherty and Eddie Cachia were in front of me. We were kind of walking in single file, and I think those two guys were in front of me and I was third or fourth. I don't recall. I know the two probies were behind me and I think Kevin McGovern was a little behind me, too.

So I remember Lieutenant Doherty and Eddie Cachia went for the driveway and I said to myself I wasn't going to make it, but I knew I had to find someplace to ditch. So I looked to my right and a High-Rise 2 Unit, which I didn't notice at the time what it was, but I figured out later a High-Rise 2 Unit was parked on the grass to the right of the staging area driveway and just in front of the entrance to the big glass atrium going into the World Financial Center. I didn't think I could make it to the entrance of the building. I think that's where Kevin McGovern went, and I don't know where the probies went.

So I just dove underneath the High-Rise 2

Unit. I dove underneath there, and just as I got underneath there, the first building had collapsed. I didn't realize the whole building had collapsed. I knew something significant had come down, but I didn't realize at the time that it was the whole building. So I dove under the rig and there was another guy underneath there with me. It turned out he was a fire patrolman. He wasn't a firefighter. But we were under the rig and the next thing I knew, I heard the crash, I felt the impact, and it went from day to night.

We couldn't see anything. I couldn't see anything, and then, of course, we couldn't breathe anymore, and the guy next to me starts yelling that he couldn't breathe, couldn't breathe. I had my hood around my neck and I was able to get it up over my nose, and between breathing through my hood and into my coat, I was able to breathe for a while. I just laid there for a few minutes and tried to stay calm and get the other guy calmed down and I just waited until I thought everything was safe again.

So after a few minutes we were able to see some light again, and I started to crawl out and I dug myself out and then I poked my head out from under the rig. The other guy came out with me and we stood up and kind of shook each other, made sure we were okay. I said, "Are you all right?" He said, "Yes." He said, "Are you all right?" I said, "Yeah, we're all right."

So with that we kind of went our separate ways, and I just took a quick look around and I don't recall ever looking up. I don't really ever recall looking up. Not that there was anything to see. It was all dust and debris and there really wasn't much to see.

So I made my way back just a couple of feet into the driveway and I went looking for my mask and I found it. It was right where I had left it and it was buried, but I was able to dig it out. Most of our equipment was still all there and everybody was clearly shook. I don't mean shook that they were scared. They obviously had been affected by the impact of this thing, and we were all covered with dust and dirt and debris and you couldn't breathe and that stuff. So I got my mask on, but by the time I got it on and hooked up, I didn't have to put it on my face. I was able to breathe normally. I made my way down into the entrance of the underground garage and into the World Financial Center.

So we decided to make our way up the stairway of that basement of that building up into the upper floors. When I got into the building and we started finding our way in there, we were kind of strung out and I was still with Lieutenant Doherty, I think, and Eddie Cachia. Kevin McGovern and the two probies, I don't know where they were. I remember trying to find my way through this maze down there and I finally found a staircase and made my way up.

Somewhere along in that process I came across the members of Ladder 16. Danny Williams was the officer I remember and I know Stevie Wright was there, Joe Petrich, Oscar Davila, and I can't remember who else. But they had an EMS worker, I don't know if he was a New York City EMS worker, but he was definitely an EMS worker or EMT, on a stretcher, not a board, not a back board, a stretcher, and they asked me if I could help them carry this guy out. I kind of said, "Well, what's wrong with him?" They said, "We think he has a broken leg and a broken arm."

So he was kind of a big guy and they were having a really tough time trying to get him up the stairs because it was a real tight staircase and this guy was big and we had all our gear on. I mean, I had all my bunker gear on and my mask, and we were trying to carry this guy up. I think there were about four or five guys from Ladder 16, me and maybe one other guy, I don't recall, and we struggled to get this guy up these stairs. We struggled so bad that even at one point I asked the guy if it was possible that he could walk because we were having such a hard time with him, and the guy said he didn't think so.

Anyway, we wound up carrying him up. I don't know how many flights of stairs it was, but we got him up. I think it was probably at least three, maybe four flights, and we popped a door and we wound up in the huge atrium or lobby of the World Financial Center. We carried him out and I made it through the building and came out on the back side of the building. So now I was in I think it's the harbor area. I don't know what it's called.

Q. Marina?

A. The marina area, I guess. So that building is 2 World Financial Center. That's the Merrill Lynch building, I guess.

So I came out on the other side and I found Lieutenant Doherty from 53 and Eddie Cachia from 53 and they were searching around there, and we talked for a few minutes and made sure we were okay and tried to digest what had happened to us. We started searching around, and I was curious or worried about what had happened to Kevin McGovern and the two probies. Somehow or another they went in one direction and I went in the other. I wound up going into, looking at the map here, it says the Winter Garden, which was this glass atrium that I was in.

So I went into the glass atrium and I started working my way to the front of the building. When I was in there, it was pretty desolate. I didn't see any other firefighters and I really didn't see any other people, except I do remember seeing a few civilians walking around and they looked like they were workers from the building, not us, but maintenance workers that had semi-uniforms on.

So I started working my way to the front of the building and I got to the front door of the building. When I got to the front door of the building, I took a quick look up and I saw that the north tower was directly in front of me, still burning, and I don't really remember looking for the south tower, but my view might have been obstructed at that point because the Winter Garden door was a little set back from the World Financial Center entrance.

So I took a few steps outside the entrance of the building onto the stairway there, and the High-Rise 2 Unit that I had been under when the first building came down was parked right there on the right-hand side on the grass. I took a few steps and I was looking around, and the next thing I knew, I heard the same sound that I'd heard when the first building had come down. So I didn't have to look up. I knew what the sound was. I didn't have to look up. It was the same sound I had heard when the first building came down.

So, again, I was caught out in the open and I didn't really know where to go. I guess instantly I decided not to go under the High-Rise 2 Unit. I decided to turn and try and run back into the building. So that's what I did.

As I ran through the door, I remember saying to myself close the door behind you, close the door behind you. But, of course, I didn't really have time to do that or even attempt it. I just tried to run as fast as I could, and I didn't get very far. The building came down and, of course, the concussion from the impact blew me down and knocked me down and blew my helmet off my head and sent me flying down I guess it was the hallway of the main entrance of the building.

There was a tremendous crash and glass and then the same effect that had happened the first time. It went from day to night. A huge, huge blast of hot wind gusting and smoke and dust and all kinds of debris hit me and blew me over and covered me, and the same thing. I just tried to get my head down into my hood and my face inside of my coat where I could try and breathe again because it was the same thing. I couldn't see and I couldn't breathe. It was just a repeat of the same thing that happened to me the first time.

So I waited, it seemed like an eternity, but I waited a few seconds, and then, of course, I remembered that I had my mask on my back this time. So I reached back and turned it on or made sure it was on, I don't recall, and grabbed the face piece. Of course, I blew into the face piece like you're supposed to do and it didn't make any difference. The face piece was full of debris and dust and who knows what else. I took a couple of quick hits off it and I got two mouthfuls and nosefuls and my eyes all full of stuff that was in the mask and the stuff that was all around me.

Eventually that cleared up and I was able to wear the mask. I got my mask on and, of course, I started hearing some screaming and yelling around me. So there obviously were some other people around, and then I remembered that I had seen a few civilians or these maintenance workers in the building to my right as I had walked in, so then now they were to my left.

So I started crawling along the floor because I couldn't see anything, and I was right alongside the wall and I got my right hand on the wall and started following the wall along, and I found my helmet. Hard to believe, but I found my helmet. It had been blown down the hallway a distance and I came across it and I was able to get it on my head. I had also had a flashlight. So I just crawled along the wall, crawled along the wall, and I heard a guy screaming in front of me and, sure enough, I eventually came to him and found him. I grabbed him and told him he was okay, and I just said, "Stay with me and we'll find our way out."

As I started going along, I came across the other people that I heard yelling or screaming in the atrium. So I got them all together and I had them all hold on to me or follow me along the wall and somehow or another I saw light. Even though it was pitch black where I was and we couldn't see, I saw light coming from somewhere. I said, "Let's go. Let's see where this light is coming from."

It turned out that it was a storefront and the light was coming from another atrium that was behind the store that was in the atrium. I don't remember if the door was open or whatever. I didn't have to force the door, but we were able to open it. Maybe it just swung open. I popped in there and it was clear as a bell in there. We could see and we could breathe. So I got all these people in there.

What these guys were doing, and I give them a lot of credit, these maintenance guys, they had a woman, a black woman, I remember, and she was kind of large also and they, much to their credit, were trying to carry her out of this building. They were inside the building, but they still got impacted by the collapse of the north tower.

So I got them all into the storefront and got them all calmed down. They were pretty excited and nervous. I got them all calmed down and I said, "Okay. We're okay here. Just stay here," I said, "and I'll find a way out and then I'll come back and get you. So just stay here. I'll find a way out and I'll come back and get you."

I put my mask back on again and I had my flashlight, the same thing, just followed along the right-hand side of the wall, worked my way around. I went through the whole glass atrium and I found an exit door and I popped out, and again I popped out onto the harbor side of the World Financial Center. So then I got my bearings and I left the door open and I retraced my steps back to the same store that I had left the people in and got them out. I counted heads and I made sure I had, I believe it was seven people. I made sure I had seven, and I said, "Okay. Let's just follow me and we'll just follow our way out." I just followed the wall all the way back and they followed me, and I got them back to that exit door and got them out into the harbor area and that was it. That was the last I saw of them.

Then I started looking around, and it was pretty desolate down there. There was really nobody around. Off in the distance I saw my Lieutenant, Bobby Doherty, and Eddie Cachia from 53, and they had been down by the seawall when the second tower had come down. They said they had wedged themselves up against it and still got blasted there, too, tremendously. I guess you could say they were kind of far away but really not far away enough, and they were impacted enough that Bobby Doherty said he actually thought he was going to have to jump in the water to get away from it.

So then we regrouped, the three of us, and we didn't know what to do really. It was clear that where we had been had been completely demolished and devastated, and we were in pretty bad shape. Our eyes were full of stuff and, of course, our noses and our mouths were all full of debris and we were trying to breathe. Because we knew we couldn't use our masks constantly. We would run out of air. So in the open air we had to breathe the air. We just couldn't use our tanks for any length of time.

So we started working our way north around the back of the World Financial Center, and I guess we either went through the back, the glass atrium behind the American Express building, or we went on -- I'm looking at the map here. It looks like maybe North End Avenue. I don't recall how we found our way to Vesey Street. But somehow or another we found our way to Vesey Street, and then we went over to West Street and we started to walk north.

We went north about as far as Barclay, I believe, and we sat down along the wall there and we tried to collect our thoughts and figure out what to do and what had happened to us and all that. I don't think we ever really realized that the two buildings had come down. I guess we maybe knew it but we weren't sure. We sat down and, again, we were surrounded by hundreds of people, a lot of cops. Everybody was covered with dirt and dust and debris.

I noticed a lot of people had cell phones. So for some reason or another we asked somebody if we could use their cell phone, and Kevin McGovern called his wife and we asked his wife to notify my family and Bobby Doherty's family that we were okay.

Then we sat there for a few minutes and we came across a lot of people, but I remember specifically running into Pete Clinton, who was the chauffeur of Engine 22, and Joey Graziano, who was the chauffeur of Ladder 13, and they looked shook, but Pete Clinton was all banged up. He wasn't wearing bunker gear. He was driving. He just had shorts on and a work shirt, and he was all banged up and bruised and covered with dust and clearly distraught. Joe Graziano had all his gear on. As it turned out, they were the only survivors of their company, and I told them to stay with us. They stayed with us for a while, and then we decided to make our way back down West Street back to the site to see what we could do. We didn't stay up there very long, maybe ten or 15 minutes.

So we made our way back down West Street and on the way down I started looking for our rig. I didn't know where our rig was. I couldn't remember where I parked it. Of course, the whole landscape now changed, so I had no idea where it was. So we started walking down West Street and I was looking for the rig, looking for the rig, and I couldn't find it. I thought for sure that it had been crushed.

So we made our way back down as far as we could and started searching around, and I asked somebody if they knew where 53's rig was and somebody, I don't recall who, said they thought they saw it, it was over on the west side, somebody had moved it. So I told Bobby Doherty, "Let's see if we can find the rig," because, obviously, if we could find the rig, we could get some tools and maybe fresh bottles for our masks and start working down at the site.

So all of us took a walk over on Vesey Street and, sure enough, there was the rig. It was hooked up to one of the marine units. It was already hooked up and pumping water. It was relaying water to another engine and they were supplying a tower ladder with water. I guess they were pouring water I think on the Customs Building. We also noticed that 7 World Financial Center was fully involved there, too.

We started getting whatever gear we needed off the rig, and there was another chauffeur working on 53's rig and he was supplying water. He asked me if I was the chauffeur of 53, and I said yes, I was. He said, "Would you mind taking over here? I'd like to get back to my unit." I said yeah, sure, I would, and I basically operated for the rest of the day while 53's guys went down to the site. I went over there a few times, but I basically operated 53's rig for most of the day pumping water, relaying it to the other engines and the tower ladder.

I did go over to the site a few times to try and help out, but my eyes were very bad and I couldn't really see very well. About 2:00 or 3:00 in the afternoon, I finally had gotten them washed out once, but it didn't work, and I started going to the triage areas and washing my eyes out, washing my eyes out, and they just weren't getting any better.

I wound up staying down there. I was down there from about 9:20 in the morning until maybe 10:00, 10:30 at night, and we wound up going to the main medical facility and they told me my eyes were no good, they had to take me to the hospital, and they wound up taking me and Eddie Cachia and I think Bobby Doherty, too, to the hospital, where they worked on my eyes and checked me out for anything else that was wrong.

One thing I forgot to say was, after the second building had collapsed and we worked our way up West Street, I had run into the two probies that I had been looking for all morning, Mike Catalano and Dan Schofield, and they were okay. I still to this day don't really know where they went. I don't know if they ran into the Winter Garden glass atrium or if they just went up north on West street after the first building had collapsed, and I don't know where they were when the second building had collapsed.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. Well, thanks a lot, Louie. We appreciate your cooperation. The time now is 7:22 p.m. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER VINCENT PALMIERI

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: The date is December 6, 2001. The time is now 11:08 a.m. This is Battalion Chief John Malkin of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department.

I'm conducting an interview today with Firefighter first Vincent Palmieri of Engine Company Number 6 regarding events of September 11, 2001. We are in the quarters of Engine 4. There is no one else present in the room and the interview begins now.

Q. Say whatever you like.

A. Basically I was on my way into the city that day through New Jersey when I first heard of a plane hitting the Trade Center and I tuned into 1010 WINS to hear what was going on. Being from lower Manhattan, I knew all the companies would be there. As I was going further in on the Turnpike, I started coming in through the Holland Tunnel when the second plane hit. I was able to actually see the Trade Center, both of them, smoke coming from them.

I went through the Holland Tunnel, got in, started heading towards my fire house, which is 6 Engine. I got to 6 Engine and got my gear together, changed, put my uniform on. I took a quick look at the cars outside quarters so I would have an idea of who was on duty that day, but I really didn't look at the riding list or anything like that. I made a quick mark in the journal so someone would have some sort of idea that I was on my way over. I just started heading over to where I knew the company would be, or the lobby command post would probably be set up in the north tower.

I walked up Park Row, made a right, went down Vesey Street, cut across Vesey Street, crossed Church and started heading towards the entrance of 5 World Trade Center, which is right on that corner. Just as I was about to get maybe about 20 or 30 feet from the entrance of 5 World Trade Center, is when the south tower began to collapse.

I was with a female police sergeant, a group of civilians and I got everybody against the building wall which is right by Borders and Books and we took cover under the overpass of 5 World Trade Center. Then basically the collapse occurred. I wasn't totally sure if we were caught in it or not. Just basically waited until we had some sort of visibility to try to make my way out.

I waited a period of time, I'm not sure of the time here, because I lost track of time. I waited till I had a little bit of visibility, turned my light on and told everyone to stay with me. I decided the best thing to do would be to get away from the area, since I had no idea of what was going on. We were going to try to head to the end of the building line following the wall and then head diagonally across Church to the opposite corner of Vesey, then try to go up Vesey and get out of here.

I had everybody stay with me. There was one gentleman, a civilian, who was cut pretty bad. I believe it was on his right arm. I told him just follow along. We would get him medical help as soon as I could. As we followed along the wall, I came into a group of ESU officers, so that was right outside of Borders and Books on that corner. They had donned air masks. I think they were either ESU or Port Authority. They weren't firemen. The masks looked different and they weren't in fireman gear.

They were headed actually back towards the entrance of 5 World Trade Center to try to go in the building. I was like, guys, I don't know where you are going, but we don't know what happened. I wouldn't try to go in. Let's get out and find out what's going on before we go in. They said good idea. They turned around, I said we got to go this way out. They started going along the wall like we were.

When I reached the end of the wall, they went one way and I led, and I stayed with the group of people. I brought them across the street like I said, diagonally across to the northeast corner of Church and Vesey. There was a construction awning up there. I went underneath there. There was a beauty parlor like on the corner. A few stores in off Vesey there was a deli.

Some police officers had already taken the front door to the deli. They took out the glass and they were getting people inside there. There was still a lot of smoke, but visibility was pretty decent, not totally dark.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: It's 11:12. I had to shut the tape. We were interrupted by somebody coming into the room. We now resume at 11:13 hours.

A. Again, Palmieri. Basically, there was an officer, he took out the door to some sort of deli. He was getting people in there. We were still in a light smoke condition, not too bad, but we didn't know what was going on. People that I was with and a female sergeant, I told the officer get them in there, one of the guys is hurt bad, you got to get him in an ambulance. I'm going to go back and try to find my company. I just wanted to find my company and find out where they were. I knew where they were probably at, so I turned around and as I'm getting back into Vesey Street a Suburban comes down Vesey Street, a Fire Department Suburban comes down Vesey Street.

A bunch of guys jump out, I go up to the officer who was in the passenger side. I said where are you guys from. They said they are from the Rock, research and development, if I believe correctly. I told them okay.

During this I only had my bunker coat on and my helmet. After the collapse I dropped my bunker pants. I figured we would be walking up 80 flights either way, so I was carrying the bunker pants. I left the bunker pants after the collapse. I only had the coat and a helmet. The officer asked me, are you all right, are you okay? I said yes, I have no mask and no pants. They were gearing up, they were going to go in and try to do a search and find some guys, so I told one of the guys, look, I only got shorts on, I'm ready to go, do you have an extra pair of bunker pants? He gave me his bunker pants and his boots. I couldn't get a mask from them, but I was able to get an axe and I got a search rope. I think there were 3 firemen and two Lieutenants. They asked me to stay with this other Lieutenant, he seemed a little bit older than the rest of them and he walked with a limp. I don't know any of the guys' names.

There was also an Engine parked on the corner, which would be the southeast corner of Vesey and Church. He was hooked up to a hydrant and he had the spicket going and the water flowing. I went over I told the guys wait up a minute. I washed off, got the stuff out of my eyes, cleared my mouth as best as I could and took a drink.

Then they started heading up Vesey Street, that would be westbound down Vesey, along the World Trade Center site. I was with the other Lieutenant, like I said, so we were maybe a half block behind them. I said Lou look, I know the area down here. I have been here a long time. I don't think it's the best move for us to walk up Vesey Street. We don't even know what happened.

At that point I don't think either of us could look up. There was still too much smoke to know that the entire south tower had collapsed. We thought maybe a portion collapsed. So I said I think we should go one block north and come down Barclay, which is what we did. We went down Church and started to come down Barclay and that was just me, this Lieutenant and it was actually an off duty former union president, Boyle.

We met up with him. He was looking for his son, who was in 33 Engine that day. The rest of the guys just decided to continue up Vesey Street. I never ran into them again for the rest of the day so I don't know what happened to them.

This officer and I were walking down Barclay Street. I don't know the exact -- how far down we got. Also with Boyle when we heard the same noise that I had heard before. I knew it was the second building starting to collapse, the north tower collapsing. The officer I was with had his officer's tool. We just happened to be under a construction type awning and in front of 2 glass doors to an entrance to one of the buildings on Vesey. I don't remember the exact address, but I know it is DC 37's headquarters, I think.

He made the move, he started to take the front doors. I had the axe. I moved with him. We took the doors, went into the lobby, looking to see if anybody was in the lobby. At this point the building continued to collapse, the building is surrounded by smoke. We ended up meeting an Engine Company, I believe, from Brooklyn in the lobby. Half the company was there. Half of their company was still in the street.

One of the guys was like my officer, an Engine officer and the chauffeur was still out in the street. We made it into the lobby and I was like, there's a lot of dust out there. It doesn't look like the collapse came this far up because the other buildings would have blocked it. So I believe their rig was parked on, you don't have it marked here, and I don't know the name of the street.

Their rig was either - I don't believe it was West Street, this street here. It's between West Street and West Broadway. Between Barclay and Murray. I think it's Greenwich Street. I think that is the name of the street.

Q. Greenwich?

A. Greenwich. I think that's the street they were on. So he took the search rope and him and one of the guys decided they wanted to go out and find their officer and the engine chauffeur. We said all right, we will wait here. We will give you a few minutes. If you don't come back we will follow the rope out and come get you.

We took a feed and waited for them to come back and the Engine officer and the chauffeur were fine. They just took a feed. They were in the street but they were okay. There was, I don't believe, any serious injuries.

Basically, then we were in the lobby for a few minutes. A couple of guys made phone calls to their wives and stuff. The original officer that I was with from the company from Research and Development, I don't know if he worked there, but he came with them from the Rock, decided to go out on his own and try to find his guys now. I decided I would stay with this Engine Company and operate with them as a company. I tried to get them to come around with me and look for the main entrance for the north tower of the Trade Center to try to get in.

Basically that's what we did. We stayed together. We walked out down Barclay, got to West Street, came up West Street. I noticed an Engine hooked up with a couple of lines coming off of it. I noticed he had a hydrant, he had a good hydrant, he had good pressure, it looked like. He was right on the corner of Barclay and West. As we walked up West Street we could see a lot of cars burning, a lot of smoke, other than the smoke from the collapse. There were cars burning all over Vesey, up around the park, a couple of rigs, a dumpster, right on the corner of Vesey and West burning.

Of course 6 World Trade Center was right on the corner of West and Vesey burning. Still there was a lot of smoke. I wasn't sure it was a total collapse of both buildings. I didn't realize that until much later on in the day.

I told the officer, we've got an Engine here with good lines if you want to get a line and try to get something in operation. He said fine, let's go up to Vesey, go a little closer and try to get an assessment of what's going on. Like I said, there was a huge dumpster on that corner going, right next to the AT&T building.

So he said, all right, go back with a couple of guys. We searched and grabbed one of the two and a half inch lines that were laying in the street and we started to operate it into the dumpster. At around that time we were there for a little while. He went off just a little bit to see what was going on. Trying to find guys, find out what we should do.

Vesey Street -- I don't remember if it was totally blocked at the time, but there was definitely, definitely stuff across Vesey Street that you could see. You couldn't get totally down Vesey. Maybe all the way to West Broadway. You could see the damage at 7 World Trade Center, the damage into the AT&T building. You could see the damage - 5 World Trade Center was burning. There was an aerial ladder up at 5 World Trade Center. I saw guys operating up into 5 World Trade Center trying to do some sort of search. I'm sorry, let me correct myself. 6 World Trade Center, right on the corner of West and Vesey.

There was an aerial ladder parked on West Street operating to the concourse type area on the 6 World Trade Center looking for guys and they were trying to do a search. At this time the truck was intact. 6 World Trade Center was almost fully involved in fire. We operated the line into the dumpster. We stayed there for a little while and then I saw one of the first members of my company to come in and it was actually Captain Sakowich. He had walked up West Street. He saw me. During the time that I went back to the Engine to get the line I was able to get a mask off the Engine. Captain Sakowich came up to me, asked me if I seen the guys or whatever.

I said Captain, do you know where Engine 6 would be. I was trying to operate with these guys. The walkway on West Street for the north tower was down. So there was no way to walk straight into what would have been the old lobby of the north tower, where 6 Engine would have been. So he said I'm going to try to find a way around. Stay here. He said give me your mask for now. I stayed with the company.

Then I found another member from my company, maybe, I don't know, 20, half an hour later, Firefighter Jeff Straub, hooked up with me. I told him Sakowich was around. He was trying to find a way over to where the guys were. He said let's not wait here. Let's try to find Sakowich or let's try to find our own way in.

We proceeded to walk down Vesey Street, West Street was totally blocked. We couldn't get across. We got to the corner of West and Vesey. Chief Nigro was there and I saw Chief Pfeifer and a couple of other guys from the Battalion. I don't know if they responded in or they were there prior to the collapse.

Basically Nigro -- a lot of the officers were trying to get information from Chief Nigro as far as to what type of operations he wanted them to commence. [redacted]. Chief Pfeifer was just saying I don't know what happened. Let's just get everybody down Vesey towards the water away from the scene. Myself and firefighters Straub had just broke off from them and we walked around through the World Financial Center area, which would be through the lobby of 3 World Financial Center, the American Express building, out into where the Winter Garden is, but on the outside, not actually into the Winter Garden. You could see the Winter Garden had took a lot of damage also.

While we were on the outside near the marina, walking near the marina, because we were going to try to come around up Liberty to see if we could gain access from West Street there, we encountered another group of firemen that were carrying a fireman on a stokes basket. I don't know what company they were from, but I do have pictures of that. A photographer took pictures of us doing the carry so I could give you his name if you need it, in a pinch, probably the road.

There was only maybe four or five firemen helping to carry this guy, so we helped to carry him. They needed help. We carried him to a boat that was waiting. It was a marine company boat. I don't know what marine company. They got him on the boat. I believe they were taking him to a Jersey hospital. They really didn't say. They got him on the boat. Me and Jeff stayed together and we started again to come around Liberty Street. Liberty and West in that area, then we came across, I found Captain Mallery from 10. I saw Captain -- I think you already spoke to him. From 10 Engine. I asked him where their guys were. If they know how their guys are doing. They basically didn't know much about where their guys were or anything or where my company was.

Again West Street was pretty well blocked. There wasn't any good access into the area then. That's when we basically started to realize it was a total collapse, so we tried to make our way into this pile or into the area where my company would have been. We went down. Liberty Street was pretty well blocked. We couldn't go down that. We continued down West. I think we went up Cedar, then took Washington back to Albany to try to get to where 10 Engine's quarters were and see what was going on over there and see if we could come in kind of like from the southeast corner or so.

I got over by 10 Engine's quarters. There was a lot of damage to the quarters. There was a lot of destruction in the street there. That wasn't any other easier access. We ended up somewhere around this area again, meeting up with Captain Sakowich. Trying to get back around through the Winter Garden area over there. Sakowich and Firefighter Straub, then, and myself, we walked around looking for guys and basically the day just dragged on. We would get separated, I would run to numerous different guys that I know throughout the job and trying to find reports of who is where and stuff like that.

Eventually we end up finding the easiest way back out on to the pile is through the Winter Garden where the glass had taken a lot of damage, but it was still intact at this point. Then we got out on to the pile there and started doing some searches over there.

As the day dragged on, again I got separated from Jeff and Captain Sakowich. I kind of was operating on my own for a while with a lot of other guys. I don't know even know who they were. I just started getting fatigued. I came out just to take a rest a little bit, out into this area here again on Vesey and West and I ran into Firefighter Bob Emans. I asked Bob, Bob, were you here, who was working, et cetera. He gave me a quick rundown of who knew was on the rig, where the rig was, what he was doing. He was an extra man. He jumped on the rig that day and he was assisting the chauffeur.

So he capped up the hook up and supplied the Siamese and then that's when the collapse occurred. I had absolutely no idea of the time of the day. Bob might have had a better idea and Bob was like look, I think the best thing we should do right now is go back to 6 Engine, try to regroup, find out who is where, definitely who is missing, who might be in the hospital and come back and get back. We got to get something to drink. We need something to eat. It was a long day.

I was like all right, Bob, start heading back. I'm going to head back in a little while. I stayed a little bit longer, I don't know how much longer. It could have been maybe an hour or so. I saw Firefighter Al Sicignano from my company. I told Al what was going on, how long I had been there, who I had seen so far and that was probably just Jeff, Captain Sakowich and Bob Emans. Bob had said that Jack Butler was also okay. He was the chauffeur that day from 6 Engine. The rest of the company we had no reports of where they were. We knew they were in the building, we didn't know where.

So then I told Al, I saw Bobby, he said he thinks it's a good idea we go back to 6 and try to regroup and come back in a little while with a better plan or something. Al was like all right, go ahead, you go on your own. I will meet you back there in a little bit. I left and went back to 6 Engine.

While I'm at 6 Engine, getting phone calls from some of the wives, specifically Lieutenant (inaudible)'s wife. Gave her whatever information we could and that's when 7 World Trade collapsed. So that might give you a time frame of how long I was there.

Stayed at 6 Engine for a while. I don't remember who else came back and I grouped up with a couple of guys, a handful of guys. We headed back over after we got something to drink, a little something to eat. I headed back over, spent the remainder of the night there until late into the night. Ran into a brother-in-law of one of the firefighters who we knew was missing that day, Billy Green. His brother-in-law is a corrections officer, at the corner of West and Liberty, with Jeff Straub. He was looking for him. Had no idea where he was. I just told him that and I told him I would be in touch with the families or him as soon as we found somebody and just stayed there a long time that night.

Basically didn't see anyone from the company that responded that day at all that day. I don't remember now. I ended up going back to 6 Engine sometime late that night. Got back to 6 Engine. Most of the guys that had reported in from home were already back at 6 Engine. I was glad to see Butchie Barone and a bunch of guys, because I knew that they might have been there before me, even though they might not have took a mark in the journal. I didn't know who was where. I was glad to see most of the guys.

That's when I started to find out exactly who was missing from the company and there were reports that Billy Green was okay. He was in a hospital but it wasn't confirmed yet. That's it. Just various information like that.

We just operated as a company for the next almost week or two on our own going back and forth. The rig was crushed, so we weren't really responding. We didn't have a rig for a week or so, so the company basically just woke up every morning, ten or 15 guys would get together, walk over, one or two guys would stay at the house and try to keep the house organized with one officer, just to have some sort of idea who was where in case anything else happened.

Every once in a while they would be relocating company. I don't remember if that was like day 3 maybe or 4. That's basically how we operated until we went to an actual AB chart. When we went to the AB chart, really didn't make much. The guys that were on duty got to go definitely, except one of the guys that was on duty had to stay at the fire house. Guys that were off duty geared up and went over. It was almost like as we were drawing straws of who had to stay back and that was it. I don't know what else.

Q. Okay, very good. You mentioned that north walk bridge was completely down?

A. Yes.

Q. You couldn't cross West Street because that bridge was down, but it became necessary to go up and down West Street you had to find a way around?

A. Right. That's what we were looking for. There was a total collapse in that area. There was no way in. No way over or around. You couldn't even probably bring portable ladders to get a truck in, because there was just too much debris in the street. There was a lot, lot of rigs parked on West Street between Vesey and Murray, both sides of the street. Just rigs all over the place.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. I thank you for the interview. The time is now 11:30 a.m. This concludes the interview.

File No. 9110259

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT SEAN O'MALLEY

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: December 6, 2001. The time is now 11:41 hours. This is Battalion Chief John Malkin of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview today with Lieutenant Sean O'Malley, of Engine Company 10. We are in the quarters of Engine 4 at this time. And the interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Now I will let the Lieutenant begin his interview.

A. On the morning of the 11th sometime around, shortly after 9 o'clock, I was in my apartment on the west side, at 72 Street. Just turned on Channel 1 news and they had a live video feed from, I think a traffic camera someplace north of the Trade Center complex. It showed a heavy smoke condition issuing from tower one, the north tower of the World Trade Center. Details were very sketchy at that point. The person was trying to get some information. There were still vague reports as to what caused the fire.

While I was watching, shortly after, I saw a second fire emanate from the -- the vantage point of that particular camera, I couldn't tell if it was a second fire in the north tower. I actually assumed that to be the case. It never occurred to me that there would be two fires in the two towers at the same time.

Because it was still rush hour in the morning, the subways were all crowded, so I jumped on my bicycle and I headed down the bike path along the West Side Highway. As I headed south, once you turn the bike path at 56 Street, you could basically see the Trade Center over the horizon. At that point I saw that there was in fact heavy smoke issuing from both towers.

I probably got down within 20 minutes or so. Once I got south of Chelsea Piers heading towards Chambers Street, near Stuyvesant High School, there was a lot of civilians heading away from the towers. No one was running, no one was panicking, they were just walking away from the towers. I kind of was operating under the assumption that there was some sort of cataclysmic failure of one of the mechanical equipment sections or an electrical problem of some sort. I had no idea what started the fire and what had transpired.

Around the Chambers Street area, someplace a little bit north of Chambers Street, the pedestrian traffic on the bike path heading against me was so heavy that I took the bike on to the West Side Highway and by that point, the NYPD had shut down the street for all vehicles except emergency vehicles and all of the ninth and Tenth Battalion companies passed me by as I was heading down; 22 Engine, 13 truck, 25 truck, 35 Engine, 40 truck, 35 truck and 40 Engine, 74 Engine, 76 Engine, 22 truck, the Tenth Battalion.

They all came by me and pulled up on the west side of West Street in a line, basically side by side. There was none of the chaos that is depicted on the cover of (inaudible) from 1993, the rigs and hose all over the street. The rigs were lined up, there was access lanes for the apparatus to get in and out.

I saw some of the guys that I worked with at 13 truck getting off the rig and donning their gear. I told them be careful. I spoke to the Chief of the Tenth Battalion and directed him to -- he had asked me where the command post was. I didn't actually see the command post, but he gave me -- I think he told me that he was looking for the corner of Liberty and West. I don't recall, but he told me the street corner he was looking for and I directed him to that.

In that time there was civilians in the street, standing in front of the building. The upper part of the building was completely obscured in smoke. You could see from about the 50th floor down. As I paused for two or three minutes that I was in front of the building, you could see civilians jumping out of the windows and landing on to the -- what the Port Authority called VIP drive, which was the west side of tower one. It was a covered roadway and it was like a circular driveway that went in to the front of tower one.

I could see -- I think Ladder 1's apparatus was there. There was a bunch of Engine companies in front. There was somebody hooked up to that hydrant right in front of the building. I don't remember taking notice of which companies they were. I made my way, continued south on West Street. I knew I wasn't going to go down Liberty Street. I went down to Albany or Carlyle Street, and when I came around the back of the fire house, there were crowds of civilians in the street on Greenwich one block south of the fire house.

There was a lot of civilians in front of the building who had evacuated the building but not cleared the area. There were several hundred people in the street. As I went in the back door of the fire house I met up with a Firefighter from, I think he's in 6 truck. I think his name was Gary Matalatis, who was coming in off duty. He was dressed in uniform and carrying his gear.

There was body parts on the street around the fire house. From the time I left the apartment to getting to the fire house, it was sort of just getting a better picture of what was going on and it was like walking down a spiral staircase getting darker and darker and you could tell the magnitude of the operation was more and more severe.

I think by that time I probably heard that there were planes that had hit the building and that this was a terror attack. Once I got into the fire house, I met up with Captain Paul Mallery from Ladder 10 and there was an FDNY ambulance pulled into the apparatus bay. Both the front doors were open and there was, I would say close to 15 or so civilians being treated by EMS. They had a triage set up.

Some of them were standing, holding -- those that were capable were standing or sitting, holding bandages on themselves. Two or three people were on the floor being -- on a backboard. Another was -- a male civilian was in a sked, collapsible stretcher. He looked --- I think they were treating him for a broken pelvis. He had some pretty severe broken bones. There was the EMS paramedics and a civilian who apparently had some first aid training who was assisting them.

Captain Mallery told me that he had a sister-in-law of one of the firefighters making phone calls in the Engine office to recall the firefighters from the Engine Company and a Lieutenant from operations who they had alerted, name would be Keith Ruby, who worked, I believe in Chief Nigro's office. He had him making phone calls from Ladder 10's office to recall the members of Ladder 10.

There was several probationary firefighters there from the proby school, who had told me that they had cancelled classes and that they had come in. I directed them. They were suited in their bunker gear from head to toe. Although they actually hadn't started any operations, they looked like they were getting overheated already. I directed them to strip down to their bunker pants, go into the kitchen in the back of the fire house, cool down, take a couple of glasses of water and wait for me to come back.

I went upstairs to my locker. I changed into my work duty uniform, came back down, collected up these three or four probies and made up a BF4 with their names, explained to them how we were going to be operating. I put on my helmet. I directed them to each put on each of their helmets. Take a look at me, take a look at each other. I said if we get masks, we are going to be putting them on. You are not going to recognize one another. We are going to stay together. We are going to go over as a team, we are going to operate as a team. I gave them each a handful of bandages and rubber gloves. I directed one of them to search the fire house for any hand tools he could come up with. That probably took 15 or 20 minutes or so.

We were trying to get moving but I felt that we should take the time to get set up. I didn't think there was any rush. Figuring we were going to be fighting this fire for a good long time. Figuring we were going to be setting up, climbing stairs, and humping hose.

In that time, I also crossed paths with several other firefighters, actually a Lieutenant, that were dressed in administrative uniforms, white shirt and ties with their ID cards from headquarters. I later found out one of them to be named Jeff Guja, Captain Jimmy Yakimovich, also from Chief Nigro's office and as I said earlier, Keith Ruby, and another Firefighter, I believe he is from 55 Engine, who I have seen him since. I know he got out of the attack alive.

As we were headed out into the front --

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: I have to stop the tape. They are going out on a run. It's 11:52 hours. We will resume later.

Okay. It's now 12:23, we will resume the interview.

A. As I was saying, I collected up my team of probies and was heading out the front door of the fire house with them, when all of a sudden, civilians -- some of the civilians that were in the street came running into the fire house. One man was yelling it's coming down. I could hear behind him a roar like a jet engine, so I turned around, started running towards the back of the fire house. I grabbed one of the patients that was lying on the floor on a backboard under one arm and just started running towards the back door.

As I said, in addition to the civilians that were being treated for first aid, several more civilians came running through the fire house from Liberty Street heading out towards the back of the fire house and by the time we got to the rear of the fire house, there is a hallway that is probably like 45 inches or so and that dead ends into the kitchen. You have to take a right-hand turn to go out the back door. By the time I got to that where you make the right turn to go down the additional 10 or 15 feet to the back door, there was a complete log jam of people. All trying to get out that back door.

Sometime right around then I also became aware that Captain Kelty, and his brother, supervising Fire Marshal Jim Kelty, were also in the fire house. At least one of them was by the back door and the roar that I heard was getting louder and louder. I started to feel a breeze against the back of my head. I put the civilian on the backboard. I put him down in the hallway that led out towards the back door and I was standing directly next to the stairs that led to the basement and I dove down the stairs into the basement. I hid under a doorway arch.

I was thinking it didn't make any sense because the only building I ever remember falling down -- a high rise that was burning, it was the one in Philadelphia that burnt for days. I remember thinking it didn't make any sense, but I also remember thinking there was no way that big building was going to come down in that little fire house. Just before the dust cloud hit, I remember seeing the door to the high pressure steam room directly to my left and I had seconds to ponder if that was a place to hide, but we really had no place else to go.

Then it got black, there was a big gust of wind that came down the stairs immediately followed by that dust cloud that you have seen on videotape. It was like beach sand, it was so thick and heavy. Although I could still hear debris falling outside, I had to bail out of that position because the amount of dust was so choking that I thought I was going to choke down there.

I came back up stairs and much to my pleasant surprise the fire house was still there. There were several civilians wandering around the back of the fire house trying to find their way back out. The dust cloud was so thick, you almost had to bump into someone to even know that they were there. I called out to Captain Kelty and Captain Mallery, yelled to them. They said that they were okay. I yelled out to my crew of probies. They said that they were all right.

We went into the kitchen and there were some civilians in there. I turned on the sink and some of them would wash their face and took some quick mouthfuls of water. We started directing them out the back door. Captain Kelty started leading them out the back door. I ran upstairs and Captain Mallery was on the second floor. He said he had done a primary search of the second floor and it was negative, there was nobody up there.

I went downstairs and ran to the Engine office to see if I could find the civilian female that was assisting us, calling guys from home. She wasn't in the office any more. We did a primary search of the ground floor of the fire house and directed the probies with me to start doing a broadening search into the street. I think the pile of debris into the fire house through the front doors was ten or 15 feet high. The ambulance was crushed in the bay. The EMTs and all the civilians were gone from the apparatus floor.

The pile out in front of the fire house, which began actually inside the front door, was so high that I actually climbed out a window in the house watch rather than try to make my way out the pile into the street.

One of the probies, I haven't been able to contact him yet, I saw him later on in the day, I believe he survived both of them -- I know he survived both of the collapses. I believe he said his name is Dino. Dark skinned guy with a bald head. Told me he had heard someone, we have a man down. When I went out the window of the house watch, there was absolute silence.

I have since seen video tapes of the north side up towards Chambers Street, with the pass alarm, firemen stumbling around. By Liberty Street and Greenwich Street there wasn't a single sound. There wasn't a creature moving, there was no pass alarms, there was no sirens, there was no yelling for help. There was no one in the street. It was absolutely dead silence.

We made our way directly across the street from the fire house, the address is 130 Liberty Street. Prior to -- there had been like a public space, like a second floor garden area that came from the second floor mezzanine of 130 Liberty Street. It had a foot bridge that extended across Liberty Street and went into the plaza of the World Trade Center complex. It went through like 4 World Trade Center. It actually exited between number 2 and number 4, from 130 Liberty Street across the street and also in between building two and building 4.

Underneath that there was a wide entranceway with a fountain and a wide sweeping steps that led up to the public space. If it was a fire building we would be looking at the corner of where exposure one and exposure two came together, inside what had been a cafe or like a coffee shop for the building employees. I found Lieutenant Keith Ruby, who was lying on the floor underneath what had been like a counter rail where you could stand up and eat your coffee and donuts.

His head was facing towards the Trade Center. His feet were pointing away. He was in a great deal of pain, although he wasn't badly buried, it was just light debris. He was lucid and not -- from the look of him, he didn't look that bad, but he was in a great deal of pain and he pointed to the middle of his right leg and said that he had a great deal of pain there. He felt that he had surely broke it. He said he heard it snap.

So I suspected that to be a mid shaft femur fracture. I applied traction. Just followed the protocols for that sort of an injury, but I also knew that was -- he was in pretty deep trouble, owing to where he was. I sent this proby I mentioned earlier back to the fire house and I told him to raid that ambulance and to come back with oxygen and a backboard if he could, and apparently he had some EMS training, because he had the wherewithal to bring back a traction splint, so we were able to properly traction splint and package this Lieutenant as well as supply him with some oxygen therapy right away.

But still in all it took us a fair amount of time to do that. I had two or three other probies working with me and I believe a police officer came over to help as well. Captain Mallery came out and Captain Kelty -- he was yelling over to me. I could still hear him directing civilians away from the area.

While we were doing that we heard small explosions, rumblings, which sounded like additional collapses. When one of those would happen some of the people that were helping us, would run for positions of cover, but I was holding traction so I had to stay with the patient and the probationary Firefighter Dino, whatever his name was. Maintaining traction on the Lieutenant's head and supplying with the oxygen. He stayed his ground as well.

That happened 3 or 4 times during the course of our trying to get them out of there. Then we heard jets overhead and we were concerned that there was another plane coming in to attack us. We just about finished packaging him when we heard that same roaring rumble that preceded the first collapse and the probationary Firefighter at the Lieutenant's head leaned down over him and covered him with his body over the Lieutenant's head and chest and I leaned down from the other end and covered the remainder of him as best as I could with my body and we just crossed our fingers and waited for the other collapse.

Again the shock wave that came through and the cloud of dust and some more lightweight debris had fallen on us, but we were just very fortunate that we happened to be inside the building itself, because the two story balcony that had been a garden, the following morning when I came out, which was extended from exposure one towards Liberty Street from the front of 130 Liberty Street out toward the street, it was probably 200 feet long and about 40 feet wide. The following morning when I went back, that had collapsed down to within 5 or 6 feet of where we were.

By the time we had finished packaging the Lieutenant, we knew it was time to just get him out of there. I had, as I said, this probationary fireman, I think he said his name was Vinnie. He was from Ladder 5, probationary firefighter Dino from the academy, Firefighter Kerry Horgan from Ladder 10, Captain Mallery, Captain Kelty from Ladder 10 and myself, we started moving this Lieutenant south on Greenwich Street towards Battery Park. We could see flashing lights and we thought there might be an ambulance down there.

We moved him about two blocks to the corner of Carlyle and Greenwich Street when we discovered -- we actually had to get almost close enough to touch it to realize that the ambulance that we were moving towards we could see the flashing lights, but the front of it was crushed down. So we then headed west on Carlyle towards the West Side Highway and came upon an EMT, a Fire Department EMT, who was walking north on the West Side Highway towards the Trade Center. She was about in front of the Marriott Hotel, which is 85 West Street I believe. She said she had an ambulance parked down near the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel.

By that time I think there was one or two police officers that joined us to assist in carrying him. I peeled off from that carry operation, a police officer asked me to assist him in searching some parked cars that were along Albany Street between Greenwich, Washington and West Street, so they continued to carry this Lieutenant down to the ambulance and I went to see if there was anyone in those parked vehicles.

Shortly after that, when I finished that operation, we checked three or four cars. I headed north on West Street and I found an apparatus. I don't remember. I think -- it was a Brooklyn company, it may have been 205. I'm not really sure. I went to the back of their apparatus and I pulled three or four lengths of inch and 3 quarter. Grabbed a reducer and a hydrant wrench out of the compartment and I dragged it up to Albany Street and tried to get a hydrant on the exposure four side of 90 West Street.

At that point from Albany Street two blocks north to -- which would begin the Trade Center complex, it was littered with burning ambulances and vehicles. I checked three or four different hydrants along the way trying to get one that was supplying water. I was unsuccessful in that.

At that point firefighters operating on the west side of West Street yelled to me that the scaffolding surrounding 90 West Street was shaking. So I dropped the line where I was and ran across to the other side of the street.

There was a Chief setting up a staging area around that corner on West Street and Cedar Street or West and Albany, around that corner there. He was trying to put together some fire teams and dispatch them off. By that time I had seen the two probationary firefighters that I had been working with who teamed up with another Lieutenant and operating with that Chief.

I left that spot and walked north along the river promenade, which goes along behind Battery Park City. Walked up to the North Cove Marina. I hooked up with Lieutenant Tom White from -- I believe he is from 93 Engine, but I don't know if he is in the marine unit now or he had been at one time, but he said that he had radio contact with an old fire boat, and I remember it was the Harvey. I recall having seen the Harvey on earlier weeks on West Street doing water displays for cruise ships. So I mentioned to him, I believe their fire pumps are still working and he coordinated that with them, but they said they had no fire equipment on board.

So I left him on the promenade at the North Cove marina area to coordinate, I believe there was one of the operating fire boats tied up alongside there as well. Again, between the smoke and the dust it was kind of hard to see what was more than ten feet away from you.

I headed down Liberty Street and Deputy Chief Blaich, Charles Blaich, he was standing in a circle of clear area that couldn't have been more than five square feet around him and he had set up a command post there and was tasking groups of firefighters from there. I got his attention. I told him I was going to try to stretch lines from the fire boat on the promenade near the North Cove marina. He said take as many guys as you need and you're on your own.

I found two Queens companies. 319 and I believe 325. I explained to their officers what the situation was at the fire boat and they proceeded to have their companies assist me in uncovering the apparatus beds, two different apparatus, which took a fair amount of time, owing to the amount of debris that was on top of them.

They were parked right on Liberty Street just opposite number 1 World Financial Center, which is on the west side of West Side Highway on Liberty Street, just before the foot bridge, which is still standing.

I believe Rescue 1's rig is also there. They were all completely buried in all kinds of debris.

But these two companies helped me clear the hose beds and we stretched every piece of 3 and a half inch hose we could get our hands on and managed to stretch a supply line from the North Cove marina from the fire boat Harvey all the way down along the promenade, up through Liberty Street, and we set it up with whatever, gaited inlets and a manifold, whatever we could get our hands on, and we started supplying tower ladders and lines from that corner on Liberty Street.

Shortly after that, they discovered a fire burning in the corner building at Gateway Plaza, which I believe is -- I'm going to say 325 South End Avenue, but I'm kind of making a guess at that address. It's the first apartment building as the crow flies that's closest to the corner of the World Trade Center complex on the west side of the West Side Highway.

There was a fire on about the 8th or 9th floor and the company was stretching -- they had to actually stretch up from the exterior and the two companies I mentioned earlier, 319 and 325 assisted me with that, assisted those companies with stretching those lines up to the exterior of the building. Then we went back and again with Lieutenant White, we set up another line coming off the fire boat Harvey and continued stretching 3 and a half inch hose from wherever we could get our hands on it and connecting it up. So we ended up getting at least two lines off of the Harvey and stretching it up to West Street.

That was pretty well into the afternoon, probably 2 or 3:00 in the afternoon by that point. I finally managed to find a spot someplace along the west side promenade there where I was able to get my cellphone working and called home and then just -- I told the guys that I had a cell phone that worked and a line of firemen -- none of the phones were obviously working. Ten or 15, 20 guys managed to get their home phones -- phone home from there.

By that time I was having a lot of trouble seeing where I was going with the dust and debris and I had already had my eyes washed out twice by EMS. I operated on that corner in the North Cove marina with Lieutenant Csorny from Ladder 10, who was on light duty. He had come in from headquarters. We were assisting loading some injured members down into the NYPD and Nassau County police boats from the North Cove marina. They were walking them down west along Liberty Street down into the marina and dispatching them over to New Jersey, I believe.

I guess around 4:30 or so when it started getting a little dark, myself, Lieutenant Csorny, Firefighter Horgan and a couple of other firefighters from Engine 10 and Ladder 10, I believe John Morabito and Firefighter Jimmy Calvanese, made our way back to the fire house on Liberty Street. We came in the back window and started doing what we could to clean the fire house out and make it operational.

For the first couple of days it was being used as a forward triage unit for EMS. So that's what our position was at that time. We figured they were going to use it as a command post or whatever to move the debris out of the house watch area and shovel as much of the things -- cleaned up as much as we could.

I guess I left about 9:30, 10 o'clock that night. I was at the point where my eyes weren't getting any better. I had been to EMS to have them washed out 2 or three different times. It was at the point where I actually couldn't see where I was going. I had another Firefighter, Dan Peritore, who had been the MPO of Engine 10 that morning, walked in front of me and I made my way up as far as Battalion 1's headquarters up on Duane Street.

From there a tow truck had stopped at the traffic light. I climbed on the back of the tow truck. He got me up as far as the subways were running, which I believe was 14 street or Canal Street. From there I took the subway home and came back down the next morning and started all over again.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. I want to thank you for the interview. The time is now 1245 hours. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DANIEL STERLING

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: The date is December 6, 2001. The time is 1434 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin, safety battalion, New York City Fire Department.

I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter 6th Grade Daniel Sterling, Engine 24, regarding the events that occurred on September 11. There is no one else present in the room, and the interview is following right now.

Q. Just talk in a normal voice and tell me what happened.

Where did you respond from?

A. We responded from quarters. I was getting off duty at nine o'clock that Tuesday morning. The alarm came in at 8:47, so I had been relieved already. We're a five-man engine, so because it came in as a second alarm, and I just got on the job in February, I rolled as the doorman, to get, you know, experience. Second alarm fire, we don't get that.

So we were riding down -- I was the doorman -- and going south. The control and the nozzle could see that we actually had a good job. There were a lot of people standing in the streets, looking down toward the building, but based on my position, I couldn't see what they saw.

We pulled up to the twin towers on West Street and into the lobby of the north tower. We got there about nine o'clock before the second building got hit. We didn't know the second building got hit at nine o'clock or anything.

When we made it into the lobby, there was debris falling from the building. Guys were trying to vent those big windows in the lobby. I saw 33 engine in the lobby. I recognized one guy, who I didn't -- who wound up being missing, but I remember seeing him in the lobby. He said, "Hey, how you doing? We're here to go to work" and whatever. We were in the lobby waiting for the elevator. They set up the command post, and we are trying to find out if we were going to be able to take the elevators up, because they said that there was a reported fire on the 80th Floor, so, of course, we were going to try to get to the elevators.

After about maybe four, five minutes, still no elevator. They're saying the elevators weren't working. Ladder 20, the officer from Ladder 20, decided to start walking up the stairs. He like rallied his guys. So we're walking. We're going to start walking. Everybody at that point started walking up the stairs.

We -- my team started up the A staircase, and we were following Ladder 20. I guess all the other companies were following behind us. We ended up going up single file. Civilians were coming down single file. They were telling us what floors they were coming from.

Lieutenant Hanson was the officer, so he was finding out what floors they were escaping from, what the conditions were like on their floors, and by the time we got to the 11th Floor, people started to get tired.

We got up to the 15th Floor, and we were -- started taking breaks. The 15th Floor might be open, and then the consecutive ones would be closed up until about the 21st Floor, so we came off the 15th, and we heard Maydays on the radio from Ladder 10. Ladder 10 had two men down with chest pains. We heard that on the radio.

Then we would keep going. When we stopped on the 15th Floor, we took a survey of the floor, found the vending machines. Guys had broken the vending machines already to start taking out the water, so we were taking bottles of water, taking a break, and then going back on the stairs. We kept doing that every five or six floors, wherever there was an open door.

Realistically what happened is it took us about an hour to get to the 37th Floor, and the guys at that point -- well, at the 27th Floor, my lieutenant decided to drop two roll-ups, because we were taking the four roll-ups and the control bag. We were taking a beating just going up the stairs, getting tired, so we dropped two roll-ups on the 27th Floor, and we left one of our members on the 27th Floor because he really -- he didn't feel he could make it any further.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. So we continued up. We got to the 37th Floor, and we were about to drop the other two roll-ups, because Lieutenant Hanson said he got word that we were just going to back up 33 engine, so we were going to use their hose. We weren't going to take any of our own hose.

At that point when we were on the 37th Floor, that's when the building shook from the other tower going down, so -- but we didn't know it was the other tower that was going down. A battalion chief -- the battalion chief from Battalion 11, came from a higher floor. He came down and saw us on the 37th Floor and told us that he thought there was a partial collapse of the 65th Floor of our building, and that we should drop everything and leave the building.

Lieutenant Hanson didn't hesitate. He had us drop everything, and we started to leave the building. We were right by Staircase A. The vending machines were around the corner to the right of Staircase A, so a lot of the guys that were taking out water and stuff ended up hanging out right in that hallway by the vending machines, which also had a staircase to get out of the building.

So when the chief told us to leave, we immediately started down Exit A, and I think he ran around the corner to tell the other guys that were hanging out in the hallway with the vending machines to also leave, but when the building shook, everybody instinctively ran for the staircase, because it shook for about 10 or 15 seconds, and we all, like, ran to the closest stairwell, so I guess everybody that was in that hallway ran for the staircase close to the vending machine, and I know for a fact Ladder 5 was in that hallway. There were at least 15 other guys, aside from Ladder 5, because Ladder 5 was in quarters with us, so I know all the guys that were there, and I'm making jokes with them. The lieutenant was sitting down.

ESU cops were handing out their oxygen bottles for guys to take oxygen, so we were like -- everybody was trying to relax for a minute, drink their water and get up their energy to keep going up the stairs, but when it shook, we went back down Staircase A.

We had another probie with us, Rob Byrne. Byrne, when the chief says, "Drop everything," he took his face mask, and he took his mask off and everything and left it there. And we started going down. We all kept our mask.

I just -- I didn't see giving up my mask at that point. It's not that heavy to me, but he wanted to go quick. He said, "When he said drop everything, I'm dropping everything."

So we started down. When we got to around maybe the 10th Floor, there was a lot of smoke, and I guess just dust coming up the stairwell, so we all started masking up. At that point, Byrne had the -- he used his hood.

Q. Go ahead. At 1507 hours, we resume the interview.

A. We were exiting the building, and Byrne was using his hood to cover his mouth and his nose because of the smoke and dust that was coming up the stairwell. We started using our masks to breathe through the smoke and dust around the 10th or 11th Floor.

On the way out from the 37th Floor, we did stop at the 27th Floor to meet Rich Billy. [redacted] He looked like he might really need the break, so we left him there, and on the way back, he hooked up with us.

So the entire engine was making its way out, and when Lieutenant Hanson noticed that Byrne was having to use his hood, he sent Byrne ahead. He told him to go ahead and run as fast as he could to get out of the building, because we were moving down in a slow, orderly fashion, like, making sure we didn't really make any errors on the way out. We were going slower than Byrne could have made it on his own without the mask, so he went ahead.

At that point, we got all the way down in the A staircase to the 3rd Floor. Apparently the ESU cops had -- they put a piece of Sheetrock blocking off the 3rd Floor, blocking off the A staircase going below the 3rd Floor, so we exited the A staircase at the 3rd Floor.

Q. Yeah.

A. We ran into two ESU or Port Authority cops, and they were helping a guy in a swivel chair about -- he was at least 300 pounds. He had broken legs, and they were trying to pull him through the hallway to get him to the B staircase, which they said was good. They said that they were responsible for blocking off the staircase, because there was debris now in that staircase. We couldn't have made it out to the ground level that way.

So we helped them with the civilian. We took him in the swivel chair down the B staircase. We had a new swivel chair in the lobby of the building, because we broke that one on the way down. We broke that stair -- we broke that chair dragging him down the stairs. We put him in a new swivel chair and dragged him out the lobby, and we left the north tower on the north side. The north -- we came out the north side of the tower, and we went right across to 6 Trade Center, to the Customs building.

Q. Okay.

A. We collected ourselves under that little, like, overhang.

Q. Okay.

A. There's an overhang there. We waited for a second, cut the civilian out his pants to make it easier for him to move. Then we all started moving west. Excuse me, east. East up to the corner of that building where we could kind of make it out to Vesey Street.

I went ahead of my team. There were about four people helping this guy walk through debris, and everything that had fallen, I guess it got pushed out to the Customs building from the first tower that fell. There was a lot of debris.

So as everyone is helping the civilian, I really couldn't help the civilian, because there were already four guys helping him move. I went ahead. I got ahead to the corner, made the corner, and went down in between these two buildings. There were two Port Authority cops standing at this corner of the building, of the U.S. Customs building.

Q. Okay. We're talking about going between the two buildings. That would be 6 World Trade Center, U.S. Customs building, 7 World Trade Center. He was going north between those two buildings.

A. Five.

Q. Was that 5? Between 5 and 6 rather, going north?

A. I got there to that corner. There were two cops, like, directing traffic, and when I got to that point with them, they said, "All right. You go ahead and run diagonally straight over this way," there were some stairs to get out -- to get off of the courtyard level.

Q. Okay.

A. Because this whole area is on, like, an elevated courtyard. You're above the street. So I stood there, and my team still hadn't come around the corner of this building of the U.S. Customs building, so I decided to wait for them to come around the corner before I made my run.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. While I was waiting, it was maybe 30 seconds, this tower fell. I never saw them come around the corner.

Q. Right.

A. Because everything started falling. It went pitch black immediately. I was standing there with the two cops. We were pressed against the side of the building, so everything that fell kind of, like, fell in front of us.

So at that point I masked up again, and my viber alert started going off, so I know I didn't have that much air, but when it went pitch black, we all assumed that the building had, like, fallen on top of us, because we couldn't see anything at all. We assumed were trapped inside, like, a big void.

So I put my mask on and everything, and I started crawling on the floor towards the other building. I started crawling on the floor towards 5 World Trade Center.

Q. Okay.

A. I noticed that there was fire on the ground. The courtyard now had dents in it, like craters from where things had fallen through. So I regrouped, stood up, and decided to start feeling along the wall, and that's when I started bumping in -- I bumped into one guy from my team, Rich Billy, the same guy who we left on the 27th Floor.

I saw him. He didn't know where the lieutenant was, and he was -- he was -- he thought I was a lieutenant. Then he started -- he had a radio. The door position didn't have a radio. He started giving Maydays and looking for Lieutenant Hanson. We were also with four other -- four firemen, and they had a civilian.

We took our area of refuge in Building 5. We made it into a window into the lobby of that building when everything was still pitch black, before the smoke had completely risen. We went in the building, and you could notice, like, big chunks sticking through the ceiling of that building. So we were just waiting around. We're going to have to, I guess, start digging our way out or wait a little while and see if anything else is going to fall. Then gradually the smoke started to lift and the dust and everything.

Q. How long?

A. That took about -- it seemed like no longer than ten minutes.

Q. Okay.

A. Maybe about seven to ten minutes it started to lighten up, and you could see shafts of light starting to come through from, I guess, this direction, Washington Street. Like you could see light.

So at that point, when it lightened up good enough, you could look over to the edge of the courtyard and see where the rail was. The rail had gotten knocked off, but you could see the top of street lights --

Q. Okay.

A. -- the curve of the street light coming up over the courtyard level. So I told Rich Billy, "Let's go over to the edge there and see if we can make it to the street over there," because at least you noticed -- you could see the top of the street light. The street is not that far below.

He didn't really want to go across the courtyard at that point. He told me he felt that -- that if other things started dropping, we might be -- we would be in jeopardy by going across. He has 20 years on the job, 18. He has about 18 years on the job, but I was already a little nervous, and seeing the things coming through the ceiling, I'm telling him, "Well, if more things fall, they might -- everything might come through the ceiling," so our area of refuge to me wasn't that good anyway. It was fine while we were standing there, but if more things fell, they were going to come through the ceiling anyway.

So I said, All right. "Well, you stay, but watch me. You watch me make it over. If I make it over there, and I don't come back, know that you can come off that way, because I'm going."

Q. Yeah.

A. Because I figured maybe I would be able to jump across to -- the street lamp didn't look that far from the edge. I figured maybe I could jump across and slide down the street lamp and maybe to the street or whatever, but he didn't do it.

I went, and there was another fireman that came with me. I don't know his name or what company he was from, but he was much bigger than me, taller guy and heavier. So when I got over to the edge, I realized I couldn't jump over to the pole. It was about maybe a five, six-foot jump over to the pole and then slide down. I just dropped the mask and hung off the side and dropped down to the ground and ran straight up.

I must have run a little bit this way. Then I started heading north. There was also two cops, I guess in front of 7 World Trade Center or around this corner somewhere pointing towards the north, just go north, because I never looked back at the building to figure out that both towers had completely fallen.

Q. Right.

A. As soon as I dropped down to the street level, I noticed there was an engine that was abandoned, and there was a cop car directly behind the engine, and a whole row of cars that was on fire, so I ran past all those cars and started heading north. That was it.

I got about four, five blocks before I really started limping. I sprained both my ankles just dropping off the side there, but I didn't catch up with Rich Billy until maybe seven o'clock that evening. He told me he waited about five, ten minutes after I left, and then the guys he was with just kind of walked around the courtyard and found the stairs and took the stairs down. I actually -- they had a picture of him on CBS News, I guess, like, when he finally made it, walked down the stairs, because he was still covered in all the gray dust, and he just looked beat. I guess that was right when he walked down the stairs. They got a picture of him and, like, two other firemen he was walking with, and I told him, "I saw you on the news." He was, like, we found the stairs. I took the stairs down.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. I didn't really -- I couldn't wait for the stairs. I couldn't wait -- I was too impatient. I was already -- I had already thought we were dead. Like, when everything went pitch black from everything being bright, you got outside to the bright daylight, and the cops are telling you to make a run this way. It was bright. Then all of a sudden it was pitch black. Fire was on the ground, craters, so that was it.

But when I made it out, I went up -- I ended up on West Street, and the ambulance took me to St. Vincent's. I got my ankles wrapped. Before I got there, I was able to call my parents. I called my grandmother. I spoke to my grandfather at about 10:30, because there was a civilian who let me use the phone when I was walking up. Then I got to St. Vincent's. I called the firehouse, and I was back at the firehouse by about one o'clock, and the chauffeur was here. The chauffeur that drove us down there was at the firehouse, Otto. Then we -- we kind of regrouped and went back to West Street to look for the other guys.

We found Marcel Claes. He was our control man. He started walking down with us from the 37th Floor, and we walked -- we were all together, and we come to find out -- he told us he stopped and went back to get the control bag after -- we dropped everything, and we started down. He went back to get the control bag, started back down the same A staircase. He said he cut across the 7th Floor and made it out the building before we did, but everybody in the engine made it out.

Q. They did?

A. Yeah. Everybody that was in the engine that day made it out.

Q. Were they safe? Did anybody perish from the engine? They were all okay?

A. Yeah. Everybody from the engine made it out just fine. I got hurt the worst, a sprain in my ankles after the fact, but everybody in the truck that was with us on the 37th Floor, none of them made it out at all.

Q. No kidding.

A. None of the truck made it out. We had two other guys that weren't working that day from the truck that went in. They never made it out.

Q. Were you with them on the 37th? No? Yes? Did they get the message to leave the 37th the same time you did?

A. Yeah. Apparently the chief went around the corner and told everybody --

Q. Yeah.

A. -- to start leaving the building, too, but I think they must have got caught up for some reason going down the staircase that they were going down.

Q. Yeah.

A. I think they were going down either the B or C. We were in the A. If you walked straight down the hallway, they were calling that the B staircase, and the hallway came into like a T. There was the vending machines in this hallway, and there was another staircase in that hallway, so they went down that one.

We went down the same way we were coming up, the A, because when we went and got our drinks, we came right back, because we were going to start walking up again. We were just taking the A staircase all the way up.

Q. Yeah.

A. But --

Q. When you guys were walking down the stairs, when you had been ordered to walk down the stairs, now, you had been climbing for a long time, maybe an hour?

A. Yes, just about.

Q. Now, you turn around, and you start coming down. Were there a lot of civilians still coming down the stairs or you were booking in that staircase?

A. There was nobody in the staircase on the way down.

Q. Nobody?

A. Nobody at all. I guess the only reason that the cops had that one civilian was because he was hurt, because he -- he couldn't walk on his own.

Q. Right.

A. They had him in the swivel chair.

Q. Right.

A. A lot of people were making it out of the Tower 1 when we were going up. Even on the way up, we ran into one businessman who was coming down from the 90th Floor, so he made it all the way down from the 90th Floor. He said he saw fireballs come at him, and thought he was going to die, but then he got to a good staircase and made it down. He was helping a lady with an asthma attack, and at that point we put him in an office on about the 21st Floor. We put him in an office off to the side of the staircase.

So I'm hoping he got out, because we were figuring we can put people in a safe area of refuge below the fire.

Q. Right.

A. So we told him to just hang out over there, but he was just fine. Somebody told me they saw some blood on his shirt, but he was coherent and everything. He told us he was coming from 90, and there was a lot of fire on 90, so we're thinking, man, we got 10 floors of fire, and we got roll-ups, but we still didn't know the jetliner or anything.

We're thinking small plane, because when it came across the teleprinter, it was a small plane hit the building.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And when we arrived, you could just see smoke and fire coming out, but it didn't look like when you see the news footage of the second building getting hit. It wasn't a big explosion like that.

Q. Yeah.

A. It was just fire and smoke. That was it. That's it. I mean, that's pretty much the most scary experience I've had.

I get a little nervous every now and then at regular fires, but that's, I guess, because I'm brand new, but that -- the thought of being stuck is not good.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: That's an interesting story. All right.

I want to thank you for the interview. The time is now 1521 hours.

This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER EUGENE KELTY, JR.

Interview Date: December 6, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATALLION CHIEF MALKIN: Today is December 6, 2001. The time is now 10:44. This is Battalion Chief John Malkin of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with Captain Eugene Kelty, Engine Company 10. We are at the quarters of Engine Company 4, regarding the events of September 11, 2001, at the World Trade Center.

There is nobody else present in the room at this time, except the Captain and myself, and now the interview begins.

A. Okay. My name is Captain Gene Kelty. I'm the Company Commander for Engine Company 10, which is located at 124 Liberty Street, which is the firehouse right opposite the World Trade Center. I was off that day. My partner, Lieutenant Gregg Atlas, who was working and is still missing in action, was working that day.

We were on the golf course at a company outing that we have in our neighborhood when we got a report on the pager that the fire -- the towers had been hit. Knowing that that was my company, I responded in with my brother, who is a supervising Fire Marshal, James Kelty from Manhattan base, we got in Manhattan somewhere around, I would say, around 9:35, a quarter to ten. We went up to my quarters, because we were changing into our work clothes so we could go and start our assistance on what was going on within the building or outside the building.

When we got into the building, there was a lot of civilians in my kitchen, which is on the backside of Cedar Street, between Greenwich and Church, and they had been quartered with us when the plane hit the buildings, and all the debris and stuff was coming down. Captain Mallery was in the building at the time, and Lieutenant O'Malley, my Lieutenant from Engine 10, was in the building. Captain Mallery is the Captain from Ladder 10. Captain Mallery was in my office with my brother and we were evaluating what was going on and he was giving us a briefing regarding the first plane that hit the tower, and then the second plane.

At that time, which was probably somewhere around a quarter to ten, the second tower, World Trade 2, came down. Unbeknownst to us, we were upstairs, we heard the building shake, a lot of debris came down, and the building was hit with a dust cloud.

The apparatus doors were open, because I went out on the second floor by my office, and it was pitch black from the air conditioner that was blowing in the bunkroom of the second floor. I looked out the window. It was pitch black. All the dust that was coming down Greenwich Street headed southbound. We went down the stairs to see how everybody was doing downstairs. There was people all over the place. People with broken ankles, broken legs, femurs.

We went into the kitchen and we started evacuating the house, because we didn't know exactly what happened, other than the building came down and collapsed. It was later determined that it was building World Trade 2, which is the south building that came down. We started evacuating everybody. I had not gotten out to the street yet. We just made sure that we could get people out the back door, that's the Greenwich Street side, and we were having everybody go down up to Trinity Place and go south. We were heading them towards the Statue of Liberty way, Battery Park. Captain Mallery, myself, Lieutenant O'Malley were in the building doing the evacuation.

At the time, I think, the Captain or the Lieutenant went across the street. There was a Lieutenant that was injured at 130 Liberty Street, which is the Deutsch Bank, and they were assisting a first-aid case over there. In the meantime, I continued the evacuation.

Most of the equipment in the building was gone. All that was left was my turnout coat and I grabbed the truck helmet. I had an understanding that the building was taken over by civilians and everybody else and all our equipment was taken out of the building and had been ravaged by civilians and anybody else that needed equipment that day.

While we were evacuating people, there was an ambulance in the engine bay, that was stuck in the engine bay because of the debris that came down from World Trade 2 and there was no way of going out the front door, other than climbing over piles of debris that was there. After the tower came down, we made the determination that we weren't sure if any other building would come down, so we evacuated the whole building. I went through and did a search and there was two EMS people that were still left in the building. Again, Captain Mallery and Lieutenant O'Malley were across the street at 130 Liberty Street. I went into the kitchen to make sure there was nobody there when I heard the rumble of Tower 1 coming down. I don't know the time that it happened. I just heard the same rumble I heard when Tower 2 came down, the same thing, and I took cover in our kitchen.

The only people left in the building were the two EMS people and after the tower collapsed and we got more debris thrown in our kitchen, I opened the door to go out to the apparatus to find out if they were okay and they were right behind the door. We pulled them in the kitchen and the two EMS people were hurt, but they were conscious and stuff, and we evacuated them out. I evacuated them out of the back of the building and they went down the street towards the south.

After that I checked with Lieutenant O'Malley and Captain Mallery to make sure that they were okay and that they were still alive, because I didn't know what happened when the second tower came down, which is World Trade Center 1. They were across the street. I was calling to them. I managed to get a hold of them. We went over there and there was a -- at the time, too, when we were evacuating the building Ladder 124 was there. They assisted with moving people up the block and down to the south. They helped work with EMS. When we went over later on, after the second tower, I went over again to see if our Captain was okay. They had stabilized the Lieutenant. I think he broke his leg and his shoulder, and dislocated his shoulder. Lieutenant O'Malley had packaged him up -- Captain Mallery, and we started on our way and we started going down Greenwich Street south to Albany; to Rector Street, we made a right on Rector Street to head over to the west side, away from any more possible collapses until we figured West Street would be open.

We took them over to -- I think there was two other firefighters with us. I don't know what company they were. We stopped on the way on Carlyle Street, between Greenwich and Washington, to take a break and make sure that the Lieutenant was okay. Captain Mallery I think remained and I think he was doing a search at 130 Liberty. We managed to get down to West Street and Carlyle and we ran into an EMS person and we passed off the Lieutenant to him, and they backed him out on some type of vehicle. I think it was a flatbed truck. And then Lieutenant O'Malley and I started to search some of the buildings. We went into the Marriott Hotel, which was, I think, 85 or 90 -- 85 West Street.

There was a security person in there and we talked to him. He said that the whole place was evacuated. We told him we wanted him out of the place, and made sure that everybody was accounted for. After that Lieutenant O'Malley and I went down to West Street. We started walking around on West Street seeing if we could see any surface victims to rescue and stuff. The whole area was covered with gray ash from the debris that came down, and then we ended up splitting up. I was trying to head over to the north side, which was Vesey and West, to see what was happening over there. There was no access on West Street due to the World Trade Tower 1 coming down, part of 3 was down on West Street and there was no way up Liberty Street due to World Trade 2 that collapsed.

I went through the back way, which was through the World Finance Centers, cut through the building. I ended up getting onto West Street. I'm not sure if I went through the towers or I went around the back to the north cove and I came out on North End Avenue. At that time, there was people on the Vesey/West Street side and I paired up -- down on the corner of West and Vesey, there was a lot of rigs that were buried under the debris. I remember the super satellite from Engine 9 was there, in front of the 6 World Trade Center. There were people climbing all over the place trying to get into there and there were some fires. They looked for surface victims and stuff.

I ran into some of the people from the first battalion. There was Chief McKavanagh, and we started trying to get water. We wanted water lines down there to start water. I understand the boats were in, so we managed to get rigs that were further back towards Murray and Warren Street that were not covered in debris. I remember Ladder 115's rig was in the middle of the street on West Street by Vesey, heading southbound, and that was covered in debris. I managed to get an Engine out and we backed it down the street, down through Murray, up around the back on to North End Avenue and we brought it in on Vesey Street and parked it midway. We then had lines running from the boats, which was at the waterfront at the time. We ran lines down to supply the pumper, and then the pumper ran more lines down to supply the satellite, which was located down at the intersection of Liberty -- of Vesey and West. And we were trying to use that as a supply line to get any hand lines or even to get the super pumper up or the Vesey water satellite unit in service.

We then had another break in the block on West Street heading southbound that we were hooking into to try to boost the pressure up to get water into the satellite units so we could extinguish fires that were going on right now in 6 World Trade, which is the Federal building, the Customs building. We couldn't the get pressure up on it. It would only reach so much pressure and because it was 3-inch, 3-and-a-half-inch lines, we couldn't get enough water down there to provide the pressure to use the satellite gun. And that's where we spent most of the day, was just trying to attack the fires, put whatever we put out in the area.

There was units searching in 6 World Trade.

One World Trade we couldn't get near, because the bridge had collapsed on top of it. The north end bridge had collapsed on the street, blocking the whole street, and we were just -- there were units all over the place. People were all over the place. I didn't know who they were. Because at the time we had a problem with as far as determining who was who, because equipment was being borrowed from all firehouses.

And 7 World Trade was burning up at the time. We could see it. There was concern. I had gone up to take a look at it, because I knew that the telephone company building, which is 140 West Street, was next to 7 World Trade Center, and there was a concern that if 7 World Trade came down, what would happen to this building? We went in there, we checked it out. There were some people in there. We made them evacuate and I went in the back to see what was happening.

The fire at 7 World Trade was working its way from the front of the building northbound to the back of the building. There was no way there could be water put on it, because there was no water in the area. I went back and I reminded whoever the chief was, I don't know if it was Chief McKavanagh or Chief Blaich, that with 7 World Trade Center in danger of collapsing, you had to be careful, because Con Edison had big transformers in the back that supplied the lower half of Manhattan. So we had to be concerned about electricity, that this may be energized or not be energized. We also reminded him about the telephone company, about the equipment that was in there.

After a while, what happened, my eyes started bothering me. I ended up getting taken over to St. Francis in Jersey by the water, had my eyes washed out and when I was coming back somewhere around I think it was 5:00 o'clock, 6:00 o'clock, 7 World Trade Center came down. We were in the water when it came down. It might have been earlier. It might have been 4. I don't know exactly when, but we were on the river coming back from New Jersey when the towers came down.

They were utilizing the north cove as a reference point for evacuation of all people over for hospitals and stuff. The Port Authority -- or police launches were there. They were bringing people across. They had a triage station set up over there to flush the eyes or to handle whatever emergency was quick, and then they moved them over and then transported them out over to New Jersey. After pretty much the towers came down and there was some sense of no more collapse happening, Engine 10's quarters started to get used as a triage station and a general focal point.

Throughout the whole time Engine 10's quarters emergency generator was working we had some type of lighting system and some type of electricity. That's why they used it as a focal point. The EMS people were in there, they were triaging a lot of people. They were eye washing any emergencies, any civilians, any firemen. There was continued searches throughout the area. Again, the people I don't know, because helmets were being used by everybody, taken out of everybody's quarters. Partial equipment was worn. There were no face masks down there at the time, we had no breather masks. We were using whatever was handy, and I probably didn't get out of there until almost 1:30 in the morning, and which I stayed at the Fire Marshal's base with my brother. I finally touched bases with him. I stayed there and then we were back again at 9:00 o'clock in the morning. That's it.

Q. You mentioned Lieutenant O'Malley. You may have mentioned it before. What unit is he in?

A. He's in Engine 10.

Q. Okay. And Captain --

A. Mallery. M-A-L-L-E-R-Y. He's the Captain at Ladder 10.

BATALLION CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. Good interview. I thank you for the interview. The time is now 10:58 hours and this is the conclusion of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM HOREL

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 7, 2001. The time is 9:55 hours in the morning. This is Battalion Chief Ronald H. Kemly of the New York City Fire Department.

I am conducting an interview with the following individual: William Horel of Engine 64, Firefighter 6th Grade, of the New York City Fire Department.

The interview is being conducted at the quarters of Engine 64 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Horel, would you tell me what happened in the events of September 11?

A. Sure. We were assigned first to respond to 35 engine for the staging area and met there with several other engine companies, and we were told to respond to the site, so we drove down to the site, parked near Chambers and West.

Myself, Mike Ferrara, Vinnie Massa, Dave Moriarity and Lieutenant Steve O'Brien started to walk down West Street. We got to the corner of Vesey and West when the north tower started to collapse.

At that point, I turned north on West and dove behind an ambulance. When the dust cleared, we headed back towards looking for, you know, whatever we could do.

We weren't given any specific assignment until much later in the day when we did the primary search of the Verizon building from the 11th floor to the 20th Floor.

Don't really recall seeing any members of any other units going into the building, because we didn't get up right to where we could see the lobby or anything. We weren't that close before the collapse.

Q. Is that it? Do you have any other recollection?

A. Nothing.

Q. Okay. I'll ask you a few questions, and maybe it will help you out.

When you said you were told to respond, did anybody else respond with you? Any other companies?

A. From 35, yeah, there was probably five or six other engine companies. I remember 83, I remember 50. There was either 96 or 94, or maybe both of them. I'm not sure. I know 50 and 83 were there, and 35.

Q. Okay. Do you recall if they responded, they got there at the same time as you or --

A. We were actually the lead engine in the convoy, so we pulled in first, but they were all right behind us.

Q. Okay.

A. All right behind us.

Q. Do you recall if you reported in to anybody?

A. We were working our way towards what we thought was the command post near Vesey and West, but as soon as the collapse came, we never got to report in to anybody at that point.

Later on, there were smaller command posts set up all over that our officer checked in with, but...

Q. Okay. After you got there, like you said, the collapse occurred very shortly afterwards.

Did you happen to see -- maybe not companies. Did you happen to see any apparatus?

A. One apparatus I noticed was 12 truck, because I had a couple of friends working at 12 truck, so I knew they would be down there. I saw the rig, but no members.

Q. Okay. Where was that located?

A. Right around the corner of Vesey and West, right where we were, a little bit farther in.

Q. Okay. Was it intact or was it --

A. It was intact. It wasn't damaged.

Q. And afterwards?

A. Yeah, after the collapse I noticed it.

Q. Okay.

A. So...

Q. Any other things you can recall? As far as did you see any members?

A. We stretched line, I remember, to the water. I guess it was, like, up to one of the boats, one of the marine units.

Q. Right. That was after the collapse?

A. That was after the collapse.

Q. As you said, you hadn't seen any members or anything before that?

A. No, not that I can recall.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay. This concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENTANT STANLEY RYBAK

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today is December 7, 2001. The time is 12:10 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, the safety battalion, New York City Fire Department.

I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Stanley Rybak in regards to the events on September 11, 2001.

Q. If you could, Stan, just tell us in your own words what happened that day.

A. Okay. I was sitting here in my office at hazmat operations, and I was listening to the department radio and heard that a plane had hit the World Trade Center.

At the time, I didn't know what size of the plane it was, so I went inside to Chief Fanning to inform him, and I'm not sure what time it was, but the first plane had just hit. I went inside, told Chief Fanning, and within a minute or so, we both responded with his department vehicle to the trade center.

Chief Fanning drove his vehicle, and I was the passenger. I had taken two handy-talkies from our operations. We went down FDR Drive to some place -- one of the streets -- I'm not sure which one it was -- and that street led us to Central Park. We made a left on Fifth Avenue, drove down Fifth Avenue for some time, and I'm not sure at what time we -- probably 23rd Street, we might have turned to go towards the water to get towards the Westside Highway.

We did see a flash, which we didn't know was the second -- at that time, we didn't know if that was the second plane hitting. We were probably on about 23rd Street, crossing 23rd Street, when we saw the flash, and we had -- again, crossing 23rd Street, I saw the flash of the -- now I know was the second plane hitting.

We were on Westside -- now on the Westside Highway headed south, and we made a turn onto Vesey Street and parked on the corner of -- on Vesey.

We both got out of the car. Chief Fanning donned his bunker gear. He did not have breathing apparatus. I did not even have my bunker gear. Hasmet 1 at the same -- simultaneously arrived, and I had gone to see how I could assist Hasmet 1 and seeing where they might be going. They had two officers on board with extra manpower, extra men. I wanted to see what they were doing. They were going to continue into the building to -- probably to the lobby command post.

As I turned around, I did not know where Chief Fanning had gone, and so I proceeded then to the -- what I thought was the original command post, but there was a -- I was out on the highway itself, and soon as I got there, I saw a lot of the chiefs setting up the command post. The command post, it was on, I guess, opposite 3 -- the American Express building.

I know there was -- I jumped over some dividers, again, and I saw -- it was in the -- near the parking lot. There was a parking garage that went down into a building, and I had spoken to -- I saw Chief Ganci, the priest, about 20 -- 20 of the personnel, Chief Ingram. I asked what I could do to Chief Ingram, how I could help, and he had just informed me if I could possibly relay a message to the other units who were standing fast, that there was a possibility of -- they had heard a third plane coming in and to be aware of this. There might be a third plane coming, to tell the members just to watch out for any other kind of planes coming in.

So I did that, and I felt I wasn't needed. I was going to go look for Chief Fanning now, and I left the site, that command post, and walked south down West Street. As I was walking south, I saw -- I actually passed Commissioner Von Essen. He was walking the opposite way.

I went and walked underneath the pedestrian bridge -- I guess that would be the north pedestrian bridge -- and made my way down to the corner of Liberty, and the corner of Liberty and West Street, and then that's where I heard -- as I was looking up, I was observing people drop from the windows, civilians, and then I heard a noise.

I looked up from the corner where I was and saw the building, the ^ inaudible tower, I guess it was the Tower 2 collapsing, the south tower collapsing.

I turned around and ran diagonally looking for some shelter, and I found a -- ran towards the building that was the Dow Jones center. It's the building where it had a revolving door, that's all I know, and a regular pullout door.

I chose to go up to the pullout door, and there was a lot of pressure on me, on the door. I could hardly open up the door. As I walked -- ran through another 5 or 10 feet, dove on the ground, and hit a -- what was a garden wall inside the middle of the lobby, and then the -- then everything just came right through. The dust and the explosion knocked the windows out, and so I was momentarily on the ground.

I had hit my head on the marble wall, so kind of a little dazed, and then the first words I heard, I heard someone, an officer from 217 engine, screaming for his men, "217, where are you? Where are you?"

So I -- that was my former company, so I went over to the lieutenant. I told him who I was, and I said, "Who are you?" And he said, "Lieutenant McGoff." Tom McGoff was there. I said, "Tom, this is Stan. I don't know if you remember me, but I used to work over there." And he said, "I lost two guys." I said, "Who did you lose?" He said, "Steve Coakley and Levy."

So we found our way out of that building to the -- I think that was the north side of the revolving doors on the -- on Liberty side, and we found our way out, and it was still -- it was still very dark, dusty, and then we just proceeded to get together and shake everything off and then started looking for the missing members.

And then it just went on after that, and then it was -- as we were looking again, the next building came down, and we were on -- in front of the American Express building, headed, again, towards West Street. We were near the pedestrian bridge that did not go down. I don't know which one that connected to, but we were looking for anybody else who could be found.

I know there was a lot of missing members they were talking about, and then again we heard the building was coming down. We looked -- you know, I just felt it coming down and, again, we ran into the same building.

That seemed to be -- as I hid behind a column on this one, it seemed to be a much hotter force going through, and again found our way out. We had to search our way out towards the waterside exit of the building. There are, I think, three different exits in that building, and that one went towards the Gateway Plaza, towards the water, and again, we just started at that time in trying to collect ourselves and go get whatever kind of medical attention we needed.

A lot of guys with eyes were -- you couldn't see and breathing and because we had no -- like I said, no apparatus, so -- and that was it after the second building collapsed, and then we just continued on searching, and that's about it.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Thanks, Stan. That's the conclusion of our interview. It's 12:18 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JOHN CITARELLA

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 7th, 2001. The time is 11:25 a.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with --

LIEUTENANT CITARELLA: Lieutenant John Citarella.

CHIEF BURNS: -- of hazmat operations with regard to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. John, if you would, just tell us in your own words what happened the day of the World Trade Center.

A. Well, I was here at the academy. I was on the phone with my old company, Squad 41. I was talking to the members there. They were going to come out and do a drill out here in the afternoon. One of them said, "Did you hear that on the radio? A plane just hit the Trade Center." I said, "Really? I'll call you right back."

I went upstairs. I spoke to Chief Fanning. He was already putting his radio on. He was getting ready to respond. He turned on the TV. He saw the one tower had gotten hit. My friend next door, Lieutenant Steve Turilli, he came up and said, "Come on, let's go down there." We didn't have our gear with us here, so we went to Squad 41, got gear there, and then headed down.

On the way down we heard that another plane had hit, on the department radio, that Marine 6 gave an urgent that another plane hit the south tower. We continued down. We parked on Washington Street, went west on Vesey Street and then made a left onto West Street.

As we were walking down West Street, there were numerous people jumping out of the top floors, the upper floors. They were landing right next to us. I remember them hitting my leg as they were landing, parts hitting the divider on West Street.

We got into Rescue 3's rig, took their confined space masks and converted them over to regular masks. We ran into Freddie Scheffold and Joe Marchbanks. They were asking us where the command post was, and we said, "We just got here. We don't know."

We started walking around, looking for the command post. We walked down West Street, made a left on Liberty Street. When we were walking down Liberty Street, there was I think a guy from 217. He was an officer. I think he was from 217. He was screaming at us. We came over, "What's going on?" He told us that a fireman just got killed, got hit by a body in that spot that we were walking.

So we came back around and then made our way into the hotel, into the Marriott Hotel. Once we got in the hotel, we met up with -- Chief Galvin was there, and he asked where we were from. Me and Steve said we were from the rescue school. He knew Freddie from the 12th. Freddie wasn't even working that day. He went down there with Joe Marchbanks.

The chief told us, "All right, make your way to the 90th floor in the south tower." I remember Steve started walking right away. I remember I put my arm around Freddie and I said, "Did he say the 90th floor?" Freddie looked at me and said, "Hold on a second."

Right as he said that, I heard a loud roar, "boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, boom," and it was getting louder. I looked around, and we were looking at each other. What is that noise? I just looked out the window of the lobby. I could see stuff out of the window of the lobby hitting the street, and I just dove into the corner of the wall.

I got down and put my head down, and nothing was happening. I just heard that noise getting louder and louder. All of a sudden "whoom," everything just went black. You could feel the air rush around.

The wall that I was leaning against started coming down and "crunch, crunch, crunch." You could still here things coming down. I was squashed right down. I said one more thing hits this wall, I'm going to be squashed.

Then it just got real quiet and stopped. You could see nothing. My head was shoved down into the floor and the wall was on my mask and my knee was in my chest and my leg was out. The only free hand I had was my right hand, and I was able to grab my radio that I had and I was trying to give a mayday, but nothing was responding.

I couldn't hear anything on the radio. I just started screaming at the top of my lungs, "Mayday, mayday, help me, someone." Of course the way my head was like this and the ground, I was having a hard time breathing. I would scream for about 15 seconds. Then I would like hyperventilate. Then I would just listen. There were no sounds. I know Freddie was right next to me, and I know Joe Marchbanks, we were as close as this. I would start screaming again.

This went on it felt like forever, but probably about 15 to 20 minutes. I was resolved to the fact that I wasn't getting out, it was over. Then I heard someone go, "John, is that you?" I knew it was Steve. I said, "Stevie, get me out of here." I started screaming. He said, "Where are you?" I was like, where am I? You can't see where I -- I didn't know what was going on.

I started screaming some more. He said, "See if you can grab --" I reached out with my right hand, and I felt something. I just started hitting like a pipe or something, "click, click, click." "All right," he said, "Can you see my light?" Just out of the corner of my eye, because it was so squished like this, I'm looking and I don't see nothing.

All of a sudden I see the light come in. I put my hand up like this. He said all he could see were my fingers from my glove coming up. Larry Stack was there with him at the time. He had a flashlight. The chief didn't have it.

I think what happened was I had spoken to Mike Stack, and he said his father was pinned originally and they had to cut him out of his coat. He started moving stuff out of the way. Steve took off his coat and he tunnelled in and he saw me. There was a lot of stuff. He yelled back to Chief Stack to get a saws-all. He said, "You're on your own. We've got nothing here."

It took them a while. It took them probably about five minutes to maneuver the stuff out of the way. There was an I beam on my foot and some debris. Once he got that out, he was able to take my foot and he straightened it out a little bit. That actually dropped my body just enough that the mask was able to turn and he was able to turn the mask and take the mask off.

Now I was starting to be able to rock a little bit, and he was able to turn me out into -- it was like a lean-to. I was here, and there was a lean-to to the right of me that he was actually able to crawl under. I went out feet first, and then I saw Stack was there. It was Chief Stack and I guess Meyers.

Q. Right, Brian Meyers.

A. Yeah. When I came out, he said, "Welcome back, John." I remember that distinctly. I gave Steve a big kiss and we were starting to talk and Stack said, "Let's get out of here right now. We've got to get out of here."

We started walking up north now, in the hotel. We walked up north, and we must have gotten to about this section right here north in the hotel, and there was a door there. We tried to open the door, but there was too much debris on the other side of the door to open it. We swung back around and we got to about here.

Q. "Here," what do you mean?

A. On the West Street side of the building. West Street, maybe it would have been 20 feet south of the northern most end of the hotel.

There was a hole in the wall there. O'Flaherty was there and a civilian, and we walked up. We stopped there. Chief Downey was out in the street at this time. He came running over to us, and he looked at me and Steve. "Steve," he said, "What are you guys doing here?" Chief Stack said, "These guys were buried. They've got to get out of here." Downey said, "You guys run out." He told us to run out.

Ganci and Feehan were out in the street at that time. He told us to run out towards them. Downey and Stack were going to stay with the civilian. The civilian didn't want to walk across. He said he pulled his Achilles tendon or whatever and he wasn't going to be able to make it across. He wanted to stay right where he was.

We walked across. Steve stopped for a second to talk to Al Fuentes, who was standing in the street. It was still right in front of the hotel. We were all right in this area.

Q. That's on West Street.

A. It's on West Street. Chief Ganci and Commissioner Feehan were standing right next to each other like actually out in the street. You could still make out the street a little bit. All that iron wasn't thrown into the street at the time. There was debris in the street but not to the extent that there was when the other one came down.

Chief Downey and Chief Stack stayed right by the hotel. Fuentes was in the middle of both of them, of both sets. Chief Ganci immediately asked me if my radio was working and tried to grab it. He said he was trying to get in touch with Rescue 1 and he couldn't get through with his radio. But my radio was smashed. Mine wasn't working at all.

He told me and Steve Turilli to head up West Street, north on West Street. We walked about maybe 10 feet to 15 feet up West Street. We ran into Joe Angelini. Joe said he was going to go back. He was going to try to go into the hotel because he thought there were more people in there.

The captain from 58 Engine was also with us, Nagel. 58 Engine was going to go up in the south tower with us. They were starting to get down and get their rollups and stuff, putting them up, the officer came walking over.

Joe Angelini and I were out in West Street, and he starts walking towards the hotel. We tried to tell him, "Joe, they want everyone out of here. They think the other one is going to come down." He started walking over.

We started walking now up West Street. We got to about -- I guess we met Joe somewhere in here, because I remember stopping -- I was right in front of the north tower. I stopped and I looked back, and I saw him walking on a diagonal and I remember still seeing Chief Downey standing on the outside of the hotel, looking in, and Stack still being there with the civilian at that time.

I turned, I took maybe a couple more steps, and then I heard another explosion, it sounded like. I looked up, and the north tower was starting to come down. So me and Steve started running. I saw the north bridge, and I said I've got to at least make it past the north bridge.

I started running, and I just made it past the north bridge and I got a little bit past that and I felt like someone just hit me from behind. But there was no debris at that time. It was just I got knocked down. I tried to get back up, and there was a couple of trucks lined up on West Street. I got behind one of the trucks. Everything just came down.

Steve didn't make it as far as I did. I got a little further because he stopped and watched a little more as the tower was coming down. That was the last I saw of any of those guys.

It turns out obviously now that Ganci and Commissioner Feehan, they probably didn't make it much of a way, because all the iron got thrown into the street when this one came down.

I know that Downey, Stack, Freddie and Joe Marchbanks are in the hotel for sure. I had spoken to Freddie Scheffold's wife and kids, and I spoke to Larry Stack's son. But I know that's where they are.

There's no way that they can be anywhere else, because in the time it took -- if Downey didn't go into the hotel to take cover, he would have ran and they would have found him in the street. He had to have gone into the hotel. I didn't stop -- I didn't actually see him go in, but where he was when I looked up when the building came down, he's in the hotel, in this area right here, the northern part. Freddie and Joe and the guy from 58 are more in the center, but Stack and Downey are more in this part, in the northern part of the hotel.

Q. Let me ask you one question. When you were in the south tower, did you see any other units that were getting ready to go up? Were they staging?

A. We never actually made it into the south tower, because there was a spot in the hotel where you traversed I guess underneath and into the south tower. That's where we were starting to head to. There are other units in the hotel.

I couldn't tell you for sure who it was, but I think we saw Kerwin from 288 in the lobby there. He was starting to go into the Trade Center, down through the lobby. There were a couple of companies. I can't remember. There were companies from all over the place.

But the south part of the tower -- when the south tower came down, the south part of the hotel was saved pretty much intact. A lot of guys that were in that section survived, got out. They weren't buried at all. They were able to get out.

I remember there were a couple of rigs parked on Vesey Street where the MPOs were. I remember borrowing gloves from one of the engines that were parked there. It might have been 24 Engine. I don't know what happened to those guys over there.

But that was pretty much all the guys that I saw in the street. I know Joe Angelini they found in the street and Ganci and Feehan they found in the street. But those guys are in the hotel.

Q. Okay, John, thanks.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STEVEN ALTINI

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: Today is Friday, December 7th, 2001. The time is 1615 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department, City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual: Steven Altini, firefighter first, assigned to Engine Company 24 of the Fire Department, City of New York. The interview is being conducted at the quarters of Engine 24 in the engine office, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Fireman Altini, would you please tell me what happened on September 11th.

A. Okay. Me and two other off-duty firefighters responded from home prior to the recall. We went over the Verrazano Narrows Bridge. Looking towards Manhattan, we could see the two towers, pretty heavy smoke rushing from the towers.

We responded through Brooklyn via the Gowanus Expressway. We were waved through the easy pass lane from PD as we showed our ID, who we were. We proceeded to go through the Battery Tunnel. We noticed no fire apparatus or emergency vehicles as we went through, just some civilian vehicles.

As we exited the Battery Tunnel to lower Manhattan, we proceeded to make a right turn onto West Street where we were confronted with a lot of debris in the street, airplane debris, human remains and such.

We pulled our pickup truck just north of the Marriott at Carlisle Street on the east side of West Street, facing north. As we exited the vehicle, two other firefighters donned their protective gear and headed north towards tower two or one.

Me being in civilian clothes and no protective gear, I proceeded west across West Street to Commissioner Gregory and his aide and asked them where the off-duty firemen were going, and what I can do. I was instructed to either remain at the scene or proceed over to City Hall where the firefighters were now mustering up after the recall.

As I was there, I remember seeing Ladder 113, but there was no members there. This was between 9:30 and 10. I don't know the exact time the second plane hit the tower, but that's exactly when we left Staten Island. It took us maybe about 20 minutes to get in.

I noticed an engine company -- I believe it was Engine 211 -- pull up. As they were getting out of the rig, I went over to the chauffeur and asked them if they had protective gear that I could borrow. Being the chauffeur was also suiting up, they had no extra gear.

With that I headed east across West Street and went through the Marriott at Carlisle Street, exiting the rear onto Washington Street, headed north one block, over east another block to Greenwich Street, where I met up with another fireman who was in full gear from Engine 249.

We proceeded north towards Engine 10, and we tried to enter their quarters through the rear basement entrance, which was locked. As we continued north on Greenwich Street towards the corner of Liberty and Greenwich is when tower two started to come down.

The only other apparatus I saw, that I remembered seeing on Liberty Street in front of tower two, I believe it was Ladder 15. The number is not clear, but I thought it was Ladder 15. I may be mistaken. I confronted no personnel other than the one member from 249 at that point.

We found cover at the corner of Cedar and Greenwich Street as tower two was coming down, in a deli next to O'Hara's Restaurant. After it sounded like the tower was finished collapsing, we exited the deli and headed south one block, where we were separated, me and the fireman.

I met up with a fire cadet, Eddie Gonzalez, who sustained a broken left arm, I believe, and we got him to an ambulance maybe about 15 minutes, 20 minutes later. By that time tower one had already come down.

When he was taken away in the ambulance, I went around by Battery Park and back up West Street where there was a lot of firemen that weren't there earlier. I didn't see Commissioner Gregory or his aide. I didn't see any other members that I saw prior to the collapses. Just a lot of firemen from out of the borough I guess responded from the recall.

I gave Chief Mosier from the 8th Division some information about the two members that I came up to Manhattan with, because at this point I knew they were missing and I thought they were caught in the collapse of either one or two, tower one or tower two. I wasn't sure, because they didn't say where they were going.

Throughout the day I met many different personnel, and we continued to search and help stretch some hose line from the tugboats to supply tower ladders on West Street, and that was pretty much it.

Q. I'm just going to ask you a couple questions. That was pretty good.

When you say you went there with two other firemen, who were the others?

A. It was Craig Monahan from Ladder Company 5 and Joseph Rea from Engine Company 255.

Q. They had their gear with them?

A. Yes.

Q. When you were on West Street, you said you were on West Street and you met Commissioner Gregory.

A. Right.

Q. Where on West Street was he? Do you know what street?

A. Yeah, we were pretty much right between Liberty and Cedar, just south of the south walkway bridge, at the median in the divider. There was a separation in the divider, and he had his car and they were there, facing north.

Q. You mentioned 211, again on West Street. Do you know where on West Street? Is that the same location?

A. Same location. They pulled up, and the officer had come out and I believe he spoke to Commissioner Gregory. At that point I went over and spoke to the chauffeur as he was donning his gear.

Q. And the guy from 249, you don't recall his name?

A. No, I'm sorry.

Q. That's okay.

A. I was told his name a couple of times.

Q. Okay. Fine.

A. I don't remember.

Q. It would help, but that's fine.

And Ladder 15, you said they were on West Street also on Liberty Street. Is that the overpass, the south overpass?

A. No, it looked like they were facing -- they were on the north side of Liberty Street facing east on a diagonal. I hate to speculate, but they may have come around by Battery Park and then up West Street and parked their rig in front of tower two. They weren't near tower one.

Q. No, but the overpass on Liberty Street, the south walkway.

A. Right.

Q. Were they near that?

A. They were just north of that and east.

Q. Okay. If you don't have anything else, that concludes the interview. Thank you very much.

A. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ROBERT BYRNE

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 7th, 2001. The time is 1645 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Firefighter 6th grade Robert Byrne, assigned to Engine Company 24 of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine 24, in the company office, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Fireman Byrne, would you please tell me what happened on September 11th.

A. September 11th I arrived for work early to do my probationary firefighter duties so I was square with everything. When we got the call to go, I was able to -- I had to beg the nozzle man to let me take up on him, which I did. The call came in around 8:46, so we responded immediately. So I had the knob.

En route to the World Trade Center, it was myself as the nozzle man, Marcel Claes was the backup, Dan Sterling was the doorman, and Rich Billy had control, Lieutenant Hanson was my officer and John Ottrando was our chauffeur.

While going to the Trade Center, I'm really doing my size-up and saying, oh, my God, there's like ten floors missing. Everything is blowing out fire. I remember looking how high it is and saying, oh, my God, how are we going to get up there with all of our equipment.

We parked on, I'm pretty sure it was the West Side Highway by Vesey. I'm almost sure it was over in that area. I remember John parked the rig. We headed to the north tower at that time.

When we were going there, I remember seeing debris and whatnot falling. When we got to the staging area inside the lobby, I remember seeing other companies. I remember vividly seeing it looked like the core elevators of the building were blown apart as if a giant had punched through tinfoil.

I remember seeing some bodies. I remember looking out into the courtyard and seeing some mutilated bodies. Debris was everywhere. I remember we were just waiting for our assignment.

From there we headed up, I believe it was behind Ladder 20, and we headed up to the staircase A. We got as far as, I'd say, the 13th floor initially. We had to take our first blow because we were carrying a lot of equipment.

There were civilians jamming the staircase. There was water flowing down the staircase; I remember that. People saying, "Thank you, guys." I remember another unit behind us. I don't remember what company they were with. One of the senior guys was saying basically, "You're almost there, folks. You're almost there." Then I started joking around with the people. I said, "Yeah, all this for 32 grand." People thought it was funny. That was my way of trying to make them feel better, tell them a joke.

On the 13th floor we took a break. I remember hearing radio calls then, by other units, some maydays, members down with chest pains. I don't know what floors they were on.

I kept going up. I remember seeing people coming down in the stairs. We had to make way for a couple of people that had their skin hanging off their bodies, basically. They were pretty burnt up.

I don't remember what floor it was, but we were with a woman who had an asthma attack and a man was helping her down. We were trying to help her. We didn't have too much CFR stuff with us, but some EMT I guess it was -- popped out of nowhere. He had an oxygen tank with no proper rebreather mask, but he was able to give her a little air.

To make a long story short, she was able to get out because she decided not to stay and wait for EMS to help her out. She just got out. She got out of the building.

It was around the 29th floor, I think it was, that we decided to take some of our gear off in order to make it up to the 80th floor. Then we moved up to I think it was the 29th floor. I don't remember what other units were up there. Like I was saying, we were going to take some gear off, leave a few of the hose lengths. We carried a lot of gear up, and it was almost impossible to make it up that high anyway.

That's where we left Rich Billy to be communications relay, basically, because communications were pretty poor in the staircase. Personally I didn't hear a lot of radio transmissions.

I remember going to I believe it was the 35th floor we got to, and that's where we ran into 5 Truck, our guys. They saw us. We came into the hallway, and we were pooped. They came over and offered us water. We took a blow there for a little bit.

I remember somebody had gotten into a water dispenser, and we took Poland Spring bottles. I think it was Andy Brunn that got into it. We were giving them out to civilians on their way down.

I remember later on we went up to -- I don't know if it was still on the 35th floor and that's when we all dove into the staircase because basically the whole tower shook and we heard the noise of something going on. We didn't know what it was.

What it was was the south tower collapsing. We didn't know. Finally we got some sort of transmission on the radio saying there was a collapse on the 60th floor. Meanwhile the south tower happened to come down.

We were still on a rest period. We started going back. We were supposed to meet up with another unit; I don't remember who it was. We made it as far as, I believe it was the 37th floor, and I believe it was a chief from the 11th Battalion that popped up on the staircase. His exact words were "Drop everything and get out." We looked to Lieutenant Hanson, and he said, "Drop everything and get out." That's when we basically evacuated.

I remember going up the stairs took us over the hour. Getting down the stairs took maybe ten minutes, not even. By that time the staircase was empty. The same staircase we took up was empty on the way down.

We got as far as I believe the 10th floor, 10th or 15th -- I'm not a hundred percent sure -- and we knew something was bad at that time anyway.

There was a radio transmission for -- they needed help. Lieutenant Hanson told me to get out because my -- when the chief told me to drop everything, because I'm a proby, I followed orders to the T, I guess, and I dropped everything, except for my bunker gear, of course. But I dropped my Scott tank and everything. When I got down to that floor, he said, "All right, Byrne, you don't have your face piece. Just get out of the building."

Basically, I got as far as the third floor, where I ran into -- it looked like there was a collapse down there. It was pretty bad. It was all smoky and dusty. I thought it was smoke, and I got a little nervous. I was at the point where I was going to go up and get another Scott tank, but I realized it wasn't smoke.

That's when I saw it was a collapse. It looked like a collapse; either that or the collapse and just closed up the staircase, I think it was the second floor, third or second floor, whatever it was. That's where I ran into a Port Authority cop, and he directed me out.

It was a good thing I had my flashlight on still, because it was pitch-black. I followed a pitch-black hallway, and that's where I ran into a group of civilians. When we got to the point, I think it was the lobby, and that's where we had -- we had a little overhead protection there, and then we had to run across to the next overhead protection it was about a 75 foot run. There were jumpers and debris that was falling. We had to pretty much take our chance when we made the run.

Before that I remember running into another guy in my probationary class, Jimmy Brown. He was with 10-10. He was saying he doesn't know where everybody is. To make a long story short with Jimmy Brown, he ended up living but he got buried up to his shoulders. They had to dig him out before he suffocated.

I remember making the mad dash, praying I wasn't going to get hit. I took a peek up. I saw it looked clear to me, and I ran. I was under another bit of overhead protection, but it wasn't really that good a protection because the aluminum was just coming down from that building. It was just going through that thick plate glass like a hot knife through butter. There were bodies littering the courtyard. Everything was on fire.

So I was by myself with 20 civilians, I guess. I was the only fireman. The whole line stopped because we had to stay in a single column to keep the overhead protection. I didn't understand why the column stopped. I was worried. I was like, why is this thing stopping?

So I went around to the front, and that's when I found this big lady and she couldn't walk. Basically I was like, "Lady, you've got to get up. You're going to kill everybody." She said, "No, just leave me here." So we couldn't do that of course. I tried to help carry her, but I was just so exhausted. She wouldn't give any effort whatsoever to get up. I told her I have to go get a straight board.

Right around the corner of the building, maybe 20 feet, 30 feet, I found a couple of ESU cops. With them two and myself, we were able to get her as far as Church and Vesey on the courtyard still. We're not in the street level; we're still right next to the building.

I think there was another cop that came over with a straight board. We strapped her in, we took her down the stairs, and that's when the building came down. We were about 150 feet away when the building came down.

I remember when the building came down I couldn't believe it, because I didn't even know the other one came down yet, because we were never told. We were told it was a collapse above the 60th floor.

What's that, Chief? I'm sorry.

All of a sudden the lady was able to get up and walk fine. That was good. At least she lived. Because I didn't have a mask, I inhaled quite a bit of that stuff. It went in my eyes, everything.

I remember walking into, I think it was towards Vesey, and I saw somebody in the middle of the street and said, "Who are you? "I don't know if I said, "Who are you?" I just remember looking. I kept on walking towards the only person I saw. It turned out to be Lieutenant Hanson. He barely got out too.

Together him and I were able to walk a block or half a block through all that debris. The debris was burning. We got help from a group of maintenance guys in a building. They were able to wash our faces for us with a five gallon jug. From there we got over to 7 and 1 somehow.

That's about it.

Q. Okay. Thank you. I have some questions just to clarify stuff.

A. Sure.

Q. That was a good job there.

The first question, you said there were other companies that you saw on the way, but you don't remember their numbers? When you got to Vesey and West, you started walking. These other companies, you didn't take any notice?

A. When I was going in or out?

Q. Going in, walking towards the north tower. You reported to the lobby command post, probably, but do you know who the chief was at the lobby command post?

A. Yeah, I remember seeing Chief Hayden.

Q. All right, Chief Hayden.

A. Because I remember there was a firefighter from this house. I think it was 5 Truck. I remember seeing him around here before that, and he was setting up the table, the command table they use. I remember him knocking it down. That's what drew my attention to see Chief Hayden.

Q. All right. So that was the aide probably of the division.

A. Right.

Q. So that was Division 1 was there already.

But you didn't see any other companies like in the lobby, the numbers, any numbers?

A. I remember seeing 5 Truck too.

Q. You don't know where he directed him to?

A. No.

Q. You went up the stairs with Ladder 20?

A. Yes. They were leading us.

Q. No other companies came down or up while you were working that staircase?

A. We were passing companies.

Q. But you didn't take notice of their numbers?

A. I didn't take notice. It was my first job, basically.

Q. Okay.

You said you didn't hear much on the radio. Did you have a radio?

A. I did not, but I was close enough to listen.

Q. That's fine.

The 11th Battalion, the chief you saw, you said you believe it was the 11th?

A. Right.

Q. Did you see anybody with him? Was his aide with him?

A. No, he was by himself.

Q. He was by himself. All right.

And you met 5 Truck on, what did you say, the 35th?

A. The 35th floor, I believe it was.

Q. When you were coming down, did you see any other Fire Department units or any apparatus when you came out?

A. When I came out there was an engine. I forgot the number.

Q. It was probably crushed; right?

A. No.

Q. It was in good shape?

A. It was in good shape after the building collapsed.

Q. You came out of the lobby on the Church Street side. Is that what you said? I believe you said that.

A. Yeah, either that or I came out another way. I had to go around the building.

Q. That's when you saw the engine, when you first came out?

A. After the building came down I saw the engine, because I went to look for a Scott tank.

Q. When you saw this fellow Jim Brown, was he in the lobby? Outside?

A. I'm pretty sure he was in the lobby. I thought he was just right outside the lobby. Just before the mad dash.

There was something else I missed, I wanted to tell.

Q. Okay. If you can remember something else, go ahead. There's no rush.

A. I just forgot it.

Q. There's no rush.

A. Sorry. Thinking about this bugs you out.

Q. No, we're just trying to find out if you saw the units --

A. Oh, okay, I remember now. I remember exactly. I remember 5 Truck telling us that they got up staircase B because it was empty of civilians, because we were telling them how we were packed with civilians. They told us to take B with them, and we ended up just staying in A. That is what I remembered.

Q. Okay. If there's nothing else, that concludes the interview. Thank you very much.

A. Thank you, Chief.

Q. Okay.

CHIEF KEMLY: Today is December 7th, 2001. The time is 10:20 in the morning. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Richard Massa of Engine 64, firefighter first grade. The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine 64 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Massa, please tell me what happened in your own words on September 11th.

A. I was chauffeuring for 64 Engine, and we responded to the World Trade Center from a command post on 125th Street and Third Avenue. We went down there with about four other engine companies. We went down there together.

On the way down we heard reports of the first building collapsing, and we heard on the dispatch system of people being trapped. I remember one instance, there was a guy giving a mayday from inside one of the apparatuses, of being trapped inside there. It was hard to believe what we were hearing.

Heading down the West Side Highway, I went down West Street as far as I could go, which was on West and Eighth, West Street and Eighth Street. I think it was called Eighth. I went down as far as I could. There were apparatus backing up all the way on West Street. So that's as far down as I believe I was able to go.

Looking down to the World Trade Center, I saw just really a puff of smoke where the north tower would have been. I still found it hard to believe that it was actually collapsed. I thought maybe it was just hidden behind the smoke.

When I got out, I started getting on my gear to go down with my men. I realized that I had no mask, because the chauffeur's mask was being used by one of the firemen whose mask was out of service. So I reported to my officer that I had no mask. He said to hang back.

What I started doing right away was I remember seeing one other chauffeur that was back there with me. I didn't know who he was. We started moving the rigs over to one side, because all of West Street was blocked up. We figured if anybody needed to get by -- I don't know if there was an order given for us to start doing that or not, but I was kind of seeing to it myself. I thought at least I could be doing something. I could be moving the apparatus over.

I started moving a bunch of engines and trucks over to the side. While I was doing that, the north tower, the second tower to collapse, collapsed. I watched that and backed up a little bit from the smoke. It was really out of reach from me. It was hard to tell at the time how far it was going to go. But after that I continued moving apparatus over to one side.

So from then when I lost my men, I never met up with them until the evening time after 6:00 o'clock. We got down there between five and ten minutes before the second building collapsed.

After that, after moving over the rigs to the side, someone was going around with wheel barrows collecting tools and anything that might be important for down at the site. So I went to a few apparatuses and looked for maybe halogens or whatever they were looking for, extra masks, to be brought down there, then setting up hospitals after that, just trying to set up or help out with what I could at the time.

I went looking for my company a few times, trying to head down as close as I could to the Trade Center. There was always a lot of people around. I know I met up with 94 Engine for quite a while, from my battalion, and I knew them pretty well. I hung out with them. We were at a command post at the time, and we were told to hang back while Seven World Trade was on fire and they were afraid of collapse.

That's really pretty much how I spent my day, trying to help set up what I could with the hospitals or with equipment. I spent a lot of time trying to look for my men. I tried to listen by radio if I could hear where they may be, but I never found them until after 6:00.

I really didn't get too close to the buildings to really see anything that happened. I was pretty much always a few blocks away.

If there's anything else that would be important that I could tell you -- I didn't report to any command post on my own.

Q. Okay. I've got a couple questions.

When you said you got to Eighth Street, you said you heard a mayday on the department radio. Do you recall who gave it?

A. No, I don't. The fireman gave his name. I'm not even sure. But I know he was stuck in an apparatus.

Q. He didn't say what company?

A. He probably did. More than likely he did, because I remember the dispatcher asking, "Calm down and try to give the location where you were." I remember hearing him saying that he was running out of air. I was looking at my officer. We were looking at each other like we couldn't believe what we were hearing.

No, I don't remember his name or what unit he was from.

Q. When you say another chauffeur and yourself were moving rigs, apparatus, did you happen to know what company he was from?

A. No. I didn't know who he was. I didn't recognize him.

Q. Do you remember any of the company numbers of the apparatus you were moving?

A. I really didn't pay attention.

Q. The same thing happened when you took the tools, you were putting the tools in, you don't remember company numbers?

A. There wasn't any tools that were taken. But no, I really wasn't looking. I probably knew at the time but didn't try to remember.

Q. When you were moving the apparatus, you were getting closer to the buildings?

A. No, I was just moving to the side.

Q. This is all the way up by Eighth Street?

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay. When you say you hooked up with 94, that was after the collapses?

A. That was after the collapses.

Q. Okay. Unless you can think of something else, that will be the end of the interview.

A. No, I remember helping a few civilians that were walking, back around that time after I was moving the rigs, with oxygen. Some of them I guess had difficulty breathing. So I used mine from 64 Engine, my oxygen, to help civilians.

I remember one woman in particular, she took some oxygen for a few minutes, said thank you and then I put the stuff back and started to head down to hook up with some of my men. I don't remember helping anybody else besides that one woman.

There's nothing else I can think of as far as incidents like that as far as helping any civilians coming by. There were some around there. There were some firemen back with me that I know were helping people that were coming back that needed maybe some oxygen.

Type of tools or what engine or truck companies are gone from me.

Q. Do you have anything else?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Okay. That concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF ROBERT INGRAM

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today is the 7th of December 2001. The time is 1:25 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, the Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Battalion Chief Bob Ingram, acting Chief of hazmat operations now. At the time of September 11 I was working in headquarters as an executive manager for special operations.

Q. Okay. Maybe you could tell me about what you saw and did on the day of the Trade Center tragedy.

A. On the day of the event, I was in my office in operations, 7th floor of headquarters, when I heard a commotion outside. I looked outside. Several people were viewing out the window of Chief Ganci's office. I went to see what was going on and we were able to see the north tower on fire. We got the report that a plane had crashed into it.

Along with Chief Ganci, Chief Nigro, Chief Turi, Chief Burns, myself, we all went down to the garage, got into our vehicles and responded to the World Trade towers over the Brooklyn Bridge. On the way through the streets of Manhattan we passed hundreds of civilians fleeing. We got on to West Side Highway down by West Street, parked my vehicle along with Chief Ganci's and Chief Nigro's on West Street. It was just north about 50 feet, 40 feet of the north pedestrian bridge.

We got outside and we were viewing the building, height of the smoke and flame that were visible. We decided to set up a command post on the outside in the side street on the west side of West Street over by the financial building. As we were out there trying to notify units, we had radioed to position, we heard the second plane come in and observed it hit the second building, south tower.

Prior to that and during that impact of the second plane, we were discussing getting in contact with the control towers at the airports to find out if this was indeed an accident or if it was an intentional hit. As soon as we knew the second one was hitting, we knew that it was intentional and we were looking to contact Office of Emergency Management to start to get air support.

We set up the command post at the guard house at the underground garage entrance on the west side just south of the Shearson Lehman building, in between the two pedestrian bridges, one north and one south.

At the command post was Chief Ganci, myself, Chief Nigro, for a period of time. He left later on to go towards the building or into the buildings. Chief Turi was there for a period of time.

During the process there before and during and shortly after the first tower came down, Chief Downey had reported in there and operated there for a few minutes. Captain Fuentes reported there and worked there for a few minutes. Field comm.'s mobile van was parked in the driveway there. We proceeded to start to stage Engine and Ladder companies on the down ramp into the underground garage as a means of protecting them from glass that was falling from the building.

During this time we observed the civilians coming down from the upper floors of the buildings, whether they were jumped or pushed. The Father was there also, my mind is a blank on his name right now, but he was there for a while before he went over to the north tower. Had the Police Department, emergency service sergeant and two officers clear the garage for secondary devices. Chief Ganci called for their third fifth alarm to be staged over on the Brooklyn side. We started to discuss setting the staging area two blocks north of the buildings, mainly because of the falling

The first building came down. We all evacuated the command post into the parking garage. Took us about a good 15 minutes to get out of the parking garage once we were able to determine where we were and what was going on. It had become pitch black, pretty well debris filled on the entrance. Several of us had lights. We were able to find an exit, made our way out. Chief Downey, Captain Fuentes, myself, Chief Ganci and probably 20, 30, 40 other members of the Department. I don't know the identities of the ladders and engines that were being staged there that was being monitored by the officer of the command post.

Captain Fuentes took a team, did the secondary search down below in the underground parking garage to make sure everybody that was down there made it out. Chief Downey sometime during that time afterward made it out. Made his way towards the building that had collapsed, the south tower, to see what can be done over there. Chief Ganci and myself were out on the street, trying to size up what was going on. Telling units coming in to stage two blocks north, sending people to that location, get them out of this collapse zone.

Continued at that location on that entrance to the underground parking garage, trying to coordinate units coming in. Trying to contact units on the inside, reestablishing the command post.

Second building came down. Most of us ran either south or north. I ran north back underneath the north pedestrian bridge, made it to the intersection, at which time as the debris from the second building started to overtake me, I dove under a Tower Ladder that was parked on West Street, covered up, waited for the debris to pass and once it was cleared, we all got out, waited for the debris to lighten up, see where everybody was, what was going on.

We proceeded to start to reorganize there at the intersection, trying to establish water supplies, trying to establish Chief officers on the scene, coordinate activities. Other members of SOC that were there at the time that I'm remembering now, Jack, of SOC was there, one of the firemen that worked in the office, works in the decon support unit, but he is alive and his last name escapes me right now. I can't recall anybody else being present at that time whose name stays with me that is not with us.

Continued to operate at that intersection and on the scene probably for somewhere between 35 and 40 hours. Eventually leaving to set up the SOC base camp on Chambers Street with the research and rescue equipment and teams, trying to organize the search units and giving them the special equipment that was needed. Worked on establishing the water connection during that time also with the second fire boat on the scene, getting the large supply hose down Vesey Street from the marine unit to a manifold at the intersection of West and Vesey. Worked with Chief Cruthers at that location.

Going back to the beginning. After we arrived on the scene, shortly thereafter, right after the second plane hit, I did have contact with hazmat company one. They arrived on the scene and I met them and gave them orders to go to the first building with radiological and chemical equipment to see if there was any other secondary hazards involved with that plane.

They went in, they proceeded to the first tower, north tower, and I believe they reported in there, based on information I received later on from 3 additional hazmat members who had responded from the medical office, Bob Hunter being one of them, Armen Koroghlian. They told me later on they had made it out. They were told that the lobby command post at hazmat was somewhere between the 10th and 30th floor.

Starting to monitor conditions there. Members who I recall working on hazmat one that day, I did see and speak to Captain Waters, Captain Moody, Lieutenant Crisci and all of the other 6 firefighters working the tour. A 7th Firefighter Anthony Castagna had resource that day. He is the only member of the unit that is still alive. Resource man's position is to maintain position with the apparatus.

When the second building came down, I met additional hazmat people, Lieutenant Rybak, Firefighter McArdle, Firefighter Borkowski, Firefighter Tralli, Firefighter Gimbl, and one or two other members of squad units. I had them search out SOC units, apparatus that was still on the scene, where they could get chemical and radiological equipment, had them do a perimeter search around both towers to see if there was any radiological or any chemical agents that were in the area. All the reports came back negative. Had them continue to monitor for several hours.

During that time, I heard from Lieutenant Rybak that Chief Fanning had responded to the scene, parked his car on Vesey I believe, on the east side of the West Side Highway. I didn't see Chief Fanning myself, but I understood that he went into the lobby of one of the buildings. I don't know which one, reported in there. I assume he reported into the lobby of tower one, the north tower, because that is where hazmat was, so I'm assuming he would go there to communicate with them.

I don't know how much you want.

Q. Let me just ask one question. You talked about the underground parking garage where you guys were staged. What was the exact location of that, was that next to the Trade Center or across the street?

A. It was across the street. It was a two bay parking garage with a concrete median in between the up ramp and down ramp where the guard post was. That is where we set up the command post and the mobile command board from the small field comm. van and it was in between the north and south pedestrian bridges or overpasses. It was probably in the area of the Merrill Lynch building, 2 World Financial Center, I believe is where the parking garage was.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Thank you very much. That's the end of the interview. The time is 1:40 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STEPHEN ELLIS

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today is the 7th of December, 2001. The time is 4:06 p.m. I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER ELLIS: Firefighter Ellis, Engine 239, Firefighter First Grade.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: This is in regard to the events that occurred on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Steve, if you could, just tell us in your own words what you saw on that day.

A. Well, we responded through the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. We drove up West Street. I was in search of a hydrant. We proceeded past both towers going north on West Street, and I finally came across a hydrant at the corner of West and Barclay.

I tested the hydrant. We hooked up. We had water. Soon thereafter I found out that Engine 24, which was located on Vesey Street and West Street, needed to be augmented. So myself, Firefighter Brown, Firefighter Martin and Firefighter Wheeler had stretched three-inch line from my rig down West Street from Barclay to Vesey and hooked into Engine 24's rig, and I had then gone back to my rig and started water and augmented them.

Other than that, I was not in any of the towers. I was there when the towers did collapse and me and the rest of the members had gotten caught in the huge dust cloud. That's about all I can tell you as the chauffeur. The other members were, I understand, going towards Tower 1 at the time, after they had helped me stretch the three-inch hose to 24's engine. That's about all I can say.

Q. So from the position you were in, did you see the tower go down?

A. Yes. I saw the second tower, not the first tower, the second tower go down.

Q. Did you see any units, where they were, or any units that were involved in the collapse or the identity of any people that you saw?

A. No. All I saw was 24's rig when I was supplying them and going back to my rig. In the immediate vicinity of the tower, I didn't see any other rigs. Back by where I was parked on Barclay, I saw Engine 235's rig. But in the immediate vicinity of the towers, I didn't see anybody else's rig that I can remember besides 24. I was concentrating on supplying them.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Great. That concludes the interview. Thanks, Steve. It's 4:10 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM WHEELER

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 7, 2001. The time is 4:52 p.m. I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with William Wheeler of Engine 239 in regard to the events of September 11, 2001.

Bill, if you would, tell us in your own words what you saw that day.

A. We went through the tunnel, responded through the tunnel, we went up to the West Side Highway. There was people all over the ground, debris and whatnot. We stopped in front of the building and dropped this guy off -- I'm not sure who it was -- and proceeded past the building down to, I think -- I'm not sure what street it is. Warren Street or Murray Street, one of them. We found a hydrant, stretched a 3 and a half inch line off the back of the rig to 24 Engine who was parked on the corner of Vesey and West Street, West Side Highway.

I went back to the Engine back on Warren Street, I think, took my roll-ups, live saving rope and whatever else, other tools, went back up to the command post in front of 2 World -- the World Financial Center.

The building then fell down. We ran back towards underneath the pedestrian bridge on the West Side Highway, the north one, and stayed there for a period of time. Then I was told by someone, the Captain I believe it was, to go get a hand line and stretch it into the basement of the World Financial Center. I went back to do that. I stopped to wash my eyes out and whatever.

The other building started falling. I ran into a building on the corner of Warren Street and stayed there for a while. I came back out, went back to the rig. Then we went over to see if there was a hydrant. 54 Engine was across the street from us. We went, hooked it off the hydrant and started working the gun on the top to see if we could get the car fires out that were in the parking lot across the street. But then they told us to shut it off because there was no water pressure. They were going to move a hand line in.

Then I went back and we reconnected our 3 and a half that we had stretched to Engine 24 originally, because it was covered in the collapse. We went to stretch some more of it and got that all done, and that's about it.

Q. When you said earlier that the building fell down, that was the first building? The south tower?

A. The south tower. That was the first.

Q. When you were on West Street stretching lines, did you notice any units or the identity of any people over there?

A. The only one I saw, 5 Truck was outside of 6 World Trade Center, the Customs building, with a ladder up. I don't know. There was a tower ladder out behind it. I believe it was 12. I'm not sure.

I saw 54 Engine across the street, I saw 2 Truck on the West Side Highway facing underneath the pedestrian bridge. Let's see. There is not that much more I remember seeing.

I saw 131 Truck when we first pulled up. I saw 131 get out of their truck. I saw 122 Truck when we first pulled up, I saw them get out of their truck. I saw the chauffeur for 16 Engine. I talked to him, because I used to work there. And he was asking me -- he was trying to back out of a block. He asked me how far he could stretch a 3 and a half and I really didn't know. I couldn't help him. I was doing something.

And I saw the chauffeur of 235 after the collapses asking where his company was, and I saw 231's rig was around the corner from our rig, and I saw their chauffeur. I didn't see any of their guys. And there was a guy that was with us the whole time. I don't know where that guy was from though. He was with us. Like we used him to untangle search ropes and stuff in the building, after the second building fell. I don't know if he was from Rescue or where he was from. He just came out of the basement of the building and he was like "Uhhh" and I don't know.

I think that's about it.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Thanks, Bill.

The time is 4:56. That's the end of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER LIEUTENANT ANTHONY MANCUSO

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is the 7th of December 2001. The time is 4:13 p.m. I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Anthony Mancuso from Engine 239 in regards to the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you would, in your own words, tell us what you saw on that date.

A. We had gotten the order to go through the Battery Tunnel after the second plane hit. We were heading north on West Street. I had told my chauffeur we might as well move away from the towers, because there was no place to hookup. We ended up getting to Barclay and West Street, and that's where we hooked up.

In the meantime, I had seen a lieutenant that I knew, Lieutenant Joe Torrillo. He was in the street, on West Street. He mentioned to me that companies are having water problems. We augmented 24 Engine, which was at Vesey and West, with the help of the whole company. We took roll-ups and we're a command post company so we have extra radios and we took forcible entry tools. We figured we might be used in the towers either as an Engine Company or to operate elevators. We didn't know the status of the elevator problems or anything in the building.

We were heading south on West Street and we were told the staging area was at 2 World Financial Center, where Merrill Lynch is. We were in the middle of West Street, just about in front of the north tower, and we met Commissioner Feehan. He had asked us if we had any orders, and I had explained to him that we already augmented one of the Engine Companies. And he asked me if I knew where the staging area was. I said, "Yes, I do." He walked south on West Street away from us.

We started -- we were actually underneath the -- we were just in front of the north tower, heading towards the staging area. Maybe, I guess, about 20 seconds later he walked away from us and one of my firefighters, William Wheeler, he says to me, "I think the building is coming down."

From what we could see, we couldn't see the whole tower that was coming down. We could just see the facade coming off, and we backed up. We were about in front of the north tower, in front of -- half of us were in front of one piece of apparatus when it hit and a dust cloud came down. We couldn't -- I don't think anybody knows how long we were in the dust to make any decisions about -- it just seemed kind of confusing for a while, because you couldn't see anything.

Once the dust cleared, I was able to put all my members -- we were pretty close to one another and we all got back together. We walked north again to our apparatus at Barclay and West Street. Once I knew everybody was all together, I headed back. We headed back towards -- I know I was headed back towards the pile, because some of the members were saying they had trouble seeing. I went back towards the pile of the first tower that went down, not finding anybody. It was very quiet, silent. Then I walked over to the north tower. Companies were coming out of the north tower, but to this day I can't remember the numbers on their helmets. They were saying they were told to leave the north tower.

Civilians were coming out. We helped them across West Street and told them to head north. Then it got pretty -- like there was nobody coming out of the north tower. I'm not really sure if we got a transmission to stay away from the north tower or it just so happens I backed up north again up West Street and I was probably right about Vesey Street or probably just a little north of Vesey Street when the second tower came down.

Again, after that came down we knew we had all our members. We went back to some of the rubble from that and we had worked in that area for a short time and then we were told to keep feeding a couple of the tower ladders they had in front of 6 World Trade. They just didn't want anybody operating there. I think they were fearing about 7 World Trade coming down. So then we kept augmenting tower ladders and staying away from that collapse area.

I guess after that we were pretty well spread away from the collapse area for the rest of the evening. I can't really think of anything that I could say as far as companies or anybody else we saw before they came down.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Thank you.

That's the end of the interview. It's 4:19 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PETER BROWN

Interview Date: December 7, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 7, 2001. The time is 4:30 p.m. I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with Peter Brown, firefighter from Engine 239 in regard to the events of September 11, 2001.

If you would, Peter, just tell us in your own words what happened on that day.

A. My name is Peter Brown, Firefighter First Grade, Engine 239. We were sent on, I guess, a second alarm. We staged at the mouth of the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. While we were there, the second plane hit. We got the word to go to the tower and proceeded through the tunnel. There was some traffic in the tunnel and Steve Siller from Squad 1 jumped on the rig. We proceeded through the tunnel. Steve Siller jumped out on Liberty and West Street.

We proceeded past the two towers up to Barclay, looked around. The rig faced south, we grabbed a hydrant and we started to stretch the 3 and a half back to Engine 24. They had water problems. We hooked up the 3 and a half, stretched it to like 6 lengths off us, hooked up, pulled some lengths off of them, put them all together, augmented them, hooked into 6 World Trade Center, into the sprinkler system, went back to our rig, got some -- put our masks on, I grabbed a cylinder and a personal search rope and we started heading back south again on West Street.

All this time there were people jumping from the building so we walked in the middle of the street. We walked as a unit down the street and the Lieutenant, I think, saw Chief Feehan and he said proceed to the staging area. As we were walking, the south tower started to collapse. The command said the south tower was coming down. We looked up, we saw the tower coming down. We ran back north, hid under the north pedestrian bridge behind -- I hid behind Ladder 3, and the dust clouds, debris cloud blew by us and hung around a while. It was pretty dark. We sort of thought we were buried underneath the bridge.

It was me, Kevin Martin and another guy was there who I thought was a Lieutenant, but I found out -- he was coughing. I helped him buddy-breathe and then he said he needed water so we ran around the side of the truck and got a can. I hit him in the mouth with the can a little bit to get some of the dirt and garbage out of his mouth. Finally the air cleared and we realized we weren't buried under debris and we regrouped. We got everybody together and Lieutenant Mancuso said, "Let's get out of here. This one's gonna come down." He said, "Get everybody together" and we went back to our rig. It was pretty much debris in our eyes and in our mouths.

We went back to the rig and sort of took off my mask and I had dropped some tools while we were running. I guess the cylinder and the rope I had. While we were there -- I was on Barclay, sort of went around to this other building there. It was, I think, the DC37 building, DC 10. Something like that. And while we were in there we went to the bathroom to wash up, get the stuff out of our eyes, the second building came down. After that it was pretty much an operation from a distance, I guess. We didn't get in too close. We stretched a few lines. There was cars on fire across the street in the parking lot. We stretched some lines and put them out and we did a variety of minor things.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay that's it. That concludes our interview. The time is 4:34 p.m.

EMT FRANK PUMA

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. MURAD: Today's date is December 12th, 2001. The time is 0730 hours. I am Murray Murad of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with --

EMT PUMA: EMT Frank Puma of Division 1 EMS.

MR. MURAD: The interview is being done at Battalion 8, the Kips Bay station, Station 13. This is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Can you please describe the events with respect to that day?

A. Just from the collapse?

Q. Yeah, from the time the call came in, from the beginning or whenever you were there, to the World Trade Center.

A. Before the first plane even hit, me and my partner -- our unit designation is 1 Adam, and our street corner is Fulton and Church, it's our 89. So we were about a block away, two blocks away on Barclay between Church and Broadway getting breakfast when we heard the first plane hit.

After we heard the first plane hit and felt the ground shake, I ran down to the corner of Church and Park Place, looked up and I saw the plane shooting out of the top of the towers. That's when I grabbed for my radio and yelled over the air, "1 Adam. A bomb just went off in the Trade Center."

Me and my partner proceeded to grab the ambulance, turn it around. I jumped in the passenger seat, and we drove right up to Vesey and Church. When we got there, all the people started running out to us, and we were bombarded with patients.

Through that whole time before the second plane hit, we were treating anywhere between 7 and 15 different patients. When the second plane hit, me and my partner were in the back of our ambulance. We felt all the debris come down, bouncing off of me, myself, my partner, shooting inside the back of our ambulance and rocking our ambulance back and forth. We shut the doors, jumped on top of all of our patients.

Once all that cleared up, once the ambulance stopped rocking, my partner looks at me and says, "We've got to get out of here." He then proceeded to get into the driver's seat, and we started making our way to NYU Downtown Hospital, Beekman, to drop off our first set of patients when we got flagged down for another lady who got hit by the landing gear of the first plane.

We then proceeded to put her on a long board as best as we could, because we couldn't roll her because she had no back anymore. We put her on the long board and put her in the back of the ambulance, dropped off our first set of patients at Beekman Hospital.

Then after that we took about a minute to take some sterile water and clean off the back of the ambulance, all the blood and everything. From there we proceeded to go back into ground zero. We started our way back in, and we stopped again on Barclay and Church Street, where we helped another unit long board two more patients.

We then proceeded to go back to Vesey and Church where we originally were, but we were stopped by the PD. We noticed other ambulances going into Battery Park City, so we followed them. That's where we had our triage center set up, one of our many triage centers that day.

We were placed at the back of the line. We left our ambulance running. We went up to the LSU truck to go get more supplies, because we diminished the first set of supplies. We started walking back up towards West Street between Liberty and Vesey when we heard them start screaming over the radio that the first tower, the south tower, was ready to fall.

We started running because we looked up and we saw the part of the tower coming down. Me and my partner started running, and I ran west down Vesey Street and almost jumped right into the Hudson River.

Once all the smoke and debris cleared up from the first tower collapse, I then got up to look around for anybody that I knew. I ran into a couple people that I work with: EMT Allen Cruz, who was working the LSU truck that day, EMT Joe Torres, EMT Mike D'Angelo and a couple other faces that I don't remember their names.

We then proceeded to go in to move all the ambulances that were parked on Vesey and West Street and move them up further on North End Avenue. Then we heard them screaming over the air that the second tower was ready to fall.

I then proceeded to run back to my ambulance, started up the ignition and grabbed EMT Mike D'Angelo with me, and we started driving off. I made it as far as Chambers and West before the cloud of smoke caught up to me. When the cloud of smoke caught up to me, me and him were stuck, trapped inside of our ambulance for approximately it felt like about ten minutes. It could have been anywhere between five and ten minutes.

I shut the motor off. That way the motor wouldn't take in any of the fumes. We had all the doors shut and all the windows closed. We were stuck in the ambulance in pitch-black for about ten minutes with all the smoke finding its way in there.

Once that cleared up, we got out of the ambulance and walked back to Vesey and North End Avenue to see if there was anybody else that we knew around there. We ran into EMT Joe Torres again and EMT Allen Cruz. Then after that we heard that we were starting to set our staging area up further near the Chelsea Piers.

We proceeded to run back to our ambulance, and we took off. We started making our way up north via West Street where we stopped off at North Moore and West Street where we ran into a lot of the other EMTs and paramedics who were operating at the scene. I finally ran into my partner, Orlando Martinez, after an hour and a half of being separated from him.

Then we heard them screaming over the air again that there was a gas leak, everyone keep pushing forward. We then proceeded to get back in our ambulance. My partner, Orlando Martinez, was driving the ambulance at that time. I jumped in the passenger seat. EMT Mike D'Angelo jumped on my lap, and about ten other EMTs and paramedics jumped in the back of our ambulance and just started screaming to drive.

We proceeded to go up to the Chelsea Piers, where they had our staging area set up there. Once we got up there, we just started looking for anybody who was from our station.

Then at that point we started running into more people from our station, EMT John Moritz, EMT Kevin McKeon. I don't remember all the names offhand. Then we just stayed there until we were relieved by CISD at approximately 8:30 at night.

Q. Were you operating on any type of radio frequency or how was the radio communications at the time?

A. That morning I believe that both Manhattan south and Manhattan central were operating on the Manhattan central frequency, and we were told to just stay on that one frequency throughout the whole operation, intermittently switching between Manhattan south and citywide.

Q. You did find your partner. Your partner was Orlando Martinez; right?

A. Yeah. Me and him were separated for approximately an hour and a half after the first tower collapsed, because he ran north and I ran west.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this interview?

A. Unless you want to know the details about the stuff that I saw.

Q. Well, if you would like to go into it, you can.

A. I remember when we pulled up first, because we were the first emergency unit on the scene there, I remember counting at least six bodies who jumped out from the 50th floor. I know one of the bystanders, one of the civilians, as he was running out of the towers ran up to us and told us, "You've got to help this guy." I turned to him and said "All right. What happened? Where is he?" He said, "He just jumped." I said, "From where?" He said, "I don't know. It looked like the 50th, 60th floor." I said, "Brother, I'm sorry to say he's dead. Just keep running."

I remember after the first tower collapsed hearing over the EMS frequency all the EMS members screaming, "Mayday, mayday. Somebody please help us. We don't want to die in here." I listened to that for about two, three minutes. You had to lower the volume because you couldn't stand listening to that anymore.

I remember the F-16s and the F-18s flying overhead before the first tower collapsed that we all jumped on the floor because we didn't know what it was. We looked up and saw it was our guys, and we were like, okay, we can stand up now and take control of this.

I remember trying to run around trying to find like a respirator or something to put on our faces after the first tower came down, because we had no equipment with us. I remember losing all of my equipment down at the Trade Center before we left to drop off our first set of patients, because I had all my stuff on the outside.

I just remember the sheer look of terror that came over my partner's face, which really got me nervous. When I saw that, I knew I was in trouble.

I remember seeing some of the engine companies go in. I work downtown Manhattan, so I was friendly with a lot of the firefighters who were around there. I remember seeing a lot of them run in and not seeing them ever again.

I knew all the Port Authority cops who worked in the building, because, like I said, that was my street. That was my 89 was the Trade Center. So we knew all the Port Authority cops in there by first names. We knew their first names, their shield numbers. When we walked in, they knew our shield numbers. We just like, "Hey, how you doing? How's your wife and your kids?" I remember reading about them in the newspaper that they still haven't found their bodies yet or seen that they were confirmed dead.

I remember my parents' voice when I was on the phone with them. Right before the first tower collapsed, I was on the phone with my mother, telling her that two planes hit the Trade Center, that I was all right and okay, that I was still standing near the buildings but I was all right. Then we got disconnected, and that's when the first tower came down.

I didn't get a chance to call my family until about two and a half hours after that. I remember the sounds of joy in my mother's voice when she heard me, that I was still alive.

Q. That was important, communications to the family.

All right. I'd like to thank you for this interview.

MR. MURAD: The time now is 740 hours, and this concludes the interview. Thank you very much.

EMT PUMA: Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT CHARLES GSCHLECHT

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. MURAD: Today's date is December 12, 2001. The time is 620 hours. My name is Murray Murad of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with the following.

A. Charles Gschlecht, shield number 5445 of Battalion 8.

Q. Of the New York City Fire Department. This interview is being conducted at Battalion 8 located at Kip Bay station. This is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Charles, can you please give us your perspective on what happened that day?

A. All right. Well, the day started out as usual, you know, sign for the equipment, putting it on the truck, logging on, and going on to our CSL. Traveling up First Avenue to 34 Street, when we got to about 34 Street and Park Avenue, I forget what unit it was, but they said something just hit the World Trade Center. A few minutes after that you hear other people saying the same thing.

Somebody said they thought it was a plane and that there was an explosion. So I asked my partner if he wanted to take the job, because we weren't assigned a job and he said yes, okay. We asked for the assignment. The dispatcher gave it to us and we started responding down 34 Street to West Street heading south.

About when we got to Chambers Street, by the college, we saw the second plane hit the World Trade Center. I told my partner slow down and wait to see if the building was going to collapse right away, because you could see it swaying. After a couple of minutes of waiting, we didn't see it collapse, so we started heading in further.

When we got to Vesey and West Street, the Lieutenant told us to set up second staging at 3 World Financial Center. I guess they were getting all the walking wounded that were coming over the pedestrian bridge. There were busses lined up there. Then we were triaging people, minor burns I guess. Then started loading them up on city busses. I remember running out of equipment, so I had to go to the LSU van, which was on the corner.

I saw people jumping out of the World Trade Center. I saw a few people, I guess maybe three or four. After that I couldn't watch any more so I went back, took the equipment and I guess by the time I got back, I don't remember how long it took for, you know, the building to collapse or whatever, but most of the people were already in the busses and they were already going up like I guess towards the -- what is that place on 23 Street, Chelsea Piers.

So then I heard -- I guess -- I'm not too sure. I know I heard a rumble and I figured it was the building coming down. I told my partner run and I started running and there was one person left there. I can't remember her name, but she was in the chair. She was strapped in the chair, so I ran back and I got her and just started running. Also the people started running up West Street. I guess they were overcome by like dust and debris and I started running up West towards the Hudson River. Then I started running north.

I got back on West Street around Murray and there was another Lieutenant there, I can't remember his name, but he said that it was all over, that we are going to go two blocks in. I told him, I said, listen, if the first building collapsed, you don't think the second building is going to collapse.

Then maybe about 10 minutes of deciding whether or not he was going to go two blocks in, the other building collapsed, I guess 10, 20 minutes. I don't know. Then I just started running up South Street, I couldn't find my partner for about 3 and a half hours, because initially when I told him to run, he started running with me and then I turn around and he is gone. I had no idea where he was. Like I said 3 and a half hours later I found him. He told me, I think he was with the Captain and a Chief.

Q. Do you know the Captain's name or the Chief's name?

A. Yes, Captain Stone. He had to go to the hospital. He was injured. I don't know what part of the body was injured.

Q. And the Chief's name?

A. Hirth. Chief Hirth. I guess that's about it.

Q. At any time, were you asked to switch to any frequency on the response into the World Trade Center?

A. Yes, we were all on Citywide, but I had lost my radio when I was running. I left all my equipment in the truck. I saw the radio fall, [redacted]. I just kept running.

Q. Anything else that you think you would like to add?

A. I guess that's about it.

MR. MURAD: Okay, time now is 0630. I would like to thank you, Charles, for this interview. This will conclude the interview. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC ALBERT SINGER

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. MURAD: Today is December 12, 2001. The time is 0600 hours. My name is Murray Murad of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Albert Singer.

Q. Your rank and your command please?

A. Paramedic, Battalion 8, Manhattan.

Q. The interview is being conducted at Battalion 8, the Kip Bay station. This is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Al, can you please give us your perspective on that day, on September 11?

A. Okay. Just prior to the collapse, my partner and I, Arty Gonzalez, and I were doing an RMA in the Long Island Railroad when the first plane hit. We were just completing the RMA and when the second plane hit, we knew that we had to respond.

So we finished the RMA, we went to our ambulance. We had on the computer screen on the ambulance, the job was already there to respond to the World Trade Center. We drove down the West Side Highway. When we arrived at the vicinity of the World Trade Center, we were staged on the street on the West Side Highway, approximately where the AMEX, number 3 World -- the AMEX building, 3 World Financial Center was.

We were initially on the street. We observed the building, presumably the first World Trade Center, on fire and people were jumping off the roofs. About 10 minutes later, we were told to set up a staging inside what I believe to be the American Express lobby. My partner and I, Arty Gonzalez, set up a staging area.

10 minutes later a co-worker of ours, Corey Romanowski from BHS, showed up. We asked him to remain with us since he was unassigned. About 10 minutes later, two EMTs came running into the building saying that the World Trade Center was collapsing, that we should run.

We proceeded out the American Express building and we proceeded to the building directly behind, which was 4 Financial Center, which is the Merrill Lynch building. We remained in that for about 5 minutes before we were told to evacuate because there was a chance that the gas lines had been ruptured and the building was in danger of exploding.

Following that, we went on to Vesey Street, where the commanding officer, whose name I don't recall, suggested we head towards the waterfront, which might have been the safest place. When we responded there, we remained there for about 5 minutes until we were redeployed up to one of the buildings on North End Avenue where staging had been set up. The MERV had been brought up.

We treated and triaged some patients in the lobby of that building for about 15, 20 minutes. When it was deemed unsafe to remain there, every patient that was in the lobby was evacuated, whether by MERV or by ambulance, up to 23 Street. We had the first patient that we transported, so from that point on we transported our patient to St. Vincent's Hospital.

Q. I just want to check with you. On that day what unit were you guys assigned to?

A. 7 Young, Tour 2.

Q. Were you operating on any radio frequency? Were you told to switch to any certain radio frequency and what was the radio transmissions like during that time?

A. We were switched over. We were told to switch over to Citywide, but we never had to utilize the radio since the job was already on the KDT.

Q. Is there anything else that you can think of that you would like to mention or --

A. I would like to mention that I think Corey Romanowski was a very heroic individual, he told us his experience outside the building. He had stepped outside for a few minutes and he came -- he told us later on that he was nearly killed by the collapsing rubble of the building and he had dived under a fire truck, which had the springs collapsed by the weight of it while he was underneath it and he said that there were a couple of EMTs that were running for cover for the same fire truck and he said that they didn't make it, so he considered himself very lucky. He didn't know which way to run because of the fire and smoke. Eventually he did get out. That was the most remarkable thing I heard of the whole experience.

MR. MURAD: Okay. Paramedic Albert Singer, I would like to thank you. The time is 0605 hours. This concludes the interview of the World Trade Center. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ARTHUR RICCIO

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 10th, 2001. The time is 1718 hours. This is Battalion Chief Steven King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I am conducting an interview with Firefighter Arthur Riccio from Ladder Company 119. He was on overtime as a chauffeur in Ladder 110 on September 11th.

This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Artie, you can start whenever you want.

A. I came down Liberty Street. When I got to Church Street, the second plane hit. We didn't know it was a plane; we thought it was helicopters going around. I thought a helicopter went into it.

I stopped there. People were running at us. It was like a movie. The lieutenant was saying, "Back up, back up. Get out of here." I stopped. I had people running all around me. The women were losing their shoes. One woman lost a pocketbook. We took the pocketbook, threw it in the rig, and we gave it back to her about three days later. She got her pocketbook back.

I backed out. I went down Broadway. I came back around and wound up in the same spot, Liberty and Church. I went up to Vesey Street. I parked the rig on Church Street. We walked down Vesey Street, and it was like total silence, nothing. It was eerie. There were police cars all parked on angles, metal going through their hoods. There was a tire of a plane on top of one.

We walked down Vesey, went into the lobby. Battalion 11 came to us and said we have people trapped on the 31st floor. In the lobby was the Commissioner, Ganci, the Mayor was there, Father Judge was there.

We walked around to the A staircase. The A staircase was loaded with people. We couldn't even get in there. Battalion 11, I don't know who it was, he came around and said, "You know what, this elevator here goes to 16. Let's take the elevator." We asked, "Chief, do you want to take the elevator?" He said, "Yeah, come on, let's go. If only goes to 16, there will be no problem."

So we took it, went to 16. We got out and went into C staircase. As we started walking up, we were telling civilians to go to the left and we were going to the right. We walked up and got to 21. 21 was locked. Chief said, "Maybe another floor is open. Let's go up." We got to 28.

I was behind the chief. I said, "Chief, this is 21. Where are we going?" He said, "You know what, let's go back down and force the door." We went back down to 21, forced the door, we go in and searched all the occupancies. Nobody was in there.

It was a little hazy. The bathrooms were charred. I had to use my mask to look in the stalls and make sure no one was in there. I came out. It was like a horseshoe. The last office, I was in there with Lieutenant Meara to and this kid Mike, a proby.

All of a sudden we felt wind hitting us in the face. We thought fire was coming in. Every door we went through , we broke the locks so it wouldn't lock behind us. As we go through a door, we would hold the door closed. We would lay on the floor with our feet on the door, holding it.

I think 55 Engine was hooked up, and they asked, "Where's the fire? Where's the fire?" No fire. Paulie Howard was saying the whole building shook. I was laying on the floor saying, "Come on, this building -- it's got to shake. Everybody was swaying." He said, "No, this building's going down." I said to him, "There was a bomb in the basement. It's not going to go down."

Every window was broken. There was smoke coming down the hall, and I was just in that office. I said, "You know what, I'll go back in there. I know the layout." I go back in, and the proby came with me. We went on the whole outside. Every window was broken. All the blinds were burnt. It was smoky. So we came back out.

55 Engine said, "You need a line?" I said, "There's no fire in there. I don't know what it is. I don't know what happened." We didn't know the building went down next to us.

We passed the C staircase and got to the B staircase. We were standing right there, and a chief, whoever he is, he saved our lives. He was yelling, "Get out now. Get out." So we started walking down. We were lucky we were in the B staircase. They told us that the B staircase was the only one that went out, the only one that wasn't blocked with rubble.

On about 18 I saw two civilians trying to get a lady -- she must have had arthritis because her hands were bent. They were permanently like this. So I said, "Come on, we'll throw her in a chair." We put her in a chair, and I took the back and a civilian took the front. Actually another civilian took my halogen, and we walked down. The rest of 110 was behind me.

We walked down. I don't even remember going down. They told me it was stop and go. It was real slow going down. I was kidding with her. She was crying. I was telling her, "Don't worry, Uncle Artie's got you. We're going to get out of here. No problem."

When we got down to the lobby, it was like a bomb hit it. I looked around and said, oh, my God, every window is busted. I was shaky.

My arms were shaking. I was totally exhausted. I looked for an ambulance, got her into an ambulance, and I sat down in front of the building on West Street. I was sitting there and I thought, my God, I can't move.

Another chief, another guy who saved my life -- I don't know who he was -- he kept on telling me, "Go north, go north. Get out of here now." So we started walking up West Street. I don't know even know how far we got. A block? I know we walked under the first walkway, overpass. I think we might have just got past there.

The guy said to me, "Run!" I turned around, and it was a tidal wave of black coming down on top of us. I couldn't run. I was done. I knew that a two and a half foot wall in the street was next to me. I couldn't see it, so I just rolled to it. I tucked, I hit. I couldn't put my mask on. I couldn't breathe. I was pulling cement out of my mouth.

I finally found my mask and put my face piece on. It was full of cement. I must have laid there for five minutes, ten minutes, in total darkness. The next thing I knew -- I was totally at peace, I swear to God. I think all our guys that died, they felt the way I felt. I was ready. Total calmness came over me. It was unbelievable.

The next thing I know, a guy from 122 -- I couldn't see his face in front of my eyes. The way you can't open your eyes in the morning like this. I had so much dust -- you know the dust out there.

Q. Sure.

A. You couldn't open your eyes. I just saw 122. The guy's lifting me up. He walked me out.

After a while, a couple hours, I guess, they went to start searching subways. We regrouped and got saws together and were cutting gates of subways and going down. They were totally collapsed.

I did see in the lobby, though, a friend of mine, John Crisci, as I was walking in. He was from hazmat. They just got there behind us. I thought they were getting assigned behind us. He died. They said they found him between the two towers, so they must have sent him over to go into the south tower.

I think the people jumping was probably my -- they were hitting the atrium as we were going in.

Q. (Inaudible.)

A. Yeah. We had a proby. I told the guy, "Don't look up. Just put your head down and let's go."

I know Mike said he felt the whole building shake. We regrouped afterwards. I don't know if Mike ran into a building through a glass door or something. Another kid Mike, the proby, he ran into the back of an ambulance. The ambulance was open.

Over the Brooklyn Bridge, you saw black coming down the side of the building. It was like drippings. I said, "Lieutenant, what are those windows, plastic? What's melted on them? It looks like plastic going down the side of the building." They said it was the jet fuel coming down the side.

Otherwise seeing anybody, that's pretty much it.

Q. That's terrific.

CHIEF KING: The time is 1727 hours, and this interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER LANCE LIZZUL

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: It's December 10th, 2001. The time is 5:18 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the New York City Fire Department Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Lance Lizzul of Engine 47 in the quarters of Engine 47.

Q. Lance, just relate to us anything you saw on September 11th.

A. When the first plane hit, we heard the alarms come in. Watching the TV, we saw the second plane hit. They transmitted the second fifth, and they sent us down.

We came all the way down West Street and parked the rig I guess around Warren Street, and we started walking up the block. I was the chauffeur. The rest of the members of the company got together, and they started walking.

I hooked up with another chauffeur. We walked towards the Trade Center, and there was a rig on the corner that was hooked up, and he was fine. So we started walking towards the Trade Center and actually stopped because of all the jumpers and walked across West Street in front of, it looks like the Winter Garden, with the atrium there. We were standing by the command center, watching what was going on. Some of these jumpers, I didn't look.

After a while just standing there, waiting to see what was going on, we heard some bangs. That made us look up, and that's when the first Trade Center came down. We ran through that building and past the atrium and came out on Vesey and walked back up to West, helping people as we could all along.

We just couldn't see anything. So we waited a little while until it cleared. We stayed on the corner. The chief started chasing everybody back north, and we started moving back. Then we heard the rumbling from the second one and just turned around and ended up staying all the way down north for most of the next couple hours.

Q. The building that you ran through after the first collapse, which building was that?

A. That was one of the Battery Park buildings. It was just a building.

Q. This is all interconnected.

A. Okay. Right. We ran right through the command center, it was on the ramp going down, and then the walkway was right next to that that went into the building where the atrium was. We ran through that building along the side, along the side of the atrium, and out the side door and came out on Vesey. There were people all over the place on Vesey.

Then when we came out, we walked up Vesey Street. The radios were silent. There was no talking on the radios. Then I got to the corner of Vesey and West, and the radio communications started again. I heard Engine 74 giving maydays. I know with 74 there was 22 and 13 and they were all in the same building, 22 and 13, 74 and us.

Q. Which building?

A. It was supposed to be in the second one. We ended up, I believe, in the first one. By mistake someone took them there. I met our control man, and then I saw him a little bit. I walked down the block a little bit. He kept going. I stopped and was just staring at the building. I heard the rumbling of the second one, and it just came down and I just started running again.

That's pretty much it.

Q. Thank you very much for your help, Lance?

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 5:26 p.m., and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT RICHARD SKELLINGTON

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 11th, 2001. The time is 3:45 p.m. I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with --

LIEUTENANT SKELLINGTON: Lieutenant Skellington, Engine 305.

CHIEF BURNS: -- in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you would, Rich, tell us in your own words what happened that day.

A. That morning we were responding to a relocation to Engine 3 in Manhattan. We proceeded to go down Queens Boulevard. Judgment was made to go over the 59th Street Bridge instead of going through the tunnel. We went over the bridge. We got right in front of Engine 3's quarters, and we were assigned to the World Trade Center box.

We went down West Street, the West Side Highway. Halfway down we were around, I guess it was Sixth Avenue, when we saw tower one came down. We proceeded to where we were supposed to go. It was Vesey and West, but we couldn't make it down that far with the rig because there were too many people coming up. So we stopped at Chambers.

At that point we met Mykel Judge, the priest. He gave us a little prayer. He gave us HEPA masks, said he would see us down there. We started to get our gear, what we thought we would need to take with them. They were asking at that time for more equipment, anybody coming down bring anything you could bring.

So instead we loaded up our back board with extra stuff. I took four Scott cylinders, empty ones, the proby took two, and we took all the other equipment that we might think we needed and proceeded down the West Side Highway.

We put the equipment down at least two or three times because it was so heavy. At the fourth time I told them just take what we needed. We were close enough that if anybody was coming down they would see the equipment and they could take it with them.

As we proceeded down West Street, I was about a half a block or three-quarters of the block, with the proby, ahead of those guys. We saw many people jumping out the windows. It was about Barclay Street when I felt a rush of air come in behind me. I looked up. I saw a helicopter, and I was trying to figure out what he was doing. Then the second tower exploded and started coming down.

I told the proby to run. I dumped my two cylinders off my left shoulder. I was trying to get the other two off my right. They got hung up on my mask. My chauffeur came running down and said, "What are you doing? Let's get out of here." I told him, "We'll be right with you," and we turned around and proceeded to evacuate the area.

I think it was Park Place West where we made a left-hand turn and we jumped into a building. As we were running down the street to Park Place West, we got caught in the cloud. Then I saw firemen and civilians out in the street that had gone out there after we heard the rumble and everything falling down.

The building that we were in shook. Some glass broke. We thought this building was coming down. It didn't. That's when I went out and started pulling people into the building, and my chauffeur was just pushing them back, holding them up.

My other members, they got disoriented. We found them later. We called other units, whoever we had. That's it.

We then went back to Chambers Street. We went back to Chambers Street to figure out where the command post was going to be. ESU then came out and told us that there was a bomb in Stuyvesant High School, so we had to evacuate that area.

Then we came back, up to Chambers, and we hung out there for most of the day and most of the night until they sent us down to do some digging. Then we were relieved at the site and went back to Engine 3.

Q. Okay, Rich. Thanks for the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM CHESNEY

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 10th, 2001. The time is 10:20 a.m. I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER CHESNEY: Firefighter First Grade William Chesney assigned to Engine Company 309.

CHIEF BURNS: This is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Bill, if you would, just tell me in your own words what happened that day.

A. Okay. We were assigned to relocate Engine 309 to 33 Engine in Manhattan. That would be after the first tower had fallen. After coming over the Manhattan Bridge into Manhattan, we were notified by the dispatcher to I believe the Deutsche Bank, which had I believe been set afire or there was a collapse there. I'm not sure what the assignment was. I'm fuzzy on that.

We proceeded to the West Side Highway. We made it up to Liberty next to the second World Trade Center before it fell. We didn't exit the engine. It was still running at the time. We heard popping, people, crowd, screaming. The first tower had already fallen, so everything was very unclear due to visibility, bad visibility, because of smoke and ash.

We visually saw the beginning of the first tower crumble, so the engine turned off on Liberty and made its way over to Albany Street. The tower had fallen. Our engine company then exited the engine and proceeded over and attempted to help out in any way they could with civilians or Fire Department personnel who needed assistance. Then we had other companies join us that were scattered.

There was no water pressure downtown at the time. It took a while for water to get to the fires, Marine 2. We were down by Liberty close to the water by Gateway Plaza. We were assigned to put a fire out on the eighth or ninth floor of Gateway at the time. We went up there with hoses. We were drafting water from Marine 2 from a three and a half.

After that fire was out, we then proceeded to put out additional pockets of fire close to second World Trade. I believe it was adjacent to the Vista Hotel and three World Trade.

For the rest of the day all we did was assist rescue operations, basically. That's basically the fundamentals of what happened.

Q. Did your unit get there prior to the second tower collapsing?

A. Yes, we did, yes.

Q. Where were you when the second tower collapsed?

A. I'm believing that we actually made it over towards the pedestrian bridge close to Liberty off the West Side Highway, because I believe the Deutsche Bank is adjacent to the second world tower or a block off. I'm not positive. That's where our assignment was.

Q. When you guys got there, did you see anyone or any companies that you can identify?

A. No. Due to the poor visibility, it was very tough to see in front of your face. With the smoke down there, the ash, it was very difficult to see anything. Basically I just saw through the fog on my end -- I'm not speaking for anybody else -- was first and last of the clouds there were people running here and there.

There was no sense of direction. There was no way to know what anybody else was doing, so we just kept ourselves together and kept a level head and just tried to make the best of the situation, help out any way we could. That was it.

Q. Okay. Great.

CHIEF BURNS: That concludes the interview. It's 10:25 a.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STEVEN WRIGHT

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 10th, 2001. The time is 12:18 and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan, Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Steven Wright of Ladder 16.

Q. Steve, please give us anything you have about the events on September 11th.

A. Sure. Okay. I remember being in quarters here when somebody said a plane crashed at the World Trade Center. We turned on the TV. We saw the hole in the building. We thought it was just somebody, a bad driver, a bad airplane driver or something went wrong. As we watched and we saw the second one hit the building, that's when we knew, we figured, everybody thought it was a terror assault. We had a bad feeling about this. So now the second plane hit and we get called, I think, on the fifth alarm for the second building.

So we leave quarters. We go down. We're following 13, I guess, 22 and the 10th Battalion now. We get down West Street. We see all the smoke. When we report there, we park about, I guess, two blocks north of the walkway on West Street and we start walking down. There was a guy from 35 Truck, Shea. He borrowed one of our masks. I remember that.

As we're walking down, we're watching. We see people jumping from the north building as we're walking under the overpass, the walkway. Then we reported to the staging area, which was directly across from the north tower, which was 2 World Financial Center, the Merrill Lynch Building. We were standing in the staging area at the apron of a loading dock that went underneath that building. The engine company was on the north side of the ramp. The truck company was on the south side of the ramp directly across from the north tower. They started upping it and about 20 feet was the ouija board, as they call it. Anyway, I remember standing there looking up and looking at the flames, seeing people jump. Again, it was about 20 people that jumped while we were standing there. I remember being told as we were walking down there may be a report of a third plane coming in, and I didn't hear anything else about that.

So they gave some assignments to engine companies and truck companies. 13 was the truck company directly ahead of us. They got the last assignment. I'm not sure which building they went into. But 16 was the last truck company there and we were waiting for the assignment. I remember standing like two, three feet away from the overhead doors that were open in that loading dock, and I had my bunker gear on with the tools on the side, mask on the side. I stayed close to the building because I was taking debris. I didn't know.

So I guess it was after about ten minutes, 15 minutes after 13 got their assignment, I remember looking around and I heard this sound and I looked up and it was the south tower crumbling, coming down. We all just took off, turned around and ran straight to the back of the loading dock underneath 2 World Financial Center. Moments went by. Smoke had come in the loading dock, a good amount at the beginning, but I had ended up in the back and it wasn't that bad back there. So then people were calling out to try to find other firefighters and stuff. I remember walking back in. I found all my guys except one. I couldn't find one. He went off and went out the back of the building. He made his way out the back.

So we ended up, the rest of us, coming back out of the loading dock to the front of that building where we were standing and looking for people who were hurt and looking a little bit scarred but they were walking around. There was one EMS guy. He was about a 400-pound guy. He was laying down on the ground. One of the guys found a gurney, I guess, his gurney that he had. There were about 15 of us there. We picked him up, put him on the gurney. My guys went to push him up the apron to the sidewalk, which was closer towards the north building, which didn't collapse yet, but my officer said, no, we're going to bring him back down the ramp to the back, to the loading dock, out the back of the building. That turned out to be a good move.

So we went to the back, picked him up on top of the loading dock there in the back about four feet. Again, there were like 15 of us, so 400 pounds wasn't too bad. We found we had to go up like another two levels to get out the rear of the building that goes back towards the marina. So we found an elevator. Two of us got on the elevator. I was one of them and another fireman with this heavy guy, the EMS worker on the stretcher. The other guys walked up. The elevator went down. What a mistake!

So now it was just me and another fireman. We were in the basement with this guy that's 400 pounds and the elevator wasn't working correctly. So good thing we got off. I remember we were looking for a stairwell so we could get this guy up, and I remember saying how did this happen, me and this other fireman with this 400-pound guy. We couldn't budge. We tried getting him up the stairs. It was like we got him up three stairs, let alone three floors.

So I remember looking around for the stairwell and all of a sudden the building started rumbling and the lights went out for about ten seconds. I turned my light on and I'm just thinking, I'm hoping this building isn't collapsing. I thought it was the tower coming down across the highway, but I didn't know for sure. For about ten seconds the building rumbled and then it stopped, and I felt very relieved.

I called for some more assistance to see if we could get this guy out, and then my officer was telling me, Steve, come on out of the basement because I think I smell something burning in this building much lower. So me and this other guy, that's when we tried to lift him up. We couldn't lift him up. So finally we got some help. Within a couple minutes we got some more help and we got him up, I think, 43, some guys. The north tower did come down. That's what made that building rumble like that. We came out the back. I don't have that EMS worker's name. The other fireman that was with me, he was all right. I met him the other day. His name is Gary. We put him on a PD boat and they took him to a hospital in Jersey or Staten Island.

After the collapse, we were walking around. We started heading south, near the marina, and from there we started to help stretch a line from one of the boats for about two blocks. We stretched it and that took a little while. Then I remember we walked back up alongside of the marina. We headed north again. I don't know what street that is. I was with the officer. I was trying to find out who to report to, what was happening, and nobody had a clue. So it was like we were on our own.

After that we waited there for a little while and then we made our way back into 2 World Financial Center where we came out. We went back through the back of the building, back through the loading dock, back out to the front, and we started climbing the metal, the debris field. We started looking for people. We didn't see anybody. Well, the people that we did see, they were crushed. So other than that, I really don't --

Q. When you were standing fast at the staging area, did you hear any Maydays or anything that would indicate the collapse, any warning signs of the collapse?

A. No. I didn't notice any Maydays, not that I can remember. But I know there were two different channels, one for each tower. I think each tower had a different station. Anyway, it seemed to be a little foggy.

Q. Did you see anything looking at the building that indicated --

A. No. I just remember seeing just the flames, and when I heard the noise, I was already looking away. But I remember talking to some other guys. They remembered seeing the floors being blown out, I guess, when each floor collapsed on each other. I didn't see that. I heard the sound. I looked up. I saw the building collapsing and just like being pulverized, the smoke, and I probably looked at it for about a second and I just took off, if a second. Once I saw that, I was like, whoa, get out of here.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Well, thank you, Steve.

FIREFIGHTER WRIGHT: Okay.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 12:28 and this concludes the interview.

FIREFIGHTER VANDON WILLIAMS

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 11th, 2001. The time is 1:14 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns of the Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER WILLIAMS: Firefighter Vandon Williams, Battalion 49.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: This is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you would, just tell us in your own words what happened on that day.

A. I was just finishing a 24-hour tour on the 10th, which is my wedding anniversary. I was looking for my relief to come in at the time that the first plane hit the Tower 1. I watched it on television from our quarters here in Astoria. Then when the second tower was hit, the signal came in for us to proceed to a staging area by the Midtown Tunnel.

So, knowing that I would not be relieved in time, I just decided that it was best that I go on and handle this event. I proceeded to the staging area at the Midtown Tunnel. We were there for, I guess, approximately 30, 35 minutes, until the Midtown Tunnel was cleared out, and then we proceeded through the

Upon getting to the west side, we were able to park our apparatus, and I believe we might have had about ten to 15 units as a convoy from Queens. We proceeded and we parked our car about a block or two blocks north of Chambers and West Street, and we proceeded by foot toward the command post at Vesey and West. I got as far as a block north of Chambers and West and I was told by my Battalion Chief, Chief Mike Keenan, to make sure that all the units that were with us were accounted for and he proceeded to go toward the command post, and once I had checked everybody off that had come with us, then I would proceed down to the command post.

So one block north of Chambers, I stopped and turned around and proceeded to count off the companies that came in. I guess I was doing that for about a good five or six minutes, about five minutes or so, and then I heard a rumbling. As I turned around, I saw people and some firefighters coming toward me and I looked up and I could actually see Tower No. 1 coming down.

So at that time I tried to get myself as close to -- there was a police tow truck on my side, looking at the Hudson River. There were two police tow trucks parked there. So I just covered, bent next to one of the tow trucks and bent my head down until the smoke cleared. For me the eerie thing was not hearing any communications on the radio, any transmissions, anything, until most of this acrid, black smoke had cleared away, and then I could hear the sounds of our pass alarms going off around. Once most of the black smoke had kind of lightenend up and we were still in a fog-type state or a fog-type atmosphere, I tried to proceed down toward Vesey and West, where my Battalion Chief Mike Keenan was.

So I got to meet him. Around Murray and West we met up. We proceeded to set up a secondary command post at Chambers and West Street. That was the call that was given out to the units, that there would be a command post set up at Chambers and West.

Then we proceeded down toward Vesey Street. We proceeded southbound on Vesey Street until we came to West and Vesey, and at that point Chief Keenan started to operate at the north side of 6 World Trade Center, the U.S. Customs Building. The pedestrian bridge at that point, that I could look at, was already down and completely destroyed. I was standing on the north side of the pedestrian bridge listening to Chief Keenan as he went up and tried to get onto one of the levels that was still standing on the Customs Building, doing communications with him and finding out what companies that we had that were able to go forward and help with some of the extinguishment as far as an engine company and a truck. I don't know the names of the companies that helped us to go work at that, but there was a truck company and an engine company that were being put into action to work on the Customs Building.

At that time I also met the 14th Division Chief, a Chief McNally, and for the most of my duration I was there operating with him doing communications on the tactical and the channel for the Chiefs, going between both of them to try to ascertain who we had, what we could find in that area. I believe I worked with Chief McNally for a couple of hours before I was released to go with Chief Keenan.

We proceeded to go around the pedestrian building and try to go south toward the World Trade Center No. 1. In order to get there, we had to walk around the World Financial Center building, the American Express Building, toward the water, which would be going west toward the Hudson River. We were able to walk around the building and come out around the Winter Garden building, and at that time we were now just looking at what was left of the World Trade Center No. 1.

We proceeded to walk over some of the metal and steel beams and stuff and we were able to get to a point where we were high enough to see a couple of mounds of just twisted metal, and we stood there while there were groups of firefighters, I'm not sure what units they were, that were proceeding down the mound and trying to get up to the second level of the mound to start our searches.

At that time I was able to see two civilians. One was standing up on the mound and firefighters were able to get to him and another one, and we were able to bring them out in the Stokes baskets down through the mound. It could have been an hour, hour and a half we were doing that before we were ordered to move away from that part of Tower No. 1 because there was an imminent danger of collapse of World Trade Center No. 5 and 7.

So he proceeded to take us from that area and we proceeded back from that part of the World Trade Center No. 1, all units, Chief Keenan and I and some other Battalion Chiefs there. I know Battalion 46, Chief Turner was there. We operated also under the SOC command of Chief Seigel looking over those areas of Tower No. 1. Once they recalled us from that area, we proceeded back over to the area where we started at, Vesey and West. I was there approximately 15 hours. I left at 11:00 that evening.

Part of my duties with the 49 and the 14th Division, I was also used to do logistics and command with Deputy Chief -- I don't want to say his name wrong. It will come to me.

Well, I'll say this. This happened to be closer toward the evening. I guess it was close to about 4:00 or 5:00 o'clock, as it started turning more toward the sunset. We had been working on the north tower and we proceeded back over to West and Vesey. At that time I was able to see Chief Fellini talking with Chief McNally and other Chiefs on the scene that came in. But I was able to do liaison. I was there to set up for what other units that came in in the staging area and I worked as the aide that proceeded to tell what units would go in and what areas the Chiefs wanted to work with. I can't think of that Chief's name, but I liaisoned with him.

Before the night was over with, I was one of the firefighter liaison officers in the temporary Office of Emergency Management, and I worked with Chief Cantley, I think, if I'm not mistaken, in the OEM office from about 10:00 until midnight, and at that time they released the 49 Battalion to come back to Queens. Basically, that's what I did.

Outside of seeing some carnage and being able to see at least us pull two civilians and bring them out, and they were alive when we brought them out, much of my recollection, outside of what I thought was papers and stuff coming out of Tower No. 1 while it was still up, I now realize there were some falling bodies just coming down. That's the extent of what I remember.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Great, Vandon. Thanks for the interview. The time is 1:27 p.m.

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 11, 2001. The time is 11:13 a.m. I am Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with Firefighter Francis Nash, Engine 260, Firefighter First Grade, and this is in regard to the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you could, in your own words, Frank, would you tell us what happened on that day.

A. We were responding, Engine 260, to the World Trade Center, going through the Midtown Tunnel. We were heading south on the West Side Highway where we parked our rig and we proceeded to walk down West Side Highway to the World Trade Center. The number 2 World Trade Center was already collapsed as we were responding and as we were walking to the World Trade Center number 1, we were approximately 100 yards away when the building number 2 collapsed.

At that time, we ran for safe cover. And that's the story.

Q. You said you were 100 feet away. Do you know --

A. I mean yards.

Q. 100 yards. Do you know what direction you were in?

A. We were north of the tower, by Barclay Street. Between Barclay and Vesey. Maybe a little more than 100 yards between there. Barclay and Vesey Street.

Q. When the second tower came down, did you see anyone? Did you see any units?

A. I saw people jumping out of the building. I didn't see any units. I saw, you know, when the building came down I was with other companies from the 45 Battalion and we were all retreating at the same time, and we got caught in the huge dust cloud for a few minutes, and then we went back to go look for companies until another chief told us to go back.

When we went looking for companies, we saw some damaged rigs. I can't tell you which companies they were. Then we were ordered by a chief to leave the area.

Q. You said you were there prior to the collapse. Did you hear any transmissions on someone's handy-talkie or any radios just prior to the collapse?

A. No. I didn't have a department radio.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Thanks, Frank. That concludes our interview. It's 11:16 a.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JAMES POWERS

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 11, 2001, and the time is 11:25 a.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with James Powers, Firefighter First from Engine 35. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Engine 35.

Q. James, just tell us the events as you remember them on September 11th.

A. The morning of September 11th I arrived at Engine 35 to get into uniform to go to an educational day. Before I left, the TV showed us the first tower smoking and fire. We didn't even know what it was before I left to go to the Rock, Randall's Island. By the time I got to Randall's Island, the Lieutenant conducting educational day told us that a plane had hit the first tower and that we might be going back to our companies. He didn't know yet, but he was going to start educational proceedings. As soon as he said that, the second plane hit the second tower. Within minutes we were dispatched back to our companies.

I reported to Engine 35 and reported in to Lieutenant Whalen. Lieutenant Whalen put me in the Engine and said, "Right now you're going to be our fifth man in the engine." We took roll call of the units that had already been sent here as a staging area and within 15 minutes of being brought back, maybe even ten minutes of being brought back to the firehouse Engine 35 was dispatched to the World Trade Center.

We were told by the dispatcher to use the West Side Highway and we went across 125th Street and we went down. Myself, firefighters Lowrey, Vanname, Fischer, and Keith Schroeder were on the rig with Lieutenant Whalen. We also had Lieutenant Patten and Battalion Chief Horan on 35's rig. We reported in down at West Side Highway, West Street, right above Barclay Street, and we ran into battalion chiefs there. We had heard on the radio the first tower collapsed. We heard somebody on the department radio calling for help, saying he was trapped.

We were told that we were going to be going into World Trade Center number 1, the north tower building, because it was still standing and there was still fire. When we got to the battalion chiefs that were on West and, I believe, Barclay, they said, "Okay. Make sure you've got everything, your roll-ups. We're still going into this tower number 1 or World Trade Center number 1."

At that time there was heavy black smoke pumping from the top floors of the tower. You could see the collapse dust and stuff around the other buildings, and the top of the tower was just blazing black smoke. On our way to the building, we had just passed Vesey Street, we were near the pedestrian bridge when you heard the rumble and the roar of the building and at which point we all looked up. Nobody really moved for a second. The tower began to collapse and we all ran back up the West Side Highway. We ran with our gear still on. We dropped our folds, roll-ups and ran hard up West Street.

I made it to, I believe, either Murray or Park Place, wherever the high school was, and the collapse, the dust and the debris had already caught up to me and was actually pushing me, and I dove into the left of that street, whether it was Murray or Park Place. I don't know where it was, but I dove in there and somebody pulled me into the high school and when I got into the high school there were already firefighters and Police Officers in there. When I was there I realized that I didn't have any of the guys that I was with with me, so I went back out onto that street. But when I did, I was immediately lost in the black dust and I couldn't even see my way to get back into the building that I just came out of. I put my face piece on and started breathing the air, but I realized the face piece was contaminated and I was sucking some stuff in.

I went onto the West Side Highway and slowly walked through the black and gray dust heading back towards where we were to see if anybody was still there, to see where everybody was. When I got back to where I think we were, which was below Vesey but above the pedestrian bridge, there was a couple of people just completely covered with dust and I just brushed them off and chased them back to go north on the West Side Highway. I did run into one of my guys, Keith Schroeder, and asked him where everybody was and he said he didn't know. He didn't know.

We stayed together and then we saw Billy

Vanname, our chauffeur, and we asked him about our lieutenant, Lieutenant Whalen and also Lieutenant Hadden and Chief Horan, who had gone ahead of us towards the tower, and they were in front of us while we were walking towards it.

We then found our Firefighters Fischer, Lowrey and our Lieutenant Whalen, and we started picking up our folds to go down towards fire. There was fire on the streets, there was fire in the cars. And then he realized the roll-ups were gonna do us no good, so we dropped our roll-ups and we started looking to help people and I was -- I had breathed in a whole bunch of stuff and I was starting to get dizzy and I could feel myself trying to breathe, but I couldn't get any air into where I was and I started getting lightheaded.

We helped a couple more people back up the West Side Highway. We split up, I stayed with Billy Vanname. The other guys went down into underneath the pedestrian bridge with a line they had to try to put out fire. We then found Lieutenant Hadden and he told us that Chief Horan was okay. He told us the tower came down on top of guys in the hotel and we were gonna try to get to that.

Maybe 15 minutes later I was completely overcome by all the dust I had already breathed in and I could no longer operate and I was starting to pass out. I don't think I passed out. Somebody says I did. I was treated by a couple of EMT's and some firefighters and they took me back up the West Side Highway to near Murray Street and we were sitting there and then somebody said that there was a major gas leak in one of the buildings and we had to run from there, so everybody started running again. As I tried to run, I knew I could no longer run. So I was loaded onto a green golf cart and I was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital and I was in and out. I could breathe in, but I felt like I wasn't getting any air, and I was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital approximately 45 minutes to an hour after my arrival at the World Trade Center.

Q. That's it?

A. That's it.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Thank you, Jimmy. The time now is 11:33 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM WALL

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 10, 2001. The time is 6:40 and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan, Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant William Wall of Engine 47, in the quarters of Engine 47.

Q. Lieutenant, just account for us what happened on September 11th.

A. We were assigned as additional units on the fifth alarm for the south tower. We never received a ticket for it until we -- you know, there was one waiting for us in quarters. We got down and according to the voice alarm we were supposed to report in to the command post in the south tower. So we made our way down and we parked the rig on approximately Vesey and West Street. We got all our gear together. We took some extra gear, extra bottles, we took our oxygen cylinder from our EMS kit and we started heading down towards the south tower. We made it as far as -- we were on the east side of West Street and we made it past the U.S. Customs building, but we couldn't go any further on the east side. So we crossed over onto the west side of West Street and we made it -- we made our way down the west side to the covered overpass and we crossed underneath the covered overpass, which was just opposite the hotel where we were informed -- we asked a Police Officer where the command post was. He said he thought it was in the lobby of the hotel.

So we hung out under the covered overpass until we saw it was clear and we ran into the front doors of the hotel where we were -- where we met the command post, which was manned by Chief Galvin. Chief Galvin told us to stand fast while he was putting companies together. A short while later he told us Engine 47, Engine 22, Ladder 13 and Engine 21, to follow a building employee who was gonna take us to an elevator bank that still had a serviceable elevator to the 20-something floor. He told us we were going to the south tower, but the building employee took us to the north tower.

After we found the elevator, the other companies went up and we were the last load to go up. On the second-to-last load, the guy that was operating the elevator told me that they wanted one of our guys, since we were a five-man engine, to operate the elevator and since there was only one truck. So I looked over and my control man was kind of a junior man so I asked the senior man working to take the elevator.

He entered the elevator with the last company that went up. They went up to the 24th floor or the 22nd floor and the company was getting off. I think it was the truck company at that time, because he grabbed the last guy getting out, who was the irons man and he said, "You gotta stay with me, because I need tools in the elevator."

At that time, the doors closed and that's when the power went out. Which, what we found out later was when the south tower fell down. They were able to force their way out of the elevator and for some reason the guy from the truck, from 13 truck, went to the right and he went to the left and found a stairwell and he was able to make it out.

Q. Who is "he"?

A. Louie Cacchioli.

Q. Louis Cacchioli?

A. [redacted]. Me and the other guys are still in the lobby and it was weird, because the lights went out just before the rumbling started and one of the guys reminded me, just after lights went out, I made a little remark like "Uh-oh."

The lights went out, which was good, because it took one of our senses away. And then the wind started. It was like a hurricane wind. Just like black stuff just blowing and hitting us. Me and Tommy Turilli were actually a little bit more into the elevator lobby, a dead-end corridor, and Steve Viola and Keith Murphy were in the main corridor, and they took a little more beating than we did.

Steve's helmet, the front piece that holds the -- the metal piece that holds the front piece was actually bent on his helmet. Steve still doesn't remember getting out of the building. He was hit good enough in the head. The wind came and pretty much after the wind stopped and the rumbling stopped it was still black. You couldn't see nothing in front of your face.

I called for a quick roll call. I said, "Count off." And I could still remember Keith Murphy's face looking at me like "What are you talking about?" I said, "Oh, yeah. Shout out your name." So everyone shouted out their name and we got everybody together and I told one of the other guys to hold on to Steve and I went over to the elevator bank and I got in touch with Louie Cacchioli, who was in the elevator. He informed me that he was out of the elevator, he was in the staircase and he was on his way down.

At that time, I gathered the other guys together and we locked arm in arm and we made our way out of the building, which was interesting. On the way in I noticed that all the windows in the lobby were just blown out. All the glass, like the arch glass, was all blown out. For some reason I thought it was probably a good way out. Just, you know, always know your way out. For some reason that worked.

I know we had to go from where we were past turnstiles, make a right, go a little ways and then go right again and then just go straight out the building. So we locked on and there was a building worker with us and fireman Turilli was trying to coax this guy into coming with us. He said he had to stay because of his job, and Fireman Turilli informed him that "Your job ain't worth this much." So he came with us.

After we got past, we walked down the lobby, through the turnstiles, made a right and we encountered a line of civilians coming down an escalator shaft and they were looking for the way out so they got on the line too.

So we made our way. After we made a right at the turnstile, I knew we had to make another right. When we bumped into the wall, I knew that was a good time to make the other right and after that, after we made the other right, we just kept walking straight and then it started to clear and we could see the windows, and we made our way out of the -- kind of the grade floor windows. I remember there was a little bar going across the windows and I was trying to break one, because Chief Murphy was going to crawl underneath and he didn't have his gloves on. When he kneeled down, he burnt his hand because of all the debris right at the window, right at the outside level, was still hot.

We got out and you really couldn't tell you were out. It was just as dark outside as it was in. We made our way -- we went straight across West Street before we went north. We found an Engine apparatus there and we pulled the booster and one of the gates just to wash our face off, because we couldn't see a thing. Just the face was burning and the eyes were burning.

After that we walked up to I believe it was Vesey Street. They had like ambulance after ambulance after ambulance just lined up. Keith Murphy and Steve Viola were hurt. Steve hurt his neck and took a shot in the head and Keith, you know, his neck was hurting to and as he was getting out he burned his hand.

When we got to Vesey, we looked up and we saw all the ambulances. So we turned left and we were going on Vesey towards -- I guess towards the river where all the ambulances were lined up. That's the first point where we saw that the building actually came down. You know, where we made the left onto Vesey I looked over my shoulder and to that point we didn't know that the actual building had come down. Because on the way in there was a Police Officer underneath the Customs building and he told us to come inside because they were tracking another inbound. Which he meant was another airplane. So when the building came down, we just thought -- we didn't know the building came down. We thought it was another airplane that hit. That was the first time we actually saw that the tower came down.

We got Steve and Keith into an ambulance and the guy assured me that he would take care of him, even though he didn't. They put them in collars and then as the second building was coming down, he opened the back door and he said, "You gotta run, because the other one is coming down. That's another story.

Me and firefighter Turilli, we grabbed our masks and we found another probie in the street who had just gotten down there and we were on our way back down, because now the may-days were coming in. So we were gonna make our way back into the collapse site and we met somebody at West and Vesey, right in the middle by the median, in the middle of West and Vesey, and it was a chief and he said, "We're gonna fall back and regroup."

At that time, we heard an explosion. We looked up and the building was coming down right on top of us, so we ran up West Street. We ran a little bit and then we were overtaken by the cloud and we hid behind a white suburban. I believe about seven of us. And we were sharing -- I was sharing my mask with the other people. It was Jack Ginty and Gerry Reilly from 22 Truck. Then after a while, I mean it was just black for what seemed like forever. We were just passing the mask back and forth. It wasn't lifting or anything.

Then finally we just said, "All right. Let's go. We can't stay here." So we all got up and we just started walking down Vesey Street, which was still pretty black. We were just taking small little steps up and we actually bumped into a rig walking up Vesey Street. Just bumped into something and you look real close and then you find the light flashing. It turned out to be a rig.

So wandering up on Vesey Street, we found a curb and you just walked up the curb and walked out of the cloud and there were two guys in an ambulance. I thought they were okay, because the guys said they were okay, but I didn't know they had run. But I didn't know where my chauffeur and the guy in the elevator, Louie Cacchioli, were. So we were trying to make contact with them for a little while. I realized later I couldn't make contact with my chauffeur because when we went into the south tower we went to Channel 2 and my chauffeur was still on Channel 1, and Louie lost his radio. Because when they switched radios in the lobby, they took just the radio. So he had it kind of around his thing and in his pocket. So when he was running -- he made it out of the lobby and he met up with Lance, the chauffeur, just as the second tower was coming down. So when they were running, he lost the radio.

After that we finally regrouped. We regrouped in front of Stuyvesant High School. We all got together and they were like backing us up to try and regroup us and then we just got all our gear off. We were sitting down and someone said there was a bomb at Stuyvesant High School, so we grabbed all our stuff and we ran further up West Street and ...

Oh, when we came out of the building and we were walking across West Street when we first got out of the building, we're walking across the street and all you heard was like bombs going off above your head. You couldn't see it. It was just cloudy. And we found out later it was the military jets. That was an eerie sound. You couldn't see it and all you heard was like a "boom" and it just kept going. We couldn't see 50 feet above our head because of the dust. So we didn't know if it was bombs going off or whatever, but we didn't want to stay there.

We regrouped and after -- we were pretty far up on West Street. We were by that -- well past that arch bridge that everyone was forming up at.

Q. Probably was at --

A. Chambers? Yeah. All the way up past this. Yeah. Past this on the map here. Pretty much that's where we stayed for the rest of the day. I mean my guys were shot. [redacted] finally we gave all our gear to the guys that came in and me and my guys and the guys from 22 truck, Gerry Reilly and the 11th Battalion had already tapped out, so we found their rig and we commandeered their rig and we just loaded up with like nine people and we left. [redacted] We came up here and we went to St. Luke's across the street. We had our eyes washed out and checked out with the dye and stuff. That's the day in a nutshell.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. Thanks a lot Bill. The time now is 6:57 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOSEPH SULLIVAN

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: The date is December 11, 2001. The time is 1442 hours. This is Battalion Chief John Malkin of the safety battalion.

I'm conducting an interview with firefighter 6th Grade Joseph Sullivan, Engine 224. We are at the quarters of 224, and this interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001, and following this is the interview.

Q. Okay.

A. Okay. We responded from quarters. The ticket came in at 8:54. We were going on the first alarm to the staging area by the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. En route to the staging area, we were going down Columbia Street, saw the second plane strike the building and we went from being a, quote, good job or a rough job, or we were going to earn our money today.

Some of the guys put it, to -- started realizing that it was a terrorist incident, that we were -- you know, we were in for more than we thought originally.

We pulled into the staging area. We were there for maybe -- it's a little foggy. Maybe four, five minutes. I got all my gear set.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Then I remember getting sent in. The only -- the only other companies that I remember hearing over the radio besides us, there was a bunch of -- I remember hearing 202, 101, I'm pretty sure, and went through the tunnel.

It was pretty slow go. I was sitting with my back to the lieutenant, and I remember seeing people out the window, seeing people in buses trying to use their cell phones being confused after seeing all the apparatus going by, not knowing what was going on.

They were scared. One guy yelled up into the -- up to us, "Are we going to be able to get out of here?" We were nervous that maybe somebody was going to bomb the tunnel also. Eventually, we got out of the tunnel with a sigh of relief, started making our way down, going down West Street, see some stuff on the floor, pieces of bodies, bone, stuff like that.

Really couldn't see up. The buildings are too tall. I saw one body. Most of it was just pieces of bodies. As we were riding in, we must have ran over some debris from the plane. We saw debris all over the floor. We saw a wheel. There was cars that were flattened. It was obvious that heavy things had fallen on them, but the reason that I say that we ran over something is because we had pulled up -- I believe it was in front of the south tower, and Smitty was driving that day, the chauffeur. He didn't like where we were, and he shimmied up a little more. We saw tranny fluid on the floor, so Richie Saulle climbed underneath there with some putty, and I cut some chocks up, little splinters, and kind of plugged it up.

Q. Coming from where? Where was it coming from?

A. From underneath the tranny pan.

Q. From your rig?

A. From our rig, yeah. So just quick tried to, like, patch it up. At that time, as far as I know, we didn't have any orders, as far as where to go.

We went up there. Lieutenant DeSimone told us to get settled, get an extra cylinder ready, ready to grab your hose rollups, like that. There was a transmission. I didn't have a radio on at the time. I'm just going by what I heard going on around me, but I don't know who it was or exactly where it came from, if it came from the command center or not.

Somebody had told us to move up towards Vesey Street, I guess in order to relay water, if it was needed. So we did so, and then Lieutenant DeSimone asked us again to get our cylinders, hose rollups ready, and by the time we twisted and turned, the first building had come down, started to fall.

People scattered. I was right next to Lieutenant DeSimone. We took a knee, masked up, covered over us. It was -- that lifted relatively quick, the first one. I don't know if it was because we were blocked by the north tower or some of the other buildings. That lifted relatively quickly.

I went ahead and I started looking around. It looked just like snow, and I took my mask off, put my hood up over my face, and I went over by another member, Mike Hazel. He was giving blows of air. There were a couple of cops. There was a maintenance man. Turned out to be a maintenance man, afterwards we found out, from one of the buildings, so I was giving him a hand.

We were doing that, and then we got oxygen off the rig and gave it to the maintenance man. We were looking out for Smitty, and for Stu Bailey. Smitty had run down the block. Stu Bailey had run down the block, and now we were looking for them to make sure that they were all right, because actually when the building had come down, on the angle that it was -- the north tower was over here. You won't be able to get this on tape, but the north tower was kind of blocking the south tower.

Q. Okay.

A. Because of its natural angle.

Q. Yeah.

A. Yeah. You could see it right there on the map, so here we are, yeah.

Q. You guys were parked. Now, we are talking about the north tower shielding you from the south tower collapse?

A. Yeah.

Q. So where were you guys at that time?

A. From the best of my knowledge, I'd say that we were up right around -- we were up right around here.

Q. Okay. He's indicating with the rig, right?

A. Yes.

Q. The indication is that they're on West Street at the north foot bridge, so that would be just north of the first tower, the north tower.

A. So we were still covered over, but it lifted relatively fast compared to the second one.

Now, when it did collapse, I saw a chunk come down. I thought it was a partial collapse, like maybe part of the fascia coming down, so we were actually looking, you know. It came down, and we were looking, and all of a sudden the cloud rushed. It was like whoa, but then a couple of seconds it overtook us. So we may have stopped then. A couple of other firemen came out. I don't want to curse, but for lack of a better word they were, mother ba, ba, ba, bouncing their helmets off the floor.

Q. Where did they come out of?

A. They were south of us. They were a little south of us. They came and they started moving up. One of the firemen -- I don't remember where he's from. He was a ladder, because I remember he had a red patch. He had a gash on his head. Triaged him, patched him up.

A couple of other people -- like I said, we gave oxygen to the maintenance man. A couple of other people running around, dazed, grabbed them, checked them out. We were looking for Smitty. We were looking for Stuey.

Q. Smittie and Stuey are guys from your company?

A. Yes, yes. Yes, members of the company.

Q. Where did they go? Where were they at this time?

A. They went north. They started moving up north.

Q. When the building was coming down?

A. When the building was coming down. So they went north, and Smitty had come back. We found him. Stuey later on had hooked up with another company, was coming around looking, see what he could do.

After that, there was a lot of commotion. It's a little hazy. I remember somebody screaming and the second tower was coming down, the north tower, and that was coming down, and we just took off running. Actually, I still had my extra cylinder in my hand. I started running, felt it was slowing me down. Discarded that.

I had a choice to go left on Vesey Street or to continue straight. As I turned, thinking about going left on Vesey, I decided not to, but I saw the cloud coming, pressed the face piece up against my face, turned on my air cylinder and started walking along the fence. I remember a chain link fence.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Started walking along the chain link fence. I didn't want to run because I know I depleted some of my tank with the previous collapse and from giving air to people, so I just remember trying not to panic going at a hurried pace, but not running and sucking down my bottle.

As I'm going, I heard somebody -- I remember somebody moaning or something like that, and I reached off the fence, and I went off the fence a little bit. I couldn't find anybody. I started going forward, and I bumped into another person, which turned out to be one of the guys from my company, Mike Hazel. I bumped into him. "Who's that?" He said, "It's Mike Hazel. Who's that?" I said, "It's Sully." Running out of air. Changed my tank out for me. He still had his extra cylinder.

Q. Okay.

A. Changed that along the fence, and as luck would have it, another member came by with a flashlight, and he was looking with the flashlight, and we walked out along the fence, kept going north till we were out of the cloud.

This one was very thick, the second one, because I remember as I was walking, and I had the face piece cheated up against my face, I had knocked my helmet back trying to get it on, and I didn't get it on till right before I changed Mike's cylinder, but I wiped across my face piece, thinking that it was just ash, or dust on the face piece. When I wiped it clear, it was still black. It was still -- you couldn't see. It was pretty thick.

As we walked out, started to dissipate. People -- somebody turned on a hydrant. People -- cops, everybody were diving into the hydrant, trying to wash their faces off, wash their mouths out. It was filthy, wretched water, but nobody cared. There was nurses and doctors coming around with eye wash.

There was a transmission to go north. I remember a disturbance by the water. I saw a police officer come out to the street and start directing people away from the water, and it turned out there was a gas leak or something, but at the time we didn't know if it was a bomb or -- so we just kept getting orders to go north, go north, go north.

Eventually we turned around, and we went north, settled and regrouped and worked our way down a little bit to investigate and see what was going on.

As far as anybody that has passed or is missing that I saw -- the only person I thought I might have seen was Dennis Oberg. I thought I saw him.

Q. Who's he?

A. He was a probie in my class.

Q. What company?

A. Geez, I forget what company he's in. I really don't recall, Chief, I'm sorry. I thought I saw him after the second collapse. The first collapse rather. I'm sorry. But I can't guaranty that, but that was about it on -- I had seen Terry Rivera when we came in. He narrowly got away. He's in 10 truck. He was on the detail. I actually spoke to him the night before, because I had a friend that's in the academy being assigned there for his seven-week rotation.

I spoke to him the night before, and as we were coming down West Street, I saw him, and it wound up that when the first building was coming down, I guess some of the other firemen -- this is the story he's telling me, that they thought it was debris coming down, and they ran into the lobby, and he drove underneath the rig, and the building came down and that's why he was alive, instead of going in, going under the rig.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Throughout the rest of the day, I was across the street from -- I'll show you on the map. Where the movie theatre is across the street from the telephone company.

Q. This is the north tower. This is the south tower.

A. South tower, and where would the telephone company be? That's it right there.

Q. Okay.

A. So I would imagine it's right around here is the movie theatre.

Q. Indicating across West Street on the west side of West Street just north of Vesey.

A. I was again with Mike Hazel. I stuck with him. He's one of the senior members. I stuck with him most of the day, and we were walking back towards where our captain was, because after the recall he had come in. This is later on in the day, and we heard a rumble that Building 7 was coming down, so we didn't know what to expect, so we wound up doing -- actually a broken window in the door of the theatre. There were two police officers actually walking next to us so I told them, I says, "Duck in there," and we both ducked in there, too, and it really didn't, you know, reach us.

We came out and went down to see what we could do with helping with the stretch, because now by this time they were starting to draft, so I think it was -- I don't know what marine company was drafting, but it was 53 engine, into 84 engine, to us.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. The 224, because we actually -- when we were getting ordered up north, all of a sudden we started hearing 224, start water. That's why we wound up going down and investigating.

Q. Right.

A. Because the rig had to be okay, so we wanted to go down and man the rig. There was -- I remember there was really no pressure in the hydrants.

Q. Right. Who was calling you to man -- to supply water? You don't know?

A. I don't know. I don't know, to be honest with you, but I do know that the water pressure was terrible. The volume -- it looked like there was volume there. You turn on the hydrant, there was water flowing out, but, I mean, the hoses barely filled, you know, at any rate.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Then they started drafting later on in the afternoon, and the rest of the day we were pretty much by the rig. The rest of the night, I should say.

I think we probably went home around eleven, started heading back towards the house, as far as I can remember.

Q. Go back to when you took the position at the hydrant after you were first at the south tower and they told you go up north, you wound up somewhere north of the north tower by the foot bridge, right?

A. We were by the hook.

Q. Okay, you hooked up?

A. As far as I can remember, yeah.

Q. And then go over where the guys were again, what duties they performed, how long you were there, how long you operated there. What did you do there?

A. Well, geez, let me think how long we were there. I had moved up. We were --

Q. Go ahead.

A. It's hard with the time. We were helping the chauffeur to hook up.

Q. Okay.

A. I'm trying to think if --

Q. How long were you there when the south tower came down?

A. How long were we there when the south tower came down? Maybe 15 minutes or so, maybe.

Q. Okay, 15 minutes. You helped him hook up?

A. We were helping him hook up. I remember actually I think the -- also the first -- the first place that we stopped we might have started to hook up also there.

Q. Okay.

A. And then had to pack it back up.

Q. Okay.

A. I remember for some reason we went with him when he moved.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. We were helping him. I remember helping Richie Saulle with trying to plug up the tranny pan. I remember Lieutenant DeSimone telling us to get an extra cylinder, get a hose rollup, and then he says we're going to go over and see what the story is.

Q. Where were you now? You had moved up to the north part?

A. We had -- I'm trying to think if it's after the first time or the second time we moved. I think that was actually after the first time we moved.

Q. Okay. Did you get your rollup and your cylinder?

A. Yes, we actually took the rollups off the rig, and we had --

Q. Did you walk up to the building any place to the south tower? Did you walk away from the rig?

A. We started -- yeah, we walked away from the rig. We started walking towards the building, yes, okay. It was after the first time we moved that he -- what do you call it? That we started going towards the building, and that's whether they were ordered to move up.

Q. So you put everything back on the rig?

A. So I put the hose rollup back on the rig.

Q. Right.

A. I didn't put my cylinder back into the proper spot. I just stowed it, tossed it the rig.

Q. Did you get back on the rig to ride up to the other spot? You walked up the other spot?

A. Walked, walked.

Q. Now, the rig goes up to West Street where you indicated north, somewhere in the vicinity of the north walk bridge?

A. The north walk bridge.

Q. You found the hydrant?

A. Yes.

Q. And then you said you helped the chauffeur hook up.

A. Helped the chauffeur hook up.

Q. And two guys went where? There was something about two of you fellows went --

A. When the building came down.

Q. Now, how long were you there? You said 15 minutes maybe?

A. Maybe 15 minutes. I tell you the truth, it's very hazy.

Q. So what happened in that 15 minutes? You just --

A. I tell you the truth, people jumping out of the buildings.

Q. Okay.

A. I tell you the truth, that was quite a shock, too. I mean, there we were, and out of the corner of my eye, I thought maybe it was a piece of debris falling down. It was a person jumping out of the window, and another one, another one, another one, and I don't know. It was pretty hazy as far as, like, how much time --

Q. Okay.

A. -- was spent or what was going on, and again I didn't have a radio.

Q. Right.

A. So I couldn't really hear what was going on. I could only hear if I was next to somebody.

Q. Right.

A. You know.

Q. Was your officer there with you?

A. I remember Lieutenant DeSimone walking ahead of us towards the building.

Q. Okay.

A. This is when he was telling us to get ready, that we were going to go and see, you know, what the story was, what we could do.

He was ahead of us. He was a good maybe 20, 30 yards because he had told us to get our rollups and our cylinders, and he started walking up.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. As that's when we started walking towards him, towards the building, and he told us put our stuff back on and move up, and then we did it again. I grabbed the cylinder again.

Q. After you relocated up to the north --

A. After we relocated again.

Q. Took the stuff off, helped the chauffeur hook up.

A. Yeah.

Q. And then what do you remember? Did you go into the north tower?

A. No, we didn't go into the north tower.

Q. Did you go to the command post over there? Did you see Ganci at the command post on West Street?

A. No, I didn't see Ganci.

Q. Okay.

A. I didn't see Ganci. I was -- most of the time, I was on the -- well --

Q. Go ahead.

A. We're facing this way with the rig.

Q. Okay. That's facing --

A. Most of the time I'm on the left side of the rig.

Q. Okay. That's facing north on West Street, okay.

A. So I really couldn't see too much of what was going on, because all the hydrants were on this side, so I was running around over there.

Q. So while you were in that area, the south tower collapsed.

A. The south tower collapsed, right.

Q. It was a tremendous cloud --

A. Yes.

Q. -- that lasted for some period of time.

A. Yes.

Q. 10 minutes, 5 minutes, 10 minutes, something like that. You used your mask intermittently.

A. Yes.

Q. Then that cleared.

Then what did you do after that? There was a long period of time between the second building collapsing?

A. Maybe 15, 20 minutes, and we were -- that's when we were helping the firemen that were coming that were from south of us that started moving up.

Q. Okay.

A. We were helping civilians, police officers.

Q. Okay.

A. And we were trying to get organized. We were looking for Smitty, make sure he's all right.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Stuey.

Q. Where did they go again?

A. They went up north.

Q. They went up north because that cloud enveloped you guys?

A. Because the cloud enveloped us.

Q. They moved up north. They were looking for them, but at the same time you were helping civilians?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Kind of like --

Q. Yeah.

A. You know.

Q. Okay.

A. New on the job.

Q. Okay, all right.

A. But, I mean, I tried to do the best that I could, as far as helping out. I didn't want to -- you know, I -- but I just remembered doing that, and I remember also at the same time looking up again.

There was still people coming out of the north tower, jumping, and I remember one person in particular, if it really was a person. There was -- it was a guy who looked like he was standing in the window maybe, hanging on. I just remember seeing it looked like a white shirt up there, and thinking, don't jump, you know, they're going to get you. You know, they are going to get up there and get you. Didn't happen, but I don't know.

I just remember after that one came down, there was just an order to move north, and so we moved north. People were trying to wash up again in the hydrants, and then there was the whole commotion by the waterfront, gas leak, a bomb, whatever, you know. We didn't know what was going on.

There was also a transmission at some time. I don't remember if it was after the first tower came down.

Q. Yeah.

A. Somebody said -- I don't know if it actually came over the radio or something. You heard a buzz about that there was another plane being tracked. I don't know if it was a military plane maybe somebody was tracking.

Q. Right.

A. Or they were talking about the plane in Philadelphia, and they didn't know where it was heading, but that was also -- caused a little bit of a commotion, too, so it was a mass exodus up forward north. People were trying to get settled, get reorganized. They had that whole thing with the gas.

Q. Yeah.

A. They pushed us farther north again, regroup, went to go see what we could do. We heard the transmission 224 start water.

Q. Yeah.

A. Looked at each other, like, huh? We realized the rig was all right, didn't get crushed, and we wanted to go down there and man the rig.

Q. You guys never got orders to go into the Tower 1, right?

A. Not that I'm aware of that.

Q. Yeah.

A. Not that I'm aware of.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't believe we had orders to go into either building.

Q. Uh-huh. You didn't see command post or -- any chiefs you remember on West Street? You didn't see -- did you see the chaplain? Did you remember anybody?

A. The only person I remember, really remember seeing a hundred percent --

Q. Yeah.

A. -- is Terry Rivera. I drove him to probie school every day.

Q. Okay.

A. And he was standing outside on West Street. He looked like he was looking for somebody.

Q. Yeah.

A. And as we were driving down West Street, I yelled out to him, and he didn't look like he heard me. When I spoke to him later, he did hear a voice. He didn't know it was me, though. He thought it was a truck calling him, but he was in and out of the south tower before it fell, and that was the only specific person that I remember.

There was actually -- I think the Rescue 5. There was a rescue firefighter that actually rode the back of our rig through the tunnel to the trade center. I wasn't even aware that he was on the back of the rig. I didn't know until sometime after this happened, weeks, that he came out. I didn't even know. There was a lot of things going on, you know.

Q. Where was the staging area on the Brooklyn side? Where did you respond to when you staged there?

A. Geez.

Q. Outside the Battery Tunnel was it?

A. It was outside the Battery Tunnel. I think it was -- Hamilton Avenue? Let me think.

Q. You were there when the second plane hit, you said?

A. Yeah, we were coming down -- I believe it was Columbia Street, and I was with my back to the lieutenant, and the lieutenant had actually said, "Look out the window, look out the window."

We didn't see the plane yet. Looking out the building, the smoke was already across the river. There was papers falling on the Brooklyn side already.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Out of the corner of my eye, I saw a plane coming, and I actually said to Mike Hazel, I said, "What is this guy going to do? Is he going to try to fly under the smoke?"

I thought it was a regular pilot, just, you know, that he was going to have to divert his flight path because of this big, huge plume of smoke, and I'm saying to myself, why isn't he flying around the building on the windward side instead of, you know -- it looked like he was trying to duck under the smoke, but then he banked and hit the building, and that was that.

Q. Well --

A. I mean, actually, the guys on the other side of the rig didn't believe me, because when this whole -- when this all started I was upstairs, and they said, "Hey, Joe, you know, a plane hit the World Trade Center," and being the johnnie in the house, I thought they were pulling my leg. Get out of here, you know. Came downstairs and saw it on the news.

My first thought was it was like what happened with the Empire State building. You always see these old, you know, newsreels or whatever. They're talking about the B-29 or B-17 that hit it.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Oh, wow, you know, this is going to be trouble, but I thought it was an accident. Then on the way there, just, you know, stopped, turned into something totally different, and I don't know.

Q. Okay. How did you guys get back to quarters late at night when you were finally relieved?

A. Basically hitched a ride in an ambulance.

Q. Yeah.

A. We walked up north. We were trying to look for a bus to get back. Couldn't find a bus. I don't know what the story was, and we wound up flagging down -- what do you call it?

Actually, it might be of some interest. There was a person that they -- really wouldn't be.

They thought had been lost.

Q. A fireman?

A. A fireman, a lieutenant, actually, and our lieutenant saw him on the bridge, and he passed it along. I don't know what the story was with that, but probably really of no relevance, but yeah, we flagged down a volunteer ambulance.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. We were piled in. Just came home.

Q. Okay. Anything else you remember? That's good.

A. Nothing off the top, Chief.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. I thank the firefighter for the interview, Firefighter Joseph Sullivan.

This concludes the interview at 1508 hours. That finishes it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOSEPH MEOLA

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is December 11, 2001. The time is 2:53 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the safety battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with Joseph Meola in the quarters of Engine 96.

Q. Joe, just tell us what you saw on September 11.

A. On September 11, approximately -- I'd say it was a little bit after nine, we responded on -- I was in Engine Company 91. Responded on the second fifth alarm to Tower 2. I went down with a Captain Montera and a Firefighter Brian Russo.

We went in the RAC unit with the RAC unit guy whose name is -- I forget his name. He was in the RAC unit that day.

We left quarters, went all the way down Second Avenue, eventually pulled onto Church Street outside Tower No. 1, World Trade Center No. 1. On foot we proceeded to Church and Liberty, where we tried to get a couple of extra masks.

After not getting any extra masks off the rigs that we saw there, there were a couple of engine companies, maybe Engine 207, 209. It was a 200 number, low 200 number. I don't remember. A couple of rigs there, low 200 numbers.

We went into the quarters of 10 and 10. After we were in the quarters for approximately 30 seconds -- it was a triage center at the time. After we left 10 and 10, as soon as we walked outside the door, a firefighter from an engine company 2 -- I believe it's 216, Danny Suhr, just outside 10 and 10's quarters on Liberty Street, got hit by a jumper.

They were pulling him away. I believe they got him into an ambulance, and they were yelling at us to get away, because jumpers were jumping from the south tower onto Liberty Street, and a few jumpers came close to us, but no -- we met up with another company, Engine 58, which is in our battalion, which was in the 12th battalion.

I believe they were on Liberty at the time. I don't know if they were going in the building. I don't remember, but they did make their way into the building before us, not building -- not Tower 2, but Tower 3. The Vista, Marriott.

They made it into the Vista before us after -- later on. We met up with them on Liberty, talked to the boss for a little while, talked to a couple of the guys, and we were avoiding lots of material that was falling from the building.

We went under -- I believe it's 130 Liberty Street. The building -- I think that's the address, actually, 130. There was a scaffolding, and we went under the scaffolding there, and we made it to West. We made it to West Street, down to West Street, asking firefighters where the command post was.

They showed us that the command post was located just outside the 2 World Financial Center in front of a garage, a parking garage. We made our way down that block and to the command post.

At the command post was several other companies. I don't know what companies were there at the time. Several other companies, ESU police, several of the high chiefs -- Ganci, Burns, Donald Burns, Ganci. I remember seeing those two. I remember seeing -- I think it might have been Barbara. I'm not a hundred percent sure. I just -- there was a lot of chiefs at this command post.

At that time, I believe it was -- I believe the chief was -- okay. At that time, I believe it was Chief Burns who explained to us that we were going to go to -- we were going to go through the Vista, the Vista -- Marriott Vista, into 2 World Trade Center to a subbasement with an engineer that was at that post at the time, at the command post.

We were getting our gear together. We were getting ready to walk across the street, and he told us to hold up. We didn't have our forcible entry tools. We were an engine company, didn't have any forcible entry tools. At that time he sent our chauffeur. He didn't send the chauffeur. I think the chauffeur went to the rig to get the entry tools, and that was the last I seen that chauffeur that -- until later on our chauffeur was -- did survive, but was hurt in the first building collapse, Tower No. 2.

He held us there approximately within three minutes. As we are looking up at the building, what I saw was, it looked like the building was blowing out on all four sides. We actually heard the pops. Didn't realize it was the falling -- you know, you heard the pops of the building. You thought it was just blowing out.

We turned -- I turned to take a look where to go, turned around. Several companies, myself and half of my company, ran into a parking garage at 2 -- I believe it's 2 World Financial Center. We ran into the parking garage.

As I ran into the parking garage, I turned around. I saw the whole side -- the side of the building falling into the street and the cloud of dust coming towards us.

As we got to the back of the garage, the dust had entered the garage, and somebody had opened up the door that was ahead of us into a stairwell. We got to the stairwell. We got into the stairwell. We shut the door. There was already maybe 20 firemen in there already and officers in the stairwell for the financial center, and a couple of more guys banged on the door. We opened up the door. We pulled them in, got a little contaminated, but not bad at all, and we made ourselves -- after that we made ourselves up to the 1st Floor of the financial center.

After that, we exited the rear of the financial center, and what you can see was -- I believe it's the little bay there. The North Cove Yacht Club coming out of the back there. We went right -- you could see the water of the yacht club. We worked our way around 2 World Financial Center, and it was pretty dark, dusty.

You couldn't -- your eyes were hurting. You couldn't breathe, but you tried to head for the water. I think I believe I ended up on North End Avenue, one block just short of the water, right on the water somewhere.

After on North Avenue, I believe we went down Vesey Street -- Vesey or Murray. It's one of those two -- back towards West Street. I was with half -- maybe half the members of the company, three of four members of the company. The other three or four members, at that time we were -- we did not know where they went. We didn't know if they made it in the garage, they were still in the garage, if they were out on West Street. We got split up.

As we worked our way back to Vesey towards West, we ran into several people that we knew. We tried to get people together. We were going back towards West and Vesey somewhere where we heard people screaming, "The second building is coming down. The second building is coming down."

Within ten seconds, the second building started to drop. We ran up West. We made it up West maybe to Barclay or past the telephone company building up on West, past the telephone company building. We didn't make it as far as Stuyvesant or where the other overpass is yet. We didn't make it up that far. I don't remember. Maybe Murray or Barclay on West.

We took cover from the second cloud, smoke that engulfed us, and...

Q. Did you have any warning that the second tower was coming down, via radio traffic or --

A. Radio traffic. Radio traffic on -- what you heard on the handy-talkies was you heard conflicting reports of guys saying hold in the first tower or -- and you heard other guys saying, "Get out. Evac the first tower. Evac. Evac the first tower."

Also at the command post, when I was at the command post earlier, the radio traffic that you heard was Maydays. I didn't have a radio, but the -- several radios were on in that vicinity of bosses or control man or -- at the time in that -- and I believe the radio traffic was -- you heard several Maydays coming from -- I don't know if it's Tower 1 or Tower 2, Channel 1 or Channel 2. I believe we were on Channel 2, and you heard Maydays on Channel 2 coming from rescue. I believe it was rescue companies. I'm not a hundred percent sure. My memory is just jogged on that. You heard Maydays. You did hear Maydays, several Maydays. "We need water. Mayday. We need water. Mayday. We need water. We got no water," to that effect. I don't remember exactly, just -- that day is such a tough day.

Coming back to Vesey and West on another communication after the first tower fell, Tower 2 fell, Tower 1, you heard guys -- firemen, chiefs, lieutenants, I don't know who -- yelling conflicting reports, some saying -- most saying, "Get the hell out of the tower. Get out of Tower 1. You know, Tower 2 fell."

I didn't realize the full Tower 2 fell until we went back to Vesey and West. At the time when I ran into the parking garage, I believe only half -- I thought only half the building fell down. I did not know the whole building came down, and when we got back there, I realized the whole tower was down, and that's what you were, like, the whole -- you know, you knew the other one was imminent.

After that, we worked our way up West Street. I got -- I believe we met up with another two tour members of the company. I remember going to a hydrant, going to a rig, opening up a hydrant, everybody washing their face, their eyes out, trying to get their composure back together, and in -- we wanted to work our way down towards West and Vesey, and we got held up by one of our bosses, which said -- which told us to hold, to hold tight there and go back to the command post, which was now located somewhere up by Stuyvesant. I believe it was located by Stuyvesant High School.

We went back there, washed up, cleaned up and I spent, you know, a part of the day there before returning back later on that afternoon to the site.

I believe that's about it.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Thank you, Joe.

The time now is 3:08, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM REYNOLDS

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 11, 2001. The time is 1:59 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with William Reynolds, Firefighter First Grade, from Engine 76, in the quarters of Engine 76.

Q. William, just tell us the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. We arrived down through the West Side Highway, I honestly don't remember what street we had gotten off the rig, 76 Engine. Probably somewhere in the area of Murray and West or maybe something south of that like Vesey. At that time, the engine went off to places unknown and the company ended up down at 2 World Financial Center by the command post, waiting for an assignment.

More companies arrived and so probably there was approximately 45 people there. I don't know the other companies that were there. I wasn't really paying attention. I did notice at the time I saw standing next to me Mayor Guiliani and the Police Commissioner, Chief Ganci and Chief Ray Downey. It seemed like a decent amount of time that we were there and we as a group had become pretty distracted with the amount of people jumping down out of the north tower. It got to the point that we were talking about not looking at the people. So as a group we all turned our backs to them so we wouldn't have to look. Then the noise from the people hitting, it became so much that we ended up having to turn around and look again. This went on for a while and I remember the people that were hitting the awning over the doorway, they were blown to pieces. I remember saying, "I hope they don't hit that awning, because this way I don't have to see them blown to pieces."

After a while, and I don't know how long it was, I was distracted by a large explosion from the south tower and it seemed like fire was shooting out a couple of hundred feet in each direction, then all of a sudden the top of the tower started coming down in a pancake. I remember my jaw dropping and just staring at it and Richard Banaciski, one of the firemen that was there, yelled "Run" and I turned and I started running into the parking garage of the Financial Center.

Q. Bill, just one question. The fire that you saw, where was the fire? Like up at the upper levels where it started collapsing?

A. It appeared somewhere below that. Maybe twenty floors below the impact area of the plane. I saw it as fire and when I looked at it on television afterwards, it doesn't appear to show the fire. It shows a rush of smoke coming out below the area of the plane impact.

The reason why I think the cameras didn't get that image is because they were a far distance away and maybe I saw the bottom side where the plane was and the smoke was up above it.

So we ran into this parking garage, the parking garage was empty of cars and it was lit and I remember thinking, "I hope that this building doesn't fall down and crush the building that I'm in." And I remember saying, "I can't die today. My wife wouldn't accept this."

So anyway, we made it to the back of the building and I remember looking over my shoulder as this wall of darkness came in. Luckily it was only just smoke. I was standing next to my Lieutenant in the engine, Lieutenant Farrington, and I had set my mask down by the ramp at the entrance and I didn't have a mask. I said to him, "Frank, if the smoke gets bad, you're gonna have to share your mask with me." Then we continued back further. Frank found an exit and a security guard, we asked the security guard if that exits the building and he said, "Yes." I remember saying to him, "Are you absolutely sure?" He said, "Yes." So I said, "All right. Then get out of here. Go."

So all of a sudden Frank came out with a life saving rope, which I wasn't aware he had at the time, and he hooked it to the doorknob and we started walking back into the area where we just ran from and I heard people with masks on, the guys had masks on, I could hear them in all directions. So I followed behind Frank and I started talking out loud saying, "If anybody can't find the way out, we have a rope over here. He'll take you to the door." Some voices said, "Where?" I said, "I'll keep talking. Just come to my voice and there is a way out over here."

Then I remember hearing somebody saying, "Oh, I have a door here." I said, "Well, if you have a door, then go out the door. But if anybody is lost, just come over to my voice and there is a rope and you can follow it out." So then guys started showing up towards me. They put their hands on the rope and that's the last I saw of them.

So after we were confident that there was no one left in the parking garage, Frank and I followed the rope back and we worked our way to the back door. When we got out, we were by the North Cove Yacht Harbor and we went out to the Hudson River. What I had forgotten to state previous to this, before the towers had fallen, two emergency service cops had come up to us in wired gear, carrying uzis and asked if we had seen any civilians. They said, "If you see any, come get us. Don't go near the civilians." At the time there were no civilians around, in my eye shot.

I also remember, at that time, which I had also forgotten to state, that in the north tower there was a woman who may have been a security guard for the complex and she was just walking back and forth seeming to be oblivious of the people falling down, jumping down right on the other side of the glass. In hindsight, I would say she probably was in shock.

There was also a Police Officer in there. He just seemed to be just standing there not paying attention to what this woman was doing. Anyway, back to getting out to the water.

We started regrouping as a company, verified we were present. We did not know at the time where George Rodriguez, our chauffeur, was. There was a lot of radio traffic. The Lieutenant was trying to find out where George was. After a short time we heard communication that George was fine.

I remember then seeing a civilian, the first civilian that I saw, he was carrying a bag and I thought, you have to watch out for the civilians and I was thinking, maybe I should take his bag and throw it in the water, because I didn't know what it was. Then I thought maybe of throwing him in the water. Then I said, "No. He's walking south. I'll work north and get away from him."

I remember discussing with other guys that maybe there is people around that would shoot us. Then we went over closer to the water and there was a barge there. I remember thinking, this might be an oil barge and there might be a bomb on it. So we started walking back towards West Street. Then I was thinking, we can't go close to the buildings because if more planes come. So we kind of just all were walking around dazed and I ran into a Battalion Chief. I don't know who he was. I said to him, I said, "Chief, they're evacuating the other building; right?" He said, "No."

Q. You're talking about the north tower now; right?

A. Before the north tower fell. He said, "No." I said, "Why not? They blew up the other one." I thought they blew it up with a bomb.

I said, "If they blew up the one, you know they're gonna blow up the other one." He said, "No, they're not." I said, "Well, you gotta tell them to evacuate it, because it's gonna fall down and you gotta get the guys out." Because I had felt there were hundreds of firemen who died in the first tower and thousands of people. He said, "I'm just the Battalion Chief. I can't order that." I remember looking at the radio on him and I said, "You got a fucking radio and you got a fucking mouth. Use the fucking things. Empty this fucking building." Again he said, "I'm just a Battalion Chief. I can't do that."

So I walked back by the water. We were all basically just somewhat in visual site of each other, us and 22 Truck, some of the guys from 22 Truck. I had known, at that time, that all of the guys of the 22 truck had gotten out. We were walking around very numb. I knew I was in shock, but there was nothing I could do about it.

So eventually this other chief came back and said, "They are evacuating this tower." I said, "Oh, that's great." And sometime after that I watched from the, I guess, by the Winter Garden area, I watched the north tower fall. It was expected so it wasn't as traumatic as the first one to me. Then that Battalion Chief came back again with his clip board and he said, "We need volunteers to go back in and check the perimeter for survivors." He emphasized that we didn't have to go in, but if we would he would appreciate it.

So he took the names of us in 76 Engine and we went back in. I believe it was at Vesey Street we got up to about Washington and a Deputy Chief met us there and said that he wanted us to go back up West Street and regroup and we'd take it from there. Basically while we were in that area, Washington and Vesey, it was just everything burning on the ground and around us and the dust, and it was no apparent people laying around that was visible. So we walked up West and I think we got to the area of Stuyvesant High School and basically that's where I spent a good amount of time. I don't think anything much after that should be relevant, because I didn't come back down to that area again of the World Trade Center for many hours.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. Thank you, Bill. I appreciate your cooperation.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT DANIEL WILLIAMS

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is December 10, 2001. The time is 1:35 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the New York City Fire Department safety division.

I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Daniel Williams of Ladder 16.

Q. Dan, please tell us the events of September 11.

A. Beginning on September 11, approximately quarter to nine in the morning, voice alarm went off in quarters, telling 39 engine to turn out. Highly excitable voices over the voice alarm, turn out with the high-rise rig.

I was down on the apparatus floor at the time. I stepped into the house watch area, where one of the members had a TV on, and we heard that a plane hit the trade center, took a quick look, figured out to myself that wasn't a small aircraft that hit the tower. I went over to the apparatus and just started looking over equipment, thinking we are going to be going momentarily.

Approximately ten minutes later, one of the members yell out, "The second tower was hit," and I started thinking it was a terrorist act.

Approximately ten after nine, we received a ticket to respond to the south tower command post, along with Ladder 2, Ladder 13 and Battalion 10. We were special called.

We had trouble getting out of quarters due to numerous police cars parked in front of the firehouse. Evidently, they were on recall. It took us a few minutes to get out of quarters.

As we pulled out on Lexington Avenue, 13 truck and the 10th battalion went by, and we convoyed down to the site with them. We parked on West Street at approximately, I'd say, Murray Street, and we proceeded south. Members -- we proceeded south.

We took our extra bottles, proceeded down to the command post, which was in front of 2 World Financial Center at the loading dock area. At that time I reported in, there was a few companies, a few engine companies, and a couple of ladder companies standing there.

I heard the chief say to the companies that were already there, "Report into the north tower." The one company I do realize that went into the north tower that was assigned to the north tower was 13 truck.

The 10th Battalion Chief Harten said, "Stand by. We'll have an assignment for you in a few minutes." At that time, I believe we were the only truck company still left at the command post, and I believe there were two or three engine companies still standing by on the other side. We had the engines on one side and the trucks on the other.

As the time -- as I was standing there, I was watching the towers, and especially the south tower. I really believed that there was going to be a partial collapse, meaning the upper floors were going to come off. You know, I'd say there was 15 floors of fire.

We were witnessing people coming off the building, jumping from the north tower, which was directly across the way from us. A few of my firefighters started getting very upset, and I did yell something to them. In other words, turn around, shut up, turn around, look the other way. There's nothing we can do for these people but say a prayer.

I turned my face back towards the buildings as -- looking up at the south tower. It seemed like the one floor exploded, but in retrospect I'm thinking that was the compressive force of the building coming down that blew it out. I remember yelling, "Run."

My company and I know other members were behind us from the command post. They came running into the loading dock area. At that time, a heavy cloud of dust entered the loading dock area where we had zero visibility for a couple of minutes.

I asked members of 16 truck if everybody was there, and I went through the riding list. We were missing one member at this time, and I told the rest of the members up the ramp we're going to find the other member. We proceeded out up the ramp out towards West Street again, from 2 World Financial Center, and we started doing a search looking -- mainly looking for our guy that was missing.

At this time, we found 10 or 15 walking wounded types. We directed them into the loading dock area. At this time, there wasn't much debris on the ground. There was maybe four or five inches of concrete dust and light debris around that area.

As we were directing the people into the loading dock area, we came across an EMS worker that told us he weighed approximately 350 pounds. I believe he was heavier than that. I said, "We got to get you -- you got to get out of here. Can you walk with assistance?"

Two of the members tried to pick him up, one under each shoulder. He had a broken leg and a broken arm, evidently, and he was yelling in pain. My chauffeur, Oscar Davila, found a gurney that was blown down the loading dock, down the ramp. He brought that up, and we placed this member on -- this EMS worker on the gurney.

A couple of the brothers wanted to take him up to West Street, and I said, "No, we're going to go through the building, through the loading dock area and out the back," since the north tower was still burning.

We started wheeling him into the locking dock area when a member of 6 truck -- I don't know if he was recall or if he was one of the on-duty members. He said to me he couldn't find his company. He did not have a radio.

At that time, the radios were going. You couldn't get in edgewise any word on the radios. I told him to stay with us until the radio traffic calmed down, and I would notify someone of that fact.

We got down into the loading dock area with this gentleman on a gurney. There were trucks blocking the loading dock. My chauffeur moved one truck so we could get him up on the loading dock.

At this time, the -- we still hadn't found our fifth man. He was still missing. I had the other -- I had three of the members start leading the walking wounded and other people we were finding within the financial center, leading them up the C stairway to the rear of 2 World Financial Center toward the river.

About this time, I was told by my chauffeur and the man he was with, the EMS worker and the man from 6 truck, that they were stuck in the subbasement. The elevator took them down. They took an elevator, and it took them down into the subbasement. At this time, I told the chauffeur to get out of the elevator and just stand by. I'll get help to help get this guy up the stairs.

I started up the C stairway to retrieve the rest of the members to give a hand with this guy when I heard a deep rumbling, and I felt vibrations. I thought it was the financial center coming down.

I was in the stairwell. I ducked behind the stairs. The door was propelled with quite a bit of force, and debris went down the hallway, went flying down the hallway. Then within 15 seconds at the most, it subsided. I proceeded up the stairs where I found three of the members.

I was still missing my can man at this time. I got my three members that were up there. I got a couple of other members. I believe one was from 53 engine. We went down the stairs into the subbasement, and we carried the EMS worker up the stairs, up -- I believe it was four flights of stairs to the back of the 2 World Financial Center. We took him over to the marina over there, where he was placed on a police boat and was taken to Jersey, evidently.

At this time, I saw a battalion chief with no bunker coat or helmet on him, and I asked him where the command post was. He just kept repeating, "Go south." At this time 6 truck member, he left me. Couldn't find him. We were still without our can man.

The rest of the company, we proceeded down along the river's edge until approximately -- I believe it's Albany Street. I saw a couple of fire boats tied up to the pier head there, and I believe it was Commissioner Gregory. I asked him where the command post was. He mentioned that he was it, and to help stretch a line from the fire boat down Albany Street.

The members of 16, we helped numerous other members stretch this 3 1/2 down to approximately Washington Street, where I noticed a building pretty well involved. I don't know what -- you know, couldn't tell where I was at this time approximately.

After stretching that line, headed back, and we are going to head north again, go back to the financial center and see if we can find our member. We went back down through the same stair, the C stairway, in the 2 World Financial Center and worked our way out through the loading dock area, which by now was covered with heavy steel I beams, and box beams and all of this, where the command post was.

We did start climbing into voids and things, tried to do a radio feedback assist, got nothing on that. We had no tools. We lost all our tools in the first collapse. We proceeded out to the financial center after doing a search of a couple of floors in that building.

We worked our way up -- I believe it's North End Avenue to -- it might have been Vesey Street where there was another command post. While we were working our way up, I ran into the member that was missing, on North End Avenue. We ran into him. He did state that after the first tower came down, he just -- he ran through the building, came out near the river and headed north. He asked me if I was mad at him. I said no. I said at that time nobody ever saw anything like this, and I was just very concerned.

I took the members into a restaurant. I'd say this was approximately two o'clock in the afternoon, took them into a restaurant that was open on -- I believe it's Vesey Street. Not too many members in there. We had some water, and I had everybody call home to let somebody know they were okay.

I heard that 39 was trapped, and the command post, the north command post, was telling us, don't go down there. We did do a survey around the area there and around the perimeter of where the buildings were, looking for any victims in the outlying areas of where this occurred.

About, I would say, four o'clock or so, we were told go to up to Stuyvesant High School, where they had a command post, triage, to do a roll call, you know. We proceeded north up West Street, and we went to Stuyvesant High School.

It was not too soon after that that 7 World Trade Center collapsed, and at that time people were yelling, "Run," and we just stood there and watched the thing come down. That was about it.

We did -- I did give them a list of company numbers of members that we told to get on boats to go over for medical aid, wherever they were taken, whether it was Jersey or Staten Island. It was approximately ten members on that, on the list that I had. No names. It was just company numbers.

At Stuyvesant High School, a few of the members did get, you know, eyes washed out and things like that, and then we took a little rest up there in the cafeteria area and went back out.

Our rig was moved sometime during the day. We got back to that, and there was damage done to it, the windshield and lights, things like that.

At approximately eight o'clock we left the scene. We were ordered to take up by the command post, take our rig back to quarters, which we did.

Sorry to say that Rob and Ray didn't make it through that day.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Thank you, Dan.

The time now is 1:50, and this concludes the interview.

FIREFIGHTER KENNETH ROGERS

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: December 10, 2001. The time is 10:48 a.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Kenny Rogers, Firefighter first from Ladder 16 in the quarters of Ladder 16.

Q. All right Kenny, please give me any information you have regarding the events of September 11.

A. At about a quarter to nine, high rise, Engine 39 responded to the first plane crash into the World Trade Center. We turned on the TV and we were watching because it was newsworthy and we saw the second plane hit and almost immediately, we were told to respond down there. We had trouble getting out of quarters and we were delayed a bit and 13 and 22 in the Battalion were ahead of us, got ahead of us. I saw them pass us on the corner. We wound up following them down, downtown. Wound up on West Street going south and we followed them for as far as we could. We got down further than I thought we did, because we passed a lot of rigs and eventually we couldn't go any further.

There we disembarked and we walked south. We went down to West Street, to the command post, and then we passed in front of 2 World Financial Center, by a garage bay. We were just standing there and 13 and 22 were there, a big group were sent in ahead of us. We should have been in their place but because we arrived a step behind them, they went in ahead of us. We just stood by and waited. I think we were waiting for another truck company to fill us out. We were going to get the next assignment. We sort of had the nod but we didn't have the wave yet.

Watching the building, mostly the south tower. There were people jumping, someone said we are going to go a long way up, let's take off some of our gear. At first I didn't, but after a while I thought he was probably right because it was getting heavy. So I took off some stuff and he took off some stuff. Some other guys did.

Meanwhile we were standing there with about five companies and we were just waiting for our assignment and then there was an explosion in the south tower, which according to this map, this exposure just blew out in flames. A lot of guys left at that point. I kept watching. Floor after floor after floor. One floor under another after another and when it hit about the fifth floor, I figured it was a bomb, because it looked like a synchronized deliberate kind of thing. I was there in '93.

I went down to the garage bay. Most guys were down already. The Lieutenant had been yelling at the command post, run, run, run. The only person I saw come in with us was a Chief and the rest of them didn't come in. The companies just scattered everywhere. I think we had maybe nine people with us and there had to be four in the beginning. All these other companies just scattered. We didn't know where they were. They didn't come down with us. We had two people, I think, from other companies, different companies. One guy was from a truck. I think the other another guy was Steve Wright. An injured person with us, a big fat guy and I found an ambulance cot at the bottom of that ramp.

We put him on that. We moved a truck away from the loading bay, because it had the key in it. We put him up on the loading dock and then we put him into a freight elevator, but the Lieutenant said I don't want everyone on that elevator. We don't know how well it works. He turned out to be right. Because it didn't -- it malfunctioned. It went down instead of up and the guys were lucky to get off it. Steve Wright was on that elevator. Two people were on it, the guy from the other company, Steve Wright, and the injured guy. The injured guy couldn't walk and he had a broken arm.

The Lieutenant said okay, we are going to have to carry him up the stairs. I should say that he already had a roll call after the dust cleared. We were missing one guy. Then he had another roll call back by the stairwell, hoping the guy might be back by the stairwell, but he wasn't there either.

We decided to carry this guy up the stairwell. One of the guys from the other company said there is a way out, out of the building, that goes out the back. We decided we were going to go that way. We tried to pick this guy up. The stairwell was narrow. We couldn't all get our hands on it. The guy was very big. Eventually we got him up several flights of stairs. We got him out the back of the building and we put him on a boat going over to New Jersey somewhere.

Then we went back from North Cove harbor, we went back to the building and the second collapse occurred when -- the three of us were in the back of the building; myself, Oscar and Joe Petrich. There was a really heavy draft. My helmet just flew off into this black curtain of soot behind the building and on the back of the building there was an overhang, so I didn't really want to go into either one of those places, but then I was worried about the glass flying around inside the building. So the thing to do, I figured, was to just stay where I was, where I had the most places to go and see what would happen.

What happened was it subsided. I didn't have a turnout coat at this time. I didn't get cut up so it turned out to be the best thing to do was just to wait and see where the best place (inaudible). That's how it worked out for me with the second collapse.

Then we went back into the building to find the Lieutenant. At this time, there was still lights in the stairwell. There was a lot of water running down the stairs, so we knew the building had some kind of damage. I went down to a lower level, which I hadn't been to before, below the loading bay, where we had been originally. There was no access in the loading bay anywhere else. It was just one level that went down. I was hoping there was, because I was hoping I could hide down there.

Someone located him and yelled down the stairwell, we found him, we got him. So we went back, we all regrouped and then we went up the ramp to go out to the front of the building where we had come in. We were looking for the guy we were missing. The Lieutenant and some people were off to the left and me and Joe Petrich went to the right of the bay to the left and we went up there. We kind of searched quite a bit of the building looking for people. We didn't see anybody except one guy with a camera. I don't know where he came from. He was taking a picture of the World Trade Center collapse I guess. He was okay though.

When we left the building, then we saw a couple of other firemen starting to come in to search. We told them we have looked around already. We knew we were the first guys there because there was no foot prints in the dust or anything. There was a lot of dust in the exposure, blown in windows on that side of the building.

After that, we went back into the building. We went out the back. We skirted North Cove harbor and we went to a street, which I guess was North End, and then we went to Vesey Street and we turned right. We ran into a guy. The Lieutenant asked him where is the command post. The guy said I'm it. So we figured the command post was in a lot of trouble, because we could see them from where we had been in our staging area. Now there didn't seem to be a command post any more.

Anyway, we found a place on Vesey, somebody forced their way into it. It was a place called Chevy's. We went in there. We were very happy to see people come in. We -- like 39 Engine, we heard them give a Mayday and they weren't responding to any radio transmissions so we thought they might be all dead.

One of the guys came in from 39, a couple of guys came in and started wandering in and it was just good to see these guys were okay. We stayed there for a while. That was pretty much the events of that day for us.

After that, we sort of went back to the school. We went into the school. There was another collapse of another building, but we were too far away to be affected by that. We went back to the rig and we washed the rig down. It turned out that --

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Thank you Kenny. The time now is 11:13. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL BRODBECK

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today is December 10, 2001. It's 1645 hours. This is Battalion Chief Steven King from Safety Battalion FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter First Grade Michael Brodbeck from Engine Company 210. He was working a mutual in Ladder 1106 on September 11th as the can man. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Okay, Mike.

A. Right after the first plane hit the north tower, we were dispatched and we were first ticket. We jumped on the rig and started going over the Brooklyn Bridge. At this time we were still unaware it was actually a large plane until we got around three-quarters of the way over the Brooklyn Bridge and they confirmed it was a commercial airliner. The 2nd Battalion aide, I believe, was screaming on the radio about the jumpers up and down.

I think we arrived down Cortlandt Street, which was facing Two World Trade, and pretty much the way you see that second plane hit on the videotape was the way we were facing that tower.

As the second plane hit, the chauffeur, which was Artie Riccio, did a U turn around Century 21, which I believe is near One Liberty Plaza over there. We came around, and I think we came down Vesey Street, where our rig was.

We grabbed our gear, carried extra cylinders. I had the can and had my hook. We walked around, I think down Vesey to West Street. We made a left and we came to the north tower. We proceeded to wait until jumpers were down. We went into the lobby. We arrived in the lobby, awaiting instruction.

We awaited instruction from the chiefs. We went with I believe it was Chief Picciotto. I don't know if that's exactly him, but I think I recognized him. He was on the television and stuff.

We went up to the mezzanine, and we took an elevator. The chief said that these elevators were all right. We took the elevator which I believe goes up to eight. We got off at eight and proceeded to walk up to 23. We stopped on 23, and then we went up to 25. Then we made our way back down.

So we were either on 23 or 21. I don't know. I don't remember that. I think it was 23. The lieutenant gave us instructions to make a thorough search, pop all the doors, make sure everybody is out of the building.

Me and the irons man went. I left my can and I took the Halligan. He had the router tool. We probably popped at least 10 or 15 doors making a search.

Q. On what floor?

A. On 23 or 21. I'm still confused about that. I believe it was 23.

At this point after we made a thorough search, we located together via the stairwell. At that point, unbeknownst to us, the south tower fell. We didn't know that the south tower fell. I didn't have a radio because I had the can. But I heard there was a collapse in the north tower between the 68th and 70th floor.

When we heard the evacuation, we started our way down. At this point we were still unaware that the other tower went down. We were in the stairwell. We all regrouped at the stairwell before the tower went down. When it went down, like everybody else says, it was like an earthquake. The building went six feet to the right, six feet to the left.

We started to make our way down, a very slow process. Once the maydays kept coming over, guys were just stopping in the stairwell. At approximately the 18th floor, the other members of Ladder 110 started carrying a woman down in a chair. I was walking down with another woman I believe from 18 to like 12, and she went with two other members. I forget which engine company. They walked her down.

I picked up another civilian at 10. I walked her down. She was with two civilians. I walked her down. She was hyperventilating. She thought she was having a heart attack. So I put my mask on her, because the dust from the other tower was starting to come up into the other building. This was probably around like the sixth floor where the dust started getting bad. I gave her my mask from like ten down because she was just trying to catch her breath.

We went down -- this was the B stairwell. We got down to the lobby. I was a little bit ahead of 110 while they were carrying the other woman down. When I got down to the lobby, I asked the woman if she was okay. The two civilians told me that they would take her. She went with the two civilians.

I went and caught up with Ladder 110 and walked out of the north tower, which I believe was at least 25 minutes just to get down from up there. We walked out into the street under the overpass, the northern walkway on West Street.

We got out to one of the rigs and put our gear down. Lieutenant Wayne Mera -- at this point we still didn't know the other tower went down. The north tower is ahead of the south tower. So as we walked out, we're still pretty much clueless about the other tower going down.

We made our way under that overpass. We stopped there. Lieutenant Mera said he didn't like this, where we were standing. We started to walk north on West Street. We probably got maybe 50 yards, they were like two red lights, and we stopped again. We put all our equipment down.

One guy took his mask off.

At that point the north tower collapsed. From the time we walked out of the tower to this point had to be less than five minutes, maybe like three minutes by the time -- it happened very quickly.

At that point we all pretty much scattered and ran. I ran north on West Street. I put my mask on. The vibra-alert was going off. I had no air left because I gave it to that woman on the walk down.

The dust ball came down and hit us. I ran in complete darkness and wound up running face first into the building before the Verizon building on Vesey. I was actually trying to break through the glass.

At the time I dislocated my shoulder. I was running. I dislocated my shoulder. I was trying to break through the glass with my left arm. Then the door flew open. I happened to be banging on the door. The door swung open and knocked me on my butt.

Two firemen from 305 Engine dragged me in there, which I believe is Six World Trade in the customs building right there. It was either that or the telephone building. I'm not too sure. Two firemen dragged me in there.

At that point I was trying to get in touch with my battalion to find out if those guys lived or whatever. We all met up at what I believe was West Street and Murray, that bridge that goes over, that other one. Near like Stuyvesant High School, we met up there.

That was it pretty much, from collapse purposes. I don't know if you want me to go on.

Q. Did you see anybody there, any specific individuals at any point?

A. That ain't here no more? I walked out with someone from 65 Engine that I grew up with. I haven't seen him in two years. We happened to hit the lobby doors going out.

On the way up we were with 21 Engine. A guy from 21, I played football with, he was with me going up. When we were coming out, they were ahead of us. I remember seeing Billy Burke, the captain who got killed. I think he went left, because they all went right with us. I assume he might have gone over to where the command post was or whatever.

That's like the overview. When we first got to the front of the north tower, I was watching people jump. We were actually waiting to see if anybody was coming out of the building on the West Street side to make sure we weren't hit.

Q. When you were on the 23rd floor doing a search, what were the conditions?

A. Fine. Nothing up there.

Q. No smoke? No sign of water flowing anywhere?

A. No, not at all.

Q. The stairwell dry?

A. The stairwell was dry. No water.

Q. Do you remember what stairwell you were in?

A. I believe B.

Q. B?

A. We came down B. From what I understand, it was the only one that was not obstructed. It was a good thing we were going down B. When we were going up, there didn't seem to be that many firemen. I believe we were probably one of the first 15 units on the scene. We got there pretty quick.

I happened to see that thing on CNN from 7 Engine. They were on 21. I didn't see them. I'm pretty sure it was 23 that we were on. There's a lot of doors. We popped a ton of doors, looking for people.

To be honest with you, I remember looking out the window and seeing that command post on West Street, thinking it wasn't a good idea to be there. I've been on six years. When I looked down, it didn't seem like a real bright place to have one. Little things like that stuck out in my mind. When I looked out on that, I felt uncomfortable about that.

We were so in the dark about the other tower going down, we walked out of the north tower and I looked south and I just saw the Marriott Hotel, the corner of it. I remember saying to myself the Marriott took a beating from all the debris falling. You just saw the corner of it from that angle coming back.

So up until the point where the north tower went down, we didn't --

Q. You didn't notice that tower came down at all?

A. We didn't know that at all.

Q. You didn't feel that or hear that?

A. Oh, no, we felt it. We were in the north tower, and we were in the stairwell. When that tower went down, our tower went six feet to the right, six feet to the left, and we felt the debris falling, but it felt like an earthquake. I've never been in a big collapse. I thought --

Q. You didn't know the tower came down?

A. No. What I heard over the radio was that it was a collapse from the 68th through 70th floors. I thought that's what was -- that much of a rumble and everything else, you know. Until afterwards, like I said, I dislocated my shoulder.

So after the collapse, after I left that building and I got back with 110, a doctor from Hazollah came over and put me in a sling. I stood on West Street for like an hour and a half fighting with the lieutenant not to get on the ambulance.

Then the F-16 flew overhead, [redacted]

[redacted] They convinced me to go. I didn't want to go, but I was useless anyway after that. I was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital. I was taken to Chelsea Piers first. They had triage, and they popped my shoulder back in. I was taken to St. Vincent's.

I didn't get back to Brooklyn until 6:00 or 7:00. I was taken to Metrotech. I was with John Feehan. They brought me back to the division, I was with him, and they brought us back to Metrotech. From Metrotech I just walked over to 110 and went to sleep.

That's pretty much it.

Q. Okay, Mike.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STANLEY TROJANOWSKI

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today's date is December 10th. It's 1813 hours this is Battalion Chief Malkin, Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with firefighter Stanley Trojanowski, first grade, Engine 238. We're at the quarters of 238. There's nobody else present in the room. This interview is related to the events of September 11th, and what follows is the interview.

Q. You start out from in quarters. When did you get the run?

A. We received the run a little after 9:00. We responded on the fifth alarm to the initial building that was hit by the airplane. We made our way down Barclay Street. We tried to make a left-hand turn on West Side Highway or West Street, but it was all congested with traffic. So we left the rig on West Street. Actually I stayed with the rig on West, between Barclay and Vesey on West.

The guys responded to the command post which is at Liberty Street and West, and I stayed with the rig. I hooked up, got a little bit of pressure, just enough for an inch and three-quarter, which wasn't even sufficient because it read zero from the hydrant pressure on the gauge. I had a little bit of water. So I tried to be prepared there.

That's it. Later on to see what was going on, I listened to the radio. I saw some people jumping eventually. First I thought it was debris from the airplane that hit or maybe from the building itself, or birds. Once the people got closer, I could see they were actual human beings.

After the collapse of number Two World Trade Center, which I actually thought was a bomb that went off because the north tower was blocking my view, debris and everything started falling, people were running. I hid underneath the scaffolding on Barclay; I'm pretty much sure it was Barclay and West.

Things cleared up a little. I started up the stair and tried to wash off anyone that was still trying to escape from the collapse and tried to help as many people as I could, this and that.

I tried to contact the company. I was pretty much sure I made contact. Someone responded. I remember hearing "Engine 238," but it sort of seemed like a response to my calling them. I heard everyone was supposedly all right, which wasn't true, which might not even been a response to my calls on the handy talky.

The north tower came down, and I got hit with some debris. I remember getting banged up to the divider by the rig which was in the street. I made my way underneath the scaffolding again and just tried to outlast the collapse, which I thought was just another bomb going off.

I'm trying to remember of anyone who's still missing or was missing that I had seen. I can't recall.

Q. Did your unit come back, your guys come back to the rig at some time?

A. After the second collapse I radioed again to see if they're okay. I had a response, or all I caught was part of a response. I thought it was them again. So I started looking around for them. I went to the north overpass.

The response supposedly mentioned they were at the north overpass. I looked around underneath the overpass, because it was partially collapsed on the south side, rigs sticking out on the north side, burning, this and that. No one there.

I was trying to put out some fires. I used about 20 extinguishers. I tried to put out car fires there, and some of the rigs burning. I tried to keep it from escalating even worse just in case we had people trapped in there still alive so they don't burn to death.

The debris on Vesey between Vesey and number Seven World Trade Center, three and a half was the seven, and a couple of civilians helped me stretch that. We had a little bit of water in the three and a half that was stretched from another company north of me on West Street. The tower ladder was in front of Six World Trade Center, I guess, because it was just north of the pedestrian bridge. We couldn't put it out. It was five or six stories high, the debris, I'm going to say.

I helped tried to get a couple of firemen out of the debris and managed to work with other firemen to get one fireman out. He was in cardiac arrest, bleeding. About five surgeons were dropped off in the area that came over to me, asking where they could respond, where they could help, this and that.

I knew the command post on Liberty Street was annihilated or whatever you want to call it. One of them went with the ambulance with an unconscious fireman to the hospital. The other one -- I had no clue where the command post was because there's no way of getting through on the radio.

Q. Right.

A. There were all the important messages, maydays and everything. Unless you have a mayday I guess you don't want to interrupt important transmissions. So I just kept on looking for our guys, which took a while for me to find, a couple hours. I went all around.

Q. You walked around looking for them?

A. Yeah. I went and actually met up with some of the guys from our firehouse on Church Street. The last transmission I heard was north of the pedestrian overpass, the north overpass.

I walked around there for a while, asked the guys that I knew. They said they had seen two of our guys, so I knew at least two of the guys were alive. I just kept on looking. When we met up, we came back to West Street where my rig was just to see what I could do.

There were a lot of things in between that come to my mind now. I helped them stretch a line from the rig north of me to the tower ladder. Everyone was doing what they could. Later on we helped a marine company, because we had no supply of water at all on the west side. So we helped the marine company with three and a half inch hose. We got them off other rigs. We supplied a pumper, I guess it would be, on North End Avenue.

Q. Stretched a line from the marine company onto North End Avenue?

A. North End Avenue. We managed to get a pumper that was still working. We drove it over there. A chauffeur from that company stayed with that. Actually he wasn't the chauffeur that responded with the company, but he was from that company and he was a chauffeur.

So he manned that rig while we helped to stretch a three and a half from that pumper to the other pumper which was closer to West. I was like in-line pumping to get some supply of water.

Q. After the tower two went down, where were you after the first one went down?

A. I was there the whole time.

Q. Still up by Barclay Street?

A. Yeah, at Barclay. That's where our rig was, on West between Vesey and Barclay; actually closer to Barclay, close to the corner.

Q. Right.

A. Because the hydrant I had was around the corner on Barclay.

Q. Did you ever see the command post where Ganci was or the chaplain or anything?

A. No.

Q. After the first building went down, did you see companies, where they were, any particular firemen or companies, where they were working or anything like that? No, you were remote; right? At least a block away?

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay.

A. There were a lot of cops in the area.

Q. Yeah.

A. Scattering.

Q. How did you wrap it up? Total debris, you were hooked up over here, you stretched all these lines? You worked there into the night, would you say? You worked there all day?

A. Yeah, I was there. Yeah, I was there until Wednesday. I found our officer just south of the pedestrian north overpass.

Q. Late in the day when you found him?

A. Yeah. Actually someone else mentioned they found him late in the day. It was dark already.

Q. Did 238 guys get together all at once or in dribs and drabs they got together or did you find each other at the scene?

A. Yeah, we were looking for each other. Actually everybody was looking for each other, from what I heard.

Q. How late did you stay at the scene?

A. Until Wednesday. I got banged around a little when the second one came down, the north one. There was debris flying this and there.

I really don't like to talk about it much.

CHIEF MALKIN: This concludes the interview with fireman Trojanowski, Engine 238. I thank him for the interview. The time is now 1826 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DAVID KELNHOFER

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 10th, 2001. The time is 1815 hours and this is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I am conducting an interview with Firefighter David Kelnhofer from Engine 221, control man on September 11th, 2001. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Okay, Dave. You can start whenever you want.

A. Basically, we came to work that morning. Everything was normal. We saw on the TV that the first tower was hit. We normally go into Manhattan, so we started to get ready, figuring that we were going to get sent there. Then we saw the second plane had hit, and right after we saw that on the TV, we got the ticket over the computer to go to Manhattan. So we grabbed our stuff. Pauley Warhola, who was getting off the night before, had jumped on our rig as an extra man, as a fifth man.

We went down. We were told to go over the Manhattan Bridge. We went over the Manhattan Bridge. We ended up parking the rig on Broadway close to Dey Street, I believe, looking at the map here, and we left the rig with the chauffeur there. Then we walked down

Dey Street, I believe, or Fulton, down Vesey. We were told to report to the command center by the World Financial Center on the opposite side of the Trade Center. We walked completely around and ended up right by the World Financial Center, I believe it was the first one, right in front of the north tower.

We stopped there. We took our gear off to take a break while the captain went up to get an assignment from the command post. He went up to the command post, got an assignment, came back. We were supposed to go into the south tower, I believe. Just as we started to put our gear back on, the first tower collapsed.

We ran down the loading ramp of the building, through the loading ramp, up the opposite side of the building, up the stairway. We tried to get out the stairway in the rear of the building. We were trapped there for a while and then finally it cleared a little bit. We made our way out of the building, across the courtyard and down towards the piers, through the marina and down towards the piers.

Okay. Here is the building here, yes, the second World Financial Center. That's the building there. We made it through there. We ended up on the piers with a group of, I guess, like 100 firemen. We stopped there for a minute. Then we regrouped. We got all our men together because we were separated a little bit.

We started to make our way back down to the basement to recover some gear. We figured we'd go help in the rescue operation. Before we could do that, the second building came down. We ended up going back towards the pier, towards the water. We stood there for a little while, regrouped again.

We left there, went back to the building, made our way into that basement with a search rope, recovered our gear, came back out, and then we were told to go on West Street to the new command post. We stood at West Street for a while for another assignment. That's basically it.

Q. You didn't really see any guys, individuals you remember who might be missing?

A. No, nothing like that. We went in front of the command post that everybody got killed at, but we were waiting. The captain went up to the command post to get the assignment. We kind of waited in the back. So I really didn't see anybody actually at the command post. We were on the other side of the street.

We had picked another guy up. I don't know whether he was lost or came in on his own. I don't remember his name. He stayed with us most of the time, until the collapse, he went to the pier, and then he ended up regrouping with somebody else, I don't know whether his own company or what.

Q. Do you know his company?

A. No. I'm not sure.

Q. Sounds like a guy I talked to the other night from either 211 or 119.

A. No. I would have remembered that. It definitely wasn't a company around the battalion here because I would have remembered that. But he was kind of lost, so he hooked up with us. The captain said "follow me" just so at least someone had a record of him being with somebody. The captain probably would remember. But after the first one collapsed and we ran through the building, we kind of lost him.

Q. Okay.

A. That's about it. We ended up staying at West Street for a while. They didn't have an assignment for us, so we worked our way back to Broadway. We found our rig. We didn't find our chauffeur. We found out later the chauffeur was hurt in the collapse, that he was taken in an ambulance. So we had gotten back on our rig and we ended up doing a four-pumper relay.

Q. Who was your chauffeur?

A. Warren Monroe. He was hurt. He'll be out on three-quarters. He's still in therapy.

We ended up getting our pumper back, getting it operational, and we were doing a four-pumper relay to a tower ladder and a hand line into the Trade Center. They were doing a rescue operation and a tower ladder operation. So we were working both of those. I was working I think it was Squad 44 rig. I'm pretty sure that's what it was. I was working that rig. One of our chauffeurs that came afterwards took our rig, and then there were two other pumpers, 290 and somebody else down the road. Because the hydrants were so far away, we had four pumpers feeding the tower ladder and the rescue hand line.

We stayed there until about 8:00, 9:00 o'clock in the morning, and then we worked our way back to the firehouse. That's about it.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: All right, Dave. Thank you. The time is 1821 hours and this interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOSEPH RAE

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 10th, 2001. The time is 2:30 p.m. I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER RAE: Joseph Rae, Engine 255.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: This is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you could tell us in your own words, Joe, what happened.

A. Myself, Steve Altini from 24 Engine and Craig Monahan from 5 Truck took Craig's truck into the Trade Center. We came through the Battery Tunnel. We drove north on West to about I'd say 90 West is the building where we pulled over and there's green scaffolding there. We pulled over. We got out of the pickup. Steve Altini went to 10 and 10 to get gear. Me and Craig Monahan got out of the rig. We put our gear on and we started walking north on West Street.

As we kept approaching towards the Trade Center, there were all the rigs parked left and right. We went under the first pedestrian bridge, which would be about Liberty Street. We knew they were riding heavy, the engines and trucks, because we were looking for masks and tools and there were no masks. Even the four-man engines didn't have any masks in them, and I knew they were riding heavy because it was change of tours.

When we got about, I would say, the Vista Hotel, right there, we saw the 1st Battalion parked there and we saw I think it was 10 Truck. I'm not too sure. There was a truck parked there. We kept walking. We got to about, I would say, probably around the second pedestrian bridge, over there, where we encountered Rescue 1, the 2nd Battalion, we saw 5 Truck, we saw 3 Truck, I think 1 Engine was there, too, and in front of that was 18 Engine, which was towards the south. That's where we found our masks. We took the masks out of 18 Engine.

We put the masks on. We started walking north to just about the second footbridge, which would be 6 World Trade, and all of a sudden we heard the explosion and the building started to come down and I ran up --

Q. Which tower?

A. 2 World Trade Center started to collapse. We ran and I dove under a rig and I lost sight of Craig Monahan. I don't know where he went. I dove under a rig. I'm not sure what the number was, but I dove under a rig. It came down. I got back up. After about ten minutes, it cleared. There was a hose line in the street. We were hosing each other off.

I met up with Craig Monahan again and he said come on, come on, let's take 5 Truck's rig because there's guys on 6 World Trade, on the Customs Building, there's a little balcony there. So we moved the tiller. He told me turn the wheel all the way to the right. We backed the rig up. We put the rig up. We put the ladder up. There was a couple of Port Authority cops, a couple of firemen, I'm not too sure from where.

We got up the pedestal, and then the second one came down, and once it started to come down, we ran. I ran up north towards about Vesey Street where 12 Truck was parked on the corner of Vesey on, it would be the east side of the street. I dove under there and then the Trade Center, the second one came down. That would be 1 World Trade came down. We climbed out of there and we started walking back to see where all the collapses were.

What I forgot to mention was, when we were walking north before the first collapse, I actually saw that command post. I saw Chief Ganci. There were I'd say about maybe eight people there. I saw Chief Ganci. I saw Chief Feehan. The two of them were there. They were actually moving the command post back a little ways because they were moving it with maybe his driver or something. But they were all standing there and they were trying to push the thing back.

After the first collapse, I didn't see the command post after that. After the second one collapsed, I crawled out of 12 Truck and we started back to see if we could find anybody because it was only me -- I lost sight of Craig Monahan after the second collapse. It was only me and two or three Port Authority cops and a civilian. That was all that was left that I saw from where I was standing, which would be the second footbridge by 6 World Trade, north. There was nobody else standing after that.

So then we went back. We got through, and I met with Ray Reilly, who was a Lieutenant in 248, and we were trying to get up onto 6 World Trade because there was a guy on the top floor of 6 World Trade hanging out the window. So I tried to move 12 Truck. I couldn't get 12 Truck started. It wouldn't move. Then all of a sudden the chauffeur came and moved it, but they still couldn't get it. They still couldn't get him.

So we took the portable ladder off of 24 Engine's rig, put it up there, and we started up, where I met with my captain and a couple of guys from 255 up there, and we took a window and we went inside of 6 World Trade Center. They were carrying out the guy from Rescue 1. I don't know his name. But they were carrying him out. We helped them carry him out, and then we stretched a hand line into 6 World Trade Center to about the 4th floor to knock down some fire. Then we went back down and we were knocking all the car fires down and we were just looking for people.

We scuttled back towards what would be like where the Winter Garden is, over there, and that's where I met up with the rest of the guys from 255 and Ladder 157, and we started digging and we found Chief Ganci and Chief Feehan there. Then after that we just kept just digging for people, you know, for the brothers.

Actually, it all happened so fast. They say it took like 40 minutes between or whatever. Still it was just very fast the way everything went. Then I was there until 9:00, 9:30 at night. I got there about,

I'd say, right before the first collapse, enough time for me to get out of the truck, walk north with my gear on, right under the footbridge, right to about here, to about right in front of the 6 World Financial Center, when No. 2 World Trade Center came down. That was it.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Thanks, Joe. That concludes our interview. It's 2:37 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER CHRISTOPHER FENYO

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 11, 2001. The time is 12:31. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Christopher Fenyo of Engine 35 in the quarters of Engine 35.

Q. Chris, just tell us what you saw on September 11th.

A. This is Firefighter 6th Grade Christopher Fenyo. I live at North Moore and Greenwich Street. On the morning of September 11, I had dropped my girlfriend off at the subway at Chambers and walked home, and at a quarter to 9:00 I was in the elevator of my building when the first plane hit. I didn't hear anything. We face north.

When I got into the apartment, I heard FD going down the West Side Highway. I pretty much figured the only ones that go down the West Side Highway are probably rescue, so I took a look out the window to see if they were going to a job nearby. I saw a few hundred people standing in Greenwich Street pointing up, so I figured there was a job and I'd go buff it out. I still had no idea.

So I took the elevator down. I walked out onto Greenwich Street and I looked up and saw the north tower, this is about maybe five to 9:00. I ran back into my apartment, up ten flights of stairs, grabbed my backup gear and started running down Greenwich Street. At this point there were about ten floors of fire and my first thought was I have no idea how we're going to put this out. I got about three blocks running flat out and I saw a guy on a motorcycle and we both had the same idea. He told me to jump on. He drove me down to Vesey and West.

At the corner of Vesey and West, I went up to the first Battalion Chief I saw and asked him what I should do. He said to stand fast at the manpower pool and he pointed to a spot about 100 feet away from him where there were some men gathering.

As rigs came down the West Side Highway, I kept going up to them asking if there was an extra helmet. I finally got some luck with Engine 39. They were already in the building, so I was with the chauffeur, Arthur, for that time being.

There was an explosion at the top of the Trade Center and a piece of Trade Center flew across the West Side Highway and hit the Financial Center, and Arthur went to hook up with another chauffeur to the Financial Center. His rig was parked in the southbound lanes of the West Side Highway just north of the north pedestrian bridge.

At this point a Battalion Chief looked at me, saw 39 on my helmet and told me to move my rig in front of 1 World Trade Center to supply water to the standpipe. I said yes, sir, but I didn't want to move the rig. Even though I wasn't 39, I probably could have moved the rig. I back-pedaled, looked around the rig to see Arthur. As I was coming back to the front of the rig, the Battalion Chief, I guess he got a little impatient. He jumped in the rig and moved it himself over to in front of 1 World Trade Center.

About 30 seconds later, Arthur came back and looked at me and said where the hell is the rig? I said it's across the street. At that point the rig was essentially in a hailstorm of glass. There were bodies hitting the canopy of the Marriott at that point, I guess, right between 1 and 3 World Trade, or actually that was the canopy of 1 World Trade. He saw the situation, saw we weren't going to be able to hook up without getting hurt, so we ran across the West Side Highway, jumped in the rig, and we pulled it back across the highway to the southbound side just north of the pedestrian bridge, as it was before, only now the rig was facing north.

When I stepped off the rig, probably about 20 after, 25 after 9:00, I ran into George Reese of 80 Engine, who was also off duty. He was responding into his second job when he came up from the subway. He had gone to the quarters at 10 and 10 and gotten gear. At that point I told Arthur that I had met someone from my company and that I was going to go with him. He said be safe, and I went off with George Reese to the command post on the loading dock between 3 and 2 World Financial Center, just underneath the Winter Garden, where Chief Ganci had his command post at the top of the ramp.

We were there for about ten minutes. George went off to talk to the Chiefs to find out what we could do. I was standing there alone. There were several companies down the ramp behind me. One of them I believe was 76 Engine, there was 211 Engine, about 50, 60 men, various states of dress.

About a couple minutes after George came back to me is when the south tower from our perspective exploded from about midway up the building. We all turned and ran into the garage. At that point I banked down to the floor. We were trapped for a little while in there. We went off to the right. There's a big, big loading dock underneath there. You could probably fit three or four tractor-trailers with the doors closed.

We ran off into a dead end, realized it. At that point the smoke had gotten down to the floor and someone, who I found out later was the engine officer from 76 Engine, had put down a search rope. A lot of us got out through the staircase by that rope. At that point we discovered that we were inside a fire staircase with all metal doors, metal frames, opening outward, and none of us had tools. There were a lot of calls down to go get tools. But at some point there was a facilities guy there from the Financial Center who had a key. He let us out on the water side of 2 World Financial in between 2 and the Winter Garden.

At that point there was a lot of confusion. There was heavy ash in the air and on the ground. We made our way over towards the river. At that point there were a lot of guys cut up, some broken bones, a lot of civilians getting on the ferries. We helped some of the civilians get on the ferries.

At that point a debate began to rage because the perception was that the building looked like it had been taken out with charges. We had really no concept of the damage on the east side of 2 World Trade Center at that point, and at that point many people had felt that possibly explosives had taken out 2 World Trade, and officers were gathering companies together and the officers were debating whether or not to go immediately back in or to see what was going to happen with 1 World Trade at that point. The debate ended pretty quickly because 1 World Trade came down.

At that point we ran up through Battery Park, through the north part of Battery Park, where I lost George because I stopped to pick up a civilian who had sprained her ankle and wasn't able to run. At that point, after carrying her up to Chambers Street and the water, her friends assisted her, I believe, onto a ferry at that point. But we were out of the danger of the collapse of 1 World Trade.

I made my way around to Stuyvesant High School. I still wasn't able to find George. I learned later on that he was all right. He had hooked up with another company and they had gone back and started working on Vesey near the Customs Building. I made my way with 211 Engine and a couple of other folks. We essentially just picked gear from here and there, picked up masks, picked up gloves, picked up bottles, tools, and we worked the rest of the night. That's pretty much it.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. The time now is 12:39 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER FRANK MACCHIA

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The time is 10:53 a.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan, safety battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with Frank Macchia, firefighter 1st, from Ladder 43 in the quarters of Ladder 43.

Q. Frank, just explain to us what you saw on September 11.

A. After arriving on the Westside Highway, what I know to be the collapse, after the collapse of the south tower, Ladder 43 and myself were in a position approximately between north of Vesey Street on West Street when Tower No. 1 collapsed.

At that point, once we had donned our masks and retreated to Barclay Street to allow some dust to settle, to make sure that we weren't caught in any debris, and then advanced out to the corner of West Street and Vesey Street.

At that point, myself, Firefighter Suden, Firefighter Regan were ordered by the chief to place into operation a pumper to extinguish Fire Department vehicles and to make searches of those vehicles. We did so and operated that line for approximately 30 to 45 minutes, simultaneously searching any rigs that we extinguished, mostly Fire Department vehicles.

Twelve truck was not on fire. We searched that rig, Haz-Mat, both Haz-Mat rigs, 132 truck and a few rigs that were underneath the pedestrian bridge south of Vesey Street.

Q. Were all the searches negative?

A. All the searches were negative except for a Police Department vehicle where we extricated a Police Department -- I'm guessing a plainclothes detective or plainclothes officer.

At that point, after approximately 45 minutes, myself and Firefighter Long following Lieutenant Rohan, John Colon and Firefighter Frederickson up a ladder onto the mezzanine of World Trade Center No. 6, U.S. Customs building.

We transported stretchers, a power saw and a few Stokes baskets up that ladder by orders of a chief -- at this time, I don't recall his name -- and proceeded to search in that building, and those searches were positive.

We did find a battalion chief and his aide just inside World Trade Center No. 6. At that point, myself and Firefighter Long, along with -- there were a couple of other firemen up there, a chief. We operated with him, searched into the World Trade Center No. 6 building.

Q. The members you found, were they alive or --

A. Dead. Two -- I don't know the names. A chief that we had pulled, that was alive, who was -- looked -- appeared to be disoriented, not -- at the time didn't seem like he was injured in any major way.

We removed him from World Trade Center No. 6, took him to the north end of that mezzanine, where someone had got the bucket of 12 truck into operation, and we put him in the bucket, and he was removed to the street. I recall the name Rappe. I'm not sure if it was him, though. Maybe it's just the chief that I saw there that day, but from the back of his coat that's one of the names I remember.

We then moved into World Trade Center No. 6 with the chief. I believe that Firefighter Long can recall what battalion we were with. We operated with him for about a half an hour, searching in there.

We then left that building on our own back down onto the West Street side, helping extricate and operate more hose lines and doing other searches of rigs for the time frame, I can't recall, and then made our way underneath that pedestrian bridge, the north bridge, underneath that north bridge after we had spent, I guess, between operating the line and searching that World Trade Center No. 6, has to have been almost two hours gone by now, listening, hearing the Ladder 6 Maydays throughout, went back down via the 12 truck basket down to the street underneath the foot bridge and tried to make our way up to where the rest of our members were operating in that separate stairwell.

And that's what we did the entire day.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Thanks a lot, Frank, for all your help.

The time now is 10:58, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DEAN NELIGAN

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 11, 2001. The time is 12:07 p.m. I'm Chief Robert Burns, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER NELIGAN: Firefighter Dean Neligan, Engine 262.

Q. This is in regards to the events of September 11, 2001.

If you would, Dean, just tell us in your own words what happened that day.

A. Well, about at 8:45 that morning, the first plane hit the trade center, which came on the TV. We were all in the kitchen. We being located in Long Island City, we knew we'd be going over to Manhattan, whether to the trade center or relocation, so we more or less got ready to go.

I believe at 9:02 we got a ticket in, which sent us to the entrance to the Midtown Tunnel, so we proceeded to the Midtown Tunnel.

In the process of going to the Midtown Tunnel, the second plane hit, which we were not aware of. There was no communication on the rig of a second plane hitting the second tower.

We actually were at our staging area for what seemed to be 30 to 40 minutes waiting for them to close down the Midtown Tunnel and the Westside Highway, apparently set up a route for us to proceed through. We were probably about a dozen rigs, all from the Long Island City area.

As we started going through -- as we actually staged there, then we heard word that the Pentagon was hit, and there was a second plane that hit the second tower.

As we started through the tunnel, is apparently when the first tower came down, because we heard a chauffeur in his rig saying there's been a collapse. He was stuck in his rig. He didn't say it was the tower that came down. I assumed it was some sort of facade that came down, not realizing it was the whole tower.

We then proceeded to go through the tunnel, made our way to the Westside Highway, one rig after the other. We parked on the Westside Highway. We proceeded down the Westside Highway towards the towers, not knowing the first tower was down.

We made it to Vesey and West and more or less paused there looking for some sort of direction, because there was no command post. There was nobody more or less giving directions on where to go, what to do.

At that point, I looked up. I saw the second tower. I said to one of the brothers with me, that it's so smoky, you can't even see the first tower, not even knowing the first tower was down to the ground.

From our angle, the second tower was closest to us, so between the tower being behind that one and the smoke, I just assumed you couldn't see it from the smoke.

As we were staged at Vesey and West is when the second tower began to come down. At that point, I thought it was just the top of the building coming down, the antenna. Didn't make a move initially. Then everybody started making a move for safety. I proceeded to follow.

I was able to duck in behind an ESU unit, which was about 20 or 30 yards back down the Westside Highway, got behind that, was involved in the coverage and the darkness, which seemed about five to six, seven minutes, and then the area cleared.

There was a parking lot on the right of us that was about 20 cars on fire. We stretched a line off of 220's rig, which was parked right there and proceeded to operate trying to put out the car fires because of the tremendous amount of black smoke that was coming back towards us at the Westside Highway.

We operated there for about an hour, hour-and-a-half with whatever little water we could get and no tools.

At that point, we then proceeded back to our rig, which was back at the walkway further east behind us, and then more or less we just stayed there for many hours waiting for instructions.

Q. When you were there, when the second tower came down, did you see any rigs that you could identify or any people?

A. Not offhand. There were rigs parked one after the other along the Westside Highway, and where I ducked in was near this ESU unit, police vehicle, and then 220's rig happened to be there that we could stretch a line off.

First I found my officer. Then we proceeded to find two other members from our unit, which were a little further back, and then we started operating at the -- in the lot with the car fires.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Thanks, Dean. That concludes our interview. It's 2:12 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM VAN NAME

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is December 11, 2001. The time is 11:57, and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the safety battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with William VanName, firefighter 1st, from Engine 35, and the interview is taking place in the quarters of Engine 35.

Q. William, please tell us the events of September 11 as you recall them.

A. On September 11, we were at educational day at Randall's Island. The entire company was out of service.

We were notified that a plane hit the World Trade Center, to stand by, and then the instructor came in and said another plane had hit the tower. We are on total recall. Go back to your company and man your rigs.

So we did. We got back to 35 engine's quarters. We were told to wait there for six engines to arrive. We were the staging area for six engines, some from the Bronx and some from north Manhattan. Five engines showed. We were waiting for 83 engine, which didn't show up. They were on their way down West Street, halfway down at 50 something street. The dispatcher returned them to our quarters when they arrived here.

Then we all went in a convoy down West Street to the World Trade Center. Driving down West Street, we observed the towers, both on fire. Both were still standing. By the time we arrived down the end of West Street, around Chambers or so, one tower had collapsed. I believe it was --

Q. The south tower?

A. -- the south tower. We gave a 1084. We got up to -- we were on West Street between Vesey and Murray, where the rig was positioned. We took all our gear. Everybody that was on the rig -- there was five men on the rig and two on the back step at that time.

We manned all our gear. We went down. We started walking down West Street towards the World Trade Center. When we got to between Vesey and the pedestrian overpass, the north pedestrian overpass, we heard a fantastic rumble. Everybody looked up, and as we observed it, the second tower started to collapse.

The time frame of that, I'm not sure. It was probably between 10:10 and 10:30, somewhere around there.

As we observed the tower falling, most people stood there and watched for a couple of seconds, and then as the cloud of smoke and the debris started coming at us, we all dropped our equipment and gear and we ran for shelter down West Street north on West Street.

We ended up in the high school on the west side. We stayed there for a few moments until we could get our company together and the lieutenant can make sure he had the roll call and everybody was present.

We started heading down towards World Trade Center again, and we had assisted and helped with EMS and helped the brothers -- police, firemen, civilians -- to the ambulances and take them out of the immediate area.

At that time we were separated. Our company was separated. I ended up staying with Firefighter Jim Powers. He was overcome by the smoke cloud and debris. He went down. He became light-headed, and he fainted. I got EMS to assist there. They treated him, and they felt he should go to the hospital.

I was with him at that time. We got on a bus. We went to St. Vincent's. He was admitted. We stayed there for two hours under observation. He was released. We immediately came back to where our rig was positioned on West Street, and we found our company, and after that the lieutenant said we were on standby.

I was notified that our two chiefs from the 12th Battalion were missing, and -- could you stop it for a minute, please?

(Recess taken.)

A. Also while we were responding down West Street to the World Trade Center, we heard a Mayday given by, I believe, an engine company chauffeur that was trapped in the collapse inside the rig.

As we arrived at the staging area, we also saw the dust cloud and the debris that had already been from the first tower on the ground. That's it.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: All right, thank you very much. That's fine.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT ROBERT DORRITIE

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 11, 2001. The time is 9:56 a.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Robert Dorritie, Engine 53, in the quarters of Engine 53.

Q. Robert, just tell us what you know about the events of September 11th.

A. Well, I'll just start from the beginning, I guess. We were sitting here watching the television, and we saw the first plane hit. At that time I said, oh, we'll be going. We kind of got our gear together and thrown on the rig.

The second plane hit, and I guess about two or three minutes afterwards, about 9:09, is when we had the alarm come in on the second fifth alarm. We were the fourth due engine on the second fifth alarm.

So we took off right away. We cut through the park, got over to Twelfth Avenue. Twelfth Avenue had already been closed by the New York City Police Department. We were down in the World Trade Center -- I gave a 1084 about 9:18. So it only took us about nine minutes to get down there.

When we got down there, I went over to the command post, which was located across the street from the north tower, we reported in to the command post. At that time we were ordered to go back by a Captain Supek, I believe his name was. He orders us to go back onto West Street and to remove two rigs that were blocking West Street. So we ran back and we moved the two rigs.

We came back again to the command post. At that time we received our orders to go into the south tower. They said start making your way up on the south tower, tower number two. I turned around, looked for my men, and they were in front of who I believe was a Franciscan priest. He was giving them absolution, and they were accepting absolution from him.

I said, "Okay, guys, we've got to get going." I don't know if it was Father Judge or not; it could have been. He went towards the north tower at that time and started walking across the street. I kind of cut him off at the pass and said, "What about me, Father?" He said, "It includes everybody. Absolution includes everybody here."

I got my guys and started walking across West Street. I guess we got about three-quarters of the way across when we were deciding which way to go into the south tower. That's when I looked up, and the tower started coming down, which at the time I said I thought it was a secondary device. I had warned the guys about secondary devices on the way down and to be careful of that.

So when I originally saw it -- and then I realized the building was coming down. We ran back across the street and into the garage, the parking garage, underneath Two World Financial Center, the Merrill Lynch building, I guess. We ran in there.

Eventually there was a little confusion down there, but we found our way out the back. We sent a search line, a search rope, up from there, a couple of the companies, and we ran it back out to the front of the building. Then I went back into the building, back through the World Trade Center.

I came out, and that's when I saw Chief Cassano there. I saw I believe it was Chief Ganci on the corner. That's when I heard the transmission of a mayday from Ladder 21. I don't know who it was. Couldn't get through. But I heard the transmission from Ladder 21.

At that time after hearing that transmission, I decided to go back, get my men, who I left back over here behind the Winter Garden area, in that parking area back there, because I thought that was a good place for that, and there was a lot of people starting to gather.

As I came back through the garage, I didn't even know I was outside for a while, it was so dark. So I came back through the garage again, got some of my guys. When I told them that there were guys out front yet and that they were making their way north and that I was afraid the pedestrian bridge was going to collapse, being that I also thought the north tower was going to collapse.

So one of the guys, Louis Giaconelli, says, "No, no, don't you go back in. I'll go back in and see if I can get anybody to come back that way." He went in there, and as guys came out of the parking garage, we directed them back around North Street onto Vesey Street. We stayed here, me and Firefighter Ed Cachia, stayed here.

Q. Here where? In the rear?

A. In the rear of the Two World Financial Center. As people came out of the Winter Garden, we directed them around here. They also were coming around on the outside. From Two World Trade Center, guys were coming from this side. I saw Captain Yakimovich, Pete came around this side, a couple other guys. I tried to get information on who was trapped and where they were trapped.

I don't really remember that much, but Louis ran into the building then to see if he could get more guys out this way.

Q. Out of the garage?

A. Out of the garage, and outside the front of the building, because a lot of guys did survive the first collapse, they didn't go into the parking garage but they went north towards the pedestrian way.

But I was arguing to a couple people out there that I thought the best way out was this way through the rear of the World Financial Center, back through the rear and out through this way, because we had the protection of the building and also it seemed to be a safe area underneath the parking garage out in the back because it was so substantial.

I figured if this tower collapses -- this tower is going to collapse, and the best place for us to get away from this as quickly as possible, being that if we went north on West Street we would wind up at the pedestrian bridge. So I decided not to.

Louis Giaconelli is back now in Winter Garden and in that area. Myself and Eddie Cachia are back here. There was nobody else coming out. At that moment I said to Eddie, "We've got to get out of here because this building is going to come down." Within 30 seconds of me saying that, the building comes down.

Me and Eddie Cachia run back here along the benches over here and take cover behind these benches.

Q. Near the water?

A. Yeah, near the water. We ran back here, hid behind the benches. It gets pretty cloudy, but it's not too bad back there.

After that collapse, now I'm worried about Louis Giaconelli, who I had left in the building. So we get out and we start making our way back into Two World Financial Center, and we find Louis Giaconelli bringing three or four people out. So he guided three or four people out. He also mask shared with somebody.

I said, "All right, Louis, let's get ourselves together and whoever else we have here and let's get ourselves out of harm's way." And we walked along North Street to Vesey Street, and we stayed there. Once I got all my guys together again, Kevin McGovern, Eddie Cachia, Louis Giaconelli and Mike Catalano, we all got together. I left a couple guys there.

We made our way back into the south tower after the collapse. Really I was trying to hone in on Ladder 21, since they're the only ones

I really heard. But I really couldn't get through on the radio. Every time you got some kind of mayday or you thought a mayday, it was covered up by somebody else trying to get through and you really couldn't get through. It was very confusing. I didn't like the radios at all at the time.

We just walked around on the rubble that day and tried to see what we could do. Basically that's what happened.

Q. Do you have anything else to add?

A. I don't think so, no.

Q. Well, thanks a lot, Robert.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STEVEN KLEE

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is December 10, 2001, and the time is 3:15 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Steven Klee, firefighter first from Ladder 22. We're in the quarters of Engine 76 to conduct this interview.

Q. Steve, please tell me what you remember from September 11th.

A. I remember responding. I was the chauffeur of 22. I got to the scene. I pulled in. I drove down Columbus Avenue down to 24th, then to West Side Highway. West Side Highway we took all the way down. I remember pulling in behind 25 Truck. Then I remember 2 Truck pulling in behind us.

We got off the rig, grabbed our equipment, gear, cylinders, whatever, and started walking towards the towers, initially walked past the command post and then walked back to the command post, stood at the command post I believe which was across from one for about maybe five minutes. Then the lieutenant said, "All right, we're going in."

We walked down West Street on I guess it would be the -- that would be West; right? Yeah, west side of West Street down to I guess the south pedestrian bridge, walked underneath that across and shimmied our way -- or not shimmied. How would I describe that? Ran into the hotel.

In the hotel we were told we were going to get our orders from there. The lieutenant said take a blow, just relax, take our stuff off. We took our stuff off. Probably about maybe another five minutes after that, we got geared up and he said, "All right, we're going." I didn't ask the officer exactly where we were going. We just started walking.

We headed towards tower one or into the hotel into tower one, passed Deputy Chief Galvin on the way in. He was with somebody else. I don't really remember the chiefs. He just told us we were going to the 75th floor.

We got into tower one, made the turn into tower one started heading I guess either towards the elevators or the escalator. That's when we heard a rumbling. I dove for a wall and it got pitch-black.

I just basically rode it out until after the sound and -- how would you describe that one? After the (inaudible) stopped. I don't know what the heck happened then, how best to describe it. I got up. I thought I was by myself, and I then just started calling out for the rest of the company.

I found the four other guys. We got out towards the entrance of one onto West Street. We couldn't find the lieutenant, so I told the four of them if they go outside I'll go back in and look for the lieutenant.

Four of the guys went out. I came back in to look for the lieutenant. I was searching for him. I was trying to get him on the radio. I couldn't get anybody on the radio. I kept going back and forth. I was grabbing civilians, bringing them to the front, going back in, looking around, bringing civilians back out.

I was bringing some civilians out, and that's when debris started falling and hitting the ground. I brought them back in, gave an urgent, saying I need help in getting the civilians out, because I couldn't go out the hotel. There was no hotel entrance anymore. I couldn't go out through the food mall or whatever because that was completely caved in.

I was giving an urgent. Somebody answered me. I told them what it was, and then they didn't answer, they didn't come back. All of a sudden I went back to the main entrance and I saw a bunch of firemen. So I figured they came in to help me, but it wasn't that. They were coming from upstairs.

I asked did they see my lieutenant. They said no. That company I remember was actually 7 Engine, I believe. They were coming down. I think they were missing their control man at the time.

I searched for the lieutenant, looked under the debris and everything, couldn't find him. I said he must be out because I should have been able to see him.

That's when I got out. I believe I remember seeing Feehan. I believe he was by the entrance of one. I walked across the street to a command post, which when I got there, there really was nobody there anymore.

I remember talking to a four-star chief, telling him what happened. All he kept telling me was we're going north, we're going north. I said, "I can't find my lieutenant. I'm 22 chauffeur." I said, "I can't find my lieutenant." He said, "We're going north. I'm sending everybody north." So I said all right.

That's when I left and I started walking up the street, trying to find the rendezvous or whatever what the heck would you call it? What do you call it?

Q. The staging area?

A. Staging area. I went up there. I spoke to a couple of chiefs up on West Side Highway and West Street. They said, yeah, guys are going to the water.

So I went back down to Vesey, tried to get to the water. I guess I got behind the American Express building. That's when one came down. After everything calmed down from that and I finally made it to the water, talked to the field comm., told him who I was missing. Our can man showed up there. So then I only had to find four more guys.

I asked them have you seen the lieutenant? I went to West Street. I walked up. That's basically where I saw the rest of our guys there.

Q. Before the second tower came down, did you notice anything, a sign that it might be coming down or anything like that or did you hear anybody give any warning on the radios or anything like that?

A. No, I was just trying to find out -- no, there was no -- it was still dusty out there, and you really couldn't see. I didn't even realize that two came down. I thought another bomb or a plane hit the building. That's what I thought it was. When I got out, debris and paper was all over. Like I said, I didn't realize what happened until after one came down and I put together what happened when we were in one lobby.

Q. Okay. That's it.

A. I think so, yeah. Quick and easy.

Q. Thank you, Steve. I appreciate your cooperation.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEVIN McGOVERN

Interview Date: December 11, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time is 10:24 a.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the New York City department Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Kevin McGovern, firefighter first from Engine 53, in the quarters of Engine 53.

Q. Kevin, please tell us the events of September 11th as you remember them.

A. I was working my second day tour. We were in the kitchen, and we saw the first plane, watching TV. Of course the news came on that a plane had hit one of the towers of the World Trade Center. So we were watching TV, monitoring the radio.

Then there was another explosion in the other tower. That's when we got called down there. It was the second fifth alarm when the second plane hit, and we got sent down to the Trade Center. We were assigned to tower two, which was the south tower of the World Trade Center.

We got down there pretty fast. It must have taken only ten minutes to get there. Once we got to the West Side Highway, it was kind of empty and we just flew right down there. We parked the rig on West Street approximately between Murray and Vesey.

Then we walked down to where the command post was set up, which was in front of an underground garage entrance in front of Two World Financial Center. So we reported in to the command post on West Street and kind of just waited there, awaiting our orders.

We were just standing there watching people jump out of the -- we were opposite the north tower, so we just kind of stood there. There was a lot of jumpers coming from the north tower on the West Street side.

I really don't know how long we were there, maybe ten minutes. To be honest with you, I couldn't even recall what other companies were around us, but there were several other companies with us, mostly engine companies.

With all the jumpers and stuff, I just put my head down and stopped watching the jumpers. I waited there, waiting to see what they were going to do with us.

A chief came over to my lieutenant,

Lieutenant Dorritie, and told us to move some rigs to make a lane for ambulances coming south on West Street. He wanted us to go back north on West Street, back towards where we had our rigs, and just ensure that there was a lane for ambulances to get down West Street.

So he said leave all our equipment there at the command post, which we did. We left our hoses, took our masks off, and walked north on West Street. We only had needed to move I think two rigs, because they were blocking the lane. It really didn't take long. It took maybe 15 minutes to take care of that. We made the lane for the ambulances, and then we headed back towards the command post.

We were walking south on West Street back to the command post. Like I said, I had my head down again. All of a sudden I heard like a tremendous thunder. I looked up, and all of a sudden people were just running towards me. I looked up and, sure enough, the south tower was collapsing. It was like a big, huge wave coming at us.

At this point we were right before the command post. I was only a few yards in front of the command post, but there was a fence between the area for the Winter Garden atrium and where the command post was. Lieutenant Dorritie was in front of me and two firefighters, Firefighter Cachia and Firefighter Giaconelli, were in front of me. Two other firefighters from my company were behind me, Firefighter Catalano and Firefighter Schofield. They were two new guys on rotation in the firehouse.

When I saw the thing collapse and people running towards me, I just turned and looked for the quickest place to get cover. Initially I thought of ducking under the pedestrian bridge that goes over West Street on the north side, but I decided that wasn't going to be safe.

So I just ran right into the Winter Garden atrium. A lot of people were running in that way. So I kind of just ran in there. I ran inside and realized it was an atrium, so I had to get out of there in case some debris had come through the atrium.

So we went through the atrium and made a right, once we got inside which there was -- so now we're heading north within this building. There was an exit that led out to Vesey Street. This is where I ran into Firefighter Catalano, who is one of the guys that was walking behind me, and I was asking him did he see Firefighter Schofield. He said no. I was worried about Schofield.

We came out onto Vesey Street, and we were walking around Vesey Street. A bunch of other firemen, a bunch of civilians had gone the same route, through the Winter Garden and made a right and north onto Vesey Street.

So there were a bunch of ambulances lined up on Vesey Street, and me and Mike were walking west of Vesey, away from the cloud on West Street, and we noticed Schofield in one of the ambulances.

We found out how he was doing. He was hyperventilating. He was taking oxygen inside the ambulance. We stayed with him for a while, made sure he was all right. He said he was feeling better after he took some oxygen. He said he was going to come with us. So he got out of the ambulance and walked with us west on Vesey.

We came out onto North End Avenue. Here I ran into another fireman that was covered in soot, and we stayed with him. He was choking on I guess the dust and stuff. He almost sounded like a cat with a hairball. He was just trying to get the stuff out, clear his own throat. I stayed with him and was encouraging him to cough. He was able to get some air, he was saying, but he was trying to get this stuff out of his throat.

We stayed with him, and we led him to an ambulance on North End Avenue. I told him to try and get some oxygen. We kind of left him with an ambulance on North End Avenue.

There was another ambulance there. There was an EMT inside the ambulance, and she was really kind of freaking out. She was very emotional. We stayed with her, calmed her down, made sure she got some oxygen.

There was a big cloud on West Street, so we decided to go north on North End Avenue and go up a block and around. We were going to walk back down West Street, approach it from the north. So we went up North End Avenue and made a right on Murray street.

I was with the two rotation guys, Mike Catalano and Dan Schofield. They were pretty shook up. Dan was still kind of breathing heavy and hyperventilating a little bit. He said he needed to call his wife. He called his wife. We ended up near Stuyvesant High School. I think that's on Murray Street. So he made a call.

I said, "Okay, I'm going to go back down." They were kind of hesitant, so I said, "Look, you guys stay up here at Stuyvesant High School. I'm going to head back down."

I started walking south on West Street again. I probably got just before Vesey Street when the north tower collapsed. Again, I just turned around and looked to see a place where I could get some cover. There was a big open lot between Murray and Vesey, so that was all wide open.

So I ran north back up towards Stuyvesant High School. Basically I got to the high school just as the cloud hit. I went inside the high school. I was in there only about a minute, kind of let the cloud pass, gave it about a minute.

I didn't run into the two firemen, Catalano and Schofield, again. I assumed they were safe inside the high school, Stuyvesant High School, because that's where I had left them, right outside. I just assumed they got some cover inside, which they did, I found out later.

So I stayed in the high school about a minute, let the cloud pass, the initial cloud. I left the high school. I went back onto West Street, started walking south again. There was a big cloud out there. Everything was covered in dust. I just headed south on West Street again through all this debris, past all the rigs. I just made my way south again back towards the site, back towards the Trade Center.

There wasn't really a lot of people around. It was kind of eerie. It was almost like a ghost town with the cloud and everything. I guess I got to Vesey Street and I ran into some other guys. I ran into a guy from 43 Truck. He said that he had seen my lieutenant on Vesey, towards the water, towards North End Avenue.

So I walked up there. I wanted to let my officer know. We had tried earlier to get through on the radio to notify my officer that we were all together, me and the two other guys, and that we were safe up on North End Avenue, but we couldn't get through.

Like I said, one of the guys from 43 Truck said my officer was out on Vesey Street. Somebody had to move that rig, which was actually a pretty good move. From where the rig was on West Street, somebody had taken it down Vesey all the way down to the water.

Q. That was your rig?

A. Yeah, our rig.

By the time I got down there, I looked for my officer, who I ended up running into, to let him know we were all safe. I let him know the two other guys were up by Stuyvesant High School, they were okay. So we regrouped by where our rig was, by the water on Vesey Street.

I think it was the marine unit, Firefighter, that had pulled up to a pier there and stretched a line to feed our rig with water.

So we regrouped there.

I think at that point -- a lot of this is murky. Sometimes I think I don't know what came first. I think at that point we went up North End Avenue. We went up to Stuyvesant High School to hook up with the two other guys. That's basically where a staging area was starting to form up there, on West Street.

So myself, the lieutenant, the two other guys that the lieutenant was with, I had found out that they had ran through the garage where the command post was. Since we were walking behind them, our quickest route was to run through the Winter Garden. So we got separated that way.

Like I said, there was this fence there between the Winter Garden and where the garage was. They were south of the fence, so they ran through the garage. We were north of the fence, so our best route was through the Winter Garden. That's how we got separated.

As I said, I regrouped with the lieutenant and the two guys that ran through the garage on Vesey near where our rig was. We walked up to Stuyvesant, hooked up with the other guys, stayed at the staging area for a while.

Basically we just worked our way south again on West Street. I think we went back to the rig once and then we walked over to the site and started a search at that point.

We were searching around the debris field that ended up on West Street opposite the north tower. We were searching around in there. At that time Seven World Trade Center was burning and was in danger of collapsing. After a while the lieutenant said, "Let's move, let's get out of here, let's take a break."

Actually I think at that point just as we were leaving, guys -- I don't know who it was. I guess it was a chief was saying clear the area, because they were worried about number Seven World Trade Center coming down and burying guys who were digging.

So we basically went back to the rig, because they were clearing that area out. It took about three hours for Seven World Trade Center to actually come down. So we were off to the side.

There was a whole bunch of firemen on Vesey Street, and that's where we were, on Vesey, just waiting to go back in and start searching again. But that didn't come for a few hours. It didn't come until after Seven World Trade Center had come down.

Then we went back, did a little more searching, and then we ended up taking up. I think we took up around 9, 9:30 at night and caught a ride back to the firehouse.

Q. Did you hear any maydays before the collapse or right after the collapse, either collapse?

A. Not really. I didn't have a radio. Like I said, everything was kind of foggy. It was kind of a weird scene. So there may have been maydays. Probably not having a radio I didn't take notice of them. I didn't hear any radio traffic at all, basically.

Q. Is there anything else?

A. No, that's it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RICHARD BOERI

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time is 2:05 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Richard Boeri of Engine 44.

Q. Richard, just explain in your own words what happened on September 11th.

A. I was minimum manning that day, overtime. At 9:08 the call came in. I was control man. We ended up going out of quarters, going down Second Avenue down to about 59th Street, across the West Side Highway and down.

I believe we parked the rig approximately, I think it was Murray Street or Barclay and West, and we proceeded to go down to the command post, which was I believe across from One World Trade Center or the north tower.

I think we were there for about five minutes. They said, "Put your gear down. You're going to walk up about 80 flights of stairs," because the elevators were out. So we put our masks down, rollups and everything.

I think we saw like 18 people jump.

Then one of the officers there said, "Turn around, concentrate on who you can save. You can't save those people anymore." I don't recall who that was.

There was a chaplain behind us. It wasn't Father Judge, but one of the guys knew him. He said a little prayer for us.

So I went through the guys from there. I saw the chief's aide, and I talked to him for a little bit. It had to be about 20 minutes later when they sent us down to approximately Cedar Street and West Street. They were there, two or three rigs blocking the West Side Highway coming from the south. So we were sent with 53 Engine to move those rigs out of the way.

Myself, my whole company, Matt Shannon, Bobby Reeg, the covering officer, and Eddie Kennedy proceeded to walk down. Looking over, I saw 65 Engine hooked up to the hotel, I believe, or the south tower. I don't remember which one because there's a high pressure pump.

The officer saw there were several small fires at the foot of the pedestrian bridge right there at Liberty and West. So our initial thing was myself and Eddie Kennedy would move the rig away from West Street to let the companies come up from the south. Also they told us to bring ambulances up Washington Street, which is on the south side of the south tower there.

Bobby Reeg, the nozzle man, he was checking rigs up the West Side Highway for an extinguisher for the car fire along with Matt Shannon. So they were looking I guess -- right in front of the Vista Hotel.

We had our backs to the tower and under that pedestrian bridge walking south, myself, Eddie Kennedy and the officer, when you heard the crackling. You looked up and you saw the one floor explode on itself and the top start to slide.

At that point Eddie just told me to run, and we just dropped everything and ran south towards Albany Street. Now, we ran I guess on the east side of West Side Highway -- we ran across to -- the east side, we ran to the west side of that highway, down towards Albany.

At the southwest corner there were a few parked cars. I saw Eddie Kennedy lose his helmet and dive under a car. I saw a building -- I believe it's at the corner of West and Albany -- and I was going to try to go for the building.

Once all the debris and everything caught up, I was pushed over a four foot fence. The next thing, I woke up, I was spitting everything out of my mouth, and it was just black, silent.

When I came to, I heard a civilian yelling on my left. So I found my helmet next to me, picked myself up. I found the civilian, who was over by the building. Make it Park Place, I guess? I can't tell what building that is. Anyway, it's right on Albany and West Street.

So I walked the civilian back. I walked back to where my company was. Where I last knew, Albany and West, where I found the officer and Eddie Kennedy. I passed the civilian off to someone else who was there.

I was with Eddie Kennedy and the officer when Dr. Kelly showed up, her and another guy I believe from 4 Truck, I want to say. I'm not sure. I had cut my head. My whole face was full of blood. I was talking to them. I was okay.

We were trying to radio Matt Shannon, who was our backup man. He had the radio. He said he knew where Bobby Reeg was, because Matt was just going for the river up by the marina there.

Dr. Kelly said, "Come with me. We'll wash you up. You're hurt." So I told the officer I'm going with him, which we proceeded to go to Albany Street, I guess, half a block to a parking garage, which is in the Hudson View West, in the Hudson Tower here.

In there they had a guy on the back board, Kevin Shea, who I guess he was hurt before the collapse because there was something -- they had him on a back board and everything.

I was there when they went to try to find a gurney or stretcher to get him to an ambulance, because they told us the whole southern section you couldn't get to an ambulance or anything.

I was there for a while with him, when you heard the rumbling again. That's when the north tower came down. We stayed in the garage. There was another chief there. He covered Kevin Shea when all the dust came into the whole garage, all the debris and everything, all the dust didn't get into his spot because he was all strapped down. He had a dislocated hip or something. He kept repeating the same questions about 15 times over and over.

We knew we had to get him out. We got to 4 Truck on I guess it was West End Avenue over here one block west of West Side Highway. They got an ambulance, which we threw him in the ambulance and we drove straight toward West Street.

(Interruption.)

A. So we got the ambulance, and we drove straight west on Albany Street all the way to the river. We broke through the chain fence on the esplanade there where the police boat pulled up. At that point is where we proceeded to hand Kevin over on the back board over the side railing and into a police boat.

A few minutes later I ended up going on a police boat also across to Jersey to Hoboken, where I was there until about 11:00 at night because they wouldn't let us back. While we were there, we made phone calls back and found out where everybody was from our point of view.

In general that's it.

Q. Thank you very much, Rich.

EMT-D RALPH RAMOS

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MS. BASTEDENBECK: December 12, 2001. The time now is 1556 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department. I'm at EMS Battalion 4 conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and your current unit.

A. My name is Ralph Ramos, EMT-D, assigned to 01 Charlie Tour 2, Battalion 4.

Q. MR. RAMOS, I would ask you if you can recount the events of September 11, 2001. Were you working that day?

A. Yes, I was working. I started at 0600 that morning. I was on my way back to my 89, which is on Duane and Church Street. We were returning back there from Battalion 4 and we were going up, I believe it's Pearl Street, and my partner Alex Loutsky and I, we witnessed the first plane hit the first tower. Saw it flying low and we thought, that plane's flying kind of low, and then it hit the building and we went over the radio and we told central that we had witnessed a plane hitting the building, and at first she didn't believe us, but then other units started saying they saw the same thing and then we proceeded straight over to the Trade Center.

We went down West Street and parked at West and Liberty. There was -- Lieutenant D'Avila was there. There were several other units already on the scene and there was a wave of people running out of the building, running towards us. Stopped like about maybe 4 people, put them into our vehicle and I was treating them and in the process of doing that, the second plane hit right over top of us and all the debris started falling down on top of us.

So we got in our vehicle. At that time everybody left the vehicle and ran down West Street. Everybody started running in different directions. We got into our vehicle and we followed Lieutenant D'Avila around to the east side of the building, which was Church Street and Dey Street and we parked on that corner there. He parked in front of us.

On that side people were running out also, so we set up a triage and treatment in front of the hotel Millennium, which is right cross the street from them and we started treating patients as they were coming out. We stayed there for a while. Lieutenant D'Avila lost his voice, so he had asked me to stay next to him to sort of be his voice as far as giving the orders.

We were treating people and triaging and trying to send people out from that location. The vehicle, my vehicle, 219, stayed on the corner of Church and Dey, so see if they needed that for transport. It stayed there. In the process of treating and organizing the people getting out of there, all of a sudden we heard the rumble of the first tower, and it was just, you know, really just chaotic on the corner that we were at. We treated as many people as we could and got a lot of the people out of there via private ambulances and Fire Department ambulances that were on the scene.

When the first tower started coming down, I got separated from Lieutenant D'Avila and my partner Alex. I started running towards -- we were on the corner close to Dey Street and Fulton Street, so I started running towards Fulton Street to try to get out of harms way, but by that time it was too late, because the building had came down. The dust cloud covered me and I couldn't see and I couldn't breathe.

Q. Do you know where you were then?

A. At that moment, at first the panic, I got disoriented from the panic, but I have worked this area for about a year and my unit has always been in that area. I sort of closed my eyes and then made a map in my head of what I last saw and then using that as a guide in my head and feeling with my hands, I was able to find the building and just like patted alongside of the building until I got down Fulton Street.

I made it as far as Broadway and I went into the bank that's on the corner, the left hand side of Fulton and Broadway. I think it's a Chase bank. I made it into the lobby of that building. Helped some people who were in there who had stuff in their eyes and stuff like that. Pouring water on it, get the dirt out of their eyes, like that. Tried to calm some people down. People who were in that building were trying to leave that building. You couldn't see outside.

So I was trying to keep them -- blocking the doors, trying to keep them inside. It was me and another fireman, it was just us two that made it into that building. We kept everybody inside, then I ran into one of the EMS doctors, Fire Department doctors. I forgot his name. We ran into him and he said you know, just try to take care of as many people as you can in here, just flushing their eyes and stuff like that.

Did that and then it cleared up enough outside, I realized that I left -- my partner was missing and Lieutenant D'Avila was missing. I was getting ready to head out and I ran into Lieutenant D'Avila. He had made it to the bank as well. We went back down Fulton Street back to the front of the building to look for my partner.

So Lieutenant Melarango, who was there also, and Amy, Lieutenant Monroe. We went down to try to find them and see how many people we could help. We went back down and it was like a ghost town down there. We didn't see anybody, people laying around and stuff, but as far as walking around, there really wasn't anybody.

My vehicle exploded. I was heading over to my vehicle to get -- to use the radio, because I had lost my HIP radio. I went inside my vehicle to get on my vehicle radio, but by the time I went over there, the vehicle exploded. Then we just continued to look around see, you know, how many people we could find. It is a little bit of a blur. I don't recall how many people we might have run into.

At that time, then, in the process of doing that, we heard another loud rumble and it was the second tower coming down. We both started -- you know, we hugged, locked arms. Both started running, but we didn't make it too far. Again, we got covered with the cloud and everything got black again. We couldn't breathe and we were panicking. Again, I closed my eyes and mapped my way out of there and made it to a Subway sandwich shop that's on Fulton Street and banged on the glass. They didn't want to let us in. We saw people in the back. I was waiting for someone to open the door, we were banging on the glass. We couldn't breathe any more. Everything was fading fast. Finally one of the people came and opened the door and we went in.

There was only about 12 people in the store. They were all panicking and stuff like that. When they saw us, they kind of calmed down. We wet towels and wrapped them around their heads and we got them out of the store down Fulton Street towards New York downtown hospital to get them out of there.

Then after that, I ran into a couple of Beekman, the New York downtown medics. Two Beekman medics. I can't recall. I can't recall. I stuck with Lieutenant D'Avila.

We got supplies and took it over to 49 Fulton

Street, where they had set up a little triage area also. We took supplies from the hospital and brought them over there. From there we went to West and Chambers to the high school. They had set up --

Q. Stuyvesant High School?

A. Yes. We went over there. Ran into a lot of my friends. (inaudible), who was from this Battalion, but transferred out. I think I saw Thomas Monahan, Tommy Monahan, who was from this Battalion. I saw -- I don't know his first name. I know his last name is Hayden and his Father is a Chief of the fire suppression side. I saw him. I saw Allan Cruz from this Battalion. He does the LSU from this Battalion.

Q. Did you ever reunite with your partner?

A. No, actually. We had gotten separated, so the whole time he was thinking I was dead and I was thinking he was dead. Looking for him though, (inaudible), and the mass of all the people who were there, and all those people who responded. All those who were told to stay in the high school until they needed them. Looking through faces, trying to see him and I didn't see him for a long time. It wasn't until the next day that I saw him.

Q. Did you ever get word that day that he was okay?

A. No, not that day.

Q. (inaudible)?

A. I looked through the whole entire high school to see if he made it or not. I stayed over there at the high school for a while, until, I think about 9 o'clock at night and then I couldn't go any more, because it was just too overwhelming for me and I passed out and I woke up in New York downtown hospital. Got treated for exhaustion and smoke inhalation and stuff.

Q. Do you know how you got there?

A. I remember telling Lieutenant D'Avila that I wasn't feeling right and then they started walking me over towards the MERV and I just sort of woke up in the emergency room.

Q. Beekman?

A. Beekman, yes. They treated me there and then they released me. I went home, I walked back to the Battalion first to take my stuff and leave it in the locker, my uniform, and put my street clothes back on. I walked from New York downtown back here to the Battalion.

Then I saw my friend, (inaudible), was here.

I saw Orlando Martinez, Frank Puma. Who else? I think I saw Rick Abono, Rick Abono was here also, I believe.

Q. Are these people that work at your Battalion?

A. Yes.

Q. They were all working that day?

A. Yes. They were all people from this Battalion. Some of them responded in from home. They came in. I saw Gregory Zeek, who came in. He was on AL. He had like -- was on vacation. He came back in. He was here. He was my third partner from my unit. It was me, Al Loutsky and Gregory Zeek, all on one Charlie and Zeek was on vacation. Me and Al were working together that day.

I saw Zeek, who was off. He was here. I really can't recall, you know. They were glad to see me and I was glad to see them. But as far as specific faces and names, I really, I guess I'm trying to push it back into my head so much, instead, it's starting to become very vague for me.

I left work and I went home. From there went home. I came back to work the next day at 11 in the morning.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to the day, anything that strikes you or --

A. No. Just the terror of -- from almost having died twice. It was like, you know, I was never one to be afraid of dying and then it happened, almost happened once and I made it out of there and I was like glad I made it out. It was enough to put an impression on me and then to go through it again so quickly afterwards. So like the first time it put an impression on me and the second time is seared it into my head, you know.

So that is about it that I can think of. I'm glad that I'm here, that I was able to make it out.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: This concludes my interview with EMT Ramos. The time now is 1610 hours. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT NICOLE FERRELL

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT McCOURT: The date is December 13th, 2001. The time is 0720 hours. My name is Tom McCourt, New York City Fire Department. We're conducting an interview at Battalion 45, EMS Command, in regards to the World Trade Center attack. Being interviewed is --

EMT FERRELL: Nicole Ferrell.

LIEUTENANT McCOURT: -- EMT Nicole Ferrell.

Q. Could you please give me the details of your experiences on September 11th, 2001, at the World Trade Center?

A. When the first plane had hit, we were still parked in our area and I was sitting on Queens Boulevard and Greenpoint.

Q. What unit were you assigned to?

A. 49 Boy.

Q. 49 Boy. Okay.

A. When we heard that the plane went into the first building, we went and drove closer to the water, which was near the 108th Precinct on 50th Avenue and 5th Street, to get a better look. So we drove down and we saw that it was a fire and we heard units being dispatched to it, which we were not assigned at the time.

Q. Who were you working with?

A. Jeff Warner. We ended up going to another job instead and made that a 98. Then after we left that job, we went back to our unit to watch what was going on. We saw that it was still burning and we just waited to see if we were going get assigned to it. After a while my partner picked up the radio and kind of got us assigned to the job by asking the dispatcher did he need more people over there and they sent us.

On our way there, the first tower, which was the south tower, was the one that collapsed while we were en route. Then, when we got to -- what I believe is we drove down Broadway and we made a left. When I got to Liberty, right over here, is when the next tower collapsed, right after. After that we ran with all the people and we took the ambulance and we drove across Liberty again, went up I believe it was Church.

Q. When you got down there originally on Liberty, did you see anybody? The building hadn't collapsed at that point, right?

A. When I just pulled up to Liberty, we had just pulled up, just got out, and there was still debris flying around and no sooner than we got out is when the other tower came down.

Q. Okay.

A. No sooner. So we were out of there because we had parked over here. So then we came down Liberty and we went up, I believe, Church and went to this side instead, which was, I think, Vesey and Church, and we were standing in front of building 5, across from the post office. Then, from there I told him let's go up West Street. So we went up to West and I believe Murray and left the ambulance and walked back down over here. After a while, just things started happening because we couldn't find anybody.

Q. You didn't come in contact with anybody, any supervisors or anybody from your command or anybody?

A. No. Not at all. Because by the time we got over here, everybody was like running in every direction. You couldn't barely see at all. It was like snow, the stuff was so heavy, and people were just running and screaming and stuff like that. Some cars were on fire and I remember some people were choking and stuff and running towards there but they didn't want to be treated and they kept going.

Q. Did you treat any patients at all?

A. Actually, we attempted to treat a firefighter and he didn't want to be treated. But what we did was he said he wanted to be driven back to another area where I guess they were doing like staging or something like that. So I told him that we would drive him around to where the MERV is and maybe he can reconnect with some of the other Fire Department resources that were over here somewhere.

Q. So you moved from Church and Vesey?

A. Yes. We moved from Church and Vesey and we went up to -- let's see. If I'm not mistaken, I was going up West Street, because we actually just went, you know, we did an actual triangle just about and went up West Street and then cut across to meet everybody else somewhere over here, I believe. I think it was on West Street, that's where everybody was, and I was at the first MERV right over there.

Q. So it was West and Murray?

A. Yes. That's where we were.

Prior to us going to West and Murray with the fireman, we were right over -- I believe it was either 5 or 7. See, my memory is a little bad because I don't know. I'm having a little hard time with this. But we went (inaudible) -- no. You know what? It was 7. Now I remember. It was 7 because we went over here to West Street, like I said, and I stopped here at Barclay and

I saw the firefighter. There were people screaming out of one of these two buildings over here saying they couldn't get out, and my partner took one straggler fireman, the one that we had with us, and was trying to break the door because the door obviously had shifted or something. They couldn't get the door open.

Q. That was 7 World Trade Center?

A. I believe it was 7. Maybe it was 5. It was at the back end of it because I do remember the telephone company. So I think it was the back end of 7, I think right over here at that point, and they couldn't get out. Then I had ran down the block and I flagged a ladder company and they brought the ladder, which they had like a vestibule that you couldn't like really reach the people because the ladder wouldn't reach. So they went and got other resources, they went inside the building, and I told my partner that it wasn't safe and that we need to go because everything around us was like falling apart. So we got back in the ambulance. Like I said, I had the firefighter with me who was still injured at the time.

Q. Do you know who that was? Do you remember?

A. I have no idea.

Q. Do you remember any company or was he --

A. No. My partner probably would remember more than I could because everything was a mess. People were grabbing other people's coats and helmets. So I honestly don't know where he was from. All I know is that he was having a problem with his eyes and stuff like that, like us. He was complaining he couldn't see and stuff like that. But he couldn't find the rest of his company.

So that was it. Then we went to over here to the MERV, in that area over there, and we had our bus parked near the school. Yes, right over here. We parked the bus down here and we walked to where everybody else was.

Q. That was on Murray and West?

A. Yes, I believe it was Murray and West. Wherever the college is? We were across the street from there and the pedestrian walkway was in front of us. I remember looking directly at it. I had went into an area where they had a whole bunch of EMTs and paramedics that were supposed to be congregating inside the auditorium in which they piled us all in. They closed one door and left the other one open. It was conducted by Lieutenant Kathy Fuchs. She told us all to gather all our equipment, gather together and we're going to go out in groups of four or five, which would be like two paramedics and two EMTs or whatever.

About a few minutes after that, we all piled in there and stuff, the lights went out, we lost power. She closed the door and locked us all in there and she ran. So we started trampling each other. So everybody started running all over each other. People were getting hurt and stuff. Finally a police officer came and opened the door for us because he heard us all screaming in there for about 15 minutes. We were in complete darkness.

We came out and she told us to sit along -- let's see. I believe it's like a water area over here. It's like River Terrace. She told us to move down, I believe, over here and pile over here instead. When I saw that her plan wasn't working, I abandoned ship and I went to go stay with my Captain and Chief Nigro across from the MERV. I was there for a good part of the evening, but I was -- let's see. The walkway came down. 1 and 2 had already fell. I believe it was either 7 -- but 7 was empty at the time, when it came down, that I remember. We had just missed the collapse of 7 because me and my partner moved away. Then we were in the MERV, and after the MERV, we stayed there for a few hours or so and we rode around with a Cushman vehicle and we rode around the area where the site was, they let us ride around, all through here, all around here, where all the collapses were, and that's basically it.

Then we went and made a makeshift hospital at an apartment building which was -- this part is going to be difficult because I'm not really sure exactly where this building was.

Q. Okay. That's all right.

A. But there was an apartment building. It looked like a hotel but it wasn't a hotel and they made it -- maybe it was the Millenium. It could have been the Millenium. I'm not really sure because there was just too much going on. But they made a makeshift hospital over there. They made us all set out like IVs and stuff like that and water and stuff, and we all stayed there for a good part of the night freezing to death and we started getting sick. So Lieutenant Hadala told us that we were all going to move from that location because it was freezing and it was dirty and we were filthy and we all were starting to get sick and we couldn't breathe.

So we jumped into the MERV and moved closer up to Vesey Street, and I came back to look for my ambulance, which was supposed to be parked over here at West and somewhere, Murray or something, and they took my ambulance away. They took all my equipment away, they took all my personal stuff away, and my stuff was stolen. So I went to go with the gang to ask one of the supervisors where all my stuff was, and they said that they took our ambulance away because they thought that we had passed away. So they took our truck to Bureau of Training, and we stayed here for the rest of the night stranded until we found somebody to take us back. We were there for a total of, I believe, 28 hours, 30 hours, and we came back to the station.

Q. Okay.

A. I didn't see any EMTs or paramedics or anything prior to them passing that were listed or (inaudible). As far as firefighters, I have no idea. I don't know who I saw or what. It was total chaos. So that was it.

LIEUTENANT McCOURT: Okay. The time now is 7:30. That concludes the interview. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT PATRICK RICHIUSA

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT McCOURT: The date is December 13, 2001. The time is 0742 hours. My name is Tom McCourt from the New York City Fire Department. We are currently at EMS Command, Battalion 45. I'm currently interviewing --

EMT RICHIUSA: Patrick Richiusa.

LIEUTENANT McCOURT: -- that's EMT Patrick Richiusa from Battalion 45.

Q. EMT Richiusa, can you please tell me the events that transpired on September 11th, 2001, from your perspective, please?

A. Okay. We left the station to go to our 89, and about 8:45 in the morning we noticed smoke coming from one of the towers, my partner and I, Laura Siebuhr. So we moved our position to a better location to see if maybe it was just a smokestack of a building in front that was just from the angle. It turns out that it was the tower that was on fire. So I asked the dispatcher over the air and --

Q. Where were you sitting at this point?

A. Metropolitan and Forest Avenue. We moved to a better position and from there you could see the actual tower was on fire. So I asked the dispatcher over the air, and there was silence for about a minute, and then the tones went off and they said a plane had crashed into the World Trade Center. So they started sending units from all over the place and I was assigned. I went over the 59th Street bridge. I forget exactly what route I took. I picked up two priests on the way once I had crossed the bridge into Manhattan because they asked if we were going and I figured they were going to be needed if a plane crashed into the Trade Center.

So I came across Vesey to West. That's where staging was. I arrived there. I let the two priests out. I never saw them again. I found the first Lieutenant from EMS that I saw and he told me to go over to triage, which was right by 3 Financial.

Q. Do you remember what Lieutenant that was? Do you have any idea?

A. I have no idea. There was a group. It was a couple Lieutenants and I believe one Captain. I don't recall any one of their faces.

Q. Okay.

A. From there I went over to triage. There was about 15 people all laying around on the floor there, nurses, doctors, private ambulances, Fire Department ambulances, volunteer ambulances from Hatzolah. I believe Forest Hills was also there.

Q. What was the status of the towers then?

A. They were still standing. This was about five minutes before the second plane hit and nobody had known it was a terrorist attack. So it was just -- we positioned the furthest point from Trade Center 2, which was the one first to get hit. So we went over and then the private ambulances started to try to take patients away, but I had no names and nothing else. So I went over to a Lieutenant and a Captain and I asked them and he put me in charge. So I went back and -- he told me nobody leaves until you say so, and I said okay, until you get names and all the other information.

So I went back, stopped the ambulances. There was a city bus. Everybody was walking wounded. So I figured we could just take all 15 people in one shot in the city bus, and I was going back to ask the Lieutenant when the second plane hit. It was a loud thunder noise and you looked up and all the buildings on the opposite side of the tower's windows were shaking. So somebody started yelling run, so my partner and I both ran with all the people. The patients all got up and ran. We all ran towards the Hudson, down West towards -- I mean Vesey. Sorry. I got that all backwards. Towards Vesey, towards the Hudson. When we arrived at, I guess, North End Avenue, that's when all that debris fell and it all -- basically, there was nowhere else to run, so you got enveloped by the cloud of smoke and debris. After that settled, there was a little chaos. Nobody was quite sure what happened.

Q. That was the debris from the --

A. The plane actually crashing.

Q. The plane?

A. Yes. This was the actual when it blew out the 80 something floors.

Q. Okay.

A. That was the plane, the umbrella, you know, it looked like to me.

Q. So the debris went that far, up to the river?

A. It covered right up to the Hudson. I actually considered swimming the Hudson River because there was nowhere else left to run.

Then the debris settled and there was a little chaos and nobody was really quite sure what happened because all the vehicles were parked down the block and a lot of equipment was down the block. Some of the vehicles had been positioned on North End, I guess, from other areas, or maybe they were told afterwards, after the second plane hit, where to go. There was a large crowd of people. I don't know where they all came from. I guess it was just from all over that general area. People were sharing cell phones to see if they could call. There were no signals, nothing else like that. Afterwards I saw Chief Kowalczyk and Chief Gombo.

Oh, prior to that I saw Bobby Abril, Carlos Lillo's partner, and my partner was a little nervous of the situation, she's new on the job, and I asked Bobby to stay with my partner, and he said, well, Carlos is down the block. I said, all right, I'll go get Carlos, you stay here, and I told Chief Kowalczyk and Chief Gombo that I was going to go down there and get Carlos and bring everybody else back up. He said, all right, tell them to bring all the equipment with them.

So on the way down the block, by 3 Financial, there was still some guys standing there. So I told them bring all the equipment back up the block because we're going to put staging up there now at -- I don't even know what building that was there.

Q. At Vesey and North End?

A. At Vesey and North End, yes. I think that was a hotel or something, in the lobby of there. So you had people coming up the block as I was going down the block, firemen, but you couldn't really recognize anybody because everybody was covered with the white powder, you know, you couldn't really see faces or anything else like that. There was nothing distinguishable about anybody. That's when I basically made the turn around West and I was coming across and it was by the pedestrian bridge when -- actually, no. The first tower fell and the second tower fell and we had no idea that the second tower fell. We were over here for a little while, then everybody got a little bit of their bearings back.

Q. So that debris was actually from the tower falling?

A. No, no. The first one was the plane crashing. My time frames are all messed up because things went and there was no time perception. I didn't realize how long I was there until I looked at my watch when it was time to go home. So I'm not sure exactly when 2 Trade Center fell because basically we were protected by the corner, the edge, because we were up over on North End and Vesey. So we wouldn't even have known the second Trade Center had fallen because the debris would have been blocked by Trade Center 1 and 6 Trade Center. So I never even knew the Trade Center had fallen.

When I came around the block, and this was -- I don't remember what time it was. It was just minutes before 1 World Trade Center fell. I made the turn and two guys were walking towards me and I looked up and that's when I saw 1 Trade Center coming down. There was no way to outrun World Trade Center 1 from falling. So me and the two guys laid on the ground. I laid on top of them.

Q. Who were they?

A. I have no idea.

Q. Were they civilians?

A. Yes, civilians. One guy was a black guy in kind of a jump suit and one guy was a business guy dressed in something else. We got buried under all the debris from 1 World Trade Center and what was left of 6 Trade Center when they both came down because they toppled into each other. I don't know how long we were under there. Everything went black and I felt stuff hitting me all over the place and they were screaming, I was screaming, everybody was yelling. Basically, it was so loud that you couldn't hear anything else except what was right in front of your face, and everything went so black that it went from as if you shut all the lights off and closed your eyes, it was that dark. It was hard to breathe. That stuff, all that powder was getting in our faces, your eyes burning and everything else.

I would say maybe a half an hour we were under that rubble before we dug ourselves out, before we thought it was okay. But when we opened our eyes, I thought, jeez, now we're in a cave. How the hell am I going to get out of here? But it was mostly debris and the powder. When we stood up after digging for about a half an hour, we basically just popped out of the powder, and five feet from where we were, an R&P, a cop car, was destroyed by an I-beam. So we got lucky with that.

I walked them -- we still couldn't really see. I had a flashlight and we just started walking to the side, and we walked into 3 Financial building and we traced that to the corner by touch because you still couldn't see anything, made the turn onto Vesey, and then all the way in the distance you could see a dim, blinking red light. I asked them if they could see the dim, blinking red light, and they said yes. So I said head that way because from behind us I heard a whole bunch of people screaming.

So I went back and I met one lone fireman. I have no idea what his name was. I don't even know -- I couldn't even tell you what he looked like. But he came over to me, he gave me a Scott pack and a turnout coat to wear right then and there because we didn't know what else was going on, what else was going to hit. So I think that was out of -- I don't even know what truck that was. But I wound up giving that back later to one of the Battalion Chiefs.

Then we went and started looking, and he was looking for some guy, I think his name was Paul or Frank he said help me find. So we started looking and the ground was caved in right by 6 World Trade Center and in the distance you could see ladder trucks turned into the building and it was -- then it was dead silent. There was no noise after 1 Trade Center fell. It was like something out of a movie. It was really loud and then it was -- maybe it was just my hearing from the blast. I wasn't hearing the minor things. In the parking lot across the street, cars were exploding.

Then me and him went and looked and there were holes and stuff, and I said, well, where was he last? He goes I'm not exactly sure. There was nothing to landmark with at all at this point. So we just started looking through the rubble. We formed kind of like a Y or a V type of formation, always staying within visual of each other, to make sure neither one of us disappeared. I found a fireman -- I don't know. It was by a car, one of the Suburbans. I asked him are you okay? He said yeah, I'm fine, just like that. So he goes but two of my guys were on the other side of the truck. So I said okay. So I went around the other side of the truck and the other side of the truck was smashed by I-beams, and I looked under with a flashlight and I couldn't see anything.

Then one guy we heard from all the way up. I figure it was in, I would say, what is that, the Customs Building? 6 Trade Center. All right. We heard somebody yelling. So me and the other guy, I was up first because then I called him over because I didn't know how many people were up there and I was going into a building. So he came up behind me and we found one fireman up there, and I said are you okay? He said my back. I said, listen, you're a big guy. Me and him aren't going to be able to carry you out of this, and he says, no, no, I can walk, I can walk.

So we started walking out of what I thought at that time was the third floor of 6 Financial. It turns out six floors were standing of it because of the way debris angled up. So he was holding on to us. As we were coming down, we fell, I don't know, 10 to 15 feet, and that's when I hurt my knee. I didn't really notice it then because it was just all utter chaos. There was like no time. I hadn't noticed that I had cut my arm and back either.

Then we carried him down -- well, we climbed out and then we all went down and that's when other firemen started coming. So I said all right. So now everything else is here. So I started heading back up the block. I saw a couple guys with EMS over by 3 Financial still. I said, listen, there's nothing over there for you guys. I said start heading back the other way and get all the equipment. I didn't know that everybody had left already.

So I went into a building that was on Vesey between North End and West, and my portable wasn't working. I had asked -- I said I'm also going to need, you know, I need to know where everybody is, and they were like, well, where are you? I said I don't really know because I couldn't landmark anything. I shut the portable off because I wanted to reserve the battery because I didn't know how long this was going to be, and there was people screaming and yelling all over the radio from where they were and nobody knew where anything was. So it was kind of chaotic.

So I went into a store. I tried dialing zero on the phone. The operator, there was no answer. I guess the phone lines were down. I tried dialing 911. There was no answer on that either. So then I just started walking up North End and a Hatzolah ambulance I saw. I waved at them. They just waved at me and drove away. I don't know how far I walked. It was all the way up towards Stuyvesant, right in front of Stuyvesant High School. I don't know how far up that is.

That's when my partner was in a Cabrini ambulance with a bunch of other guys in plainclothes and they found me and they brought me over to Chelsea Piers. I still hadn't noticed -- because that's where staging had been brought to. Everything was pretty chaotic there, also, still at that point, doctors that were setting up forward triages and treatment areas and there was people everywhere, people that weren't even involved in the Trade Centers that were just from Manhattan that were evacuated to that area. I ran into a couple of guys from my stations. I ran back into Bobby Abril and he asked me, did you see Carlos? So I said no, I never even got a chance to get that far.

From there we just hung out with each other. The union was there. They were doing -- the news was there. Everybody was asking is everybody okay and this, that and the other thing, is there anybody that they know of missing? That's when my partner noticed -- we went to go get something to drink because I had all that powder in my mouth and my eyes and everything else. I wanted to get washed off.

So she said, you know, your shirt's ripped and your pants are ripped. I said yeah, it's probably just nothing. So she goes let me see, and we pulled off my shirt and that's when I saw the laceration on the arm and the laceration on the back, which was, I don't know, six inches. She goes, oh, you're going to need that sewn up. I said, listen, I don't even notice that's there, so that's the least of my worries. She looked at my leg and it was just a minor abrasion to my leg. There was nothing really yet there.

So from there we went to get something to drink, came back, and that's when -- I don't know. Time was pretty -- like I said, I don't even know what time that was. That could have been 2:00, 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon. So then I went to -- who was it? I think it was Captain Sickles sent me to triage, and that's when I got sewn up on my arm. Then I went to the hospital that night and I left at 5:30, which I was pretty exhausted. I had an accident on the way home, too, with the ambulance.

Q. Really?

A. Yes. Somebody turned into me. Actually, the actor, Bill Nun, changed the tire for me. He was a nice guy. He came over there and said, oh, you guys had a hard enough day. We asked if they needed us back just before that and they said no, and that's when 7 Trade Center fell. But by that time they said you guys are done because we were there for nine hours, ten hours at that point. We were pretty exhausted.

Then we went to Parkway Hospital and they made the phone calls to confirm that we were alive besides that, and that was pretty much my day that day. Then I was out for the two days because I couldn't work with the open wounds, with the stitches, and then I went into my vacation, which was two days before my month's vacation. So I spent my whole vacation -- and that night, the next night, after I went to BHS, my knee swelled up.

So I went back to the doctor and he said, well, you probably just sprained it really good. The pain didn't go away for like a week or two. So I went to get an MRI and that's when they found the tears in the medial and lateral meniscus. So my vacation was spent hobbling around.

Q. Anything else you left out or you can think of now that you want to add?

A. No, nothing that I can remember.

Q. Okay.

A. It's all pretty much a blank, that day.

LIEUTENANT McCOURT: The time is 8:00 o'clock. That concludes this interview. Thank you.

EMT RICHIUSA: Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT DAVID CIRA

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

D. CIRA

LIEUTENANT McCOURT: The date is December 13th, 2001. The time is 9:15. My name is Tom McCourt from the New York City Fire Department. We are currently at Battalion 45, EMS Command. I'm currently interviewing --

EMT CIRA: EMT David Cira, Division 4.

Q. EMT Cira, could you please tell me the events that took place on September 11th, 2001, from your perspective, please.

A. Shortly after the first plane was announced over the EMS frequency to have hit the first tower, my partner and I went 98 from an assignment out of Booth Memorial Hospital at Main Street and Booth Memorial Avenue.

Q. Who was your partner?

A. Felipe Torre. We were working 50 Adam, Tour 2, Vehicle 466. We were 98 for about three or four minutes when the assignment was sent over to our MDT. We hit the 63, acknowledged the assignment and headed into Manhattan. I entered Manhattan via the Brooklyn Bridge and we made -- where is the Brooklyn Bridge?

Q. It's got to be over this side.

A. We came down -- this has got to be it. I believe we came down John Street, made a right turn onto Broadway, took that up several blocks, where we ended up on the corner of -- where we ended up on Vesey and Broadway, made a left turn onto Vesey Street, and we were stopped on the corner of Church and Vesey at a Citibank. We were flagged down by a woman who had a couple of patients, one of whom was complaining of chest pain, and various other injuries and whatnot that had been patients from the Trade Center itself that had gotten outside of the triage sector apparently. We were there with a North Shore University Hospital truck that was no special designation. They were a transport truck that decided to come out on their own. I believe one of the crew members was paramedic Adam Schriebman. We all began to triage the patients in the area.

We decided that we were going to move these individuals across the street to the north side of Fulton and Church, which it's showing here as a cemetery, but I remember it to be a Citibank, and we started to triage the patients when the building -- we looked outside, there was a rush of people coming down the block, and someone informed us that the tower was coming down. All we could basically do was take cover. I lost my partner at that point in time because of the rustle and I was trying to shield ourself from the debris. I lost my partner for somewhere in the line of -- I would assume it to be around 13, 14 minutes. We all had apparently walked up northbound on Church Street. Like I said, it took about 15 minutes when I finally met up with a Brooklyn bus.

Q. What was the scene like after the collapse?

A. Right after?

Q. Describe that a little bit.

A. It felt like a snowstorm at 3:00 o'clock in the morning. It was absolute, total silence. Everybody and everything was covered. We had stumbled upon Captain Janice Olszewski, who was in a pile of -- it appeared to be just a pile of debris. At that point in time -- actually, let me step back a bit. I'm actually leaving something out.

When I had walked up north a bit, I'd met up with a Brooklyn bus, I believe either 39 Adam or 39 Charlie. I'm not sure. They took me back -- after the debris started to settle a bit, they took me back further south to meet up with my bus again and my partner, which was at the intersection of, I guess, Fulton and Church, which is where we found Captain Olszewski. At that time we had about seven patients at the back door of the ambulance that started to gather.

Most of them were police officers. We had Captain Olszewski there. We advised her to get into the ambulance. She said she was feeling okay and she was with another ambulance crew. We had seven people by the truck and we just, you know, green tag patients and we wanted to get them out of there.

So we took them out of the borough and we took them to Booth Memorial Hospital. We took them back there. Our reasons for going there were we had to go out of the borough because they were green tag patients. Brooklyn wasn't a feasible option because of all the traffic coming in and out. So the next best thing, we traveled northbound on -- I couldn't tell you the avenue. We found our way to the 59th Street bridge, which I took to the LIE, and I was -- I bypassed Elmhurst and I bypassed St. John's only because of the reason -- I bypassed Elmhurst because it is a major trauma center and a partial burn unit. I figured that, if any major patients were going to start spilling into Queens, leave that open, and then we went to Booth. It was right off the LIE, it was open, they were ready for us. I notified them on my own cell phone.

Then we were seen there at the ER briefly just to make sure we were okay. We were both covered in dust. Our truck was a disaster. But to be honest with you, I don't remember much more than that about that morning. If you have any other specifics, I'm sure you could --

Q. Do you remember seeing anybody else other than the Captain or anybody?

A. I saw various EMS workers that I recognized just by uniform. Somewhere along the line I remember seeing Lieutenant Hadala, but I couldn't tell you what street corner I saw him on. He was with Paramedic Chevalo Wilson-DeBriano. But I don't remember where I saw them and, honestly, the time frame I really couldn't tell you because it was just, once those buildings came down, it was just --

Q. You weren't there for the second building, were you?

A. We were pulling away as that was going on. We were being advised by -- we were driving up through the crowd. We were trying to get through a crowd with a bus full of patients.

Q. Right.

A. We were being advised that the second tower was coming down, and we did, actually, if I'm not mistaken, we did see the debris cloud from the second building. But were we inside the cloud? No. We were cleared by then.

Q. So you never made it over to the command post or anything on the west side?

A. Never made it near the command post. We were assigned to go to West and Vesey. That was our original assignment location. We never made it there. We were flagged down, thank God. Like I said, we were flagged down on like Fulton and Church, somewhere along the Fulton and Church vicinity because we were on a corner and it was a Citibank. I definitely remember it being a Citibank because that's my bank and I just happen to remember that's where we were at.

Like I said, I took those patients to Queens and we were seen and we were sent back to the battalion and were released -- what is that? LOA, when they release you -- it was before the end of my tour, but they said that's okay, you can go home. Captain Scott Holliday was at the battalion and he released us for the remainder of the tour.

Q. All right. Anything else you can think of or anything?

A. I'm sure every time I sit down and tell the story, I could probably think of something to add into it, but those are the basics of it.

LIEUTENANT McCOURT: Okay. The time is 0923. That concludes this interview. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN RICHARD WELDON

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 10, 2001. The time is 1655 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department, City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Captain Richard Weldon, assigned to Ladder Company 20 of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Ladder 20 in the truck office regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Captain Weldon, can you tell me what happened to you on that day.

A. Yes. I was on the Long Island Expressway, actually headed north to take care of my mother when the first plane hit. Later I was on the Cross Island Parkway when the second plane hit. When I got to the Throgs Neck Bridge and looked downtown, I could see both towers burning and I realized that I was going to be needed so I immediately started down there.

I got down there very quick, down to my quarters, Ladder 20, and I pulled into my parking spot,, came up. There was somebody in my bunker gear already, so I grabbed my spare bunker gear and my street shoes and I hopped on 58 truck, which was about to leave my quarters for the World Trade Center. They had a box they were going on for a trapped man.

We had about 15 people on that truck. When we got down there, we were parked about two blocks from the World Trade Center in the area where they had the guy reading the magazine, the park, where the guy reads the magazine. Within 30 seconds, as we got off the rig, some of the guys had masks, most of us didn't have masks. Some people had radios. I personally just had my bunker gear.

All of a sudden someone yelled run. Turned around and this big black cloud was coming at us. I started running away from the cloud. Some people ran towards buildings and other people, all they had time to do was duck below the rig. As I was running down, a person opened up a door and I jumped in there. The black cloud came flying by and one of the people who were with me, the guy from the squad actually, that was blown down in that black cloud and we pulled him into the door.

At this point, I thought I should go to the second floor and find the window and do some reconnaissance rather than just get out in the street and maybe there would be a second collapse, but one of the members of 58 truck was panicking and he said we got to get out there, we got to get out there. I said okay, we will go out there.

We went out there. It was pitch black we couldn't see anything. I told everybody stay against the wall, we will work our way up the corner and we will see if everybody is okay. That's what we did. We got up there and kind of everybody came back to the rig and regrouped. The darkness started to fade away and at this point, we all -- I took my men and a couple of guys from squad. I had Adrienne Walsh with me and Gregg Edwards and two guys from squad.

We walked 30 yards and we found large pieces of debris laying in the park; duct work and things like that. We began searching at that point. We searched the entire park area and then decided to make our way closer and we did that by going south. We came upon -- we came up from the south, I don't know what the street was, the one that would run just west of the World Trade Center as far as I could see, like we went under a tower. Eventually we had gone under the tower. So that was the street we came up.

There was a Battalion Chief there and I walked up and I said, what do you need? He said go stand over there. At this point, I noticed that the satellite truck was there and nothing was being done and none of the lines were in operation, so I asked whose truck it was, the guy says it's mine. I said where is the manifold. He says it's in the truck. I said -- I grabbed a few people, some squad people, some Ladder people, and they went over and they got the manifold.

Meanwhile I heard on the radio that the boats were coming. I saw an Engine and I told the Engine to go down and stretch a line from the boat, 3 and a half inch line, and bring it back. I started other people stretching 3 and a half line towards the boat.

Eventually the two lines met up. The mistake we made was not putting an Engine in line, but we got a 3 and a half inch line to the manifold. There must have been 15 cars burning and initially being an Engine officer at one time for most of my career, I was very concerned about water and nobody was putting any fires out. That's why I got into that operation.

But then I said, now I'm in the truck and I decided -- I wasn't going to -- we did operate a line for a short time. Adrienne Walsh was on the nozzle and I was backing her up and guys started stretching lines off the manifold and eventually one line needed more pressure, so we shut down and they needed to go further and they hooked into our line and Adrienne Walsh and myself went closer to the two buildings that had collapsed.

When we got there, I saw a guy from Ladder 10. At this point I didn't know where my other guys went. I saw a guy from Ladder 10 and I asked him how would you get below the World Trade Center, what subway station. He told me Rector Street and I don't even know what the line was. I asked him if he would come with me and he did.

We went down there; Adrienne Walsh, myself, a guy from Ladder 10 and some other guys, they had managed to get some flashlights. We walked about two blocks in the subway tunnel and we came to a dead end, a concrete wall that apparently the building had collapsed right down into the cellar.

At this point I finally realized that where the two buildings had gone, because there was only 7 stories of piles, I realized they must have all collapsed into the ground. At that point we left and went back to the site, which there was a command center right almost between 2 bridges that existed at one time.

Didn't report into anybody at this point. I was standing there and wondering what to do, when Battalion Chief Richard Picciotto came out of nowhere like coming across the pile and I offered him some water. He was completely encased in dust. He just pointed in the direction and said over there, tell me where to go. At this point, myself, a guy from squad, Larry Cohen, and a proby asked if he could come with us.

We went over towards the north tower, stairwell B where they had -- some survivors had come out. When we got there, there was a line coming down from the pile and initially we helped a guy from Port Authority, I think he was, down the line. Then they said they were going to need some help getting a woman out.

At this point, I moved up all the way to stairwell B. We got the lady out, passed her down, then they were trying to dig out, I believe it was a second Battalion Chief and I waited and stayed there with them until we were ordered -- well, we were ordered several times, but the Captain of, I think it was a rescue company or a squad refused to leave.

Finally he gave up, he said there was nothing he could do and we all left that area. This is in the collapse zone of tower 7.

At this point, I went down back to the middle area of the pile and I proceeded to make my way to the north side of the towers. At that point, I ran into Lieutenant Simms, who had another complement of Ladder 20 there. At this point, I guess I had formally reported into Deputy Chief Visconti. He was up on the North End. We waited until tower 7 collapsed and at this point, we went into the area and assessed the damage that was done to the buildings and to see if we could control the fires that resulted from the collapse of tower 7.

We searched several buildings, decided that they were sound enough that lines could operate, tower ladders could go into the area and put the fire out from tower 7. We remained in the area till about 11 o'clock that night, 12 o'clock that night. Myself and some other of the members of Ladder 20 that had been there early on. Then about that time we started walking back to Ladder 20. We arrived back at Ladder 20 and another group of guys from Ladder 20 went down there.

I wound up -- that next day I had to work and I wound up going right back down there the next day, spending the day down there. They all thought I was on vacation. That's about it. That's what I did.

Q. When you said you went to where the guys rigged the boat, I believe he was in the North Cove wasn't he, that little park by the North Cove?

A. Yes, I'm not familiar with the area.

Q. At that point when you were with 58 truck, the first building had already come down you believe?

A. I believe so.

Q. You were caught in the second tower collapse?

A. Yes.

Q. When you said you were with squad, you were referring to squad 18?

A. Members of squad 18 who were housed in Ladder 20's quarters.

Q. When you said the satellite was there. You walked --

A. The satellite unit.

Q. When you said you walked under a tunnel, was that the other overpass?

A. Yes, the south.

Q. Not the south overpass. When you came back from where the guy was reading the book, the statue, you went under an overpass there too, right? That's by 1 Liberty Plaza, I believe, where they set up the triage center later on? You are not sure, okay.

A. No, actually I think we went two blocks south of where maybe like Engine 10 and Ladder 10 would be. Two blocks south and then crossed over and then made our way up.

Q. The last thing I have to ask is the satellite you referred to, was that nine?

A. I really can't tell you. I can't tell you.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: If you have nothing else that concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER GEORGE KOZLOWSKI

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: The time is 1620 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with GEORGE KOZLOWSKI of Ladder 20. He is assigned to Ladder 20 of the New York City Fire Department. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Ladder 20 in the office's quarters regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Fireman KOZLOWSKI, tell me what happened on September 11.

A. We just got relieved after 0900, Fireman Escofrery and myself. We saw the plane coming over, sort of over quarters and then the initial crash. We heard the initial crash. 20 truck and squad 18 took off right away and Kenny and I, we were just standing there and Timmy Haskell with squad was there also and he was going down there, so they grabbed -- can I say the bread truck, their other rig.

Kenny and I got redressed and Timmy Haskell, same thing and we took off in their hazmat spare rig, the hazmat rig. Approaching there we could see the tower, where the plane hit. We pulled up alongside squad 18's rig and just before 20's rig, at that point we were looking up and we saw the people jumping already. We thought it was parts of the building coming down, but it was jumpers. We must have seen, while we were standing outside at that point -- because we were looking on our rig for any tool that we could find. We didn't have radios. I think Timmy Haskell had a radio, but I will get back to that.

So we got a couple of tools, I think two axes and a halogen, but no -- there was no radio around. As we went inside on the West Street side of the north tower into the lobby, I can't remember the companies really. There was a bunch of companies standing fast. I just can't picture it right now. We were right by the command post. I did see Ganci, Chief Hayden, Feehan, Von Essen, who else, the aide, who was it, Kevin Wa, I think it was Kevin Wa, the aide.

We first initially, we wanted to tell somebody that we were there, so they knew we were there. We tried to get Chief Hayden because he knew us. We knew us while he was at Division 1 anyway. I think Kenny got -- did tell him.

At that point we were just standing fast. We didn't want to go roam off far away because we didn't have a radio. At that point we heard more jumpers hitting the outside awning. We thought it was stuff, but man, the sound of those bodies crashing down was unbelievable. I mean a giant thump. We did see bodies that got pulled out of the elevators because all the elevators fell. Then Kenny and I just thought well, let's just walk in the main lobby there and maybe try and pry open and see if anybody is left in the elevator itself.

We did a quick walk around in that section, but there were only a couple that were closed. We could wedge it open a little and take a look. There were no other bodies. There was about three or four bodies that were pulled from the elevator and they were covered up already.

We went back closer to the command post and at that point there were more jumpers and there were body parts flying into the lobby. At that point, they started to move the command post, because all that shit was just flying in, I mean, you know, chunks.

Kenny and I -- I forgot who asked us -- it was one of the officers. At that point there were a lot of people coming down from the lobby, the loge area, and they were asking us to tell the people to keep moving, move, move. So he goes why don't you take a walk up to the third floor, the third floor through the B stairwell. He goes people are -- you know how narrow those stairwells are. As big as that building is.

There was a lot of water coming down from the stairs. Lot of people were panicking, so we kept pushing them out, pushed them to that second floor lobby and then it was getting pretty bad out there, because I couldn't tell you what side, I guess the jet fuel and everything that was flying down was really kicking up on the outside. We let them know too, and we were afraid, because those big plate windows, we wanted to get the people away from there in case it blew and that's eventually what happened. Thank god Kenny and I, we closed off that door so nobody could go down there any more.

At that point, we were -- I can't remember how long we were on that third floor pushing the people through. That's when we felt a big giant tremble, like a mini earthquake. That was the south tower collapsing. We didn't see it but we really felt it. All the lights shut down, the emergency lights on the stairwell and everything. People were starting to really panic.

Then there was another small explosion on that second floor. I guess it was that plate windows, everything going. That's when we encountered 5 Engine. They were coming down from the fourth floor or whatever. I didn't see their officer. I might have, but it was dark at that point too, and then -- let's see -- there were a couple of other probies there. I think they were probies, because you know, you look, but it was mostly 5 Engine there working on -- to find another -- not a stairwell, an exit to go out.

Luckily a person was coming down. I don't know from what floor but on the third floor encountered us. He says no, I know another exit down this way. Well. That was the only other door that we could get out. It was lucky, because a lot of the other people -- because it was pitch black now. So Kenny -- well we all lined up. It was not like a long walk, but a good enough walk to get to the other exit. It was good that guy found it, because I think we would have got stuck. That he knew about it, because I don't think we would have found it.

Okay, so then we made a line and we pushed the people not to go through that third floor door and we just told the people which way to go. Then we had flashlights. Other people had flashlights so everyone made it and we kept pushing people through, go, go, move, move. There was one guy, we thought he was having a heart attack. We got him up and we put him on a chair. He was pretty heavy set. So I think it was one of the guys from 5 Engine that said keep going. I will stay here with him and try to get him out.

So we just kept going, moved more through, went downstairs, got through -- it wasn't the main lobby where the command post was. We made it through that way. Got downstairs, and there was like a -- it was like a giant courtyard or something and somebody out there was a black Battalion Chief. I forgot his name. Another guy that says no, no, keep going through here. I don't even know what building it was that was adjacent to the Trade Center right there. It was closer to the West Street side.

At that point, there were more jumpers in that courtyard and more -- there was quite a bit more debris from the building, falling from the upper floors. So we set up like a -- one guy stayed where the people were coming through and another guy ran over to the -- where that other building was or something.

Couple of us would look to see if anything is falling and then tell the people run, run, run and then wait to see if anything else fell. Luckily not too many things fell. It was good hooking up like that to make sure.

At that point, all the people that were with us or whatever, there were quite a few. That was it. So at that point, I think the Chief says hang out here in case some other people come back. I know there was a proby with us, Escofrery, and another guy. The Chief took off. We heard like a lot of trembling and everything. So we better get out of here. This doesn't look good. There is no more people coming.

So we started walking the same way the Chief went, and he was at the other end. He said the same thing. He said we better get our asses out of here. This doesn't look good at all. As we were walking, we heard -- we thought it was another plane coming. It was like a big shhhhh. A thousand times louder than that. It sounded like a missile coming and we just started booking. We took off like bats out of hell.

We made it around the corner and that's when the shit hit the fan right then and there. We heard that loud and then ba boom. I just -- it was like an earthquake or whatever. A giant, giant explosion.

Kenny made it and those other guys made it around this bend here. I was like the last guy and I just turned around and I just sort of ffffffff, I just did a fetal position. I crawled down and held -- thank god -- that helmet saved my life: I just held onto it and the impact, I closed my eyes -- just the impact, I could just feel shit hitting me, flying.

I think something fell on my back that protected me from some of the other stuff that fell. Luckily a couple of things hit my helmet. Then it was just that impact and I was in a fetal position, just holding my helmet, shaking. Then this big gust came and I just went flying, maybe 30, 40 feet. Tumbling.

I got up, got on my hands and knees because all of the white shit was all over me. I just kept crawling. My ears were like deaf, you know, when you hear a giant firecracker or something. I went crawling, spitting that shit out, and I couldn't see anything because everything was white. I just kept crawling. I tried to yell out Kenny, Kenny Escofrery, but everything was so muffled. I didn't know what else was going to happen. I just tried to fucking get out of there.

Then I saw flashing lights. I said oh, man, at least there is something there. At this point I didn't even know -- I thought it was like a part of the building collapsing. I got up to the car and it was like a Suburban and the lights were still on and it was running. I got in there, opened the door, there was nobody in there. At first I was just going to get in the Suburban and wait it off or something, wait until it cleared off. I said I'm getting my ass out of here. I don't know what's going to happen.

So I kept crawling and I saw another flashing light and I was yelling out Kenny, Kenny, hey, anybody out there, help. That's when I heard Kenny. He already was walking back to see where I was. We met up. He goes let's go, let's go. Because we were dying of thirst now too from swallowing that shit.

Then it started clearing up a little. We were on the West Street side. That was it. We just kept walking and just walking, trying to find some water. We saw some other trucks there. I forgot what companies. They weren't affected with it, but it was mostly everything was covered white.

We made it to the street. There was a cop there with an open hydrant, washing everybody down. She was very nice. She said kneel down, because we were covered in shit. We made it. We were on West Street. Got some water. We were just sitting there wanting to catch our breath. We were looking at this shit and saying, "oh, my god," I wonder where's our guys?

Took a little rest there and we started walking back to ask people if they saw 20 or 55 or squad. That's initially A truck or something. A truck made it out, because they know our guys. That's why. At this point we saw -- oh, god -- we didn't catch up with anybody that saw 20.

We waited there. We said let's hold off. Maybe some other companies will come out and we will ask them. Maybe -- like the first, second, third due companies that would know anybody if they did see 20, because initially they probably all showed up together. They might have been on the same floor or they passed them on the stairwell.

Hung out there for quite sometime. Just hoping somebody saw them or -- so at this point Kenny and I said we can't -- let's walk back to A truck. Maybe they know something. We got back to A truck and -- were they back already? There were a bunch of guys there already that got called for a recall. There were some officers that retired that came down to help out. Lieutenant Woods, remember Woodsy? He was there. [redacted].

Then a couple of the guys from A truck came back and they didn't -- they said they did see them on the stairwell. After that they lost them, before, because they were making their way down from the 30th floor or something. They saw 20 on the 35th floor or something. 28th floor or something. They weren't sure. I'm trying to --

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay.

Q. I have a couple of maybe clarifying points. Nothing -- when you said you responded with the red truck and you parked near squad 18 and Ladder 20, do you know where that location was?

A. The Vesey Street. Do you know where that --

Q. Where the north walkway was?

A. Yes.

Q. That aide you said was Wah, Chris Wah, the Division 1 aide?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. When you said you met 5 Engine, originally you said you went to the B staircase, was that there where 5 was, the B staircase?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. When you were escorting people out of the stairway from the third floor to the second floor that was also the B staircase?

A. Uh-huh. It might have been -- no, that was the B. That was the B.

Q. No Fire Department personnel came out, all civilians, other than 5 Engine?

A. What I saw. Yes. Because they were behind us. We had to keep walking in front and these guys would stay by the door.

Q. No other Fire Department units passed you?

A. No.

Q. That you know of?

A. Yes. Because there were a lot of probies there, so I didn't know what companies.

Q. When this guy directed you to the other exit down the hallway, that exit wasn't marked or anything, was it, like C exit?

A. It was pitch dark.

Q. It was basically a mezzanine type exit, a little wider staircase maybe?

A. No, I wouldn't say it was wider.

Q. The two of you and basically 5 Engine?

A. Right.

Q. When you finally did get out, you headed towards West Street?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. That same corner that you turned was with the walkway?

A. No, no, that wasn't a walkway.

Q. When you left --

A. Okay, we went to the north walkway, so we were going opposite, we were opposite of that walkway. We were away from that walkway.

Q. You headed back maybe towards Church Street?

A. Yes, maybe, probably, yes.

Q. When you came out, maybe you were on Vesey and made your way up to Church?

A. I don't think it was Vesey, because it was all big like courtyards that we made our -- there was a loading dock that we went down.

Q. Could it have been Barclay maybe?

A. I don't know, maybe. We were going opposite.

Q. You were east of where you were before?

A. Right. We weren't close to that -- the walkway. We went way around.

Q. When you walked back towards West Street, did you happen to see any apparatus maybe destroyed?

A. No, not at this point. They were all by the walkway.

Q. The only ones that you can remember are 18 and 20?

A. When we pulled up?

Q. Right.

A. Yes, 55.

Q. You saw 55 Engine?

A. I think so, because they were usually right there too.

Q. They would have been parked in front?

A. Yes. They would have been on West too. You know, when we do respond there, that's where we always park, right there.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: If you have nothing else that concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ANTHONY SALERNO

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: The date is December 10, 2001. The time is eleven o'clock in the morning.

This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Anthony Salerno, fireman 1st grade, of Engine Company 24 of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine 24 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Fireman Salerno, could you please tell me what happened to you on September 11?

A. On September 11, I was on my way into the city. Being on vacation, I had just come back from a road trip. I was going to come in in the morning and bullshit with the guys.

I had not known at the point when I woke up that the buildings were attacked. On my way in, I noticed the trade center on fire, turned on 1010, and listened to the thing on my way in.

On my way in, the recall, the active recall, was engaged. I had gotten to the firehouse probably around ten after nine, was on the phone with Mike Paolone. He was the -- he was working in Queens. He had told me to look across, look at the television. I saw the first building come down.

At that point, I noticed a bunch of guys coming into the firehouse -- Captain Varriale coming in, Billy McCarthy, Frankie McCutchen, Chris McArdle. We all had come in, and we were all ready to go down to the trade center, knowing that both companies and the battalion were down there.

We left the firehouse probably around a quarter after nine with two volunteers. One, a volunteer fireman, his first name was Tony. The second guy was a construction worker whose brother had been working at the trade center on the 110th Floor, I believe.

We got down to -- we got down as far as West Broadway and Chambers Street. At West Broadway and Chambers, we drove down with Captain Varriale in his pickup. We took some tools that we had grabbed out of the firehouse and some EMS supplies.

We got down to West Broadway and Chambers. We parked the rig. We walked down as far as West Broadway, and I would say Barclay and came back up, noticing that there was nothing but three blocks of fire from Barclay down to Vesey, which would bring you to the north tower of the trade center.

We found car fires. We found buses on fire, but we happened to find a volunteer rig from the Bronx that was still in there. It was a old LaFrance. I got in the rig, backed the rig out with everybody helping, parked the rig on West Broadway, and found the rig on West Broadway between Barclay and Park, and backed the rig out and hooked up to a hydrant on West Broadway and Warren, and ended up supplying whatever lines we can get off the rig with -- using whatever fittings we could use off their rig, and I remember the water pressure being very low.

We ended up putting out as many fires as we could from West Broadway and Warren all the way down to West Broadway and Vesey.

Putting out all those fires, in that interim, the second building had come down. I remember hearing a lot of explosions, the street turning completely gray, gray clouds of smoke all over the place. Everybody had stopped what they were doing and ran back up the block.

We ran up West Broadway past Chambers, regrouped when the dust settled, and there was a command post that was established at the time. I remember seeing Chief Daly and another chief -- I don't remember his name -- coming down to West Broadway and Barclay and setting up a command post.

I remember finding Engine Company 6's rig, stripping that rig of fittings and hose to hook up to anybody else. I remember at that time also they were worried about Building 7 because when the second tower came down, they were worried about parts of -- actually, when the first tower came down, they were worried about parts of Building 7 collapsing, so I remember getting into Building 7 and searching.

I got separated from the crew that I had gone down with, because I stayed at the pump panel. They had gone around the West Street side of the building and into the rubble.

I hooked up with a Lieutenant Ryan from 15 engine and Richie Cipoletti from Engine Company 55. We hooked up with as many people as we could.

We went to the command post, the true command post, which was set up at that day on Broadway and Chambers. We ended up getting assigned to a Staten Island firehouse engine company. We manned a hose line across the street from Tower 1 or what was remaining of it, and I remember that building taking off in fire, so there was really nothing we could do with our one hand line.

I remember coming out of the building now because they were afraid of Building 7 coming down, and all the other buildings around it getting knocked down. So they took us out of the building.

I remember Building 7 coming down, again, with dust clouds, getting separated momentarily. I remember Staten Island companies all over the place. I remember a Brooklyn company coming, a Brooklyn engine company coming in, when I was still hooked up on West Broadway and Warren.

I don't remember the company's name, but it definitely was a Brooklyn company. I used their rig for parts also, and after the second building had come down, they had left their rig and was part of the command post on West Broadway and Barclay.

After that I stayed with the Staten Island company for quite awhile. We ended up working with some Brooklyn truck companies, and some Staten Island engine companies, a Brooklyn chief, just going through the various buildings after the building had gone down to see if anybody was still in there or if we could do anything, putting out various little fires that were about from the rubble, and got back to my firehouse probably around 11:30, 12 o'clock, September 11 night, back to the quarters of Engine Company 24 and Ladder 5.

And that's what I did that day.

Q. Good. And you couldn't remember any of the numbers of the Brooklyn companies, right?

A. No, I couldn't remember the Brooklyn companies.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Thank for you the interview, and that's it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER CHARLES GAFFNEY

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: The date is December 10, 2001. The time is 10:30 in the morning, and this is Battalion Chief Ronald H. Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I am conducting an interview with the following: Firefighter CHARLES GAFFNEY, fireman 1st grade, assigned to Engine 24, Fire Department of the City of New York.

The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine 24 in the engine office regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Fireman Gaffney, could you please tell me in your own words what happened on September 11 and your experience?

A. I just got relieved by a probie, one of the seven-week probies in Ladder 5, about 8:30. Sitting in the kitchen, tones went off. It was for the trade center. A plane hit the trade center.

I thought it was an accident, and I turned on New York 1, and I could see the hole in the building. Myself, couple of other guys that just got off crossed the street. We looked down the block, saw the trade center and we said, "Oh, we better get down there." Myself, Lieutenant Giammona, Jimmy Miller, Jimmy Esposito got dressed, and we started down there.

On our way, Chief Prunty came by. He got dressed and came down with us. We walked down to Varrick Street. An off-duty firefighter pulled over with a pickup truck. We got in the back. We headed down there.

On our way down there, he told us that a second plane -- he heard on the radio that a second plane had just hit the other tower. So we were all discussing -- not panicking but discussing, you know, what's going on here. It kind of dawned on us that it was a terrorist attack at that point.

He drove us down there and dropped us off on Vesey Street right by Tower 7, and we proceeded into Tower 1 around the corner. We saw Engine 24 parked on the corner. We stowed our shoes that we were carrying with us at Engine 24.

We went into the Tower 1 lobby, and I noticed the command post was already set up, saw Commissioner Von Essen there in the lobby, and Battalion Chief McGovern. We went to Battalion Chief McGovern. Lieutenant Giammona told him, "Make us a unit. Put us to work. We're here." He said, "Okay."

Lieutenant Giammona got a radio from somewhere, and they made us Ladder 5-B, and we met 9 truck on their way up the stairs. We met 9 truck on the way up the stairs, and there was another engine company. I don't remember what engine company it was, but I grabbed -- they were all carrying extra bottles, and since we had no masks or no equipment, we grabbed their extra gear and helped them. Me and Jimmy, Jimmy Esposito, grabbed roll-ups and a bottle and carried it upstairs for these guys, because they were overburdened.

We walked up. We got up to about the 10th Floor, and there was a chief on the floor who told us -- I don't know what chief it was. I don't know who he was. He said guys are already working their way down. He wanted us to start working our way up searching floors, going in on each floor, walking around the perimeter of the building, looking to see if anybody was on the floors, panicking, or trapped or whatever. So me and Esposito started doing that.

Vinnie Giammona, he flew up the stairs in front of us. Lieutenant Giammona, I should say. He had a radio. He went up the stairs. We lost track of him as we were searching the lower floors.

We made our way up to about the 21st Floor.

We met up with Engine 65 somewhere along the line there, and we were kind of listening to the officer of Engine 65's radio. We heard like a continuous roar, like a thunder, and the building shook.

All in between there was all foggy. I don't remember what happened in between there. Like, all I remember was once the building started shaking, I forgot everything else that was going on. It was like you were being thrown around on the floor.

We made our way into the stairway, and there were a few guys from Engine 65 in that stairway. There were no civilians in the stairs at that time. Most of them had -- must have gotten out by then from below the crash, but I remember hearing a radio transmission, "Urgent!" I don't know who gave it, but I remember hearing an "Urgent!" that all inside operations were off. Everybody out of the building, and we all started running down the stairs.

I remember seeing Faust, Battalion 28, on the 10th Floor in a doorway, and he was directing guys down. He must have been waiting for Chief McGovern, who had gone up ahead of us. I think he was on the 24th Floor. I left out -- I thought I heard -- I heard a radio transmission, and I thought it was Lieutenant Giammona, that he was on the 44th Floor, something about an elevator. I'm not sure if there were people in the elevator or he found an elevator that was working, but he was trying to get through a message. It was his voice. It was unmistakable, that he had an elevator on the 44th Floor.

I do remember seeing Chief McGovern when we were on 20 or so go past me on his way up, and on the way down I saw his aide, Faust, and I said to Faust, "Come on, get out of here. They are ordering us out. Let's get out." He said he was waiting for the chief, and then when we got down, when we finally got down to the bottom, the lobby was a mess. It wasn't like a clear run out of the building.

I went out the same way I came in, so I knew where I was going. There was a pile of crap in the lobby, marble, Sheetrock, all that stuff. It was smoky, hazy, and when I got out in the street, it was a cloud. I had no idea what time it was, how long I was in there.

I remember running north at first under a scaffolding that was up and looking to my left, which was west, and I could see, so I ran west, and as I was running west, there were a bunch of firefighters in the street. I remember guys screaming, "It's coming down," so I was, like, running for my life.

When I got -- I ran as far as the water, and then I started running north when I got to the water, a little park. That was Vesey Street, I guess, I took to the water. I started running north, and that pier, whatever that one -- whatever you want to call that ended, so you had to run back east to get further north.

By that time, the second building had already come down. I was shedding gear as I was running, so I went back for my gear, so that I could go back and look for people, because I wasn't sure where the guys I had gone down with were. We all disbursed, so I was looking for Jimmy Miller, and Jimmy Esposito and Vinnie Giammona. I don't know when I met up with them again, but I think it was on West Street, maybe a couple of blocks north of Vesey.

I remember running into John Ottrando, who was the engine chauffeur, when I ran out of the building. When I started running west, I remember seeing him, and he was covered in white, and I told him to run. I don't know which way he ran. I think he ran north as I was running west, and then little by little, you know, started running into people, and that was really all, and then we started going back looking for people.

Q. I have a few questions, if you are finished.

A. Yeah. There are things I don't remember, like parts I'm sure I'm forgetting, but I think about things sometimes when I'm home or alone or something and something will pop in my head, and I said, wow, I forgot that even happened.

Q. Great. I mean not great that you remember stuff like that, but you did a pretty good job here.

You were with those three guys, Lieutenant Giammona, Miller and Esposito --

A. Right.

Q. -- originally?

A. When I got on -- I left this out. When we got in the back of this guy's pickup truck, Chief Prunty was with us on Varrick Street.

Q. Right.

A. Another SUV of some type pulled up, and he said -- he must have been an off-duty firefighter, too, because he said to Chief Prunty, "Chief, get in with us." One of the guys got out and went in the back and let the chief in the front seat. They followed the truck we were in, the pickup truck we were in. They followed us, and the chief got out, and he came in the lobby with us.

Then Chief Prunty I never saw again that day. I don't know when he went to the command. I saw him go to the command post. I don't know where he was assigned to go, you know, what he was doing.

Nine truck we were with on the way up the stairs, and we were carrying their bottles and their roll-ups, whoever's roll-ups they had. They had roll-ups with them. It must have been an engine with them. I'm not sure if it was 33.

I remember seeing the guys from 65 out in the street after we got out, like, whoever the officer was on 65 that day. It was his radio we were listening to to get out of the building. I remember seeing them in the street later, and we were all glad to see one another that we got out.

Like I said, when everyone started running down the stairs, firemen -- it was all firemen. Nobody knew where -- everybody ran in separate directions, and there was an ironworker in the lobby -- I remember that -- directing people out of the building, telling them not to walk, to run, because there was stuff falling.

I'd say there's a lot -- there are so many things -- like, on our way in, we had to avoid jumpers or bodies coming down. I remember seeing one about 20 feet away from me as we were approaching the end of the scaffolding before we went into Tower 1, and then as we got there, one landed five feet from me.

Then one guy stood and looked up, and it was like being in the military. He'd say, "Okay, come on. Oh, hold up. Something is coming down. Hold up. All right, come on. Come on," and it was bodies that were coming down.

Q. When you say you went to the command post, you said Tower 1, is that the north tower?

A. Yes.

Q. So you were operating basically from West Street?

A. At the time, I didn't know that. I found all that out later, which tower --

Q. Okay?

A. -- which tower we were in and whatever.

Q. All right. So that was where you saw the commissioner, McGovern --

A. Yes.

Q. -- in that lobby?

A. There was a bunch -- there was a command post set up in that lobby, but when I had come back down, they weren't in that lobby any more. That lobby was pretty much destroyed, and there was nobody in there.

Q. Okay. So you hooked up with 9 truck. I mean, you weren't ordered to, but you hooked -- do you know which staircase it was, A, B, whatever, something like that?

A. I'm pretty sure it was B. I'm not positive, but I'm pretty sure it was B. I know I came down the B, so I'm pretty sure it was the B I went up, because I used that as a reference for getting out. I knew I came up that way, so I knew my way down with that staircase.

Q. Okay.

A. I remember being on about the 13th Floor and opening the door. I heard a door being forced from the outside of the stairway. A company was trying to get in, so I went and opened the door for them, and that was the A stairway, I believe, but I can't tell you what company it was. I don't remember.

It was -- we were kind of like in a hurry. I just popped the door, let those guys in, and continued searching the floor.

Q. Okay. And the stairway that you saw 65, that was B?

A. Yes.

Q. And Faust and McGovern, you figure were B, the B staircase?

A. Yes, it was the staircase I was in. That was B. I saw McGovern on there. I saw Faust. He was standing on the 10th Floor. I don't know -- he was standing in the doorway.

Q. Okay.

A. He was, like, telling people, okay -- no, he was, like, reassuring civilians, I guess, on their way out, and then when I was on my way down, it was only firemen, so I said to him, "Come on, Faust, get out. They are ordering us out. Get out." He said, "I'm going to wait for the chief."

Q. Okay. You came out the same way?

A. Yes.

Q. And --

A. As I came out of the stairs --

Q. -- you were running?

A. I remember making a right, climbing over a pile of crap, and there was glass, thick glass, everywhere. It was like running on ice, you know, glass on top of glass sliding around.

I remember an ironworker being in the lobby, and I ran into the ironworker later. I wound up knowing him, but I didn't realize who he was at the time.

Q. Okay. If you saw Otto, who was with 24 -- did you see any other rigs in the street at any time, whether they were crushed or the way in?

A. On the way in, I saw Squad 18's rig was right in front, I think.

Q. In front of the tower or in front of the hotel?

A. In front of the tower.

Q. Okay.

A. In front of Tower 1. I think Lieutenant Giammona grabbed a mask out of there.

Q. Okay.

A. We went to 24 first on the way in, and there were no masks left or anything.

Q. Where was he parked?

A. He was on the corner -- he was on West Street facing south right off Vesey, and then it's the same place he was parked for the first trade center. That sticks in my mind.

I was at that one, too, in '93, and Otto was driving also, and he parked in the same spot for both incidents.

Q. Okay. Now, when you were running out and everything, you didn't happen to notice any of the other front pieces, who they were?

A. What do you mean? The guys I was running with?

Q. Yes, or when you came back, did you see any other apparatus crushed or 6 --

A. I remember the civilians in the street, like they were in the lobby, like, pooling in the lobby instead of going out of the building.

I guess they were having a hard time getting over the debris and stuff, but coming down the stairs, there were no civilians in the stairway.

Q. Okay.

A. As I came out, Otto was standing in the middle of West Street at Vesey by the island. He was covered in white. He said he had -- he dove behind a wall or something and just got covered with the cloud. He was in shock.

Q. Okay. If you have nothing else, this concludes the interview. Thank you very much.

A. Thank you. I mean, that's all I can remember. I mean, I remember seeing people in the street not that were in the building. I remember seeing companies, like, standing watching.

Q. Well, can you remember who they were?

A. I saw --

Q. And where they were?

A. I saw one of the guys from 55 engine on the opposite side of West Street at Vesey standing -- 33 engine was on that corner on Vesey facing east, I guess on the west side of West Street.

Q. And this is after the collapses or before?

A. This was after the first one, which I didn't even realize was a collapse until I got down to the street, but before the second.

Q. Okay, so they were on Vesey and West?

A. Right. They were on Vesey actually facing east.

Q. Anybody else?

A. I remember running into guys from 8 truck who were coming from company medical. They were -- they sent them back from the medical office.

Q. You don't know where you met them?

A. I met them by the water. I met them by the water. I met -- there were also two guys from 55 engine. I don't think they were working. Paddy Schuppel and Pete Metzger. I don't know if they were working or not, but I met them by the water. I don't think they were working. They must have come later. They were clean.

Q. Okay. If there is nothing else, we can conclude the interview.

A. I think that's about all I can remember right now.

Q. You can keep going as long as you want.

A. No, that's all I can remember really.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay, thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DEPUTY CHIEF HOWARD HILL

Interview Date: December 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today is December 10, 2001. The time is approximately 1540. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes, New York City Fire Department, safety and command.

Q. I'm here conducting an interview with --

A. Deputy Chief HOWARD HILL.

Q. Regarding events of September 11, 2001. Chief Hill, if you would in your own words, tell us how you became aware of the events unfolding that day and what transpired as far as what you were concerned and what you did.

A. All right. I was home, I was jogging along the Belt Parkway. I noticed the twin towers on fire. I got in my car, I went home, and I called up operations. I asked them where they wanted me to report in. I was told report into the First Division. I showed up at the First Division between 10 o'clock, 10:30. I relieved the Battalion Chief who was on duty. I was then told by operations to formulate teams, get teams ready to respond in some kind of orderly manner. They were having some problems with that.

I had a fair number of people on recall. I had them do like sort of command post procedures to organize the members of the teams with officers and make up arrival lists. We followed some of the procedures of the command post. I designated some people as administrative. As that was being prepared, there was some problems, to put it mildly, regarding keeping people at the fire house and in the Division.

I did a survey of the Division to see what companies were in service, what relocators we had. No units were back in at all throughout the day. They told me at approximately 3:00 I was going to take all members over to the site and operate. At 3:00 then I got a phone call informing me to stay. They were worried about a second attack or some other things that might happen. I again tried to keep members.

There was some problems at that point to keep members at the fire house. It was extremely difficult to just to keep people standing by and maintain discipline. Discipline was a significant problem. There was something screaming and shouting. I made several efforts to keep people focused, to keep them ready. I was less than 100 percent successful but I did manage to keep some teams in the fire house and I went around to different firehouses that I could hit in the Division to try to insure -- and via the phone as well.

That went on continuously up until about 3:00 in the morning. At that time I was told to relieve Chief Kilker over at One Police Plaza at their command center. I was in Police Plaza, answering phones and manning that station until approximately 4 the next afternoon on Wednesday. I then went home and I reported in to work on Thursday morning.

On Thursday morning, they told me once again you will be manning the Division. We manned the division once again trying to get some -- the status of the units, finding out what resources we had in the Division and keeping guys ready to respond to fires and fire duty as necessary in the Division.

Then at approximately 18 hundred hours I was told to report to the site. Now, this is Thursday evening. I went to the site, I reported in to the Liberty command site. I climbed up on a piece of jutting steel. I relieved -- I don't remember who I relieved. The Deputy said this is your post. There was, I would say, around 300 people in view and it was fairly disorganized. There was lots of vollies, being aware of what all our members were going through as far as wanting to go down and not having work to do or being kept from the site, I had people coming in, reporting in, our people. My priority was to get volunteers out, and anyone who should not be there and to keep our people in.

I tried to set that up. I tried to get police assistance in setting up perimeters and that was less than successful. People would say yes we will take care of it and the police would walk away and then I wouldn't see them.

I did get some control of the firefighters. I had them set up control points. There were three or four access points into that Liberty command area. I was able, after a while, to patrol and then pull the vollies out of there when I saw them, and I had Fire Department members, FDNY members, staged. I would pull them in. There was a bucket brigade at the time. They were using the dogs. We had the USAR teams. We continued with this throughout that night. I was leaving about 9 o'clock in the morning. It was just a continuous. I don't even know what time I got there the next day. I don't.

But there was a continuous flood of people in and out of the area. I had some Battalion Chiefs, we had some sector control, and I believe at about 4:00 o'clock in the morning it started raining heavy that night. Thursday night. I have to look at that. Maybe that was the next shift I was in. I forget when the rain came down. But when the rain came down that was the first time that I believe the whole site took a collective breath.

It was glass scaling off the wall of buildings. It was cracking around and it was pretty heavy glass, rain was heavy and the effect of all these people out there at that point was (inaudible) that we were trying to accomplish. We pulled people back and we actually got everybody off the pile. That was just in my sector. But my sector was one of the earlier ones. And that spread around the other sectors as well. I think collectively, my only problem with this is that I don't remember if it was Thursday night or Friday. Excuse me. I was off Friday, on Saturday. I had to look at the weather because it is a bit of a blur at this time.

But I do remember that was the first time I know that everybody just stopped for a moment and we were able to get a little better order when we were coming back in, although it was a big problem, they could not get any kind of security with police, in controlling any of the perimeters in the area. There was a lack of police supervisors around. I did speak to some of them. One was the head of ESU. I forget his name. He was an inspector. He was standing there with me at the -- the command post was a very makeshift thing. Like I said it was a piece of steel jutting out. The only reason I was standing on that, that gave me the overview of the site. It was the only area with good height that you could see out.

Most of the efforts were coordinated fairly well with the USAR teams. They had their team people ready and when I needed them, they did respond. I do give them credit. They controlled their people very well. They staged them. I was getting good feedback from the rescue people out there, as far as what was -- the area they were concentrating on, and why they were concentrating on it. The Battalion Chiefs were out there. The Battalion Chiefs were superb.

I think the main reason why we didn't have any serious injuries was that the Chief officers at the site did a spectacular job of controlling and looking over the best they could under the circumstances to insure that people weren't getting hurt or doing things that they should not be doing. That didn't happen all the time, but the Chief officers made an extreme effort to control people out there and I think in my mind, anyhow, that's going largely unrecognized.

I think the main reason that we didn't have significant major loss of life there was because the Chief officers of the FDNY did their very best under the circumstances. It was effective in preventing a lot of injuries at that site and stopping people from doing what they should not be doing. And trying to control as much as possible the people from outside the Department and the -- of course well intentioned, but emotionally involved people from our Department from being -- putting themselves in more harms way than was appropriate.

I believe that that is what worked in my sectors from what I saw. The Chief officers were diligent. They worked very very hard and got some control that way. Because you couldn't go out there yourself all the time. You could just go to some spots where there is problems to look over. You could do a survey, but you had to have Chief officers out there, and that's what made my zone work.

A lot of it was a blur. There was a lot of input from different agencies so we had to -- a lot of decisions being made. I wish I could recall half the things I said. It was non-stop talking, non-stop giving orders. It was a flood of people coming to you for directions and a myriad of things that are just a blur to me. Everything from labor disputes with steel workers to just trying to get guys. It was a nightmare.

It was an intense, unending. That was the thing about it. It just didn't stop. You got out there, you did not shut up. You talked, you gave orders, you directed, you tried to control. Non-stop. You didn't have ten minutes to yourself. But all in all, from what I saw, I thought we were as effective as -- I couldn't imagine anybody being more effective. There was a fair amount of chaos. I know that's a focal point, but I sincerely believe that there was a lot more control than people are acknowledging.

I think the officers, particularly the Chief officers, did a splendid job. Once again, I know I'm repeating myself, but I think they forget this and I think the proof of that is in the major injuries, of how there wasn't any. There was no fatalities and there was certainly a tremendous amount of potential for that and that was only due in my mind and I'm clear on this, is that we did have that kind of control and I think that's being ignored.

I think that we did have some control, of course, with the mass of people that we had there. When I say 300, of course, I never had a count. It was a guesstimate. There could have been between 3 and 500 people and that was just in my sector, which ran two blocks long and as far deep into the pile as you could go, which is probably about, I don't know, maybe 6, 800 yards.

Q. How did you get to the First Division? Was that before or after the collapses?

A. I drove in, from home.

Q. You had no problem --

A. I couldn't believe how fast I got into the Division. I saw them collapse. I said woah. That's when I jumped in the car and I had just pulled myself away from it. Went home, changed and got in the car. I was in the city, I would say it took me about 20 minutes.

Q. What was your route?

A. I took the BQE from the 14 Avenue exit.

Q. The Belt Parkway?

A. What I did Arty, was I came in off of 86

Street entrance to the BQE and lots of congestion in the streets, but everything was soon to be closed. But once I got on that BQE, it was closed. The police were out there. It amazed me. I went over the Brooklyn Bridge.

Q. You I.D.'d them?

A. Yes, I had to I.D. It was shut down except for us. When I came over the Brooklyn Bridge that was clear. I shot right into the First Division and that was extremely difficult to control. That was just -- some officers were outstanding. Some officers understood what they to do and tried to control their people. Other officers were overwhelmed by trying to control their members and were unable to, as a matter of fact. A fair amount of members went down there on their own without authorization.

Plus trying to find out accurate information of what companies were relocated, what resources we had, was an all day affair and into the night. It never stopped, trying to get accountability of who we had and how effective we were going to be if anything else would have happened. That was a long long day.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Thank you Chief Hill. That concludes the interview. It's approximately 1550.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

Captain Paul Mallery

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 12, 2001. The time is 12:30 in the afternoon. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Captain Paul Mallery of Ladder 10 of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine 10 and Ladder 10 in the truck office regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Captain Mallery, could you please tell me what happened on September 11?

A. I just finished working a 24 hour shift, Monday morning and Monday night, so it was about 8:30, 8:35, I was down in the apparatus floor and saw Lieutenant Steve Harrell coming in and he said I'm just going to get a pack of cigarettes. I said well, I'm going to go in the shower, because I have to go to do Alan Hevesi for the union. It was primary day. He said all right, I got it. That was the last I saw of him.

I go upstairs, I'm in the shower and at the same time there was Murray from BITS doing a stipulation thing with Fireman Bachmann, because of another situation. So they were in the office. I said if you don't mind, I will take a shower and I won't bother youse. They were in the office and I was in the shower. We heard the sound of the first plane striking tower one.

I come out of the shower, all 3 of us are standing there looking out the window and you can't see tower one, because it's blocked by tower two, but we did see papers starting to fluttering down from the sky. We said uh-oh, this can't be good.

So the two of them bailed out, ran out the door and I said well, I better put some clothes on. I turned on the TV, which wasn't on, and I saw the shot the news had from like the Empire State Building looking south. You could see the building on fire, the plane had hit it. It was a remarkably clear day. We were saying, what was it, some guy being a wise guy, a little Cessna, being cutey cutey, trying to thread the needle between the two buildings and he missed or whatever. We didn't know.

So I put on the same clothes I had on the night before, short sleeve work duty shirt, work duty pants and I go downstairs and the apparatus doors were up. That's why the doors are still intact today, because they rolled out the door on a verbal and left the doors up. Civilians are coming in, burns, broken bones, cuts and bruises. The next thought was oh, shit, this can't be good.

I'm back and forth between the house watch, the kitchen, the apparatus floor and I hear Lieutenant Gregg Atlas of Engine 10 over the radio that is in the console in the house watch. He said give me a 1060 and give me every ambulance you've got. Those are his exact words.

That was the last I heard from Gregg Atlas. I thought to myself 1060, that's a pretty good call. I would have said second alarm, but he went 1060. Now there is people coming and going, people, civilians coming off the street, people who were supposed to go to work, were late, they were in, and then people were like what can I do, what can I do.

One fellow, I think his name is Rob Weisberg, he is a paramedic out in Commack or Merrick or one of those Long Island places. He goes I'm a medic and I said hoo, you are my man. I showed him the locker with the blue gloves and the first aid supplies and he says all right, I got it. He started taking care of people. He had chairs, we got blankets and pillows and we were prepared for all kinds of stuff.

He had the less injured go to the kitchen. One woman I remember she was just taking a little paper towel, wiping the blood off a little cut on her elbow. But they were fine. Then I get on the phone, call the dispatcher, and I told him it wasn't a terrorist attack, it was just a stupid plane crash.

He went yes, right. I said give me an ambulance. I said have the ambulance come up Trinity and come in from Liberty from Trinity. So later on we did in fact get the ambulance here and the kid backs up on the apron and I said back it in, all the way to hell in, because the Engine wasn't here, what the heck. And he did. He backed the ambulance into quarters, in the bay where the Engine would go.

Now the paramedic guy EMT guy Rob there, has assistance, two EMTs. Later on there was an article in the Newsday about the 3 of them. The two EMTs and the guy, whatever. What was his name. Jill Moore, did the article.

Back and forth and then in the house watch I hear about this recall. Now I guess the second plane hit the second building. People are standing out front and I said get in, get in. Lo and behold, somewhere along the way, Sean O'Malley, Lieutenant, Engine 10, he comes in by bicycle then I say oh, good, this is good. I got help then. Then Kerry Horgan, one of my firefighters, he comes in and guys are getting suited up and they are asking me for hose, nozzles, fittings and they are going down the block to the parking lot and they are putting out car fires.

Then the second plane hits and then I am looking down on the apron. I'm looking down, I'm going these guys got to get out of there. The guy taps him on the shoulder. He says no, we are already here, we are back. So good. With cadets, there were firemen from Brooklyn. Like I said, Horgan, O'Malley, and Joe Turillo comes in.

When the second plane hits, Joe Turillo puts on Gregg Atlas' second set of gear and he goes off. I said Joe, where the fuck you going? What are you going to do, bring another can. I mean it violates all the rules about two in two out and all the other stuff. You got no radio, no mask, where are you going?

Joe goes off. I find out three days later he ended up bumped on the head in the hospital in Jersey. But there were guys who were taking gear who did not return. There were guys who did return. So it was a matter of six of one, half dozen of the other.

I did get a -- hear a recall on the radio and one of the girls says what can I do. I said come with me, I took her into the Engine office, I pulled the sheet out from under the glass, crossed off the names of the guys I knew were working, and I said don't call these numbers, you will waste your time. Start calling these numbers and tell them it's a recall. I had her on the fax phone in the Engine office. Then another guy, a Lieutenant in a white shirt and tie, from headquarters, he says what can I do. I said come with me. Take off to the truck office. Likewise I had to do the truck recall, phone calls.

Things were going pretty good. I had the recall under control. I had the medical situation under control. Had a lot of people in quarters and we were doing all right. Then I happened to be on the second floor when the Kelty brothers came in, Jim, the supervising Marshal, and Gene the Captain of Engine 10. They were in their golf shorts. They had been out on the golf course and they came in. They are going to change into some kind of fire duty clothes and while they are changing in the locker room in the second floor -- the Engine side lockers, I'm telling them what's going on, briefing them.

I said it sounds just like this, this is exactly what it sounds like, here's another one, thinking it was a third plane. Meanwhile the sound to me was four distinct events. They all sounded the same. The two plane crashes and the two collapses, except the collapses lasted longer.

I don't know if that's the physics of it where the plane is going and how fast and it goes to zero and the building is at zero and it goes to being how fast by the time it comes down, you know, 32 feet per second squared and all that. As the third sound takes place, it's in fact the collapse of tower two, but I didn't know that at the time, the dust comes rolling down the hallway, up the stairs through the bunk rooms and I realized the windows are gone.

I knew my way around quarters, [redacted] I could feel the difference between the mortar lines of the cement block indoors and the brick mortar lines outdoors. So I knew I was outdoors, I knew where I was.

There is some guy screaming at me, get me out of here, get me out of here, in the dust, the total blackness. I tapped him on the shoulders, I said you are outside pal. He said well, let's go inside. He wanted to run down the cellar, I said no no, don't go to the cellar, thinking there is going to be lack of oxygen. I don't know if this is a nuclear attack. I don't know what this is any more.

But it was black like the worst oil burner fire, that you didn't put your mask on down the oil burner, but you could breathe it because the oil burner has got the carbon monoxide. This was no carbon monoxide, I could tell. I could breathe it and spit it out.

So back into quarters, do a primary secondary whatever, the kitchen, the bathroom. Every place I looked, the TV room, worked my way back to the front of quarters. Nobody is around. They are all gone, which is good. I get back to the house watch. It is packed to the gills with shit that came through windows. I check the Engine office where the girl was making the calls on the fax machine. She is gone and I see no blood or anything on the floor so I figure okay, that's good.

Then I walk up to the front where the truck would normally be and I see this pile of debris immediately on the apron. I climb up on top of the pile to be in a spot that would be where you would have a double parked car out in the street. I look up and it's still this brown -- black turning to brown turning to beige. I am looking around and it's total silence. The article in the Times, the guy quoted me saying it was like a silence like you never heard before. Not in Manhattan. You always hear something in Manhattan. Train rumble or something. This was nothing.

I said well, this is like the end of the world. Looked up and I did see a little patch of blue poke through the sky, through the dust. I said okay, we are still here. The sky is still blue. Then I hear help help. Lo and behold, it's in the coffee shop of the Bankers Trust. I make my way over there, up and over all this debris and it was the lighter debris of the Trade Center, the aluminum facia and a lot of paperwork and a lot of stuff.

I get into the Bankers Trust and lo and behold, it's the Lieutenant that I had making the phone calls in the truck office. He finished the phone calls, put on coat, boots and helmet, went across the street to get blown around like a rag doll. He had a broken shoulder and a broken femur.

So I go back to get help, I come and get Sean O'Malley and Kerry Horgan. They get over there and they are going to start to CFR-D this guy, get him ready and Sean goes this guy needs oxygen. So I said I will get oxygen. Go back to the ambulance that we had here which was a good thing. Otherwise we had no oxygen in quarters. Get the kid with the ambulance to go over there with the oxygen.

They got a backboard. They are going to do a traction splint, they got oxygen. We got help. We got a bunch of guys, these cadets. We had a few guys. Mike Frusci's son, I remember him now too. We are hooking him up, getting ready to go. There is a cop. There is Captain Kelty now, we are going to package him up and pick him up over the knee wall of the coffee shop, when tower one collapses.

That was the fourth event in the sound department. The sound was the same thing again. Sounded like a plane to me. Sounded like another plane, but it was the collapse of the tower one, which geographically is further away from us, so we said well, we couldn't run anywhere, because there was debris all over the street. So we just hunkered down and we waited. We lived through the second dust storm and did a little minor roll call, you all right, you all right. Yes, yes, yes. Okay. We waited about -- I don't know, five, ten minutes till we could see better.

We got this Lieutenant up over the wall and they carried him down Greenwich to Rector, made a left on Rector and they got an ambulance at Rector and Trinity Place and off he went.

Then the guys came back, now Lieutenant Jim Csorny shows up. He said come on, let's go get our guys. Then I take off my house watch shoes, put on my bunker gear, coat, helmet, I grab a tool, we go across the street through the Cedar Way, which is the middle of Bankers Trust. I see a guy named Paul at Bankers Trust, building engineer guy, how you doing.

He said, "We evacuated on the first plane crash." He said, "All I got is five essential personnel. They are on the 7th floor by the machinery." He had a handy talky of his own with him. I said, "Could you get them on the radio?" He said, "Yes." I said, "You are okay? We are out of here."

We go through Cedar Way, come out on Washington, right by the Amish market. There we see heavy duty red steel. This is the Trade Center. We said, "Holy shit, this is -" We only saw the light stuff on Greenwich. Washington had the heavy stuff. We were like this is it. The fucking thing came down. It's not just the plane. The whole building came down.

We go across where the Church used to be in the parking lot, figuring that would be easier, did the surface thing as we went over the pile, nothing, nobody. Make our way to West and Liberty and it's Charlie Blaich in command with some cop guy on top of some unit and they are starting to get this thing going, which turned turns out to be what happens with these chain gang lines with bucket brigades and handing stuff one over one. They were working on getting who out of the where and over there.

We did that for a while, then they wanted water. All the pumpers that were there were shot. I figured water, Hudson River. So I start making my way to the Hudson. We already had the tender, Smoke Two, was inside the marina hooked up to a pump, he was pumping. I see Ray Bressingham. I said -- there is a fire boat out in the river. I said Ray get on the horn and get that boat over here. We need water. He is trying to get the guy on the radio, the guy is not responding.

We ended up walking down to the south side of the south cove, and the boat was coming up anyway. It's the Harvey, fire boat Harvey. Then I could see up and down the river. Marine nine was in. Marine one was down by Albany, and I get this guy and they are all wearing civilian clothes and it doesn't dawn on me. I found out a couple of days later this is not a fire boat. It was scrapped by the city, and it's a museum buff boat. So, I think can you get water out of that thing. The guy goes, "I got no hose. I got no fuel." I said, "What the hell kind of fire boat is that? No hose, no fuel." I said, "All right, I will get you the hose. We will see about the fuel."

Go back east again. Once again bump into Lieutenant Sean O'Malley. "Sean, we need hose to the boat." He musters up some guys. They start stretching from some pumper somewhere back west, back to the boat. I see a Port Authority guy. I said, "Could you get fuel into that boat?" He said, "All right, let me see." He gets on his radio.

Long story short, he got the Circle Line tender to come and fuel up the boat. O'Malley got the hose, the guy down below made water and we had water. Only thing is, the boat does volume, it doesn't do pressure. What you need is to put pumpers along the way to boost it up, which didn't happen for another day or two. But we got water out of the hornswoggled boat. That was good.

Get back over to West and Liberty and we see what's going on. I hook up with a couple of my guys who are now coming in on the recall. Captain of 20 truck and the girl, Adrian Walsh. He looks at me and I look at him and he said well, you know, what else can we do. I said let's try the number 1 train. He said let's do it. We break off, we walk down to Greenwich and Rector, go down the stairs, dust on the platform but no foot prints.

We hopped the turnstile like little hooligans from the tough neighborhood. We jumped out on to the track. One of the guys was like well, what about the train. I said there ain't no train coming here, you know. We leave a guy in case there is a train and we walk north, up the northbound number 1 train track.

We get to where there is an emergency exit, which happened to be right behind the American Stock Exchange. We send a guy up to open the exit. Now we got a little light, we got a little air and we walk up the tracks. We hear water and as we are going, the water is getting to be like up to the rail level.

We see the catch basin in the middle, it's got a few rocks covering it. We kick the rocks away. We got the drain going nice. So the water is going down. Then we keep walking north. We see water, broken pipe in the wall somewhere. We keep going and then we get the solid wall of debris. Checked the other side of the track. Both tracks, two solid walls of debris.

Give it a look, see what we can do, you know, tunnel through or something. That ain't going to happen. Nice try. No cigar. We walked back, we go back up the emergency exit and now I'm starting to get the dust in my eyes. This dust was -- somebody said 30 percent ground glass. There is a company from, I don't know, Brooklyn or Staten Island, with a hydrant that is normally always knocked over because trucks make the turn and knock it over on Carlyle. I said give it a wrench and see what happens. Lo and behold it gets water. Now we are washing the face and all that with this nice water.

Couple of guys go off to Whitehall Hardware. They break in, enter the store and come back with flashlights, tools and stuff like that. We head back and we jump on the pile. We start working.

Needless to say it was a long day. I washed about 4 times. We hooked up with Brian Lustenring, Tony Konczynski, Bryan Platt, Calvanese, what a group, what a real group. We worked our ass off and then we had to take a break. We had to get away from the dust. It was just -- you had to get up wind of the dust. We ended up going into the river, where you could get -- at least the wind coming off the river was clean wind and not dusty wind.

Saw John Morabito, who was the truck chauffeur, still had his radio on him, the only guy with a handie talkie. He is walking around like in a daze. He don't know why he is alive. He has got a whole story to tell. Basically he saw what was going on at West Street. People couldn't come out of the building onto West. He started what I called a conga line and had them go through the lobby, go into the number 1 train and then over to the E train and walk underground and come up at Vesey or come up under at Chambers. Walk the platform of the E train and the A and come up at Church and Chambers, which was a fantastic idea. He had three or four thousand people evacuate that way.

Anyway, needless to say, long day, long night. It got to be four in the morning. I don't know. I lost track of time. Me and Konczynski and Lustenring, we went over to the esplanade and we just laid down on a park bench like a bunch of bums. Took off the bunker gear, feet were soaking wet, socks, we had the socks hanging on the fence to dry. That was good for about 15 minutes, then it started to get a little chilly.

So Tony Konczynski goes off, finds an ambulance and comes back with white sheets. We cover ourselves with white sheets because also the dust was still around, even though it was minimal. We are laying there with white sheets covering us and people are walking back and forth, I guess from the Staten Island Ferry, walking up the esplanade and you hear them talking, and they see the white sheets over these three bodies and they figure we are dead so they shh shh shh, so we were laughing. That worked a little while and we said enough of that shit. Then we got dressed again, soggy boots, soggy socks, came back to 10 and 10. Laid down in the dust, because we were shot.

The next day we did the whole thing all over again, working on the pile in front of quarters. Then things started happening in quarters. We had eye wash, triage, food started showing up, gloves and boots. We had retirees coming in. Former members, Al Selloti with his triple bypass. Freddy Cappetta, Lieutenant in Brooklyn now. We were doing charging stations for the cordless Saws-All, handy talky batteries, flashlights. We were doing our own little one to one exchange on batteries.

We had food, we had -- Tony Konczynski got a hand line and back fed the quarters to feed water into quarters. We had a flushing toilet. I venture to say we had the only flushing toilet south of Chambers Street for the first two days. It was incredible. People that were here know what was here and people that weren't here wouldn't believe it anyway, so why bother telling them.

The day went on and they said 1 Liberty Plaza was falling. You know, chicken little and henny penny, the sky is falling. Tony Konczynski said no, that building has been looking like that for 20 years. Now with the dust laying on the ledge and the way the sun was setting and everything else, everybody looks up and sees a building that is twisting and they all start running away. People getting hurt as they run away. I said stop, stop, stop your running.

Then it gets to be about 6:00. I look out the truck office window and Captain Kelty is in the street. Come on, you got to get out, everybody out of quarters. I said yes, all right. Now I'm by myself. I pack up what I want. I get the names -- Matt Donachie was at the Stuyvesant High School the night before working on the list of the missing.

We went through one by one till we confirmed and denied who was who. The phones were not working so good. Everytime you tried to all somebody to confirm they were home or not home it was tough. I got it down to what I thought was my list of about 11 missing. Got the wives, kids, names, phone numbers, truck office, Engine office, took one last look around. The place was empty, looked out the front door, everybody evacuated, because the building was supposed to fall down. They are yelling at me get out of there, get out of there. I said yes, all right.

I left, headed to the Staten Island Ferry, got some Reverend, the Reverend Vargas from Babylon drove me home to Long Island City. That was day one.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay. Just a couple of questions.

A. THE WITNESS: And two. Day one and two.

Q. Okay. The Lieutenant's name, do you have any idea what it was?

A. Lieutenant Keith Ruby I believe.

Q. Lieutenant Keith Ruby. You don't know where he is assigned, do you?

A. He was in headquarters, white shirt and tie.

Q. You said you saw some pumpers when you were down towards West Street.

A. Right.

Q. Were there any markings on them that you can recall?

A. I think 54 Engine. I'm not sure. Kerry Horgan got the chauffeur from 65 Engine dug out. I'm not sure where that rig was buried.

Q. These were all --

A. Maybe squad 18. I don't know. It was a lot of different companies.

Q. You said Ray Bressingham?

A. He is retired but he was there.

Q. That's what I wanted to know, who he was.

A. He was working with SOC as a retiree.

Q. Those other guys you mentioned, you mentioned all the guys that you hooked up with?

A. My guys basically. Current and former members of 10 and 10.

Q. That's what I wanted to know. Those were all 10 and 10 members?

A. Except for the few people from 20 truck.

Q. You said the chauffeur Ladder 10, he did a great job. Do you know where he was, where his company was operating?

A. 10 truck rolled into tower one on the first alarm.

Q. He was in tower one?

A. In the lobby of tower one.

Q. That's where he started his operation?

A. In the street. He went around the outside, up in the plaza, looked out there and then he was in the lobby. He said he was also feet away from Pete Ganci and when Ganci bought it, he was only a few feet away. Why he was alive and Ganci is not is just one of those things that we don't know.

Q. Okay. Last thing is, in your travels did you see any other companies?

A. All right. Back to that.

Q. Maybe their locations.

A. Back up a step. One of my trips to the front apron, I saw 4 truck come in from West Street heading eastbound on Liberty and they hopped a divider. There is a median between Liberty and the little Trade Center plaza where the tourists get off the busses. I know it's a brand new rig, and I thought about the springs. That's how stupid I am. He hopped the divider, and he parked 4 truck's rig underneath the pedestrian foot bridge that runs from Bankers Trust over to 4 World Trade Center, which was a good move, because the bodies were dropping like water balloons.

He parked the rig under that pedestrian bridge for a little cover. I saw the guys in 4 truck get off, squirrel around, pick up their hooks and cans and whatever they did, masks, and they went to the wall of number two, hugged the wall and then they went in the building.

Also I saw rescue four, they must have parked further away and they walked over. They came across, right in front of my path. I saw Kevin Dowdell. I said how you doing Kevin. I saw Bronco Peersall, and I said where you going Kevin. He said number two, I said, "Yes. That one right over there." That was the last I saw of Kevin Dowdell.

I know rescue 4 and Ladder 4 both went to tower two. I had a visual on that.

Q. Okay, if there is anything else you can remember, you can add it now or that concludes the interview.

A. Well, there was a lot of stuff but that's the gist of it right there.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay, thank you very much. That concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN ANTHONY VARRIALE

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: The time is is 1450 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department, City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual. Captain ANTHONY VARRIALE assigned to Engine Company 24, Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Engine Company 5 in the office regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Captain Varriale, tell me what happened to you on September 11, 2001.

A. Okay. At approximately 8:30 that morning -- I live in Valley Stream, New York. My son picked me up, we were going to go -- I was doing something at his house. We were heading towards Queens, I noticed a large column of smoke on the horizon. I thought it might have been something from Newark. As we got on the Cross Island Parkway headed north, I could see one of the towers of the World Trade Center, smoke coming from it. It was a clear day that day.

I said to my son, let's turn the radio on, something is happening. As we turned the radio on, they had mentioned that a Cessna might have hit the World Trade Center, at which time I told my son to take me back home. I picked up my pick up truck and I headed in towards the quarters of Engine 24.

On the way in, you could see that the towers were hit. I went through the streets of Brooklyn, which most of the civilian population had helped clear the streets off and I got into the Williamsburg Bridge relatively -- maybe 20 minutes. As I was on the Williamsburg Bridge, I saw the second -- the first tower collapse. I actually stopped my truck and I looked out. I couldn't believe what I was seeing.

I responded to quarters of Engine 24, which is located at 6 Avenue and West Houston, where several members were coming in also.

We got our gear. Some of the members I remember that were with me, I can't remember all of them, were fireman William McCarthy, fireman Anthony Salerno, fireman Jeffrey Anstead of Ladder 5, fireman Michael Paolone of Engine 24. Several others and one civilian. We loaded up my pick up truck with first aid equipment, some hose, rollups, whatever we felt we were going to probably need, basically first aid equipment and our fire fighting gear.

At that time, we headed south on Varick Street into West Broadway. We got to about a block south of Chambers, between Chambers and Warren on West Broadway, where I parked my pick up truck. Right around then, I believe the second tower came down, because it was relatively clear at that point as we were heading south. There was lots of people heading north and then when we got out of the van, my memory is a little vague on that, I'm pretty sure that's when the second tower collapsed, because we were hit with dust.

As the dust started settling we noticed there was nothing but vehicles and fire for as far as the eye could see. We actually commandeered a volunteer fire truck. It was the only fire truck we saw at that point. It was just south of Warren on West Broadway. It was from, I believe a vollie -- volunteer company from the Bronx.

My chauffeur, Anthony Salerno, got into the apparatus, we backed it up, because it was in danger of catching fire from the numerous vehicle fires that were on. We found a hydrant, I believe it was Warren and West Broadway, hooked up and stretched down West Broadway. We also hooked up a manifold. We were able to get water into some hand lines and started extinguishing the numerous auto fires and there was two busses, several trucks. As we moved south, some of the fire was communicating into one of the buildings on the west side. We extinguished that. I'm not sure of the address.

When we ran out of line, we shut down the pumper, disconnected the hose line and then went into -- we were now between Vesey and the block north of that. We went into the east side building, stretched off the stand pipe and extinguished a couple of busses, a bus fire, several cars and the apparatus of Engine 28, which was fully involved. That was roughly on the corner of West Broadway and Vesey.

At that time, other firefighters started showing up, Deputy Battalion Chief Paul Ferran of the 41 Battalion, and James Savastano of the First Division assigned to the Second Battalion showed up and we attempted to search and extinguish, at the time which was small pockets of fire in 7 World Trade Center. We were unaware of the damage in the front of 7, because we were entering from the northeast entrance. We weren't aware of the magnitude of the damage in the front of the building.

We made searches. We attempted to put some of the fire out, but we had a pressure problem. I forget the name of the Deputy. Some Deputy arrived at the scene and thought that the building was too dangerous to continue with operations, so we evacuated number 7 World Trade Center. At that time, some of my members went with another officer, I don't remember who it was, to try and search the collapse of -- I guess the number one tower on Vesey Street.

I was with one Firefighter, who I can't remember right now, over to where we were told there was a command post set up, which would be, I think it was West Street and Vesey. But I went down the block north to it, because you couldn't go down Vesey.

When I got there, there was hundreds of firefighters. Chief Fellini was there. I guess he was in charge. He was trying to give people direction. I then went with Firefighter Paolone who ended up meeting him there and Firefighter Jeff Anstead of Ladder 5.

We went south on West Street under the bridge, at which time they were just removing the body of Chief Feehan, Deputy Commissioner Feehan, and then from there, we started searching on what was West Street, south of the first bridge and I operated there for several hours. I helped remove one Firefighter from under the apparatus of Engine 34, with fireman Erik Wiener of Ladder 111, and several other firefighters. I know Erik because I had worked in Brooklyn.

From there I just started working my way over eastward to the north tower. I was there for hours. We ended up stretching a line from somewhere. It was a pumper on West Street, I think, that was still intact. We tried to stretch lines into the pile that would have ended up being just west of number one tower. Trying to extinguish the fires there.

We performed searches, void searches. I was also on the tower, the pile there we called it, when they removed one victim, a male. I believe he was the guy that said he was on the 83 floor or 73 floor. He seemed to be fairly intact. I was at that point where I stayed most of the day because I found a face piece from one of my members.

Actually it was handed to me from a Captain Steven Geraghty and so we stayed in that area. I thought I might be searching for members of Engine 24, while Fireman Palone and Fireman Anstead went further to the tower where they hooked up with Ladder 43 and made contact with Chief Prunty of the Second Battalion, who they said at that time was still alive. I didn't see that myself, but this is what they had told me later on.

I continued operating into the evening, at which time I went back to the quarters of Engine 24 just to freshen up. I stayed there maybe an hour, hour and a half, regrouped with a bunch of other guys, then we went back and I worked through the night, searching voids, and operating with some of my members. We actually had them operating a hose line now. That was on the south tower.

We were there until the day, sometime the next day. I don't remember exactly what time. Maybe around noon. We went back to quarters. Then that's when we went on the 24 hour, 24 hour off, 24 hour on. That's about all I can recall now.

Q. Okay, just a couple of things. When you say you were at, you saw, Engine 34. Where were they located?

A. I'm pretty sure it was the apparatus, what was left. It was crushed, it was buried. It was on West Street. I wasn't sure if it was Engine 34, but Fireman Wiener said it was Engine 34. There were two firefighters trapped, I helped remove one. He was dead. I don't know who it was. He was pretty mangled.

The other one, they just didn't get him out at that time. I ended up operating -- this actually ended going from Engine 34 to the apparatus of Ladder 105, because they believed there were members trapped under that. I worked there for a while. So I wasn't present when they got the second body out.

Q. 105 is also on West Street?

A. Yes.

Q. South of that foot bridge?

A. Yes.

Q. Steve Geraghty you mentioned, where is he from?

A. Well I know him from working in Brooklyn. He is a Captain, I believe. He is not a Captain of 111. I don't know where he was assigned at that time.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay, if you have nothing, else that concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL PALONE

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 12, 2001. The time is 1515. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Michael Palone, fireman first grade, Engine Company 24 of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place in the office of Engine Company 5 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Fireman Palone, please tell me what happened in your own words on September 11th, 2001.

A. On September 11th after the two planes hit the World Trade Center, I heard about the recall over the phone and headed into the city. When I arrived at the firehouse, a bunch of guys were getting into Captain Variale's pickup truck. I grabbed my stuff, jumped in the back of the pickup truck and went down Seventh Avenue down to the site.

As we got down to the site, there were also two car fires. We tried extinguishing car fires on the way down. We had a problem with the water pressure. There was no water pressure out of the hydrants. We tried hooking up to a pumper, basically trying to put out the car fires, not too much success because of the water problem.

We went into World Trade Seven to try and get their standpipe system to possibly use their water off their tank on the roof. Then from there we met a bunch of people outside of 5, hooked up with Darren Lebow and Kevin -- what's Kevin's last name that used to work there?

Anyway, I hooked up with a couple of guys and went into the basement of five, got right next to the collapse, searched for people, searched through the cars in the bottom of five, couldn't find anybody. I went back up to the street level and ended up going around to the front of five where 5 Truck, 24 Engine was and went up onto the mezzanine into the building there and searched through there for a while. We were ordered out of there. We came out of there.

We went back down and hooked up with Craig Monahan, I believe, Jeff Anstead, myself, Bobby Beddia and went from where we were on West Street under the walkway bridge. That would put us in between the two walkway bridges and across the pile of rubble into I believe it was the B stairway, where they were searching for Ladder 6.

We hooked up with a guy from rescue who was lowering down a civilian and tied the rope off from him. A guy from rescue in the top of the staircase lowered the civilian down and then slid down himself and then went down those stairs.

They were getting the woman Sylvia out, basically helped carry her out on the stretcher. 6 came out somewhere there when we were there. 6 Truck came out. We were there for a while trying to get Battalion Chief Prunty, who was trapped under the steel in the bottom of the staircase.

There were a couple of other companies down there; I'm not sure who. We were down there for a while until we were ordered off, because they were worried about Seven coming down. We ended up coming out of there and going off the rubble and then over towards the marina, cleaning up our eyes and just basically getting ourselves back together until we went back to the firehouse. I don't really know times.

Q. Just a couple quick questions. Darren Lebow --

A. 5 Truck.

Q. He was from 5 Truck?

A. Yeah.

Q. You operated with him for quite --

A. Right. When we went down into the bottom of five, we got right next to the bottom of the collapse, and we were in there pretty close. Kevin Anderson was with us. It was me, Lebow, Kevin Anderson.

We basically grabbed any tools we could out of a Port Authority suburban that was down there. Anything that we thought we could use we grabbed and tried to do whatever we could.

Q. But it was just the three of you at that point?

A. It was the three of us at that point. Then when we came back up, we hooked up -- I think 5 Truck was there with the captain of 5 and the rest of 5 Truck and then hooked up with Monahan and Beddia and Anstead and then actually went over to that B stairway.

Q. You saw 5 and 24's rigs?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were they located?

A. 5's ladder was going up to Five World. I believe that was five world, and 24 Engine was just behind them.

Q. On what street?

A. On West Street.

Q. When you say the chief ordered you out -- you didn't say chief. You said somebody ordered you out of the building.

A. Yeah.

Q. Do you know who that was?

A. I think it might have been Blaich. I'm not sure. It was a division chief who was ordering us out for a while.

Q. When you said you hooked up with Monahan, Beddia and all of those guys, those are the members of Engine 24 and Ladder 5, just to clarify that?

A. Yes.

Q. And the guy from rescue that was going down, do you know what rescue it was?

A. I don't know what rescue it was. I think it might have been -- I'm not sure. I don't know.

Q. Okay.

A. He was up above us. He was looking to tie the rope off, I tied it off to the banister, and Jeff Anstead was with me. He went up to see if he could help him, but it was up there and everything was a little compromised. He didn't know what he was stepping on and everything else. It was just a little unstable.

Q. Okay. If you have nothing else, this will conclude the interview.

A. That's it.

Q. Okay. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT MICHAEL HADDEN

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 12th, 2001. The time is 2:15 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Michael Hadden from Engine 35, in the quarters of Engine 35.

Q. Lieutenant, just state the facts as you remember them on September 11th.

A. I was scheduled for education day on September 11th. Education day was canceled. We reported to the quarters of Engine 35. We went down with Engine 35 in a convoy of five other engines. We proceeded south on the West Side Highway.

We had no idea what was going on or what had transpired. We were special called as additional engines after the second fifth. I believe the ticket we got was around 9:50; I'm not sure.

The company from the night before was held over, so I was effectively an extra officer. Battalion Chief Ferran was with me. The company stayed at the staging area. I believe they were at Murray and West Street.

Chief Ferran and myself headed south on West Street. We got around Barclay Street when the second tower, the north tower, started to come down. I took cover next to a fence, and once the dust started to clear, I headed south towards the tower.

There wasn't much that I could see at the time. It was very dusty. I started encountering rigs that were crushed. I made it to the north walkway with two firefighters from 85 Truck who were there. They had been separated from their unit. We searched under the north walkway. There was no signs of life around any of the apparatus.

We came out from the north walkway. I hooked up with two guys from 14 Truck who had come down on their own. This was after the second tower had come down. There was no presence of Fire Department personnel by the crosswalk, by the north walkway at West Street at that time.

Do you want me to tell you what I did the whole day?

Q. No, no, that's fine. What we're interested in is the time around the collapse.

A. I had no handy talky. I had no radio access. I didn't hear anything. When we were heading south on West Street, the first person I actually saw was Chief Mike Telesca being helped north. Then I encountered a lot of people just kind of walking around dazed.

That's about it at the time of the collapse. The rest of the day, I remember pretty much exactly what I did but my time frame is all messed up.

Q. That's okay.

When the north tower came down, just prior to it, was there anything you saw with the north tower that would indicate it was coming down? Did you see anything or it was just coming down?

A. No, it just started coming down. Just the noise -- we were heading south on West Street, and Chief Ferran and myself were saying to each other that thing isn't going to come down, not knowing that the south tower had already come down.

It seemed like it was in slow motion until it got about a block away, and then it was fast.

Q. Thanks a lot, Mike.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 2:19, and this concludes the interview.

LIEUTENANT JAMES CASEY

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 12th, 2001, and the time is 1:45 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant JAMES CASEY from Engine 91, in the quarters of Engine 91.

Q. Lieutenant, just state the facts as you remember them on September 11th.

A. We responded when the plane hit the south tower, which would be Two World Trade. They just told us to respond and they would send us a ticket later.

We responded on West Street. We parked the rigs I guess you would call it north of the north pedestrian bridge. We were just north of that. We responded to the command post at the World Financial Center, number Two World Financial Center.

While there, it was called over the command center that there was a civilian employee, an engineer from Two World Trade Center. He said he knew how we could control the valves to increase the water pressure in the building.

So we were ordered to go over there. However, we did not have forcible-entry tools. I sent my chauffeur back to the rig to obtain the forcible-entry tools and, while waiting, Two World Trade Center collapsed.

We ran into the garage that is located at Two World Financial Center. I later on found out that two of my men ran out the rear, and I and another one of my men responded to the front of the building. General chaos ensued.

Me and that one member went back looking for the chauffeur, to the rig, could not find him, and I ordered -- that member was a qualified chauffeur, to move the rig out of harm's way, I guess.

We moved the rig out of the way, and then I went back looking for my chauffeur and the second one came down. So I got caught in the smoke from that one. I went back out again I guess up to Murray.

Q. Where were you when the second tower collapsed?

A. I was --

Q. On West Street?

A. -- on West Street, making my way back, looking for my chauffeur.

After the collapse, I got back into the clear, and I found the two missing members. Then I went back in again and found my chauffeur, who was being treated by EMS. He was taken to the hospital.

Then the whole company got together again, and we tried to go back in but that was it. We were told to go off to the side and rest. That was it for the day.

Q. Prior to the collapse did you hear any maydays or anything like that?

A. I'm trying to think. I know there were maydays all over the place that day. I can't say for sure.

Q. No particular company or anything sticks out in your mind?

A. No. There were maydays that were coming all over all the time. Between that and the jumpers, that was basically it.

Q. Okay.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 1:49, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER GEORGE RODRIGUEZ

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time is 11:01 a.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the New York City Fire Department, Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with George Rodriguez, firefighter first grade of Ladder 22, in the quarters of Ladder 22.

Q. George, just tell us the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. On September 11th we weren't dispatched to go down to the World Trade Center until the second plane hit the building. We responded by getting on the West Side Highway at 96th Street and subsequently went southbound until we reached the towers.

I was assigned to Ladder Company 22, but I'm a recent transfer from the engine. I happen to be an engine company chauffeur and was assigned to drive Engine 76 that day.

En route we met up with Ladder Company 25 on the West Side Highway. We traveled southbound together and arrived at the towers at approximately the same time.

Upon arrival I dropped off the members of my company, which was Engine 76 that day, on Vesey and West. They proceeded with their equipment to the command post, and I proceeded to go east on Vesey to seek out a source of water and/or to assist any other chauffeurs I saw down there.

I first parked my apparatus approximately 75 feet east of West Street on Vesey. I sized up the situation. Pretty much all the hydrants in the area were taken.

At that point I grabbed some standpipe tools from my apparatus, and I proceeded to walk east on Vesey to assist any other chauffeurs as necessary. Pretty much all of that was being done.

I remember at that point looking up at the towers. The operation was growing in size. Many civilians were coming out the windows or being blown out the windows.

As much as I didn't want to, I went up on the concourse in between the north and south towers to actually see if there was any help I could render to anyone; there wasn't.

I came back down to the street. I met up with Commissioner Von Essen at that time. I told the Commissioner what I saw on the concourse. His response is not that important.

So I proceeded to get back into my rig and drive down Vesey. I took a U turn and I came back. I saw the maintenance crew to Seven World Trade Center standing there watching the building. I gathered them up and asked them if they had fire pumps in the building. They did.

I had a Siamese directly across Washington Street on Vesey going into the towers, so I used the maintenance men and an engine company chauffeur from 26 Engine named Mike Incantalupo. I used him to hook up a source of water from their fire pumps to my rig and into the World Trade Center, which the Siamese was located right below Six World Trade Center, the U.S. Customs building.

At that point we were supplying the standpipe Siamese. All was going well with that. The operation was growing in intensity. At that point the preliminary sounds of the collapse started, the loud crackling sounds. We all started running, because I think the energy coming down through the cylinders of the building because of the pancake, the energy came out first and then the actual debris started coming.

So we all ran. Myself and the chauffeur of 26 Engine grabbed about 30 civilians as well as the maintenance men, and we put them all in the basement of Seven World Trade Center. At that point all power was off in the buildings. The only means of egress was out onto Washington Street, which was totally covered with debris and ash. You couldn't get out the door. There was no means of egress from that particular point in the basement.

So I gave a mayday. I heard a lot of other maydays on the radio; I couldn't even pinpoint to you which ones. I gave a mayday: "Mayday, mayday, mayday. This is Engine 76 chauffeur to command post. I'm trapped in the basement of Seven World Trade Center with approximately 30 civilians and another fireman." I got no answer, but I figured guys were in much worse situations, so I just shut up on the radio and listened.

Two of the civilians didn't want to stay in the basement. They wanted to get out because it was a smoke condition down there and a lot of ash. You couldn't really breathe that well, but it was much better than outside.

We tried to block the door so they wouldn't go out. The situation wasn't going to get good with that, so I stepped aside, let them run out. Unfortunately for them they ran to the left, which happened to be right towards Vesey Street, which was the wrong way to go. I never saw those two again.

It seemed like an eternity. As it started lifting, myself and the chauffeur of 26 Engine removed all the civilians to the right down Washington Street towards Barclay and evacuated them from the area.

At that point we still were hearing maydays over the radio from right in our area, from Vesey and Washington. So we made our way down to try and see if we can help another fireman. Actually the mayday was coming from -- I'm not sure if it was Vesey and Washington. There was a bridge there going from the Trade Center to seven world, and it was right under that area we were hearing the maydays from.

So we went down Washington, took a left, which is east on Vesey, and we started looking for this guy that was in trouble. No luck in finding him.

At that point that sound came back, and the second tower started to go, which happened to be tower number one. We did everything we could to make it back to Washington and turn northbound on Washington. As we turned the corner, the rubble started coming down, but the energy caught us first. I think it was a lucky thing because the energy actually picked us up and threw us about 40 feet.

We rolled on the ground. We kind of got separated. I had my mask on.

Q. You had your face piece on too?

A. No. I just had the mask on and the cylinder turned on. The other chauffeur didn't, so when we got separated he was in a real bad way.

I looked up. That was it. I didn't really realize I was alive until I started hearing him call my name. I searched around for him. I donned my face piece. I searched around for him, found him, buddy-breathed with him. I took him down Washington, east on Barclay, north on whatever street that is and put him in an ambulance.

At that point I went back and I started searching for my company, which I thought both companies were gone because they had gone into the command post. After the second collapse there wasn't really much chatter on the radio. So the silence was actually the worst part of it all, you know?

Basically that's it. I really can't recall which companies I saw going into the buildings.

Q. Okay.

A. I saw companies going up on to the concourse. That's where a lot of civilians were coming and hitting the ground like water balloons. Prior to the collapses we grabbed a couple civilians out of there.

It was so crazy at that moment. There was just no answers on the radio. You just did all you could. My rig was gone. I thought my companies were gone. I knew a lot of other companies were gone. You just picked an area and started digging.

You actually had to pass over seriously injured people to help more seriously injured people. That was insane in itself. The conception of that is crazy.

Q. Were you able to meet up with your company later or not?

A. The first person I saw was Chief McNally. I guess whatever situation he had been involved with, as soon as the situation got to a point where he could make it towards the buildings again, he came back in. He could barely even talk because of everything that was going on, myself included.

I heard Chief Harten from the 10th Battalion on the radio trying to get in touch with McNally, and McNally's radio died. So I said, "Don't worry, Chief, I'll send it for you." I couldn't get Harten either on the radio. The reason I know them, because they were both battalion chiefs here.

I told Chief McNally, "I'll go over there and I'll go personally deliver your message." I went over and I did that. On the way we had helped a couple people out. On the way to go deliver the chief's message, I ran into my engine officer, Frank Farrington.

At that point we started to try and get a head count, all right, what have we got, who's alive, who's not alive. Let's start with our company, we'll group up, we'll go and get whoever is there.

There was a lot of firemen. The firemen that were remaining after the collapses were trying to regroup with their guys and then go back and help other people. That's pretty much what I found.

It turned out that all the guys in the engine that day made it. Then we started hearing the different truck names, they made it, and the only one in question at that point was Chief Picciotto and his aide, Gary Sheridan.

Then we got the orders that we were going to regroup. Bring out another command post. I'm not sure exactly where it was. It was probably north on the West Side Highway. Way north on the West Side Highway, they got another command post ready. They had a full recall. I met up with my company, and I came back and we started searching for people.

That's pretty much my whole account of the situation.

Q. All right. Thanks a lot, George.

A. Thank you, Chief.

FIREFIGHTER FERNANDO CAMACHO

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time is 11:17 a.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan, Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Fernando Camacho of Ladder 22, in the quarters of Ladder 22.

Q. Fernando, describe the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. On the morning of September 11th I was on house watch, and it was about 8:00. A little bit after 8, because I was watching the news, I saw the first airplane or it would seem, an explosion on one of the towers; I believe it was the north tower. Chief Picciotto came down, called the dispatcher and went out on his way down.

Approximately 15 minutes later, both the engine and the truck, we got our tickets to go down to the World Trade Center. It took us about maybe 20 minutes to get there. We came out of our truck prepared to receive our orders, walked down to the command post which was across the street on the West Side Highway. It was across the street from the north tower. We waited there approximately about 15 minutes for our orders.

After we waited for a while, we were told to go into the lobby of the Vista Hotel. We proceeded along the right side of the highway, basically the same side of the command post, down to the south pedestrian bridge, under the pedestrian bridge, to avoid being hit by bodies and debris going down.

We came in through the corner of Liberty and the West Side Highway into the Vista Hotel. There was a setup, a small command post or small gathering of firefighters there with a couple of chiefs. I can't tell who they were. I don't remember that.

We were in there approximately another ten minutes. Lieutenant Riley came back from talking to the chief, and we were assigned to go to the 75th floor. We got our equipment together and started walking up. Ladder 25 had gone ahead of us about five minutes before we got assigned to go to the 75th floor.

We went across the lobby of the hotel, going north, and we exited and made a right going towards the second tower, the south tower. We must have walked about 100-200 feet to revolving doors, which led into a hallway to where the mall was. I could see maybe 20, 25 civilians and I believe Ladder 25, which was about another 100 to 150 feet ahead of us.

As we came in through the revolving doors, the lights went out. A second or two later everything started to shake. You could hear explosions. We didn't know what it was. We thought it was just a small collapse.

As I looked straight ahead of me, I saw total darkness. Everything was coming our way like a wave. The firefighters that were ahead of us and the civilians that were ahead of us totally disappeared.

We turned around. We were all pretty much within ten feet of each other: lieutenant, chauffeur, roof, OV, can. As we turned around, I ran probably maybe ten feet and that's when the body of the building or body of the collapse hit, and we were flying through the air basically. I must have flown 30, 40 feet through the air.

Then total quiet. You couldn't breathe. You couldn't see anything. None of the equipment worked. My face piece was gone, flashlight, helmet. There were about maybe five or six civilians around us. We tried to get them out, as we tried to make our way out.

We did a perimeter search. Everything behind us was blocked and to our sides. We came back out basically through the same way we came into the building. We were facing the West Side Highway now, but there was a hole in the side of the building. So that's how we found our way out.

The only thing I know is that it was the roof, the OV and myself that got out. I had the can. Lieutenant Riley and the chauffeur we couldn't find. We didn't know if they were trapped or they made their way out in some other fashion. We found out later that they did make their way out, through another exit or behind us.

The West Side Highway was still pretty clear. There wasn't a lot of debris in front of us. We made our way north underneath the pedestrian bridge that's to the north. As we approached the rig again, I was being tended by EMS for head wounds.

Five minutes after that the north tower started to lean.

Q. You saw it leaning?

A. Yeah.

What happened was that as I was standing there and getting bandaged, somebody said the tower is leaning. So me and Gorman -- he had the irons. We turned around and looked, and we could see the tower leaning. As it started to lean, it just came straight down. Now we're running again.

Q. Which way was it leaning? Towards West Street?

A. The tower was leaning not towards -- it leaned somewhat northwest but not -- it came down pretty straight after it leaned. It didn't really continue to lean. It just leaned a little bit and then came straight down.

Basically that's it. We ran and we went into the high school that's I believe somewhere --

Q. On Chambers.

A. Chambers, yeah. It might be Chambers, a little further up from Chambers Street. We came back out after the cloud passed us and started helping out people that couldn't breathe or were injured.

That's basically the bulk of the information I can give.

Q. Fine. Let me get one thing straight. From the time you noticed the leaning to the time of it coming down, are we talking about seconds here?

A. No more than three, four seconds.

Q. All right. Thank you for all your help, Fernando.

A. No problem.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN MALLEY

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: It's December 12th, 2001. The time is 11:31 a.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan, Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter John Malley of Ladder 22, in the quarters of Ladder 22.

Q. John, just tell us the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. We responded on the second fifth alarm, work our way down. The streets were kind of cleared, and the police had everything opened. We got there pretty fast; I don't know how fast, but record time to get all the way down there from here.

We pulled up on West Street, maybe a block away from the north tower, maybe half a block; I'm not sure. We grabbed our gear and worked our way down. We were right under the north tower when we realized people were jumping right very close to us. So we had to run across the street to avoid being hit by debris and people.

As we're halfway across the street, we hear on the radio about an urgent message or a mayday message about a third plane en route. So we kind of froze there. We said now what do we do? Do we go back into the building or take cover under where the command post was in the garages.

So the men went to the garage, and the officer went to the command post. We stood there and watched everybody jumping and waiting for our assignments, for our officer to come back.

People started to jump with such a -- it was maybe one jumper every five seconds at one point, every ten seconds. Then they just started jumping like one every one second, two seconds. There were people just coming down like it was raining people.

One of the officers -- I don't remember who -- said that's it, we've got to do something. Truck companies on the left, engine companies on the right, we'll start going single file. We can't wait any longer.

So we were going in not knowing where this third plane, whether this plane was coming or not. I remember hearing I think it was Ganci asking if we could get confirmation on whether the military can down the plane or not. I didn't hear whether it was or wasn't. All I know is we were going in regardless.

We proceeded to hug the west side of West Street to avoid any debris. We went from the north walkway to the south walkway pedestrian bridge, where we went from the pedestrian bridge one at a time, ran into the Liberty entrance of the Vista Hotel.

At that point we were just mulling around in the lobby, waiting for our assignments. I believe I might have seen the guys from 25. I was kind of shocked, so I don't really know who I was talking to.

I was dreading walking up the stairs. I was worried about having to hump those stairs, because my heart was already racing about 150 beats a minute. It was racing, and I knew that claiming those stairs were going to make it almost unbearable.

We proceeded. We got our assignment to work the 75th floor and above of the south tower. We proceeded through. We went north through the Vista Hotel lobby into the atrium, I believe, of the north tower, made a right turn, proceeded east in the atrium, preparing to go through revolving doors into -- I don't know because it was pitch-black. We were walking into darkness.

As we walked through those revolving doors, that's when we felt the rumble. I felt the rumbling, and then I felt the force coming at me. I was like, what the hell is that? In my mind it was a bomb going off.

The pressure got so great, I stepped back behind the columns separating the revolving doors. Then the force just blew past me. It blew past me it seemed for a long time. In my mind I was saying what the hell is this and when is it going to stop?

Then it finally stopped, that pressure which I thought was a concussion of an explosion. It turns out it was the down pressure wind of the floors collapsing on top of each other. At that point everything went black, and then the collapse came. It just rained on top of us. Everything came. It rained debris forever. I was semiburied. I thought I might be the only one alive at that point, because it was just an incredible amount of debris falling around us.

Although I was relatively unhurt -- it was miraculous. I couldn't believe I was still alive, with the amount of debris that came down. At that point I was amazed I was still alive. When I stood up, I thought I was going to drown in the dust, because I didn't know the dust was coming because it was pitch-black.

Then I went to put on my mask to don the face piece. I don't know if my face was so covered with dust or the mask was covered with dust, but it was pretty useless.

I hopped up when I could. I heard one of my members calling Ladder 22 to have a roll call. So we pretty much were scurrying around in the dark, we found each other, everybody but the lieutenant. We couldn't find the lieutenant. We had all five members.

There were secondary explosions, I don't know, aerosol cans or whatever. But we're in the darkness. We see basically the glow of a flashlight and still things coming down. The noise, the explosions, whatever it was. I don't know, we just realized we had to get the heck out of there.

We still couldn't breathe. There was still heavy dust. So we started to make our way out. We said let's dig our way out and then we'll come back for the lieutenant.

As I started to proceed in the direction I felt was the way I came in, I felt wind, so I walked towards the wind. The guys I was with were getting further away, and I was trying to explain to them that it's this way. I said, "It's this way. It's this way. I can feel the wind." They were saying, "No, no. It's this way." So I continued on my own.

I met a civilian. The civilian asked me what he should do. I said, "Stay with me. I'm going to walk into the wind, and we'll get out of here." I continued to walk, and then I realized that I was about a foot away from a fire truck. I felt I must be outside now, although I wasn't a hundred percent sure because I could have been in a garage. I don't know because it was still completely dark.

As I was at the fire truck, I heard my lieutenant calling me, so I answered him. I relayed to him that everybody was okay and we were working our way outside. He said he's on his way outside, that we would meet outside.

That's when I realized I was outside, because something landed right behind me. It sounded like a body. The same sound that I heard before when the bodies were landing was similar to the sound that I just heard.

Then it occurred to me that I was in harm's way right now, because I'm underneath this thing and I could get hit and not know because I can't see it coming. So I decided to run what I thought was west. It turns out it was. I ran across the street. I was tripping over people and hoses and everything.

I worked my way up to that green fence. There was a green fence. I had worked my way back into the Vista Hotel, and that's how I got out. I could start to see daylight north. So I started walking towards the daylight. The first time I stopped I was under the north foot bridge.

While I was standing there, things started to clear up. One of the chiefs that I know, Chief McNally, told me to stand post on Vesey and West Street and try to get everybody I could to go north to get away from the collapse zone.

So while I was standing there, EMS workers started to try to clean me up because I was completely covered in dust. My eyes were almost sealed shut with the dust.

While I was there I saw a few guys, Kevin Gorman and Camacho. I told them we have to work our way north from here. I don't know where the other guys were. I just remember pretty much at that point hearing on the police radio that the building looked like -- the north tower was going to come down.

At that point I didn't know the building came down. I thought I was still in the explosion. I didn't know the whole building had come down.

So while I was on the corner of Vesey and West, the police, everybody, started herding everybody north of there, saying that the building was coming down, the building was coming down.

So I got to about Barclay and west, and I looked up and I started to see the building crumbling down. That's when I turned around and just started running. I believe I dove in the bushes around Murray Street and was engulfed again in the cloud.

That's pretty much it. Then we worked our way north to the command post. We were relieved there by the guys that were on the recall. They started taking our masks and gear and everything.

I was so covered with insulation dust and everything, I was itching like crazy. I hosed myself off on West Street. It wasn't doing anything, so we all got together at that point. We were standing at the command post, wherever it was, north of the Trade Center.

At that point the lieutenant said he was going to go let them know that all our members were accounted for. We told him that we were going to try to find a local firehouse to go shower off.

That was it.

Q. Okay, John. Thank you very much.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 11:45, and this concludes the interview.

LIEUTENANT FRANCIS FARRINGTON

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

CHIEF KENAHAN: It's 11:58 a.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan, Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Lieutenant Francis Farrington of Engine 76, in the quarters of Engine 76.

Q. Francis, just tell me the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. We were in the firehouse and we had seen -- we had the television on and we saw some tape of the first plane into the first building.

Q. The north tower.

A. The north tower. At that time the second plane struck the second tower and immediately Chief Picciotto contacted the dispatcher and informed him that we needed to double the response assignment. He jumped in his battalion car and he responded, informed the dispatcher he was going to the World Trade Center.

Shortly thereafter we received a ticket, and the ticket was for the second fifth alarm for the second tower. We responded second due on the second fifth.

We responded down the West Side Highway. Approximately three blocks from the World Trade Center, we received a radio transmission from the Manhattan dispatcher that advised all the units responding in on the second fifth alarm to report in to the command post on West Street.

We momentarily parked the apparatus under the pedestrian bridge just north of Liberty Street. We exited the apparatus. The chauffeur positioned, attempted to take a position on the north side of the towers to impede the Siamese. I'm sure he can inform you the specifics on that if he hasn't done so already.

At that point we directed our members to return with rollups, so we set up in front of Two World Financial Center on West Street. The command post and staging area was located in front of a parking garage.

We reported in, we stand fast. We were waiting for our assignment when the south tower collapsed. At that point my members and myself and some other companies took refuge into the parking garage. We felt that was our best protection at that point. We headed into the garage.

My concern at that point was to shelter my company and also find an alternative means out of the garage. I did a quick check in the building and I found -- I hoped to find and I did find a stairway leading up to the garage. We found the exit, hooked up a search rope and we stretched the search rope back into the garage, because at that point various personnel, civilian and firemen personnel, had scattered at that point.

We got them on the search rope, got them up into the tower, up about two flights. We were on the west side of Two World Financial Center and were heading towards the water. We didn't receive orders at that point. We tried to regroup in the staging area along the Hudson River at that point.

We awaited orders at that point when the second tower -- we were forming up in the staging area when the second tower collapsed.

Q. Where exactly was the staging area?

A. We attempted to find the staging area at Vesey and north river. Different battalions were reporting in, and we were trying to group together. At that point or shortly thereafter, the second tower collapsed.

After it had collapsed, we regrouped and were ordered by the command chief -- I don't know his name -- to conduct a perimeter search along Vesey Street and West Street. We did so. The conditions were very quiet and very poor visibility. It was almost like we had a blizzard there.

During the search we were ordered by one of the battalions to move north above -- towards Stuyvesant High School -- under the overpass at Chambers Street, because at that point it was feared that Six World Trade Center was going to collapse. It did so later in the afternoon.

While at the command post some people I saw that eventually were, killed or missing, Chief Ganci, Donald Burns, Chief Downey, Captain Stackpole, Chaplain Juose. As I was crossing West Street, I saw Safety Chief or SOC Chief Paolillo.

That's pretty much the story at that point. If there's any other people, I'll let you know. As far as companies reporting in, Ladder 22 was with us at the staging area and ordered into the building. I believe they were ordered into the south tower, and they were on their way through the north tower, I believe, into the south tower when the south tower came down. They were apparently inundated and buried in the lobby. Their members could probably give you more specifics there.

Reports of Ladder 25, I didn't see them directly, but some of the men reported they saw them entering an elevator and were never heard from again. Lieutenant Nichols talks about contact with people in 4 Truck, so he may be able to give you more information. He's in Engine 74.

I think that's it for now. If I had more, I'd give it to you.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 12:05, and this interview is concluded.

FIREFIGHTER JOHN BREEN

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 12th, 2001. The time is 3:17 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with John Breen, firefighter fourth grade from Engine 74. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Engine 74.

Q. John, just tell us the events of September 11th.

A. On that morning we got the run -- after the second building was hit, that's when we got the run. It was after 9:00. It came over the voice alarm. The whole battalion was called to go. us, 25 Truck, 47 Engine, 76 and 22 and 35 and 40 I believe were the companies that I heard over the voice alarm to respond.

We went down the West Side Highway. We had a clear go all the way down. It was no problem as far as traffic going down that way. We pulled up on the West Side Highway. We were on West Street. Where we parked I believe was Vesey Street. I probably will tell you about that later on. I'm almost positive it was Vesey Street where we parked our rig.

As we parked there, one of the other trucks I noticed that was there was 25 Truck. I believe Joe Collins from 25 Truck. I believe that was who he was. He was riding extra for 25. I heard he was supposed to go to a detail to 76 and 22.

I was just talking to one of the details that's working here today. He's from 25. He said Joe Collins was riding extra. He came over to our rig, and he was asking for a mask, and he was given our chauffeur's mask.

Myself, Lieutenant Nichols, Jeff Johnson, Pat Carey and Ruben Correa were walking down West Side to West Street underneath the pedestrian bridge. We were walking towards the Marriott Hotel. I was told by Lieutenant Nichols that dispatch called him over the radio and we were told to report to the Marriott Hotel, the old Vista Hotel, which is Three World Trade Center.

As we were walking underneath, we didn't see any bodies falling out. We did see one body on the ground, and that's when the lieutenant told us to walk as far away from the building as we could and just to keep our heads up for any falling bodies.

We walked into the lobby of the Marriott. The only other company I saw that I knew down there at the time that I know was 47 Engine. The chief that was working there that morning, I wish I knew who he was -- I really don't know -- at the command center. I really don't know what his name was, but he was telling us to -- the engines to line up on one side and the trucks on the other side.

We were told first we were going to go into the south tower. Then there was a report of people stuck or possible hotel guests still up in the Marriott. A couple of units were told to go up there.

The companies I do know that went up there with us is 74 Engine, 54 Engine, 11 Truck and I believe, but I am not positive, 23 Engine. We were told to go up to the 22nd floor. We took the elevator up to the 18th floor. We walked up four flights of stairs to the top floor.

Up on the top floor, it was a pool, spa, gym equipment, saunas. It was just a workout area and a spa area with a couple of office spaces. We did see part of -- I didn't see it, but Jeff Johnson told me later on he did see part of the landing gear actually fell right through the roof and it was in one of the Jacuzzis in another room.

There was nobody up there. We did a search up there. There was no fire up there either, no bodies to report. We were going to take an elevator down. I don't believe there was an elevator on 22. We walked down one flight.

We went down the south stairwell. We walked it down one flight to the 21st floor. We went to the elevator, which is more -- from the south stairwell, we walked a little bit north down the hallway, waiting for the elevator. There was about 20 of us. Again, this was 54 Engine, 74, 11 Truck and I believe 23 Engine.

As we were waiting for the elevator to take us down, it was running a little too slow or stuck on one of the floors. My lieutenant, Lieutenant Nichols, said we're better off walking down. We were going to go down I believe to the lobby, and I think we were going to go to the south tower, which is I believe connected, somehow connected to the Marriott.

We started walking down the hallway towards the south stairwell. It was my company that was leading the way. Pat Carey I believe was in front, Jeff Johnson, Lieutenant Nichols, myself, Ruben Correa, then the other companies.

As we were walking, that's when the south tower came down. Pretty much we just stood where we were. There was nowhere we could go. We were just stuck in this hallway.

Pretty much when all was said and done, we gathered ourselves. We were doing a head count as far as my company, and we noticed that we were calling for Ruben and Ruben was behind me in the hallway. Him and the other companies were behind us. I was about ten feet away in the hallway from being one of the missing. As far as we turned around and we looked, that side of the hallway was all covered in debris and rubble. All the lights were out. There were no lights. We had to use flashlights.

So it was just basically four of us that got out. The chauffeur, by the way, was back at the rig. The chauffeur did not go with us. He was back at the rig. That was Mike Shagi. I forgot to mention that earlier.

So pretty much at this point it was the three companies I just mentioned and Ruben Correa that was trapped. It was about 16 guys, roughly. There was about four of us that were still on that floor.

We called a mayday. We couldn't hear anything. Nobody responded. We didn't know what was going on. We didn't even know that the whole building came down. We called a mayday. We couldn't hear anything. However, we did hear one mayday, and I believe it was from 4 Truck, one of the members from 4 Truck. His mayday was given. He didn't know what floor he was on. He was just saying that he was with 4 Truck, he was running out of air, please come get him.

We couldn't do anything at that point. We just were trying to get out to guys that we had. We were trying to find a void. We started moving some of the rubble pieces. We couldn't find anything and started yelling. We called for guys' names and tried to listen for any names. We couldn't hear anything.

We walked a floor down below, which is the 20th floor, and there was more rubble that way. Basically we saw, okay, we're trapped inside of all this debris. There were two floors of rubble. My lieutenant made the decision at that point for us we have to get out, try to get some help, especially for the guys trapped and for the guy who was calling the mayday for 4 Truck.

We went down the south stairwell. We met up with members from 12 Truck, and there were some other members. I don't remember who they were. When we went down, there were about ten members in all that we met up with.

We got down to about the sixth floor. They were in one of the hotel suites. I believe it was the presidential suite. I heard later on that's what it was. This was on the sixth floor. I heard it was looking out -- later on Jeff Johnson -- I'm only going by what he said. I don't know what we were looking at outside this suite. There was a whole section of the building that was gone. I was told later on that that was West Street that it was out looking over.

Basically the bottom line was we were going to lower ourselves down by rope because we heard from 12 Truck that they couldn't go any further down the stairwell. This is on the sixth floor of the south stairwell we went down. They were going to lower themselves by rope.

I told them we passed some roof rope on the way down. A couple guys went up to get it. We even breached a wall, and me and Pat Carey were tying off two and a half lengths. We were going to even use some of the rollups to lower ourselves down.

My officer said this is just too dangerous, it's too unstable to do this. He made the decision to try to do something. Him and the senior man felt that they could do something as far as maybe there's a way to get down the stairwell that we overlooked.

It was a good thing we did, because when we went down the stairwell, we went down about a floor or a half landing, and Jeff Johnson hopped over one of the railings, started moving sheetrock. It was just lightweight sheetrock. It wasn't nothing heavy-duty or extra heavy or anything like that. It was just basic lightweight sheetrock. He started moving it out of the way.

He went down to about the fifth or the fourth floor landing or the fourth floor. He yelled back up that there were some people down there. There were some civilians. We were later on told that they worked with The New York Times or Time magazine. We still don't know what it was. There were five businessmen, all men. To this day I still don't even know who they are. I tried to contact the, and tried through New York Times, but I got no response.

Basically everybody else at that point started following us down, just started coming one after another, started going down the stairwell.

I heard later on -- in fact, I went to his memorial service. I heard a couple of guys from 12 Truck made the decision to go back up and see if they could help out the mayday from 4

Truck. I heard one of them was Mike Mullan, the lieutenant, and I think a rotating fireman. I wish I knew his name, but I don't. But I heard that they made the decision to go back up to try to help out the mayday.

We made our way down to about the third floor, the rest of us. It was maybe about ten in all, probably about like four of us from 74 and maybe six from 12 truck and a few others from -- I don't know what other company it was. I still don't know to this day.

We got down to about the third floor with also the five businessmen. I think we were facing east at that point. I would say we were facing east or maybe north. I'm just looking at the way the building was shaped right here. It might have been the north section of the building, facing north or east, either way.

When we got down there, Jeff Johnson and Pat Carey hopped out. There was more or less like a little patio about half a story down that they hopped out on. There was a lightweight beam that they situated where we could get these civilians down.

Either way, you could slide down this beam or you could go down the other half landing and hop over. This is as far as we can go, because this whole section of the third floor was still open like that. This was a big opening to get outside.

I was staying back. I wanted to feel like I was doing something. I was helping out these civilians, making sure that they got down the beam, that they slid down the beam okay.

It got to a point where everybody was starting to get out. It was me, two more civilians left and maybe two guys I believe from 12 Truck that were still in there waiting to get out, and that's when the north tower started to come down. We just kind of stood and braced where we were.

One of the civilians with me was about 80 years old. As the building was coming down, I was yelling to see if he was still there. He said he was. I held his hand just to make sure we were together in case we were trapped.

When the dust settled, the hole was open and we were lucky enough that that happened.

Everybody was pretty much scattered all over the place. My lieutenant was in front of me. That half landing or patio that he was on where the beam was situated, he was down there. He was a little bit trapped, but he was able to get out. There was all kinds of rubble all around him. He was very lucky that he was alive. It was sort of like a bunker that he was in. It was just all debris around him. He was able to squeeze his way out of that.

Two of the brothers from 12 Truck, they were okay, and the two civilians were okay. I heard Jeff Johnson yelling -- I found out later on that he had gone to the second floor. There was a way to get in there. There was some kind of a sliding door.

He had gone around a corner of the building, which I believe would have been the south side or possibly the east side of the building. I'm really not positive. He had gotten down to the second floor and hid behind a beam. He was with three of the civilians in that hallway.

Pat Carey, he was yelling for Pat. I didn't know where Pat was either. I thought Pat was gone. Somehow he had gotten down to the second floor, but he lost contact with us. He didn't have a radio. We had lost him. I thought he was gone.

I got out. I was helping the civilians down. Once we got out, Lieutenant Nichols got himself out. At that point I was yelling for Pat. I was yelling and yelling. At this point we knew we couldn't even do a mayday. We were just trying to get ourselves out. Myself and the lieutenant and the two other guys from 12 Truck, we helped the two civilians out. We walked them out.

By the way, at this point I don't know what happened to the other members. I think and I hoped that they did -- I'm pretty sure that they did because I met up with 12 Truck. All of their guys got out. I heard later on that the only guys that didn't get out -- all the guys that survived the first collapse, the only ones that didn't get out was Mike Mullan, the officer, and the rotator that went up to respond to the mayday. I heard later on that they got out.

Somehow they went the wrong way.

So the only ones at that point that I saw visibly get out was myself, Lieutenant Nichols, the two civilians and then the two guys from 12 Truck. Jeff Johnson, I thought he had gone around another direction and got the three civilians out another way, because I did hear his voice but I heard he was okay.

Although he was on the second floor, I didn't know at the time he was where he was. But he was pretty much stuck on the second floor. I thought he had gone out through another section of the building and walked out.

That's how confusing it was. Everybody pretty much was just trying to get out and walk their own way. As far as me, I heard Jeff's voice, and the lieutenant said he was okay. So I knew Jeff enough to be a senior man, I knew he was okay. The only ones that I was really worried about at that point that I knew was missing was Pat Carey. So I yelled and called his name.

We couldn't do anything at that point, so we started walking out. I believe we were in the atrium? Is this called the atrium?

Q. I'm not sure.

A. I believe we were walking in the atrium. I think we were walking towards Two World Trade Center. The south tower, I think we were walking pretty much among the rubble and everything there. I think we got out and walked out on Liberty Street.

As we were walking among the debris of the fallen building, a couple guys from rescue came over. They helped us with the two civilians. I told them that there were missing members. I pointed to the Marriott. I told them basically that on the 21st floor, it was the first collapse.

We had the three companies plus Reuben, where they were trapped. But it was useless by that point because the floor wasn't even there. There was only about four stories to that building left.

The other one I talked about was Pat Carey. I said I saw him last on the third floor of the Marriott. It ended up that Pat got out okay. He was trapped on the second floor. He was actually separated from Jeff and everybody else, and he actually jumped out, found an opening and jumped out, and actually fractured his cocyx bone and has several herniated disks.

Jeff Johnson made it out too. Although I didn't know at the time, I thought he was out, but he was still stuck on the second floor with the three civilians. He made his way out another way. They kind of finagled their way down and they got out okay.

From there, me and the lieutenant basically just walked towards the park. What's the name of that park? Battery Park. That's where I met Jeff. Basically we were calling for Mike Shagi. We found out later on when he was running he was getting short breath and everything like that, and he went to the hospital for some air, to be treated. We found out he was okay later on.

As I mentioned before, we were on Vesey Street when we were out where the park was. We were walking on some of the south streets, I guess Albany Street or Carlisle, one of those streets. We kind of made our way up Trinity or Church, and then we kind of made our way down to Vesey. That's when we found our rig over there. Our rig was parked on Vesey.

I still don't know all the companies that were with us that we ran into in after the second collapse. But as far as I know, the companies that we did meet up with was 11 Truck, 54 Engine and I'm pretty sure it was 23 Engine.

Q. That's it, John?

A. That's it.

Q. Thanks for all your help, John.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOSEPH GALASSO

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 12th, 2001. The time is 1607 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual, Firefighter Sixth Grade Joseph Galasso from Engine 212, who was the backup on September 11th. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Okay, Joe, you can start whenever you want.

A. After the first plane hit, we were here, actually. We could see the towers actually from here. So after the first plane hit, we saw it on the news. So we came up here to look out the window, and we saw it. We watched the second plane hit. Just as the second plane hit, that's when we received the alarm.

We were going there. On the way there, we hit a little traffic. We were going to turn onto the Manhattan Bridge but instead we were told to take the Brooklyn Bridge. So we had to back up. We were on our way to get on the Brooklyn Bridge.

We drove down I'm not sure which street. I think we came down Liberty. We parked on Liberty. We got out. We grabbed our rollups, we grabbed our spare cylinders. I remember walking past 10 and 10's quarters.

At that point Lieutenant Brosnan told us to keep walking down Liberty. We went into one of the buildings on Liberty to go through, because we saw debris falling. We didn't know what was falling. It looked like debris. So to be safe, for our safety, the lieutenant brought us through another building with one of their attendants.

Q. Were both towers hit at this point in time?

A. Both towers were hit, because we watched the second tower hit over here. When the second tower was hit, that's when we got the alarm.

So we went through a building, and we came out on -- I don't know exactly the street, but it was where that pedestrian walkway is to go to the Financial Center. We came out over there. We went two at a time, because debris was still falling. We stood underneath the walkway for protection.

Then we went into the hotel. I guess that's the Marriott Hotel. I saw a couple different companies there. 238 was there, and a couple other firemen were there that I didn't know. We were there, and that's when the lieutenant went to talk to a chief. He came back and told us we were going to the 74th floor. I don't know which tower, to be sure. I don't know. He just said the 74th floor.

At that time we got all our stuff. We made one of I guess the clerks of the hotel show us the way into the concourse level. We got into the concourse level. We walked maybe about 100 feet, 200 feet. The lieutenant said, "Take a break here for a second, I've got to go ask to find another stairwell."

At that point we put our stuff down. In a matter of seconds after that -- at this point when we came in, there were people getting evacuated. I guess there were cops down there and stuff like that. But there were all pedestrians coming out. They were pretty calm.

I was shocked to see how calm these people were.

As we got in there, like I said, the lieutenant walked away for a second to find a stairwell, told us to wait. At that point, not even a few seconds later, the lights went out and you heard -- it sounded like a waterfall almost. You just saw people running. The lights went out, and it got dark. You just saw parts of buildings coming down.

We ran and made a left. There's like a little bend. We made a left and went into a doorway. At that point I just sat there and waited and held my helmet. It just stopped. Everything was dark and people were screaming. Everybody stopped screaming. You couldn't see anything. It was all dark, dusty.

Somebody yelled, "Just stay calm. There's firemen here. Stay with the firemen." So at that point we all regrouped. We were yelling, "212, 212." I think there were five of us or six of us at that point. We all regrouped. We found each other. We put our flashlights on.

One of the members here, Firefighter Picciano, asked if anybody knew a way out: "Does anybody work here? Does anybody know a way out?" There was a maintenance man actually there. He saw a store, and he said, "I know a way out of here." So we said, "Okay, hold onto us. We'll lead with the flashlights."

At that point there were just people that were grabbing onto my arms, grabbing everybody else. I was holding onto one of the other firemen just to find a way out. So at that point this maintenance man -- I still don't know who he was -- led us to an exit.

Maybe three of us took a bunch of people to one exit, which there were escalators going up. I think that let you out on Vesey. We led a whole bunch of people out the escalator. Two or three other firemen from the company went to the left with another individual, and they found another doorway, opened it up and led the people out that way. So we led all these people out.

Sorry, I need to backtrack. Before we went back into the building, ESU cops were telling us there are reports of a third and fourth plane coming. They're leaving, we're walking in, and they're yelling there's reports of a third and fourth plane.

I guess when the first building came down I actually thought it was another plane hit at that time. I didn't know the building came down.

We led the people out. We cleared everybody out that was with us. At that point we went back in to look for more people just to see if there were any more people there. We searched around. We walked around, went down to the PATH train to see if anybody was down there. That was clear. At this point Engine 212 was there, a couple of guys had FBI jackets on, there were maybe about two or three, and I think a couple of cops were there.

We were searching around, searching. We backtracked a little bit from where we came from. At that point there was a little fire there. One of the guys tried to put it out with one of the house lines, but there was no pressure. It was dead. So we just left that.

I don't know who yelled, but somebody yelled, "We see somebody. There's somebody underneath a bunch of debris." We pulled all the debris off. He had this round face that was all full of blood. He was struggling to breathe at this point. Of course he was like 250, 260 pounds, 300 pounds.

We found a chair, a regular chair. We put him on the chair. Between the time when the first building came down, it felt like hours but we were in there for a while. At that point we put him on the chair. We took turns carrying him out.

At this point you couldn't really hearing anything on the radio. It was like in and out, in and out. I remember somebody yelling "We've all got to get out. We've all got to get out." They're saying, "Everybody get out of the building."

So at that point we put the guy in the chair and took turns carrying him out. We went out like a little bit of steps to the landing and a little bit of steps and came out on Vesey. Five World Trade we came out of.

I can remember inside the hallway was the McDonald's sign. On top it said the mall.

We came out of there. There was just white debris, white powder everywhere.

There was a rig right across the street. I don't remember what company it was. There was a mail truck right across the street, because I guess the post office was there.

At that point -- again, not even -- I would say about 40 seconds, we get to the middle of the street with this individual, and you heard like a loud "rrrrr." Everything started shaking. We thought it was another plane.

What we did, we all separated. Me and two other guys, Walker and Murphy, we went back to the building. Picciano and Brosnan ran away from the building. At that point we just knelt down in the doorway. We knelt down, and I held on.

The pressure from the collapse, I guess, it was like a heavy snowstorm when you're trying to walk and you're trying to push and fight it. You try to fight it, and it just pushed us all back. I remember just letting go of Walker.

At that point, to tell you the truth, I thought I was dead, because I was all by myself now. This whole time I was I guess, not happy, but I felt safe because we were all together the whole time. At this point I was by myself, and it was pitch dark. I had the dirt in my mouth and everything.

I thought I got blown back into the building, so I started yelling, "Walker and 212, anybody." Finally he acknowledged. He happened to be right next to me and I didn't know it.

At that point you couldn't see anything. I put my mask on at that point. Then we regrouped. Me, Walker and Murphy, we all regrouped, the three of us. At that point we thought we had lost the lieutenant. We thought we had lost Picciano and Brosnan, because they went the other way.

We came out of Five World Trade. At that point then it was just like an eerie quiet. Everything was quiet. We couldn't even find those FBI guys that were with us or the cops that were with us.

It was an eerie quiet. We finally saw daylight. We saw the sun and said let's walk.

We walked and walked up West Broadway. I remember that the rig was on fire at that point, and the postal truck was on fire. There were little fires everywhere. We were just trying to climb over like I beams and stuff.

We walked to West Broadway, and we just kept walking. At that time we were saying to ourselves let's just get as far away as we could. If these buildings come down, they're going to take out a couple of blocks. We still didn't know the buildings came down at that point.

We walked to Duane Street, and somebody -- I think it was a cop -- told us there's a firehouse right here. We went and made a right, and it was Engine 7. At that point we went there. From there we just sat there and waited. That's when the ambulance came and took us all in.

We finally met up with the other two, Picciano and Brosnan. They wound up walking there. Somehow some way they walked there. We all met up, and that's when we went in the ambulance to Forest Hills.

Q. Anybody else you remember seeing there?

A. It's weird, I remember seeing a kid I went to parochial school with that I graduated with, James Pappageorge, in the hotel. I remember saying hello. I don't know what company he's from. I remember saying hello to him. The lieutenant was saying, "Come on, let's go." We went into the concourse, and I never saw him after that. That's the only guy I can remember.

I don't know the guys' names from 238, but they're in the same area over here so I recognized a couple of them. I don't know which way they went either. Pappageorge specifically, I know him because we said hello to each other because we went to school together. I don't know which way they went. All I know is that we got -- somebody was with us because everywhere we walked was the right place.

Q. Anything else, Joe?

A. That's about it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JAMES MURPHY

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 12th, 2001. The time is 1649 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I am conducting an interview with the following individual, firefighter second grade James MURPHY from Engine Company 212. This interview is concerning the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Jim, you can start talking whenever you'd like.

A. The first thing I remember is hearing this was a second alarm over the voice system. Second alarm, World Trade Center, it came over. We were in the kitchen. We said let's turn on the TV and see if there's anything, basically, because I worked in the city, sometimes something like the World Trade Center will make the TV.

So we turned on the TV, and they didn't have it yet on New York 1. About maybe 30 seconds into it, they had it. They just set it up. The anchor said, "We just got word that there's a fire in the World Trade Center, and we'll go to a camera" I think from the Empire

State Building.

They did that, and you could see the extent of the fire on the World Trade Center, a huge hole. Nobody knew what it was. We didn't know if it was a plane yet or anything. Everybody in the kitchen was just like, oh, my God.

Then the guy on the news got a call from somebody who was on the West Side Highway, I think, and he said that a big tire came down and landed on a car in front of him or something like that. You think it's a plane, and then you see the hole in it and you still don't think it's a 747 or 767. You still think it's like a Piper Cub. I was just thinking that from the hole, it might have been packed with explosives.

After that I ran up to the roof on the third floor with me and Eric Bernsten. We were watching it. We could see it from here. We have an unobstructed view. The other guys came up too. All six of us were on the roof.

We were sitting around looking at it, and I remember one guy saying, "You're going to earn your pay today, guys." I just remember that. Then we saw the second one come up. It looked like it was coming up the East River from here.

I guess it was coming from the south. I thought it banked over the East River, which is what it looked like. I thought it made a left over the East River and went right into it going from east to west. But as it turns out, it came from the south. Then we saw it just go right into the building and explode.

I remember talking to Eric. I remember Eric saying something, "Oh, my God, there's another plane." I was saying to him, "That plane is closer to us. It's really not a big plane going towards the building." Two seconds later it rammed into the building. You don't expect it. We just freaked.

About a minute after that we got the call to go. I guess it was a minute or so. We shot down Tenth, down Park Avenue. We rode on the dividers because traffic -- we rode in between the highway where they parked the cars, we rode up there, over those until we got basically to where the Gowanus -- basically to around 207, 101. We made the turn to go over the Manhattan Bridge by accident. We figured out it was an accident. We backed out and went over to the Brooklyn Bridge.

Two guys jumped on the back. I don't know who they were. Somebody just told me. One of the guys on the rig said, "Two guys just jumped on the back." So I never saw them jump on, but we stopped, let them jump on, and we went over the bridge.

That was it. We got over to the other side, and we went down Broadway. We made a right on Liberty. We pulled up, I guess it was like 20 feet from Church Street and Liberty. We were about maybe 20 feet or 50 feet. We were close to Church Street, right by a fruit stand, because I couldn't get out of the rig, we had to pull up.

After that we got out. We grabbed our hose, and we went straight down Liberty Street. I just remember looking up and seeing the building on fire. It seemed really high. You could hear it a little bit, and you couldn't hear anything else except the fire. It was a beautiful day out.

There were papers all over the place and the smoke and everything, but the smoke wasn't on our level at all. There was nobody else around.

We walked down Liberty Street. We walked past 10's quarters. We ran into a guy, he looked like -- I don't know what he looked like. He had a white shirt on. He had a helmet on, not a fireman's helmet. I think I can remember this right. He said, "Follow me. I can take you through. There's stuff falling from the building."

He took us through the Deutsche Bank building like through the middle of it. It was down whatever street that is where 10's on. We went through it, and we came out another street underneath that. I'm not sure. It's Greenwich Street or something like that. Then we went back onto Liberty Street.

The guy warned us, he said there's body parts all over the place. There were body parts everywhere, like all over, body parts and all sorts of chunks of debris. For a second I thought were part of the plane. When I think back on it, they could be part of the building too, because it was all aluminum.

There was scaffolding. We were walking under scaffolding until we got to West Street. Once we got on West Street, we got under the bridge that crosses West Street, and we waited to get in. The lieutenant got in first. That's all I know.

I was looking up, making sure all the stuff falling down wasn't going to hit me before I ran in. I didn't see anybody jumping from the south tower, but I saw things coming out of the north tower, which I don't know what it was. It was falling straight down. I just knew it wasn't going to hit me.

As soon as I saw a big piece of like aluminum hit the ground, I didn't see anything else I just ran into the building. I just walked as fast as I could underneath the overpass to the Marriott.

Now I'm in the Marriott. There was two guys, I guess they were managers or something in the restaurant, running around. I grabbed one of them. They got us water. I asked them if I could get some water, and they did. They came out with water, like glass bottles of water and a big jug of water.

There were a bunch of units inside the hotel. I only knew two of them. I knew 22 Truck. I saw them because I'm assigned to 220. I knew 22 Truck from uptown because when I was on rotation I spent a year in 76 Engine and they're with 22 Truck. I knew a couple guys there, but I just said hi to them. I just waved to acknowledge them because everything was so crazy.

After like five minutes -- it seemed we were there for a little while. We finally went -- we were inside the hotel, and we went north inside the lobby of the hotel. Somehow indoors we got from the hotel into the lobby of the north tower. We didn't miss a beat. We walked straight from the hotel into the lobby and straight through the revolving doors. They were like pushed open so you didn't have to revolve around, you could just walk straight through.

So we walked in there, and there were a bunch of civilians. I don't know where they were coming from, but they were coming and walking the same way we were walking. The sprinkler systems were going, and everything was wet, the sprinkler systems worked fine, the big system.

We just kept walking in that corridor, the mall corridor, until we got almost to like an intersection in the mall corridor. We were in the corridor running west to east. That's the way we were walking, west to east.

Right before we got to a corridor running south to north is where we stopped. Lieutenant Brosnan said, "Let me go see if we can find a way up." We were supposed to go to the 74th floor or something like that.

We waited there right on the corner of the mall, right on the corner where the two sections met, the two mall sections. We were on the north corner of that. That's when 30 seconds after the lieutenant left you could hear the noise.

I was looking down towards West Street, because that's where it seemed that it was coming from. You just heard -- I thought it was a third plane that hit, because when we were going in there was a couple of cops. When we made the right onto Liberty, they said, "Be careful, guys, there's a third plane heading in." So that's what I thought it was.

It just seemed like a long time that it was -- it didn't seem like an explosion. It was like boom, boom, and then just got louder and louder. It got louder and louder, and then all of a sudden I was looking out onto West Street and the whole area turned from gray to black in a hurry.

All the debris just pushed through all those doors, and all the people were falling down. The wind was just -- you could see it coming. People were screaming and falling down. Before the lights got totally black, I ran east a couple feet and made the left and ducked into that first store, not in the store but in a little niche where the display window was and where the corner -- what do you call it? Where the corner of the store was, where the west to east and the south to north corridors met. So it was that corner store.

For some reason there was like a foot -- you could go in about a foot before the glass, and I just curled into a ball and just waited for everything to stop.

Then it stopped. Then I got up and it was pitch-black. I turned on my flashlight. Everybody else turned on their flashlights. We were all right around each other. We couldn't have been within ten feet of each other. We were all right there. We were all on the ground.

We got up and we organized. Then we just started looking for somebody. I think we started looking for -- we just started saying, "Does anybody know how to get out of here," or something like that. I forget what words we used.

We found a guy, a maintenance guy, with a flashlight. I'm familiar with the corridors over there because I take the train in three days a week. But I don't get out on the north side; I always get out on the Liberty Street side, because I go to school on Cortlandt. So I knew there were exits on both ends, but I never get out on the north side.

Anyway, we found this guy. We grabbed him. We put him in front of us. We had our flashlights. I remember him saying if you find the Duane Reade, there's an exit by the Duane Reade. We never found the Duane Reade, but we were walking.

People were grabbing onto us. We were picking up people, because they were still -- after it was black, there was screaming in the beginning and we were shouting. We were saying "Don't worry, we're with the Fire Department. Everybody is going to get out." I remember saying stuff like that, which is pretty wild, actually. We were just as scared as anybody else. We were just victims too.

Basically the only difference between us and the victims is we had flashlights. It was hard to breathe, but you knew you could breathe. The first thing I did was grab my mask. I put it on, and then I realized that you could breathe without it. It was very, very dusty in there. You couldn't see with the flashlight in the beginning more than three or four feet. But you could see everybody's flashlight because they would glow in the beginning. Then it gradually settled down.

We started walking north. I remember seeing big columns. We walked past big columns. We ran into a store -- I don't know how far we were, maybe 60, maybe 100 yards, and we ran into a watch store. That's what I remember seeing, watches. It might have been a jewelry store or whatever. The guy said, "Oh, this is the watch store. I know where this is." He said, "The exit's this way. Keep going straight."

We went straight, and we ran into a -- what it was was a stairwell and like a wall. One said handicap exit. The maintenance guy, I was talking to him. He said, "The exit's right up here." There was a little confusion. Somebody else in the crowd said, "The exit's that way." What it was was there were two exits.

Me and Eric Bernsten went up to the one on Vesey Street. It was still black, and you couldn't see. When we found the doors, we opened them up and we knew it was outside. When you got out there and you opened the doors, you could see it was like it's nighttime but you know you're outside.

We took a bunch of guys out with us.

We went back down. The other guys were going the other way, which was another way. They were going to some kind of exit that came out on Church Street. Either way, we all got rid of people on both exits.

After that it started clearing up a little bit. A couple other rescuers started coming. I don't know who they were. I remember one guy saying 30 stories of the south tower collapsed. Maybe that's what it looked like. That was the first time I realized it wasn't a second plane that hit.

Some other guys were coming down, like rescuers. They were coming down. Somehow they went back in. I don't know who. We wound up saying we've got to go back in and see if there's anybody else there. We were basically looking for our lieutenant who was lost. We said we've got to go back in and do a search.

We went back in. I don't know how we hooked up with these guys again. Maybe they came back down to see the way they brought the guys out. But we hooked up with them. A couple of other rescue guys came in. I was standing at the top of the PATH train looking down at that long stairwell and saying to myself I don't even know if I should go down there because it's so deep down there.

I've been down there a few times. My brother takes the PATH train. I met him in the bars. There's bars down at the lower levels. I started getting nervous. I started thinking that we shouldn't be here.

A couple of guys came in and went down. I don't know they were, guys in white shirts. They were some kind of rescue people. I don't know if they were Port Authority or whoever they were. They walked down. I was like, guys, I don't know if it's the best thing to do to go down there. They were like, "We're going down."

So I went with them. They went down there, and I stood by the stairs, at the bottom of the stairs. When they came back I said, "Did you find anybody? Do you need any help?" They said no. They didn't find anybody. They were leaving the place, and I boogied up the stairs, because I was getting spooked down there.

I got back upstairs, and I ran into Eric again. He had found a line. He had found a hose line. At this point you could see there was a collapse. Everything got a bit lighter because wherever we exited was glowing, so we knew the exit was there. There was a blue glow, almost like a fluorescent glow. You could see down the corridor.

Right where we were almost when the first building collapsed, there was a huge collapse, a big wall of stuff, and it was on fire. Eric found a house line, and he grabbed the house line and he was saying, "Let's pull it." We pulled it over, and we got caught up on some stuff, he came back, helped me pull it out. I went to turn the wheel of the gauge and there was no pressure. There was water in it, but you could squeeze it closed.

About that time, that's when somebody said that there's a body -- "I've got somebody over here." That was close to where the collapse was, past the Coach store. That's where the house line came out; it was close to the Coach store.

By the time I got over there, there were three guys putting him in a chair. There were FBI guys down there at this point. They had come down, and they had told us -- they might have been down there for like five minutes. I'm not sure exactly when they said this, but they came in and they said, "It's your show, guys. You just tell us what to do." That's what I remember.

There was least three, maybe four of them. I remember telling them, "The only thing you can do right now" -- they all had flashlights -- "is to stand like 50 feet apart towards the stairwell with the flashlights," because it was starting to bank down because of the smoke. The dust had cleared a lot, but the smoke was starting to bank down again and I was getting really nervous.

These guys picked the guy up in the chair, and they started walking with him. His head was flopping all over the place, so I grabbed his head. It was a long walk. It was at least 100 yards -- it seemed that way, because it was black -- to the stairwell. So we switched up. I switched and grabbed one of the legs. One of the FBI guys was helping us. We got him up the stairs. We got him out on Vesey Street.

We couldn't have walked more than like 15 steps when the second tower came down. Everybody just ran for their lives. Really that's exactly what happened. All of a sudden there was blue out and then it just got a shade darker and the noise and then it got darker and darker and darker. The noise was getting louder, and there was stuff falling.

Eric and Vinnie ran out into the street, and me, Danny Walker and Joe Galasso ran back towards building number five, where we came from. We tried to get in the building. I'm not sure if Danny Walker got in the building and was able to stay in there.

I stepped in about two steps and I tried to push myself in, and the wind pressure from the falling building pushed me, knocked me off my feet backwards. I wound up in the street. I didn't even know it was the street at the time. It was actually a good thing, because I wound up under the overhang.

Then everything stopped. We got up. I guess we were shocked. I didn't know if we were outside or inside. You couldn't see a thing. You couldn't really breathe without your mask. I guess you would have lived. But I don't know if you would have been able to maintain your consciousness.

There was mud in my mouth about a quarter of an inch think. I just pulled it out in my hand, and I swallowed a whole bunch of it. I put my mask on. There was more dirt in the mask that blew into my face.

We regrouped. We were right around each other, me, Joe and Danny Walker. We couldn't move. The first time I knew I was outside was when I basically almost ran into one of the flowerpots out there on Vesey Street. You could barely move, for at least five minutes. You couldn't move because you didn't know where you were, what you were stepping on, where you were going.

Then you could see little fires, like paper fires. Then I saw the lights of a rig on Vesey Street that were blinking, the bottom lights. I knew that was the street. We walked towards that. I thought the best thing to do was to head west into the wind so that we could get out of the smoke.

(Interruption.)

A. You could feel the wind blowing. You knew which way it was blowing. You just wanted to get out of this stuff. Plus I was really nervous about these fires on the ground. The ground was covered with papers and all sorts of debris. There were a few cars on fire.

We walked west. We could see the outdoor escalators at that point. We walked that way. We ran into like a building. I guess there's a building there, right there on West Broadway -- or there was a building there on West Broadway and Vesey that cut off the street so you couldn't go straight through. I remember running into something. We made a right, and we walked straight up West Broadway.

I remember just walking up that block. That first block, all the cars were on fire. They weren't totally engulfed in flames, but there was fire on them and their tires were exploding. I just remember how quiet it was walking up that block. Everything was quiet except for the explosions of tires and stuff like that.

Eventually like a couple blocks later we got out of it and made our way to 7 Engine. That's pretty much it.

Q. Okay, Jim. That's good.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT WAYNE MERA

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today is December 12th, 2001. The time is 1337 hours and this is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Wayne Mera from Ladder Company 110. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. You just start whenever you're ready.

A. This is Wayne Mera. Where do I begin? I'll start at the very beginning, the morning, beautiful day. We had the apparatus doors open and I remember (inaudible) said, hey, check out the smoke. So we look outside. I see the smoke rising over the bridge and stuff. I figure it's got to be in Manhattan; otherwise we would have gone right away. I think I heard someone mention something about the World Trade Center. So I stepped back in the kitchen and I see the World Trade Center on fire on TV. Oh, you've got to be kidding me. So we walked out immediately. By the time we got to the front of rig, we heard second third alarm and we were dispatched. So at first I thought we were dispatched on the third alarm, and it turns out we were actually dispatched as additional units on the first alarm. On that ticket it was us, Battalion 31 and Engine 205.

We responded. We're going over the bridge. We have a perfect view of the building. Never did it cross my mind that it was going to collapse. I saw burning. I heard reports of jumpers and from that distance I didn't know if it was jumpers or it was debris, but you could see a lot of stuff coming out of the windows, falling down. All I could think, at that point I'm thinking we're going to lose the top 15, 20 floors of this building. We're going to take a beating today. We're going to get the snot kicked out of us.

We turned down Broadway. We were looking for Liberty, unsure exactly where Liberty is, of course. We didn't get box 8087. We got box, I think it was 9031 or 9030. I think 9031. Respond to Liberty and West. That's where we were supposed to respond. So we turned down Liberty off of Broadway and we're almost at Church and all of a sudden a massive explosion. Unbelievable. The sound was incredible. It turns out it was the second plane that hit the south tower, and it hit on the Liberty Street side, so it was a block and a half, two blocks from us. The sound was incredible. We didn't know what it was at the time. We thought it might have been a bomb. I remember right before that I saw a helicopter passing by and I thought maybe it was a helicopter, we were thinking a bomb, but we knew at this point something wasn't right. In fact, it was so immense we stopped the rig. We never stop the rig on the way to a run. We stop. We get out. 31 is behind us. They're out. We just couldn't believe it. What's going on here? 205 pulls up and says we know how to get to Liberty and West. Follow us. So we back out and we start following them and they have a little lead on us. By that point the traffic was really horrible.

At first, when the plane hit, luckily we weren't close to the building because when it hit, it was just raining a bunch of debris all down. So we actually were fortunate we were another block up because we would have been right underneath it. So we started following 205 and, in hindsight, they must have gone all the way down to the Battery and across and then up West Street because they made it to Liberty and West, I believe. We lost them. So we ended up turning up Trinity, which ends up being Church Street. So we ended up almost exactly where we were. So we ended up parking on the corner of Church and Vesey. We parked the rig.

The only thing I can think of at this point is that I saw a lot of debris raining down from the north tower and I thought it was closer to Vesey, so I didn't want to park right underneath there. It turns out we could have because we had the Customs House right there, but at the time I didn't know. So we walked up, grabbed extra cylinders, all our gear. We were walking up Vesey and we saw parts of the plane on the ground still burning. So we turn down onto West Street and get to the north tower. I look inside. I think it said 1 World Trade Center. So I didn't know if it was 1 or 2, but considering that was the only one burning, it had to be 1.

So I saw a bunch of white hats inside the lobby and walked past a little bit to see if there was a command post in the street. I didn't see anyone. So we turned around and we went into the lobby. We went in. I remember seeing the Commissioner there, a couple of Chiefs in there, it must have been like a building engineer, OEM or somebody else. They were behind the desk. I said is this 1? They said, yeah, this is 1. We were there maybe a minute when a Chief turned around and said you're a truck? Yeah. He said you're ready? Yeah. Okay. Come with me. It happened to be a Chief from the 11th Battalion. What's his name? Piccarelli, something similar to that.

Q. Picciotto.

A. Picciotto. So we went up with him. He said we've got a report of people trapped on the 21st floor. So that's where we ended up going. We took the low-rise bank of elevators up to the 16th floor. It was a flying shaft from 1 to 8, so we stopped at 9 just to make sure it worked. Thank God it did. We went up to the 16th floor. We got off. People were coming down the stairs, then we went to the stairs. I believe it was the C stairwell. It was the one closest to the West Street side. So we went up to the 21st floor and that was locked. So then we went up to the 22nd, which was open. So we threw all our gear down, you know, left our extra cylinders, because conditions were clear. So we left the search ropes, we left everything up there.

Q. What about people evacuating; how was it?

A. They were very calm. There was a steady stream of people coming down and a steady stream of firemen going up on the right side, people were coming down on the left side. It was just a constant stream of people. I remember one elderly lady, she was walking very slow, seemed to be holding up. So she had stopped at a landing and let a lot of people past her. But it was very calm. Everybody was calm. You could tell that everyone was nervous, but it was remarkably calm, really. It was pretty quiet. No one was really saying much, a couple words exchanged, you know, good words, encouragement and stuff. I was very surprised that it was that calm.

So we got up to the 22nd, threw our gear down, dropped back down to the 21st and forced the door.

Q. It was clear?

A. Clear as day. We started to search. We searched every room in there. I remember forcing one door, beautiful mahogany doors, beautiful trim, taking off the little trim between the doors and I'm thinking to myself, wow, this is a beautiful door, because you can do some damage to this, you know.

The search was negative. There was nobody anywhere. As soon as we got done, it must have been -- we started by the C. We worked our way around. We passed a couple of other stairwells. At the time I didn't know what letter they were. I was in the back room, it must be the northeast corner, and some guys must have been on the southeast corner, when all of a sudden the building shook. I've never been in an earthquake, but it couldn't have been any worse than that, any major earthquake. It just shook the building like I just couldn't believe. I mean, it was really bad. We stopped a second, looked at each other, what's going on here? We come out. Another guy comes from another room, let's go, let's go in the stairwell.

We start going to the stairwell. The other guys closest to the south tower started coming out. The guys who were with me that day, my chauffeur was Artie Riccio from 119, I had Mike Brodbeck, who was the can that day, he was from 210, he was doing a mutual. Artie was on overtime. I had Dave Sandvik. I forget what position he had. I had Mike Beehler, who was a proby at the time, he had the irons, and I had Paul Hyland. So Dave was with me at the time. I forget who else came out of the other room closest to us. But I had Paul Hyland and Artie and Mike might have been down on the south side. So when we were going to the stairwell, we were yelling get to the stairwell. They came out. It turned out to be very fortunate. We were all headed towards the stairwell. We never actually made it in. We just hit the ground and got close and it shook for a long time. I know Artie went back into the room, I think, with Mike, and when they went back into their room by the south side, all the windows were broken out and there was a lot of glass everywhere and debris and so on. So luckily they got to the hallway before the glass went and they could be injured by that.

We get back. We heard an order to evacuate. At the time I didn't know who gave it or anything else. It turned out to be the Chief that I was with that day. I talked to him later on and he said he gave the order to evacuate. So I think it was 6 Engine in the stairwell at that point and they were yelling for us to come on, let's go, let's get in the stairwell. I said I just got to make sure I got everyone. Dave Sandvik went up to the 22nd or 23rd floor to see if he could find the Chief. He couldn't find him.

Earlier, I forgot to mention, there was a little confusion when we were conducting the search. All of a sudden they were switching tactical channels from tactical 1 and tactical 2, and they said north tower was tactical 1, south tower was tactical 2, and we were trying to find out if the north was number 1 and the south was number 2 because we weren't sure when we went in. I had a feeling that's what it was, but I wasn't sure. So I tried to contact the Chief at that point by radio. I couldn't. I went upstairs. I couldn't find him because, when I went up to the 22nd floor at that point, there was no one there. It was totally empty. So they must have continued on. We even tried a land line from one of the offices to call the dispatcher to see if they could get in touch with the command post to see if we could straighten out which one is 1, which one is 2, so we'd operate on the same channels, but we couldn't get through there either. Not surprising.

We finally started down --

Q. Which staircase?

A. Staircase B, which ended up being very fortunate. Stairway B, what happened, when we came out from the rooms we were in, stairway B was right in between us. So as we came out, we met at the B stairwell, and I could be wrong, but from what I understand, that's the only stairwell that went to the lobby. So we only went down that stairwell because that's where we met. That's what was in between us. So that's why we went down that stairwell.

We started down. Guys asked if they should grab the tools. I said grab what you want, but we're getting out of here. Don't worry about it. So we had the irons with us. Guys were forcing doors on the way down. Dave Sandvik and Paul Hyland, they were popping doors on the way down, and they yelled in the first one and they said is that good enough? I said, yeah, it's good enough. I just wanted to make sure someone could hear us. Maybe they didn't hear the Mayday transmission. So we were checking stuff on the way down. I remember Artie was helping a civilian down, carrying her. I'm not sure what floor he actually started carrying the person, but he carried her down at least 15, 20 flights. We started on the 21st floor. So he was pretty shot by the time he got to the bottom. Mike Brodbeck was helping another civilian down and we were working our way down the stairs very slow.

At this point, I think, I remember about five civilians in the stairwell going down. So it was almost all firemen. Three civilians, we passed them. They were on a landing, on a half landing further down. I'm not sure what floor. As we were passing, we stopped to help and everybody else that previously had passed them stopped to help and they kept saying no, we're okay, you guys just go on. They were able to move, but they just stopped to rest.

Q. I hope they made it out in time.

A. It was slow going at first and then it got even slower. It got so slow by the bottom, I remember Dave sat down on the landing. He sat down on the landing because we just weren't moving. He might have done it on two different landings for like half a minute, maybe a minute or so each, just sat there because we were just at a dead stop, and I think maybe guys were coming in from the other stairwells because they didn't go to the lobby and they might have had to filter into us. So there was a bottleneck. It was very, very slow.

When the building shook, to go back, we didn't realize what happened. We didn't realize it was the south tower. I know myself and I've talked to the guys that were with me that day, we all thought the same thing, it was the upper floors of our building. That's what we thought. We thought the upper floors of our building had collapsed and we didn't know what was going on. So on the way down, I remember, I know myself, I kept thinking that the rest of it was going to be coming down. But it ended up being the south tower.

I remember when we started going, I heard a radio transmission, and I don't know what company it was, my feeling is it might have been Timmy Higgins of 252 down in the lobby and it might have been a rescue company up on the upper floors. It must have been the rescue company that started the transmission. He said we'll start up here, you start in the lobby and we'll meet you halfway, and I remember thinking halfway, jeez, that's about where we're at, where we started at about the 21st floor. So in my mind I'm thinking the rescue must have been up on the 40th floor, somewhere around there, and I remember thinking they must have been checking just to make sure that everybody was out of the building. I could be wrong, but that was my impression. Since we had heard the Maydays and since they were going to meet halfway, I was just thinking they must be checking to make sure everyone is out. I knew Timmy and he didn't make it out and his company didn't make it out.

We got down to the lobby and it opened up where you could walk at a normal pace. Nobody was running out, but you were walking at a pretty good clip at that point. You could see a couple of the elevators had crashed to the bottom and there were doors blown open and stuff. It was very strange because there was debris everywhere, not the big, heavy, steel debris, but there was dust, coated with dust everywhere. We walked down past the elevators out into the main lobby and looked around. There wasn't a soul there, just the guys walking out. What's going on here? I was expecting to go down to the lobby and there would be a command post, a beehive of activity, people everywhere. Where is everybody? What's going on here? It just wasn't right.

So we continued out. I don't think we even went out the door. I think it was windowless and we stepped out. We went outside and I remember, I don't know if it was a fireman or if it was a civilian or who it was, but there was somebody outside that was constantly looking up and waving us on as we went out, looking for jumpers, looking for any debris falling down. So he was waving us on. Artie and Mike had brought the people outside.

We followed the building line around, followed the Customs Building. We stopped underneath the pedestrian bridge, the north bridge. We stopped there for a second and said let's move up a little bit. So we headed north on West Street. When we came out, I remember looking to the left and seeing a whole bunch of heavy debris down, and so I guess it looked a little bit clearer to the right, up north. That's the only thing I could figure. So we moved up a little bit further. I'm really not sure how much further. I think it was less than a block. I'm not sure if we were even at Vesey Street yet.

I think it was 224's rig. My back was towards the building. The guys sat down on the rig, you can open up your coats, take your mask off your shoulder, breathe a sigh of relief, okay, let's catch our breath, see what's going on before we do anything. Paul Hyland looks up and goes here it comes. Run. My back was towards the building. I didn't check back and look. A lot of the other guys were already looking that way, so they saw everything break apart.

So we started up West Street and all of a sudden -- it was a gorgeous day, beautiful, sunny day. Within a split second it turned gray and then pitch black. You couldn't see your hand in front of your face. You just couldn't see anything. Once it turned black, I remember thinking, okay, but I saw this line of rigs going all the way up West Street and I said I'm going to follow these rigs up until it clears up. I don't know when it's going to be, but I'm going to follow it up. At this point, I don't know what's coming behind me. I'm expecting maybe a fireball is going to be blowing right up behind me. I don't know if anything is falling down. I have no clue.

So I'm heading up West and I get to a point where I really couldn't breathe anymore. I was sucking in all this, not just dust, I mean, it was just solid pieces. So I dropped down. I put on my mask. The mask was just full of stuff, too. So as I'm moving on, I'm brushing this stuff out, getting it clear. I remember when I was on my knees, I was feeling around and I felt somebody and that person just kept on going across. I was never able to contact them again, but they must have been safe at that point.

So I followed the rigs all the way up and I finally get to a clear area around Chambers Street and I look around and none of my guys are with me now. Now I'm really worried. I start calling them. At this point there's just wall-to-wall radio traffic. There's Maydays, everyone trying, like myself, trying to get in touch with their members, because if they're missing, now we're going to have to give Maydays. So we're trying to get organized as much as you can. I'm trying to locate my guys. Then little by little, I don't know who was the first one that came up, but Paul Hyland came up and I saw Dave and I saw Artie, and I've still got two other guys missing. Where are they?

So I was calling in trying to contact them and eventually I got in touch with Mike Brodbeck. He had the can, so he didn't have a radio, but he was pulled in to the telephone building. I think it might have been by 305. So their officer gave me a call and said I got your guy with me. He's okay.

Then I'm trying to get in touch with Mike Beehler, who was a proby. Luckily he had the irons. It ended up he got pulled in to, I think it was a Hatzolah ambulance. So he was inside there. So I didn't hear anything from him for a while and then eventually I heard him. So I knew he was okay, but I wasn't able to talk to him for a long time. Eventually I was able to talk with him and I said where we were. We worked our way down.

I remember I had a couple of other guys I had found. I'm not sure what company they were with, but I got in touch with their officer to let them know where they were at, that they were okay, I got these two guys with me, they're in this corner, they're going to stay here until you come. So everybody was doing that. Who you had you were trying to stay with and just watch over.

Shortly after that I remember seeing Bobby Sutton. He's Battalion 8. Obviously, he was working that day and he had gotten separated earlier from the Chief. So he comes walking up. I grabbed ahold of him, just stay with us now, because he was extremely lucky. He made it out twice and he was very shook up, so I wanted to keep an eye on him, and we were trying to look for the Chief, who we didn't find until later on. We were trying to locate our guys from 207.

Somehow I forgot to mention this. When we went up, 207 at that point was in the lobby. They were right by the front, in front of the elevator bank. 207 was to the right, 110 was to the left, and that was the last I ever saw of 207. That was right before we went upstairs. So, 207, that was the last location I know with them that I had seen.

So we were trying to locate 207. When we were going up Church Street, I saw 14 Engine coming down one of the side streets and I glanced over and I saw my brother-in-law, who is the officer in 14, I saw him working. I thought, oh, I wish he wasn't working today. Normally I would love to see him working. So I listened to them, asking guys. No one saw 14. No one saw 207.

What we did then, a lot of guys were coming down West at that point. We were obviously shook up a bit, so we stopped in front of Stuyvesant High School by that pedestrian bridge. I know there was some Chief saying that, if anybody was in there, let us know if you got everybody. So I said, yeah, I got everybody. I got one minor injury, which was Mike Brodbeck. When he was running down the street, he ended up running, I think, into a cop car or over a barrier, the cement wall. He ended up fracturing his arm, broke his hand, and dislocated his shoulder. So fortunately that was the worst injury. So I let him know about that.

At that point I know Bobby (inaudible) was also there. They stayed with us for a while. They didn't want to leave. We're in front of Stuyvesant catching our breath, and I'm not sure how much later, it wasn't that much longer, a cop comes running up and tells everybody from the high school to go down the block, that they got a bomb scare or a gas leak, the high school is ready to blow up. So now we're trying to catch our breath here, so we ended up running up another five or six blocks not knowing what's going on. We're going up West Street and I'm looking over to the right and I saw all these buildings, the rig was to the left, and I'm thinking are these secondary devices? Are they planted to explode every 20 minutes now? Are they going to chase us all the way up the west side?

So we get up. It eventually turns out to be a false alarm. We worked our way back, and by the time we came back, everybody and their brother, I mean, everybody in the world was there coming down West. We were passing all these volunteer rigs from Jersey, upstate. It's just incredible.

I still don't realize at this point that the towers actually collapsed all the way down. It wasn't until later in the day that I'm staring down through the smoke that I'm realizing. Someone said, yeah, both towers collapsed. I just couldn't comprehend it at first. So at this point, in hindsight, I'm probably half in shock. So I just wanted to watch over my guys. So we kept them there because there was plenty of other guys who were showing up who were in perfect condition. So I figure, okay, once those guys go to work, we'll go back to work. Where we were, it looked like they had some command post set up, so we just stayed with them, and we basically stayed there the rest of the day until even after No. 7 collapsed.

Throughout the day I was trying to find 207. I asked Field Com, asked the Chiefs, walked down a little bit and couldn't find anyone. A couple of my other guys went down. 207, obviously, they never came back. They were all missing. Probably about three hours after the collapse or so, two hours, whenever, after asking Field Com if they had heard about 207 and 14, I was walking away and I figured they're both missing, it's no good. Then I heard my brother-in-law on the radio calling for water and I said, okay, he's okay, so I started thinking, oh, maybe 207 is okay, too. Maybe you just haven't heard them on the radio. Because no one knew where 14 was and they're okay. Maybe the same thing with 207. Let's hope. False hope it turned out to be.

Basically, we waited around, and then later in the day a bunch of the guys from recall from 110 came by and we hooked up with them and we went back to find the rig. One of our guys that came on recall earlier ended up moving the rig and pulling up from the area. So it wasn't where we left it, but we found it.

There was a crack in the windshield. That's all there was. It was covered with debris, of course.

So we were walking down Church and it was dark by this time. We were walking down Church and ESU comes up to us and goes, you guys got a saw? We got a report of people trapped in the subway. We looked over and there's a saw, a blade and a can of gasoline right on the ledge. Yeah, we got a saw. We put it together. We cut the gate, we rolled down, we're going underneath, and we crossed underneath Church and it was just a solid wall of debris from the World Trade Center and there's no way you were getting through that. Oh, my God, I said. This is just unbelievable. So we went to the station. The station was totally empty, no trains, no people. Very eerie. Very eerie.

Then after that we found the rig and went back, found a command post, found a Chief and said we've been here all day. So we took the rig back to quarters. He said are you able to drive the rig? Yeah. So we piled everyone on and came back to quarters. The next day they used the inch and 3/4 in the morning to hose it down.

I know there were a couple of other thoughts that I had. Let's see. I'm trying to remember the company. 207, of course, sticks out in my mind in the lobby. 6 Engine. When we went up, there was an engine with us, and I can't remember what engine was with us, but I had heard they had gotten out okay.

The elevators, we got lucky with the elevators. It was orderly going up. The civilians were very orderly going up, and coming down everything was calm, too. Like I said, I'm sure a lot of other guys at the time thought it, too, that it was our building that was collapsing. It was very calm. There was no one rushing. It was just you moved as fast as you could move and that was it. It was very calm considering the circumstances.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Okay. The time is 1409 hours and the interview with Lieutenant Mera is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PAUL BECK

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 12, 2001. The time is 1510 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen King from the Safety Battalion, FDNY. I am conducting an interview with Firefighter PAUL BECK from Engine Company 205. This interview is being conducted in the quarters of Engine 224. This interview is concerning the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Paul, you can start whenever you want.

A. [redacted]

[redacted]

Q. Which bridge?

A. Brooklyn Bridge. I think we were just past the Brooklyn Bridge on the Manhattan side when the first tower came down and, of course, our concern there was now we've got to find Engine 205 and we've got to find Ladder 118.

We parked immediately. We found a spot. We geared up with our gear. There were no masks or anything of that nature, just helmets, bunker gear, pants. We had our chauffeur there who was pretty knowledgeable about where we would respond and he sort of led us, and I think we ended up on Trinity -- I've got a map here -- and Liberty. I think there's a Burger King on the corner there. That's what would stand out in my mind as our focal point, the location.

We found Engine 205 there. We congregated and talked a li ttle bit about where we're going to search now. We started trying to call out members' names and we started going around the rubble a little bit to see if we could hear anybody tapping, anything like that. Probably a good ten, 15 minutes, I would say, we were there. We didn't find anybody. Maybe I think we found one person. That person may have suffered a broken leg. We put him in, I think, a police van.

We were just rummaging around and soon we heard this noise. It sounded like a train. I thought it was another jet coming overhead. I thought it was a fighter jet now patrolling or another plane coming. Pretty much everybody started scattering and I figured, well, that's a good idea now. I just remember running. I don't know, I think it was about two blocks I ran, and I think I hooked up with a guy from 124 and we were trying to force a door to get into this building. I'd say it's on Trinity, maybe the Trinity Building. I'm not sure. It had big double doors. We were trying to force the door, get in there. I think, now that I realize what happened, once the compression happened, it sort of helped us push the door in. When we got in there, we were running down the hall because we figured this building is coming down pretty soon too now. So we're running through the building trying to get to the opposite end.

Give or take five, ten minutes, sort of the emergency or the urgency is sort of dying down now. I think we were sort of gathering our wits. So we come back out and we find the rest of the members there. Everybody, thank God, from the crew that came in on the personal vehicle had survived. It was a good half hour, I guess, just trying to round up everybody and, thank God, everybody was there, like I said, from the personal vehicle.

I think we walked down -- not Liberty. I'm going to say it's Thames or Albany. We were walking to the west side because we had seen the engine there physically and we didn't know where the ladder was. So, in the meantime, we also found the chauffeur. He seemed pretty beat up, and me and one of the other guys got him to --

Q. The chauffeur of what company?

A. 205. We had got him to EMS. We hooked up with the engine company that was on duty that day. All the members, thank God, were there. So we brought the engine back around down to West Street, and I think we went into the Marriott Hotel and supplied water. We went up to like the 30th, 31st floor. We pretty much operated there all day. It was a big building with a green roof, scaffolding all around. It was fully involved and we just hit it from the roof, we hit it from the 35th floor, the 29th. We were there all day doing that and that's basically it.

Q. Does anything else come to mind?

A. No.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Okay. The time is 1516 hours and this interview is concluded with Firefighter Beck.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER CHRISTOPHER PATRICK MURRAY

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: Today's date is December 12, 2001. The time is now 1343 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Fireman Christopher Murray of Engine 205. We're at the quarters of Engine 207 at this time. There is nobody else in the room. The interview concerns the events of September 11, 2001, and what follows is the interview.

Q. Just talk at normal tones so that it picks you up.

A. I guess it was about 8:50. A passerby stopped in quarters, told us that the first plane just hit the north tower. Personally, I happened to be the person to take that verbal from the passerby. I walked out in the street and you could see the north tower right down Middagh Street. You could see the billowing smoke. I went back into the firehouse, told the guys to put on the news. Us being where we were, everybody knew -- we felt we were going to get assigned. Roughly, I would say, it was three minutes max, Engine 205 got assigned to the Trade Center.

We went over the Brooklyn Bridge, came down I believe it was Broadway and stopped the rig on Broadway and Liberty. At the same time, the second plane hit.

So when we were stepping off the rig, we heard the explosion and we looked up and we saw what everybody else saw, a big ball of fire, smoke, flame debris, building debris.

We got off the rig, grabbed the roll-ups, and our boss, thankfully, decided that it was not a safe place for us to be. We moved the rig. We went down a little south and came up on Church Street and I believe that would be Greenwich or Trinity rather. It looks like Trinity. I believe it would probably be Trinity and maybe Cedar.

Q. Okay.

A. No. Sorry. I guess maybe Trinity and Thames. Right by the Burger King, across the street, actually, by the church, by Trinity Church there. We grabbed our roll-ups. We walked over to the command post on West Street, on West and Liberty, and we spoke to Chief Barbara.

Q. So you walked about three blocks over?

A. Yes, we walked.

Q. You walked past the whole Trade Center complex?

A. Right. I think the only time we actually traveled on Liberty Street, and I'm not sure because I don't know if we came behind 130 Liberty and came up Washington to Cedar, but I know we wound upcoming behind Washington or down Washington over to Cedar to West Street.

Q. Okay.

A. At this time Chief Barbara was right by the footbridge.

Q. South footbridge?

A. Yes, the south footbridge.

Q. Okay.

A. [redacted], the Chief told us to stand fast, which we did for, I guess, well, it seemed like an hour, but more than likely it was five or ten minutes.

At this time we witnessed a lot of jumpers, a lot of debris falling off of the building. I don't know if you want to talk about Danny Suhr because we eventually got involved with Danny Suhr.

Q. Who is that?

A. He's another fireman. I think he's from 216, but I'm not sure. Danny Suhr, it's rumored he got hit by a jumper.

Q. You tell me everything. This will help us.

A. Standing on West Street across from Liberty, watching the jumpers, we saw a jumper come off the south side of the south tower, which would be the side facing Liberty Street, say on the cross street, a good distance to the southeast corner of this parking lot, which would actually be the northwest corner of Cedar and Washington, which is where Danny Suhr and his company, which, again, I believe, was 216, they were forming up to make their way to the towers. Danny Suhr got struck. Approximately a half a minute to a minute later, we came upon the scene, stopped to help Danny Suhr, dropped our roll-ups, grabbed a bunch of EMTs. There were other companies there. The companies I remember, I think, were 122. Somebody said 217, but I don't remember seeing them, which, again, it doesn't mean they weren't there. There were probably about 20 firemen trying to help Danny.

We were there for about five minutes. We helped Danny get loaded into the bus, went back, reformed, grabbed our roll-ups, put our Scotts back on, started walking north on Washington Street. At this time we were -- actually, it might have been in front of 90 West. I think we were in front of 90 West and we were going to start walking north on Washington. Our Lieutenant decided that the safer way to go would be to go down to Albany, over to Greenwich, down into the Rector Street train station, which is on Greenwich and Rector Street, and try to come up to 4 World Trade through the tunnel.

Q. Through the tunnel.

A. Through the tunnel. We made our way south from where we were, which was Cedar and Washington, south on Washington, behind 130 Liberty Street. As soon as we got behind 130 Liberty Street, the building came down. So it's us, 122 I know was there, I believe the remainder of 216, minus Danny Suhr, if that is his company. It could be 219 for all I know. We were all there. We formed up in the basement on the back side of that building to regroup after the collapse to avoid all the stuff you see on the news, the cloud of dust, the pitch black, the debris, everything else. Our boss took a role call. All our members were accounted for.

At this time we exited the building back onto Greenwich Street and Albany. Realizing that there was really no way to go north at this point, we started heading south and we started searching the storefronts, vehicles, for other civilians in need of aid, and I believe we got as far as possibly, if there's an address here, which I don't think there is, opposite -- I think we were in this building opposite 19 Rector Street. We went in there again to reform, try to get some water to clean out our eyes, regroup, make sure everybody is all right. We didn't aid civilians in any way except probably gave them a direction to go, which was south, go to the ferry, go south. Probably we were in there for five to ten minutes max. Our Lieutenant now wanted to go find our chauffeur, who at the time we thought was missing, so we started going back north.

Going back north, we heard the other building coming down. Almost as soon as we left the building we were in, the other building came down. A cloud of dust ensued. We kind of went back into the next building we came upon to let the dust settle. Me and another firefighter, George Clancy, with the -- I don't want to say recommendation -- at the request of a civilian searched the two lower floors of this building looking for a school that was rumored to have 20 or 30 kids in it. We didn't get any access. We assumed that the school had been evacuated.

We left there, walked back up, and we saw our boss, who had spoken to the other guys in our company now who had come on their own. They had given us word on our chauffeur, that he was taken to the hospital. The other guys that were there, frantic calls on the radio trying to get in touch with anybody, and at this time we still had no idea what the magnitude of this was. We managed to get most of our guys that we knew were there.

Prior to all of that, prior to leaving West Street, I remember 118's report that they were on the 15th floor. I don't know which building. I don't think they gave a building. I think it was just to the battalion who sent them into the World Trade Center, and they said 118 is on the 15th floor working our way up. Then, when the buildings came down, we realized that we lost probably all of the truck.

We went back over to West Street after the second collapse and started stretching 3-1/2 hose to marine, which was down in the pier area over here. I guess that would be Gateway Plaza.

Q. Right.

A. Or maybe north. No, I guess it would have to be. Because most of the stuff that we did, we stretched down Albany probably, so I would have to assume that they were down here.

After doing that, we got assigned to 90 West Street or the building south of that, which I think was 70 West Street, because 90 West Street was burning, pretty much fully involved. I would assume that this was -- I'm just guessing -- just guessing, I would say somewhere in the neighborhood of about 11:00, 11:30. We entered 70 West Street, went up to the 37th floor, set up a Stang, and spent the remainder of the afternoon until about 9:00 o'clock at night in a hotel room on the 37th floor putting water on 90 West Street.

Q. Is that right?

A. Yeah. Then about 9:00 o'clock at night, the Chiefs asked that anybody who was working for more than 24 hours, which at this time was half of 205, plus the chauffeur, I believe, we were released. They told us you've been released, report back in the morning. Then we went down in the street and, you know, you do your own private search looking for people that you know, guys you've seen. Guys that I saw over here on West Street that I know personally were Arthur Barry from 15 Ladder, 15 and 4 down on South Street.

Q. From 15 and 4?

A. Yes, 15 and 4. He was down there. He was at quarters that morning. He went up there, I believe. Actually, I'm certain. He was listed as missing. He was also on West Street. I saw 101 come up with their rig. I saw 202 and 224, I think, also come up with their rigs, and this is all before we left. So a lot of these companies were at the command post on the west side.

Q. The command post you said was still somewhere near that side footbridge?

A. Yes. Well, they didn't have an official command post set up. They had a Chief that was sort of forming a command post. He didn't have the boards out, the command post that we know where you have the boards and Field Com.

Q. Right.

A. He had, I guess, a group of companies asking him which way do we go, where do we go, where do you want us? So whether he was setting it up at the time or the other Chiefs wanted him to stay and they were up by the north bridge at the command post, maybe they told him to go down there and accept companies. I have no idea. That's speculation. But that's where Chief Barbara was and that's basically the end of the day.

Q. Was there any order to switch handy-talkie frequencies? I'm just thinking, how did they -- when they knew they had two buildings, they couldn't even do one building reasonably on channel 1.

A. I don't know. I didn't have a radio.

Q. Oh, okay.

A. The message that I heard, the report that I heard from 118, I mean, you're used to hearing company numbers, you hear it and for whatever reason it just stands out over all the other reports. That one I heard, and then you heard the Maydays, you heard all the Maydays.

Q. After the first building came down?

A. Yes.

Q. On the handy-talkie, there were a lot of Maydays?

A. A lot of Maydays, a lot of people -- well, it was basically just back up, back up, back up, and that's pretty much what I remember of the whole day.

Q. Were any orders given to like, hey, let's go on the pile. I mean, once the smoke cleared and --

A. I don't know.

Q. You didn't hear that?

A. No, I don't know, because we were in the hotel all day. So halfway through the day or a couple hours through the day, we actually lost our radios. Our radios went dead. It's probably more than half of the day. Probably about 4:00 o'clock, 5:00 o'clock, our radios went dead, because we heard reports all day long of 7 World Trade possibly coming down and I think at 5:30 that came down.

Q. Right.

A. So we heard that all day long, all the warnings. But as far as the other directions that people were giving or getting, everything was garbled. You had a lot of transmissions, people stepping on everybody, a lot of Maydays, a lot of confusion. I mean, nothing but confusion.

Personally, and this is an opinion, I don't think there was anybody there that would have given anybody an order to go dig. But that's just my personal opinion. Hearing some of the transmissions that they sent that they put on CNN, you could pick up transmissions, if you were able, evacuate the area, if you're able. But as far as individual orders over the radio to individual companies, a direct order to individual companies, I didn't hear any of that or I couldn't make any of that out if there was. Like I said, the radios were a ball of confusion.

Q. Most of the time, huh?

A. Yes. I mean, all day.

Q. All day.

A. All day. All you heard was Maydays, and whether it was from members in the building, I'd like to believe that it wasn't, because that's going to be a horrible thought for anybody that there were guys in there that survived the collapse. That's just kind of sad. There would be no rescue. So I'd like to believe that all the Maydays were from people out in the street trying to get the attention. [redacted]

This is before the collapse. Actually, afterwards everybody pitched in. [redacted] I think all the firemen were looking up.

Q. The firemen that got hit from earlier on in the story, he wasn't alive? They were giving him first aid. Was he conscious at any point?

A. No, he wasn't conscious. Whether or not he still had any vitals we couldn't ascertain, but his company was working on him, so they were giving him rescue breathing if they resuscitate him or the bag, the BVM rather. But we didn't try to ascertain vitals. We just tried to load him up on the stretcher and get the EMTs to get a bus and get him out.

Q. I have a question for you. The building you were in, now, you lobbed water all day onto 90 West.

A. Yes.

Q. 90 West was largely involved in fire from the collapse?

A. Yes. I believe it started early on. There were a lot of car fires from the debris that was coming down, so I believe that maybe some of the debris from the first plane that hit the north tower traveled into that building and started the fire. I know there was a pretty good fire condition on the first floor. You could see it through the doors and the windows and then through the rest of the day. I don't know the condition of the building. It looked like they were work on it because they had the scaffolding set up.

Q. Right, yes, there was work.

A. So I assume that the interior condition of the building was not really in that good shape because the fire traveled to the upper floors pretty fast, unless that whole side of the building was affected by the plane debris, which is probably a safer assumption.

Q. From where you operated from lobbing water all day, were there any other companies with you or in that area? Do you remember seeing any other companies?

A. Yes, there were companies. There were a lot of vollie companies, I think, coming up, trying to find out if they could help, and there really wasn't a lot for anybody to do other than relieve a company that was already there. But a lot of vollie companies were coming up. I know they had at least two hand lines operating and another Stang out of 70 West, out of the hotel, which I think is the Marriott Hotel, of course, the problem being we had very limited water.

Q. Right. Water was a problem all day.

A. Right. That building, 70 West, we were hitting that in waves. We'd shut down the upper floors and use the hand lines on the lower floors, then we'd shut down that floor and use a Stang in the middle floors, and then shut down that and use the Stang for more floors. I think they had I don't know if it was a hand line or another Stang up on the roof trying to shoot it into the top of the building. But limited water, so it was kind of a --

Q. Not a good way to put out a high-rise building fire.

A. No. Definitely not. Very tedious process. The winds kicked up and it looked like we were going to lose that building as well. Thankfully, the winds died down and we got control of it. When we left, it wasn't extinguished but it was on its way. I wouldn't even say it was under control, but it looked like it wouldn't be that much longer.

That's about it. That's all I know.

Q. What impression did you get when the south tower fell down and this cloud of dust was enveloping you? Did you have a sense that most of the building collapsed or did you have a sense of what was --

A. Early on, looking at the buildings, my personal belief, my personal immediate belief was that the top of the building was going to slide off of the south tower because damage that the plane did, it looked like it took out half the building on a number of floors, on multiple floors. But it was a fleeting thought. I don't think anybody there believed in their heart that that building was going to collapse, even that the top would come off. But I don't think anybody believed that that building was going to collapse the way it did.

But when it did start coming down, you knew exactly what it was. A couple of guys thought it was another plane because we heard reports of another plane coming in, and then you heard this noise and a few guys said it's another plane. But for whatever reason, I knew exactly what it was. It sounded like a freight train going right over your head. It was an unbelievable experience. Then, when the second one went, obviously, you heard the same noise, so you knew what that was.

Q. At any time did anybody -- I'm not being critical or anything like that. Did you ever hear of anybody trying to get a handle, like on a roll call, who's left? Was the handy-talkie at any time clear enough? How about orders assigning companies to do certain things? Anything like that?

A. No.

Q. It was just chaotic on the radios?

A. Everybody was screaming. We knew we had guys down there that came on their own, and if you're standing next to somebody with a radio, a couple of us had radios and we hooked up with the other guys from a company that came on their own, so you're trying to break in whenever you can. We heard one of our guys breaking in looking for another guy on the truck and we had just run into him. We all kind of converged on the same corner. It probably took us at least a minute to get our message out that we got him and he's with us. Then we all hammered again three blocks north, which, again, was north and I would assume it had to be Trinity, like right in front of the American Stock Exchange, just north of the American Stock Exchange, we happened to run into a couple other guys, and then we went all over to West Street, where we regrouped with off-duty members and on-duty members.

Q. How did you get away from the scene? You said before something about 9:00 o'clock at night you operated until around?

A. Yes. I think at 9:00 o'clock at night, again, a lot of this is personal belief, I think some of the Chiefs started to realize that you really had a lot of people down there and a lot of people that were not going to be that effective in the job that needed to be done. You could have 10,000 guys down there and endangering these 10,000 guys needlessly there for the work that 2,000 guys are going to be doing. Plus you had guys that were tired, you had guys that were beat up, you had guys that were hurt.

Not to say that not every single one of us was not dedicated. We were all dedicated. We all wanted to go in there and dig and help to get these guys out. But there was a lot of guys, I think, that were just incapable of doing that, and I think a lot of the Chiefs realized that. So the guys that were there for more than 24 hours, which I'm sure was a lot of guys, they released them. Whether everybody left or not, I don't know. But our company left. We were physically and emotionally beat up and spent.

Q. Okay. Sad story.

A. Yes. There's a lot of them out there.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: I want to thank Fireman Murray for his interview. This concludes the interview at 1406 hours and that's all.

File No. 9110328

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT NEIL BROSNAN

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: The time is 1608 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Brosnan of Engine 212. We are in the office in 212's quarters. There is nobody else here in the office. This interview is in regard to the events of September 11, 2001. What follows is Lieutenant Brosnan's interview.

A. We were at quarters. We were assigned fourth on the fifth alarm. Our ticket gave us a response location, lobby command post of Tower 2. So we were assigned to a lobby command post on the initial alarm.

We arrived -- we'll start with our response from quarters. We respond from quarters, we hit extremely heavy cab traffic on Park Avenue, in the vicinity of Engine 207's quarters. For four blocks, to get past the cabs we actually had to go through a parking lot, the housing project parking lot. We were blocked out. We tried to move traffic.

[redacted] Brosnan [redacted] This was reported to the police detectives on my interview with them. We thought it was unusual, but we just went against traffic. We got to the Brooklyn Bridge. Me and 221 were in tandem for the whole way.

I arrived on Broadway. Liberty Street was open. We went south on -- we went west on Liberty Street. I took a hydrant location at Liberty and Church, on the east side of Liberty Street. At that time, getting off the rig, we were informed, we believe, by the department radio that the elevators were falling in the shafts and not to use high bank or mid bank of elevators. To use only low bank of elevators only.

We switched to our command channel. I walked across the street. We had heard a transmission about bringing in spare Scott cylinders, which we had already had. We had already left the rig with our extra equipment. I encountered 217 and 214 on the other side, informed them that spare Scotts were needed. They went and got their spare Scotts. We proceeded single file to 10 Truck's quarters. Our command post was supposed to be Washington and Liberty, in the lobby command post.

We arrived at that location. We encountered large amounts of building debris falling, hitting 10 Truck's quarters. We did not think we could safely egress into the lobby command post from this location due to the bodies and debris falling down.

Right around this time we encountered a ESU unit. We believe it was ESU Unit 8 from PD that was reporting a third plane was inbound. They were running north on Liberty towards Broadway, imploring people to run.

Q. East on Liberty. East on Liberty? Liberty is this way.

A. Okay. They were pushing east on Liberty towards Broadway.

Q. East on Liberty toward Broadway.

A. They were going east, going back up towards Broadway. At this time, we thought a third plane hit and we were now in the debris field of the plane with numerous bodies and we thought we couldn't survive a third event in the street. I looked -- we were right here, at the corner of Liberty and --

Q. Greenwich.

A. -- Greenwich. We encountered the security guard at 130 Liberty Street. We asked him could he escort us through that building and could we get down to West Street through this building to use them for cover in case the third plane hit. We figured we couldn't live in the street. We would be dead if the third plane hit where we were.

We then exited. Me and 217, at this time, were definitely together. We went single file through the building, came out under this underpass. There was a small white bridge there. We used that as cover. We brought our members in one at a time into the Marriott Hotel for cover.

At this time, I had my five guys brought in. 217 was the next company to cross. I proceeded to the desk. There was a chief there, I believe it was the 8th Battalion, and I'm not going to recall his name right now, but it was the Battalion 8. We were not assigned to the hotel, so we inquired -- I inquired with the hotel manager. I see numerous Fire Department units here and I inquired, "Could those elevators get us into the Trade Center?" He said, "No." I said, "How can we get back into concourse level of the Trade Center for cover?" He assigned us his desk clerk who led us through the Vista Hotel and into the concourse level of 1 World Trade Center.

Now, I believe that is still the concourse level from the West Street side. That's how I interpret it. We proceeded through. On the way out I met a chief who assigned me actually to the 71st floor of 1 World Trade Center and I informed him that I was not assigned to 1. I was going to use the concourse level to come back on 2.

238 came, was behind me and he encountered the same chief. I proceeded into Tower 1. I started through Tower 1 concourse level, got in approximately 200 feet, realized -- did not encounter any other Fire Department units at this time.

I staged my members and went looking for a command post or another chief to try to touch base with somebody. At that point, I had made a circle, looped around and seen 238 coming up behind me, which they were still in 1, right before it comes into the Concourse Plaza. I proceeded back to 238, which my men were staged approximately 150 feet further in. So I went back out towards the West Street side of World 1. At this time, I encountered 238 at an elevator bank and they were asking the security guard was it a Fire Department manned elevator and I had just told them that "We are not assigned to 1. Follow me and we will proceed deeper in the building and we'll pick up the hallways. That will get us across back to 2."

At this time, I caught the explosion, coming out from my left side. I seen the ceiling coming down and we all got low and backed down a dead end hallway. Me and the officer from 238 and the security guards, and I believe two of his members. I got low and back down and all I recall is for me it was the right wall that would be my wall back out to West Street.

When I crawled out, we became entangled with civilians. Our masks got entangled, I believe, on turnstiles coming out of their security posts and with civilians pushing, I lost my mask at this point. At this point I tried to go back towards my members, but we had 20, probably -- could have been upwards of 30 civilians pushing us out this way and it became the best option for me. Me and 238 crawled back out to West Street.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: I'm going to hold the tape for one second. I'm going to shut it to stop the interruption.

(Recess taken.)

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: It's 14:18. I had the tape off for two minutes because of an interruption and the interview resumes now.

A. We were blown down the hallway. My left eye was blinded by debris. Our mouths were stuffed with, I guess, the concrete debris from the explosion and at this time, when I was getting blown down, I thought this was the third plane ESU was talking about. I had that in my mind, that now the third plane had hit the building and that's what the event was.

At first we were waiting for the heat to come and then we realized it was breathable and we crawled out. We crawled out and you couldn't even talk. You had so much debris in your mouth.

Q. This building was still okay. What happened was 2 collapsed and caused all of this debris and dust and everything else. Is that it?

A. Actually, the explosion came in through those doors and came up behind the way I had come in. And I realized that, that the explosion came from the way I had just left.

Q. Did you know what the explosion was?

A. No. We never heard, through this whole event, through the collapse of other than -- well, 1 World Trade Center I happened to be there. I seen that collapse. We never knew 2 World Trade Center collapsed on Channel 3. My men didn't know it, I didn't know it. In fact, I didn't know for a week later the sequence of events until I talked to a chief in the 8th battalion and he told me I was wrong. I thought the hotel collapsed first.

Because now as I get out of 1 World Trade, we get out with civilians. We tell the civilians go north. I told the civilians go north. I don't know why, and I went north. I actually exited the building and went north on West Street. I went to a rig to try to get the debris out of my eyes. I was unsuccessful, turned around and linked up with Lieutenant Wilkinson of Engine 238 and asked him how he was doing. He stated he was missing his nozzleman and I said, "Okay. I'm missing my whole company. Let's try to get our Maydays transmitted."

We were unsuccessful. We could not get a Mayday transmission acknowledged and there were so many maydays coming in. We were unsuccessful so I told him, at that time, I had lost my mask coming out, to wait for me. Me and him would go back and we would do a search for our missing members, to move his men safely up here.

I believe the last I seen of Lt. Wilkinson was under the black overpass at 6 World Trade Center. I then began searching for a mask and to clean out my eyes. Somebody led me into a store. I have no idea where the store was. They washed my eyes out in the slop sink. I came back, I went up Vesey Street searching the rigs for a mask and was unsuccessful. I came back down to West and I believe I found a spare mask on Squad 41's rig or Squad 18's rig. I took the mask.

At this time, I encountered a Chief Keenan and I knew he was not in our battalion and I believe he's in the 49, but he used to be in 28 Engine. I physically gave him my Maydays and 238's and told him their last location. We had just entered 1 World Trade, concourse level. He proceeded south on West Street. I would assume towards Chief Ganci's command post. He was heading in that direction when I last seen him.

At this point, my eyes are now I can see. I squint and I notice that the hotel is in a V-shaped collapse with only the two ends of the hotel -- the whole center of the hotel has disappeared into a V-shaped collapse down to almost street level.

I realized there was ten to fifteen companies that I had only passed three to five minutes prior to this explosion. That's about the time I was in 1, was no more than three to five minutes when this occurred, which we found out later was the collapse of 2, but we did not know at this time.

At this time, I have a mask, I run into a John McDonald of Engine 271 and he says, "Neil, where are you going?" I said, "Mike, I'm going back in to look for missing members and so does 328." I get back somewhere in the vicinity of 20 Truck, is the last truck I physically remember, when we noticed that Tower 1 is coming down and we all proceed north on West Street.

Q. Running away from this collapsing tower?

A. Running. And I used the rigs that were parked on West as a guide, because I couldn't see very well at that time to begin with and I really couldn't run. All I did was I was holding onto the rigs trying to work my way north. I made it one to two rigs past 20 Truck and I crawled under a rig and as I did, I became separated from McDonald. Engine 271 was a little north of me.

After the collapse, which really was rapid, I was no sooner under the rig then it went silent. I crawled out, I believe I followed the rigs. When I ran out of rigs feeling my way and then I went left and I found myself somewhere over on that North End and Vesey Street in like an open lot.

I seen a Chief that was coming down the West Side, West Street, encountered him. I told him my company was missing. I asked him where there was a command post. He stated he didn't know. I physically gave this chief and a lieutenant wrote down the names of my missing members who I had last seen. I then told him I was going to go back up to Liberty and Church to see if my chauffeur was alive, because I thought I had lost the company at that time.

I was unable at any point to raise anybody on the radio due to the numerous Maydays, so I physically walked. I believe I must have walked up Murray Street. I was heading down Church, I encountered a jet engine somewhere on Church Street and decided this was not good and headed up to Broadway. I walked down Broadway, encountered my chauffeur at Broadway and Liberty and I said, "Okay. He's alive. I have a chauffeur." I said, "Mike, go to the hospital. You're injured. I'm going back down to the command post. I'm going to search on my way."

On my way up from West Street to Broadway, I searched the perimeter. I didn't find anybody. I didn't even find another fireman. Nobody. On my way back I encountered a Captain I knew that was the Captain of 22 Engine that day being loaded in an ambulance. He said, "If you see 22 Engine, Neil, tell them they're taking me to the hospital."

I then went back to the command post, reported to Chief Nigro, told him I had members missing, I was going to wait until I had word whether they were in the hospital. I stayed there two to three hours and then I was removed to the hospital.

Q. You stayed where two to three hours? At Nigro's command post?

A. At Chief Nigro's command post, and I believe that was at Chambers Street.

Q. Chambers and --

A. And the West Side Highway.

Q. Okay.

A. I stayed there and then I was removed to the hospital to have my eyes treated, and that was the end of my day. At the hospital he had told me that my members had been removed, but at the time I thought they were lying just to get rid of you.

Q. Sure.

A. Just trying to say, "Hey, listen. Come on. Time to bring in a fresh crew." But I remember the last three people I seen was Chief Keenan was south of me, 271 was behind me. I had last visually seen Lieutenant Wilkinson by 6 World Trade and I never made eye contact or radio contact with him. He was found expired later that night in front of 1 World Trade.

Q. Tell me about what command channel -- you said you switched to a command channel, something like that. Where was that?

A. We were told to go to 3.

Q. You were told to go to 3?

A. We were told to go to 3. And that's when I was with 217, 214. We were getting our gear together at Liberty and Church, on the south side of -- on the west side of Church. So we all went to 3 right about that time.

Q. Who gave you those instructions? That came from the department radio?

A. It came on the radio. You know, I didn't know they said go to 3 and, actually, the guys checked my channel to 3 because of my eyes.

Q. Did you get the sense that 3 was going to be the tactical channel for the operations in the building they were sending you to?

A. I thought 3 was going to be my operations for 2 World Trade.

Q. For 2 World Trade. Okay.

A. Because as an assignment we were assigned to the lobby command post. I actually took that physically to mean, from the last event, that we were going into a commander. We weren't going into Chief Ganci's command post. We were being assigned a fire assignment right on the ticket. None of us could get to it. Some units got to communications. We never seen it. I never knew where the command posts were. We were told, when we got here, the kids that were still in 10 Truck's quarters, there were two firemen, and they said, No. The command post had been moved two or three times, but they didn't know where they were.

When we got here nobody knew, because we were all predominantly Brooklyn and Harlem companies were here.

Q. Right. At the hotel.

A. At the hotel. I knew -- it wasn't my assignment -- that I could get in back through the concourse level without getting killed. To go across the street, actually Danny Suhr got killed right behind us and I never seen him. But there were jumpers coming. I said, I'm gonna lose 50% of my men in the street.

And it was that many bodies right here on the street at that time. It was scattered with bodies. They were coming down like -- I seen several coming through the smoke and I said, "We're really not going to survive here." But we never questioned, you know. We seen the amount of fire. We just figured it would be an evacuation. I thought there was 10 to 15 floors of fire on the Church Street side of Tower 2 on my arrival, fully involved.

I said, "There is no way." I said, "This is just an evacuation." I mean we did this fire last time. And I knew when I got here there were too many companies, but the companies looked at me like I was talking Greek when I said, "No, I don't belong here, Chief. I'm assigned to 2. I'm leaving."

My company searched the hotel during the 1993 explosion and I knew it's a low-occupancy hotel. It self-evacuates, you don't need 20 companies to search it. I said, I'm out of here. and we proceeded in. Then the only company that followed me was 238. 217 got involved in Danny Suhr's rescue and I don't know where 214 went. 214 might have went to the command post. I'm not sure. Like I said, we seen the 8th Battalion Chief, I seen 122 Truck, 58 Engine.

Q. Where were they? Where were they physically?

A. 58 Engine was at the doorway of the hotel. There were numerous truck companies at the elevator lobby, but I do not know -- I thought I seen 4 truck, but that was the only one I recognized.

Q. In the Vista Hotel?

A. In the Vista Hotel, at the elevators. But there were at least four other truck companies staged there. I mean it was compact. I mean it was crowded. It was literally crowded at the elevator bank. And I remember them looking at me saying, "What do you mean these elevators don't go through?" Because I went to the hotel manager and said, "Can we get here from there?" He said, "No."

He assigned me his desk clerk. The desk clerk escorted us out and led me the way, because I had never been into the Trade Center from this route and he assured me the concourse level, I could get back to 2 at the concourse level. I knew once I got up the front, I was familiar with the front-end mall area of the concourse level. I knew I could get back over to 2 without getting killed. Not realizing that it collapsed.

But we never knew. We never knew 2 collapsed until after the event. I physically seen 1 collapsing, because I seen it just crumbling down. And I said, if it comes down, we're dead. You know, we were really just looking for a place to die. I did not think I was going to live through the event.

Q. What happened when you were in the concourse level or the lobby of Tower 1 around the time that 2 collapsed? All kinds of dust was blowing in.

A. Oh, you couldn't see. It was pitch black.

Q. Pitch black and was it the concourse level or the lobby of Tower 1 you were in?

A. No. The street level from West Street, which I'm going to call it the concourse level.

Q. Okay.

A. Now it's not the first floor, because that's not where the fire command -- the fire command station would have been the floor above me. I knew this was not my assignment. My assignment was here. I knew where I was going to. I just never made it.

Q. Who was with you? What units do you remember in Tower 1 when you were there?

A. I went in a good 200 yards in, maybe 150 feet in as -- right short of the Path station, retreated back when I seen 238 coming in the hallway I had just come in. I had just hooked up with 238 at an elevator bank. He was asking the security guard, "Is it a manned Fire Department?" And I was about to tell him, "This is not our assignment.

This is 1. We're going to cut across and go to 2." With that we both got blown in. That was it. It was pitch black and we were being thrown back down, 50 feet down a hallway.

But I recall it was right wall out for me. I tried to go back left for my members and it was not possible. We were now getting groups of civilians coming to the lights and the people were just coming to our light. Which saved the last people that we visually seen.

They observed the explosion and the hallway disappeared. They thought the hallway blew up where I had come from. They thought they seen debris coming down and said, "The Lieutenant's dead." My senior guy regroups the company. He yells out, "Regroup." They're under light debris also.

The senior kid that I had, Vinnie Picciano, who had come down from 8 Engine, who had worked midtown for eight years, his next thing he yelled out, "Are there any Port Authority personnel here?" And we had in our visual range, when we walked in, it was perhaps up to 200 people in our visual range. Which is not a lot for that building, but we had people milling around and not really in urgent -- they weren't running. They were just there. You know, leaving the building. These people probably seen the Fire Department units and when we put on our lights they just came to us like fire flies. They just came right to our lights.

We came out with 20 to 30 people on West Street, me and 238, something in that vicinity. These kids deeper in actually came out with more people. It could have been anywhere from 50 to 100 people that they got out. They actually got them out two different exits. They got them out through the Church Street side, up to Church and Vesey, and they got the second time -- the last time they left the building with an unconscious man, they went out to Vesey and West. But they actually made three trips in, because it was lighter conditions in this side of the building than there was outside. It was heavy black smoke over here. Conditions lightened as they went through the building. But none of us knew that there was a collapse.

The kids had an extraordinary day. The senior kid actually said -- because they got a maintenance guy. The maintenance guy said, "If you can get me out of the building, I know where the exits are."

He was their assured thing to get them out. And for some reason everybody went to Vesey Street. Nobody even thought of taking these hallways back towards Liberty. Thank God.

But actually on their third search in they encountered a heavy rubble and heavy fire field in that concourse level, which they didn't know what it was. They just knew that -- they actually stretched the house line and there was no water. They said, "Okay. Time to leave."

At this time, they had split into teams. One of the teams had found an unconscious man by the Path subway. In that vicinity, 50, 60 feet from Path. In, behind, I think there is a Banana Republic in that vicinity. That was the last guy. They put him in a chair, they rolled him out to the exit that goes out by West Broadway. As they got to West Broadway, the second collapse occurs. Which they have no idea what it is.

They are now blowing. They actually lose the guy they had just brought out in the debris field. They could not find him. They lost him and they actually had to dig -- Fireman Picciano had to be dug out of a debris field. I think Fireman Berntsen dug him out. Gallaso, Walker and Murphy go up West Broadway. Berntsen and Picciano get separated from him. They actually go up Church Street.

They all eventually meet each other at a triage area at 7 Engine's quarters and that's where they all wound up. They all suffered -- a couple of them suffered significant injuries, but they all got out. We were just lucky. It had nothing to do with skill. It's just a little bit of knowledge got me out of the hotel. If I wasted three minutes there, I was dead. I would have been as dead as everybody in there.

But we never did encounter our command. We never did encounter or link up with our command post. We just never did. We heard transmissions about what not to take, elevators, what channels to go to, but we never physically met a chief that was in charge of 2. We just ...

Q. When you were wherever you were and 2 fell down, what came over your handi-talk? A lot of Maydays; right?

A. Nothing.

Q. Nothing came over?

A. Nothing. Well, first off, I might have been deaf from the concussion. But I asked my members who were also further in and they didn't hear a transmission. And I mean I got out. We couldn't get our Maydays in. I tried a Mayday right away and there were so many Maydays.

My last physical transmission, the thing that saved my life is when I had found the mask and was working my way back towards 1, I received "4 truck OV. Mayday. Mayday." I've fallen several floors. I wait for an acknowledgment. No acknowledgment. He comes on the air again. "4 truck OV. Mayday. Mayday." I've fallen several floors, I'm running out of air. I go "212 to 4 Truck, what's your location?" With that I hear, "Hey, brother. We gotcha. We gotcha. Turn on your pass." But I can't pick up the designation of the truck, other than that they are working their way to 4 Truck. That part I picked up.

"4 Truck, we gotcha. Turn on your pass, brother. We got a roof rope. We'll come and get you." But I don't know who it was. So then I cease and desist, because I was stepping on his transmissions.

But it actually fixated me. It stopped me nice. "Christ, I got my own Maydays and there is nothing I can do. I'm here by myself." And then I run into 271. I said, "I'll go with you." But it delayed me enough that I wasn't back in the building. If I had found the mask five minutes sooner, I'm back in the building. You know? And I would have been history also. But it was just an extraordinary day. It was just a matter of what luck you had. If it hadn't taken me so long to find the mask, because most of the rigs were stripped clean. I just happened to find some kind of -- one of those masks they're tethered to.

Q. Yes.

A. So I said, it's better than nothing.

Q. That's for sure.

A. But there were electrical fires starting on my way out. I could see -- I could actually see the electrical arc and it was like the white lights above us. So I was actually using that for reference. Ceiling, floor. That's how I got reference back on my feet. I was just watching the ceiling and it was arcing. We were extraordinarily lucky, because when I came out there was nobody. I didn't run into another fireman up until I got onto Broadway. I walked all this way and I didn't find anybody.

We encountered -- but I had walked up this way. I had missed that debris field that was here. But even when I walked back I walked around the debris field and just didn't find anybody. And I'm not sure -- the last physical thing I remember was 20 Truck. I have no idea how close -- I know that 1 Truck was crushed, so obviously I made it past 1 Truck. But out of all the trucks I knew, that was the only thing I could remember, was 20 Truck.

We tried to do an intelligence report of who seen last which companies in that lobby. One kid knew the 8th Battalion Chief, Chief Deangelis? We knew he was there. And that was the chief. I told him, "Chief, I'm not assigned here. I'm leaving."

I thought I ran into, just looking facially, the Chief I met in the hallway going out. I thought that was the 12 Battalion Chief and I didn't know his name.

Q. Scheffold?

A. Yeah. I'm not sure if there was two 12 Battalion Chiefs there. But I wasn't certain. Because he told us, don't use high banks of elevators. He said they're collapsing. But we already knew that from the department radio transmission. Other than that, we really -- we just never got into a command post.

Q. In the lobby of Tower 1, did you notice any elevators, anything unusual about the elevators or the elevator doors? Was there fire in the elevator shaft? Were they blown in, the doors? Anything like that?

A. No. They had asked me that, where the explosion came from that I encountered. The explosion came right from the way I had entered. It came right from in back of me. Because I was standing next -- I was on the far side of the bank, away from the officer from 238, right at an elevator door and nothing came from my left side. Everything hit me from the blast from my left. And I was actually looking at the elevators trying to figure out what floors they served to see if anything was moving. But I knew it was not our assignment, so I was going to just leave there and just grab 238 and proceed in after he finished talking to the security guard.

But the good part was the security people stayed on site. The Port Authority people stayed on site and they were our eyes out. They were our sure way out. If they weren't there, I think I'd have lost the kids, and I had a probie -- he was actually holding on to people, he had no idea. I know some kids from midtown, they're dead. He made the smartest decision. He latched on to a Port Authority personnel and then he physically, as they moved through that concourse level, which is a considerable distance from here to get over to here, to find these exits, they used stores as reference points. They were wiping the stores clean to see what the name of the store was and the woman actually knew -- in their track of women that they had, actually knew by stores, "You're moving in the wrong direction." So they actually referenced off stores and the Port Authority maintenance guy. They were his eyes, but these kids led them to safety.

As they got people up the first time to the street and told them to go north, they did encounter three FBI people, I believe, and even some Port Authority police then had helped them on their third -- when they did their last search of that area. Which their last search was from the -- they actually searched the Port Authority station. Two guys went down there and looked. Nobody. They found a body behind the path and that was the last person they seen in their visual range. They didn't encounter anybody else. That was the last guy that they had seen. There was nobody else moving in their visual range. And they actually encountered the debris field in two. They just got out the door when the second one collapsed and it blew them out into the street. But if they stayed a minute longer, I don't know -- I think they were in the only survivable part of that building. We just hit the two survivable ends on the Vesey Street side. We were lucky.

Q. Did 212 lose anybody? No?

A. No. We accounted for everybody. Everybody went to the hospital with scrapes. We had one kid on medical leave. That was the kid, Picciano.

Q. How long did it take to get a handle on that your guys were okay? I know everybody was scattered.

A. I thought they were lying to me at the command post, because EMS said, "all your members have been removed to the hospital." I found out, the first call they let me make in the hospital, I called back to the firehouse and they said all members were accounted for. They were all minor injuries and they've been treated and they've been released. I was ecstatic, not realizing how many guys were gone. But it was agonizing for three hours.

Q. It must have been.

A. Well, because I had left them. You know, doing the right thing, going to find the command post. We walked in. "You guys wait for me. I'm going to find the command post."

Luckily 238 come up behind me. Because I knew the building. Once I got by the Path, I knew how to get to 2. I was two minutes away from being in Two.

It was just flukey how it worked out that day. But we knew.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: We're going to break for one second. It's now 1445. I'm going to shut the tape off for one minute.

(Recess taken.)

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: It's still 1445. We're resuming.

A. That's pretty much it, Chief. We just waited at the command post and waited to regroup. We gave the location of the last people we had visually seen, which wasn't a lot.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. I just have to read a little statement at the end here and then we'll be done. This concludes the interview with Lieutenant Brosnan of Engine 212. The time is now 1446 hours. I think Lieutenant Brosnan for his interview and that's all. I'm shutting the tape.

--o0o--

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Brosnan, Neil Brosnan, Engine 212. This is Tape 2. I had already finished Tape 1 and I had to start Tape 2 and I have more information about Chief Downey, Chief Barbara in the street. I just want to continue the interview. The time is now 1659 hours. Just tell me that again.

A. Firefighter Vasquez, who drove Captain Stackpole to the site was at the command post or in the vicinity of Chief Ganci's command post and he had observed or heard some of the following. He had seen Chief Cross and Chief Barbara, who he believes were going to be the commanders in Tower 2, headed across. They had just left Chief Ganci's command post to go over to Tower 2. Chief Downey, he believes, was getting ready to do a hazardous collapse assessment of the building and he had just left the command post, looking at Tower 2 as far as how much damage was done to Tower 2. That's right about when Tower 2 collapsed. And that was his last observation of those three individuals.

Q. Vasquez's last --

A. Bobby Vasquez, he was working light duty in Division 11. He drove Stackpole and somebody else. I don't know. He might have driven Cross. I'm not sure if he drove Cross that day, but he definitely drove -- Captain Stackpole was with him. And Captain Stackpole was with Chief Cross, and I believe both of those individuals were found in close proximity to one another. But they would have been, I believe, the commanders in 2. I think Barbara --

Q. Right. Barbara was sent to be the commander in 2.

A. He was to be the staff chief in charge of 2.

Q. So they never really got a foothold in 2 too much.

A. No.

Q. I mean by the time they started to organize --

A. Pretty much how I interpret it, we were all scrambling from the moment we got off the rig. I mean we scrambled for cover, and I'm sure the chiefs had the same problems. It was monumental to evaluate. I never seen that much fire in a building, in two buildings in my life. It was just extraordinary. I said, "How are we going to do it?" All we could think was bring extra cylinders, because we're going to need lots of cylinders. And then we said that walking up 50 floors is going to take us an hour. That's what we said.

Q. It would have taken you longer?

A. Two hours.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. This is the second conclusion. This is the conclusion of this tape at 1702 hours. The conclusion of the interview with Lieutenant

--o0o--

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: This is Chief Malkin of the Safety Batalion once again. It's 1703 hours. I'm still talking to Lieutenant Brosnan. He just told me a note about in response to the World Trade Center. Go ahead. Tell me that again.

A. While us and 221 [redacted]

[redacted]

Q. This is at Park Avenue and around -- where was this?

A. [redacted].

Q[redacted]

Q. Yes. That is unusual.

[redacted]

Q. You left from quarters?

A. We left from quarters.

Q. And how did you wind up at Park and Tillary?

A. All Fire Department units were instructed to use the Brooklyn Bridge. The Brooklyn Bridge would be held open for us. We were all headed towards the Brooklyn Bridge. It was the quickest way we could get there.

Down right, down onto Park Avenue and Tillary down to the Brooklyn Bridge. We were instructed to use the Brooklyn Bridge, all units responding on that fifth alarm. That was our instructions.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. Again we stop, at 1706 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STEVE FERRIOLO

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: The date is December 12, 2001. It's 1417 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the safety battalion.

I am conducting an interview with Firefighter 1st Grade Steve Ferriolo, Engine 207. We are at the quarters of 207. There is nobody else in the room.

Q. The interview begins right now.

A. On the morning of September 11, we responded to the trade tower at approximately -- oh, it was just before the second plane hit, because I noticed as we were going over the Manhattan Bridge both towers were burning.

We arrived over on West Street, just south of Liberty Street a little after nine o'clock. At that time, the members and the officer grabbed their roll-ups, the standpipe kit, and reported in to the command post. That was the last time I saw them.

That's basically it. I don't know what they were assigned to do. A few hours after that, I went around looking for them. I came upon two different command posts. They had no knowledge that 207 was there.

I found out there was a third command post that got -- was caught in the collapse, so they probably reported in to that one. The two that I did find did not know that they were even there.

Q. Where were the two that you did find?

A. Might have been on Broadway. One was here on Broadway.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: He's looking at the map. He's looking at Broadway and John Street.

Q. Dey Street or John Street, that's the first one?

A. Yeah, around there. The other one was over here on West.

Q. On West Street near the north walk bridge?

A. West Street, right, West.

Q. You checked those two out, and then there was a third one?

A. When I went to the second one, they told me that there was a third one that got caught in the collapse. So they probably reported in to that one. Like I said, I don't know what their assignment was, which tower they were assigned to go into.

Q. Okay.

A. This was later on in the day, like two o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. What did you wind up doing with the pumper? Did you hook up or you just stood where you were?

A. Well, when we first arrived, I hooked up as they were bringing in their roll -- you know, they took their roll-ups, their equipment, and they went to report in to the command post. I was hooking up on West Street just south of Liberty.

Q. West and Liberty, good.

A. Like I said, that was the last time I saw those guys.

Later on during the day, we moved the pumper onto Liberty, and we would be relayed water by the marine unit. We set up our manifold, and there were units taking water off our manifold during the day, and that's where it stayed for a few days after that.

Q. Your manifold -- what is a manifold?

A. The satellite.

Q. Oh, the satellite, okay.

A. We had the satellite with us.

Q. Perfect, okay.

How was the water pressure? Well, from the marine company, it was good.

A. Marine yeah.

Q. Marine is good.

A. After the second tower fell, we lost all hydrant water in the area.

Q. Right.

A. So then we had to bring in marine to pump in whatever 3 1/2 lines we had coming in off the marine boats. That was the only water supply we had.

Q. Did you stay in that area pumping and so forth until late in the day?

A. Mid afternoon I started walking around looking for them. I did the whole perimeter. It was three, four, five o'clock in the afternoon. I came to realize that -- you know, that they weren't around.

Q. How did you get home from the scene? What time did you leave?

A. About eleven o'clock at night. I left the pumper with a fireman that came in from Staten Island. He was manning the pumps. I came back, and I caught a ride with one of the other firemen that came in from home in his truck.

Q. Do you remember hearing any specific things on the handie-talkie? I know Channel 1 was crazy.

Do you remember any orders? Anything specific? Anything unusual?

A. After the second tower collapsed, there was a lot of Maydays, casual Maydays. No, nothing out of the ordinary.

Q. Do you remember hearing anything before the tower -- were you guys there before the towers collapsed?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember hearing any specific orders to companies? Go here, do that, anything like that?

A. No, no.

Q. Do you remember --

A. Not that I can remember. I'm sure there was.

Q. Yes.

Do you remember now -- can you place any other companies where they were operating?

Can you place any members, friends of yours, other firemen?

A. No, like I said, because the towers are -- our rig was two or three blocks away.

Q. Okay.

A. That's where I stayed.

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know even where the command post was, who they reported in to, and what they were assigned to do. I visually couldn't see where they went.

I don't even know where that command post was. I would imagine it was near the towers.

Q. Yes. That's about it?

A. Yeah.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: This concludes the interview with Fireman Ferriolo of Engine 207.

The time is now 1423 hours, and I thank you again for the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STEVE PICCERILL

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: The date is 12/12/01. The time is 1511 hours.

This is Chief Malkin of the safety battalion of the New York City Fire Department.

I'm conducting an interview with fireman Steve Piccerill of Engine 204. We are in the quarters of Engine 224.

There is nobody else in the office, but the two of us, and what follows is the interview.

THE WITNESS: Okay. Got to work a little late that day, about maybe about quarter to nine with the traffic.

I walked in the firehouse, and the guy says a plane hit the trade center. I thought it was a little plane. Anyway, I go running upstairs, get changed, because I know on the third alarm we're going to go.

So I came downstairs, New York 1 had it on TV, and we were watching it, and we are saying wow, looks like a pretty good job, you know.

With that, we get the run to respond, but they tell us not to respond immediately to the trade center. They kept us on Hamilton Avenue and Rapelye Street. So we went down there, and we were actually buffing the job. You know, we were looking at it and saying wow, that's some job.

All of a sudden, I turned away, and I heard a tremendous explosion, and I turned around. That was the second plane hitting the trade center, so that's when they told us to respond.

Meanwhile we thought the tunnel was clear at that time for emergency traffic. When we got in the tunnel, it wasn't clear. It was -- we were stuck in there for maybe ten minutes. I don't know. That's when I started to get a little nervous, because I was afraid that someone in the cars just, you know, figuring in the tunnel, this would be a place to hit also.

We finally got out of the tunnel. We were driving out of the tunnel up West Street, and we're seeing body parts in the street, torsos, chunks of flesh, parts of the airplane, landing gear, car fires everywhere. It was like a war zone.

I had the nozzle, so I had the window right there, and I'm looking up at these two towers saying, how are you going to put this thing out, let alone anything else.

So we got out of our rig. We stopped on West Street some place, and we got out of the rig, and there was a chief -- I don't know who it was, but he told us to wait by this underground parking garage in the staging area.

So we all got off the rig, and we were just standing. He told us to take our turnout coats off, our helmets and our tanks, because he said we're probably going to be here for a little while. He didn't want us to heat up.

So we were all just kind of standing there looking at it, and a lot of stuff running through your mind at this time.

That's when the bodies started coming down, you know. I stopped counting after six, but I don't know how many bodies were coming down. We were waiting. I figured we were going to be going in the building soon, [redacted] I was walking back up to the front of the tunnel, and I heard like a -- to me, it sounded like thunder, and I just saw stuff coming down, and I heard someone. He said, "Run for your life. The tower's falling."

I looked up, and I just saw this thing coming, and we all just ran, ran into the tunnel. We got in there, and I don't know how many guys were there. Maybe -- maybe 30 or 40 guys. I know 211 was there with us, 210. 224 was with us. Who else? That's all I can remember offhand. 221 was with us.

We were all kind of making our way through this underground garage, and now it's starting to get lousy from the smoke, and it's banking down, and we were trying to find our way out.

We found our way to a doorway in a stairwell, figuring we were going to get out, and the door was locked. Not one of us had any kind of forcible entry tools, so we just ran.

Now I'm saying, "Oh shit, now I'm going to -- I'm going to suffocate in here along with 40 other guys," and who comes flying up the stairs out of the smoke, this lonely janitor, saying, "I got a key for that door."

So bingo, the guy comes up fumbling for the keys, and he finally gets the door open, and we get out, and I was, like, wow, wow, we're out of that.

So when we got out, I'm not really sure where it was, Chief. We were in this -- maybe a courtyard or something adjacent to the first tower that was still on fire, and I'm looking up at that, and I'm looking at one our of our guys, Gary Z. He got hurt pretty bad at the time. He was sitting in the ambulance. Our lieutenant got hurt there, too. He was laying on the ground. So we packaged them all up, and we were getting into the ambulance, and I don't know if a guy said it over the bullhorn or a P.A. or something. I don't know. I know it was a loud voice.

He said, "The tower's leaning. Run for your lives." And I look up, and I see the tower coming our way, and I'm saying, that's it, Steve, you ain't -- you know, you know you're not going to outrun the freaking tower.

So we put them in the ambulance, and we just took off. We just ran for all we were worth, running and running, and I'm looking back and, you know, it's coming. So me and this guy Mike McKenna and two cops -- I don't know if they were Port Authority, regular cops -- all running through this lot and we see a little -- maybe a security shack or some kind of shanty, a little building, maybe 10 by 10.

So I'm the first one to hit it. I dive behind it, and we all dived behind it, and we were just hunkering down. The stuff is hitting us, and it gets pitch black, and I can't breathe.

We were all just sucking the ground, and I figured the building -- the tower didn't get me, the other tower. I didn't suffocate. Now I'm going to die here in this shit.

We were just hunkering, praying, just waiting for something to happen, and finally it started to lighten up, and it got a little bit lighter. I said to Mike, "Mike, it's lightening up. Let's get the hell out of here."

And we got up. We still couldn't see good, but we were kind of like feeling our way. We found a fence. We found a hole in the fence. We just followed the wall until we finally got out into clean air, and right by the river, a little walkway. I think it's behind Stuyvesant School, a little walkway right by the river, and we came out there. I was hacking out stuff for ten minutes.

Then I just sat on the bench and was saying to myself, this really happened? It was really -- after that I was basically, I guess, shocked. I was just -- I was just standing there. I was just sitting there, just contemplating. That was really it.

I met up with the guys from 224, 202. I hung with them for a little while. Then we were just hanging out watching the Building 7 ready to go. That's where our captain had finally found us on a recall, because everyone thought we were dead, because our rig got destroyed.

That was it. The captain says, "You're going to the hospital." I said to the captain, "I'm okay." I said, "I'm alive, man."

He says, "No, you're going to the hospital, because you look like shit." He sent me and Eddie to the hospital, and that was it.

They checked us out -- x-rays, whatever -- and I finally made it back to my firehouse and

[redacted]

BY CHIEF MALKIN:

Q. I don't blame you.

A. I just couldn't -- just for a couple of days it was -- it was like a videotape going on in your head from the time it happened to the time it ended.

Q. Unbelievable.

A. That's basically it. I came to work the next day. The captain says, "What the hell are you doing in work?" I said, "I don't know what to do, Captain. This is -- I feel I should be here."

"[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

so our lieutenant volunteered. I think it was 202, and I'm not sure. It could have been 221.

The lieutenant said to Z, "Listen, go back to the rig, get some gloves, because you might be doing a lot of nasty stuff. Get a search line and get a couple of spare Scotts."

So Z went back to the rig. He got his stuff and went to get a flashlight. He was walking from the rig, and he seen -- he heard the rumble. He seen guys running. He looked up, and the building was coming down. He was, like, should I dive under the rig or should I run with the rest of them?

He chose to run. That's what saved his life, because the rig got destroyed by all the debris and stuff, and he got thrown up against the wall, and he was hurt pretty -- he hurt his back, but he was a lucky man. I mean, we were all lucky, I thought, geez, but he was very lucky.

You know, we thought he was dead. We were in that underground garage. We did a head count, and he was missing, and everyone said he went back to the rig, and we knew that wasn't a good thing.

Q. Yes.

A. And when I -- like I said, we got out of that garage finally, the underground parking garage. He was sitting in an ambulance all covered in blood in shock, like deer in the headlights type of shock, where he didn't have a clue where he was.

That's really it. The way I saw it anyway.

Q. All right. This is a map of the trade center. Put your glasses on.

A. We were just below Vesey Street, right below the atrium. I don't know if the atrium is on this --

Q. Like on West Street, on the west side of West Street?

A. Over here. Okay, I was right by the American Express building, so I think we were just below Vesey. Here is the Winter Garden. Here is where we were, I would say right around here somewhere.

Q. That's where you were sitting after the collapse? When were you there?

A. No, this was when we were watching the buildings burn. This is where the underground garage is, somewhere around here. There's the Winter Garden. We were right next it to, and when we pulled up off of West Street, the chief said, "Listen, stand by the underground garages." Somewhere around here. I'm not really sure.

Q. When Tower 2 was collapsing, the first one that went down, you ran down a ramp or something like that, and then you came up. The guy opened the door, and you came up into the street, you said?

A. We came up into a courtyard.

Q. Courtyard, so you were over -- on the west side some place?

A. I would assume so, chief. I'm not -- tell you the God's honest truth, I'm not really sure.

Q. You're not sure.

A. I'm not really sure.

Q. All right. When you met that chief, do you remember what rank he was? Do you know who he was?

A. No.

Q. Anything like that?

A. No, but I'll say one thing. He saved a lot of guys' lives by making us go to that place, because if he didn't, we wouldn't be here today.

Q. Yes, really.

So you ran in the tunnel when the first building came down?

A. Yes, with the first, this one.

Q. That's this one, the south building?

A. Yes.

Q. Then eventually you worked your way up. The smoke cleared and everything else.

Then where were you when the second one -- what were you doing when the second building came down?

A. Putting guys in the ambulance.

Q. Right.

A. Gary Z and our Lieutenant Healy.

Q. On West Street?

A. It was in the courtyard somewhere behind West Street. I don't know if it was this side. I tell you the truth, Chief, I really don't know.

Q. Okay.

A. I've gone back and tried to even piece it together and --

Q. You're not sure where you were?

A. I still can't find the exact spot.

Q. Okay.

A. I'm going to say just for the heck of it that it was probably somewhere around here.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: He's indicating north of Vesey Street and west of West Street in that square block.

Q. Do you remember this one coming down and where you were when the second building was coming down?

A. Yeah. Like I said, we were in that -- we were in that lot somewhere.

Q. A lot?

A. I would assume maybe somewhere around here, but I really don't know, but I remember when we came up out of the underground parking garage and we got out, it led us right into that courtyard where Gary Z was, and Lieutenant Healy.

All I remember was looking up, and basically about like the same angle about -- the way I pictured it, I was almost directly in line with one of the corners of the building. I'd say around in that area, but I can't tell you for sure.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: He's indicating on the map the same location, just west of West Street, just north of Vesey Street.

He had somewhat of a view of Tower 1 coming down, the second building, when it came down.

Q. Anything else?

A. Not really. I went to the hospital.

Q. Which hospital did you go to?

A. I went to -- what is the one on -- Beth Israel on Second Avenue and 17th Street or something.

Q. Yes. Do you remember anybody there?

Can you identify anybody that was there with you?

A. Just me, and Eddie Rodriguez. He works in 204. That was the only two firemen at the time I seen them bringing in, because originally they were trying to get us to Brooklyn to a hospital, but they couldn't get over the bridge, so they took us over there.

It was probably the easiest one to get to at the time, because I have to tell you, traffic was insane. Everything was blocked off, and no one was going anywhere in a hurry.

Q. Yes.

A. That's really it.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: This concludes the interview.

It's now 1525 hours, and I thank the fireman for the interview.

That's the end. I'm going to shut it off now.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT DIANE DeMARCO

Interview Date: December 14, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. MURAD: Today is December 14th, 2001. The time is. The time is 0800 hours. My name is Murray Murad from the Fire Department of the City of New York, and I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

State your name.

EMT DeMARCO: My name is Diane DeMarco. I'm an EMT for the Fire Department.

MR. MURAD: This interview is being conducted at Battalion 15, located at 4109 White Plains Road. This is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Diane, can you tell us what happened on that day?

A. I was assigned to unit 15 Boy, tour 2 that morning. I had responded up to the final outpost to pick up a partner. When I had arrived at the outpost, there was a call given of I think it's a 1040, plane into building. Shortly after that I was assigned to the job.

I responded down the West Side Highway, and as I was traveling down the West Side Highway the second plane had hit the other tower. At that point I was traveling to my destination, which at the time was Vesey and West for a staging, I believe it was.

Q. Who were you working with that day?

A. I was working with another EMT, Thomas Lopez.

We had gotten to the location of Vesey and West. There was really no one in charge down there. We were basically in charge of ourselves, which worked out pretty well. We were getting out of the vehicle. A supervisor had been passing us by. I don't know who he is, where he was from, but he had directed us to go into the building, the second floor of the building, with our equipment.

I don't know what happened. A couple of minutes after that, I saw my partner get his bags and start heading towards the building. I told him -- I had turned around myself. I had started to go get my tech bag, and I realized that is not a good idea. So I called Tommy back.

He came back to the vehicle. And just as he came back to the vehicle with me, a couple other units had come down and said, "Let's turn the vehicles around," because we were facing into the location. So myself and a medic unit -- I don't know how many other units -- turned the vehicles around.

Shortly -- I don't know, it would have to be minutes, seconds, after we turned the vehicle around, the first building fell, the first collapse. At that point there was a car blocking the area, and I was going to attempt to turn that vehicle around. It belonged to a chief that had just passed me by. I knew that he was in front of the hotel.

I attempted to walk towards the hotel, but just as I attempted to do that the -- I don't know what you'd call it, that mushroom, avalanche thing was coming at us. I turned around and called to my partner. We got back in the vehicle and started to pull away from the scene.

But just at that point, somebody was pounding on the glass on the back doors of the ambulance. I looked through the rearview mirror, and I saw a man in a hazmat suit. But I couldn't stop the vehicle because something would have happened to either the vehicle or him.

So I sort of motioned to him, but I don't know if he saw me, that I knew he was there on the back bumper of the ambulance. So I drove off, but I drove off at a steady pace so that I wouldn't knock him -- he wouldn't fall off.

I pulled a few blocks up from there. I don't know what location that was. As I attempted to go around to the back of the vehicle, I saw the man that was on the back bumper. He was a sergeant from hazmat, Port Authority. At that point he thanked me. He said that I saved his life because he couldn't run anymore.

We then proceeded to treat him, my partner and I. We just did the normal protocol for something like that. He was covered in dust. As my partner was treating him, I noticed several Fire Department personnel, firemen, walking aimlessly or sitting on the corner of where I had pulled in. I don't know the location. I was safely enough away from the first collapse to start treating patients.

So I started to take firemen off the street corners wherever I was finding them. They were totally covered in dust, caked, caked on their eyelids. So my partner and I again started to treat. I think we treated about six people, six and EMT from a private hospital.

As we were doing that, the second tower collapsed. So everybody scattered. The patients that we were treating scattered, and they started running. As we also got in the vehicle and started to drive off. I think that's the point where I got up to Chambers Street, after the second collapse.

By that point then there was some supervisors then on the scene, and they were starting to organize things and sending everyone up to Chelsea Piers, where we then waited for further instructions.

After that I think it was like around 6:00 in the evening we were then released to go back up to the Bronx.

Q. When you were there when the south tower came down, did you feel anything? Was there any indication that the tower was coming down?

A. No. The first tower?

Q. Right.

A. No, no.

Q. When the second tower --

A. I just happened to be looking up or out towards that direction of the buildings when all of a sudden we just noticed that it just dropped straight down. Then it got really dark, real dark. Things were flying through the air.

I looked up at the building, and before I realized what I was seeing I thought it was paper floating through the air. It was people jumping from high up, way up high. But then at that point we had left that first location of Vesey and West.

Q. So now when the north tower now collapsed, did you feel anything?

A. No.

Q. Were you just --

A. I saw the antenna start to come down, because again -- the vehicle was facing north, so we were at the back of the ambulance treating patients, facing south. The towers were in our eye view, so I saw the antenna go down. I don't know if that was the first building or the second building.

Q. I think that was on the south tower. That was probably the first building.

A. The first building, yes. I saw the antenna start to slide, but we thought at that point that it was going to topple over, not go straight down.

The second tower I just recall seeing it fall, a cloud of dust.

Q. The radio communications, were you guys directed to use a certain frequency?

A. We were directed to monitor citywide frequency. There wasn't supposed to be any transmissions. I followed the those directions; I think it's only because of the experience that I had. I have 25 years in the street, 21 of them with EMS.

Because of my going to mock disaster drills at the airport for my own reasons, because when I was working on that side of the Bronx, the unit I was working was one of the first units that would have gone to an airport incident. So I attended those for my own reasons.

[redacted]

[redacted]

And as far as monitoring the radio and not talking over the frequency, I had enough experience to know what to do and how to handle it. So I began giving instructions to my partner. We did paperwork. Not a lot of people did that. We did ACRs, we did log sheets, we kept track of everybody that we treated.

Unfortunately every time the building collapsed or we got word that we had to move from the scene, those patients scattered. But I found that I ran into two of those patients at least twice that morning in different locations, one of which had to be -- eventually was transported to the hospital. Another one was a fireman that I took off the street corner and treated with that dust, and then a medic unit came and took him to the hospital, somewhere up around Chambers Street at that point.

That's about it, really. I just thank God that I had the sense enough to take care of myself and my partner, or it would have been a disaster. Who knows. I was so close.

MR. MURAD: This concludes the interview. I would like to thank EMT Diane DeMarco. The time now is 820 hours, and this concludes the interview. Thank you very much

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT DWIGHT SCOTT

Interview Date: December 14, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. MURAD: Today's date is December 14, 2001. The time is 74545 hours. I am Murray Murad of the Fire Department of the City of New York, and I am conducting an interview with --

EMT SCOTT: Dwight Scott.

MR. MURAD: And your rank and your command, please?

EMT SCOTT: EMT from Battalion 15.

MR. MURAD: This interview is being conducted at 4109 White Plains Road, Battalion 15. This is regarding the events on September 11th, 2001.

Q. EMT Dwight Scott, can you please give us your perspective on that day?

A. I was on a call, minor injury call. Then I heard somebody -- the dispatcher said for us to go on citywide, monitor, don't say anything. I went 82 to the hospital. Then when I got to the hospital, I saw a lot of people around the television. I went and looked and I saw the plane had hit the World Trade Center.

After finishing the call, we went back to the battalion. I asked my lieutenant are we going to be assigned to the World Trade Center. He said, "As a matter of fact, you've already been assigned." So I grabbed some extra equipment, put it on my ambulance. We continued to go to the World Trade Center.

On the way there we heard a lot of people crying for help, some people saying, "Mayday, mayday, mayday. My ambulance is crushed. I can't find my partner."

So I started to speed up a little bit more. We finally got there, and I saw -- the last tower was still standing. I went forward, tried to advance as much as I can down to the site.

Q. Do you know where you were or did you see any officers or were you just actually operating on your own?

A. When we got there at first we saw officers. There were different groups of command. We kind of advanced until we saw somebody that we knew. They told us what was going on. They told us to pretty much just stay put so they could account for people as they're -- we were setting up a command post.

That's when the building started to come down. Then we had to retreat north.

I was on the West Side Highway by Vesey and West. We started to help firefighters that were injured. We saw a couple of them running by themselves from a huge cloud, the smoke and the dust. We started to help them, irrigate their eyes, help walking wounded. We started to bring them to the triage station.

Then after that we heard another unit; they were crying for help. We didn't know where they were. We tried to advance to where they said they might have been, but there was so much smoke and dust that we had to retreat.

When the building started to collapse, we pretty much just got up and just ran.

Q. Which building? That was the north tower at that time?

A. The last one.

Q. The north tower?

A. The north tower. The north tower -- I was at the bus. As a matter of fact, I even made a pact with my partner that if a chief tells us to split up we would never split up. When the north tower collapsed, he started running one way. I called for him and said, "Come on, Melvin, Melvin." He couldn't here me. He just started running.

The ambulance was idling, so I jumped in the ambulance and just started driving and drove until everything was quiet. Then I turned around. Melvin, he had jumped in another ambulance.

Q. Melvin is who? Your partner?

A. Yeah.

Q. What's Melvin's last name?

A. Rodriguez.

Q. Rodriguez?

A. Yes.

After we met up again, we went back to another command post. Then they said there was a secondary explosion or they weren't sure if it was a bomb or a gas main. But we all started running again. We went north. After that we regrouped and set up another triage station farther from the site.

We pretty much stayed around there because we weren't sure what was going to happen.

We didn't want to lose any more people. So we stayed around.

Q. When you went down where you were at that time, can you just specify?

A. After the secondary explosion?

Q. Right.

A. It was somewhere by -- what's that big complex?

Q. The Winter Garden? American Express building?

A. It was further back, further north.

Q. To Church Street?

A. Chelsea Pier, Chelsea Pier. We went to Chelsea Pier. We pretty much stayed there because they were thinking about secondary devices or something might happen.

Q. Was there any officers that were at that time operating there once you guys were regrouped over there?

A. Yes, there were officers there, and they took our name and unit number. They tried to keep us accountable like to where they were and where they wanted us and which direction they wanted us to keep the ambulance just in case we have to run again.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. I'll just say that was one of the worst experiences I've ever seen in my life, and I hope I don't see anything like that again.

Q. Were you guys operating on a radio frequency?

A. Yes.

Q. How were the radio communications?

A. We were on citywide.

Q. How were the communications?

A. Communications I think were pretty good. On citywide. They did try to keep that channel open just in case. There wasn't a lot of confusion like the other channels where everybody's talking.

Q. When you were down at Chelsea Pier when everyone regrouped -- when you guys regrouped, were you then given an assignment or were you told just to stay there or what was the actions of everybody?

A. Pretty much to stay, to stand fast, because we weren't sure what kind of danger we might be in. We weren't sure what kind of danger we might be in, so they pretty much kept us at bay so just in case anything happened they wouldn't lose any more members.

Q. All right. Anything else you feel you want to add? All right.

A. Unless you have other questions.

Q. No, you mostly answered them, where you guys regrouped, what frequencies you were operating on, did you see anybody. Any individual person that came to mind that you saw that comes to your mind or was it just you and your partner most of the time?

A. When you say people, like victims or --

Q. Well, if you knew some victims or EMS people or fire people.

A. Yes, a couple of people that we work with, a couple firefighters from our area.

Q. Do you know the names of the EMS people or just you know them by sight?

A. Just by sight.

Q. So just by sight?

A. Just by sight.

Q. All right. You know some of the firemen that were responding down there?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. EMT Dwight Scott, I'd like to thank you?

MR. MURAD: The time now is 755 hours, and this concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC ROBERT RUIZ

Interview Date: December 14, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is December 14th, 2001. The time is 11:35. I'm George Cundari of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

PARAMEDIC RUIZ: My name is Robert Ruiz. I'm a paramedic with the Fire Department of New York, and I work at Battalion 26 in the Bronx.

Q. Paramedic Ruiz, can you please tell us the events of September 11th from your recollection, please?

A. That morning we had just taken a patient to Bronx Lebanon Hospital, and we had just cleared from the hospital when the dispatcher sent us the assignment to respond down to Manhattan. It was kind of odd because we work all the way up in the Bronx. They don't ever send Bronx units into Manhattan.

So we were wondering what it was. So we switched to citywide frequency. That's when we found out something was going on in Manhattan.

We still didn't know what it was. So we turned on the news, and we listened to 1010. That's when we found out that a plane had struck one of the twin towers.

At that point me and my partner -- we didn't think it was terrorism or anything like that. We just thought maybe it was some sort of a problem with the controls or something like that.

Anyway, we started responding downtown. On the way there, halfway there, we hear the news that a second plane crashed into the World Trade Center. Right then and there we both knew that it had to be terrorists because what are the odds of two planes crashing into two separate buildings.

So we're driving there. There's a lot of traffic, a lot of police, a really long line of fire trucks, unmarked cars and ambulances and everything.

Q. How were you getting there? What route did you take?

A. We ended up taking the Grand Concourse all the way up to the FDR Drive and then the FDR Drive all the way down. We ended up having to get off around 34th Street, because they had blocked off all the -- the traffic wasn't moving, so one of the fire trucks blocked all the traffic and everybody just went.

From there everybody just split. Everybody just took their own routes. We took a pretty good one, so we got there maybe ten minutes after that.

Q. So you took West Street from there?

A. Right there from 34th Street? Yes. We took -- what's the name of that street that's right by South Street Seaport underneath the drive? I don't know what street that is.

Q. Allen?

A. The one that runs underneath the FDR Drive, that street there, like the New York Post.

Q. Pike?

A. Right, right where the South Street Seaport, you know, where the mall is at. So we ended up taking that street all the way down. It was pretty clear, I remember. So we ended up going through there.

As soon as we got there, we went inside the tunnel underneath Battery Park, and we came out on the other side. When we came out on the other side, it was like -- we already saw the building on fire from way uptown, maybe 125th Street. As we got closer and closer it was like, wow, it was amazing. The second plane had already hit, so we never saw it when that happened. But we already saw the two buildings in flame. But as we got closer and closer, you see it better and better.

So when we came out of the tunnel on the other side, we were right there. It was incredible. We were just amazed that this had happened.

As we see, there's a line forming of ambulances up on West Street and -- it is West Street, but it wasn't Liberty. There was another street there. What's the next street after Liberty?

Q. Still south of the World Trade Center?

A. Yes. It wasn't Liberty, because -- or could it have been Liberty? Was it just that big? Oh, yeah, so it was Liberty. There had to be like another bridge there. I remember the bridge.

Q. There's a walkway over here by Vesey.

A. I remember this. That's where we were. Okay.

There's a couple of commanders, chiefs, captains at Liberty and West Street. We came out of the tunnel, and we ended up on the West Side Highway. We went up to the back of the line. Before we got to the back of the line, like people describe it, there were body parts all over the floor.

I saw pieces of scalp and entire torsos and legs, hands, just about everything. I never saw a face, but I saw just about every other part you can think of. It was like an obstacle course to get to this line that they had formed at Liberty and West Street.

It can't be Liberty and West Street. It has to be like right by the hotel. Right over here, right in that corner, that's where it was. The line didn't start on Liberty and West Street; it was a little bit further up, maybe by the Marriott. Maybe right around there, maybe a little bit before that.

Q. So you're right by the towers at that point?

A. No, we never made it to the towers. I'm going to tell you what happened.

It was like an obstacle course to get to the end of the line, to the back of the line. What they were doing is they were getting patients, throwing them in the back of the bus, and then the bus would just take off.

Q. These are all walking wounded coming to you?

A. That's right.

Then the captains and chiefs, they were directing people everywhere. It was total chaos. So that's just what we did.

As soon as we got to the back of the line, these firemen come running from the building right on Liberty and -- right on Liberty and West Street, there's a building there. I'm not quite sure whether it was a church or not. It didn't look like a church. I remember it had a lot of scaffolding on it.

They come running from the building, and he starts yelling at us. He said, "Help, help, help, we need your help. One of our guys got hit with some debris that fell off a building." My partner was driving that day and he said, "Okay, no problem."

We get off the line, and we park right on Liberty Street now. Right on Liberty Street, there's a parking lot there. He parks there, gets out of the bus, runs to the back and gets a trauma bag. He goes, gets the trauma bag and runs out and goes inside the building.

Now, I get out. I jumped inside the back of the bus, and I'm getting the rest of the equipment. I'm getting the oxygen bag, I've got the monitor, I've got a couple trauma dressings and stuff, and I'm putting it on top of the stretcher. I jumped out with the stretcher and everything.

I go to the building where he went, but there's a few entrances on that corner and I don't know where exactly he went. So I see some firemen almost on the other side of the building on the other corner. I go and I approached them and said, "Which way did my partner go?" He said, "We don't know what you're talking about."

So now my partner's inside the building, and he probably needs the equipment and I don't know where he is.

Q. What's your partner's name?

A. Joe Jefferson.

I can't tell you the times that all this is happening because I really --

Q. Time is lost?

A. Right, time is lost. All I know is that the building hadn't fallen yet.

So I approached these guys. They told me they don't know who I'm talking about and whatever. So what I do is I end up standing right in the middle, because if he comes out of any exit I can just run to him, throw the guy on the stretcher and just leave from there. So that was the plan.

As I'm waiting there -- I must have waited a good five minutes. Then the firemen I had just spoken to, they go and they run into the World Trade Center number two. So they run across the street into the building.

Right after them, you see three FBI agents, two men and a woman, run right after them, and they also go inside the World Trade Center. I'm just standing right there in the center, and I'm looking up. I'm like, oh, man, you know, just dumbfounded. This is such an amazing sight.

I don't know what else I was thinking. It was just incredible. It was just one of those things you look at and you just have your mouth wide open saying, "I can't believe I'm here witnessing something like this." I said, man, you know, this is real history, and wondering where my partner is and what's the matter with this guy.

All of a sudden I see a plain clothes cop come and stand right on the corner. So this is now Washington and Liberty. He's right on that corner, and he's looking up. He looks at me, and we just both nod in disbelief. We just keep staring like -- this happened in a matter of like five minutes, the firemen running in, the FBI right behind and then the plain clothes cop on the corner.

The next thing you know, you hear a loud thundering noise. It sounded like a jet, a big rumble. I start looking around and I'm like, what is that? The next thing I know, I see the cop just take off. I'm like, where's he going?

Then I see the things on the floor, like Liberty -- you know, just like the movies, bouncing up and jumping and shaking. I mean, not like an earthquake, like a 6 point something or something like that. But you see stuff on the floor shaking from side to side. I'm like, oh, my God. I look up and I was saying, oh, no, the building's going to fall down.

Let me tell you, you talk about being scared, never in my life -- I don't think ever again I'll ever be so scared. So I turn around. Right where I'm standing I turn around. I'm in the center of the building. I turn around, and I try to go inside the building, but that door happens to be locked. So I run towards the corner where the cop was, and I keep trying all the doors.

All the doors and all the windows are locked, and I can't break any of the windows to get in because they have metal gates on them. So even if I was to break a window to get in, I can't get in. So I keep running, running, keep trying the doors.

I make it to the corner. I make it to the corner, and I turn right. So I was going to keep running all the way straight up Washington. So I ran maybe a few feet when I tripped and I fell on something, some debris. I don't know what it was. But I ended up falling.

By now the sound is just getting louder and louder and louder. I said, oh, man, this building is going to fall on me right now. What do I do? I got up, and I just -- this is like a split second. I said I can't keep running straight up, because you have this building right here on Washington. What is it? Bankers Trust Plaza, 130 Liberty Street? It takes up the entire block. So I can't run like in a diagonal.

What I wanted to do is I didn't want to run straight up; I wanted to go diagonally to get out of the -- because I figured this building was falling, it was tumbling over. I didn't think it was falling down on top of itself.

Q. So you had a feeling the building was coming down right away?

A. Yeah.

Q. Is that what you first thought?

A. Yeah. The sound, it's just loud. At first it's (sound) and then you feel everything around you -- not around you but the floor. You feel the floor trembling and shaking. You look at the floor, the dirt, the sand and everything on the floor shifting from side to side. I'm like, oh, man.

Then the cop takes off. He runs. Then I hit the corner, I turn the corner, a few feet I fall. By this time the sound is so, so, so loud, I think oh, my God. I never looked back, because I figured if I looked back that was going to be it, I'd freeze or be hit with something. I said, look, I don't want to waste any time. Whatever it is I'm going to do, I've got to do it quickly.

So I saw the building. I saw that I couldn't run. I saw that if I kept running straight -- the map here, it doesn't look big at all. But this was like a really long block for me to keep running and running and running and go around the corner on the other side.

So what I ended up doing was there was a door right on that corner, and the door was locked. It also had a gate, a wrought iron fence gate. I kept trying to open, open, open, open, and I couldn't open. I said, oh, my God, this is going to be it.

The way they made the door is it's like a cutout in the building. It's like about a foot wide of wall before you hit the door. So it was like a little corner. What I ended up doing was I ended up hiding inside that little corner there. I ended up going inside that little door well and hiding up against the wall facing the World Trade Center building and hiding right in that corner.

As soon as I did that, the next thing I know, all the dust; the dust, the dirt. I said, oh, my God, this is it. That's all I kept thinking: Oh, my God, oh, my God, I'm going to die here. This building's going to fall on top of me. It's going to fall on top of this building and squash it and this is it. All you hear is all this rumbling. The rumbling, the rumbling, the rumbling, that's all you heard. The rumbling and the smoke.

In a matter of seconds it was from daytime to complete, complete darkness, something straight out of a movie.

Q. So that doorway protected you?

A. Yeah. It saved my life.

But while I was in there, I was getting hit with stuff. You heard it, and you heard glass breaking and stuff -- there was so much noise, you couldn't distinguish one thing happening. But when it happened close to me, I could hear it, like glass breaking.

But the biggest problem there was I couldn't breathe. The smoke was really, really hot, and I couldn't catch my breath. So I ended up taking off my shirt and wrapping it around my face, trying to get some air, but I couldn't.

What I remember is, oh, man, I'm going to die here and -- who will protect my family. I was wondering how does it feel to be dead. That's what I remember thinking while I was stuck in that corner. I was just like I'm ready for it. I wasn't so calm like I am right now, but I remember thinking this while I was there.

The only words I remember saying is, oh, my God oh, my God, over and over and over, and trying to pull the fence off so I could get inside, but there was no way. There was no way for me open the door. It was locked. I was just trapped there. So I was just waiting for the big impact that was just going to take me out.

Miraculously the building stopped falling. The noise completely stopped. But the smoke kept coming. I was having a real, real bad time breathing. The shirt wrapped around my face wasn't helping at all, because it was saturated in that dust as well.

I'm saying, oh, my God, what do I do? Do I stay here? Do I try to run out? But then I thought if I run out of that little corner I'm going to get hit with the rest of the stuff that's flying. I was trapped there.

Like things weren't bad enough already, the car that's parked right on that corner catches on fire. I don't mean a little fire, the entire thing. Don't ask me how. The entire car caught on fire. You would think maybe just a motor part or just the engine part. But this entire car just goes up in fire.

I'm like, oh, my God, what's happening? I didn't get squashed and I'm going to suffocate here and now I'm going to burn. The smoke was real hot. The smoke was real, real hot. I thought about, oh, man, if I keep breathing the smoke in, my larynx is going to swell and I'm going to suffocate like that, and all attached to crazy things I'm thinking. Forget about it.

Now it was the car. Then I can't stand it anymore because it's getting real, real, real hot. I'm like, oh, man, I've got to get out of here. This thing is cooking me. Now thanks to the car fire -- because it was so big, I could see now. Before then I couldn't see anything. It was literally like people say you stick your hand right in front of your face and you couldn't see it. Now with this car fire, I could see a few feet in front of me.

I got out of the door well there, and I walked a little bit. I notice that there were windows there as well, but the windows had gates on them. All the stuff that fell knocked the gates off the building. So the windows weren't there anymore, the gates weren't there.

All I had to do was break a little bit of glass that was left there, and I ended up jumping inside the building, because you couldn't walk in the street. I was right along like the edge. It's really hard to describe. It was like a mountain of stuff.

I was walking right alongside the building, and I ended up going inside there. There was no gate. I tried to remember where were the gates, and I didn't see the gates at all. That whole corner was full of windows with gates.

It turns out that it was a restaurant. The only reason I know is I ended up going inside of it. I must have been there like a good 20 minutes, because I couldn't find my way around. I kept falling over tables and chairs. That's how I found out it was a restaurant. At one time I tried to yell for help. I was like, "Help!" I said, oh, man, what am I doing? I am the help here. Who's going to help me?

Q. Nobody answered while you were in there?

A. No, no, there was nobody there. The people, I guess when the first plane hit, locked up and just took off.

So I'm in there a good 15 minutes, good 20 minutes, and I'm trying to find my way around. It's like you've got no sense of coordination because you don't know in which direction you're going. You're just bouncing into stuff and trying to look for a wall. I remember feeling a counter. Then I would fall on a table or trip on a table, on a chair, get back up.

Q. Was your radio working at this point?

A. I'm going to get to that right now.

So then when I yell for help, I'm like, oh, man, there's nobody here. So I go and I reach for my radio, but there's no more radio. I don't know where the radio is, where it went. Don't ask me where I lost it.

I usually keep my radio real secure. That's something I've always had that -- ever since I started working there, I always kept the radio secure. I don't know, I lost it, maybe when I fell or maybe climbing in through the window or I had already fallen a few times.

The reason I was yelling for help was because I still hear stuff falling. You could still hear stuff falling. I said, man, I don't know if the whole building fell. I didn't know what the story was.

I thought at that point that only half the building had fallen off, because I was still there. I said, oh, my God, only half the building fell. The rest of the building is going to fall. I thought it maybe broke in half and just fell down. I didn't think it just crumbled onto itself.

Anyway, I start feeling around, and I see a light. I was saying, oh, yeah, that's the way out. I ended up walking towards the light. It's kind of silly. It ended up being a refrigerator full of Snapple. It was kind of stupid. Oh, man, I got so mad when I saw that.

Q. Did you need a drink?

A. No, I didn't want a drink. I tell everybody that part about the Snapple. I said, you know, I thought it was light. I thought it was the way out, and it turns out to be a giant refrigerator full of Snapple. I got so mad at that point.

Anyway, I turn around and I end up looking inside there. I eventually find a little corridor, and I followed the corridor all the way, all the way, all the way. I ended up coming out in the same building, but I ended up coming out on some windows further south on Washington.

So now I'm in between the block. I'm halfway in the building. So I ended up coming out of some broken windows that were there. Now I'm on Washington again. I look back, and I look at everything that was -- and I could still see where it was, because of the fires. It was just like a movie. There were fires scattered all over.

I remember there was a row of police cars, and they were all smashed. I was like, remember that plain clothes cop that was running? There could have been no way that he made it, because the guy was right in front of me. I'm talking about he was right there. I'm right behind him. I fall, I get back up, I hide inside that little corner, and then everything just starts falling.

So I was like, oh, man, that poor guy.

I was even thinking of maybe even trying to look for him. It was like you couldn't see anything there.

So I got out of the window, and I walked down Washington -- I didn't walk. What am I saying I walked? I ran. As soon as I got out, I ran. I ran and ran and ran and ran and ran. I ended up at the entrance to the tunnel. Where is the entrance of the tunnel here?

Q. It's off the page here.

A. Let me tell you how I ran. But I ran and ran, and finally I could see the light. When I got to where the tunnel was, I'm looking everywhere. It was just like that movie the day after with the atomic bomb. They drop it and nobody's left and I'm the only one. That's exactly how it was.

I'm looking and like, "Hello?" I'm looking. "Anybody?" No cars moving, no birds, not one other person, nothing at all. Everything's abandoned, everything's left, and I'm just stuck there. I'm like, oh, my God, what do I do? I said, what do I do now?

Then I remembered Jefferson. I was like, oh, my God, Jefferson. What happened to Jefferson? What I ended up doing is when I hit that tunnel, I ended up going back on West Street. I was still trying to catch my breath, so I was taking it easy. But I started walking back to that building where I was.

I'm coughing, I'm coughing, I'm walking and everything. As I started getting closer and closer, that's when I start seeing people. I start seeing people scattered everywhere: a fireman here, a guy in a business suit there; just very, very little people.

When I got to the building that I was in but on the other side -- we're now on West Street -- I go in. As soon as I go in, who's behind the door? Jefferson. He's in there. I'm like, oh, man. But I didn't recognize him because the guy was completely black. What he was doing, he was helping out one of our other guys who got hit with stuff and had something stuck in his chest and he had broken his arm.

So there was him and maybe three or four other guys attending to him. So he was hurt, and somebody else was hurt that I remember.

I didn't really pay too much attention because I was still trying to catch my breath.

All this happens real quickly. I was stuck in the building for a while. But as soon as I got out, I ran, went to the tunnel entrance and ended up going back to the other side of the building. I find them. They're taking care of him.

So they ended up taking this guy, throwing him in an ambulance that didn't get smashed. Our bus was completely totaled, because we were parked right here on Liberty. It's demolished. So they take him out and put him inside an ambulance, and they take off. So everybody ends up leaving.

Now, Jefferson comes back to see how I am. When he comes back in there, it's completely empty. Now all of a sudden we see this big group of people come out; I'd say about maybe 15 people, about 17 people. I'm like, oh, man, we thought we were in there all by ourselves.

Somebody had brought a bucket, and it had water in it. I just stayed by the bucket, trying to drink some water. I tried to clear my passages out, because I couldn't breathe. I was coughing, coughing up that black stuff.

Anyway, so these people come out of a closet or there was a doorway or something. We're like, oh, my God, what are you people doing here? We started talking to them. They told us to leave, but then the building started coming down and we got scared and they hid.

There was a lady with a baby, a guy with some cats, some other guys that said they were students from I don't know where, and there was this other girl, an EMT, from Metro Care.

What we ended up doing is me and Jefferson, we end up leaving the building. I'm feeling a little better now than I did originally from the smoke and stuff. So I take the T-shirt off. No, that's a lie. Someone takes a T-shirt off and rips it, and now we make masks out of that. We put these white pieces of -- we put it on our face to try to protect ourselves from the smoke.

We go and we end up walking back on the West Side Highway. We leave those people there with the EMT from Metro Care. We end up walking a little bit. What we were going to try to do was to try to find -- oh, no, that's a lie. Oh, my God, I can't believe I forgot it.

Even before we found that, we found the people. As soon as we found the people, we hear it again, the rumbling. Right, I forgot all about that. We hear the rumbling. I was like, oh, my God, Joe, the rest of the building is falling down.

We all run, and we all try to get as much as we can inside this building where we are now. We hide in a closet or something. The walls are all full of glass. So we're thinking that this glass is going to break. All you see is the thing moving. Later on we found out that was the second building that was falling down. We thought and I thought that the first one is still -- the rest of it is falling down.

So anyway, when this one finished falling, we waited a little while. Then that's when we came out. That's when we came out. We must have walked for maybe a block or two. We found a school bus there, like one of those mini school buses.

So we go in, and we were looking at all the cars to see if we could find some transportation or something. We were picking up equipment as we went along. We found a radio, we found gloves, we found a life pack, a bag. We were picking up equipment as we went along.

So we end up finding a school bus. We go inside the school bus, and we find a lady inside there hiding. Why this lady didn't turn the school bus around and leave that area, I don't know. I guess everybody handles it differently. So we told the lady that we were going to borrow her school bus.

So what we end up doing is we end up taking the school bus. Joe jumps in the driver's seat, and we end up going as close as we can to this building. Now, we go in there, and we end up taking all those people out, throwing them in the school bus and then just taking off.

So we end up taking off, and we end up driving back down the West Side Highway to the tunnel and all the way around to the FDR Drive. Now, we end up taking the drive all the way up to Bellevue Hospital.

Once we got to Bellevue Hospital, we dropped the people off. Then me and Joe talked it over, what are we going to do now? Are we going to go home? I was like, I don't know. I don't know. What do you want to do? We talked about it for a few minutes. I said, look, let's go back. We just wanted to go back to help, see what we could do.

We ended up getting back in the school bus, and the lady doesn't want to go back down there, and we don't blame her. So what we end up doing, we left her and the school bus by the Brooklyn Bridge, and from the Brooklyn Bridge we had the life pack and we had the monitor we had found. We had the life pack and the trauma bag that we had found. We ended up walking all the way back down to the twin towers site.

When we got back to the twin towers site, it was still a lot of smoke but not like when everything had initially fallen down. So what we end up doing is me and the firemen that were there, whoever was left, we end up just digging. We just started digging.

A chief came by -- I forget who it was -- and he tried to make a team, tried to make teams of groups of people, but those things just fell apart. As soon as he left, everybody decided to do what they wanted to do.

Me and Jefferson decided to stay together and, when the smoke cleared, just started digging. Then there's like no way to dig. All we can do is walk around and try to listen to see if you heard something.

It looked like somebody had taken like a broomstick and taken all the debris and everything and pushed it all the way up onto the buildings that were across the street from the World Trade Center.

This street was more or less clean, like the highway, right around here was like a giant mountain. I don't know what building it was, this building right here. Everything had piled up over here, up on top of the buildings over here.

So we ended up staying there. We found a couple of helmets from people, firemen. One EMS helmet, we ended up taking that one back to the station. That's what we did all day.

Then around 6, 7:00, my leg was hurting, my shoulder was hurting, this whole side. I couldn't hardly walk. I was like I can't really move my arm anymore. Joe said, "Do you want to go to the emergency room?" I said, "I don't know."

I ended up pulling up my pant leg, and my calf must have been the size of a grapefruit -- no, bigger. It was real swollen. I decided to go to the emergency room. This is like about 6:00, 6 p.m. or 6:30.

So we ended up walking there too, because there was no transportation at all. We went to New York Downtown Hospital. We end up going to that hospital. They rush me in. They rush my partner in. They asked us, "What happened to you? Where do you feel pain?" I said, "I feel pain in my leg, my knee. I feel pain in my shoulder, right here in my ribs."

They take my clothes off, start examining me, and say, "Oh, yeah, your leg is pretty bad." They started looking at my shoulder, and they said, "It looks like you might have broken a bone here or something."

When all this had happened earlier, I didn't feel anything. I don't know why it was. They took x-rays and found out that my collar bone was broken. They said I broke the AC joint as well. They said no broken bones in my legs or my ribs or anything, just the shoulder got messed up.

The only thing I can think of is that little piece of wall that didn't hide me completely, because it wasn't wide enough, so I imagine maybe something -- I remember stuff flying everywhere and falling next to me, but I don't remember feeling pain or getting hit with anything. Maybe it's because I couldn't breathe or what it was.

While we were taking the people out of the building and while we were looking for stuff, trying to find anybody that we can find in the rubble or anything, looking inside cars and all types of -- nothing. I was walking with a little limp, but I thought it was just nothing until later on during the day.

From there, once I got discharged from the hospital -- they put my arm in a sling and told me to put I believe heat on and then after that put cold and then go see an orthopedic doctor the next day, they gave me somebody to go see.

Now it was how do I get home?

Q. Did you ever end up calling home all that time?

A. I tried to call -- I ended up -- oh, this is so funny. I had a cell phone in my pocket. After we came back from Bellevue, I said let me try to call home. The cell phones weren't working. Everything was completely -- I'm telling you, it was completely shut down.

After maybe an hour or two, I got a signal, so I ended up calling. It just so happens that I hadn't charged my phone. So I was on low cells. So I called my girlfriend. She picked up the phone and she said, "How are you?"

It's so funny, because on my way down to the World Trade Center I called her and I was like, "Look, I'm going down to the World Trade Center." She said, "No, don't go." I was like, "Look, they told me to go. They assigned me there." She's like, "Be careful, be careful."

Then from there she never heard from me again.

Now I said, "Oh, you don't know what's happened to me. Oh, my God, I almost died." I'm trying to tell her the story. I said, "Look, it's going to cut off." It cuts off, and then that was it.

That's when everything else started. We started looking for people and stuff like that. I took about an hour or two taking -- I had a lot of glass in my hands. My hands are fine now, but they were destroyed. I don't know how I got so much glass in my hand. I figured maybe I was trying to break the glass with my hands or something, but I don't remember.

I don't know, but my hands, if you saw them, they looked like -- they were completely messed up. So there I was, trying to irrigate and going through every cut, picking the glass out of my hands. That took about an hour.

Then we would go and look inside cars, look inside the fire engines, the flipped-over SUVs, everything. There was really nothing we could do, just the little bit we did. We took those people out of that building, so I guess we did a little bit of our part.

As far as finding anybody after that, nothing. Then when I got discharged from the emergency room, we had no way to get home. We were stranded, so we started walking. Jefferson ran into somebody that works there at New York Downtown Hospital. They said they would try to get us as far as Bellevue and then from there maybe we could get a ride from one of our own units there.

As it turns out, they didn't call them right away. I don't think they were logged on or whatever the case was. They ended up taking us all the way to the station. You don't know how happy I was when I heard that he was going to do that favor for us, because by that time I had really had just about enough by the end of the day.

So we get to the station, and there's just a giant crowd of people. Everybody that works at the station was like, "Oh, my God, we thought you guys were dead. We thought you guys were just --" I guess they might have done roll call on the radio, something like that, and they hadn't heard from us.

So when they saw us, they were happy, clapping. I told the story once, and then that was it. I was like I really don't want to talk about it anymore. I just want to go home.

By that time Jefferson had lent me his phone and I had called my family, and they were on their way there. So I was in five or ten minutes and they got there. My girlfriend Tamara, my brother, my sister, they all came. They hugged me and everything.

It was definitely something I don't ever want to live through again. That's how the day ended. That was my World Trade Center experience.

Q. Thank you for taking the time to conduct this interview.

MR. CUNDARI: It is 12:12, and this concludes this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT KEVIN McLEON

Interview Date: December 15, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. ECCLESTON: Today is December 15, 2001. The time is 25 minutes past the hour of 12. My name is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank and shield number.

EMT McLEON: EMT Kevin McLeon, 5758.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11th?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me in your own words about the events of that day?

A. That morning I was late for work. I got stuck in traffic and was late for work. The alarm had gone on as soon as I got here. We pulled up the block, and we were a block from the station when we realized there was something going on. There was a large crowd gathering in the street.

We parked our ambulance and we got out of the ambulance, and we looked up and we realized the World Trade Center was on fire.

That's when the calls started coming in.

My partner managed to get us on the call, with all the radio traffic, and we responded down to the World Trade Center. In doing so started to hear all the mass confusion about what was going on. Lieutenant Davila was the first lieutenant down on the scene, screaming for EMS units, crying that this was a hard hat operation. We knew something was really going on.

As we got closer to the World Trade Center, we realized this is really something of a large magnitude we have never seen before. We pull up 84, and we were actually on the opposite side of where the staging was, which probably saved our lives.

Davila was on one side of the station, one side of the building, and we were on the other side. We got out and started to pull our equipment out.

Q. Can you just indicate on the map provided approximately where you parked your vehicle?

A. Church and maybe Cortlandt, Dey, somewhere.

Q. Okay. So Church, somewhere in between Cortlandt and Dey?

A. Somewhere in between there.

Q. Okay. And you were in vehicle --

A. 69.

Q. -- 69. Thank you.

A. We pulled our equipment out and started to stage in front of the building. We started to distribute equipment for triage. We had one or two patients who had a piece of the building that fell on his shoulder. We started to bring him to ambulance when all of a sudden we heard a large explosion. That explosion turned out to be subsequently the second plane hitting.

We threw him and two other patients in the back of the ambulance and started to do triage in the back of the ambulance. It was a safe haven. We ended up driving three more patients. The last patient was a burn patient. Since she really couldn't wait around, we decided to take the five that we had, hit our 82 and go to the hospital.

Q. What hospital did you transport these patients to?

A. We went to Cornell.

Q. Cornell?

A. The burn patient we had had second and third degree burns. It has a really good trauma center. So for the first time we went to Cornell. When we got to Cornell, that's when we heard the towers had collapsed.

We quickly finished what we had at Cornell, made our way back down to -- we started making our way down and managed to get down to South and -- it was South of Canal, near the seaport. We were down there. You could see the towers had collapsed and saw the smoke and all the people running out towards us. We were just bogged down in so much traffic we couldn't get through. .

We couldn't get our way through because of all the traffic and all the people. We had been hearing there were three staging areas being set up. We managed to stage at Chelsea Piers.

But from that point on we managed to get ourselves up to Chelsea Piers. We didn't do anything for the rest of the day. We sat there and we waited like bumps on logs. That was our claim to fame. That's all we really did.

Q. When you initially arrived on the scene, were there other people at your location when you arrived on Church between Dey and --

A. There were other BLS units and a couple of medic units from Cabrini on the same side as we were. They had already started to set up a triage and gather patients.

Q. Do you know any of these other people? Would you know them by name?

A. I remember seeing one of them, a guy named Andy, who was a medic. I remember him. We also started to gather our patients. Then when we heard the large explosion, we took all we had, put them in our ambulances, and waited for it to die down a couple more seconds, got out, gathered more patients. Then I split, and after that I don't know what anybody did.

Q. Do you know approximately what time it was that you went 82?

A. It was probably somewhere in the area of 9 -- somewhere around 9:30, 9:40, because actually we were up -- at 10 to 10 we were already up at Cornell with the five people, the five patients. We were up at Cornell probably about quarter to 10, 10 to 10. We were up at Cornell already, because we stayed there long enough to hear the buildings had collapsed.

I guess it was gut-wrenching to know we couldn't get closer down to the scene as we wanted and wound up getting sent down to Chelsea Piers and then we sat there doing absolutely nothing for the rest of the day, when you're knowing that people from our own station were down at the site doing more than you.

That was really it. That was -- I took care of five people. That's it.

Q. Is there anything else you'd like to add to this interview? Anything at all?

A. We'll never see something like this again for the rest of our lives. My partner and I really were more mad at the fact that we couldn't get down there. We both knew we did the right thing for our patients, especially the burn victim, because if the burn victim didn't come along, we were going to go to the nearest trauma center, dump them off and then get back to the game. She came along at the last second, and we both made the decision that she's got to go to the burn center. That's what kept us out of there.

That's about it.

Q. Okay.

MR. ECCLESTON: This interview is being concluded at 33 minutes past 12. The counter on the recorder reads 139.

Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JODY BELL

Interview Date: December 15, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is December 15th, 2001. The time is 1:05 a.m. my name is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank and shield number.

EMT BELL: My name is Jody bell, EMT, shield number 5209.

Q. Mr. Bell, were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on 9/11?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Can you please tell me in your own words about the events of that day?

A. I was due in at work at 0900 hours. So being a resident from Staten Island, I commuted that day on the ferry. So I was aboard the 8:00 ferry leaving Staten Island. So I reached the city at approximately 8:30. I had my car on the ferry.

A funny thing is I bumped into my partner on the boat. Being that it was Tuesday, we were just talking about Monday night football, just looking forward to a good day. He had just come off a three-day swing. We were just looking forward to a good day, because the weather was nice and everything was pretty good. Everything was going fine.

As I'm driving to work --

Q. Who was your partner that day?

A. Mike Mejias, Michael Mejias.

Q. Okay.

A. As I'm driving to work, at around a quarter to, I noticed that the traffic was getting heavy. I'm saying to myself I might be late. I'm wondering why there's all this traffic, because there's never this much traffic. This is my usual routine.

That's when we noticed a whole bunch of police cars responding somewhere. So at first we just -- we were thinking that maybe it's a bad car accident or something of that nature. My partner said he noticed people looking up in the air. I was concentrating on getting to work. I'm trying to get there on time.

As we moved closer to the battalion, we're about two blocks away, and I see all the ambulances flying out of the station. I'm like, something's going on, man. I see my lieutenant standing in the middle of the street just like -- just flagging all the ambulances to leave. He's in a real excited state.

Q. Who was your supervisor?

A. This was Lieutenant Melarango.

So then my partner says, "Stop the car." So we stop the car in the middle of the street. He's like, "Something's going on." We jumped out of the car. We turned around, and we see the building on fire. We see the smoke coming out of the building and automatically assumed that we were bombed again, that another bomb went off in the World Trade Center, there was another attempt at trying to destroy the World Trade Center.

We immediately jumped back into the vehicle, back into my car, and we get to the station. That's when we were informed that a plane hit. A plane had hit the World Trade Center. So we're in awe. I just jumped out of the car. I left the lights on. I didn't realize that until like two days later when I tried to start it, but that's beside the point.

I was already in uniform, and my partner wasn't. So right away the lieutenant was like, "Just get into a truck and get the fuck out of here." That's exactly what he said.

I was already addressed, and my partner ran upstairs. He said, "Just meet me out there. Be safe." I was like, "I'll meet you out there. Be safe." So I jumped into a unit with another EMT, Garfield Grey. This is my first time really meeting him. We jumped into a unit together. I think it was unit 413. We immediately proceeded over to the site. We got there about three minutes later.

Q. Do you know about what time this was?

A. The scene was insane.

I lost all track of time, to tell you the truth.

Q. Okay.

A. Once I saw that the building -- it was unreal, and I lost all track of time from there.

We proceeded over to the site, and the scene was hectic. There were people running everywhere. There were units flying everywhere.

There was debris falling. It was just the worst -- it was the worst -- the horror on the people's faces, they were scattering, running all directions.

At first we pulled the bus -- we pulled the bus onto West Street about right in front of -- I'd say right in front of One World Trade Center on West Street, close to the corner of Vesey. We were just looking at the turn of events and we said, you know what, let's go over to the other side of the West Side Highway, just to be safe, because our first move is scene safety.

So we crossed over to the other side of the West Side Highway, and we parked the bus at the corner of Vesey and West.

Q. Can you just indicate on the map with a number 1 where you parked the vehicle?

A. So we parked the unit there. We unloaded it. We threw everything we could onto the stretcher. I immediately ran to the corner. My partner said he was going to move the bus back even more to get the bus out of harm's way. At that point I didn't know where he had put the bus.

I immediately jumped into action. I started just rounding up people, because people were running with second degree, third degree burns, half their hair burned down to the scalp. People had broken arms. They were holding limbs. It was a bad scene. I saw a couple bodies falling out of the building.

I just gathered myself within a split second, and I started gathering people to the corner. I had them all sit down, and I started triage tagging people. I was trying to listen to the radio, as I was doing all of this, to find out where a staging area could have been. I already had people -- I just started tagging people. I kind of lost track of time.

My partner came back shortly after that. My partner came back. The bus wasn't too far away. It was like a hundred yards away from us. He just jumped into action too. He started tagging people and just trying to gather people towards us.

Shortly after that nurses started arriving on the scene. I guess they had come out of the building -- it looked like they were coming out of the World Financial Center. Anyway, there were nurses and other medical staff that were starting to arrive on the scene. Other units were starting to arrive. Everybody was trying to lend a hand.

I figure about a half hour later after we arrived we had a good 20 to 30 people on that corner we were trying to treat. We were just trying to treat them.

We then hear this explosion. We hear this explosion, and our first reaction is the plane was lodged in the building and it exploded or parts of it were still in the building and that exploded.

Then people were screaming that another plane hit. I'm like, no way, there's no way. From where I was, I couldn't see the other tower. I saw the one tower. I couldn't see the other tower. They said another plane hit. So I'm like, there's no way. More people were starting to say it. Then it came over the radio.

That's when I knew it was deliberate. I knew it was deliberate. At first I was thinking maybe it was an accident, human error of the worst kind. But the second plane, I knew it was deliberate. I knew this was an attack. I wasn't even concentrating on that at the moment. I was just trying to gather the people.

Then the scene became even more hectic. It became even more hectic. We were just trying to do what we can. Now there were news people on the scene, more units, more hands. It was becoming a more hectic scene.

I'm not sure how much time passed after that. I lost track of time. You start to hear this rumble. You hear this rumble. Everything is shaking. Now I'm like, what the hell could that be. I'm thinking we're going to get bombed. This is an air raid.

You hear this thunder, this rumbling. Then you see the building start to come down. Everybody's like, "Run for your lives! The building is coming down!"

At that moment when that building was coming down, I was strapping a patient onto a stair chair. The thing about it was the patient was stable, but she was in a bit of hysteria. I couldn't blame her. It was a female. She was very nervous.

So I had her sit in the chair and I put some oxygen on her, because she wasn't breathing right, she was hyperventilating. I was just trying to calm her down. I was strapping her onto the stair chair, and that's when the building comes down. So I strapped her on.

As I this tidal wave, it's like a tidal wave of soot and ash coming in my direction, my life flashed before my eyes. I made a U turn, and I started to run -- I took about ten steps, and the lady started screaming, "Don't leave me! Don't leave me!" That's when I gathered myself. I got a hold of myself, wait, what the hell am I doing?

I turned back around. I got her out of the chair. I said, "Ma'am, can you run?" She said, "Yes." She took off. I immediately made a U turn, and I've never moved so fast in my life. I don't think my feet were touching the ground. My feet weren't touching the ground.

Then shortly after that -- the building came down. It's like snow fall. The cars are covered. The streets are covered. I'm covered and breathing in mouthfuls. You couldn't see. The scene was totally blacked out. You're just running in the direction that you think is away.

I knew I was running -- this would be westbound. I was running westbound down Vesey. I ran about a block to North End Avenue. That's when the building -- you could hear the sound. The building came down. The building finished collapsing.

So I immediately made a U turn and just ran back, because I got separated from my partner. My partner Mike, who I rode with, I had bumped into him -- between all of that I bumped into him somewhere. When other units started arriving, he had finally arrived.

So I immediately made a U turn. I ran back. Now everybody's running back: firemen, policemen, EMTs, paramedics. Everybody's running back because we've got men in there, we had equipment in there, and the people. We were just running back. That was everybody's first -- not even hesitating, just made a U turn and started heading back.

That's when over the radio you hear, "Stand fast. The north tower is leaning." I'm like, how is the north tower leaning? See, once I heard the second plane hit, I was thinking the second plane hit one building, both planes hit that one building, and that building had kind of come straight down. So all I saw was smoke coming at me and everything else, and I just ran. I still got bombarded with all of that stuff.

When I came back this time, not only was it snowing but I could see the tower, and the tower was starting to break off. It was kind of looking like it was going to tip, and there was a piece of the building coming down right on top of me and Mike. We were holding each other's hands and we were like, "Whoa, look at that."

We sat there like for a split second and we just watched it in amazement that this building was coming down, the second building was coming down. The building was hitting other buildings. It was hitting buildings over here. It was crazy.

Then we made another U turn, and everything started rumbling again. Another tidal wave blacked out the whole scene. This time it was worse. We were just running. This time we ran all the way back as far as we could to the railing. I was damn near ready to jump in the river. I swear to God, I was holding the railing, looking back, as this thing's coming towards us. I was ready to jump in the water. We were all gathered there.

The debris went well into the Hudson. It almost went to Jersey. There was debris almost to Jersey. It was over our heads. It was just blowing. There were papers -- the amount of paper, it was like a ticker tape parade. There were like a billion times more paper. We were swatting paper out of our face, on top of the soot and the ash and everything else.

So then we stayed there. More people were coming. I started cutting up sheets. I had sheets. There was a stretcher like to the side. I started cutting up sheets and started making masks for everybody, because everybody's coughing, breathing in mouthfuls of shit. We were all covered from head to toe. I just started cutting up sheets and whatever.

Then we stayed in that one area. I think there was a fire chief in the area. He said to stand fast until further notice. We stood there. A boat was in the Hudson, and they called that boat in. It had beverages and reinforcements on the boat, water and everything. They pulled that boat in and docked it, and we unloaded it.

As people were coming down Vesey, coming down to the scene, we were just handing out water, tagging them, treating them. Everybody wants to go back, but we're told we can't go back. Now we smell fumes. You smell gas in the air. You can damn near see fire. You could see fires blazing.

That's when they say -- I don't know how much time passed since then. Now they're like, "Gather anything you can, anything you can retrieve, and head north to Chelsea Piers. That's where the staging is going to be."

So I grabbed the stretcher, and I ran back about halfway between West and North End on Vesey, and I was trying to gather my equipment. All of my equipment was right there on that corner. I didn't have anything. All I had on me was my helmet I was wearing and my turnout coat. My tech bag, all of my equipment was at that corner. I think the unit was at that corner, or my partner had got out -- the guy I was with, Garfield Grey, he was out of there.

I was going to go back for the ambulance, but I was told not to, because there were ambulances on fire. There were fire trucks crushed. So I went about halfway. There was nothing there to gather. Then I came back up to North End.

Inside the lobby of this building here -- I guess that's just an apartment building -- they had a lot of equipment in there. So we just gathered all of that equipment and loaded up the stretcher about a good six feet high and just walked that thing all the way up to Chelsea Piers. I walked behind along River Terrace back onto West Street and then up to Chelsea.

We stayed up there a good -- I'd say a good five hours. By that time me and Mike had hooked back up. Now we were in unit 240. The unit was totally stripped. We unloaded the unit. Now it was totally stripped. We were sitting up there waiting for the word, just waiting for the word when we could go back down.

Now it's afternoon. Now it's like there's thousands of units. You see units rolling in from Baltimore, Philly, Jersey. Everybody was out there, just lining up along West Street on both sides of the street. I'm talking from about Chambers -- yeah, I would say from Chambers all the way up to like 28th Street you could see units lined up with no space in between, bumper to bumper, all the way up West Street. That's as far as I could see. I was about at -- that's like 23rd. I was at about 20th, 20th and West Street.

We noticed around like, I guess, 4:00, 4 or 5:00 that we were running low on fuel, so we asked for permission to refuel at Battalion 8, at Bellevue Hospital. So we were given permission. We went that way --

Oh, wait, another major thing. When that second building came down, as we were running, you hear this thunder in the air. This was a scary part. We hear thunder. That's when I'm like, oh, no, now they're going to bomb us. You hear this thunder. You know it's in the air, but you don't see anything. You just hear this loud sound. It's just getting bigger and bigger.

Then you see our fighters in the air, F-14s, whatever they were, F-18s. Everybody just got a new sense of hope. We were all just cheering, like "USA" and "shoot those mother fuckers down." We knew we were at war. We knew we were at war.

When the Feds arrived, like the Secret Service agent was near me, a couple Secret Service agents, and they were just telling us about the Pentagon. That's when we found out about the Pentagon and some of the other things transpired down there. Now that I think about it, there's a lot I forget.

Basically we waited up there for the word to go back down. Once we got to Bellevue, the National Guard was already mobilized. They had check points along 23rd Street. Once we got to Bellevue, instead of heading back to -- since we knew the bus was stripped, we called Battalion

4, which is our station. We called from Battalion 8 to ask if they wanted us to reload the bus, restock the equipment. So we were told to restock the equipment at Battalion 4.

So we drove down to our battalion, and we restocked the bus. Then we proceeded to the ferry, which was another staging area. They said any injuries that were north of the site would go to Chelsea; anything south would go to the ferry. Since we're more south from the site, we headed to the ferry after we stocked the bus, which was around I guess 6, 7:00. It was starting to get dark.

They were like, all pass days are canceled. You're going to work 12-hour shifts or 16-hour shifts or something like that. All pass days are canceled until further notice.

So we went down to the ferry, and we just sat there and waited for a while for patients. Everybody was really anxious to go back. Nobody wanted to sit there. Nobody wanted to sit there like that. We were all getting frustrated, truthfully.

A few firefighters came in. A few firefighters with minor injuries came in. Between the ferry and Chelsea Piers, they had these units set up where they were ready to perform major surgery. They had surgery that was really impressive, the organization of the whole thing.

It was really organized and really -- I mean, in the middle of a disaster, we were really prepared and we wanted to treat a lot of people, but unfortunately we kind of knew there wasn't going to be a lot of patients. We knew, but we were in denial.

Then we sat at the ferry. Me and Mike, we stayed together. We stayed until about 4:00 that morning, and then we were finally relieved. We were both pretty exhausted, so we drove home. I dropped him off at home. Did he stay? No, I dropped him off. We drove back to Staten Island together. I dropped him off at home.

I finally went home, and the first thing I did was turn the television on. I was exhausted. I turned the TV, and I saw things happen -- I saw the replay of the planes hitting, and I couldn't believe what I was seeing. It did not register. It didn't look real. It looked like toy planes. I'm like, that's what happened out there? That's what happened out there?

I think I watched TV for about six hours straight. I didn't go to sleep until well into -- they told me to come back when I could on Thursday -- I mean on Wednesday, Wednesday day. I didn't get home until Wednesday morning. I watched TV until a good 12 or 1 in the afternoon. I slept about two hours, and then I came back to work. I stayed another 16.

When I got home I think it was around Thursday night, and I woke up Friday morning and I fell apart. That's when I fell apart. It really hit me. I was in shambles. I was in bad shape. My wife was trying to console me.

Once the buildings fell, cell phones were out. Everything was out. I didn't even get in contact with my family until I got to Battalion 8, which was that afternoon. Everybody was hysterical. My family was calling from all over the country. It was really -- it was insane. It was insane.

I feel like a part of me is still out there. A part of me is out there with the people (inaudible). The whole situation has really changed my life. It's humbled me. It's made me real humble that every day is not guaranteed, which I already knew but that even brought it more, just in the business that we do.

But a situation like that, that was -- in my imagination I can't think of devastation to that magnitude. Just -- every day I come back to work it's like a nightmare that I can't wake up from. Every day I come back to work it's like, no, they did not take those buildings down, because I'm right downtown. The unit I work sits right downtown.

Just as a kid I've always been amazed by those buildings. I was always amazed by those buildings. It's a part of our identity as New Yorkers. To see the skyline without those buildings, especially the first few weeks coming back to work with the smoke -- that smoke didn't stop for a good month and a half after -- it was totally unreal, totally unreal.

My words don't even begin to touch the surface of what happened that day. I'm just trying to put into some kind of perspective. My words don't even begin to touch the surface. That's about it.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this interview?

A. I would just like to give my -- I don't know if it's proper, but I just want to -- all the guys that responded, fire, police, EMS, private, just everybody all across the country, it was a really heroic effort.

Speaking for the guys at Battalion 4, we all -- I'm very appreciative that we're all accounted for. Some guys were missing for a little while, but for the most part we're all accounted for. That's more than we can say for a lot of guys. I just feel sorry for everybody that was out there. I dedicate my career, the rest of my career in the Fire Department to the people that died that day.

That's about it.

Q. Thank you very much for doing this interview with me.

MR. ECCLESTON: The time is 1:31, and the counter reads 390.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BARRETT HIRSCH

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. CUNDARI: Today is December 17, 2001. The time is 719 hours. I'm George Cundari, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assign command.

A. Barrett Hirsch, paramedic, New York City Fire Department, Battalion 58, Division 3.

Q. Okay, Barrett, can you please tell us the events regarding is tragic day of September 11?

A. Well, starting about roughly 10:15, 10:20, we received an assignment to respond to the Borough of Manhattan. Initially, our first response was not to where the World Trade Center was, but to an unconscious patient somewhere in the general vicinity.

We responded from Brooklyn, and basically once winding up in the borough, we came across one of the local bridges. From the explosion back in '93, I knew that the towers would pretty much be an odd ball shot of getting there. Came across the Manhattan Bridge, and that's -- you can basically see pretty much both towers engulfed in flames.

We shot down toward our assignment, which was just west of Broadway, and did a canvas of the area.

Once we made contact with the Brooklyn dispatcher, we went to the tower, at which point the first tower collapsed, so when we finally got it to a staging area, one of the two that initially had been set up, they were worried about the integrity of the second tower, so we went into another area.

Q. Did you witness the tower collapsing?

A. The second tower. We were about --

Q. The first tower. Did you see it as you were approaching?

A. To be honest, Bill may have seen it. I was busy driving the vehicle and trying not to hit the pedestrians that were around, because obviously there were a lot, a lot of traffic.

So once we got to one of the first primary staging areas, at that time. We were directed just to get the vehicles out. They were trying to establish a secondary.

Q. Were you seeing any patients at that time after the collapse?

A. Not initially, not initially. I think most people were just trying to basically evacuate the area. It was basically a lot of the same stuff you saw back from -- at least that I saw back in '93, a lot of little people with soft tissue stuff, but most people just trying to get out.

Once we set up the second area, we started to get ourselves back down towards the second tower so we can assist in patient care.

Q. Who was at that staging area?

A. To be honest, I really -- I remember seeing some of our vehicles and one or two voluntaries, but not one particular officer was in charge, so I really couldn't give you the name as far as who was basically calling the shot.

As we started to make our way up is when I happened to look up, and I saw a lot of people, you know, jumping out of the building. Then I noticed, like, the top of the tower seemed to shoot up a little bit and start to fall down a little bit, and that's when Bill Simon and I, who was my partner, just bolted in towards one of the other overpasses just to get some cover, and--

Q. So you ran north?

A. We ran north up the Westside Highway, and just went into -- several police officers were shooting out doors so we could get in, just trying to secure a safe area for us as the second collapsed, at which point -- once some of the debris and the last big pillar of smoke, we were able to get out, just start working our way back up to towards what was left now of the second tower, and we just, like, left the vehicle where it was, and I don't even remember at that point. I think it was where the second one (inaudible). Somewhere near Murray, I believe, and we just started working our way back down towards the trade center.

At that point, there was pretty much a lot of mass confusion at that point. It was just like everybody knew whatever resources had been in the immediate area were probably just wiped. I ran into one of my old S.O.D. lieutenants, Lieutenant Santiago. He and I immediately kind of like snapped into some of our old S.O.D. training. We started just, like, gathering units together, see if we can create like a secondary staging area.

We saw a lot of little soft tissue stuff, a couple of respiratory distresses. We were finding some half crews. We did our best to, like, put them together and see if we could coordinate getting the most critical moved up to Chelsea where we heard -- whatever they -- I guess they made that their primary staging and just whatever we could find, just trying to get crews together and start taking care of the patients.

And that's basically how that -- that part of the event went -- seemed like several hours, but I know it was only several minutes. Bill and I at that point had separated, Bill Simon and I had separated. Bill hooked up with -- I don't know his name. He was one of the lieutenants from Manhattan. He was from Bellevue. He went up to Chelsea Pier with the vehicle, and Jerry Lieutenant Santiago, tried to keep it in the Haz-Mat realm.

Q. Basically, so really not many patients after the collapse?

A. No, not really. Not like back in '93. I mean '83. '93.

Then once all the bosses started to get over their primary shock, they started to get the sector commands back, established again, including the Fire Department, we had a small -- they were actually gathering some of the old Haz-Mat teams together and some of the old USAR teams. Was all part of S.O.D. at that time. The whole area was -- they were deciding whether or not we were going to suit up, or how and when USAR was going to get activated.

Q. Where were you exactly when the tower collapsed?

A. Second tower?

Q. North tower collapsed.

A. North tower collapsed. North tower, I was probably somewhere between -- probably between either Murray and Barclay, or Barclay and Vesey.

Q. On West Street?

A. On West, yeah.

Q. You guys just ran up? You didn't go into a building anywhere there?

A. Trying to go up?

Q. You ran north when you --

A. Oh, you mean after the tower collapsed?

Q. When it started collapsing.

A. Yeah, we just ran north probably more towards Barclay.

Q. Did you go into a building there?

A. Yes. Probably down a little bit further when we stopped running was on the other side of Warren Street where the school is. We ducked into the -- there's an overpass from one school over to the other, and we ducked into the school.

Basically after that it was just -- at that point they started bringing us into one of the other secondary schools, and they started putting medics with EMTs and going down to the pile to see if they could find anything. I did that for the next day or so.

Q. A long time.

A. Yeah, it was a long day.

Q. How was your radio communications?

A. Well, to be honest, other than point-to-point, as far as, like, trying to hear some of, like, either Brooklyn central or Manhattan, it was very scratchy, pretty much unreadable.

What little I did hear was mostly on the -- Bill and I, we were staying point-to-point, we were on the local TAC frequency, so that that kept us -- at least he knew what I was doing, and I knew what he was doing to make sure we were safe. So that went -- like because I knew, like, the lower Manhattan frequency was just trash. They didn't need to know where we were going through or any other nonsense.

You could hear -- every once in awhile I switched over to citywide to see if anything was going. When I had run into Dr. Gonzalez, he basically wanted to know -- once again, it goes back to the old SOD days. He was, like, oh, what do we have here, here, here and here. I'm like, this isn't the old SOD days. I don't have any details for you like I used to be able to get.

Q. Right.

A. And it was very -- that was very -- that was very annoying to me personally.

Q. Because you didn't have the equipment?

A. I didn't have the equipment. I didn't have the resources, and I didn't have the additional -- just basically additional information to be able to play with, some of the tools that I had earlier. That kind of made me feel pretty much worthless. I just didn't like that at all.

Q. So when you arrived, they were talking about a secondary collapse?

A. They were already concerned about the --

Q. So they were moving things around?

A. Like that, they were trying to get things reorganized after the first blast they -- I know they started some of the crews and somebody over in the other tower and --

Q. Who was talking about that?

A. It was just (inaudible) around the area. I couldn't be specific as to what particular boss mentioned it or --

Q. Fire chiefs were there?

A. Everybody was there. Everybody was squared off at that point, because they already knew they lost one building. It's only a matter of time -- the second is less than 200 feet away, so yeah, everybody was pretty much concerned.

Fire was pulling back. We were pulling back. P.D. was screaming get their guys out. Everybody was -- everybody was just trying to get the fuck out at that point. Trying to -- you saw a lot of people taking people with them. Nobody was like -- I mean, they tried to make this about as organized as that could be, but --

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ROBERT HUMPHREY

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: The date is December 13, 2001. The time is 1700 hours.

This is Battalion Chief Ronald H. Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Firefighter Robert Humphrey of Engine Company 4, firefighter 1st grade, of the City of New York Fire Department.

The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine Company 4 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Humphrey, would you please tell me in your own words what happened on September 11, 2001.

A. Well, we didn't get the run normally, because our computer was out, and the department phone was not working. So the first time we heard was when a Spanish gentleman was running down the block saying there was a big explosion at the World Trade Center, and then shortly after that over the voice alarm we heard, "Explosion in the World Trade Center. Stand by for assignments." Then we didn't hear nothing after that.

We figured we were going, so we took off, but before we went, there was a major traffic jam. Usually we would have gone right out of quarters, but we went left and I took a little different position, but ended up putting me right where I needed to go.

It was backed up, so the guy said, "Don't go that way. Don't go that way." So I went left, and I saw there was traffic all the way through the tunnel, because usually we go under the battery tunnel and go around, so we went down through Fulton Street to Church to Vesey, and then when I parked at Vesey right under 5 and 1 World Trade across the street from 7 World Trade and West Broadway.

West Broadway leads into Vesey, and I was right against the building, where there's a subway entrance into down in the trade center. There was a hydrant right there, and I hooked up there. At that time, it was Captain Farrelly, and the rest of the guys got out of the rig, and I realized that we had another guy on the rig, and I didn't know at the time, because everybody jumped into the rig, and we had Richie Allen jumped into the rig, because he got relieved earlier. So we had an extra space, because we were a four-man engine company, so he came along.

So Richie. We had Charlie Anaya, Richie -- Jimmy Riches, Tommy Schoales, and Richie Allen and Captain Farrelly took off toward West Street, and we waited at that part of the building.

After that, I was -- basically I wasn't watching. I just know which way they were going. I was busy hooking up to the Siamese, which was supposed to be supplying one end to the World Trade Center right over there, so I hooked up to the Siamese.

As I was waiting, then all of a sudden the second engine company pulled up right next to 7 World Trade Center, which is on West Broadway and Vesey, but they were right across. They were right next to it, directly to the east of 7 World Trade Center and across from the post office.

Then I helped him hook up, and then after that I think it was 21 engine, 21 or 22. I think it's 21, though. He hooked up a little further down on Vesey Street. Maybe it was 50 yards from the corner of West Broadway, and then we dragged hose all the way over to the Siamese. So we had one Siamese full, with two -- three halves hooked up, and another Siamese with one line hooked up. So we had three pumpers pushing water into the building.

At that point between actually -- probably before the third engine company came is when the second plane hit, and I was in the middle of the street at the time, and it came -- the plane came from the south, so I saw very little of the plane. I only saw a flash going on the side of the building where the opening is, and then the explosion. That's when I took cover inside the rig, because everything was -- all the metal and stuff was coming down on the rig and in the streets, you know, stuff from the plane, and metal and whatever, and glass, and et cetera.

So I jumped into the rig until everything was -- it was safe to come out, you know, out of the building. Then I came out. At that point a couple of things happened, I guess before that.

It was -- somebody wanted to borrow my gear, so I told him, "No, because I'm going to probably need it." Usually as the chauffeur I'm wearing just the regular pants and stuff, because you're running around, and then right after that, I put all my gear on right away, because I knew this is not -- this is not your normal, everyday thing which is going on right now.

So I had all my bunker gear on. I put everything on, my helmet. The only thing I didn't have is a mask, because we didn't have an extra mask in the rig, and the extra guy that was in our rig took the mask, so I had no mask, and I had no light, and -- but I did have my helmet and my coat and whatever. I just wore that for the rest of the tour.

I was working with 28, so I was talking to him a lot. Since we were kind of the closest, and -- well -- and then as time went by, saw a lot of people jumping off the building all different ways, and I couldn't -- from where I was, I can't see them land, luckily, because that would have been -- I ended up seeing it later when I went after the first collapse when I came back, but I seen about 15, 20 people jump from my angle, and I know there were a lot more, because on the south side they said they saw a lot of people jump.

I was on the north side of the building so that's what I saw, and there was no -- there were a lot of pedestrians around, cops trying to keep them back, but there were a lot of people looking at that point and then -- I remember now when it was -- when the building came down exactly.

Oh, I was in the middle of the street. What I did was after -- also after the second plane hit, I knew that I didn't want to get hit with any stuff, because I saw a lot of stuff come down, so I was looking for a place I can duck my head under so I wouldn't get something landing on top of me, not that I thought the building was going to come down, but maybe pieces of the building.

So I saw there was like a delivery tunnel in the post office inside of West Broadway and Vesey. There were five cops there. They were hanging out there, so well, if anything happens, duck in. Thank God I did that, because all of a sudden when I was standing in the middle of the street, here comes the south tower, starts coming down.

Took off into the tunnel. We got blasted a little bit, but nobody got too much stuff on their head from that angle. We just got a blast, and the dust and everything else, and the cops had some flashlights, and there was one security guard in the building, and he basically knew where he was going even though he was taking us back out from where the blast was, taking us back to the west side.

So I told him, "Why are you taking us back where we were? Take us out towards Church Street, you know, towards the east side." So we went back, up and around, and we had to go up a flight of stairs, because we were in the basement and, we went out that way.

There was a guy they pulled in from Church Street that was hurt bad, and I was taking care of him, and nobody had -- there was no water. There was nothing, so I ended up taking him -- bringing him all the way to Broadway, got into an ambulance. First I got him cleaned up at a post, because I guess they set up posts right after the plane hit, and the first -- actually the first two planes, after the planes hit. They set up a post and a first-aid station.

I brought him over there, got his face cleaned up, and then I brought him to an ambulance, because everybody was getting out of there. They said it wasn't safe, so I took him to Broadway and got him into an ambulance. Then I went back toward the rig.

When I was on Church Street, I saw a lot of bodies laying all over the place. I was trying to help a couple of engine companies that were already operating, because I was by myself, obviously, at that point. Mostly dead. Some were alive. There was body parts a lot of places right in front of the building. I went down pretty far down towards Church, and then I was coming back, and then I saw my rig. Then I saw water shooting across the street in the opposite direction from the building, and I was -- and that's what brought me back also, from helping other people too.

I was saying, "Who the hell turned -- pulled the gate?" I was saying, "Who the heck pulled it?" So I went down, and I wanted to see what was going on, if there was a malfunction or something, but somebody pulled the gate full blast and was shooting across the street.

So I shut that gate, turned the pressure back up so there was water in the building. I didn't know if anybody was actually using the water, but I just did what I was supposed to do at that point.

Then I saw a couple of guys from one truck, Rogers was one, and he had somebody else with him, and then he wanted to know where everybody went. I told him they went around West Street, and they took off by the rig, and they went up that way.

I went back across the street to 28 engine to find out how the chauffeur was doing.

Let me back up just a touch. I saw 21 engine, and it was really malfunctioning. It was going -- it was like really doing weird things, the engine. I don't know if it was pumping properly or not. It didn't sound like it, let's put it that way.

It was having failure, heart failure, and then I saw 28 show up, and then I went over to him, and the rig wasn't on, and he says to me, "My rig broke down." Probably with all the dust and everything might have clogged it up, whatever, because everybody was pumping before that happened.

So my rig was the only one pumping at that point. Then I asked him, "How did you get out?" He said, "I went back to the rig." I said, "That's -- I don't know about this one. This one's a lot closer to us than the other one." I says, "I don't know if I'd do that," but I says, "All right." We had some conversation, kind of looking up at the building, and it was no more than 30 seconds later that the other one came down, and I just yelled, "Come this way," and then he went the other way, and then I just took off into the tunnel, but this time there was a ton of stuff coming down, major stuff, and I was in the middle of the street, and I just like made -- I just made it through, because I felt the blast come right through, and even the cars in there were getting pushed out.

I jumped over this railing, and on the platform, and I just like laid there for a second while all the shit was coming by me, and everything just stopped. All the stuff was covering the entrance where I was in. Later on, of course, we found that he was alright, but he did get blown back pretty good.

So I was stuck in there, and I had nobody in there. It was me. I had no light, nothing. It was pitch black. So I was trying to find my way out, and I was debating myself, you know, should I have gone back. I did, but it was kind of one of those things, you know, flip a coin, and -- well, I went a little forward.

I thought I knew -- I thought I knew where I was. You don't know until it's pitch black, because when I went forward, what I thought I knew, I ended up finding an elevator, and I felt in there. I felt the metal and the felt the cloth. This is not where I want to go, so I ended up having to back pedal, trying to go back where I came, just a little bit, and all I could feel was the heat and smoke coming in, so I just had to try to find a wall.

I found a wall, and I just stayed along the wall the whole time. It took me 20 minutes to a half an hour. I ended up getting my way out of the building, which is lucky. I don't know how I didn't hit any hitch somewhere or some dead end. I was on Barclay and Church, I guess, Barclay and Church. I came out somewhere over there. I had a feeling I was coming towards something, because I started feeling a little breeze, and I felt the breeze coming in, because when I got deep into the building, in the basement, there was no more debris. It was just straight dust. There was no more garbage or no metal. I was just riding around.

So when I finally got around, I felt this little breeze, and I just kept going toward it, and then my eyes were half closed, because I really took a good blast on that, and I was just looking, and I saw it said "Barclay Street," and I said, "Shit, I'm out of here," and I just took off. I thought I was going in the right direction. I went towards Church and went a couple of blocks up, and then I saw -- the first real person I saw was somebody with a camera about a block and a half up. He was taking pictures of me coming out of there. Then the next fireman I saw, who gave me a lift back to the post, was Danny Lynch. He was riding around in a suburban, his own suburban. He's an old Manhattan trustee, and he drove me back to West Street so I could get accounted for.

Backtracking, Smigeons -- and I'll tell you, when I was back inside the cellar, I was -- when I was running in, I looked behind me, and I saw somebody else run in. I know it wasn't the chauffeur from 28. It was somebody else. I actually stopped, and I called out. I yelled about three times, and nobody answered, so I don't know what happened to that person.

Then I used my radio, and I was calling -- I said, "Engine 4 chauffeur to 28 chauffeur." I had nothing on it. There was nobody calling anything, no Mayday or nothing. I called him. I got no answer. So that's when I started to move because I figured that was it. I'm on my own at that point. You know, I called several times. I said -- and I didn't know whether to call Mayday myself, because I really didn't know where the hell I was, but I figured I'd give it a shot. Maybe it was a mistake, I don't know, but until I felt like I was --- they said, if you feel like you're ready to go, then it's too late, but I can compose myself at that point.

Once I knew I was getting nervous, then I was going to call Mayday. Tell you the truth, I don't think anybody would have heard me, because nobody responded. I didn't hear anything on my radio, nothing. So, I mean, I don't know how good the communications is in the basement over there, but I couldn't get out where I came from, because it was high enough where -- and I couldn't even see. All I know is this stuff blowing out, and I couldn't take the chance going the same way I came from, because I knew it was no good. During all the radio contact, the only thing I could say is when I talked to other people, they said that Engine 4 was with Engine 28 and Engine 7, and they were on the 30th Floor, and then they were making their way down all together.

They got down to the lobby, and I think the guy -- lieutenant from 28 said, "We're going to make a break for it." At that point, that's when everything -- you know, everything was coming down, I guess. They all went, I don't know which way, and 4 didn't get out, and 7 and 28 did.

I wasn't with them, so I don't know what direction anybody went, but as far as I know, they all got down to the lobby at that point. Then 7 and 28 got out and 4 didn't, so...

Q. Do you have anything else to add?

A. Let's hope it doesn't happen again.

Q. I have a couple of questions.

A. Sure.

Q. You said the second engine. Was that 21 engine?

A. No, no. Second engine got there, 28.

Q. 28, and then 21 came in?

A. Yes, I think it was 21.

Q. Those engines that you helped when you were coming back after you took the guy to Broadway, do you know --

A. You know what? It was -- I was doing EMS work. I was -- one guy was dead -- I didn't know he was dead. I was going on the ground when they ended up putting his jacket over his head. He was dead.

Q. Right.

A. And another one we were working on, he was doing CPR on him.

Q. So these are the companies? They weren't the pumpers?

A. No, this is companies.

Q. You don't remember any of there --

A. Because I came back from Broadway, because when I finally got out of building, and I was helping this guy, got all the way to Broadway. Then I didn't want to leave him hanging, so I got him over to Broadway, got him to an ambulance, and then I took off back.

That's why it really wasn't a lot of time, so when I finally got back and talked to 28 engine, that's when the tower came down, so I didn't really have enough time to, you know. One sigh, and then the freaking building came down.

Q. Right. No, I meant, you said on the way --

A. Right. On the way back, I really don't know what companies I was working, but it wasn't anybody from 21, and it wasn't anybody from 28. It was a company that came in probably to help. Could have been both companies, could have been it -- I really don't -- I really don't even know.

Q. Okay.

A. All I know is I was just helping out, whatever I could do, and then I saw the rig, and then I went over to the rig.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Great. Thanks for your time. Thanks for the interview.

This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DAVID VITIELLO

Interview Date: December 13, 2001.

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 13, 2001. The time is 4:47 p.m.

Q. This is Battalion Chief Robert Burns, New York City Fire Department, Safety Battalion, conducting an interview with --

A. David Vitiello, Firefighter David Vitiello.

Q. From Ladder 122, in regard to the events of September 11, 2001. If you would, Dave, in your own words, just tell us what happened on that day.

A. Okay. We saw the first plane hit. We didn't see the first plane hit. We saw the fire on the news in the morning. We didn't know if it was a plane at that time. Within five, ten minutes, we got the deal on where we are getting sent over. We still didn't know if it was terrorists or whatever. Ladder 122 responded, I think, on the second alarm.

We went to the staging area, which was on the Brooklyn side of the Battery Tunnel. There I remember seeing 132 behind us, Ladder 132 behind us. There was lots of units there. Within the commotion I think Ladder 132 was able to get in front of us. We were trying to move cars and what not.

Got through the bridge -- actually we saw the second plane hit from across the river. Then they sent every Brooklyn unit that was at the staging area to the World Trade. Got over to the other side of the tunnel, I wasn't really looking at units. I wasn't looking at companies. I was looking at what was going on around me. We pulled up past, I think, 132. We parked past the second -- first tower, the north tower, and then we started heading back towards the command post, which was directly across from tower one in the World Financial Center, the big black building.

We got there. I remember seeing Chief Ganci there. Who else was there. He was the only one I recognized. I can't remember any companies that were around me. Then Captain Metcalf who worked here, who survived, he worked here a few times, he gave us the orders to go into tower two, the south tower, and we went through on the pedestrian walk on Liberty Street and went into the corner door on Liberty and West, which was -- actually we were going into the Marriott, which I thought we were going into the tower, but I didn't know that building that well, but actually we were in the Marriott lobby.

Then I saw Engine 58, was right next to us, the Engine, I remember that. I heard from other guys that were there with me that Ladder 101 was in there.

That they saw guys with patches from 101 and 132, as well, Ladder 105. I didn't notice any patches from any of those guys, but I know for sure 58 Engine was right next to us.

Then the building came down, there was a lot of commotion. I got out. Found me and another guy from -- Jerry Casey from Ladder 122, we came across a fireman underneath an ambulance, crushed. I don't know what company he was from, but he was right by the pedestrian walk on Liberty. Maybe, I don't know at that point where I saw a walk, pedestrian walk was there. Then I lost Jerry, who is in my company, I got blinded by some of the soot. He walked off and everybody was shell shocked and I lost track of him and then I was by myself. Couldn't tell which way was what. Trying to find the rig. I ended up -- I know for sure I went south on West Street, which was good, because within a few minutes, the second tower came down.

Actually I ran into Engine 228, which had just come over through the tunnel. I spoke to the officer. I think everybody survived. I found out everybody survived from that Engine, I think, from what I heard from people. He told me -- I asked him if he had seen my company, he said no. He said sit in the rig. I had a radio. I had the irons and he said sit in the rig. If they call for them -- if the command center calls for them, to call him and let him know where they wanted him to go. He said just sit in the rig and try to get your whereabouts. I said okay.

I sat in the rig and within -- they walked maybe like 20, 30 steps and the second tower started coming down. I jumped out of their rig and started running down West Street towards the tunnel. Some cop waved me into a city bus, I jumped inside there. There was like 5 or 6 firemen there. We all huddled on the ground when all the debris and smoke and everything hit the bus. Stood in there for like 20 minutes.

Then when the smoke cleared, we walked all the way down to the water. It was like a MERV command RV, Fire Department RV thing. Nobody was really in there. I signed my name there. They were taking names to make sure who was survived. I can't remember anybody's helmets that were in there. There was only like 3 guys in the whole thing. One guy working in and two or three other firemen besides me.

Then I came back to the site to find my guys. I walked around the water side, because you couldn't go down West Street any more because it was blocked from all the debris. I walked around the water side and I can't remember any helmets or any companies or anything.

Finally I heard my chauffeur talk to my officer asking him something and I just cut in on him and went over the air, Irons to 122. They said, "Oh Dave, you're alive," or whatever. I asked them their location. They told me where they were. Then something came over the radio. There was some gasoline underneath the ground and everybody should evacuate the area. I was stuck down by the waterfront. I had no place to go. I saw everybody running north on West Street and I was by the boats. There were boats leaving to go to Jersey.

But they kept calling for me to meet them by Chambers and West, so I tried to get over there. Finally got over there and they weren't there. They had gone north and I went north on West Street and I saw my chauffeur, saw his bright red hair. I went up and that's all I remember.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: All right. Great Dave. The time is 4:56 p.m. That concludes our interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEVIN QUINN

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Today's date is December 13, 2001. The time is 1:28 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion New York City Fire Department.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Firefighter Kevin Quinn, assigned to Engine 271.

Q. This is in regard to the events of September 11, 2001. If you would, Kevin, just tell us in your own words what happened on that day?

A. I was starting my second tour of a 24. We got the call to respond to, I believe it was Engine 6, to relocate to the World Trade Center. Came over the Brooklyn Bridge. Obviously saw a lot of smoke from the towers. We ended up on Murray and Greenwich Street. My officer transmitted over the air that we were a few blocks out from the box. Should we take it in. They told us to stand by.

Looking up at the towers and it looked like it just basically imploded. Then I guess the cloud came right at us and we got zero visibility, we couldn't breathe. We got -- put on our masks and tried to orientate ourselves where we were. From our vantage point on Murray and Greenwich, didn't see any other fire apparatus or officers or firemen in the whole vicinity.

After that, we worked our way over to West Street and we were headed towards -- we got our extra equipment off the rig, extra bottles, anything we could carry down towards the towers to see if we could help. The Battalion Chief, I believe, I don't remember his name, he told us to fall back and as we were falling back, I think we were on West Street, I think Murray again when the second one came down, same thing.

It just -- a lot of firemen running out. I didn't recognize any particular rigs at the time. Then we were all -- when we moved the command post back we staged in the area there. Then approximately I guess maybe two hours before number 7 came down, we went into Ground Zero and helped dig around and was there when they located Chief Feehan and one of the Chiefs pulled us all out because they said 7 was going to come down. We just went on the side of the financial building.

That is about it. Besides digging after number 7 came, I went back in, but it was basically when they both came down I was just basically blinded by the dust. You couldn't see anything.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay, great. The time is 1:30 p.m. Thanks for the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER CHRISTOPHER JARONCZYK

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Today's date is December 13, 2001. The time is 2:36 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion New York City Fire Department.

Q. Conducting an interview with?

A. Christopher Jaronczyk.

Q. Of Engine Company 236, in regards to the events of September 11, 2001. If you would in your own words Christopher tell us what happened that day.

A. Okay. We got relocated after the second plane hit from our quarters into Manhattan to Engine 15. We proceeded to Manhattan, responded to Engine 15. When we got there we took in a run from the smoke in the area. Somewhere down near the Seaport area, we took that run in. We got there, we gave a 1033 and from there we were instructed to go to World Trade.

By that time, one of the towers had already come down. We proceeded over towards the World Trade. We parked the rig, I believe it was on Maiden Street, somewhere near Liberty Place. Got out of the rig, donned our masks and by that time the second tower had come down. This was approximately around 11 a.m. and we were about 2 or 3 blocks away. The area was already in total darkness from the dust cloud from the first collapse and as we proceeded we heard and felt the second collapse and we ducked into an ATM machine to let the dust cloud pass by.

Then we proceeded down to, I believe it was Broadway and headed north up to Ann Street and Vesey and Park Place near City Hall. There was a makeshift command center. We were there for about 20 minutes awaiting orders. We were by then ordered to go down to World Trade, in front of 2 World Trade Center to start doing whatever we could, either searching for victims or survivors.

As far as seeing any bodies, we didn't see anything. We didn't see -- we saw other firemen, but we didn't see any other trapped firemen. We didn't see anybody really in need of help. We pretty much concentrated our efforts on the corner of Trinity Place and Liberty. We were putting out small fires, searching buildings, the adjacent buildings, for any signs of life. We really didn't see anything.

That pretty much proceeded throughout the whole day for us. It was very -- visibility was very low for most of the day due to the dust cloud and of course, our eyes were all watery because of that. Breathing was very difficult. We just proceeded to, you know, we tried to get around the perimeter of the whole area. We really couldn't get down towards West Street because it was all blocked by debris. So we concentrated most of our efforts, like I said, near Liberty and Trinity.

However, we did make it down to West Street. We weren't able to go north on West Street because like I said, all the debris. That's about it. We really didn't see other companies. We saw lots of other firemen, but we didn't see any trapped firemen. We weren't able to rescue any.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Great Chris, thanks. That concludes the interview, it's 2:41 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER FIRST GRADE DAN WALKER

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: December 12, 2001. The time is 1925 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Fire Department Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter first grade Dan Walker of engine 216, who is detailed to 212, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

We are in the quarters of 212 and there is nobody else present in the room where we are having this interview. What follows now is the interview.

Q. Go ahead and tell me what you want.

A. You know, we were in quarters that day. We saw it on TV, we saw that the first tower was on fire. At that point, a bunch of members went up on the roof and I went into the house watch. They actually witnessed the second plane striking the tower from the roof here, because you can see right across the river. I saw it in the house watch on TV. They were showing that that had happened.

We got a ticket shortly thereafter and responded -- I was getting off for the day actually. I don't know if they hired me minimum manning or what technically was going on. I jumped on the rig, officer told me I was on overtime. I got on the rig and we went. We responded basically down under the BQE and we came out in front of 207 over there on Tillary Street.

Everything was wide open. They had shut off the traffic already, I guess because of the first tower being on fire. At that point -- it was a little tough getting through traffic there, but at that point we shot right over, I guess that's the Brooklyn Bridge there that comes into -- whatever it is that comes into Flatbush Avenue. We shot right over the bridge and all of downtown was shut down, so we had no traffic at all.

We wound up parking on Liberty Street, just east of Church. So we were actually on the southeast corner there where we parked. Right over there. Then we grabbed all our gear and we proceeded west down Liberty Street past 10-10. At that point we got some feedback from some guys in 10-10. I don't really recall that -- what was said there. But we went inside the buildings on Liberty Street. We walked through the lobby of those buildings in order to, you know, for our own safety.

We walked down by the pedestrian bridge on West Street and that is when we went across, headed north into the -- we basically went into the hotel. We staged in the hotel lobby there and our boss went off to find some sort of command post or to find out who was in charge in the lobby there. They brought up some water and stuff for us. A couple of cases of water they were bringing up.

We weren't in there too long, when our boss came back and told us we were going to walk up to the 70th floor of the north tower, to loosen up your gear, lighten up your coat, open up your coats and take off your hoods, because we are walking up and it's going to take over an hour, hour and a half to get up there by his estimate. Lieutenant Brosnan was the Lieutenant that day.

So I grabbed some water, we did what we had to do, picked up our gear again and we started heading through the lobby north into the north tower. We entered into the lobby of the north tower and we basically turned to the right and now we were headed east and we passed through all the -- there was a whole row of revolving doors there, which I guess is the only way in and out at that point to that part of the building.

We then proceeded, I don't know how far. There was maybe 25, 30 yards ahead, there was a corridor there where you could go left or right. We were just before that when Lieutenant Brosnan then staged us there, and he was trying to find a stair well I think at that point. He staged us there, he said wait here. Don't go anywhere, stay together, don't move, stay right here.

So he then -- at that point there were a lot of pedestrians, civilians leaving the building, passing right through where we were. He walked back toward the tower as far as I can recall across the hallway and back towards the lobby of the tower and he no sooner disappeared into the crowd than there was a big rumbling noise. Everything started shaking and the wind started blowing.

The wind was incredible. It had to be, I don't know, I would say like at least 50, 60 mile an hour winds coming through that hallway, through that corridor. Everybody, of course, starts running. Civilians were running, we are running, you are just trying to get away from this tremendous noise and wind.

At that point we still headed east and from what I can recall, we made a left and there was all these shops down there. We ran by these shops and you know, pretty much the wind just picked everybody up and just knocked you right down.

Q. Really?

A. Everybody wound up on the floor and I think it was basically because of the wind, because I can remember whoever was in front of me, I don't know which guy was in front of me. It was me, myself, Vinnie Picciano, Joe Galasso, Jimmy Murphy, Eric Berntsen. We were all together and one of those guys was in front of me and he fell down. Other people I can remember were falling down.

I just said to myself, you know, I don't want to fall down. Like feet don't fail me now. I can remember going to jump over that guy and that was it. The wind just laid me down. I didn't get hurt. That's what struck me. It's not like I fell with a thud. Like I tripped over something. It was like the wind was blowing so hard that it just kind of picked me up and laid me down softly.

Q. Really?

A. As far as I can think it over in my mind, you know.

Next thing I know I'm kind of rolling around on the floor and getting blown down the hallway. The windows are breaking, the lights are going. Lights went out, people are screaming. I mean it was horrible.

Now we are in complete darkness. I had a radio because I had control. I had the control position that day, so I had the radio. I had a pretty good flashlight with me. We just started calling out to each other, you know, 212, 212. We kind of rallied the five of us. We found each other. We weren't far from each other. We were all together. We got together and we made sure we were all okay. We had the five of us and then people were moaning and one lady started screaming.

There were other emergency personnel down there. I don't know who they were or what units they were with or what they were, Port Authority or FBI or EMS. I don't know who they were, but there were a few. At least two or three other people down there and I think one of those guys, it must have been, grabbed this lady that was screaming and going hysterical and I just remember him screaming back at her, telling her to shut up. Because we could have gone into a panic.

We had a lot of people. I don't know. It's hard to recall how many people were there and now, of course, it's pitch black and even now I put my flashlight on, you couldn't see anything because of the dust. The flashlight was --

Q. Useless?

A. Basically useless. I could shine it down on the floor to see my footing, to make sure that I wasn't going to trip over anything or if I was coming on some steps or a hole or whatever. That's why I had the flashlight down at the floor. Basically that was the best I could do, because pointing it forward you couldn't see anything because of the debris, the dust floating around.

So we told everybody to grab onto somebody next to them. I had four or five people hanging off of me. We were all together at this point basically. We rallied all the people that were there. The other emergency workers, I don't know who they were or where they were, but we kind of said okay, Fire Department, don't worry, we will get you out of here, not knowing, of course, what had happened.

I thought myself that the lobby -- they were talking about the elevators were -- looked like they were going to come down. The elevators weren't secured. We did hear that over the radio as we were coming up on the towers from the dispatcher, I think gave that information out over the radio.

So I thought that the elevators in that lobby of the north tower had come crashing down, because you just can't imagine that these buildings were going to come down.

Q. Absolutely not.

A. At that point that's what I was going under the impression, that the lobby of the north tower had collapsed in some way. Whether it was the elevators or whatever. It seemed to me like it was right behind me and of course the other tower is on the other side of the plaza. So anyway, we grab all these people and everybody is holding on to somebody and we just start walking. You don't know which direction to head, and you lost all sense of where you were or where you were heading.

I can remember walking into a wall and coming up to a wall and I shined my flashlight up on the sign of a store and some woman that was standing next to me was like, I know where we are, I know this store, I know where we are, we have to go this way. I had no idea where we were, so I went with that. I said okay. Let's go.

As I turned there was now a whole crowd of people in front of me, because she said go to the right basically and I had to break through the crowd. I had to -- okay, let me through and I had to get through this crowd of people because I had the flashlight, you know, and nobody else had a flashlight. So I -- I don't know at that point. It was a good crowd of people. I got to the front of the crowd and we just started walking.

Q. The other members were with you at that time too from 212?

A. Yes, we all were together and somehow we got split up. That's all I know. I don't know how we got split up or what. All I remember is that lady saying I know where we are, we got to go this way and we all started walking that way and I wound up in front of this crowd of people.

As we walked further through the hallway and from looking back at maps and trying to figure out where I was, I think -- what I know we did was we were headed east and we went over to the Church Street exit of 5 World Trade Center. There was an escalator there.

Now there is all big glass on the street level there going from the floor to the ceiling, so as we are coming down the hallway, even though there is a lot of dust and stuff flying, I mean when they say there is light at the end of the tunnel I know what they mean now because now we could start to see the light. So we start heading towards the light and that's where we came to this escalator at the bottom of where now -- see the thing what I figured out about the building and one of the things that's weird is that on West Street you are at street level. At Church Street you are one level below grade.

Of course I didn't realize that's what was happening at the time, but, so now we are at one level below grade and there is an escalator there and now we let all the civilians that were with us. I think it was me and Joe Galasso and Vinnie Picciano that wound up at the bottom of that escalator. There were one or two guys that might have been cops. One guy maybe. Now we let all these civilians go.

I could still picture them walking up the escalator stairs. Of course nothing was working, because all the electric is out. Glass all over the place and I can remember looking down and this one lady -- it's funny the things we remember. I remember looking down and watching her feet and she had no shoes on, just her stockings, and walking through the glass to get out.

I'm sure as I think back on it that she didn't even know that she was walking through glass. All these people, I don't know if it was 50, hundred, or 150 people, just kept up the escalator and out to Church Street, where they headed probably towards Vesey Street at that point.

Now we are standing there and we are wondering what do we do now. We were missing two guys that were with us when the officer staged us. There were five of us. Now there were only three of us. We are missing those two guys. Our officer now had gone off to find the stairwell or whatever, so he is missing from us. Those are the main guys that we are concerned about.

So we went back in and it gets a little fuzzy here, but we probably went down that hallway so we probably headed back west down that corridor and we did a search of the PATH trains, that I went myself and I think Jimmy Murphy. Again, we talked about it when we got back here. We actually walked down. There is a whole bank of -- it's got to be like 12 escalators or so, that go down into the PATH train there under 5 World Trade Center.

Me and Murphy actually went all the way down and we got to the bottom of the stairs and we are calling out and we are hearing nothing, and nothing on the radio, because I had a radio. I tried to call people. I was getting a couple of little things that I heard that were all garbled.

Q. What channel were you on?

A. I think I was on Channel 1. In the building. Guys that I have spoken to afterwards said that under the best of circumstances, from the lobby sometimes you could talk to somebody on the 70th floor and you couldn't hear the guy on the second floor. So they said it was always tough there with communications.

I was hearing nothing on the radio. I gave up on calling people because there was no response. We were calling out in the hallway, we got no responses. We went down into the PATH train, calling out, anybody here, anybody need help. No responses down in the PATH train. We just looked at each other and we were like, you know, this is not good. Let's get out of here. The other guys were at the top of the stairs waiting for us.

Now we walked back up to the top of the escalators there to go down to the PATH train and we walked back towards where we had been inside.

Finally we are calling out, we are calling out, we hear somebody calling us. We go back, I don't really know which direction, I think we headed more towards the south. Now I think there is like two other corridors that cross the corridor that we were walking in from the west to the east, but I still haven't seen a map of downstairs there, so I'm not sure.

Anyway we hear this guy calling us. We go back towards him. He is like an EMS guy. I'm not sure exactly who he was or why he was down there, but he had a helmet on. I think he was an EMS guy, big guy and he has a civilian under a pile of debris.

I think the debris came from the ceiling tiles right above him. Some of the guys are saying they think it actually came -- that he came through the floor. I don't think he came through the floor because I don't think he would have survived. I think he was just in the corridor and got hit with stuff, where he happened to be, the ceiling came crashing down and he was piled onto like, hanging ceiling tiles and the grid that they hang that on, was on top of him, plaster and lath and all that kind of stuff.

He was underneath the pile of stuff, but it was heavy because that guy couldn't get it off of him. So now there is the five of us. Somehow -- again, this I found out afterwards. The other two guys had taken some of the people and they went out to the north. They exited to Vesey Street through the north is Vesey Street. They went out that way with some people when we went to Church Street. That's where we got split up. But they came back in too and we all wound up together when we found this guy. We kind of heard them calling us and we all kind of met back probably the same place where we split up and we all walked together and we found this guy and we all now dug him out and got the debris off him. He was pretty banged up and he was a pretty big boy.

There was a little store. Of course there were all stores there. The store across the way started to go on fire. Two of our guys actually grabbed a line from one of the lines that the building has. Started maybe trying to put the fire out, but that was kind of a waste of time. It wasn't like a big fire. Just some of that hanging stuff was starting to burn, but it was lighting up the area, which was kind of good so we could see what we were doing. I.

I went into the store. It was like a little shoe store or something. I did a search in there. All the alarms were going off and stuff. It was pretty crazy. I grabbed a chair because we didn't know how we were going to get this guy out. I grabbed the chair out of the store and everybody is like oh, great, great idea. We put the guy in the chair and we start carrying him out. Again it was the five of us, maybe this EMS guy and I think a cop was helping us.

We put him on the chair. It was a long way that we were in and he was a pretty big guy. We switched off. We had like four or five guys carrying him. We stopped and the other guys jumped on and they carried him the rest of the way. That's when we -- now we got to a point of like -- I know we got to go this way towards Church Street and one of my other guys, my friend, was like we got to go this way.

I'm like well, I know we got an exit this way and he is like well, I know we got an exit this way. I was like, let's not stand here and talk about it. You got an exit, let's go. We went his way and now we went out to the north. We went to Vesey Street, which as it turns out, wound up being a better way to go, because there was only a couple of steps to the street level, whereas on the other side, it was that escalator -- we were one level below grade. So we only had to carry this guy out up a couple of steps and it was a very gradual incline. We carried him out.

We go out the door of 5 World Trade Center, which we are now just east of where West Broadway comes in and we came right out of these doorways, right across from the US Post Office building is where we came out.

We came out the door. When I walked out the door, I looked up, because when we were going in, it was a horrible scene. It was like a war zone already before the first collapse. There was stuff all over the floor, debris and what have you, body parts.

We knew that there were jumpers, we knew that people were jumping, we knew that stuff was coming down. Now walking out the building again we are a little concerned. I look up and I could see there is a big overhang that goes all the way around these buildings. I see the overhang ahead of me as I'm looking towards Church Street and we go to the left. We are going now towards Vesey, towards the Post Office building. We are going across the street.

What I didn't realize was that overhang goes all the way around the building. I didn't realize I was still under the overhang. But in my mind I said if I hear anything coming down I'm going back towards that overhang for protection. Next thing you know, we didn't walk 25 feet and it starts rumbling. You know, again, you don't even imagine this is what's happening.

The other building had already completely collapsed and now the building that you are standing under is completely collapsing. It didn't even occur to me. I'm just thinking that stuff is falling off the side of the building and I want to get under cover.

So we got the guy on the chair, we put him down and lucky for him I guess, he was under the overhang. We left him kind of at the corner of the building. We ran back in. He was right at this corner here, the north corner where there is the cut out of 5 World Trade Center.

We ran back towards the doorway that we had just come out of, and couldn't -- I mean the wind now. I'm saying if it was 50, 60 miles an hour when we were inside when the first tower collapsed, now it was like hurricane winds, it's like a jet engine. As I'm trying to get in the doorway it's getting worse. I couldn't get even through the doorway. The wind is like, crrrrrrr, like a jet engine coming out of that doorway. It was incredible.

So I kind of got blown a little to the side and I wound up right in the corner of -- there was this huge beam behind, I guess it was like a marble facia and I can just remember getting down on my knees and covering up with whatever I could do. I'm holding on to my helmet and I'm watching this debris fly out this door and I mean every bit of it is going straight. It doesn't matter what it was. Rocks or dust or whatever it was. It was just going straight because of the force of the wind.

I wound up huddling in this corner while this building came down. Joe Galasso I know followed me and I guess Murphy was there somewhere too. That the three of us went back towards the building and the other two guys went across the street. Thank god they are okay, but now they were out there when all the debris was coming down. I just sat in that corner, said my prayers. I thought I was going to die.

Joe says he was holding on to me, but he let go of my coat and the wind caught him and blew him, I don't know, 40, 50 feet.

Q. Really?

A. Yes, because the wind, I mean when I say it was like a jet engine coming out that door, it was like a jet engine. It blew him and Murphy maybe 30, 40, 50 feet away from me where I kind of stayed right in that corner, right next to the doorway where the wind was coming out.

You know, then it stopped. I mean I don't know how long it took. I heard guys that have seen tapes of it coming down that said it took 30 seconds. I don't know. Doesn't seem to me that it could be that quick, but that's what I was told. It did actually not take that long. The noise stopped. The wind stopped and it was pitch black. I didn't know if I was buried or what. I'm thinking I'm buried because I can't see anything.

I'm looking up and then little by little you start to hear people calling out. Anybody there, anybody help me or whatever. I found Murphy and Galasso. The three of us wound up together and it was like, let's keep moving. We didn't know what had happened. It could come down again. It's not safe here, we have to clear the area. We lost track of the guy in the chair because you couldn't see anything. We couldn't see anything.

We just start stumbling over stuff and trying to make our way out of there. I can remember walking pretty much -- again, it's partially what I remember that day and partially what I put together afterwards. I remember walking across the street and banging into another fireman who was with a rig that was right there. I don't know what company he was, but it was right in front of the Post Office.

He is telling me help me find my helmet. Help me find my helmet. He apparently dove under the rig for safety and lost his helmet under there. I'm like, help you find your helmet, let's get out of here. Forget your helmet. So he is looking for his helmet and we again continued on.

Now as he is asking me to help me find his helmet, I can see Joe and Murphy continuing on. I wanted to stay with them. I catch up to them. We headed up West Broadway towards -- just going north and at that point Murphy was asking somebody, he was a few steps ahead of me, he was asking somebody, I guess, where do we go. I don't know what he was asking the guy, but I noticed the guy pointing down the block.

Murphy goes down the block. It turns out it was Duane Street and that's where 7 engine is. So I guess the guy was saying there is a fire house right here. So I head that way too. There is the fire house. We wind up in 7 engine. We start taking our gear. We are covered. I'm sure it's the same old story everyone is telling you. Covered from head to toe in dust. I got crap in my eyes, my eyes are killing me. I can't breathe. The stuff that was coming down I was choking and puking back by the building.

Got our gear off, jumped in the slop sink, rinsing off, cleaning up. Now we are just like, we are just stunned. I still didn't actually know that both buildings had completely collapsed. Guys are coming in and they are grabbing gear and they are grabbing my gear and they are grabbing radios. Some guy took my radio. A guy took my flashlight. Somebody took my turnout coat. Guys were just coming in to get down there.

I made a phone call. I called my family and let them know I was okay. Then you just kind of wandering around and they start to set this area up as a triage area and doctors were coming in and nurses are coming in. I started choking again. This is after a half an hour or so. Choking and I'm choking so bad that I can't breathe. I felt like I was going to throw up again.

I got to the sink and I'm rinsing myself out again and drinking a little water. This doctor grabs me and he is like hey, let me look at you. Get over here. I said what. He says were you down there? I said, yes, we were down there when it happened. He says you were down there when it happened? I'm like, yes. He said, let me look at you. He is checking my eyes, he is looking in my throat. He says you got to go to the hospital.

I felt fine. I'm sure I was in shock. He says you got to go to the hospital. I said I don't want to go to the hospital. He is like you got to go to the hospital. You could be in cardiac arrest, you could this, you could that, respiratory failure, starts hitting me with all this stuff.

Next thing you know it's me -- oh, I forgot that as we were there the three of us showed up; me, Murphy and Galasso. We are like where is everybody else. We thought they were all gone because we thought we were gone. About 15 minutes after we showed up, Berntsen and Picciano walk in. The same fire house.

They came up, I think the other street is -- I don't know. What's the other street over there. Maybe Broadway.

Q. They came up Church. They actually came up --

A. Because they ran across the street and went east. They got a little banged up because they were out on the street, but they survived too and they came walking in about 15 minutes after us and we were all happy to see each other, of course. A little bit later this doctor grabs me and he puts all five of us on the ambulance and another officer, a Lieutenant from 24 truck or 24 engine and Chief King, actually, from the Safety Battalion and the 7 of us, they sent us to a hospital over in Forest Hills. That was basically it. We were done.

They threw us on the ambulance, sent us to the hospital. I was probably in the hospital by 11:30, quarter to 12. That is basically it.

[redacted]

[redacted]

A. But it was the situation.

Q. You lived through both building collapses.

A. Yes.

Q. There was the first obscuring of everything and then there was the second obscuring and the rumbling and all that. You lived through both. Lucky guys.

A. The whole company got out. We were in three different places. We had the chauffeur was with the rig. We had the officer had gone to find a stairwell and the five of us. So the officer wound up actually hooking up with some guys from 238. I found this out later on.

That he went out to the West Street side somehow. They had a hard time getting out because it was the collapse of the south tower, I think, I'm not even sure, but it obstructed West Street.

Q. Yes, very much.

A. We were lucky because we went out to Church Street and Vesey Street. It was all wide open. Of course until the second tower came down. Even at that, I think it mostly went northwest and we were on the northeast in a way. We were north in the middle, but we were -- 5 World Trade Center is actually a little east of the tower. We were lucky in that respect.

He wound up with engine 238 and a couple of guys from that company and we wound up going up to 7 engine. I mean one company, three different locations, and we all came home. Guglielmo, the chauffeur, Lieutenant Brosnan and then me, Murphy, Picciano, Berntsen and Galasso, all came home.

Q. Do you remember seeing any command posts or any Chiefs?

A. No, because we went in, I think the -- I'm not sure where the command post was. But when we were going in, we were underneath the pedestrian cross over bridge. I saw, when I looked to my left, coming across West Street was just 50, 60 of the brothers were coming. They were using that -- the cross over for protection. They were all crossing the street underneath that bridge and I don't know where they were coming from or who they were or what companies they were with. That's when we just went across and went right into the building.

I don't know who Lieutenant Brosnan spoke to, but he spoke to some Chief in the lobby of the Vista Hotel. I think that was the first time we were near anything that was a command post or anything like that. I don't really know the locations.

The only company I know is that Lieutenant Brosnan wound up hooking up with 238 and other than that, we were basically on our own. The engine that was across the street in front of the Post Office, I don't even know who that was. Again it was after both collapses. Everything was covered. I didn't even know who it was.

Q. What do you remember about the handy talky? Like before the first building collapsed, and it was just fires and they were trying to get organized and everything, do you remember anything over the handy talky, like assigning companies, anything, was it chaotic?

A. You know, I really don't remember hearing much radio transmissions. We were in the building. Even after -- the only time I started to try to contact anyone or whatever, it was after the first collapse. At that point we were in the basement. I could hear a couple of garbled transmissions. I called out, engine 212, Mayday. I think I gave a Mayday. I'm sure I gave a Mayday.

I got no response. But I could hear another two guys trying to talk to each other. I don't know who they were or what they were trying to say.

Q. Did you ever get an order of -- somebody mentioned -- I think the officer said at some point he was told to switch to channel 3 because that was going to be the channel in number 2 World Trade Center?

A. No.

Q. Basically you stayed on Channel 1?

A. Yes, I was on Channel 1. I never changed the channel and I really didn't hear much radio transmission.

Q. Anything else?

A. No, I'm just lucky to be alive.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: Lucky to be alive. Word. Okay. Where is my little speech I have to make. I thank Fireman Walker for this interview. The interview now concludes at 2001 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JAMES IPPOLITO

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 13, 2001. The time is 1530 hours.

This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Firefighter James Ippolito of Engine Company 28 of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine 28 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Ippolito, could you please tell me what happened to you on September 11?

A. We were sitting at the house watch, and we heard an explosion, and some of the senior guys immediately started to tell us to get on the rig, because they knew we were going to go somewhere. We get on the rig, and then I think it went to second alarm immediately. We got the ticket. We were out the door immediately.

We started to head down the FDR where we could see the north tower, I believe, was the first one hit, was burning. A lot of black smoke and debris all around the building. As we approached, came out from where the Battery Tunnel exit is. I guess that's by the south tower. We passed going north on West Street, coming right up.

The rig was swerving, and there were bodies all over the street. There was paper and everything in the air. We pulled up in front of the north tower, on West Street. There was a pedestrian walkway right near us, so we ran along the wall of the walkway to get towards the building, because people and debris were coming out of the buildings, and people were inside the lobby yelling to us to look up before we came in.

As we entered the lobby, we -- there was a chief there. I don't remember where he was from. He assigned us to team up with 4 engine, and we were to start ascending the stairs, because there was no elevator service, obviously.

So we teamed up with 4 engine. We proceeded to the B staircase, where there were a lot of civilians still coming down, but we had to walk single file up the stairs. We had roll-ups and spare cylinders, and we started making our way up.

If I can interject, before we entered the second -- before we entered the tower, I -- me and Mike Kehoe, another guy who was working in the company with me, we heard a screeching sound, sounded maybe like a train derailing or something, and what they're telling us now is -- the time frame we saw in the paper, we think that was the second plane hitting. That was once we were entering the building.

So we started heading up. I guess we got up to the 30th Floor, and we took a break. We were taking intermediate breaks on certain floors, and we got to 30, and the guys were really fatigued, so we sat down. 4 engine was there. I remember seeing a guy from 13 truck there. Let me see. I'm trying to remember other companies that were there. I believe 9 truck.

We were taking a break. There were still civilians coming down. Let me just rewind again. We were, I think, on 20 -- maybe in the teens somewhere, maybe 17th Floor, when we making our way up slowly, and I believe it was a guy from 13 truck had come across. So we stopped, and a guy on, I think it was 13 truck, told us to come in the C staircase, because there were less civilians, and we would make better progress there.

We headed across to the C staircase. It was the same problem. You know, a lot of people still coming down. We couldn't get up any faster, so we went back to the B staircase, and we were taking a break on 30, and that's when we heard a rumble, outside explosion, and I think that was the other building coming down, but we were getting reports on the radio that there was another incoming plane, so guys weren't sure. At first we thought it was the plane hitting, but we at this point -- we knew the plane was already in the building, and we heard rumbling.

The building started to shake. We all ran into the stairway, into the B staircase again, and the building started to shake and lights went out. Just got this tremendous rush of air coming up through a staircase. Everybody was just holding onto each other. Then we started to make sure -- you know, we didn't know what happened. We were -- everybody was questioning each other, what the hell was that. We thought it was another plane.

So at this point, our chief comes down. He was -- he was on that show, that 6 truck. He was with them, the 6 truck. That chief came down from floors above us. I'm not sure what his name was. He had come down, and he ordered us out, so at that point we started making our way down. I guess we were starting to spread out, I guess, a little bit on the stairs coming down. I guess we were on 17. We took another stop. Lieutenant Becker wanted to make sure we were all together, and then we went down again. We kept coming down, got down to -- I guess we were about the 8th Floor when we saw 6 truck, and on our way down -- excuse me, before we saw 6 truck, we saw -- I saw at least two members from Squad 18 going up the stairs where I informed them that the chief told us everybody out. The chief gave us an order to all get out, and they passed me by. They kept going up.

So at this point, we were heading down again. We get to 6 truck. They are helping a woman down the stairs. We tried to help them, and Billy Butler from 6 truck told us to keep going. He said they got it under control, and they would get her out.

So we get down to the lobby where we find 18 truck, and Hughy Mettham, he -- we asked him where the rest of their guy was -- where the rest of 18 truck was, and he said they're all together. They are in the lobby, and they're getting out.

At this point, we made the decision to leave the building. We waited for 4 engine to come down. We went back to the entrance where we came in closest to West Street, closer to the Vesey Street corner, and we stayed by the doors. The debris was all over the 1st Floor, and there was a lot of confusion.

I saw Von Essen there, and I saw Ganci there. We passed them, went to that doorway, and we waited for 4 engine to come over, where I believe it was a lieutenant working with them, he wanted his guys to stop. I guess we wanted to check in with the chief or something before they left the building.

We were all ready to go, and we made sure there were people outside by that walkway where we came in. They were telling us to look up before we run. I think that was 18 truck. They had already exited, and they were telling us look up before we run. That's what we did. We came outside. We ran to that wall by the walkway. There were still people coming out of the building, jumpers.

So we ran to the wall. We walked alongside, as close to the wall as we could. We got underneath the pedestrian walkway where 18 truck was. They were parked right there underneath the walkway, and we stopped, made sure everybody who went in with us came out, all our members of the engine came out with us, and we just started to walk.

I saw a whole bunch of members, right -- I think it was the Vesey Street, corner of West and Vesey. We started to walk towards them, and there were all rigs and stuff outside, and that's where we were walking towards. Looked like some kind of maybe a command post or something was there. Started to walk towards it, and that's when the building came down. I heard an explosion and turned around and the building was coming down.

At that point, we dropped everything we had, at least I did. We started to run north on West Street. At that point, we were overcome with the cloud and it looked like -- felt a lot of wind again, got knocked down. I crawled. I think I fell under a van or something, and that dust started burying me in there. I started crawling out from there. I couldn't see anything. I pulled my hood over my mouth.

As I got on my feet, I felt another guy run by me, so I reached out and grabbed ahold of his cylinder. I asked him for a couple of hits from the cylinder, because I was choking. He gave me a couple of hits, and then a whole crowd of people ran us over. I lost him.

I found my way onto the island in the middle of West Street, the grassy island, and I somehow -- I don't know where I was at that point. I got onto that island. I started crawling, and by the time I got out of the smoke, I was on Chambers Street, and then that's -- I came out, and I couldn't find anybody.

After a couple of minutes, I ran into 228 engine. That's where I rotated to on my second stop. So I knew those guys and I said -- I figured I might as well stay with a boss, any boss. So I stayed with them and finally I saw Kevin Murray, who was assigned to 11 truck, but he was detailed to 18 truck that day, saw him and Hughy Mettham come out of the smoke. I helped them, and I brought a big jug of water over there to help them clean up, get the stuff out of their eyes and mouth.

At that point, I went with them back towards the site, because they were looking for their guys. I was looking for my guys, and I was with Hughy. I figured I was with a senior man, that's good, so I stayed with him. I started making my way back towards the site. I ran into Lieutenant Rallis from 11 truck. He came in on the recall. I stayed with them for the rest of the afternoon.

They assigned us to go searching buildings in the financial center. So we went there and were doing searches. The building was empty at that point. It was pretty much destroyed. I stayed there -- geez, I don't even know what time. I must have left around four o'clock or something.

We started heading back up West Street, and that's where I ran into the rest of the guys, Lieutenant Becker that I was with, Roy Chelsen, Mike Kehoe and Frank Campagna.

At that point, we went back to the firehouse, and the rest I watched on TV. As soon as we got to the firehouse, the 7 World Trade Center was falling down, so it must have been close to that time in the afternoon.

Q. If you can recall anything else prior to, I have a few questions, if you don't mind.

When you said you were on West Street, and you reported in, you reported in from the south and went north?

A. The rig, we drove. Yeah, I guess the entrance from the battery tunnel is south, and you have to drive past the south tower to get to the north tower.

Q. Right. Did you see any other apparatus?

A. Trying to remember. I think I saw 15 truck in front of the south -- in front of the north tower.

Q. Right. Any others? I'm just trying to -- if you can remember them, fine.

A. Right. I think I saw -- remember seeing 15 and 8 truck, and that was really about it.

Q. Okay.

A. We got there pretty fast. I guess the fire was on the outside of the building, went to second alarm immediately, and we must have been among the first arriving units, I gather.

Q. That's fine.

The guy from ladder 13, as far as you could tell, he was by himself or was the rest of his company making --

A. There were other guys with him. I'm just not sure if he was detailed out to another company or whether it was his company.

Q. And Ladder 9 was pretty much their whole company?

A. Yeah.

Q. That B.C.'s name that you said his name is Picciotto, I believe.

A. Right, that's him.

Q. That's the guy that was with 6 truck in the same staircase?

A. He was in the same staircase. He was above us. I don't know.

Q. He's the one that told you to get out?

A. Right, he was coming down from the floors above us.

Q. You saw Engine 228 after the collapses. Were they responding or leaving?

A. I think they were just responding.

Q. So they were coming towards you?

A. They were getting off their apparatus already. They were coming down the block.

Q. Coming south and you were heading north?

A. Right, on Chambers Street. Well, on West Street, but it was the Chambers Street intersection when I saw them.

Q. Right. All right. You said when you went back with the lieutenant from the truck, they assigned us to go into 7. Who was they? A couple of chiefs?

A. No, they didn't assign us to go into 7 World Trade.

Q. You said they assigned -- you hooked up with the lieutenant from the 11 --

A. 11, and to one of the financial center buildings.

Q. Who is they? Was it a chief or --

A. It must have been a chief. He told us to stay and this corner, and he went to -- I guess it was a bunch of chiefs there together.

Q. Okay. So it could have been the deputy, it could have been --

A. Right. I'm not sure who told him, but then he came back and said they told us to go down there, so we went.

Q. Okay. That's very nice of you to give us this interview. Thank you very much.

A. Thank you.

Q. Do you have anything else to add, let me know?

A. No.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TERENCE RIVERA

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: December 13, 2001. Time is 1630 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual. Firefighter 6th grade, Terence Rivera, assigned to Engine Company 10 of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine Company 4, temporary housing of Engine 10 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Rivera, please tell me what happened on September 11 that you were involved in.

A. I was standing outside the quarters about to go home when the first plane hit. I heard a loud noise and then all of a sudden an explosion, looked up. I couldn't even tell really which tower was hit. There was debris flying. There was a lot of smoke and fire. I ran back inside, let everybody know we knew there was an explosion, grabbed my gear. I went as the extra man on the truck, on Ladder 10, right on the back step, because they already had their morning crew. Everybody was full.

We pulled out of quarters, we made a left and went towards West Street. We stopped on Liberty Street at first to see if we could see which tower exactly was hit. That's when we determined it was the northern most tower. We went around the corner on West Street and the Ladder pulled right up in front of tower -- the north tower. The engine took the hydrant on the middle of West Street.

As I got off the back -- the back step, there were a few individuals that were civilians that were outside that were burnt. There was a -- he wasn't a regular security guard. He had a weapon on him. I don't know if he was FBI or Secret Service and he was trying to put the pants out on one individual that was conscious. His pants were still smoldering. I took the can, fire extinguisher off the truck and then sprayed down the pants on the person that was still conscious.

At that time, I had asked him where did this individual come from. He told me when the plane had hit, a fire ball had shot down the elevator shaft and had blown people out of the lobby.

I proceeded to render care. I went to get oxygen and a stretcher for the person that was on the street while the rest of the companies went inside the building into the lobby. As I got the oxygen and the stretcher, I was just by myself and Engine 55 pulled up, which then I flagged the chauffeur from 55 engine to give me a hand to put the victim on a stretcher.

We did that. Then we stopped the first ambulance that was shooting down West Street coming from -- they were coming up towards South Street ferry side going up north. Then I went -- proceeded back in the building, I grabbed some tools. I went back inside, couldn't find a mask or a radio since I was the extra man and I went back inside. I was heading towards the east staircase, which is where I figured Ladder 10 would be and I saw the chauffeur from Ladder 10 was telling me to go back outside and don't come back in unless you have a mask.

So I went back outside. I spoke with the Engine 55 chauffeur to ask him do you have an extra mask. He said no, but he needed help hooking up to the stand pipe. So it was me, him and another individual that I don't know who it was. It was three of us, because there was a lot of debris falling down and by that time already there was people jumping. So we had one person looking up and two helping hook up to the stand pipe. Trying to do that.

Sometime while we were doing that, that same individual that was -- when we first got there, that was trying to put the pants out, he came over and he is saying to us that it's a terrorist attack. You guys are too close. It's a terrorist attack. So once we got hooked up, I kept that in the back of my mind. Get on trying to get water going.

I'm pulling the supply line, trying to figure out where we are going to hook up to, and 55 Engine showed up. You couldn't really tell where there was a hydrant. I forgot, 10 Engine had hooked up to a hydrant, so the chauffeur of 10 Engine saw me pulling supply line that we relayed from 10.

At some point close to that, they were saying they had too much pressure, so I don't know if they were getting water or they were doing some type of -- 55 Engine chauffeur told Engine 10 that he was getting too much pressure. Then I went -- that same individual, the security or -- he told me to go over to the command post and let them know it's a terrorist attack. There are more planes in the air.

So I went across the street where they were starting to set up. I told them. They said we know. Just stage down by the Financial Center, that driveway down there, that's where everyone was staging. So I went to go back to go find 10 Engine chauffeur to tell him let's go down here. This is where they are staging, and he didn't want to leave the rig. He said, I got to stay by the rig. Just get me some water. So I got him some water and sometime when I was getting the -- put in the back or getting out, that's when the second plane hit. I went inside the rig to escape the debris falling down on us for a few moments.

I came back outside the rig and I was looking for 10 chauffeur. I couldn't find him. I figured it's going to be an extended operation so I didn't want to go back down where they were telling to us stage. I said you know, just ferry, until I find a mask I'm going to bring spare cylinders inside and try to bring spare cylinders up and down the staircase. So I could do something else.

I grabbed two cylinders, went back inside the building and was trying to find anybody from 10 or anybody that I could hook up with, anyone who might have an extra mask. As I went back inside, that's when they were telling us evacuate, the fire command was saying get out of here, so on and so forth.

As I was coming outside, I see a lot of people running towards the Marriott Hotel, I see people running -- everyone was just running. And I hear shh. It sounded like someone was turning on a hydrant and I look up and the first tower was coming down. I proceeded to run up north and I run towards the overpass that connects World Financial Center where they have -- where the high rise rig is at and also -- I think it was Rescue 1 or Rescue 5's vehicles underneath it.

As I run towards it, I know that I'm not going to escape the -- escape it, so I dive under -- I don't know even know which rig it was. I dive under a rig. At the same time it felt like an explosion. I got bounced around underneath the rig. I just kept on crawling, trying to get to the other side. I was thinking that the rig was going to collapse. I got caught up or temporarily pinned. I just kept crawling until I felt like when I was near the end or nearby the bumper, so I could roll out, in case the rig was going to collapse.

I waited a few moments until I felt like all the heavy debris was over, all of the stuff, debris was landed or until everything went quiet. All I could hear was pass alarms and I started pushing debris out from under the rig. I couldn't breathe because I had no mask and I had no radio. I just grabbed my T-shirt, put it over my face and I started crawling in the direction that I last remember going up north, trying to get out of the debris. I'm crawling over. I feel the grass. I have an idea where I'm at. I am going up the incline and I crawl towards the World Financial Center. I break the glass. Eventually I hit -- the glass is still intact, so I break the glass to go inside the Financial Center.

Then EMS, which is staged on Vesey, they see me when I come in and I'm pretty much out of it, out of breath and almost passed out. I just collapsed when I get inside. They come inside and drag me out. Another Firefighter came in right behind me.

I was in the back of the ambulance for about maybe 5 or 10 minutes, trying to get air. I didn't want to go to the hospital because I knew I wasn't severely injured. I had numbness in my right arm, but I knew I was okay and I was going to hook up with two other firefighters. We were going to basically look for people.

They come running around the corner about 5 minutes after that. The other one is coming down. So I jump back out the ambulance in my T-shirt and underwear, run up towards the water. It's getting better, that debris field and that's when I met members -- I saw two members from Engine 10 that were by the railing about to jump in the water. We all were trying to get accountability of who was where and what was going on.

We started walking towards -- I went back to get my bunker gear. We started walking towards the water, towards the launches where one of our members from Ladder 10 was having chest pain and bring him over -- make sure he goes on the ferry. They were ferrying people to Jersey. Not too long after that they were telling us to run again. There is a gas that they can't control, so we run past Stuyvesant High School and then eventually when they set up the next command post, which was in that area. That was it.

Q. Okay, I have some questions. When you first responded, do you know who the truck officer was?

A. Lieutenant Harrell, he was the company officer.

Q. He is okay?

A. No. Dead, both officers.

Q. Yes, I know, Lieutenant Atlas. You said Engine 55 was parked and you relayed from 10. 10 parked in front of the north tower? Did 55 stop before or after?

A. 55 was pretty close on the overpass between the Financial Center, like right by the curb.

Q. They were past 10?

A. Right, they were past 10. They were north of 10.

Q. The staging area across the street, was that across the street or is that in the garage of the tower?

A. It was across the street when the World Financial Center started. It's where the Winter Garden is. The glass is right down there. There was a --

Q. Who was at the command center?

A. I saw Chief Ganci one time when I went over there. They had a lot of companies coming from Brooklyn.

Q. Other companies. Of the other Chiefs you don't recognize?

A. No, I don't remember any of them.

Q. So the World Financial Center overpass was the north overpass from the north tower to just north of the Winter Garden.

A. Between both, right.

Q. When you met the guys from Engine 10 that were going to jump in the water, who were they?

A. There was Mark Dulski and John Schroeder.

Q. And the guy from 10 with chest pains?

A. Serge Pilipczuk.

Q. -- Pilipczuk?

A. Yes. He went to Jersey, from Ladder 10.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: If there is nothing else you would like to add, this concludes the interview, thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEVIN McCABE

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 13, 2001. The time is 3:48 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. Kevin McCabe, Ladder 122.

Q. This is in regards to the events of September 11, 2001. If you would, Kevin, in your own words, just tell us what happened on that date?

A. I was coming to work that morning. Soon after we heard either a second or third alarm transmitted in the Borough of Manhattan. Somebody said the Trade Center was hit by a plane. At the time that didn't make sense to me. I'm thinking what do you mean got hit by a plane. I'm thinking a small commuter plane or something of that nature.

I remember going up to the house watch, seeing it on TV, seeing the smoke issue from what turned out to be the north tower, thinking to myself and the guys, we are going to be going to that. A few of the guys, we went up to the roof of the building, where we have an unobstructed view of the city. It was a crystal clear day. There I was thinking oh, my god, we are going to go to that.

Came downstairs, I had already taken my gear out, but now it was a question of are we going to get a ticket for that and sure enough about, I think it was 8:54, we got a ticket that we were going to respond in to the Brooklyn side of the Battery Tunnel. Some street there. I don't know the name of it.

I remember getting on the rig, got everybody together, we took off. I was driving that day. I remember making the turn off 7th Avenue on to 9th Street. 132 was coming down 9th Street and we met them at the corner and they followed us down to the initial staging area, which was right on the Brooklyn side of the tunnel.

I remember pulling up there by the tunnel and seeing a bunch of units off to the side. We stopped the rig. I remember seeing 105 was there, just from remembering the ticket. There was probably like 10 companies there, a lot of traffic. The guys got off the rig so they could go walk to the side rails so they could still see what was going on. Being on the rig, I didn't have any TV screen, so a lot of the stuff that I experienced early on that day didn't make sense, because I think I remember hearing somebody say soon after that the other building got hit.

Around that time the teleprinter on the rig, the MDT, we got another ticket that told us to respond into the Trade Center. I remember driving through the tunnel. Both tunnels had been shut down. They were just opening up traffic so all the apparatus could get through.

We ended up going through the left tube, the left lane, which was Brooklyn bound, but they had stopped all the traffic. We were going through the tunnel. There was at least an Engine Company in front of us and an Engine Company behind us, but I couldn't see anything more.

As we were going through the tunnel, I remember hearing -- I knew the voice, Captain Vinnie Brunton saying -- he was trying to call somebody saying they are getting a report that there is a bomb in the building, which again didn't make total sense to me because you got some information from people or you just heard like the other building got hit. What do you mean, the building got hit. I'm thinking this whole time that it was an accident, so far it was an accident, buildings got hit.

I remember going through the tunnel. Our procession, the lane that we went through came to what seemed to be at least a solid 5 to 10 minute stop. We didn't know what was going on. As it turned out, a car that was Brooklyn bound had gotten two flat tires, so they had to move some cars out of Manhattan bound traffic in that tube just so we could get around them. I remember driving past and looking down and seeing the guy's car had two flat tires on the drivers side, which I would imagine whoever went through the other tunnel, they actually got through the tunnel a little faster.

Anyway, we come out of the tunnel. I remember as we got up on West Street and we are heading north on West Street. I'm looking ahead. I remember kind of leaning forward and looking up and seeing the smoke in the buildings. I remember seeing what to me looked like road kill in the street. I'm thinking what the hell is that over there, not really knowing what it was, you know, driving around, there was some debris in the street. There were people directing traffic.

I remember at one point seeing what looked like a piece of an airplane. Now at the time when I saw it, I'm thinking oh, that's part of the airplane. But I'm still thinking a much smaller plane. I also see some of this -- what I was thinking at the time looked like road kill, but I remember one time slowing down and leaning up on the steering wheel to look down, and it was an intestine. Clearly that's definitely what I saw. Talking to the guys later on, they saw lots of other carnage that was on the street, but I'm trying to drive the rig [redacted]

As we passed the Liberty Street walkway bridge, we were now looking to try to find a spot on either side of the street, but there was really nowhere for me to tuck the rig in. It seemed like there were tons of units there already. We ended up going north of the Vesey Street walkway bridge, and we ended up pulling off to the left-hand side of the street somewhere, you know, a block or two or some distance past the Vesey Street walkway.

From there we got off the rig. We got all our gear together and we made it a point to -- I said, listen, let's make a point not to get separated. I remember the boss telling the guys, something to the effect that this is going to be a bad day. It was just not going to be a good day.

So as we were walking back, headed back to the command post, which was set up -- I believe it was on the west side of West Street, I guess the American Express building was behind us and we were looking directly at the north tower. From there you could see that building, the Marriott Hotel was to the right, the south tower was behind the Marriott.

I remember looking up, watching, there was smoke pushing from both buildings, but at this time when, you know, I know you are hearing bits and pieces of information but you don't have time to discuss it, get all the facts, like two commercial air liners hit the building.

I don't think I was fully aware of that. I think it was half of -- this is unbelievable what we are watching. A little bit of excitement too, like wow, we are going to be -- [redacted] but we were probably in the command post for probably not more than 5 minutes, maybe a little more. I don't really remember the exact time frame, but I remember while we stood there in these two driveways, looking up at the north tower, and seeing debris coming down and I remember as the debris got closer to the ground, you realized that it was people, because then you started seeing arms and legs and that was, I guess, like watching a train wreck.

You just had to watch. You just couldn't believe what you were watching.

I remember seeing probably from that time frame, 8 to 12 people, where you would have one person coming down, there was a second and a third person on their way down, I just remember it was like cannon balls hitting the ground, boom. Most of them were landing up on I guess there was somewhat of a set back on the front of the building, where they weren't landing on the street, because it was, I guess some sort of a set back. They were landing there.

I remember one person actually hitting a piece of structural steel over a glass canopy and that just disintegrated. Just the most horrific thing I ever saw. But like I said. You watched it in somewhat disbelief, but you just -- I can't believe what I'm watching. I remember the reaction of the guys behind me. Like oh, my god, they are jumping, they are jumping. And somebody saying turn around, don't watch it. I remember just saying, you know, I don't need to watch that, turning my face away and you just hear the pounding, like boom, it was just tremendously loud, like taking a bag of concrete and throwing it in a closed courtyard. Just a loud echo, just boom, boom.

Anyway, I don't remember exactly who was in the command post with us, but I know we went through the tunnel with 105, 132, because we were all stationed. Actually I remember vaguely seeing the 48 Battalion on the Brooklyn side. All these companies I remember seeing on the Brooklyn side. I remember seeing 105's rig, because they got a spot closer to the command post. They actually I think were parked actually just north of the Vesey Street walkway or very close to it. I remember seeing that.

We ended up getting our assignment. We were going to go into the south tower. With that, we started heading south along West Street and we didn't go straight across because with all the debris and people that were coming down, we headed over towards Liberty Street and kind of took some head cover from the walkway bridge. As we crossed over West Street we were still more or less under the Liberty Street walkway, and I know 131, they were behind us, because when we ended up going in the hotel they were right behind us, but we were all going in groups of three or four or five, like looking up to make sure it was clear and then running diagonally across the street and then entering I guess through the restaurant portion of the of the hotel, which is right on the corner of Liberty and West.

We went inside probably 60 or 80 feet and then we came to a stop because there were units in front of us who had come to a stop. It was almost like you got the impression that you are trying to look over the crowd to see who was leading the procession or who was directing traffic ahead. But in my mind it was like well, as soon as the companies in front of us move, that's when we start to move.

Everybody was standing fast, everybody had their gear. I remember civilians that were working in the hotel. Some woman bringing out a bottle of water, a big 5 gallon bottle and she was trying to pour cups. There was a desk off to the side. I said why don't you put that down on the desk there. Somebody brought out cases of water. I remember taking a case of water and walking it ahead and putting it down for some of the guys that were maybe 20, 30 feet ahead of us.

I don't remember seeing head pieces of the guys in front of us, but some of the guys that we were with, one of the guys who actually spent a year in 105, said he saw 105, they were just some distance in front of us, where you could still see them, but they were also standing fast like I said. You weren't moving because there were guys in front. You just assumed that they were going in the same place. You didn't make a push to go through the crowd.

Sometime after that, we were probably there for another say, 7, 8 minutes, then there was talk in the group with us and 131 and whoever the company was in front of -- I don't remember, but saying, I don't know if we are in the right place.

I remember walking. Now at this point I had taken off my turn out coat and my mask and laid it down I figured because I'm sweating my nuts off at this point. I said when they start moving, we will grab our gear. We will go through. Somebody also said it's like an hour walk to 70. We just figured like, wow, we were going to be going up to just try to evacuate some people.

I remember walking straight ahead more towards the front of the lobby of the Marriott and I grabbed the maintenance guy and I asked him where are we right now. He said you guys are in like the restaurant or bar area of the hotel, which was where we were standing, but the actual physical bar restaurant would be between a wall. We were in an area that was probably like 20 feet wide. To our left would be West Street, straight ahead would be the north tower. To the right the south tower. Behind us was the door that we came in. I guess we were in like a corridor that would take you to the lobby and through the wall that was to our immediate right, the restaurant bar area was directly behind that and the doorway to get in there was more or less -- the doorway that we came in, if you made a sharp right, that would take you into the restaurant bar area.

He told us where we were and I asked the guy how do we get to the south tower. He said go straight through the lobby more or less. He said you go through those double doors and you make a right and it will take you back to the south tower. I remember asking him, are we going to be inside the whole time. He said yes, there is like a tunnel or some overhead that you won't be exposing yourself to debris that's falling down.

I remember telling our Lieutenant and the boss of 131, I said Lou, we are not in the right place. We have to go through this crowd. We have to go through those doors. With that we put our gear on and two of our guys had gone to the bathroom. You turn back, where are they? They went into the bathroom, which was actually in the bar restaurant there. They said that when they were in the bathroom there was a ton of guys in there. Some guys who have heard this story thought I can't believe they went to the bathroom, but you were standing fast. You were more or less staging. There was nobody going anywhere.

Once they came out, we said we are not in the right place. It was only a matter of a minute when they showed up saying we are not in the right place, get your gear, we are going through. Shortly after they came out and got their gear on, we were ready to go straight ahead, you heard a roar, some sort of a vibration, like a vrr vrr vrr, getting louder and louder.

My first thought to myself, I live down in Rockaway so I have heard planes coming overhead for years. It sounded like a plane getting closer and louder and louder and next thing you know, you felt the building shook. At that moment, it was I think every man for themselves. I think I might have heard somebody say it's coming down or something.

But at the time I was facing straight, which I was facing north in the hotel lobby. To my left was West Street and I remember thinking to myself I'm going to head towards that perimeter wall and there was a desk somewhat behind me. I remember diving to my left and back between the perimeter wall and a desk. I remember hearing crashing coming down.

There was dust starting to blow in, because I remember starting to feel stuff in my mouth. Trying to spit that out and I remember having problems breathing, because there was just so much crap blowing into my face. I remember just lying there on the floor thinking I can't breathe too well right now because I got all this crap in my mouth and I'm just waiting for something to fall on me and then I'm just going to sit here and I'm going to suffocate.

Once all the crashings, you know -- after that went silent, I could hear guys behind me inside the doorway where we had just come in. I guess there was some sort of a fire gate or something or a security gate, I'm not sure. That had somewhat come down and closed and it was only open like 3, 4, feet. There was a bunch of guys that were trying to lift it up. I remember getting up. I still -- I had my mask on at this point, because just when we were getting ready to go, I had all the gear on, I had a Halligan, an axe, my mask, getting ready to parade straight ahead.

I remember turning my light on and looking. It was pitch black. You had a haze of dust looking around for the guys that I was just standing with. I was able to finally Lieutenant McLetchie and John Leanza. At this point we were missing 3 guys. Vitiello, Koyles and Kasey were not there. It was just like, where are they?

I remember walking around and just kind of doing a quick look around trying to look through the dust and the darkness. Looking straight ahead I could see that it was pretty much from what I remember sealed off. That part of the lobby was now blocked with whatever. Talking to Kasey, not Kasey, Leanza and McLetchie, I said I don't know where Dave and the other guys are.

So I remember walking back towards the guys that were lifting the gate up and they were trying to lift it up, but it was open like 3, 4, maybe 5 feet. I remember going back and grabbing like a podium and wedging it there. That way the gate wouldn't come down any further. I was able to walk out the same door that we had walked into. At this point, I still don't know the south tower came down. I'm convinced that up until that afternoon I was saying I was in the hotel when it got hit by a plane.

I remember going outside. Now to my left down Liberty Street in the direction of 10 house, I remember seeing parked cars that were on the same side of the street as us and they were covered in rubble, probably just higher than their front ends, because I could just still make out their flashing headlights with the alarms going off.

I remember looking south on West Street, past, on the side of the Liberty Street walkway bridge where Ladder 113's rig was. I remember that was a ball of fire. I didn't know it was 113's rig at the time. I remember there was a ball of fire over there and I was like wow, what's burning over there.

There was an Engine Company hooked up right outside the hotel where we walked in, I guess hooked up to a hydrant and hooked up to the stand pipe. I don't remember what engine it was, but I remember there was another guy, a fireman, he had blood on his face and he was trying to force open some of the -- I guess EMS compartments on the rig.

I tried to give him a hand, we couldn't force them. I remember there was other debris burning in the area of the doorway. I remember it was one of those mats that you would hang on an elevator when you were moving. One of those was -- a piece of that burning by the doorway. So I remember getting the can with this other guy off the engine. I remember to get it off, you had to climb over some debris and kind of force it out. Like it was kind of wedged in there.

But there was a lot of debris on it, but like I said, I still didn't know what had happened. I knew there was a mess out there. There wasn't a lot of people. Like I said it didn't make sense. A lot of this stuff, it was later in the day when I found out what happened, I remembered. I was like yes, come to think of it, there wasn't a lot of activity on West Street. It was like a white powder. I don't remember climbing over a lot of debris, but me and this guy, we operated, I don't know, maybe 10, 15 minutes.

In that time, McLetchie and John Leanza came out of the hotel. We had a little meeting I guess in the street between the Liberty Street walkway bridge and the entrance to the hotel where we had gone in. They said they had a guy trapped. It's been a while. Now I'm not sure if it was the boss of 55 or the boss of 58 Engine they had trapped. I guess he identified himself. They said we needed some other guys to get him out.

With that, some other guys came out from the direction of Liberty Street walkway bridge. I believe it turned out to be 113. We had a little meeting. They were saying we got a guy trapped somewhere in the hotel in the direction more towards the lobby area. I remember the boss telling me and Johnny C, go in with them and try to get him out. I told the boss why don't you go back because you know where he is. I'm going to head back to the rig, because that was one of the things we said, if we get separated at any time, that's going to be our meeting, go back to the rig.

Just backtracking, when we were still in the hotel, I remember I was able to get in touch with Dave Koyles. I was able to get him on the radio. I got his voice, but what we didn't do is -- I don't remember there being a lot of radio traffic, but there was enough where I couldn't get a conversation out of him. I couldn't -- he didn't -- I couldn't get enough information for him to tell me where he was, or for him to tell me that the other two guys that we were missing were with him. So I had radio contact with him at that point so I knew he was alive, but I didn't have any contact with the can man, and I think it was Dave, I think he had the roof.

Now after working with the guy on this Engine Company, I remember walking, I was now up on West Street. There were 3 of those big pieces of steel that were stuck in the ground that you see in all the pictures. I remember walking around that and looking at those and thinking if they fall over they can reach me.

With that I saw in the background was the Marriott Hotel, and my first thought was that looks like the Oklahoma City building, because I remember the whole middle of it just seemed like it was carved out.

Somewhere right around that time I got a Mayday. I heard a Mayday transmit. Mayday, Mayday, Mayday, Ladder 4 with a Mayday. Nobody answered it. The Mayday came again. I answered it. I said go ahead with your Mayday. He said I'm trapped. I was knocked unconscious. I don't know where I am. He gave me his name, it was Mike Brennan, because I said what was your last known location. He said he didn't know. He was knocked unconscious but he was trapped.

I don't even know what I said to him after that. I remember just looking around thinking I got 2 or 3 guys missing. I don't know even know where to begin. There was just nobody around. I just felt helpless at that point. You think that's one of the things I should not think about now and again, but, I started to walk north along West Street heading back to the rig. I figured at some point when I see a Chief or I will tell somebody that I got a Mayday from a guy.

Like I said, I had no clue where the guy was. I kept walking. Thinking back, it was white powder. I don't remember climbing over mountains of debris, but I remember, I guess, stepping over stuff. I got back, I passed the north tower. I got to the Vesey Street walkway. I passed that, I got to our rig, which was again, I don't remember exactly how far, but it was some distance past.

I got to the rig, the guys weren't there. Also with this, back at the hotel, McLetchie, Leanza and the guys from 113, they ended up going back into the hotel to try to get -- I think it was either the boss of 58 Engine or 55. I have to ask them. I don't remember now.

So they are in there, I go back to the rig. They are not -- our guys aren't there. So I continue walking north, because I think I see guys in the distance. I guess I remember seeing guys. So I start walking, but I also remember seeing just like a few straggler firemen walking, but nobody is coming together and saying we got to do this, because I think I was half shell shocked and I guess a lot of other people were.

Shortly after as I'm walking, you hear another loud boom. I hear guys behind me, I guess I hear some commotion behind me and I turn around and I see guys running towards me. Again I think I hear somebody say it's coming down. I remember turning, looking and looking up and seeing the dust cloud opening up overhead.

With that I got that sick feeling. I am just like all the wind is out of you. Saying like holy shit. Throw the Halligan down that I had in my hand and I start running as fast as I can heading north. I'm reaching for the shoulder straps. I'm thinking I don't have much time here. I'm going to have to take shelter. I'm passing rigs, I'm passing cars. I got the waist strap undone.

Now I'm just running. I just have my helmet and my bunker gear. I passed a police car I think it was. I duck in behind the back of the police car. I'm thinking to myself, don't climb under the car because when it gets hit the car is going to lurch. I don't want it landing on my back. I just got on my hands and knees against the back of the car, just put my head down. More or less waited to get crushed again.

Then it was silent. Then you just heard, crrrrrrr, just a rush of wind getting louder and louder and everything is just blowing in. Now you got hit with the dust again, just a lot worse than it was inside, because now there was I guess, there was nothing really protecting you from the dust, but I remember that blowing like halfway down your throat to the point where you are really gagging on it. But I'm still waiting for heavier pieces of debris to start falling around me, which didn't happen,.

Now it goes pitch black. I remember hearing someone, I guess it would be to my left, saying help me, help me, I don't know who it was, I didn't really find that person. I remember standing up again, it's pitch black. It's like I don't even know -- I know something fell down, but I still don't know the building completely fell down. I guess at that time I'm thinking maybe a portion of the top fell down.

When I got up, I continued walking north. I guess I ended up on Chambers Street, so I was walking in that direction and I think it was at that time, I remember helping an EMS worker put one of their personnel on one of the carry chairs. They needed a hand carrying her. I remember walking and stepping over some debris, you know, to kind of help walk. I remember feeling exhausted.

Somebody else walked up and I remember only carrying this person for not too long, grabbing someone and saying, you got to help her. I got to go -- at that point I was thinking I got to see if I can find the guys I'm with. At that point I'm thinking I'm the only guy from the company going home. Because I know the other two guys were in the hotel. Two guys, I don't know where they were, one guy I had radio contact briefly before the second one came down.

I ended up getting up to Chambers Street, still not being fully aware of what was going on. I remember telling guys I was in the hotel when a plane hit. Within the next hour or so, the irons man, Leanza, and McLetchie, I got them on the radio. I got Koyles, the first guy I had gotten radio contact with after the first building came down. I had him on the radio. But two of the other guys were still no contact with them.

I guess within the next 4 hours, we accounted for all the guys. One guy ended up after the first building came down, Kasey ended up getting on a boat and going to a Jersey hospital. Dave Vitiello, he ended up making his way up to Chambers and West Street so everybody was together. I remember sitting there talking and when I said to somebody that I was in the hotel when a plane hit, he said what do you mean the plane hit. He goes both buildings had been hit already. I said what do you mean. I said what noise were we hearing. What we heard was the noise of that south tower coming down.

At that point we had gotten word that all our guys were accounted for. We started hearing stories that some guys were missing. Now before we got verification that Kasey was in the hospital, I remember telling the boss -- now this was probably, I don't know if it was an hour or two later, I said I'm going to take a walk back over to where we were.

But at this point I guess I was kind of gun shy from walking down West Street. I said I'm going to walk down along the water and then I'm going to come up like Liberty and see if I can see anything.

I remember when I came up Liberty to West Street, now I could see this devastation that I definitely didn't see to that magnitude after the first building came down, but now there was just mountains of steel. I remember seeing what turned out to be 10 Truck flipped on its side, kind of twisted. I remember walking across the bumper of a TAC unit, thinking that there were guys that I knew in TAC, who actually didn't make it. I remember walking across the bumper of one of the TAC units, climbing up on some steel and just figuring that if Kasey was around maybe I would see him.

I ran into some guys from other companies that I knew. What was left of the hotel was -- what I had seen of the hotel was no longer standing. It was just one portion, I guess of what would be exposure 4 side still standing, I guess looking at it. I'm on the west side of West Street now, looking across at the hotel. I guess the one end of the hotel closest to Liberty that was, I guess, you know, the only remaining portion of the hotel that was still standing.

Now Leanza and McLetchie had said they left the hotel because they needed a generator, because the power tools, the battery operated tools that they were using to try to get the boss out, I think it was 58, but whatever, they ran out of -- the battery power went dead so they went looking for a generator. They said when they came out, they were now between the hotel and the Liberty Street walkway when the north tower came down. They ended up running over to the base of the pedestrian walkway and they took shelter at the base of one of those columns. Fortunately they survived also.

After that I ended up going back over to like Chambers and West. Stayed there for the next couple of hours, wanting to do something, but it was just -- at this point my eyes were starting to bother me. Probably around 8 o'clock that night I guess it was, 8:30, me, McLetchie, and I'm not sure who else, a few of us ended up taking a ride to the hospital, because that afternoon I remember I had my eyes flushed like three or four times at the Stuyvesant High School and then ended up going to the hospital to have them checked again, where I had my eyes flushed again.

I remember Gregg McLetchie, he had a bump on his head attended to, went to Bellevue Hospital, ended up coming back to quarters probably about 11, 11:30. For the first time saw it on TV, the actual planes hitting the buildings and actually seeing them collapse to the point where they just completely pancaked. I said like -- I couldn't believe that the buildings came down, because I remember sitting there in the afternoon looking up at the smoke telling people what's left of the buildings must be up in the smoke, because I don't see anything.

Then some other things made sense. Like when I came out of the hotel, now I realize why it seemed like it was so quiet, because nobody was left there. Anybody that was in the command post I guess they got blown down the driveways and they probably hadn't dusted themselves off yet.

The piece of airplane that I originally saw coming out of the tunnel, now it made sense. At the time it didn't make sense, but that piece of an airplane was way too big for the type of plane that I envisioned hitting this building. It's like -- you know, it's a jumbo jet. Come to think of it, that piece of plane looked like it crushed half that car and I remember that first piece of intestine that I saw, I was thinking at that moment that must be the pilot of the plane.

Then I find out it's all this and I realize oh, my god, all these people got thrown out of the building and the noise I heard was the sound of the tower coming down and the other building was coming down. I think that was pretty much my day.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay Kevin, thanks for the interview, the time is 4:21 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEVIN DUGGAN

Interview Date: December 14, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 14, 2001. The time is 1:24 p.m.

I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER DUGGAN: Firefighter 4th Grade Kevin Duggan, assigned to Engine 1, was on rotation with Engine 210 on September 11.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: And this interview is in regard to the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you would, Kevin, just tell us in your own words what happened on that day.

A. I came in that morning for a day tour. I checked the rig. We were sitting in the kitchen having breakfast, and we heard over the voice alarm Brooklyn announcing the second alarm at the World Trade Center, and at that point, we turned on the TV to see what was going on.

We saw a lot of smoke coming out of the World Trade Center, and then tone alarms went off, and we were sent -- 210 was sent to World Trade Center. We were in the quarters of 211 and 119 at that time, because 210's quarters were being redone.

So we were over near towards in Williamsburg basically. We responded, and I never saw the ticket, so I wasn't sure if we were responding to the incident or if we were responding -- if we were getting relocated, and so we headed -- I figured we would take the Brooklyn Bridge, and we headed in that direction, but apparently had been dispatched to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, and so we went past the bridge. We were taking Park Avenue right under the BQE. So we went around and passed the bridge and were heading towards the tunnel when the fellow sitting on the other side of the rig saw the south tower explode. He saw an explosion.

He told us the building just exploded. We looked over and we saw the south tower, a lot of orange and a lot of smoke. So we continued towards the Battery Tunnel. There was a lot of traffic. Took us awhile to get there.

We got to the tunnel. We saw -- I think it was 105 or 132. They were right ahead of us, and we came in together with them. The tunnel was backed up. There was a car with a flat tire, so we were delayed. Actually, the captain of 210 gave a report that 210 would be delayed due to traffic.

We came through the tunnel finally, and we stopped because we got out of the tunnel right at West Street just when you come out of the tunnel, and we had a detail from 219 with us that day, and he wanted some water. So he hopped out of the rig and went to get water, which was in one of the back compartments.

We actually thought that's why we were hopping off the rig. I thought we were hopping off the rig, but the captain waved us get back on, but the detail grabbed the water jug so we could have some water, and as we were there, 279 went past us while we stopped and put the water jug on the rig.

Then we pulled up, went up a little further along West Street, past the first pedestrian bridge, so that's Liberty Street, went past Liberty Street, and somewhere between the Liberty Street and 2 World Financial Center, we stopped and hopped out of the rig.

The command post was in front of a parking garage at 2 World Financial Center. So we got off the rig, grabbed our roll-ups and our spare cylinder, and we reported to command post. As we were heading that way, I saw Joe Falco from Engine 1 working with the chauffeur from 65 engine hooking up to a hydrant, and I didn't say hello to him. I just walked past him.

We reported to the command post where Chief Ganci and Feehan were, and the captain reported in, and they told us to stand fast. This was right in the mouth of the parking garage. So we were standing there. They put the engines on one side, on the north side of the ramp, and the trucks were on the south side.

When I was standing there, I saw 24 truck was there, and so I said hello to the guys from 24 truck. I asked them were they sent on the third alarm. They said they were sent on the fifth, and one of the guys told me to be careful in there, and I said I will, and at that point, people started jumping. So there was a lot of debris had already been falling.

At this point, there were jumpers, so when the people started jumping, they tried to move us back into the garage so that nothing would hit us on the head, even though we were far enough away on the west side of West Street. They still said all right, just move back inside so nothing -- when you're standing there no one -- we don't want anyone getting hurt.

So in the tunnel there, we were just in the mouth of it. We were there. It was 210. I saw 211, 202, 34 engine, 91 engine, 44 engine. I saw Joe Angelini from Rescue 1. He was wearing a different helmet, and in my mind I was just, like, when did Joe transfer to Rescue 1, not realizing that he was just grabbed a helmet from somewhere else and just wearing that.

So we were just watching people. People were jumping. The fire was -- a tremendous volume of fire. Our captain said he didn't think we'd be able to put out the fire because of the volume of fire versus the volume of water. He said the sprinklers were going to be out, the standpipes were going to be out. So we were there.

They told us there was a captain -- I think he was a captain -- who was a liaison between the command post and where we were, and he told us gear down, take off your bunker coats. It might be a little while before you go to work. So we were standing there. I took off my mask and jacket and put it all down. Again, just inside the mouth of the garage. They wanted everyone inside the garage.

At that point, I saw Captain Brethel from 24 truck, who was just a little to the north of the command post. The driveway ramps down. He would have been -- he was above where the driveway ramps down. He was on the street level. He was calling all the off-duty members together so he was trying to -- I found out later that he was off duty. He had driven Father Mike down.

So he was calling the off-duty members together so I guess he was trying to get a company of guys together, and that was just to the north of that driveway where the rest of the command post was, where the other chiefs were. So we were standing fast.

I saw a couple of guys that I knew, said hello. We weren't sure what we were going to be told to do. Just at that point we still -- not realizing what could we do and what were we going to do, but I did expect we were going to be sent in at some point, and so we geared down.

My captain actually was standing -- he had taken his bunker pants down to his knees, and we were standing there, and then we just heard this real loud roar. We looked up and we could see the south tower. Looked like the middle of it was just exploding out, and at that point, one of the officers just said, "Run," and we were just turned and started running into the garage, so I just turned and ran in.

I was just -- I didn't think it was a great move to be running into the building like that, but there was nowhere else to go, and I was just thinking, like, holy shit, we're going to be buried in here, thinking the tower would probably fall over towards us.

I remember thinking I left my -- I had taken off my mask, and when we started to run, I left my mask down. I don't even have my mask, but we just got real lucky and went right to the back of the tunnel or the parking garage and opened up a few doors.

There was nothing, nowhere to go. We opened up one door, and there was a stairwell, so we all just piled into the stairwell and -- so it was basically all the engine companies that had been standing there made it into this tunnel, made it into this stairwell.

Then once we got into this stairwell, we weren't sure -- we wanted to get out of the stairwell, and there was a door to go upstairs was locked, and they were trying to find a maintenance man. We were looking for some tools, looking to see if we could pop the lock, but at that point one of the guys just pushed the back door.

There was a back door, and he opened it up and just showed us what was out there. It was pitch black, so we closed the door. It was the emergency exit. So we just waited there for -- the radio was complete silence, couldn't hear anything. There was nothing coming over the radio.

We were waiting there. We didn't know what to do, but we figured just wait a few minutes. They opened up the door again maybe five minutes later, and it wasn't as dark, but it was still pretty bad, so then at that point there were a few captains who had gotten together, and they said, "All right. If it lightens up a little more. Then we'll just get out of here."

So the third time they opened the door, it looked like it was snowing out, and they said, "All right, let's go." So we just went straight out towards the water, because that's where we ended up being. We were in the -- we found out afterwards we were in the 2 World Financial Center and through the parking garage.

That leads you right out towards the marina there, the harbor. We got out and everyone just kind of went on their own. Some guys went south. Some guys went straight to the water. Some guys went north.

I looped around towards the north, and because it seemed -- I guess it just looked like it was whiter up that way, and went north. Then the next thing was, was trying to find the rest of the members. I saw the guys from 34 engine, but not 210. Then I found one guy from 210, who was the detail, and then I found the captain of 210, and then the nozzle man of 210. I had back up that day.

So we had everybody, except the chauffeur, but the chauffeur wasn't in the tunnel, because he had been by the rig. He was hooking up. So we weren't sure what happened to the chauffeur at that point, and my captain -- because he had pulled down his bunker pants got knocked down when we started running originally, and he was a little bit disoriented, and he had gotten hit with the dust cloud more heavily than the rest of us, so his mouth was all dry and everything.

We were trying to get him some water. He was very concerned about calling his wife, because his wife -- he had been talking to his wife right before we got dispatched. So he was looking for a pay phone and basically just walked around.

As we were heading north, we were looking for some water, trying to get -- we had our crew, and there was a pay phone there, so the captain called his wife, let her know he was all right. Then one of the other guys wanted to call his girlfriend because she worked -- she was a court officer, and he wanted to make sure she was all right, and so he made that, and actually he called his parents, and at that point we were together. We were trying to decide what to do next.

My captain didn't want us to head back towards the north tower, because he said that it was a terrorist attack, and we couldn't be sure what was going to happen next, and we still hadn't -- we were still very -- we had gone around, around the -- we were probably up getting near Vesey Street maybe at this point. No, we probably hadn't reached Vesey Street. Somewhere right around there. We were still right by maybe 4 World Financial Center, because we were in the grassy area there, and then the north tower, we heard the rattling, and we saw the north tower collapse.

The dust cloud came at us again. So we just headed north and again we got separated a little bit, and we just kept -- we just headed north as the dust cloud came towards us, so we headed north to stay out of it as much as we could. We still got hit with it, but by heading north we were getting away from it rather than -- the wind was blowing south, so once that had passed, we realized it was just, again, it was like the snow was falling, so we headed north to try to regroup, got up past Stuyvesant High School, ran into Chief Collins from the 31 battalion, which was our battalion, and he was a little disoriented, as well.

So there was a guy with some oxygen, so we gave him some oxygen. We walked north out towards the street and out towards West Street there. At that point, we were looking for -- just regrouping, and at that point, there was a battalion chief from the safety battalion, who was disoriented.

He broke an ankle and looked like he was in shock, and so he was just kind of wandering. We got -- he was right next to an engine company, so we pulled a board off the engine company, and there was a woman there who -- of course I asked if she was a nurse. It turns out she was a doctor, but she helped us.

We put him on a board, and there were a couple of ambulances there, and put him on the board. He was giving my captain the information for his -- wanted someone to call his wife, and he was concerned about -- there were guys from the safety battalion in the building, and I think he might have given the name of one of the firefighters who he was with, and yeah, he was pretty much in a state of shock.

So he was put on the board, put him in the ambulance, and my captain who had been knocked down and disoriented himself said he was going to the hospital with the chief. He said I could come along, but I said no, I want to stay, because Chief Collins from the 31 battalion was -- I thought he was a little disoriented, and I wanted to stay with him, and so I stayed with him, and he didn't want to go to the hospital in the ambulance.

At that point, we met up -- I met up with the other guys from 210, but not the chauffeur, still the nozzle man and the detail from 219, and then we were pretty much by ourselves at that point. So then we saw 211. Since we were in the same quarters with 211, we knew all the guys and their captain, Captain Clark, so we kind of fell in with them, and that was our crew for the rest of the day.

210 went in with 211, and so at that point there was a report of a gas leak. They told to us move north again, so we went north again, and we realized everything was all right to go back, so we went back then. We reported in to the command post they had set up on West Street. This is after both towers had collapsed.

We were told -- we were in Group 7, and we'd be put to work in a little white. So we were just all in the staging area right by Stuyvesant High School, so we could go in and use the bathroom, whatever. We were there for an hour or so.

Then at that point, since both 210 and 211, we had everybody except the chauffeurs, who we hadn't accounted for, the captain of 211 wanted to go find his chauffeur, but they had parked on the east side, so we went over by on the Church Street side. So that's how we headed back that way to go to find 211's rig and see if their chauffeur was all right.

We were able to finally -- took us a while to walk over, get down that way, and we found 211's rig and the 211 recall guys. They said that their chauffeur was injured, but he was all right. He ended up with a broken arm, and he was in a bit of shock, but he would be all right.

So then we were working with the 211 guys, and the recall, and the nozzle man from 210. I was still concerned about the chauffeur from 210. I thought I heard his voice on the radio at one point that he was working with somebody pumping water, and so I was pretty sure he was alive, but we wanted to verify that.

So we walked back towards where 210's rig was. So we went back north again, went all the way back maybe up to Murray Street, came back around, and then came back down West Street. We actually ran into the 210 guys from the 210 recall and found the 210 chauffeur, and it was good that we found him, because he thought that we were gone, and we thought -- I thought he was still alive, because I thought I heard his voice on the radio, but he didn't think we were alive. He thought we had gone in.

So once we found him, and then we were able to -- everyone was all right. We realized that everyone from 210 was all right, and that's when we started getting reports of how many other companies were missing. 207 was missing. 226 was missing, in the 31 battalion, and I heard -- I had run into guys, a couple of guys from 1 engine, who had been in the north tower, and then I got a report afterwards that Lieutenant Desperito from one engine didn't make it, and I heard Father Mike hadn't made it, and I heard Captain Brethel, who I had seen that day, he didn't make it.

The next day I found out about Mike Weinberg who was off duty, that he didn't make it, and Steve Belson as well, and Orio Palmer, the chief of the 7th battalion, but it was really -- after the collapses, we never operated.

We were standing fast, and we helped out some company hook up to a standpipe somewhere. 119 was throwing some water on it, but when we went back, they already had some machinery in there. It was just weird.

So then we just spent -- after I made it with 210, we just spent the rest of the time looking to see who else we could find, and digging or anything, and that was it. But then sometime that night, I guess around midnight, we started heading back to Brooklyn. And that's about it.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay, Kevin, thanks. That's the conclusion of the interview. It's 146 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER SEAN BROWN

Interview Date: December 14, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 14, 2001. The time is 12:07 p.m.

I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, safety battalion, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER BROWN: Firefighter Sean Brown, Class 6, Engine 16.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: This is in regards to the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you would, Sean, in your own words, just tell us what happened that day.

A. Well, about 0845 hours, the morning of September 11, 2001, just about to come off tour. Lieutenant mentioned to me that might be staying a little later than usual today, due to the fact of a report of a plane hitting the north tower of the World Trade Center, and the lieutenant said to start gearing up.

Approximately at 0850 hours, 16 was called, was called first due on the third alarm. At that point, myself, Ronnie Cifu, Lieutenant Mickey Kross, Firefighter Paul Lee, Firefighter Timmy Marmion, Firefighter Pete Felluca and myself, Sean Brown, firefighter, Grade 6, responded to the scene.

We arrived via Church Street, tried to make the left turn onto Liberty Avenue, but could not. Liberty Street, excuse me. We could not gain access to the south tower, so we ended up backing up, staying on Church, and at that point, that was about 0900 hours.

When we started to back out, back from Liberty Street to Church, due to we couldn't gain access, the second plane hit the south tower, showering debris everywhere. So we proceeded northbound onto Church and ended up parking the rig on Park Place and making our way southbound towards the north tower, which would be Building 1.

So we made entry to the World Trade Center with our roll-ups and extra cylinders, and we at that point went into the lobby, where they were just setting up the command post, and that would be approximately ten after nine.

At that point, we were met by Ray Downey, Chief Ganci, Commissioner Feehan, and Father Judge and Tommy Von Essen, the commissioner. We were then teamed up with Engine 1, asked to proceed up to the 23rd Floor in order to set up communications.

We were with a couple of ESU cops, and one of the -- I would say officers from the Port Authority, so our orders were to go up with engine one with three roll-ups, extra cylinders, and set up communications, and then proceed up to the 70th Floor.

We were warned that whoever was on the nozzle that day would be sucked out of the -- possibility of being sucked out of the building, but they said it would be about an hour walk up, but our main job was to set up communications.

We were on the 23rd Floor, set up communications, when we heard a rumble. I would say we were on the 23rd for about five to ten minutes. The building shook. Lights went out. Asked my officer if -- you know, what happened, and he thought maybe the top of the building got blown off.

I turned to him and I said, "What do we do?" And some chief appeared. Don't know who the chief was. Chief from the department appeared, said, "Start making your way out of the building. The south tower just collapsed. A third plane is coming towards the north tower."

At that point, we gathered up all our gear and were ordered to leave the roll-ups and start proceeding downward.

At that point, the team became separated. We were all together. A minute later everybody was separated, so it was myself and Firefighter Felluca. We started to head downstairs, and at that point Lieutenant Kross wasn't with us, became separated from us, so I ran -- we were at the 19th at that point, ran back up to 23rd to look for him, but to no avail. Radioed him. Couldn't get him.

So we started to head down. We ran into another officer from a Manhattan company that knew Lieutenant Kross, said he was starting to head down. We proceeded downward, ran into 110 truck. That was the first company from Brooklyn we ran into, told them what we heard, and then we heard a transmission over the radio.

The Maydays started coming in to vacate the north tower. So as we started going down, we started running into Brooklyn companies and telling them to -- that we were told to vacate the building.

At that point, we proceeded down. Most of the civilians -- we didn't see any civilians at that point. It was mainly firefighters. Made it down to the lobby. There were about maybe 30 firefighters that were with us. Made it to the lobby, and the lobby was like a war zone. All the windows were blown out, and the command post wasn't there.

We proceeded out onto West Street and proceeded to start walking north, and the building was a little listed when we came out, and we made it to the corner of West and Vesey when the building came down. That was myself, and Firefighter Tim Marmion and Firefighter Pete Felluca.

At that point, attention was called upon me to go back and get -- there was a chief that they pulled out, so I ran over to grab that chief, and proceeded to move to pull him towards the ambulance. We got him the help he needed.

I have medical training, so I figured I would do my best to help him out, and put him in the ambulance. Then the building totally collapsed, and I would say I was on West and Barclay. The guys from the company were on West and Vesey.

I radioed to the company, and they -- their precise words were, "Run, run for your life," and me, the chief and some ESU cop that jumped in to help me dragged him to an ambulance, put him in an ambulance, took off and proceeded to get caught in the dust cloud.

Had all my gear on, had my hood on, and I still was wearing my mask at the time of the dust cloud. Call it luck, as you may, chief. Can't tear it off my back, though. It's free.

Proceeded to realize before I got hit with the cloud I was walking northbound on West, and I was about West and Barclay, proceeded to keep walking west, and got caught in the cloud and ran into one of the chief's that got caught in the cloud, but didn't have -- he was so far back from the scene, didn't figure he'd get caught in the dust cloud, so he didn't have his mask, and helped him out, pulled him out of the scene, too.

So we shared some air, and at that point after the dust cleared we went back and started looking. I got on the radio and started looking for my team and ended up meeting back at Vesey and West where we originally were together, and after that was just all started looking for people. That's it.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Great, Sean. Thanks for the interview. The time is 12:16 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER SIDNEY PARRIS

Interview Date: December 14, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 14, 2001. The time is 1:19 a.m.

I am Battalion Chief Robert Burns, safety battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER PARRIS: Firefighter Parris, 1st Grade, Engine 21.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: With regards to the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you would, just tell us in your own words what happened on that date.

A. We responded first on the 6th alarm, and we loaded up extra bottles, everything we think we might need, extra Scott bottles and oxygen, in case there were a lot of injured members and pedestrians.

We left quarters. We got downtown in the vicinity of the World Trade Center. We tried to get as close as possible to supply the building, supply the siamese. Came down West, and I made a left onto Vesey Street, and I was -- I parked the rig by a fire hydrant in front of the post office, and supplied the World Trade Center across the street right near West and Vesey.

I was standing on the corner of West and Vesey by the post office as the company went to the command post. There we saw 28 engine, and I think it was 33 engine. Their pumpers were in the same vicinity, and the three chauffeurs were supplying the siamese in that particular intersection.

After supplying the building, I was listening to the transmissions and standing at that corner. We began to just see people jumping left and right constantly, two-minute interval, maybe a minute and a half.

After that, FBI agent came down the block. He identified some landing gear that was in front of our rig, asked me to make sure no pedestrians came down the block to interfere with any type of metals and debris that were there, because they were trying to identify to put the pieces back together for the plane.

At that particular time, one member from here that was detailed to 7 truck had just come down, because 7 truck left before he got to their quarters. He took my Scott bottle out of the cab at one of the compartments, and from there I left West and Vesey, the actual corner, I left there by the parking garage, to close the compartment that he left open and to put my shoes on the rig.

At that particular time, I saw another FBI agent come by, who was starting to log some of the things. He was on his transmission, talking to whoever. They told me that another plane was in the area, and we thought that -- the chauffeurs -- some of the guys that were out in the street thought it was a third plane.

At that particular time, I walked to the corner of Church, because I heard the plane, but I couldn't see anything. Afraid it was going to hit the same part of the twin tower and make it topple and start a domino effect. As I got to the corner of Church and Vesey, that's when the building, the south tower, came down right on the corner, and from that point on, it was like mayhem for me.

I ran towards the Brooklyn Bridge, in that vicinity, just running. I got maybe about three, four blocks. It was difficult for me to run, and I was slowing down, and a plain clothes cop, police officer, was running by, grabbed my turnout coat and was telling me to keep running.

From that point on, I saw someone open a door, and we just dove inside the door. After the dust settled, came outside, and I heard transmissions from 21 engine standpipe, the guy that had the control. I heard him calling, but he couldn't hear my transmissions to him, so I was making my way back to the scene, and I was hearing a lot of members.

I heard 39 chauffeur. I heard him calling his unit. And 16 truck, he was getting no feedback. In trying to make my way back, I can't remember what street we were on, but it was a bunch of cars, buses, mail trucks, Fire Department, all types of vehicles that was on fire before you can actually make it to the scene, so there was no pressure, no hydrant pressure.

The responding companies that were coming in, we started breaking windows or trimming windows to see if the buildings had a system that was already fed where we can get a line off of it, get some kind of pressure to get closer to the scene. We had to get past these cars.

At that point, it just looked like a war zone, and I was -- can't draw back that much of who I saw or where I saw them. People thought that I was missing at one point for a long time. It was some truck coming from Brooklyn. I don't know if it was 101 truck said he heard that I was one of the missing, and they were looking for me, and he sent me to another command post that was -- when they changed it and put a command post down by the Brooklyn Bridge, and told me just report there to let members know that -- and the chief in charge of the command post that I was still here.

I got back to -- when we outted the car fires, I got back to the actual scene, and just as we got back there, I think was with Lieutenant Curran from 9 MetroTech, and the building's second tower started to come down, and we had to run again.

Then we made it back after the second tower collapsed, and again we were helping with the pumping line and everything with the cars and debris, trying to get closer to the scene. After that was just digging, you know, and just seeing other guys come in.

I was seeing people -- I thought I was seeing guys there because people were coming and asking you, you know, other members, and PD was coming down, has family on the job, and asking you if you saw so and so, because they saw your unit on your helmet, knowing that they were working that battalion and whatever and figured we'd run in together and asking if you saw a family member or friend.

I thought I saw quite a few guys that I saw, but not thinking, we were just at a funeral in Staten Island, not even -- I don't even know if it was a week ago, so I thought I saw these guys there where these guys were lost. So it was all -- I don't know if you call it shell shocked or what, but it was quick for me, because I was outside, but it was late, much later on in the day before I hooked up with anybody from my unit.

The backup, I believe, was Jimmy Foley. He had a radio, because just recently we started carrying radios for the backup, and I couldn't hear -- I didn't hear any response from Jimmy. I don't know if he was giving any transmissions, but Mike Burn was the only guy I heard, and Mike couldn't hear me. The captain I couldn't hear.

That was it for the guys from this company.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Great. Thanks for the interview. The time is 28 after, and the count number is 65.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ROBERT CHYRIWSKI

Interview Date: December 14, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 14, 2001. The time is 2:51 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with --

FIREFIGHTER CHYRIWSKI: Firefighter Robert Chyriwski of Engine Company 3.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: -- in regards to the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you would, Rob, in your own words, tell us what happened on that day.

A. Okay. That day, of course, we're all sitting in the kitchen and then I see the news come on and something has hit No. 1 World Trade. Before you know it, we get the call to ride down there. Knowing that it was a high-rise building -- and on the assignment we notice, you know, we had the high-rise unit in quarters and it wasn't on the ticket -- I merely got on the phone to call the dispatcher. I said do you want us to take the high-rise unit? In all this madness that might have been going on in the command center at the dispatcher's office, they said take everything you got.

So we automatically just started riding down, and on our way down we heard over the radio the staging area will be on West Street. So right around when I hit Canal Street and Varick, I headed down West Street. I parked on West Street. The guys got out. I wanted to get in better position by 1 World Trade because we had gotten there before the second plane had hit 2 World Trade. So in the whole madness of things, I tried to reposition the rig and tried to get a hydrant. So I tried further down West Street, which I'm probably right around across from the hotel, the Marriott, when I hear this loud noise, this crash. That's when the second plane hit Tower 2.

So I managed to turn around and head back up north towards 1 World Trade, not knowing what had happened, that it was a plane that hit. But upon meeting up with my members on West Street by 1 World Trade, I was told that another airplane hit 2 World Trade. Right then and there I knew we were under attack.

Chief Ganci wanted to clear out the -- I guess it was the bike path or pedestrian walkway, whatever, just to line up all ambulances because he thought there was just going to be hundreds of casualties. I had to reposition the fire truck at least two times, and by doing so I ended up further north and west and the truck ended up by 3 World Financial Center. We also had the high-rise unit with us and that ended up being parked under the pedestrian bridge that crosses over West Street that links 6 World Trade with 3 World Financial Center. So it was directly underneath there.

Then 39 Engine, which has high-rise two, they pull up. So they pull up close to our truck and they were kind of like in the scuffle trying to position rigs. Chief Ganci was telling them to move here because he wanted to make a clear way for ambulances. I ended up hooking up with the chauffeur from 39 Engine because he was high-rise, too, and we kind of like worked together with our equipment, and one thing led to the next. We were just standing there waiting for orders. Engine 3 was pretty much still waiting on what news to hear from the Chief, what they're going to use, what type of equipment.

I took a walk over to the high-rise unit to try to set things up to pull the ramp out because we had the bottles in there and that's the only way that you really get the heavy stuff out, the cylinders. Then I just look up at 1 World Trade and see what's going on and it was just like it seemed hopeless, like what can we possibly do with the people just falling out of the windows left and right and not knowing how we can get this equipment up there.

Then I look and I see Mayor Giuliani and Von Essen and Nigro and a whole entourage walking south. I don't know exactly where they were going, but I saw them. Then I went back to 3 Engine, which I said was by 3 World Financial Center, and I was with the chauffeur from 39 Engine just waiting to find out what we would do. One thing led to the next and my company, 3 Engine, came back and they didn't get an assignment yet.

Then I see Captain Danny Brethel. He needed a face piece for his mask because, I guess, within the scuffle of getting out that morning. I went into the rig engine and gave him a face piece and that's the last I saw of him.

Another one of my members was detailed to 26 Engine. He was like an extra man. He jumped on a rig and he didn't have a mask. So he came up to me and I gave him my chauffeur's mask so he can go operate, and he ended up hooking with 12 Truck because he missed 26 Engine going in. His name was Adam Mazy.

I guess one thing led to the next. We were just standing there looking at all this chaos going on, the two towers just burning, and before you know it, I'm just hearing this loud roar and I look up and I just see this big cloud coming down. That was when 2 World Trade started to come down. People were just saying run, run. So I just took off.

I started running north and then I head west down Vesey Street, and I guess I ran down until I got to North End. There was another block and I started running north again, and luckily I was able to beat out the whole dust cloud. I didn't get enveloped in it.

It seemed, when everything just calmed down, I started walking back, and at that point I thought I had lost the guys from 3 because I thought they might have been in there, or wherever they were, they didn't get out. But luckily we hooked up back on Vesey Street. They were looking for me. I was looking for them. We met and at that point we were told by the Chief from 6th Battalion, I can't remember his name, that everybody just retreat to the River Terrace, on Vesey Street and the River Terrace, everybody just go there.

Pretty much we stayed there and we were helping out victims. Victims were coming in. Ferries were coming in, taking the injured to Jersey. We were helping with the civilians and firefighters, helping them move along the way, getting on these ferries, and the next thing you know, Tower 1 collapses, it's on its way down, and at that point everything just seemed hopeless, the way you felt.

Then we just started walking further north. We were all together. Engine 3, our company was together, and we walked to Stuyvesant High School, and that's pretty much where we ended up for the rest of the day.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. That concludes our interview. Thanks, Rob. The time is 2:59 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN DAVID LOPER

Interview Date: December 13, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 13, 2001, at approximately 0845 hours. My name is Chief Lakiotes of the safety command. I am here interviewing Captain David Loper of Engine 210, in regards to the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. David, if you would, just take me through what happened that day, as far as your experience.

A. Right from the response?

Q. Yes.

A. We were in quarters and we got the ticket to respond to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel to be part of a task force that was being formed to send over to the World Trade Center. So we were responding and as we were going down by the waterfront, I don't know exactly the street that is, by Brooklyn Heights, underneath the promenade, I could see the north tower burning on whatever it was, 10 floors, 15 floors and I remember just being overwhelmed, trying to figure out what we were going to do when we got there. I just couldn't figure it out. Every time you size up a situation, you can come up with some kind of a plan, but I couldn't on this particular case.

Anyway, it's then that I was looking at the north tower that I saw what I thought looked like a seagull in the distance almost and it went into the south tower and the south tower exploded in a huge fire ball. I just told my chauffeur, "Stop for a minute. Stop the rig." And he just slammed the brakes and we just looked and it didn't strike me as to what happened. I still thought -- I said to him, at that point, "The gas tanks exploded from the plane." That's what I thought it was at that point. It wasn't until afterwards that I realized it was a whole second plane at that time. And I didn't realize that until a couple of days later. It just didn't make sense to me.

Anyway, I said, "Let's get out of here." By the time we got down to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, they had tried to clear a lane, although there were some cars in the way still, but there were several trucks and engines, whatever, at that scene and by the time we got there I think another one or two engines came in behind us and I said, "Let's go." We went in as a convoy.

I don't know the companies that were there. I know 279 was behind us, because they ended up passing us when we got through the tunnel. It took, I would say, a good 15 minutes to get through the tunnel. There were cars in the way. A battalion called about a pregnant woman that was going to give birth and we got out of the rig and looked. We couldn't find the battalion or the car, so who knows. I don't know what happened there. We got through. When we got through finally to the other side, there was a lot of debris and the dust and stuff and everything from the plane smashing into the building and the traffic stopped. We didn't know why at that time, but we figured they were getting directions, but I think it was more probably because of the parts of the building and the body parts and everything that were all around.

One of my guys got out of the rig for some reason. I was yelling at him, "Get back in," because the convoy started to move. Before he could get in, 279 passed us so we just followed them in and we took a hydrant in the vicinity of Liberty and the West Side Highway. I'm not exactly sure where it was, but it was in that vicinity where we took a hydrant. It was in the center median or to the left side maybe over on the west side of the West Side Highway. I would guess it would be just before the pedestrian bridge in that World Financial Center, Dow Jones Oppenheimer. I think in that area is where we took a hydrant.

We got out of the rig and there was a torso up against the hydrant. My chauffeur said, "Cap, come over here. I don't know what to do." I told him, "Cover it." I think that's what he did. He covered it with a blanket. He moved it a little bit, covered it with a blanket and then hooked up to that hydrant.

At that point I told him, just stay with the rig. Hook up to the hydrant and do what he had to do there as far helping other companies hookup to hydrants or whatever. I didn't have any idea what they were going to do, but I just told him to stay with the rig and try not to get close to the building. Stay on this side of the highway, unless he had to hook up and got orders to hook up to some kind of a standby. But he would have known that. He's a good chauffeur.

Me and the other three guys got out. We each grabbed -- I had the guys take a roll-up and an extra Scott bottle. I grabbed a standpipe bag and an extra bottle and we grabbed four roll-ups instead of three and grabbed an extra length of hose along with the extra bottle, and we were heading up West Street or whatever, West Side Highway, and we ran into Chief Barbara, who was standing actually like on the center median. Because I remember looking up at him and he just asked the company. I said, "Engine 210, part of the task force." And he said, "Go past the second pedestrian bridge. There is a command post for the north tower. I want you on the north tower."

So we proceeded up the highway. I told the guys -- actually, we stayed all the way to the west side. There were pieces of the building coming down and I kept looking up. I told the guys, "Look up. Just look down to see where you're going once in a while, but keep looking up in case something comes down. And if you have to, just run. You know, just scream for everybody, but just run if you have to."

So we stayed all the way to the west side of the West Side Highway, as close to the buildings as we could, away from the debris that was falling off the building, made our way past that pedestrian bridge and we hit the command post. But there is two pedestrian bridges, so I'm a little confused as to where we actually stopped. I know we were at the command post closest to 1 World Trade Center, the north tower. I know that for a fact, that we were up there.

We reported. There was a Lieutenant there with the board, the set up, as far as the -- I'm losing track as to what that's called now.

Q. The command board?

A. The command post board, right. So there was a command post there and I reported in and things were a little bit crazy, as can be expected. People were like, "We're all reporting in." And I saw a friend of mine that I was a fireman with up in the Bronx, Captain Eddie Metcalf, and I remember the guy handing him -- I don't know what Eddie was doing there. I don't think he was with a company. I don't know if he was surplus or -- I really don't know what he was up to, but all I know is the guy handed him a pad and pencil and said, "You take care of the companies coming in. Write them down and give them to me."

So when I heard that, I heard that actually being said, I said, "Eddie, it's David, 210." He said, "I gotcha, Dave." So he put me down on the sheet. I turned around to the three guys and I said -- there was probably two or three engines, a truck. I don't know who else was there. There were other people milling around. Probably some civilians. We were in front of, I'm guessing, 3 World Financial Center, American Express building. Although, I can't say for sure if that's where we were. Because when we came -- I'll get to this later, but when we came through the building, we ran down the loading dock and came out. I don't remember another building being behind us, but there could have been, because I was kinds of confused at the time.

But anyway, I grabbed the three guys and told them, because they had told us to stand fast, it's going to be a while before you go in. So I said, "All right." So I grabbed the three guys. It was a cool morning, but with all your turnout gear it was hot. So I says, "Listen. Put all the equipment here in a pile. Take your coats off and just, you know, it's not going to take a second to put your coats on and we'll go in when we get orders."

So that's what they did. And then I saw other companies doing that, too. Each company was staying in like a little pile of stuff and staying by and taking their coats off. I remember taking my coat off and I had it around my arm and I loosened up my pants just to -- because I was very warm.

From that point they were back about probably 30 feet towards the loading dock area of that building, and I stayed up near the command post. That's when we kept just looking up, kept sizing up the building and then the jumpers started. I remember seeing 105 Truck, come to think of it, because I remember Vinny Brunton being there, speaking of him today. But I do remember him being around. So 105 Truck must have been there. But I don't know happened to them afterwards. They must have got orders to go in.

Anyway, we were sizing the building. That's when the jumpers started and you just didn't seem -- you didn't realize what it was at first until they started hitting and then I went back and the guys are looking. I said, "Listen, don't look up. You know, there is no sense in looking up and seeing this." Because they just kept coming and coming. I don't know what good that did, because you could hear them hitting, so it was still not pleasant to say the least.

So we kept that up anyway. I went back to the commands post after talking to guys, kept them together. Went back up and there is a crowd of people and everything, still waiting to see what we were going to do. Then all of a sudden there was like a loud -- almost like a rushing sound, a roar, and we looked up and we could see it looked like an implosion and the building kind of went in and out and kind of like shook and I remember like 20 or 30 guys, whatever it was, all there at the command post. A lot of them in front of me pulled towards West Street. We were looking up and then this thing started coming down and nobody ran. I could just remember that. Even myself, I remember being hypnotized by this thing and just looking up at it and then finally, thank God, somebody yelled, "Run." And we took off and I think depending on which way you ran determined whether you lived or died. Because I think some guys that were there probably didn't make it.

Anyway, I ran to the loading dock area and all my guys went the same way. I tripped over some gear initially as I first started running that was there or it could have been a curb. I don't know what it was, but I tripped over something, fell, hit my head. That dazed me a little bit. I couldn't get up right away. I rolled over to see what was going on and like 15 or 20 guys like trampled me and I think a couple of them did try to help me, but it was just the push was there and they couldn't.

Somebody might have even fell over me as we were going and they all like kind of trampled me and then the debris cloud came, so then all bets were off there. Nobody knew where anybody was. I got up again just as the debris cloud was enveloping us and I tried to run and again I tripped over something and I fell and I twisted my back and knee. This time I stayed down for just a couple of seconds. I said, I'm having difficulty breathing now, because it was like a funnel. All the smoke went right down into this loading dock and I remember it was just like having your head stuck in a pail of sand, trying to breathe sand. And I says, "You know, I'm gonna die if I don't do something about this." So I rolled and I found a wall finally and the only way I could orient myself is I heard a lot of voices on one side of me. I said, "That must be to the rear, because everybody went that way. So the front must be this way." And I knew all the equipment was laid on the ground there. So I took a shot and I crawled along the wall towards the front and I started going up. That's when I knew I was going in the right direction. I started going up the loading ramp. And I didn't really hit too much large chunks of debris. There was the dust and stuff you could feel and all that stuff and you're breathing it.

I finally found three Scott air masks and, of course, needing to breathe now I was elated by that, but the one mask was upside down and dopey me didn't purge it because I'm not thinking. I throw it on my face and got this -- everything. I mean it was like solid. And now I'm coughing, I'm choking, I'm pulling solid crap out of me and I'm like, "That was real smart." So I finally got the mask purged, cleaned out. I put it on and then I could breathe a little bit better.

I grabbed the other two masks, crawled back to where I heard voices. I found one guy huddled like in a corner. I gave him a mask. I said, "Put this on. We gotta try to get out of here." I found another guy and I said, "Put this on." And by that time somebody was saying they might have found a door in the rear. So we just started crawling to the rear. I still couldn't see anything. I found a rope on the ground level and I knew or I didn't know, but I thought immediately that somebody put like a search rope or something, a personal rope. So I says, "I found a rope." And I just started screaming and a couple of guys came. We found the rope and we started following it and it led out this door and there must have been lighting on there, because I could see like a glow up in the ceiling level and we bumped into some people and I heard somebody saying -- somebody came down the stairs and said, "Somebody's got a key." Somebody from the building actually came down into the smoke, unlocked the back door, and that's where we got out. We got out through the rear door and it was still -- you could see people at that point. That was to the west of the building and the breeze was coming off the river, so that actually was clearing faster than to the east. So when I got out I had blood running -- I remember feeling my forehead because I had a big lump from where I fell and I had blood coming down my forehead and I said, "Now I gotta find my guys." Which I didn't even know if I was gonna be able to do that at this point. But I did. Two of the guys waited for me or were in the general vicinity. I don't know if they actually waited for me, but they didn't go too far. That was Casey, who went back to Ladder 127, and Duggan, who went back to Engine 1 on the rotation just recently. But those two guys were there and I gave them a big hug. Then I was looking for Tommy Carroll from Engine 219, and I told Duggan and Casey, I said, "Let's start working north a little bit away from this." Because now that was the south tower that collapsed. I says, "This north one is going. It's just a matter of when it's gonna go." I said, "Let's get a little further away, because I don't know if it's gonna come back this way." You know? So we started walking north and when I felt that we were far enough away, we went through like a park by the waterfront and stuff, when we were far enough away, there was a guy with a cell phone and he let Casey or Duggan use his cell phone to try to call home.

And I said, "listen. You guys stay here. I'm just gonna take a quick lap and see if I could find Carroll. So that's what I did. I went south and from looking at this, I probably went behind 2 World Financial Center. I went to about that far and we were over by 4 World Financial Center, I would imagine, at this point. I think we ended up going down North End and then down Vesey Street is what we ended up doing.

But anyway, I made it to like behind 2 World Financial Center and I couldn't find Tommy Carroll anyway. So I says, "I gotta go back to the other two guys anyway." So that's what I did. I went back. They were waiting for me. As I was heading back towards them I was some where behind Winter Garden or 3 World Financial Center. Somewhere heading back towards those guys, that's when the north tower collapsed. And it was the same thing, the same noise. So as soon as I heard it this time, I knew it. I just saw those two guys and I just yelled "run" and we just started running up towards Vesey Street. And we came back up towards Vesey Street towards West Street and then headed north on West Street. I says, "we gotta get a couple of more blocks up north so we can regroup and see who we can find to see what we're gonna do here."

As we went up there, there were guys, a lot of guys just walking around like zombies. I remember Chief Collins from the 31 Battalion. A lot of guys were just in shock and stuff, as we were. Anyway, we got up there and we found a group of guys that were kind of dazed and stuff and we hung out with them right on West Street. There were a lot of ambulances by this time all lined up. I remember looking over and seeing Mike Talleska. I didn't know at the time, but he was with Safety. And there were a couple of EMS guys taking care of him. I don't think it was our EMS. I think it was a private Jewish ambulance. I went over. I told my two guys, I said, "Stay here with Chief Collins." There were like three or four other firemen. I said, "Stay here. I'm gonna go over and see what's up with this guy. I know him from up in the Bronx and up in that area."

So I went over and I said, "Mike, what's going on?" And he was in tough shape. He was mumbling that he was buried under the north tower and that he climbed down out of the south tower. I can't remember what he said, but he said he climbed down and he made it to this point and he thought he broke his leg and these guys weren't taking care of him. So I tried calming him down and they were going to put him in the ambulance, but the ambulance was blocked in by trucks, ambulances, everything. This ambulance was going nowhere and Mike was pretty upset about things that he wasn't getting out of there. He was talking about car bombs going off and he got me really wired up with that kind of talk too. I started looking around saying, he said," look for the vans. They're gonna start blowing."

Anyway, I says, "Mike, what do you want?" He says, "You gotta get me out of here, Dave." So that's what I did. I grabbed him. I told the two guys, they were only about 50 feet away, Kevin and Danny, I said, "Stay here. I gotta get this guy up to an ambulance where he can get out of here and then I'll come back." And that's what happened. These EMS people didn't want to release him, but we just took the foot brace off that they put on and threw it in the ambulance. I put his boot back on and took him around my shoulders and he hobbled up. We kept hobbling up a couple of blocks. We finally found an ambulance that was free that could take him away and they started treating him. And I turned around to go and I collapsed at the back of the ambulance and I don't know whether it was from hitting my head. I think I ended up with a mild concussion from when I originally hit my head. But the next thing I remember is I woke up in Presbyterian Hospital and Mike was there. That's basically all I remember. Do you want to know what happened at the hospital?

Q. No. That's not necessary.

A. I don't really remember too much about that anyway.

Q. Besides any brethren at the command post, did you ever see anybody else?

A. I said Eddie Metcalf I saw. Yeah, I saw 211, Engine 211. Because we're in the same quarters with them now, with our quarters being redone. So Charlie Clark, the Captain of 211 was there, and his guys. And I saw them afterwards actually behind and he told me he saw Carroll. Carroll was in front of him getting out. They got out before me, because I went back to get those Scott masks and stuff. So those guys all got out before me. I was one of the last guys out. And he says he was in front of me. I don't know where he went, but that relieved me a little, but not too much. And now I was worried about my chauffeur too, because he was down by the south tower. So I was concerned about him.

Q. When you went to that command post, is that where Chief Ganci was and Chief Feehan?

A. I don't remember seeing them.

Q. At the command post?

A. I might have seen them, but it's just that I can't remember.

Q. Chief Turi?

A. I don't know what Chief Turi looks like. I would have to see a picture of him. I don't remember seeing him. Chief Ganci I would know and Feehan I would know, but I just can't remember. There were guys there, but I think I was looking up more than anything and I didn't take the scope of the ground area. All I remember is -- I think it was the guy that wears the half glasses in the command post company, with the mustache.

Q. Fieldcom?

A. Fieldcom. I'm pretty sure he's the guy that handed Eddie Metcalf the the --

Q. I know who you're talking about. A short guy with black hair?

A. Yeah. I think it was him, because I seen him a lot. You know, you always seem to see him. I'm almost positive it was him that handed -- I could be wrong. I know Eddie started writing all the companies down. And I know 105 was there and then I don't know when they got -- they must have walked away as I was looking up, because I didn't really see them going. But I remember looking down at the building at one point and seeing firemen going in and out.

Q. At the north tower?

A. Yes. Yeah. The south tower we were removed from. We didn't really -- we were right in front of that north tower. I remember being across from the Marriott Hotel kind of. Because as the bodies were coming down, there was like a canopy or whatever that they were hitting and crashing through.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Okay. That concludes this interview at approximately 0905. Thank you, Dave.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EVELYN VEGA

Interview Date: December 18, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MS. BASTEDENBECK: The time now is 1710 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I work for the New York City Fire Department. I'm at Battalion 4 EMS command doing an interview regarding the date September 11, 2001, with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, your rank, your shield number and the area you work.

A. Hi. My name is EMT EVELYN VEGA. My shield number is 5752. I'm currently assigned to Battalion 04, Station 11.

Q. Ms. Vega, you were working on the morning of September 11, 2001?

A. Yes, I was. I was.

Q. Can you just tell me about the events that morning?

A. Yes. Okay. My tour began at 0900 to 1700 hours, and I was on duty. I came in, my normal routine, to work, and I went to the locker room, and came out, got ready, whatever, and my partner that morning was EMT Torres. When I came down, he was -- actually, he already had vehicle keys. That was vehicle 404. He was inspecting the vehicle.

It was about a quarter to 9 a.m. I bumped into one of my coworkers. His name is EMT Bell. He starts also at 0900, and by the way, that morning, I was 01 boy. So I bumped into Bell, and he told me, "Oh, did you hear that a plane hit the World Trade Center?" I said, "No, no, I don't believe you. What are you talking about?" He said, "Come, come, I'll show you. You can see it from here."

So I followed him. We weren't able to see anything. So I just wasn't sure. I just went in for roll call, and I went inside, kind of ran inside to the office, and Lieutenant Melaragno was there, and he was -- he just threw the keys, the radios. He was just get out of here, get out of here, so now it was kind of confirmed, although I wasn't, you know, a hundred percent sure, but he was, like, get out of here. A plane hit the World Trade Center.

So I just took some keys, and I gave them back because my partner already had the stuff he needed so I just hopped -- jumped into the driver's side, and we just head out. We weren't dispatched by a dispatcher. We just were sent out by the lieutenant, and we just drove towards the World Trade Center.

As I'm getting closer, I see a big hole at -- I guess it was Tower 1, World Trade Center 1, the north tower.

Q. The first building that was struck?

A. Uh-huh, the first building.

Then by this time, I think it was like five minutes to 9 a.m., and we're driving, and then we are -- I remember being on Barclay. We're driving. I told my partner, "Should I make a left here onto Broadway?" He says, "No, continue west." I said, "Fine." Do I turn on Church? He's like no. We looked. He said, "No, too much commotion."

We went straight, still continued west. We got to West Street. I said, "Do I make a left here?" He said, "Yeah, make a left here," and so I made a left, and I pulled over at Vesey and West Street facing south on the east side of the street on West Street.

We jump out of the vehicle. We put on our safety jacket, our helmet, and we take out all equipment, stretcher, whatever, everything, and we start heading towards the building.

Now, we bumped into a chief, fire chief. I don't know his name. I don't recall anything. I just -- he was flagging us to come towards him, and so we went towards him, and then when I assumed -- at the time I didn't know -- but now I know that the second plane had hit, and we looked up. We heard it. The debris started falling. People started jumping off the building, whatever.

So he was, like, clear the way, move your vehicle a little north. So we moved like a few feet north, and I believe it was still on Vesey and West, but on the north side of -- north corner, versus the south corner where we were, and I moved, and I went back towards the buildings.

I had a few people that worked in the building calling us that there was people in the basement, and they needed help. So we're debating should we go in or not. We decided to go in.

We went into one World Trade Center. We went inside. We went -- the elevator wasn't working. It was on two sublevels down. We went down. We left the stretcher in the lobby, and we went down. There was two patients. It was like 15 other workers. They were doing construction work down there.

The patients were one female, one male, and one had a back injury, and one had a knee or a leg injury, fracture or whatever. We only had one back board. We improvised. We cared for these patients, and then we rushed them out.

We used the exit through the underground garage that workers there assisted us with, so we got out of there. Before we left, one patient was taken by the workers to help us. They took the female patient, and my partner went to make alignment for -- to let them know that where we were, because, of course, we were dispatched not by them, but by our lieutenant, so nobody really knew where we were. So he did that.

Supposedly he got in contact with central, whatever the case may be. He came back, and we took the second patient out, and we got out. When we got out, there were ambulances in the area, so they took the patients, and we just went to our -- we left with -- you know, we gave the patient to the other unit and we became -- we started walking now.

When we exited, we were on Vesey and West in the middle of the block between Church, between West Broadway and West Street on Vesey, so we just started walking together towards the ambulance. When we got into the ambulance, we put our equipment and whatever, and we found out at that time that they were staging at Vesey between West Street and North End, so I angle parked the ambulance.

My partner went to speak to the chief in command or whoever the operating lieutenant that was, you know, responsible for the triage of the commanding area. So I stood there, and I was trying to use my cell phone, and I didn't get a reception.

At this time, I didn't know we were hit by a second plane. I just heard on 1010 WINS that the Pentagon was hit, and I was, like, okay, you know, whatever, and I just stepped out of the vehicle, and I stood behind my ambulance, and I saw a cop there trying to use the phone. So I started talking to him, and he said, "Well, I can't get through." I said, "Me neither," whatever.

So moments after, maybe five minutes or so, I hear a rumble, and I just look towards the east side of the street. I'm in the middle of the block on Vesey between West and North End, so now I turn, and I look east towards the corner of West and Vesey, and I see people in blue uniforms, cops, whoever they were. They were running towards my way, so I didn't know what to do, so I looked the opposite direction, and I see other people running the same direction.

So I just started running. So I started running by myself because my partner was taking care of something else, so I just ran, left the vehicle there, and just kept running north. Running, running north, and still at this time I didn't know that the second plane was hit, and when we heard that rumble, that noise, I didn't know that that was when the first tower fell until I met up with another coworker. His name is EMT Orlando Martinez. We stood together for the whole way.

There was no one else from Battalion 4. We just kept running north. We kept stopping. I was trying to raise my partner over the radio, and all I kept hearing was Mayday, Mayday. We had no idea where his partner or my partner were, so we were worried, and no one else from our battalion was there. So it was out of control.

As we were running north, and we were looking south, we saw the smoke and everything, and then we heard, you know, that the building had fell, whatever, so we finally got, I guess, to -- it was West Street and closer to Chambers, and we just stood there, and trying to find out, you know, permission, trying to use someone's phone. The restaurants were open. People giving water at a local bar. So we got water, and I was trying to use the phone, but there were lines, so I didn't use the phone. And then we find -- we hear the second building fell.

So now we keep running north, because they kept saying just run north. So everybody was just running, civilians, police officers, some ambulance. We hopped in some ambulance. We just went north, dropped everything. Everybody was just -- it was a commotion going north.

Now you have to go to Chelsea Piers. You have to go to Chelsea Piers. So we didn't go to Chelsea Piers yet. We were still going north, and we stopped, and then they said there was a gas leak. Something in the air. We got to get out of the area. Some pollution or whatever. So now the guy that I was with, Orlando Martinez, he bumped into his partner, so beautiful, I found out that my partner was looking for me, but no sight of him.

So now there was like a few -- like five guys from Battalion 4, so we were feeling better about, you know, everybody being okay. So we started running, and then when they announced there was, like, a gas leak, I mean, this is all I heard, you know, people -- just rumors running around with information, and, of course, everywhere we stopped there was like a lieutenant, EMT lieutenant, or a Fire Department lieutenant, or whoever. There was always a boss, someone telling us what to do, where to go.

So finally, we jumped into -- the last thing was like that gas leak thing, and I opened the back doors of the ambulance, and like 15 million people. They were all EMTs, cops, transit, whatever. They ran inside of the back of the ambulance, and we just kept going to Chelsea Piers. They told us where to park, and we just staged there.

We stood there, and I was able -- that's when Chelsea Piers was open. They were helping us, giving us water. They let us use the phone, and I contacted my family. I guess this was all by eleven o'clock, because the second building, I think, fell like 10:30, so this whole thing by 11, I figure.

I contacted my family, and then finally before twelve I reunited with my partner, and then there was another EMT. Her name is EMT Perrin. I don't know her last name, but she belongs to Battalion 4, and she had just finished coming off duty, Tour 1, so she came in, and she was doing inventory of all the Battalion personnel, you know, who was missing or whatever. So it was a good thing that, you know, she had a list that we could ask, did you speak to this one, did you bump into this one, did you have the possibility of this one, whatever.

So at this point, like, it was a whole bunch of us from Battalion 4. It was maybe a few people missing we were worried about, but for the most part, everybody was okay.

Then, like, three p.m. we were relieved from the scene, and we went back to the 911 system.

Q. At what point did you pick up your vehicle and bring it uptown with you?

A. I never did. My partner apparently -- I bumped into him by twelve, I'm assuming, and he had the vehicle, so he picked it up, because after the whole story, I mean, after this whole thing, I found out that instead of him -- most of them running north, they ran west towards the water, so everybody was hanging out there by the water. That's why we didn't hear any more from our battalion because that's where everybody was, but me and Martinez, we were going north because, I mean, that's the only way.

I didn't even think about going through the park out to the water. I just went north, so he picked up the vehicle with whoever else. We had all the ambulances there. That's where they were staging.

So that's basically the adventure.

Q. Anything else you'd like to add to what you told me so far?

A. No.

Q. That pretty much covers the day?

A. Yes. Of course, that I had to work two shifts, which is expected, 16 hours, and after we were relieved, and we went to the 911 system, it was like torture. We were getting calls with people having headaches and just stomach pains, and it was just too much for me to handle. I mean, just knowing what we just went through, and how we are needed for other things, and we have people actually dialing 911 for a headache. I was really bothered by that.

A lot of our calls were on North End Street and South End Street, which is right across from the World Trade Center, and both buildings, of course, had no light and no electricity, no elevators. Nothing was happening.

So we were receiving calls, and we were being dispatched to those buildings where we had to climb 30, 40 floors to get there with flashlights and all the equipment, so that was mind-boggling, because every time we got to these high-rises, there was no patient, no one was there.

I mean, everybody was evacuated, but I guess it's part of our job, but it was just -- yeah, it was not a good thing, you know, and then to get there, we had to park our ambulance, like, far away from, and then we'd have to carry everything and go through all the rubble.

I bumped into firefighters that were taking out firefighters that were dead, you know, so it was just crazy. It was crazy, but that was it basically.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Thank you very much for your time. The time now is 1725 hours. Thank you very much.

MS. VEGA: Thank you.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: This concludes our interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

Captain David Fenton

Interview Date: December 18, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MURRAY MURAD: The time is now 1300 hours and I'm Murray Murad of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with --

A. Captain David Fenton, New York City Fire Department, EMS Command, assigned to Division 6.

Q. This interview is being conducted at the Fire Department headquarters at the Bureau of Investigations and Trials, and this is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Captain Fenton, can you tell us in your own words what happened that day?

A. Okay. I normally worked tour 3 as a duty captain in the South Bronx. I was home in bed. Nice place to be. My wife called me and said, "You better turn on the TV. Something is up. I think you have to go to work." So I turned on the TV and that was right after the first tower got hit. I called in. They said, "Yep, come on in." And they were going to leave a Suburban for me. I drove to Jacobi, got in the Suburban. As I was driving over the Throgsneck Bridge as I was -- in reference with time, on the way in, at about 9:55, when the south tower collapsed.

I got to Jacobi just as the north tower collapsed at about 10:29. It was myself, four EMT's who I don't have a clue who they were that Jacobi put in my Suburban. I know they track their names and stuff at Jacobi. And a paramedic by the name of Ed Bradley, we all jumped in the Suburban and down to the Trade Center we went. We were heading down -- we were told by Citywide to respond to Chambers and West and we were southbound on Chambers at about the meat packing district, at about Little West 12th Street, when they were in the process of doing the rapid evacuation for the gas main.

I saw everybody coming back at us. We turned around. Most of the units were stopping there. I knew that there was a prestaging area set up at the Chelsea Piers. So as the units were stopping there, I instructed all those units to continue on up to the Chelsea Piers to the prestaging area where they can be turned around and redeployed as needed.

After making sure that all the units went up to Chelsea, where I took my suburban and my five people, we turned around and went back up to Chelsea. I was there and I saw Chief Kowalczyk and a few other people organizing the staging area.

They told me to just turn around and go right back down again. So I responded down West Street parking probably just north of Warren Street and we were parked southbound in the northbound lanes. We got out and we walked out to the command post that was established at Chambers and West. At that point the five personnel who were with me were directed into Stuyvesant High School to a personnel staging area and I was directed to remain at the command post and await orders.

A short time after that I was instructed by Chief Carrasquillo to report in to the Stuyvesant High School and ensure that the personnel who are in there were getting formed into teams for deployment, if needed. There were approximately five lieutenants there and about 30 EMT's and medics combined. I know Lieutenant Horan was there and he was the one I tasked with taking attendance and forming everybody up into teams. So there would be at least five EMT's, one medic and one lieutenant per team. Also about that time there was a decision made that the lobby of the building would be used to treat any walk-in wounded. They set it up as a treatment area, which a wide variety of doctors, nurses and everybody else arrived with medical supplies. I don't know where they came from or who they were. They set up a medical clinic there. We assigned some of our people to assist in that area.

Most of the stuff they were doing were eye washes. One thing that struck me as amazing was I didn't see any stretcher cases. Nobody came in on a backboard or a stretcher. Everybody was ambulatory. Then later on, about twelve-ish or so, 12:30, I went with Chief Carrasquillo and we did have a reconnoiter of the area. And what we were looking for was a place to place for the tents to be set up coming from the Parks Department to become the true treatment area on the Riverside with Medivac access. We found an area. We worked it out with a Police Officer, I believe, or maybe even a sergeant from ESU by the name of Techie who would -- where the cops would be landing their helicopters, where we would be landing the Medivac helicopters. And that never actually came to fruition. We didn't use it.

Going back inside, by that time Lieutenant Fuchs from the academy -- Kath Fuchs was there from the academy and she started taking care of organizing the inside of the house as the treatment area. At which point I was redeployed by Chief Carrasquillo back out to the command post and I assisted in doing a variety of small tasks and directing a few people there.

Q. Where was the command post again?

A. The command post was at the intersection of Chambers and West, underneath an overpass. Deputy Assistant Chief Butler was there, Chief Carrasquillo was there and Chief Martin was there, that I saw. Other people coming in and out, but they were the ones that were assigned there. Originally I was assigned as the Fire Department liaison to the forward Fire Chiefs and I went down toward Ground Zero at that point, shadowing a chief. Did what we had to do. They then established -- a forward command post was set up at Vesey and West, which is where I spent a good part of the time after that for the rest of the day just funneling the information to the Chiefs, fire side and requests back out to our command post at Chambers and West.

Eventually I was relieved and I was sent back to the command post where I was given a set of keys and some paper and a pen and my new job was to go down to Ground Zero and record all the ambulances that were destroyed and get the doors popped and make sure that none of our people were still in them. I went down to one of the fire vehicles, got a Halligan and I proceeded down into the south side. First I started the north side. There weren't too many vehicles there. I recorded what was there. Most of them were open. Then I went around to the south side of Liberty where a large quantity of ambulances were there. None really of ours. Mostly the 911 participants. And I proceeded with a couple of firefighters. We popped a few rear doors, popped a few cabs that we couldn't see into. I made an account of all the vehicles that were there. We didn't find anybody either under them or in them. I went around and did the same thing on the Church Street side to the vehicles I could get to. There were some vehicles that were underneath number 7 when it came down that we just couldn't get to, because the rubble pile was shifting and most of it was still on fire.

The list of equipment in the vehicles were then given back to the command post at Chambers and West and they called in representatives from the other 911 participants, to give them their vehicles at that were in there. So that way they could start doing a vehicle accounting.

Q. How many vehicles did you estimate or did you observe or count?

A. Approximately 15 to 20.

Q. And those were all EMS? Fire Department?

A. No. Those were ambulances. Actually, the majority of them were 911 participants and not municipal ambulances.

Q. So you are referring to like Metrocare?

A. Metrocare, New York Hospital, Beekman Downtown.

Q. So roughly between fifteen and twenty ambulances?

A. Fifteen and twenty ambulances that I physically entered.

Q. Is there anything else that you would like to add?

A. No. And then the rest of the night I functioned pretty much as a site safety officer with several other former SOD members. Charlie Fraser, Jimmy Scullion, Steve Linke, Kevin Haugh, Jeff Race.

MURRAY MURAD: All right. I would like to thank you, Captain Fenton, for the interview. The time now is 1312 hours. This now concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM CASEY

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is December 17, 2001. The time is 12:18, and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the safety battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter 1st Grade William Casey from Engine 21.

The interview is taking place in the quarters of Engine 21.

Q. William, just tell us the events as you remember them on September 11.

A. All right. We were in quarters when we saw it on the television with the plane, and I believe it was Tower 1, the first one that got hit.

Our captain came down the stairs. He let us know to start getting the bottles ready, stuff ready. He assumed that we were going to be going shortly.

He came down. I think we went on fifth alarm. I forget what the assignment was. So we loaded up the rig. As we were heading out of quarters, we actually saw on the television the second plane hit Tower 2, so we headed down.

Sid Parris was our chauffeur. We went down Second Avenue. I believe we were parked -- I think it was the corner of Vesey and -- I'm not really sure which corner, but anyway we came around. When we pulled up, of course, you could see the smoke, see a lot of stuff going on.

We walked into Tower 1, the north tower, and hung out in the lobby waiting for instructions on what to do. At that point, it was a lot of chaos. You were hearing jumpers. You were hearing different things going on. You saw different companies. We weren't told what to do really.

So then we got our instructions, and we followed the captain by an elevator, one of the elevator banks. Somebody told us there was somebody trapped in the elevator, so we opened up the doors. We had the rabbit tools, so we just pried it open a little bit, and then we pulled it open ourselves, and there was a lady in there, and we got her out.

We then went to another embankment, because we were with -- I believe the company -- I believe it was 13 truck. I'm not really sure at that time. We were going to go up the stairs, but we ended up -- there is an elevator would go up to the 24th Floor, which is what we took.

Then we started to proceed up, and I don't know what the stairwell number was, stairwell letter, to the 27th Floor.

At that point, there were different companies up there, different people up there. At that point, as soon as we got up there, we all hit the ground, because the building started shaking. We didn't know what that was. We assumed it was some floors above that had collapsed. We weren't really told what it was. We found out, obviously, that it was Tower 2 that collapsed.

At that point, I believe it was a chief -- I wasn't sure where he was from. He came down from somewhere. He came from one of the areas on the 27th Floor, and he told us to just get off this floor. So we were told to get off the floor.

We started to proceed down the same stairwell that we came up, and with that, our control guy was talking to the captain, because he didn't follow us. He wasn't coming with us right away. So he told him, "Yeah, yeah. Keep going down, I'll catch up with you," and stuff like that, because he just wanted to make sure everybody was off the floor.

With that, I proceeded back up. It was on the 24th floor. I proceeded back up, because I said

I'll go hang out with -- you know, I'll stay with the captain, and this way if he needs a hand with something.

On my way back up, I came across a civilian on the 26th Floor, and he was struggling, so I was caught in between. I didn't want to leave him there. He was by himself. There was nobody there in the stairwell at that time, and so I had to help him. He was not making it. He was falling down the stairs. So I put him on my shoulder, and I proceeded down with him.

At the 19th Floor, I came across 13 truck, which I made sure the captain relayed to my boss where I was, so everybody knew what was going on, because now I was away from -- I didn't have a radio. I was the nozzle man. He gave me one of his guys to help me, because we didn't -- I wasn't going to get this guy out of the building by myself.

So with that, we proceeded down the stairs, and it was not chaos. It was not -- I didn't hear anything with his radio, not like anything happened. Still not hearing, not knowing that the other building collapsed, and we just proceeded down. The guy -- we had to help him. He was dragging his feet. He really couldn't do anything. Every time he wanted to stop, we just kind of lifted him up in the air. We didn't stop. That was the one thing we didn't do, but it was not like it was people running over us or -- it was calm.

When we got to the lobby finally, there was a lot of ash and stuff on the ground, which I just assumed was part of the plane now, stuff. It must have been the other building collapsed, and part of it went in there, but still not aware of it.

Of course, like I said, in the lobby, I saw people that I knew, firemen. Nobody really was rushing out, because there were still civilians. So with that, I asked somebody from 2 truck did he see any of my guys. He said, "Yeah, they just walked out."

So then I knew that the guys were out of the building, and so I was going to -- we were going to go out with this guy, and we had to run out, because we were afraid -- like I said, there were people jumping, and so we ran out a little with him, but couldn't really run. We were dragging him.

Once we got across the street, I believe we went a little bit north.

Q. This was on West Street?

A. West Street. Well, we crossed over West Street. I don't know the street that we crossed over to, but we went up a little north of the trade center, so we never looked behind us, really never knew that Tower 2, which is really now south of you, I guess, not knowing that that's actually collapsed, still not knowing.

We got across -- like I said, I guess we crossed West Street. I don't know the little side street here, and we came to an ambulance, and we started -- they didn't have a key to it. We started getting ready to get this guy into the ambulance, and with that, you heard this -- it was almost like a roar, and it was like a rumbling, and I turned back.

I kind of froze, because when I turned back, I started seeing the building starting to come down, and when I turned back around, there was nobody -- there was nobody there, so I kind of just dove up against a fence. It was like a parking garage, an open parking space.

So I just put my face piece on, ducked my head, and it was frightening. It was very -- I thought that was it. Stuff was going over. It stayed dark. It felt like an eternity. I'm sure it wasn't, but it just felt long.

At first I couldn't get my face piece on, like I said, so I was choking on the rubble and stuff, and I got it on in a lit bit of a daze. I didn't know where I was really at first, and started to go west, I guess, but then once you get your bearings now you want to turn back around because, of course, we had that guy, and I still didn't know where the guy that helped me with 13 truck.

When I started heading back, there was this chief -- you know, he didn't have his -- I think his helmet got knocked off, and he had like a -- looked a broken arm or something, and his face was bloody, so I wanted to help him now. So we just started walking him to an ambulance, because it was further west.

Now, when you wanted to head back, there were a few chiefs coming towards anybody that was going back that way. We had to regroup. It was sort of like we have to go around and you can't go back that way. So now I don't know what happened to the guy I was with, you know, the guy from 13 truck or the guy we helped out, but they were saying, "You can't go this way."

I guess they were still worried about collapse. You couldn't really tell what just happened, so we walked around -- it was like a -- walked all the way west and then came back up. I don't know which street we came back up, but we ended back up on West Street, north, of course, of the towers.

Q. You walked around by the water?

A. Yeah. All right? Walk around by the water and then walked back. It's almost like I walked around that parking lot that was on the other side now. Cars were blowing up. I guess stuff hit it, and they started -- you know, it was pretty weird.

I don't know the time interval now, and now I came across the control guy from 21 engine, so because -- he didn't know where -- so it was kind of like we had to see each other. He was asking where the captain was. I didn't know if the captain was behind me or not. You didn't know, like I said, at the time I didn't know where anybody was then, if they followed us behind.

I would have to assume that -- you know, I didn't feel good about it, because I didn't assume -- I knew I wasn't out of the building that long, so they would have been out -- it wouldn't have been that much time for them to get out, anybody that was behind me.

So then it was just a waiting game then. Now everybody was -- because he didn't know still where a couple of our other guys -- because they were running from if building, too, and they just got out, but they were in a different direction, but then it was just -- we were there the whole -- you know, till late, sometime at night, but it was basically any time that we wanted to try to get in, it was just -- became so many people were there now that they weren't really letting us get in or other crews were already in, and it was just basically a waiting game on West Street, and somewhere. I forget where else we were.

And then after a certain time, we headed back. During the time I said we were hoping to hear. We were hearing so many conflicting stories. We thought maybe our captain was out. We found out he was the only one, of course, that didn't get out, and like I said, the rest of the time, I barely remember what happened. It was kind of like I was in a fog at that time, but that's basically the gist of my story.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay, William. Thanks a lot for your information.

The time now is 12:29, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ADRIENNE WALSH

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: The date is December 17, 2001. The time is time is 1445 hours.

This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual, Firefighter 2nd Grade Adrienne Walsh of Ladder Company 20 of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

The interview is taking place in the quarters of Ladder 20's office regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Could you please tell me what happened on that date.

A. Well, I wasn't working. I was in my car on the BQE. I had entered the Kent and Wythe Avenue exit, and we were in bumper to bumper traffic. I was on my way to fire ^ inaudible, and as I approached the towers, I saw through the warehouse buildings a white puff of smoke and what seemed like confetti, and I thought, oh that's interesting.

As we edged along, again, there was an opening between two, and I saw black smoke, and I saw three floors of fire, which I thought was very bad for a building like that. I knew we were on our way down there. We were about fourth due.

So I said, "Oh, damn. I'm missing the fire of the century."

As we inched along under the Promenade, I was listening to the radio, heard the DJ say that the second -- oh my God, the second building approaching, and all of a sudden, we pulled out again from a warehouse, and I saw the second explosion, so we had two buildings on fire.

I inched my way off on the Atlantic Avenue exit, sped to my parents' house and dropped the keys, car keys, off to them, because I didn't want to get a ticket for alternate side of the street parking.

I ran to my apartment and changed my clothes, put my running shoes on and literally ran to work. I got to the bottom of the Brooklyn Bridge and ran in front of -- I think it was Engine Company 246, and they gave me a lift across the bridge. I got off across the bridge and ran up to Lafayette Street.

By the time I got to the triangle here on Lafayette, the first tower just fell, and there were streams of people coming up Lafayette.

I ran into quarters, quickly went upstairs, put my uniform on, quickly ran downstairs, got my bunker gear on. When I got down here, I saw Greg Edwards and Captain Weldon had already come, and we were all running for gear.

58 truck was relocated here, so he said -- Captain Weldon told us to put every piece of equipment on the truck that we had, spare cylinders especially, anything we had.

So we did that, and all of a sudden the tone alarm went off, and I believe 58 got a call for a woman trapped in Cedar Street. I'm not completely sure about that.

We all piled on top of the rig, and he took off down Broadway. As we got past City Hall, the sky disappeared. It was like snow and crap everywhere just flying through the air. We got down. We parked. I think it's Liberty Plaza where the guy -- the plaster guy with the newspaper is sitting there.

We parked right outside there, and I go to the back of the rig to look for a Scott pack, because I have no air at all. We have plenty of cylinders. We have no mask.

As I got to the back of the rig, I don't know why, but I looked to my right, and I saw a black cloud the size of the biggest skyscraper I've ever seen actually coming, hurdling at us like a tornado, and I just yelled, "Run," and I took off.

Captain Weldon was in front of me. The chauffeur from 58 truck was over to my left just -- he was either even with me or just above me, and George Hough from Squad 18 was right behind me. We ran down the block toward the east side, and I thought to myself the building -- I knew it was the second tower going, and I thought if the building was going to collapse down, that if I beat the cloud, I would beat the building, and I saw the size of the cloud, and I knew I wasn't going to beat the cloud, but I gave it my best shot.

So I ran down the block, and three quarters of the way down the block, there was a door open. Some maintenance workers left the door open to the basement of another -- I think it was another office building. It was about the only light you saw. I ran into there.

I think the chauffeur from 58 got in first, Weldon then I -- Weldon was first. I crossed the saddle just as the black cloud took us over. I mean, you could just feel -- supposedly George told me he got blown down by the blast. He was not more than, I would say, ten yards behind me.

We got into the hallway. I turned around, and I started banging on the door, because I knew the guys were behind me, so they could find where I was, so banging on the door, banging on the door. "We're over here. We're over here."

We went into the hallway. We found some hose, and we went back outside, because we couldn't see a damn thing, and we used the hose -- we put the hose in the door, and we walked -- the hose outside, so we at least had a line to follow back to find anybody, and eventually black became a lighter black, it became a gray, it became like a really bad, bad snowstorm.

We then walked across Liberty -- to Liberty Plaza, where there were cars and lights on, and there were eventually -- there were people there. I don't know where they surfaced from, but there were a few people there saying people were stuck under things.

The skin of the building as all over the place, so we searched under the skin of the building, searched under the cars, through the cars. Nothing.

So we then decided we'd walk around to Cedar Street to see if anybody was, in fact, trapped in those buildings. We did walk around there. I think we spoke to somebody in the basement of the building, a person -- no, nobody was in that building, made a quick check of that area, the surrounding area, continued to walk -- I think it was down Cedar Street to the Westside Highway and got to the Westside Highway.

There were rigs everywhere and skeleton fire screws. For example, I mean, if you knew how many people, how much personnel was down there, to see those few individuals down there, you thought, where the heck is everybody else, but there were guys down there attempting to stretch lines from engine companies, which is what we were trying to do.

We kind of gathered at the median on the Westside Highway. There was an officer there. They decided to get a manifold in, because they were going to have to stretch numerous lines off this manifold, so we were working on stretching the manifold, picking up the lines, feeding the manifold, got all that hooked up, and there was no water pressure, so that was another problem.

We attempted to put out the car fires that we had with the water pressure we had, and then we proceeded up under the foot bridge to where the main tower here, closer to the Westside Highway, had collapsed, and Chief Haydon was on top of -- he was on top of the truck or what was left of the truck, and there were a bunch of us waiting down below, and I guess he was giving us directions, and "Guys, over this way, stay together. I don't know what to do with you."

So we mulled around there for awhile. I got myself a mask. I just found a mask in the street, and I picked it up and carried it with me. We walked -- we walked through the rubble around that way to where they wanted us to be. I forget what that street was where they kind of put us all over just to gather us and to get us all together.

So I saw Regina Wilson from 219. I spoke with her, trying to figure out -- that's where I saw the bulk of the people. After I got off the Westside Highway and we went further west down that block, that's where you saw more people, more firefighters. And for the rest of the day, we just searched through rubble.

Then we were instructed to search through two or three buildings to make sure they were stable, and then they pulled everybody out because of the pink building. Was it 7 World Trade, that was going?

Q. Right.

A. Then they pulled everybody out. But we went through a couple of buildings for stability. I remember doing that, at least three that I remember, and that's when we met up -- I meet up with Will Manion, Captain Weldon. A whole bunch of us were there.

Q. I just have a question or two.

When you said you were on West Street, did you head west again now?

A. I mean, with the water pressure problem.

Q. When you picked up with all those other people --

A. We were on --

Q. -- where the majority of firemen wound up being.

A. Right. It was off the west side, West Street, Westside Highway, whatever it is, past the first bit of rubble, and you would have to --

Q. Towards the water is what I'm asking.

A. Right, it would be towards the water. It was north and towards the water. You had to walk through the rubble, and it was about, I don't know, 8 inches of water you had to wade through.

You had to wade through that and then go up and over. I don't know -- it wasn't the block with Chi Chi's on it. I think it was one of the blocks before that, but I'm not sure.

Q. All right. When you went up West Street, you went under the south foot bridge?

A. Right.

Q. Was this past there you are talking about?

A. Just a little, not much. It was just one of the those streets off.

Q. Liberty Street probably.

A. Pretty -- probably, yeah.

We also searched -- I'm sorry, but before we did that, we went to the Rector Street subway station and searched down there. We went down to the tunnel. I had forgotten about that.

We went down to make sure that everybody was out. Pretty much everybody was out. We met one TA worker who was coming up the stairs as we were going down, and we went through the tunnel to where the debris was, and it was piled high in the tunnel, and then we came all the way back.

That's when we walked to the command post and then over or whatever that -- I guess it was the command post at that time. I don't know what it was.

Q. All those rigs you saw, you wouldn't know their locations? Near the foot bridge, whatever.

A. All of the rigs -- most of the rigs I saw were along West Street. Definitely, was it 113 I kept passing? I drank some of their water.

Then I saw -- as we got closer, I saw 226's rig, but I'm not going to remember where. I remember passing it, because it was my first company, so that's their rig. I thought they were okay, because they were far -- you know what I mean? I saw the rig. It wasn't -- I mean, the windows were blown out, but I thought oh, okay, maybe they're not in, but lots of -- a lot of crushed cars, a lot of crushed ambulances.

That day, I didn't see a lot of completely crushed vehicles, you know, windows blown out, dust all over the place, a side bashed in here, but the completely totalled ones I don't remember seeing that day. Like 219 I saw, and that was really -- had gone through the wringer, but it was okay, pumping. I don't remember -- when we saw Ladder 20, it was squashed.

Q. Approximately where did you see 219? You said they were pumping?

A. They were pumping -- they were pumping --

Q. Was it on West Street?

A. It was right off West Street, right near -- I'm going to say it's close to the Palm Court, but I was a little turned around at that point. They were near that area somewhere.

Q. South of the foot bridge, one of those streets south of the foot bridge?

A. They were north of the south bridge.

Q. All right. That's fine.

And 20 was north of the south bridge?

A. Oh, yeah. 20 was underneath.

Q. If there is anything else you care to add --

A. Unfortunately, no. Three o'clock in the morning, I'll start remembering, but, I mean, that was pretty much the bulk of the day.

I remember searching the buildings. I remember we were told to search the buildings for structural problems or to make sure things were okay.

I remember going through in and around that area a lot for long periods of time, in and around the Palm Court, going through the Palm Court.

We were there till, I think, eight o'clock, 7:30 eight o'clock.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: If you don't have anything else, that concludes the interview.

Thank you.

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN MORIBITO

Interview Date: December 12, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: The date is December 12, 2001. The time is 12:55 in the afternoon.

This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with John Moribito of Ladder Company 10 of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

The interview is taking place at the quarters of Engine 4, Ladder 15 in the engine office regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Fireman, Moribito, please tell me what happened in your own words.

A. On the morning of September 11, I arrived at Ladder 10, Engine 10's quarters at approximately eight a.m., and I relieved the chauffeur that was on duty the night before. I was scheduled to be the ladder company chauffeur that day.

At about quarter to nine, at 8:45, we were sitting in the kitchen enjoying a cup of coffee, and we heard what I describe as kind of a muffled boom, and it sounded like when a container truck rolls down the block and hits a pothole, and the container on the back of the truck rumbles.

The officer, Lieutenant Steve Harrell, who was the covering officer in Ladder 10 that day, looked across at me, and he asked me if that was normal for around that area. I said, "Yeah, it kind of sounded like a container truck."

When I finished my sentence, the house watchman ran in, and he apparently was very startled. He was very afraid, and he was yelling that a plane had just hit the trade center. A plane just hit the trade center. He repeated it twice.

We all jumped up from the table. We ran up to the front of our quarters out to the apparatus door, and the sky, which was a beautiful blue sky that September morning, had turned black. We could see up at the building. We couldn't tell at that point which building was involved with the crash, which one was on fire, but we could see smoke, and we could see debris falling from the building.

There was fire falling from the building. There were computers and pieces of desk. We noticed that there were also pieces of human being falling down from the sky and crashing in front of our quarters out on the street.

There were many people in the street right in front of the quarters that were startled. They were bleeding. Some were burnt. They were cowering in our house watch. We tried to pull as many of the people off the street as possible before we left quarters and brought them into the firehouse.

We jumped on the rig. We got our gear on. We pulled out of quarters. I had to be real careful, because people were running in front of the fire truck, and we couldn't really control them at that point.

Pulled out of quarters and very gingerly was trying to go across the street. [redacted]

We proceeded to make a left turn down Liberty Street. I stopped initially in front of 2 World Trade Center, and everyone on the rig was yelling up at me that it was 1 World Trade Center that was hit.

At that point, there was a stalled Lincoln Town Car, livery car, that was in front of us, and there was a woman driver, and she couldn't get the car to move. She couldn't get it in gear. She was in shock. She was jumping up and down. Eventually, a police officer came over. He jumped in the car. He tried to move it for her. He wasn't able to move it, so I did have to ram the car, and I pushed it out of the way. I opened up Liberty Street in order for the other engine that was behind us, Engine 10, to get up the block.

I came to the end, to West Street, and I made a right turn onto West Street, and I was barreling down. As I was approaching 1 World Trade Center, there was a Chinese man in the middle of the street, and he had been burnt pretty badly. At that point, we didn't know how he was burnt, but he was burnt. He was lying in the second lane from the right in the middle of the street, and he was still alive.

As I approached him, he lifted his head up off the street to look at me, and I stopped my rig and positioned it in a way that I would block him out so that no one coming around me would actually run over him, because they couldn't see him at that point.

That's where the members disembarked off the rig. They all jumped off. I myself jumped off to tend to the gentleman that was in the street. Terry Rivera, who had just gotten off that morning and took the run in with us, ran up to me and he asked me if he should go into the building being that he didn't have a Scott pack on, and I told him to assist me with the gentleman that was in the street.

The rest of the company ran into the building. I had run over to a volunteer ambulance that had arrived at the scene at the time. At about the same time the ambulance arrived, Ladder 1 and Engine 7 was pulling up. It was very quick, within the first 30 seconds of our arrival at the building.

The ambulance had pulled up. We took the gentleman that was in the street. We wrapped him in a burn blanket. We actually wet him down with a water can, and we put him on the stretcher, and we actually put him in the back of the ambulance, and they took him away.

Then I proceeded into the lobby of the building. When I walked through the lobby, there was broken glass everywhere. There were also two people in the lobby, a gentleman who was already burned and was dead, and a female. She was nude. Her clothes had burnt away. Her skin was burnt away. She was still alive. She was trying to communicate. Her eyes were sealed shut. Her throat apparently was sealed. She couldn't really communicate. Within the next two minutes, she had perished right there. We never actually got her any assistance. We couldn't get her an ambulance, and we didn't get her out of there.

At that point, I heard my officer, Lieutenant Harrell, call down to the chauffeur, myself, and asked me to do a perimeter check on the building, so I ran into the courtyard between 1 World Trade Center and 2 World Trade Center, and I made my report that the south side of the tower had visible flames showing from it at approximately the 80th Floor.

At that point, I wasn't able to see the entire perimeter of the tower, but there was fire showing around the entire perimeter of the north tower, Tower No. 1.

Then I looked down, and there were people approaching me and asking me if they should evacuate the building. I said, "Absolutely. Evacuate both buildings, if you can. Get out while you can now."

I noticed in the courtyard that there were valises, suitcases, strewn about the courtyard. There were wallets everywhere, broken glass, and then I noticed that there were airplane tickets.

I started to get a picture of the size of the airplane that had hit the building. Up until then, we thought it was maybe a small two-seater plane, and now we were starting to get the idea that it was maybe a larger or a commercial airliner.

I also started to notice that there were what I thought was insulation or what I described as insulation. It was gray and pink, and it was all over the place, and it turned out that this was human flesh, people that had been blown apart from the impact or from the plane exploding itself, and I noticed that they were everywhere. They were all over the floor, all over the courtyard.

So I made that report to my officer, that I think this was a bigger plane than we had expected or what we thought it was initially.

I went back into the lobby. At that point, I had no idea where my company had gone. I know they went up the B staircase, but I didn't know what floor they were on, so I remained in the lobby and helped evacuate people that were now exiting the building.

I saw the chiefs. Chief Pfeifer from Battalion 1 come in. Along with him was the battalion aide, and the French filmmaker, who happened to be standing in the lobby at the time, and he was videotaping everything that was occurring.

Later on, I started to see other companies come in. I saw Ladder 15, and I saw Engine 4. They walked past me. I don't know what building they had gone into. I saw members of 21 truck. I saw members that I had recognized the -- I believe it was the Division 3's aide, who I went to the academy with. His name was James Smagala. I saw him in the lobby. Chief Cashin.

At that point, I was helping evacuate. Police officers had come up to me and asked me if I knew the building. I said I had. They said, "Well, we don't want to send people out onto West Street because there are people jumping, and there's falling debris and glass." What was the best way to get them out of the building?

I suggested that we send them through the plaza area, which was actually underneath 1 and 2 World Trade Center, and we would send them down into the subways and help them evacuate through the 1 and 9 line, I believe, and they would come up on Chambers Street or on Church Street, but in any event, they would be further away from the building, and they would be underground, which I felt was safe.

So that's what we did. I was the first member in the evacuation line, and I was directing people through a revolving door from 1 World Trade Center into the plaza area. I describe it as an organized chaos. As afraid as they were, as fearful for their lives as they were, they listened to directions very well, and it actually made me feel proud that New Yorkers had come together the way they had and helped out one another, that no one ran out of the building just in fear of their own lives, but actually stopped and helped everyone along the way.

The sprinklers were going off in the lobby in the plaza. There was broken glass in the plaza. As people were exiting to get away from the building, some of them were running, and they would slip and fall, and they would get gashed wide open. They had major lacerations to the back of their head, to their back, to their lower torso. We were fortunate enough to have EMS nearby, and we put those people on stretchers almost immediately and got them out of the building immediately.

The majority of the people did listen to our directions, and they did slow down, and they were walking in a calm manner. We were able to get -- in my opinion, I counted approximately 3 or 4,000 people that had walked past us and evacuated into the lobby.

There were two gentleman from Fire Patrol No. 2, that were right on the other side of the revolving door where I had set up for the evacuation. After a couple of minutes, we heard -- I heard over the department radio, "Prepare for impact. A second plane is approaching the building."

At that point, we all looked at each other and realized that it was now a terrorist attack. There was no way that two planes could hit the building in such a short amount of time on such a clear, blue sky, clear day.

I felt the impact of the second plane. I felt the building shake. I saw the lights flicker. At that point, I started to get nervous and wonder whether or not the buildings would come down.

I approached the chiefs. The chiefs were assured by the engineers of the building that there was no way that the buildings would come down. They actually said that the buildings could take -- withstand ten airplanes hitting it, and there was no way that the buildings could come down.

I also saw Mike Hurley and James Corcoran -- I'm sorry, James Corrigan -- who were the fire safety directors at the World Trade Center, who I had met a couple of times before, and they were running around. They were trying to keep some organization and trying to give as much information to the chiefs as possible as to the structure of the building.

I went back to my post to help continue evacuate people. After I would guess it was about an hour, but seemed like just a few minutes, it seemed like people had stopped coming down. They stopped coming down off the escalators. People weren't using the elevators, and I had walked into 1 World Trade lobby from the plaza area to look to see if anybody else was coming down.

I noticed that some of the elevators had been blown out of their shafts. They came down and crashed out of the shaft. They were buckled, and I had noticed that there were people still in the elevators. I believe that they were at that point deceased.

Then I saw the lights in both buildings went out, and I heard the rumble. At that point, I didn't know what was happening, but 2 World Trade Center was collapsing.

I tried to get back to the doorway where I had just emerged from, and I saw the members of Fire Patrol 2 and some civilians and police officers get down on their hands and knees, and I saw them buried in rubble. I saw the debris fall on top of them and push them against the wall. They weren't able to get through the doorway where I was on the other side which was somewhat of a safe haven.

The building came down. The rush of wind lifted me up off the ground, and threw me about 30 feet back into the lobby of 1 World Trade Center. I got myself up. I scrambled back to the doorway. I felt that the only safety area that I had was trying to be underneath that enclosure, which was a marble and steel doorway.

After the building collapsed, I jumped up, realized that I was still alive, and now I tried to make my way out of the building. I did hear at that point the Fire Department pass alarms were going all around me, and what I could imagine to be about ten or fifteen voices, firemen that were exclaiming they were still alive, not to leave them behind, to come back and get them, that they were okay, that they were pinned, that they maybe had broken limbs, but that they were alive. They were covered underneath some debris. There was a lot of dust we couldn't see, but in any event, they were alive, and they were yelling for help.

I tried to look around briefly for somebody. I couldn't find anyone. I saw a couple of flashlights in the distance. I walked straight ahead. I ran into the elevators. The elevators were completely out of the shafts at this point. All the elevators -- I could see members were crushed in between them. I could see civilians were crushed in between the elevators.

I tried to make my way to the left of the elevators where the guard station was. There was debris from floor to ceiling at that point. I couldn't get through there. I made my way to the right of the elevators, which was underneath the escalator, and I saw -- I was following a gray patch on the wall, and then I saw a white patch. I realized that was a window.

I ran to the window. I stopped in the window. I took my flashlight off my helmet. I flashed it into the building, yelling out that this was a way out, that if anybody was alive, this was the way to go, follow the flashlight.

Approximately six firemen and two civilians had come out that window with me. At that point, I couldn't see which company they were with. They were covered in gray soot and ash. Their helmets were covered. I couldn't tell or determine who they were, but there were about six firemen and two civilians that came out that window.

We ran across West Street, which was at that point littered with debris, including beams and broken glass, but not to the point where West Street was covered. West Street was still fairly open that we could run across it.

When I got out there, I saw Engine 10, which was parked right in front of the building, had been hit by a beam, what I found out later to be 67 tons in weight, and it had actually completely demolished Engine 10. It was on top of it, and at that point, Engine 10 was crushed.

I also heard someone yelling for the Engine 10 chauffeur over the radio, and I stopped briefly by Engine 10 to look for the chauffeur to see if he was possibly there, if he was pinned. Maybe if he was hiding underneath the rig, I could have gotten him out of there, but after looking quickly around the rig, I didn't notice any Fire Department gear. I didn't see the chauffeur. I realized he must have gotten away.

One of the female civilians that came out of the window with me kept falling. She'd run two or three steps, and she'd fall. I'd pick her up by the seat of her pants. I was throwing her in front of myself to try to keep her in front of me. She'd get up. She'd fall.

Not realizing it, but now thinking back, she had probably had a broken leg, if not two broken legs, and wasn't able to run, but I did manage to continue to throw her all the way across West Street and into the arms of an EMS worker, who put her on a stretcher and got her out of there immediately.

At that point, I started to run northwest. I dropped off my cylinder right at the center divider of West Street and started to run northwest away from the building towards the water, towards the Hudson River and towards where the rest of my company was yelling they were headed towards Stuyvesant High School.

After going about two or three blocks, I was far enough away from the smoke to turn around and see that what I thought had happened actually had happened, that No. 2 World Trade Center did completely collapse, and not until that moment -- not until that point did I realize that the trade center actually was down.

After seeing that 2 World Trade Center had collapsed, I could see that it was a bad situation for 1 World Trade Center. I reported to the chief that there were maybe 40 or 50 members that were standing fast in that lobby, Chief Pfeifer, and he himself was in that lobby, and he got out of there, and he knew that there were a lot of the members in there.

I don't know at that point if anybody ever went back into the lobby of 1 to see if any of the members that were injured in there would have been able to get out of there, had they been able to get in there to help those people. I don't know if that occurred. But only after about 15 minutes and after running about two or three blocks away from the trade center, I started to see the top of 1 World Trade Center began to buckle, and at that point I thought the building was going to come down towards the north, and I wasn't far enough away at that point, and I needed to continue to run.

So I got back up with the rest of members from Ladder 10 and Engine 10, and we started to run further from the building, and then the building had come down upon itself, and at that point, we realized that now it was time to turn around and go back to the building to look for members that were possibly injured or pinned.

After going back to the building and regrouping, trying to report to chiefs to find out exactly how we should attack this, I had hooked up with members of Engine 10, Ladder 10 and other guys, and we grabbed some hose lines. We were trying to help extinguish some cars that were on fire, a couple of ambulances.

I quickly checked in the back of a ambulance to see if there was somebody maybe that was in there that had gotten pinned or was burning. We put out a couple of car fires.

We ran back to the building and then seemed like all day long we were running back and forth into the building and out of the building as other structures were possibly going to collapse, and which, in fact, after a couple of hours No. 7 World Trade Center did collapse.

So it was a continuous running back and forth and trying to help out as best we can looking for members, putting out fires, trying to make whatever kind of rescue efforts we can, try to get as many tools out of whatever rigs were close by, try to do some digging, still not knowing whether or not there were explosives in the cars surrounding the area, didn't really know whether or not there were more airplanes incoming, if the terrorist attack was actually over at that point.

The rest of the day, just trying to regroup with as many people as you can and try to get together and do some kind of effort to help the members.

Myself, knowing that there were people in the lobby of 1 World Trade, I entered through 6 World Trade to get into that lobby, only to find out that the lobby area was completely crushed. There was no way to even determine where it was at that point to try to figure out how to attack it or try to get in there and look for bodies or look for people.

That's pretty much it, and the next couple of days back and forth to the firehouse, trying to make the best effort we can to look underground, to look into the subways, to try to find people that we knew were alive. We had never come across anybody. We didn't come across anybody that was alive in any of the voids that we searched.

Then the next couple of days it became more and more organized and became a better effort to try to look for people, but, once again, never finding anybody, never coming across anyone that was alive from Engine 10 or Ladder 10.

Q. Are you finished?

A. Yes.

Q. A couple of questions.

A. Sure.

Q. After the first collapse, you said you heard people giving radio transmissions.

Did they identify themselves at all?

A. No, there was no identification given over the radio. I would imagine it almost sounded as if they were getting information off police radios, because they were giving me -- I also heard coming over the radio that they had heard that a plane just hit the Supreme Court building, a plane had hit the Pentagon, and this was coming over our radios.

Somebody, I would imagine, was out in the street and was maybe hearing something over the Police Department radio and was just making transmissions, whether they realized it was true or not.

Q. You said you hooked up with 10 and 10 later on and then by Stuyvesant.

Did most of those guys survive?

A. We had -- I think there were about 14 guys that day. We had 11 guys on duty and three guys that were laying over that had just got off, and we lost five, five of those guys.

Q. When you hooked up with the other guys, did they say where they had been operating?

A. Yeah. Members of Engine 10 had made it up to about the 23rd Floor of the B stairwell in Tower 1. They had stopped there because someone was suffering from chest pains, and I believe it was a fireman that was suffering chest pains, and they stopped to assist him.

The officer, Lieutenant Atlas, continued up on his way, and I had heard the last report that he gave was on the 44th Floor. He said he was on the 44th Floor and continuing up, that he was going to try to get water on the fire.

At that point, Engine 10, the entire company wasn't with him. He was on his own, possibly with members of another company.

Officer of Ladder 10, the last I heard from him, he was on about the 31st Floor. That was the last radio transmission I heard from Ladder 10, and I would imagine that he continued up with Lieutenant Atlas, because they had gotten in at the same time.

Q. If you have anything else to add, you are welcome to do it. Otherwise, this is the end of the interview.

A. No, that's pretty much it. That's our adventure.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Thanks for your time.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREMAN JOHN OTTRANDO

Interview Date: December 14, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 17th, 2001. The time is 1100 hours. That's a.m. This is Battalion Chief Robert Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with John Ottrando, fireman first grade, of Engine Company 24 of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

The interview is taking place in the quarters of Engine 24 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Fireman Ottrando, tell me what happened to you on September 11th, 2001.

A. My company and I pulled up to Vesey and West Street, parked on that corner. My company got off the rig. They took their rollups. They went into the north tower. I stayed there. I hooked up to the standpipe system that was there.

After I hooked up, I went into the lobby of the north tower and I saw the command post being set up there. I noticed some people on the floor that were badly burned. One man was deceased, and there was a woman there that was very badly burned.

I went out to get EMS to come in to help her. They were very busy, and I just asked them for some blankets. I went back into the lobby of the north tower, and I covered the civilians up. I stayed with the woman until EMS came in, and I helped them take her away.

I saw Battalion 2 in the lobby of the north tower. After that I stayed there a few more minutes, and then I went out to my company. We were stretching hose. I saw the second plane hit the south tower.

Then we really didn't have anything to do because we were all hooked up and everything. There were people jumping everywhere, and we really couldn't help them.

I saw Lieutenant Giammona. He asked me if I had a spare mask. I told him I did not. Somebody had already taken it. I saw him go into the north tower. That was the last time I saw him. He was by himself, as far as I could tell.

I was outside, still playing with some hose, when the south tower fell. I could see debris falling. I saw the dust cloud coming towards me, and I took off and I went behind a car on Vesey Street. Day turned to night, and I couldn't breathe that well.

So I felt my way north up West Street by sense of direction. Some women grabbed me and she threw me against the building and she was washing my eyes out.

Then I was on the corner of -- I was on West Street, north on West Street, and then the second tower fell. I never got back to my rig.

That's about it.

Q. Where did you go then?

A. Then I stayed north. I never went back south. I never went back downtown. I went to Broadway because they told me there was a command post over there. I couldn't find my company. I found them one at a time.

A couple of guys that were in my company that weren't on duty were there. I found them. I could not find 5 Truck at all. I was looking for them.

That's about it.

Q. That was it?

A. That was it.

Q. I just have a couple of questions. You said you went down there with the company. Do you know what your assignment was, the first due? It was Engine 24.

A. Right.

Q. You were the chauffeur?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you on the second alarm assignment?

A. Second alarm, yes, second alarm.

Q. And when you went into the command post, you saw some chiefs and stuff.

A. Yeah.

Q. Do you know who the chiefs were?

A. I saw Chief Hayden, I saw the Commissioner, I saw Chief McGovern.

Q. This was in the north tower?

A. Lobby of the north tower.

Q. Chief McGovern?

A. Yes, and his aide.

Q. When you said you saw Battalion 2, that's who you meant?

A. Yes.

Q. Any other companies at the command post that you can remember?

A. I can't remember exactly. I saw companies come in. I saw 5 Truck go in. I remember seeing 5 Truck go in. I can't remember the numbers of the other companies coming in.

Q. And as far as chiefs, those guys --

A. Those are the chiefs I saw, yes.

Q. Like I said, you were with Engine Company 24.

A. Yes.

Q. Lieutenant Giammona that you mentioned, he was off duty, but he was one of the officers in Ladder 5 Truck that responded by himself?

A. Yes. He was off duty.

Q. Okay. Unless you can remember any other companies that were parked behind you --

A. I saw 7 Engine parked south of the north tower in the street on West Street. I can't remember other companies.

Q. When you said you were outside stretching hoses with your company, did they then subsequently go inside the building?

A. No. My company was in the building at that time, and I was being helped by Fireman Jimmy Miller, who was off duty and had come up.

He was helping me stretch the lines.

Q. Do you happen to know where 24 Engine went? Up B, A stair or anything like that?

A. I couldn't say for sure. I think it was B stair.

Q. So you weren't with them when they went to the command post and ended up getting an assignment?

A. No, no. I was preoccupied with helping those two civilians, so I really didn't notice where they went.

Q. Okay. Anybody else you can remember at the command post?

A. No. Those are the only people I remember seeing.

Q. Since you were outside, did you see them at any point set up a command post outside?

A. Outside, no.

Q. Okay. Anything else? If you don't have anything else, that's the end of the interview. Do you have anything to add?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Thanks a lot.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER EDWARD GANASSA

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 17th, 2001. The time is 3:02 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, New York City Fire Department, Safety Battalion, conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER GANASSA: Edward Ganassa, Engine 312, Battalion 49, Division 14.

CHIEF BURNS: This interview is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you would, Ed, in your own words, just tell us what happened on that day.

A. Okay. I was working the Monday night and Tuesday day. On Tuesday morning, 9/11, the computer went off to respond to the staging area on Huntspoint Avenue and Vernon Boulevard.

We proceeded to the staging area. We lined up with a few other companies that were there. We stood there approximately 25 to 30 minutes. I'm getting the call to respond in to the Trade Center. I don't know the time.

We went through the Midtown Tunnel, following in a caravan with other rigs, and we stationed our rig on West Street. At that time we got our Scott packs on and started walking with other firemen towards the north tower.

About five to ten minutes after arriving, I saw one to two jumpers -- two jumpers exactly jump off the tower, and about two to three minutes later, the tower fell down. We were covered with dust. We were not hit by any large debris.

After the dust settled, we found the 49 Battalion and his aide, the chief and his aide, and we assisted the companies in searching for firemen and civilians. We stayed there until approximately 11, 11:30 at night, and then we were told to respond back to our firehouse.

Q. When you went in, Ed, do you know approximately what your location was where you saw or heard the building about to come down?

A. We were at West Street, and there was a small pedestrian bridge. We were probably about 200 to 300 feet north of that bridge. There was a staging area, I believe. It was a secondary staging area.

Q. When the building started to come down, which way did you run?

A. Uptown, north.

Q. When you were the staging area, did you see any other units?

A. At the staging area? Where I parked the rig, there were many rigs there. I recognized the ones from our company: 262, 307, 263 I believe was there. At the staging area there were no rigs; it was just chiefs and Commissioners.

Q. And that staging area was north of the bridge?

A. Yeah, it should be just north of the bridge if I remember correctly.

Q. Did you guys ever come south of that or you stayed there waiting?

A. Not until after the collapse. After the collapse and the dust lifted slightly, then we proceeded south of there.

Q. Thanks.

CHIEF BURNS: That's the end of our interview. It's 3:06 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL BEEHLER

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 17, 2001. The time is 1616 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen King with the Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Firefighter Michael Beehler, Firefighter 6 grade from Ladder company 110, who had the irons position on September 11. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Mike, you can start whenever you want.

A. Okay. That morning I was sitting in the house watch at about quarter to nine, when a few Lieutenants or a few officers were out front. We had the apparatus doors open. We were just finishing checking out the rig and one of the Lieutenants from the field comm. unit had said that he saw smoke and he said wow, what is that over there. Do they have something going in Manhattan or is that just a compactor fire.

I was on the house watch and I said I don't know. Let me turn the radio on, so I went in and turned the radio on. With that I heard a second alarm being transmitted at the World Trade Center.

With that, I notified my officer, because we go on box 8031 to the World Trade Center on a second alarm or greater. So I let him know that we were probably going to be going. Went out and got geared up and came back into the office, turned the TV on and we saw what they were saying was a plane crash into the north tower.

With that, we were just waiting to get sent and we got sent about 3, 4 minutes after that. We all got on the rig. Went over with 31, Battalion 31 followed us. As we were going over, I remember looking out the window of the rig and seeing a lot of smoke and saying wow, this is something. I remember hearing over the radio that they had a lot of fire there and they had jumpers and what not.

As we got to Manhattan -- we went over the Brooklyn Bridge. As we got to Manhattan, there was a lot traffic, a lot of people on the road. We got pulled up. We had came down Broadway and as we got to Liberty Street, I believe -- yes, we got to Liberty Street and made the right off of Broadway on to Liberty and we were on Liberty between Broadway and I believe Church and we had gotten off the rig with Battalion 31. We were speaking to them on where we should go because we were assigned to the north tower.

I remember just hearing an explosion that basically I can't describe the sound of. It was actually the second plane crashing in. We were on the side, we were on the south side of the south tower when it came down -- I mean when the plane crashed in. I just basically said to myself something is not right here. It didn't feel right to me. I told my boss, just I said to him this doesn't feel right. We don't belong here. He said yes, I know, come on.

As we looked up though, when it happened, alls we saw was a big ball of flames and the flames went away. We saw a lot of smoke and debris was heading everywhere. People were just running. People scattering like -- the best way to say it is like a scattering of roaches when you turn the lights on. People were going anywhere that they could.

We got back in the rig, we backed up on to Broadway, went up to, I believe it's Battery Park or wherever it was. We went down, made the next right, which was back on Church Street. We came back down on to Church Street. We parked the rig in front of, I think 5 World Trade Center it was. Looking on the map here.

We got out, grabbed all our stuff. I had the irons, I grabbed the irons, the bunny tool and we all grabbed extra cylinders and we started making our way up towards Vesey. We made it down to Vesey and on to West Street, walking into the northwest corner of the north tower. They had a mini command post set up, I believe it was from the First Division.

We walked in, Lieutenant Mera, the officer, he said, he told us to stand to the side while he went and got an assignment. We all put our stuff down. Engine 207, came in, followed us in and the guys that were working from the engine, the three guys that were on the back step came in with the officer. The officer went to the desk and they came over and joined us where we were standing.

We were only there for maybe about 2 minutes when Lieutenant Mera came over. He said come on, we are going up to the 21 floor. There are reports of people trapped there. We had a Battalion Chief with us. I don't know the Chief's name.

Q. Chief Picciotto?

A. I believe so. We all picked our stuff up. He said he thought there was a bank of elevators that were working. So we went up to the mezzanine, I believe it was. We went up the escalator to the mezzanine. There was a bank of elevators there that were still in service, so we took that up to, I believe the 15 or 16th floor. We got up and then we walked up to the 23 floor from there in the B staircase, I believe it was.

People were coming down. People were calm in the staircase, they didn't really seem too overanxious. They were saying god bless you, this and that. We made our way up to the 23 floor. We dropped our stuff that we didn't need. At that point I just put the irons with my (inaudible) for the can. We went back down to the 21 floor and we started just searching the 21st floor. All the doors were locked. We were forcing all the doors. There was nobody on the floor. We practically searched the entire floor. We hadn't found anybody.

There was one last section that we went to go search and as we went in there, two of us -- two guys went to the right and two guys went to the left. I was one of the guys that went to the left. It was like an office there where it was like a split office almost. I was by I guess the outer part of the building and I just remember feeling the building starting to shake and this tremendous tremendous like roar and I just

-- I kind of didn't even notice it, but like out of the corner of my eye, I saw out of the building, I saw a shadow coming down.

At that point I thought it was the upper part of the north tower that had just basically like toppled over, fell off. I didn't actually see the building part go by me, because I think I was on the opposite side. But I just remember feeling this tremendous tremendous shake and hearing this, like, noise. Again I can't describe.

What I did was I ended up running out. I ran into the staircase where my officer and the rest of the guys that were with us at that time, we jumped into the staircase and nobody really knew what was going on. After that, everything had stopped. The boss told me and Artie Riccio, who was driving, to go check out the part where we just were down the hall a little bit, so the two of us went back down and we had searched the part where we had just been about 5 minutes prior to that.

All the windows in that area were all blown out. It was like a big office, it was a computer office. I don't know what they were doing there. But all the windows were blown out and dust was coming in.

Again we just searched there, there was no structural damage at that point on the 21 floor. We made our way out and as we were making our way back down to the hallway where the officer was, I heard on the radio, a Chief come over the radio. I don't know his name.

He said this is Chief so and so. I personally am ordering everybody out of the building now. Anybody in the north tower get out now. Lieutenant Mera said to all of us, he said come on, we got to get out. He said make sure to stay together. We are all going to get out, we are all going to go down together. We are all going to get out together. Once we get out, we will decide where we are going to go. Once we get downstairs we will decide where we are going to go.

With that we went downstairs. There was another truck company ahead of us. What we did was we basically piggy backed towards where --

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Time is 1626 hours. I'm stopping the interview.

The time is 1702 hours. We are restarting the interview, continuing the interview with Firefighter Beehler. Okay, Mike.

A. At the time when I heard the loud noise and felt the building shake, we all ended up back in the staircase after re-searching the one area. We had gotten the order to evacuate the building. Lieutenant Mera told us all to stay together and as we started making our way down, we, like I said, we piggy backed floors with another truck company, forcing each door on the way down. Like they took the odd floors, we took the even floors, to make sure there was nobody on that floor and make sure that everybody heard the evacuation order.

We got down to the 9th floor and from there down it was very congested. It felt like we waited on each landing for about 30 seconds to a minute, because the staircases were packed with members of the Fire Department that were evacuating. So you did get to 9, then you got down to 8-1/2. Felt like you waited another 30 seconds to a minute. Got down to 8 and continued to go down.

When we got down to the lobby I just remember seeing all the windows in the north tower on the lobby floor blown out and there was like dust and debris everywhere. I actually remember picking up a helmet, thinking it was a Chief's helmet, and I said to Lieutenant Mera, I said, wow, some Chief dropped his helmet here and as I picked it up, my fingers smudged a little piece of it off. I saw it was a fireman's helmet. The Chief came other over, took the helmet.

As we were walking out, we walked out the same place where we came in, and I remember seeing the board there by itself with nobody there. There was a guy actually standing outside the building telling us if it was safe or not to come out because he said there were jumpers coming down at that time.

He said come on, come on, go. We went out and we stopped right outside the building. We actually sat on 3 truck's bumper I remember just because a few friends of mine were in the company. I remember stopping and we all sat down and Pauly Hyland, who had the OV, said if this building comes down run up against this garage. We were under the foot bridge. He said run up against this garage, we might have a chance to live.

With that Lieutenant Mera turned to us and said come on, why don't we go down a little further. We all got up. We started walking. We were walking west on West Street, continued to go and as we kept on walking we stopped at a rig. I got some water.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Time is 1705 hours.

I'm stopping this interview.

The time is 1706 hours. We are restarting the interview again.

A. We continued to walk west on West Street and we finally had stopped, I believe it was at engine 224's rig and we weren't there for more than 30 seconds when Paul Hyland, again, the OV said something to the effect of oh, my god, it's coming down, run for your lives. Turned around to see the north tower coming down. At this time I had just taken my mask off and I just laid it down. I went to grab my mask and as I went to grab it, 10 guys just caught me and just swept me up with them and I just started running, figuring maybe I could out run it.

I remember turning back around and seeing it right behind me and basically said this is it. I figured I was going to die right then and there. I put my head down and as I put my head down, I just started walking, I saw there was a mask laying in the middle of the street. I looked around, there was nobody around it. I just remember, I said, all right, I'm going to pick it up. I picked it up.

As I was putting it on my back, I got covered in the dust cloud. I went to put the mask on, I had turned the cylinder on. Couldn't see anything. I wasn't able to breathe. I just remember trying to put the mask on. The regulator face piece came apart and tried -- I was able to get the regulator and the face piece together. Took a hit -- took a hit breath of air.

At that point I was looking for a place to go because there was debris, nothing big coming down, because we were about a block, block and a half away but just to get someplace where it was safe because I didn't know what else was going to happen. I ended up finding an ambulance. I jumped into the ambulance. They brought me in. I stayed there until the dust cleared. Tried to get Lieutenant Mera on the radio, but there was a lot of radio traffic. Guys giving Maydays and everything like that.

I just started walking up West Street because I knew they were ahead of me. I finally saw them by Stuyvesant High School. We got together and there were 4 guys there. I was the fifth. Mike Brodbeck, who was detailed from the 210, he was the sixth guy. Lieutenant Mera knew he was all right. He was being treated by EMS because he hurt his shoulder, running into an ambulance or something.

We just basically hung out there for a little while and as the day went on, we basically just sat around, waiting to get some more orders. I remember seeing a lot of guys coming in. At that point guys grabbed, they took some of our radios and they took some of the tools that we had left. They went up and they tried to, I guess do some searching and whatever they could do.

I think it was around like 6:00 later on that night, we all decided, all the guys from the house had come in and we found-- we had known at that point that 207 was unaccounted for so, basically we just said let's see if we can find them, find a rig, find something, find our rig, because we didn't know anything that was going on. This is including -- this was after 7 World Trade Center had collapsed also.

We went searching. We searched for about an hour and a half. We ended up finding our rig about a few blocks away from where we parked it. We had no luck finding 207 or 207's rig. Basically we just came back here and that was it. We went to the chart that we were on, 24 on, 24 off. We just went on with that.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: All right, Mike. It's 1710 hours. This interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DEAN BELTRAMI

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 17, 2001. The time is 3:40 p.m.

I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, New York City Fire Department, safety battalion, conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER BELTRAMI: Firefighter Dean Beltrami.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Engine Company 260 in regard to the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you would, Dean, just tell us in your own words what happened on that day.

A. We responded to the alarm. We responded to a staging area in Queens by the Midtown Tunnel.

When we got there, we waited for other units to arrive in the battalion. The battalion chief arrived. He said that we were going to wait until the tunnel was checked for bombs before we went through the tunnel. There was probably maybe close to a half hour wait there. Then we proceeded through the tunnel.

While crossing midtown, or I believe just when we were coming out of the tunnel, we heard reports of a collapse. I was thinking -- I personally thought it was, like, a couple of floors. I thought it was a bad thing, but I didn't hear a catastrophic collapse over the department radio, so personally, I didn't know if it was a catastrophic collapse, or just a minor collapse or whatever.

After awhile, I got, I heard the word catastrophic collapses occurred, and then I realized that one building -- that would be the south tower -- came down, Building 2.

So we responded . We were coming across 34th Street. We got to the Westside Highway, proceeded south, around where I heard the -- there was a guy on the department radio on the rig screaming that he was trapped under a rig. It was extremely frantic screaming, and it kind of got you nervous. [redacted] This guy is screaming for his life, and they can't find him.

So then we proceeded down West Street and when I heard a handie-talkie report of Firefighter Kevin Shea, I knew Kevin Shea from another company that I worked at. Kevin Shea is missing. Immediately after I heard Kevin Shea is safe. He's in an ambulance.

There wasn't much other -- I wasn't hearing much handie-talkie reception otherwise, because I had the nozzle position. I didn't have a radio.

The chief had us park quite a distance away, at least ten, maybe close to 15 blocks, in my opinion, away from the south tower. I'm sorry, Tower No. 1 on West Street, on Westside Highway, and I was thinking this is an awful long walk to go. How are we going to get down there. We grabbed roll-ups. We grabbed spare bottles.

We began to walk. Pretty much my whole battalion was walking down the Westside Highway together. When we got to about a block, say about a block and a half north of the north tower, in between Barclay and Vesey Street, we dropped our gear to get ready to enter the buildings, and the lieutenant and officers that were with my battalion proceeded to try to report in to the chief.

Just maybe about a minute had gone by, and somebody said, "Look, the building is starting to bulge." We looked up, and you could see the entire facade starting to buckle on the upper floors. Immediately nobody said anything. We just turned and ran as fast as we possibly could.

I could see that no heavy debris was going to hit me, but I still ran as fast as I could all the way to Stuyvesant High School, and I got to about -- right before I got to Stuyvesant High School, the cloud caught up to me.

I continued to run at a slower speed until I was out of the cloud, stopped, because there was a north wind. I donned my mask and went back into the cloud to make sure we could see if we could regroup some of my members that were with me, and we went back into the cloud to see if we could find anybody that was hurt or -- and we proceeded to head back towards the buildings.

We got to within a hundred feet or so of where the north tower stood, and the chief ordered us back saying that there was -- I don't know the chief's name, but he ordered us back saying there was a gas main underneath us, and it could blow.

We proceeded to go back one block to that post. Then slowly but surely every two minutes or so when we started to regroup we were pulled back further, and further and further until we were behind -- until we were past Stuyvesant High School.

At that time, there was a bomb threat in Stuyvesant High School, and we evacuated that area and went further up West Street until we were a good distance away, probably -- I'm not sure of the street, which street it was on, but it was quite a distance away.

Throughout the rest of the day, we weren't put back in to work. We were considered to have worked already, because we were covered in dust, and in the evening we got to do a little bit of work, but that was it, and then we were sent back to quarters.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: That concludes the interview. Thanks, Dean.

The time is 3:45 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT BRENDAN WHELAN

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

]

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 17, 2001. The time is 2:54 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan, Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Lieutenant Brendan Whelan of Engine 35, in the quarters of Engine 35.

Q. Lieutenant, just give us the facts as you recall them.

A. Okay. 35 Engine responded down to the World Trade Center after the second plane had hit. I believe it was the second fifth alarm that was given. We were assigned down on that. 35 Engine was the staging area for a number of the Bronx companies. We waited until those companies arrived and we all went down as one unit together. It was about six or seven of us, different units.

We were told to report in to a command post that was supposed to be at Vesey and West. On our way down the West Side Highway we had heard of a collapse of the first building, at the first building, which would have been 2 World Trade I believe was the first one to come down. Is that correct?

Q. Yes.

A. We didn't realize the extent of the collapse. Myself, I thought it was an isolated collapse. After the initial collapse we heard a number of people giving Maydays over the hand -- over the department radio. As we got down to -- we could only get our rig into about Barclay and West. We left our rig there and we walked up to Vesey, to Vesey Street.

Upon my getting to Vesey, we couldn't find the command post and [redacted]. We still hadn't realized that the whole building had come down. I took my crew as we started to head towards the pedestrian walkway that connects --

Q. The northern one?

A. Yes.

-- the American Express with 6 World Trade. We got to that area and as we approached, 1 World Trade started to collapse. At that point I told my men -- we were carrying all our gear -- to drop our gear and to basically high tail it up the West Side Highway as quick as we could.

We got shelter from the collapse, I guess it would be, between Barclay and Murray Street and after the collapse we -- immediately after the collapse I was able to regroup my crew and we headed back into the collapse zone and we operated at this time at the collapsed pedestrian bridge and 6 World Trade Center.

We operated there for -- it was quite a while. About three hours. We stretched the line off 24 Engine, was pumping there. We augmented water to that, to a number of hydrants in the area. We stretched the line off 24, because at the time there was a lot of car fires and there was a parking lot there I don't see on the map here.

So we were doing searches, stretching lines. We were doing everything that we could possibly do. We were kind of overwhelmed at the task at hand. Like I said, we operated for about three, three and a half hours and then we went to take a breather and as we moved out of the area we weren't permitted back in the area by that time by a number of chiefs that were in charge. Then we signed in at the command post and waited to be used, which we were never used. We ended up taken up out of there maybe about 10, 11:00 o'clock that night.

Q. Earlier when you heard maydays, do you remember any specific companies? Do you remember any specific information about the maydays?

A. I remember the dispatchers asking who was giving the maydays over the air. I don't really recall who was giving the maydays, because there were a number of them and they were stepping on each other on the department radio. I remember the dispatcher was actually asking, "Identify yourself. Who are you? Where are you located?" and I don't recall them answering their locations or anything like that.

Q. That's it?

A. Yes.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Thanks a lot, Brendan. The time now is 3:00 p.m. and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN WILLIAM McLAUGHLIN

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 17th, 2001. The time is 2:42 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with --

CAPTAIN McLAUGHLIN: William J. McLaughlin, Captain Engine 312.

CHIEF BURNS: This interview is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you would, Bill, in your own words just tell us what happened that day.

A. All right. 312 responded from quarters after the second plane hit the World Trade Center. We were actually watching it on television. We were told to rendezvous on the Queens side of the Midtown Tunnel and wait there for further orders.

We met there with a bunch of other companies from Queens, including our own 49 Battalion from here, the 45 Battalion, and we were told to stand fast on the Queens side of the Midtown Tunnel.

We were under the impression that the police were securing the tunnel from any sort of terrorist threat. Although that may not be the case, that's what we were under the impression.

We could actually see the towers burning from our location on the Queens side of the tunnel. After waiting about 25 or 30 minutes, we proceeded through the Midtown Tunnel. We went across town to the west side.

At that time we were getting some very scary radio traffic over the Manhattan frequency about people trapped in apparatus. We didn't know what was going on, but I think at that time the first tower had collapsed.

Once we reached the west side, we went down I guess it was West Street from midtown, and the closest we could get, because of the numerous apparatus in the area, was approximately six or seven blocks north of the financial district on West Street, and we just parked right in the back of the apparatus that pulled up in front of us.

We then proceeded to take rollups, masks with extra cylinders, search rope, standpipe kit, and proceeded on foot down West Street towards the tower.

At this time, once again, I didn't know that the tower had collapsed because all you could see was a lot of smoke and dust. The north tower was standing and burning. As we were walking downtown, we could actually see people jumping out the upper floors of the north tower. Everybody had a very bad feeling, which came true.

We did reach the area where we couldn't go any further; I believe that was, looking at the map, south of the pedestrian bridge and south of Vesey Street on West Street. At that point I told the members to drop their masks, cylinders, gear, take their coat and helmet off and stand fast while I went over to the command post, if I could find it, because there was so much confusion at the scene, and find out what they want us to do.

At that point in time, I had full expectation of going into the north tower, being the closest one to our location. Once again, I still didn't believe or know that the first tower had in fact collapsed.

We no sooner got our masks, turnout coats off, put them on the ground, and somebody yelled "Run!" I looked up, and I could see the top of the north tower mushroom out in a cloud of dust and smoke, and you could see the tip of the antenna sort of wobble. Then I realized we have to run. From that point on it was fall back, retreat, get away.

We just went back up West Street, northbound on West Street, until this cloud of dust and debris and smoke engulfed us. In my particular case I had turned -- after running a bit -- I had bunker pants and bunker boots on, and being my age and weight, I'm not a very good jogger, especially with that gear on. So I didn't get that far.

I turned around to look to see what was happening, and the cloud had just enveloped me and I got clocked in the head with a piece of concrete, which had knocked me to the ground. I was on my hands and knees on the ground, and I said, well, I don't think I'm going to die in the middle of the street.

So I got back up again, but at that point I didn't know whether I was going north, south, east or west. I was just trying to get out of this cloud. I didn't have a mask on, and it was very, very difficult to breathe, big chunks of heavy stuff just going into your lungs. You couldn't see your hand in front of your face. It was pitch-black. I went a little further, fell again, causing some more injuries to myself.

Eventually, after walking with my hands in front of me like a blind man [redacted], I saw up and to the right and up high, instead of being dark black it was dark gray, and the dark gray turned into a lighter gray.

Then I realized that what I was looking at was the bright sunshine, which was there before this building fell down. The sun was completely obliterated until we got far enough away from this scene that we could actually see, and then it was just dust and debris and everything else.

As I walked out of the cloud, I was met by an EMT who sat me down and bandaged up my head, gave me some oxygen.

From there we tried to regroup, tried to find my men. I found everybody in a matter of 20 minutes, except my chauffeur, of all people, Eddie Ganassa. I couldn't find him. I actually had him declared missing.

What had happened was that some chief officer who had lost his radio or needed another radio grabbed Eddie Ganassa and took his radio from him. I was calling or trying to get through. The radio traffic was outrageous. You just couldn't get through to anybody on the handy talky.

I was trying and trying to reach him, and he didn't even have a radio. So that's why he couldn't answer me, obviously. He didn't know that I had declared him missing. We did eventually in about 45 minutes, I think, find him and declared that he was found and he wasn't missing any longer.

After I got all my guys together and knew they were safe and sound, I went over to an EMS unit, a paramedic unit, and they tried to wash my eyes out. They weren't happy with the way my eyes were looking, and I had a cut on my head and concussion. So they took me over to St. Vincent's.

At St. Vincent's I was treated for a lacerated cornea, both eyes, laceration of the head, concussion, sprained back, sprained knee, et cetera, et cetera.

So from that point on I never returned to the scene. I can't offer you any more information as to what happened at the scene because I haven't been back since, nor do I want to go back.

I went from St. Vincent's, after spending an hour or two there, to the quarters of 20 Truck, and then I was transported to the medical office and when back to Engine 312. I was back here by about 11:00 that night, I guess.

I think that's the whole story in a nutshell. As I said, I never returned to the scene after that. I just made sure that my guys were all safe and sound. I turned my riding list and them over to the command post, and my handy talky was taken by a chief from Battalion 50 who thankfully enough returned it that same evening over to 312.

So that's about it.

CHIEF BURNS: Okay. That's the end of the interview. It's 2:52 p.m.

Thanks, Bill.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER SALVATORE CHILLEMI

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 17th, 2001. The time is 12:25 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with --

FIREFIGHTER CHILLEMI: Salvatore Chillemi.

CHIEF BURNS: -- from Engine 260. This is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you would, Sal, just tell us in your own words what happened on that day.

A. We had eight or nine rigs, which I don't recall every rig that was there going down in the convoy down to the World Trade Center. We went down to West Street. I don't know the block that we stopped at. It was, let's say, eight blocks away from Vesey. We parked our rigs, and we were told to carry all the gear we can carry.

We walked down West Street towards the World Trade Center. When we got to somewhere between Barclay and Vesey, that's when tower -- tower two had come down before we got there. Tower one started to come down as we were between Barclay and Vesey. The tower is coming down. We just dropped all our gear and just made an about face and ran for our lives. Basically that's what happened to us in that area that I can remember.

As we ran back on West Street, trying to get out of the danger zone, the cloud of dust, smoke and everything just covered us completely. I didn't get a chance to put my mask on at that point. I put it on after a few minutes as we were trying to get out of the area.

After the smoke lifted and cloud lifted, we all tried to look for each other, all our guys, because we all kind of scattered out of the way. We tried to regroup somewhere down on Warren Street, I believe it was.

The lieutenant and the rest of the guys in the company kind of regrouped and tried to walk back towards that area to get our gear and see if anybody needed any kind of help in that area.

Basically that's all I can remember at that point after that.

Q. Okay. Great.

CHIEF BURNS: That concludes our interview.

Thanks, Sal.

FIREFIGHTER CHARLES GUTTMAN

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 17, 2001. The time is 1150 a.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department.

Q. Conducting an interview with?

A. Firefighter Charles Guttman, Ladder 128.

Q. In regards to the events of September 11, 2001. Charles, if you would, in your own words, tell us what happened on that day.

A. We were held up at the Queens Midtown Tunnel and finally when we got released, the first tower, we heard reports of it falling as we were in the tunnel. We got to the scene, on the West Side Highway, quite a distance from the towers, started approaching the tower, got to about West and Vesey when the second tower came down, started coming down, in which I turned and ran away from the falling tower.

Q. Approaching the towers, were you coming from the north, the south?

A. This way, so what is that.

Q. Coming from the north?

A. Coming from the north, correct.

Q. After this tower collapsed did you run back to the north?

A. Back.

Q. When you were at the building did you see anybody or any units in particular?

A. We never got close to the building. We got to Vesey and West. I saw people jumping and it started to come down. I got covered with dust and then found the Lieutenant, all the members in the unit, they went into the rubble.

Q. Did you hear any handy talky transmissions prior to the building coming down or after it came down?

A. Negative. Not that I remember. I'm sure (inaudible). Some people running scared, police saying get out of here.

Q. Is that it?

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Charlie, thanks for the interview, the time is 11:51 a.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER FRANK VASKIS

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: It is December 17th, 2001. The time is 1335 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual, Fireman Frank Vaskis of Ladder Company 15 of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Ladder 15, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Vaskis, would you please tell me what happened to you on September 11th.

A. We were in the kitchen, I guess it was quarter to 9 on the 11th. An announcement came over the voice alarm saying there's been an explosion at the World Trade Center and get ready for your assignments.

At that point everybody who was in the kitchen went downstairs to the apparatus floor. Two of the guys who had been detailed the night before, Firefighter Oelschlager and Firefighter Larsen, were just coming back into quarters. They had pulled I think it was Firefighter Larsen's van in front of the apparatus doors to unload their stuff before they parked across the street.

We got downstairs. We got on the rig. Everybody had their bunker gear on and waited for our assignment. We were down there maybe five minutes before it came over that they wanted us to go to One World Trade Center, there was an explosion.

The engine left before we did. We pulled out of quarters, and we headed down South Street. I had just taken over the position of chauffeur from Fireman Sica who was working the night tour and he was off; he was off the day tour.

We went down South Street. Lieutenant Leavey did not want to take the underpass because we had gotten stuck in there a few times in the past. So we were making our way around to West Street, and there was a backup.

I guess at this point the Police Department was guiding everybody from the tunnel into the underpass to get them off of the FDR instead of going up West Street. So there was a bit of a delay with that.

Lieutenant Leavey was pretty upset about this. We got up as fast as we could with traffic. We finally were where West Street and the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel intersect. At that point the Police Department had those orange stanchions, directing traffic onto the FDR; not the small ones, the big ones that look like upside-down garbage cans.

Lieutenant Leavey told me not to stop, just to go through, just to take it and continue on. I did what he ordered. I hit one of the orange stanchions. At that point we heard an air leak.

He jumped out of the rig, and he tried to pull the stanchion from underneath the rig. It was wedged. He wasn't going to be able to do it. He picked up what looked like a black box, maybe four inches by six inches. I guess it was some type of a regulator for the front air brakes. He jumped back in, and he said, "Listen, just continue on, take it as far as it can go before the breaks lock."

I did what he ordered. We ended up on West Street between Carlisle and Albany Street in front of a hotel before the brakes locked. I had it pulled over as far as I could. At that point people were streaming down West Street. There were several cops directing traffic.

Lieutenant Leavey told me that he was going to take the troops and walk down. He ordered me to stay with the rig, put the jacks down, pull out the thing, see if there was any way for me to stop the air leak. He said, "We're not going to be able to use this rig if we have no air. We're going to be stuck here."

I did what he ordered. The other guys were getting out. Firefighter Kopytko realized he didn't have his gloves with him. He asked if he could borrow mine. I told him, "Well, what am I going to do?" He said, "Well, by the time you finish what you're doing, there's going to be other engine companies. Just stop in and try to grab one from one of the other companies." So I gave him my gloves reluctantly.

I put the tormenters down and pulled out the stanchion. Now I had this brass coupling that was broken. I knew we had a toolbox on the rig. I went over and grabbed the toolbox out. I thought that if I bypassed the broken fitting that I would be able to get some pressure. I took the one that was broken off, and the next elbow was too short; it wasn't wide enough to fit on.

While I was underneath checking out the situation, I heard a large crash, and one of the cops who was directing traffic said another plane hit. I heard more screaming, an initial rush of people by me, and the cops were saying that there was a third plane incoming.

I did what I could. I found a piece of heavy plastic that I thought might hold some air. I wedged it in in the broken valve. I put it back on, I tightened it up. I left the rig where it was. I figured after the job the guys would know where the rig was if I didn't move it. So I left it.

I got my bunker gear on, I got my Scott pack and my tool assignment, and I headed down. I stopped -- there were two engine companies parked in front of me. I don't remember the name of the engine companies. I checked both of them for gloves. There were no gloves. I checked the chauffeur's seat. No gloves. I got to a third engine also. I don't remember which one it was. I found nothing in the back. I found a pair of gloves the chauffeur had put underneath the seat. They were a little small, but it was the only thing I had at the time.

I continued on. I walked down West Street, and I noticed that there were body parts on the ground in front of me. As I'm walking, I noticed a foot. I noticed one corner of West Street on the street before Liberty on the corner it looked like intestines. I couldn't make out what it was, actually.

I continued on. I realized that things were falling. I decided probably the best thing to do would be to walk under the overpass, south overpass, because I had heard that the command center was set up on the other side of West Street.

So I walked over underneath the overpass, and there was it seemed like ribbons of aluminum or whatever, the facade of the building, was trickling down. There were people screaming, "Heads up. Watch for falling debris." When I looked up, I noticed somebody had jumped out of the building. There were rigs in front of me. I didn't actually see where that person landed.

So I'm still heading into One World Trade Center, which was our original assignment. I figured probably nothing had changed. I did not check in at the command center. I walked past it to the north overpass, and I cross back over West Street to the front of the building.

At that point the windows of the building had been blown out or taken out by the explosion. I don't know. The long, thin windows were gone, so I didn't use the actual entrance. I walked through the glass right where the fire command station was, and there was nobody there.

I headed towards the stairwell, and I got maybe about ten feet from the corner of the building, and I felt a wind. At first I didn't know what it was. I started to brace myself for it. It basically knocked me off my feet, onto my stomach, and I slid out of the building from where I had come. I was trying to stop myself, and I could tell that I went pretty much out if not the same window that I had come in then one of the ones next to it.

I ended up about ten feet from the sidewalk in front of One World Trade Center. I crawled back in to what I thought was the threshold of the frame of the building. It was pitch-black. I fumbled around. I put my face piece on and turned my mask on. I was choking, choking dust.

So there I am. I'm on my knees for what seemed like, I don't know, 15 minutes. It was probably only about five minutes. It was pitch-black. It started to get gray, and it was just cloudy. I could make out where my helmet had blown off, and I could see where my tools lay further out in the street, maybe 20 feet, just outside the curb.

As the dust cleared, I made my way out. I found my helmet, picked up my tools, and I headed back into the building. I'm back towards the corner of the building, just about to get to the staircase, and the door opens and there are 10 or 12 civilians and they're all disoriented: "Here, this is the lobby. This is the lobby.

Now where do we go?" They're heading towards the main exit.

When I was outside picking up my helmet, I realized that that was where the -- I looked up at the Vista Hotel, and I noticed that there was a huge V chunk taken out of it. At that point I believe that the top of One World Trade Center had collapsed and fallen into the street. That's what I felt had happened.

In any event, that debris was blocking the main exit for the building. I told them that they shouldn't go that way; they should head out one of the windows where I had gone out. I said, "Stick close to the building and make your way up West Street and keep going."

When I knew that they had some idea where they were going, I headed back into the stairwell, when the urgent message came over to have all firefighters leave the building. They were going to form back up at Murray Street and West Street.

So I did that. I headed out. I actually followed them up West Street. When I got to Murray Street, we heard another loud rumbling, and I looked back and saw a cloud of dust. That was I guess when one fell. From that time we just ran up West Street. We stopped in front of Stuyvesant High School, and we just got there just as the dust cloud made it to us.

We were in Stuyvesant maybe ten minutes. I came out. I still couldn't see that the building was gone. It looked like maybe the top half of it was gone. There was a lot of smoke; there was a lot of dust.

They started another whatchamucallit point at Chambers Street where they were letting companies go in. At that point I guess I ran into the engine chauffeur from 4 Engine, Bobby Humphrey, and he said, "Listen, just stay together." I told him what happened to me, and he told me what happened to him.

We ran into another group of two firefighters, one of the guys who had been relieved and another fireman who had been detailed but hadn't left yet before the run came in.

So the four of us hooked up. I remember him trying to raise Engine 4, as I was trying to raise Ladder 15. They were not allowing anybody to go back in without supervision. We didn't have an officer with us.

That's really it. We stayed there. I think we spoke to three different chiefs. We told them that we had tried to contact our companies and they were missing. We told them the names of the guys who were working in our companies that day, three separate times: probably one right after we met up, the second one was maybe an hour later, and the third one was -- they had set up a table outside of Stuyvesant High School. That was the third time we were there.

We were there when Seven World Trade Center collapsed. I guess when we got back to the firehouse it must have been 10, 10:30, 11.

Q. Good. I just have one or two questions.

You say you were going to the stairs when you got into the Trade Center.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember which stairs you were heading towards?

A. I was heading towards the core. I never actually --

Q. Looked at any numbers?

A. Yeah, I never got that.

Q. So you wouldn't know what your company went up?

When you were in the lobby at any point, before, during, after, you didn't see any other Fire Department personnel?

A. I did not, no.

Q. So you hooked up with Humphrey sometime after the second tower collapsed?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Unless you have something else you can think of, that concludes the interview. I thank you for your time.

A. Sure.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER HOWIE SCOTT

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: Today is December 17th, 2001. The time is 1610. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Howie Scott of Squad 18 of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place at the quarters of Ladder 20 in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Scott, would you tell me what happened to you on September 11th?

A. September 11 started out -- I worked the night tour from the previous night before and was relieved by Manny Mojica as a chauffeur. I went upstairs, took a shower and was in the shower when the whole incident started to unfold.

I went into the locker room to hear over the department radio all the stuff that was going on. I threw on a pair of shorts and went downstairs to see what was actually happening.

I looked down south of Lafayette Street, saw the smoking tower, along with Tim Haskell and a few other members of Ladder 20. Timmy and I spoke of getting down there via the hazmat bread truck, that's what we call it, the second piece. We saw that it was still in the second bay. I told Tim I'll be right back, I'm going to go get my shirt, some socks, grab my gear and we'll be ready to roll.

This was after the second plane hit the building that we decided, "All right, we're going down there, this is what we're going to do."

Anyhow, I ran upstairs, got my stuff, went to the rack, got my gear, came out to the front and Timmy and a few of the members of Ladder 20 had jumped on the bread truck and left. They were already gone.

I started looking around, because they had mentioned something about fire marshals were going to give them a ride down. I saw a fire marshal, and he said yeah, no problem, jump in the car.

As I'm getting my stuff, picking up my stuff and throwing it in the trunk, I see John Ceriello biking up the road. He's coming over from Brooklyn. I yelled down to him, "Hurry up. We've got a ride." So he peddled up, ran in, got his stuff, threw it in the trunk, and we went down to the scene.

We pulled up on West Street I would say north of the north walkway, just to get an idea of the location. We got out of the car and put our gear on. We proceeded south down West Street under the north walkway and saw to our right in front of the financial building there was a command post over there that included Chief Ganci, Chief Downey, Mayor Giuliani, Bill Feehan and Tom Von Essen, the Commissioner. They were in conference about something. We caught Chief Downey's eye, and he kind of gave us the high sign to go find a SOC company.

So as we scooted away from there, we noticed that Squad 288 and Rescue 4 were coming across West Street. They went into the lobby of the financial building. I think it was One World Financial building. We informed the officer of 288 that we were going to join up with them with Lieutenant Kerwin. I believe he even put our names on his BF4.

Anyhow, they were taking a quick blow, sizing up what they were going to want to do next, get a little drink of water. Everybody knew we were in for a long haul here.

In the meantime John and I kind of kept reminding each other: Hey, we don't have anything as far as tools, radios, air, whatever. So before we get committed to anything let's try and at the very least get some air.

They started to make their move back across West Street. We informed them that we would catch back up with them. I believe they were on their way into the lobby of tower two.

Anyhow, with the abundance of rigs right out in front on West Street there, we figured no problem, we'll just grab an extra mask from somebody, only to find out later that that was a big problem. There were no masks to be found.

We were hitting rig to rig, proceeding pretty much north on West Street until we saw the Hazmat 1 rig. We went over to there. The resource guy that's usually in the rig, he was still there. He came out and hooked us up with a couple of masks. We even changed out the bottles to one-hour cylinders.

In the meantime we picked up this other guy, Phil. I don't remember his last name, but I remember he was an EMS worker there. I guess now he's over with the Fire Department. Anyhow, he joined in with us.

We started our walk down West Street towards the buildings, and I ran into Mike Macko from Ladder 8 and yelled up to John Ceriello -- I told John, "Hey, wait up. Let's wait for this guy. He's a senior guy in Ladder 8. He knows these buildings like the back of his hand. It probably would be advantageous, being as we don't have any radios or anything."

So I pointed Mike over to the hazmat rig. He also got a mask and I think also put on a one-hour cylinder, buckled up, and we were on our way.

As we proceeded back down West Street now, John was a little up ahead of us. I don't exactly remember how much further. We just made our turn to go in towards the lobby of tower two. For whatever reason, I just happened to look up and saw the whole thing coming down, pancaking down, and the explosion, blowing out about halfway up.

I yelled up to John -- I used a couple of expletives and said, "It's coming down, run, let's go." So we about-faced. In my mind I was saying north walkway, let's get under that, and dove under that. I probably fell short of that and kind of crawled. Anyhow, I did get under that. I believe I smashed into some sort of mask service rig.

I remember looking back and noticing that big mushroom cloud just roaring at us like a freight train. I quick scrambled and threw the cylinder on and threw the mask on my face and started crawling, which I'm figuring up West Street.

Now I decide, all right, let me get on my feet and make a move here. So I got on my feet and I start moving. I run right smack into a plate glass window, fall back, get back up. I don't know what building exactly, but there are some employees coming out of this particular building. It's on the other side of West Street. I just kept pushing them on: Go, go, keep going, don't look back, don't breathe even, just go.

Again I pretty much thought I was proceeding up West Street, and in actuality I was proceeding west down I guess Vesey Street and ended up by the Hudson River, which I guess worked out in the sense of that all the boats were coming over from Hoboken now, all these ferries, and I got involved in just chucking people onto these boats. I even tried to make one boat like an ambulatory boat. Anybody that was banged up, I got them on just one boat and got them out of there, and the other boats we were just moving people on.

In the meantime, not really knowing what was going on back at the towers, because, again, I had no radio. I'm now separated from John and the guy Phil. Out of nowhere I see Mike Macko. Mike's crying. He's all upset. I get him calmed down.

We proceed now to go north on one of those streets in like Battery Park City, I guess, over there, and then swing around back towards West Street and end up back on West Street, north of the north walkway.

We ran into Pat Kelly from my company, Squad 18, who was in the tower when it came --

I'm trying to remember where he was. That's hazy, so I'm not going to go with that. I don't know whether it was after the first building or the second building came down I ended up running into Pat Kelly.

Anyhow, we start our descent back towards the building, because obviously there's lots of maydays and stuff going around. We get to just about the north walkway, about to go underneath, and the second one came down.

Again, a quick retreat back up. This one was, as far as I was concerned, the big one. The first one you had a chance to make a move, I felt, especially us. You may not have made the right move, but you had a chance, because it seemed like it pancaked down and that delayed the whole process, where the second one just seemed like it just opened up all over the place.

After that I was sitting on one of the medians at West Street just waiting for that smoke cloud to lift so we could see what the heck we're going to do next. Obviously it seemed like it was three hours we were waiting. It was probably not all that much time. Obviously some officers were trying to get control of the situation.

But in looking at it later on, our position where we were, we were pretty much out of the picture at that point because all the devastation came that way, where I was, whereas any kind of rescue effort or any kind of stuff like that was I guess able to be done from, I'd say, the Liberty Street and Greenwich Street side, totally opposite from us.

But we did end up eventually crawling under that north walkway, which had collapsed and which was held up on either end. We were able to get under that, get up on the pile. Then I got involved with -- we found Pete Ganci. I was involved in that recovery.

I then ended up getting moved away -- I know I'm skipping some parts because the whole Pat Kelly thing is in there where we went to look for his mask and decided the heck with it, because that put us right by where building seven was, and Captain Verraile from 24 Engine said, "Hey, let's just back everything off here because this building is coming down." So we took all the hose, equipment, everything that we could get our hands on and pulled it out of the collapse zone, so to speak.

Then later on we ended up in the financial building, the lobby, again. They wanted to get some sort of command post going in there. There's a lot of stuff that's all real hazy at this point.

I took a blow for a while. Then of course at that point every fireman on the job was there. I remember talking to my captain and trying to tell him where his father might have been on our way down.

That's pretty much it.

Q. Okay. Just a couple questions. As you said at the end, maybe where Chief Downey was. The first time you saw him was at the command post. You didn't see him go anywhere else?

A. Right. That's what I wanted to get, because while we were waiting on West Street, Captain Downey now reported in, just like everybody else was getting there. Everybody is like throwing stuff at him, pointing and throwing. You could see in a whirlwind not knowing what was going on.

I kind of got his attention, pulled him aside and kind of specifically said, "Hey, Cap, look, this is what happened as far as your father goes with --" Okay, the rampway going into the garage of the financial building, that's where they were originally, meaning the five guys I told you.

If they made a move after the first building came down, I don't know. But that's where originally he was. When we saw them was right before the first building came down. So how much time elapsed there is probably not that great amount of time. So I don't know where he would have moved to.

John and myself walked around the whole rest of the day thinking each other was dead. It wasn't until 8 or 9:00 at night when we were in the lobby of that financial building getting some tables and chairs together so people can sit down and map some stuff out, and John comes walking around. We're both like, "What are you doing?" That was a relief to see him, and I'm sure he felt the same.

A lot of gray areas there. Like I said, the whole Pat Kelly thing, he was with us. A couple of the SOC battalion aides were outside that were with Chief Kasper and Chief Paolillo. Those two aides were out on the street with us. They ended up -- from what I'm gathering is they all got caught up in the same swoosh, so to speak, and got chucked this way and made it out, whereas anybody that got chucked that way didn't make it.

Q. Did they say where they were operating?

A. The 8th.

Q. No.

A. I'm sure they know. I just don't remember what they said. I'm sure they remember.

Q. If you don't have anything else, that concludes the interview?

A. Okay.

Q. Thanks for your time.

A. No problem.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN CERIELLO

Interview Date: December 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: Today is December 17th, 2001. The time is 1540 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with John Ceriello of Squad 18 of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Ladder 20 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. John, could you please tell me what happened to you on September 11th.

A. I first saw on TV, I believe CNN, that the north tower was on fire. I was not aware of a plane hitting it at that point. Just looking like a high-rise fire, I decided that even though I was off duty that it would be a good idea for me to at least go into the firehouse and see if there was going to be any need of my assistance there.

So thinking that it was just prior to 9:00 there would be a ton of traffic, I jumped on my bicycle. I live in Carroll Gardens. I rode over the Brooklyn Bridge. When I was roughly in the middle of the span, there was a massive explosion on the south tower.

Again I didn't see a plane or anything, so I didn't know it was a plane that hit the tower. I think in my mind I just thought there was a massive explosion on one of the upper floors and now you had a real bad fire. Obviously I figured I would be needed.

So I continued to Lafayette Street where Ladder 20 and Squad 18 are housed right now while our building is under construction. When I arrived, at the apparatus door was Howie Scott, another fireman from Squad 18, who was waiting for me. There were two fire marshals. I do not remember their names. They had a car fired up and waiting to take us down there.

So I quickly grabbed my gear. I remember grabbing a bottle of water, jumped in the back of their car and off we went. I believe we shot down to Canal, over to West Street, and down West Street.

En route you obviously could hear and I was informed that a small plane had hit the north tower and that a second plane had hit the south tower. At that point I think, knowing that it was a clear blue sky, we knew something was up. I can't say that I thought it was terrorists right off the bat, but you knew something was going on that shouldn't be going on.

I didn't have my bunker gear on at that point, I remember, because I was just thinking of a high-rise fire, we're going to climb a lot of stairs, keep cool and try to save your energy in a sense.

So we quickly went down West Street and asked where the command post was. The command post was set up in the parking entrance to the American Express building across the street from the north tower, just south of the north walkway.

As we approached the command post, I noticed Chief Ray Downey at the command post. Being the SOC chief, I then asked him, "Chief, what do you want to do?" He told me and Howie to hook up with the next SOC units that came in and go to work.

So we donned all our equipment, and within seconds I believe 288 with Lieutenant Kerwin and Rescue 4 with Lieutenant Dowdell arrived at that command post.

We then all proceeded to go into the lobby of the American Express building, again right across the street from the north tower and just adjacent to the command post, and just did a little staging area.

The reason I believe we went into the lobby is there was debris falling around everywhere and swirling. I think just as a second form of protection if -- I guess the possibility of maybe a third plane or something coming in, the officer thought that was a good idea.

So we went into that lobby, and everybody was calm and cool. A couple guys I remember went to the bathroom and got some water. We just discussed the fact that we were going to go in through the south tower, try to go to the upper floors and help extinguish the fire or evacuate the people.

At that point Lieutenant Kerwin wrote my name on his BF4 as well as Howie Scott's name. I informed him that we did not have masks, and he asked me to get masks and come back to the lobby. If they were not in the lobby of the American Express building, then they would be in the lobby of the south tower to meet us there. 10-4.

Howie and I left the American Express building and then proceeded to check rigs that were all in front of the north tower on West Street, moving north until we got to Vesey and West.

We found Hazmat 1 there, and Tony -- I cannot pronounce -- it starts with a C. I think it's Castagna or something to that effect. He was a member of Hazmat 1. He was there. I asked him if they had masks. He said yes.

At that point we donned half our cylinders. It was myself, Howie Scott, a firefighter from Ladder 8 and then a proby who originally was in 35 Truck who now I think is in hazmat, Phil Latimer. We donned half our cylinders.

At that point Tony from Hazmat 1 mentioned that he has our bottles and asked if we would like to switch over to our bottles, which we thought would be a good idea. So we took a minute and a half to two minutes to switch our cylinders.

We got all that, grabbed some tools and headed up West Street in the northbound lanes of West Street. We walked underneath the north walkway. When we got about 50 feet past that, Howie Scott looked up and said, "Oh, shit." I then looked up and saw the whole top of the building beginning to come down.

Then at that point we all ran north. I got underneath the north walkway, got behind a blue van, and everything went to hell, went to darkness.

Howie -- I didn't know where he was. I tried to locate him quickly and could not find him. Then I donned my face piece, because you couldn't breathe. I began to walk north and fell over something. I don't know what it was. I began to crawl, and what ended up happening was I crawled in a circle back towards the south tower, thinking I was heading north.

When the dust settled, I saw Ray Downey standing on West Street. I believe at that point we were in between the north and the south tower. The south tower was down. You really couldn't tell it was completely down, but you could tell most of it wasn't there. I again approached him and asked him what he wanted to do. He said at this point you've got to do what you can do. He was trying to get the command post to move north.

Chief Feehan was with him and Chief Ganci. Chief Ganci -- actually Chief Feehan asked me to go with I believe it was Chief Fuentes, Al Fuentes. Is he is captain or a chief? I'm not sure.

Q. I think he's a chief.

A. Anyway, he asked us to do a primary search of the parking garage because everyone at the command post dove into the parking garage when the south tower came down.

So we went in there. We did a quick primary. We went in through the building. You couldn't get down there through where the driveways were; you had to go in through the building. We got down there, did a quick primary, we came back out onto West Street.

At that point Chief Ganci told us that we have a mayday of a fireman down at Liberty and West. Then Chief Feehan told me to take that proby, Phil Latimer, who I was with earlier but I had gotten separated from and was with again. He said to do that assignment.

At that point we took off climbing over debris and whatnot on West Street. We passed a black woman with a broken leg with a firefighter on the sidewalk. We told them to stay put, that someone would come get them. We proceeded to Liberty and West, trying to ascertain from some of the firemen that were there if they had seen anybody or heard anyone. They said no.

We started up onto the pile when we just heard a horrific rumbling coming, and we knew the north tower was coming down. I then proceeded to run under the south walkway and dove into an ambulance. Again the same thing happened. Everything went to nighttime. The dust cleared. I donned my face piece, climbed out and headed to the water.

So basically that's who and what I remember. Some of the members that I saw from 288 and Rescue 4 were Joey Hunter, Ronnie Gies, Bronco Pearsall and John Ielpi. We all just briefly talked.

When we were in the American Express building, we did see some people jumping and whatnot. We knew we had a bad scene on our hands.

For the most part that's who I remember seeing, in that particular order. After that, the rest of the day was spent in lousy attempts at trying to locate victims. That's basically all I can really say. It was just a lot of mass confusion. We just tried to do the best we could.

I basically operated on West and Liberty until about 1:00 in the morning. I never really went much up Liberty, and I never really went much north on West Street. I stayed in that quadrant right by what was the Marriott Hotel, making entrances and then running out because the buildings were collapsing and going back in, all that stuff.

That's basically the members I saw prior to the buildings coming down.

Q. Okay. First if that's all you have, I have a couple quick questions.

When you first reported in to the command post, you saw Chief Downey. Was anybody else there, companies?

A. Yes. There were a lot of firemen staged, standing there. I cannot say that I actually recognized anyone.

Q. So you wouldn't know if Chief Downey or whoever was there was sending them any particular places?

A. No, no. I never even looked at our coffee table and clipboard at the command post.

Q. When you saw the apparatus, any apparatus numbers you can remember and where they were parked?

A. Yeah, I remember Rescue 1, obviously, right under the north walkway, the high-rise unit 3 from Engine 3, the high-rise unit. I remember rifling through that truck looking for tools and cylinders; a number of different engine companies, thinking the chauffeur's mask would be available.

But I cannot say exactly which engine companies. I believe Ladder 3 was right there. I think 18 was right there. Ladder 18 was right there. That's about it. I know the information on the buildings said West Street, so I think a lot of units came down that way.

Q. When you say 288 and Rescue 4, they were basically at the staging area that you saw them? They weren't on any particular assignment in the building?

A. No, when I asked Chief Downey what to do, he said hook up with the next SOC units. Within a short period of time, 30 seconds, maybe to a minute, they walked up across West Street. I did forget one thing. So they walked across West Street. Then we all, as a group, went into that American Express building to stage.

What I do remember and I forgot to tell you is as we were checking the high-rise unit from Engine 3, I remember every maybe 30 seconds I would turn around and look towards the American Express building, trying to see if Rescue 4 and 288 were leaving that building.

At some time as I was making my way north on West Street, I did see them leave that lobby and do a single file and heading straight towards I would say it was the Marriott Hotel, heading towards the south tower.

Where they entered the building to get into the lobby, say, that I can't answer. I didn't see at that point where they went in. But I do remember them walking in a single file across West Street on a diagonal, heading right towards the south tower.

Q. And that's who you were supposed to hook up with?

A. Yes.

Q. They were probably going to tower two?

A. Yes, I would say definitely. They're finding those guys there now. Absolutely.

Q. That's good. If you don't have anything else, that concludes the interview.

A. I don't think so. Any information that I can think of now, that's it.

Q. Okay. Thanks for your time.

A. Thanks, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

JASON KATZ

Interview Date: December 20, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is December 20, 2001. My name is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, shield number and assigned command.

A. My name is Jason Katz. My shield is 2101, and I am currently an EMT chief's aide at Division 4.

Q. Jason, were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on 9/11?

A. Yes.

Q. In your own words, can you tell me about the details of that day?

A. The day started out -- I reported to work at the division office, as I normally do, and I was here for maybe ten minutes when I was told that the two planes crashed into the twin towers, and that Chief Carrasquillo was on his way here, and he was picking up personnel to go.

From that time, Chief Carrasquillo arrived. We jumped into the car with him. We grabbed our helmets and turnout coats, and we responded in, and I guess about -- being on the LIE probably by the Pulaksi Skyway, we got the report that the second plane crashed into the second tower, the north tower.

Q. When you say "we," can you just tell me who the other people with you were?

A. I was in the car with Chief Carrasquillo, Captain Rivera and Chief Carrasquillo's aide, Sal Sangeniti.

At that time, we came out of the tunnel into Manhattan and shot down the FDR around to the Westside Highway and parked our car roughly around Westside Highway and Carlyle Street.

Q. Can you just indicate on the map provided approximately where you parked your vehicle?

A. I would say between Carlyle and Rector. That's about the best I remember. Between Carlyle and Rector.

Q. Can you just mark it with the No. 1? Thank you.

A. At that time, we got out of the car, and Chief Carrasquillo told me to meet up with Chief Brown, who had just arrived a little bit before us, and he was a few cars ahead of us, and to go team up with him and become his aide for the day.

When I went to go meet Chief Brown, there were a few bodies laying in the street -- and I just met up with Chief Brown. We reported in to operations. Operations told us to set up staging and triage, more staging at West and Liberty, and on the way back to West and Liberty, there was debris flying down, and it was pretty scary. There was a bunch of pieces of metal or debris just coming down, and I think there were bodies. I wasn't even sure. We just kept moving, kept running over to set up the staging area on West and Liberty.

Chief Brown directed me at that time to just track what units were where, and, you know, who was who, and a lot of voluntary and private ambulances on the scene. Just try to get the number and names of the crews, and at that time I was doing that, and then we started to hear a roar, and I looked back.

Everybody was running, so I just kind of started running with them, and the next thing I know, I just remember jumping on a staircase and putting my hands over my helmet, and, you know praying to God, and then it all went black. It was silent. You couldn't hear a thing.

I remember something hit my hand. I don't know what it was. I got up after all this. It seemed like it was forever, but it was probably just a few minutes. It was -- I remember seeing a fire truck. I think it was on fire. I remember just trying to work my way over there.

I heard people screaming and yelling and just, you know, all disarray. So I made it over to the fire truck looking for a Scott pack, and kind of hung out in this fire truck. I don't even know what company it was. I think it was a tower ladder, and things lifted a little bit.

Q. Do you know what that location was?

A. It was just south of the south crossover. It was just south of there, and things started to lift, and then I heard Bobby Brown's voice just calling for me, and things began lifting a little more, and I made my way back over to him, and we just kind of started to looking under debris.

Everything was lifting. It was kind of hard to breathe. We were covered head to toe, you know, with dust and everything, and we were just looking in the debris, listening for people screaming, seeing if we could find anybody. At that time, we ran into Chief Wells. We found a suburban, and we were looking through the suburban for a first-aid kit just to wrap up my hand. Because at this time I noticed my hand was bleeding pretty good. I had cut two fingers on my left hand.

After that, we were there for maybe 15, 20 minutes just looking, you know, trying to regroup, see who was where, try and get in contact with the command post, if they were still alive. We didn't even know.

At that point, we really weren't sure of what had happened. We just -- you know, and then we looked up, and we noticed the tower was gone. It seemed like it was just maybe 15, 20 minutes, and I just heard everyone saying, run again.

So I went in through -- went in through one building that the south tower was attached to on the west side. I'm not sure what building it was. The lobby was all blown out. All the glass was blown out, so you could run right through the lobby, so once they started saying run, I just took off again, made it through the lobby, started running down -- I don't know what street it was.

Q. West End Avenue?

A. Yes, that's where it was, West End Avenue, and I jumped into a store, and I guess it's the Gateway Plaza here. I think it was a diner, or a coffee shop or something like that. At that point, the second tower had come down, and when I was in that store, there was one civilian in there, who was hiding underneath the table, and she was pretty panicked. I calmed her down a little bit, and after things started to lift again, I escorted her over to a building on West End and Albany on the -- that would be the southeast corner.

There were a whole bunch of firemen in there and civilians. I don't even know what they were, cops or firemen. Cops were wearing firemen helmets. Firemen were wearing just hard hats. You had no clue who was who, but we stayed in there for a little bit.

They kind of pulled us over when things started to lift. We stayed in there for a few minutes, and then I came out of there, and once again just amazingly I ran into Chief Brown. I heard him screaming, you know, calling out. We met up with him, and we met up with Commissioner Gregory. I think he's communications.

Q. Yes.

A. He was there in a turnout coat, and a few firefighters, and a couple of, I think, Metro Care ambulance people had all gathered in the middle of the street. Then we heard two planes coming overhead. We weren't sure, you know, if they were friendly or just loud jet engines, so we started making a little run to the west side. We noticed it was a F-16.

We were ready to jump in the drink if we had to, and at that time a fire boat had met us over on the west side and we -- that ambulance bandaged my finger up on the west side there. Then we started helping civilians onto the fire boat. That was pretty much just civilians and people who were nurses were helping wash out our eyes and helping wash civilians' eyes and just helping everybody off the island at that point.

Then from there we started making our way down to the Battery City, and something about a report of a gas leak, that they were evacuating the island, and it was kind of a mad rush, and everyone was jumping on police boats that were in the basin, the boat basin down there.

We all jumped on the police boats -- myself, Bobby Brown and a couple of other EMTs -- and we jumped on the boat. They shot us over to Jersey. After we helped everybody off, we went back, and at that time we made our way down to Liberty -- Battery Park by the Liberty ferry terminal.

Q. Okay.

A. That's where we met up with Chief Steffens. That was pretty much where things calmed down. We were there for about, I guess, an hour, just cleaning up, drinking some water.

At that point, I made my way down. Chief Brown stayed there, and I made my way down to the Staten Island Ferry Terminal and the triage. They cleaned me up a little bit and sent me on the Staten Island ferry to a triage area at the Staten Island Ferry Terminal in Staten Island. I jumped on a bus, and they took me to Staten Island University Hospital.

Q. You said you had the injuries to your hand. What kind of injuries did you have?

A. There were degloving injuries, and I fractured the tips on my pointer and middle finger on my left hand.

Q. Do you know what you injured it on?

A. Just flying debris.

Q. Just flying debris.

A. What I forgot to mention was I remember when we were first there, Chief Brown told us to put on our chin straps, which is something most of the time we don't wear. That probably saved my life because I would have lost my helmet when the debris was coming down.

Q. It's not something we commonly use, right. Is anything else you'd like to add to this interview?

A. No.

MR. ECCLESTON: This interview is being concluded at 1447.

I thank you very much for conducting this interview. The tape is 181.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ROBERT KIMBALL

Interview Date: December 20, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is December 20, the year 2001. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I'm at Division 4, EMS command, conducting an interview regarding September 11 with the following individual.

MR. KIMBALL: My name is Robert Kimball. EMT, currently serve as a chief's aide.

Q. Bobby, were you working on the morning of September 11?

A. I was off. However, at 8:45, I heard the incident happened. I called the Division 4 office, asked them what the plan was and what we had planned to do. She advised me that she -- I'm sorry, Lieutenant Guarneri advised me she really didn't have a plan yet. So I asked if the spare vehicle 913, the van, was available, and if it was, that we should load it up with spare equipment, and I would be in within 15 minutes to pick it up and transport it down to LSU and MERV 4.

I made it here approximately nine o'clock, and at that time the van was loaded, and there was a lieutenant. I don't remember his name. I really didn't know him, and an EMT from downstairs, pretty much a new guy.

Q. When you say downstairs --

A. Downstairs at Battalion 50. We went into the vehicle. It was loaded up, and we made our way down into Manhattan.

At approximately -- we left here at 9:15. I made it down into Manhattan approximately ten o'clock. We were initially going to the west side, because we were told that's where MERV 4 and LSU 4 were staged, but we were unable to get over onto that side of the World Trade Center.

They redirected us at about 10:10 and told us to go down to the Staten Island Ferry Terminal, because they wanted to set up a triage, treatment, transport area down there. So we went down to that area, went up to the 2nd Floor of the ramp for the Staten Island Ferry Terminal, and we set up a treatment transport area over there.

At that moment in time, I had no chief to work with, so Chief Villani said, "Okay, Bob, you're with me today." We did some initial stuff at the Battery Park ferry terminal, and then we had a gator, and we were pretty much just traveling all over the World Trade Center site.

We went to One Liberty Plaza to check on the units that we had over there, because we had staged over there approximately 20 ambulances at one point. There was a treatment center. We were asked to go over there initially because of the question of the building's sturdiness, and that all turned out to be fine at that particular moment.

We went back down to the EMS command post, I guess. I'm not exactly sure where exactly that was. Everything just looked very different from what it looked like at that point. Met with I believe it was Chief Carrasquillo that particular moment in time, see what he wanted to do, where he wanted us at, so we were just basically going back and forth from the ferry terminal to the World Trade Center site looking at units, you know, seeing who needed what, going back to the ferry terminal to see, you know, how we're doing there.

I guess approximately three o'clock-ish sometime, that was about the next time I remember, I saw deputy chief Bobby Brown come in with some eye irritation and his aide Jason Katz with -- his hand had some lacerations on it, I believe. That was pretty much about the last time that I remember any kind of, like, time sequence, because I basically just stayed the whole day at the -- between the ferry terminal and One Liberty Plaza.

I believe we went down to Liberty and West at one particular moment in time, and I believe we did make it over to Vesey and West at another particular time. I believe the command post was somewhere along here. Was it Murray and West that particular night? But that was earlier. We had no real protection as far as masks went.

Q. Where were you when the buildings collapsed?

A. We were traveling down -- I believe the first building collapsed, and we were traveling down Broadway. I think it collapsed, what, 9:05 or something? No, I'm sorry 10:05. 9:55.

So we were traveling down Broadway, and that's when we were redirected at about 10:10 down to the ferry terminal.

Q. Where were you when the second building collapsed?

A. When the second building collapsed, I believe -- let's see. What time did that collapse? Because I think I was still -- 10:29. I was just -- I guess we were right about here. I don't know what street this is.

Q. So you were south of Rector?

A. Yes, I was about, I guess, one, two blocks south of Rector. We had a whole bunch of ambulances standing here, more like Hunter and Metro Care, I guess it was, and we were trying to get them down more towards our area so we could stage them up properly.

So when the second building came down, that's where we were, right about here, but I guess by then we set up a treatment and triage center, which pretty much had almost done, and then I was just pretty much aide to Chief Villani for the rest of the duration of the event. I left at 9:30 the next morning.

Q. So you were there overnight?

A. Yeah, I was there overnight. I worked 24 hours straight, and everything else is just like -- I don't know. I remember bits and pieces.

Like I remember walking by with the chief, and I remember seeing the airplane engine, you know, pieces of, you know, obviously trade center all over. When I was walking around, we didn't see any bodies or body parts. They had those pretty much either cleaned up, or they were buried with the debris, so we really didn't see too much of that, but there was no way to get even the gaters anywhere near, near Liberty and Trinity. It was just too much debris and hose, and so you couldn't even take the gator around. You had to walk, I would say, for a two block -- one block area this way and like a one and a half, two block area this way. You couldn't get the vehicles in.

Then I do remember that later on during that night we did take his car, Chief Villani's, and we did take it and park it up -- I believe we made it all the way to about Rector maybe. I think it was Rector.

Q. And West Street?

A. Yeah. Rector -- yeah, Rector and West, and we parked the car there and did another walk up towards the site.

Q. At the end of the evening, how did vehicle 913 -- where did that end up?

A. Well, that vehicle stayed at the ferry terminal, Staten Island Ferry Terminal, because we didn't unload all the equipment.

Q. So it stayed there?

A. So it stayed there strictly as a supplement to whatever they might have needed down at the ferry terminal. I carried oxygen. I carried nebulizers, Albuterol, fluids for irrigation, a couple of extra long boards, boxes of ACRs in case we needed them, triage tags. Pretty much everything that I can think of that we didn't need, that would be stressing out the battalion, I took into that vehicle.

Q. How many days was it before you got the vehicle back or do you even know?

A. Oh, God.

Q. You did eventually get it back at the division?

A. Yeah, oh yeah. I believe that's how I got home. I asked them if they needed it, because they were going to shut down that area, I believe. Either they were going to shut it down or they released me because they didn't need the equipment that was in there, because we didn't receive too many people.

We thought it was going to be a lot more casualties, and they figured, you know, we have enough here. I loaded up what I could load up, you know, that I didn't need too much. I pretty much left them, you know, my oxygen that I could leave them, and that was really it.

I believe I took the vehicle back home. Yeah, I believe I drove the vehicle home, you know, back to the battalion.

Q. Anything else you want to add or that you can think of?

A. Well, then I had to have the next day off, you know, obviously, but then I went down there, and I served as Bobby Brown's aide for the next six weeks down at the World Trade Center.

I believe the first possibly four weeks was down at Chambers and West at the EMS command post, and then the last two weeks that I served down there was down at 10 and 10, Liberty and -- what is that? Greenwich? Yes.

So I served my six weeks down there, and I haven't been there since.

Q. Is that all you have to say?

A. As far as the events of that day, as far as it went with me, yeah.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: This ends our interview. The time now is 1452.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRE PATROLMAN PAUL CURRAN

Interview Date: December 18, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today is 12/18, 2001. The time is now 1544 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Fire Patrolman Paul Curran of Fire Patrol number 3 in Brooklyn regarding the events of September 11th, and what follows is the interview.

A. On September 11th we got an alarm of a plane striking the World Trade Center, the north tower. So we responded I guess it was roughly a quarter to 9.

We proceeded over the Brooklyn Bridge. We observed the north tower with a heavy volume of fire on the upper floors up, I guess, the 80th floors.

We turned onto Broadway, and we worked our way down West Side Highway. We reached luckily around John Street when the second tower was hit by the plane, another plane. At the time we didn't realize it was a plane. We just heard a massive explosion. Debris rained down on us. People panicked. They were running all over the street. I had to stop the rig dead. People, hundreds of them, crossed the path running west on Broadway. One of the guys stuck his head out the window, John Citelli, and he saw the other tower burning.

We proceeded down Broadway to around roughly -- I made a left-hand turn. I'm not sure which street it was. It was perhaps Pine Street or Rector. We worked our way to Trinity Place to go up Trinity Place. I parked the rig on Church right at Fulton, directly in front of the World Trade north plaza.

We then suited up, masks, tools. My officer told us we're going to go into the north tower lobby. We proceeded down to Vesey. Walking down Vesey, we noticed large pieces of what looked like possibly the fuselage from the plane.

There was a caravan of motorcycle police coming up. We stopped them and we cleared the path of big O rings and pieces of fuselage of the plane. We threw it to the side, and we told the guys to go on. They went up towards Church.

We got down to Vesey, and we turned the corner onto West. There was two MPOs having problems with the sprinkler cap, getting it off. We had tools. We assisted them. We took the caps off of them so that they could hook up to the sprinkler system. Then we proceeded into the lobby of the north tower.

In the north tower my officer, Sergeant Kenny, it was approached by Deputy Commissioner Feehan. He told us they were going to be using us shortly and to stage in the tower's lobby. Then he proceeded to leave. I didn't realize he left. I saw him leave the building. I can't say exactly what time it was.

At that time we heard the jumpers. A lot of jumpers were hitting right above our heads on the concourse plaza level. It was like one thump, another thump. I lost count about 19.

I saw Father Michael Judge. We went up the escalator of the customs house, myself and Sergeant Kenny, to see what the situation was up there. It wasn't a pretty sight. There were numerous bodies.

So we went back downstairs to the lobby, and Father Judge kind of like gave us a look. I remember telling Father Judge, "It's terrible up there, Father." I did see Father Michael go up the escalators of the customs house. I guess that's World Trade -- what would that be, seven, I imagine? The customs house. It's Eight World Trade Center.

Q. Eight World Trade. Okay.

A. He was up there for a period of time. We were staying in the lobby for about -- there were people hitting the deck up there. There were body parts -- at one point a body part flew right through the lobby. There was an ironworker in there, which he plays a part later on.

With that, all a sudden the tower went completely -- a horrendous noise, a very, very tremendous explosion, and a very heavy wind came through the tower. The wind almost knocked you down. We were on the north side of the elevator banks, and they kind of broke up that wind.

At first I thought the upper floors were caving, coming in. But then kind of like all thought there was too much dust down there, too much wind downstairs. We really didn't know what happened.

So we made our exit up the escalator to the customs house. While making our way out, we were with a truck company, and I don't remember who they were. It was dark. There were a couple of chiefs there. I can't remember their names.

While we were making our way to the World Trade Center, the customs house, to go up the escalators to go out, we were going to go out the other way, down West Broadway and down the staircase there. We found Father Judge. Father Michael was laying at the bottom of the escalators. He wasn't bleeding or anything like that; he was just unconscious.

Q. Tell me exactly where that was now.

A. This was in Eight World Trade Center, in the building --

Q. Outside the building?

A. -- in the building at the foot of the escalators, going up to the concourse level. He was laying there.

The guys from the truck company, the whole patrol was there, some guys from the truck company, they opened up his coat and they started working on him. With that, the building was shaking. It got very dark. We had our lights on. It got very, very thick with dust.

I remember saying, "We've got to get out of here. We've got to get out of here. Let's pick up" -- They picked up Father Michael, and they carried him up on the escalator.

At that time I lost track of them because my officer told me to take this proby. He was getting a little nervous, and he told the proby stay with me and I was to get the proby out of the building, which I did.

We got up to the concourse level of the customs house. They were walking around that wraparound thing. I went to the left because I knew the staircase -- when you went to the left, the staircase goes straight down. It's a long like three-story staircase that goes down to West Street in between like the customs and the north tower.

I got the proby -- he hurt his ankle. I had his arm around my shoulder. I'm taking him down the stairs. I'm constantly looking up, because the jumpers were still coming. At one point a jumper missed us maybe by 40 feet. John said, "What was that?" I said, "Don't look back." I remember distinctly it was a blonde woman.

When we got to West Street, out of the building, John was given medical attention. At that time I ran to Sergeant Sheehan from Fire Patrol 2. He was pretty shook up. He was covered with debris. I guess he was from the other tower.

At this time I still didn't realize the other tower fell. Our radio communications at the time was like non-existent. The radios went completely haywire. It was all static. You couldn't hear nothing.

Q. What radio?

A. The hand held. The hand held.

Q. Were you on the handy talky?

A. I was on the handy talky channel of the Fire Department, yeah.

Q. There was so much on there?

A. Nothing was coming through.

Sheehan told me that he got out and he lost one of the guys, Keith Roma. I said, "Where was he?" I knew they were in the back of the north tower by the escalators by the concourse level where the subway goes through the revolving doors.

At that point I looked down south, and I saw the Marriott Hotel laying in West Street. What went through my mind, I still didn't notice the south tower missing. I just didn't see it, because I was kind of like shielded from it. So I thought in my mind there was a gas explosion or maybe another terrorist, because we knew there was a terrorist thing going on.

Now the situation with the north tower cleared. The dust, the darkness, it lifted. I saw the building was intact. I looked up. It was very heavy fire still. I ran back into the building, and I was yelling with my light, looking around if I could see somebody.

I went to the back, and the whole back part of the tower, the concourse level, was gone. I guess when the south tower came down, it must have ripped it all down. It probably is only like one story there, I believe.

Q. Yeah.

A. I went back to the escalators again. I made the right-hand turn back to the escalators, where we originally found Father Michael. I ran up the escalators yelling, making sure everybody got out. Everybody did get out. I went back down the escalators. I went back out on West Street, back through the front of the north tower where they broke out the glass.

Now I'm standing in front of the tower, and the ironworker that was in there in the lobby, he was wandering around in front. He was dazed. He had a cut on his forearm. He had dirt in his eyes, so he couldn't see. So I took him across the street, past the collapse unit. I remember seeing a collapse unit parked on the west side of West Street, Vesey by the World Financial Center. The buses were staged there for trauma centers. So I took the ironworker there.

I returned back across West Street going toward the front of the World Trade Center. Still in the back of my mind is that they don't know where Keith is. I observed a red helmet. I yelled out, "Patrol." I turned, and it was Sergeant Canham. He was alongside the New York Telephone Company building on Vesey.

At that time I went further south. I went back and stood right in front of Eight World Trade Center right by the customs house, and the north tower was set right next to it. Not that much time went by, and all of a sudden the ground just started shaking. It felt like a train was running under my feet.

I was with two other fellows from Manhattan. They were truckies from Manhattan. I don't remember the number. Things were happening so quick.

Q. No problem.

A. The next thing we know, we look up and the tower is collapsing, it's coming down.

I remember yelling out distinctly, "Go north, north." We ran. Myself and these two other fellows ran north. I saw out of the corner of my eye -- I don't know how many members, but I did see guys go up Vesey Street toward West Broadway. I don't know what ever happened to them, because the other thing fell too. The walkway collapsed. I can't tell exactly how many. There were at least four.

So we ran north on West Street, and we got about midsection to the New York Telephone Company, and the fellow behind me, he must have been looking over his shoulder. I wasn't looking back. I heard the guy say, "Hit the deck."

I was trying to get cover somewhere. I didn't know where to hit the deck. So I hit West Street by a parked car, and I wedged myself next to the parked car, and the other two fellows were behind me. I just kind of made myself like a little void, waiting for the steel to come.

Fortunate for us, the guys who went north on West Street -- the customs house took the big brunt of all that debris. Everything poured into it.

I was there by the parked car. I was put in total darkness. It went totally black. I had my mask on. I hit the mask -- I didn't want to take my helmet off to put the strap over my head, so I just hit it on the street. It cleared out the debris in it. I put the mask on my face and just sat there. It seemed like an eternity. It was total dark. You couldn't see anything.

Finally I started -- even with my mask I started choking. I got up on all fours, and I was trying to make myself gag and throw up. I'm yelling, "I can't see." I thought at first I was blind. I had my hand in front of my face and couldn't see it.

The darkness lifted. A little bit of light came through, and I started to see. But I still had trouble breathing and I was on all fours gagging. I couldn't throw up. I got up. The two fellows that were right behind me, they got up. All three of us were intact. I remember distinctly north on West Street, I guess maybe past --

Q. Barclay?

A. Past Barclay, maybe between Murray and Barclay there was a rig there, and there was a guy -- he must have been using booster water, I guess. He had an inch 3/4 line, and he had the fog on, straight up in the air, soaking.

So the three of us, we helped each other. We ran down and started getting washed off. We were saying, "Come on, throw up. Get rid of it." We tried our best to throw up, and we couldn't throw up. So he hosed us off.

At that time after being hosed off, I felt a little better. At that time I went back to the north tower again, and they were stretching a line. A lot of car fires erupted. All of a sudden cars were blowing up everywhere.

I went back and I helped a guy stretch a line. The guy was all by himself. I helped him stretch a line and started putting water on the car fires. I remember distinctly walking past -- I saw 118 Truck. 118 Truck was parked right on West Street right past Vesey.

Q. North of Vesey?

A. North of Vesey. There was a truck company next to them. There was a fire underneath that truck. I don't remember what the truck was. It was a tiller, though.

There was iron that came right across West Street and bounced off -- I saw it later. The iron must have deflected off Eight World Trade and laid right across right in front of 118 Truck. There was iron around there.

So we started putting out the car fires. Then I started to walk -- then other members showed up from an engine company, so I just started to -- I wanted to regroup with the patrol. I didn't know where everybody was.

At that time I saw my captain, Greco, Fire Patrol 3, coming south on West Street. He told me that everybody was regrouping on North End and Murray. They were regrouping in the park there. He wanted us to go there. That's exactly where I went.

I got to Murray Street. I turned onto Murray Street, and I saw Mike Angelini, who was in the lobby with us. I saw Kenny. That was from the patrol I saw. Then I hosed myself off again. There was a shower set up there. I had a very hard time seeing.

Later on the time went by. We regrouped and we went back. We walked back to the -- we went back across Barclay, down Church, and we were trying to see if we could move our rig out of the way.

At that point my eyes were really starting to bother me pretty bad. The long and short of it, the patrol was taken -- we went back to 40 Fulton Street. The chief wanted to get all our guys together. At this time we were missing one member, Keith Roma, still.

Later on that afternoon I was taken to Long Island Hospital, where my eyes had to be flushed out. I did all right. I didn't scratch my cornea. I did the right thing. I didn't screw up my eyes. I just kept flushing them out.

That's kind of like what happened. I don't think I left anything out. It happened so quickly, it was just total -- it was bad from the beginning, and it went totally haywire when the other tower collapsed. It was just nothing but carnage and debris. It was just bodies, body parts everywhere, a shoe with a leg in it. It was just horrible, you know.

Q. I believe it.

The Fire Patrolman that you mentioned, is he lost?

A. Yes.

Q. Was he from here?

SERGEANT CANHAM: He's from Fire Patrol 2.

A. He was from Fire Patrol 2. I believe he was in the north tower concourse level, and I believe when the tower came down he couldn't get out of that concourse level. Probably the wind wouldn't let him through the door. Sergeant Sheehan just got through the door, and I imagine maybe he just got stuck. I believe that's where he was lost, because there was only one story there.

Q. Everybody tells me all these vehicles were on fire. What do you attribute all these vehicles being on fire to?

A. I believe it must have been from the debris falling and the heat just started hitting the cars and starting cars on fire. There were an awful lot of cars burning, an awful lot. It had to be radiated heat or just stuff falling on cars and setting them on fire. There were numerous cars burning, numerous.

Q. Good. That's real good.

A. I hope --

CHIEF MALKIN: I omitted to say that sitting in on this interview was Sergeant Canham from Fire Patrol 3. At the conclusion of this interview, which is now 1601 hours, I thank Paul Curran for his interview, and this is the end of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

SERGEANT JAMES CANHAM

Interview Date: December 18, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: The date is December 18, '01. The time is 1408 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Sergeant James Canham of Fire Patrol 3. We are at Fire Patrol 3. There's nobody else in the room at this time. The interview concerns the events of September 11th, 2001, and what follows is the interview.

A. I live in downtown Brooklyn. I saw the smoke condition when I dropped my wife off on Joralemon Street. I made my way back home, which is on Sackett and Smith Street. While I entered my welling, I heard my brother on the answering machine saying the towers were just hit by an airplane.

I closed by door, made my way back to Fire Patrol 3, approximately eight blocks. I went into quarters, took my turnout gear out of my locker, which consisted of a Halligan, flashlight, full bunker gear and PBI hood.

I made my way down Dean Street, when I saw a captain of a fire patrol responding from fire prevention. He said, "Are you going over there?" I said, "Yes." I jumped in the car. I asked him what we had. He said, "I don't know. I just heard a plane had hit the building."

As we got onto the Brooklyn Bridge and we turned where we can get a view of the tower, we saw that both towers were burning. So I made the comment, "Geez, it looks like the plane must have hit one building and careened into the other," because tower one was hit much higher than tower two. So it looked to me like it had hit, dropped and hit the second tower.

Once again, I was off duty, I had no radio, I had nothing. He dropped me off, because of traffic, at the South Street Seaport. I made my way from the South Street Seaport to the corner of Church and Fulton, where I had spotted Fire Patrol 3's rig parked out in front of tower one.

Chief Raymond Cowa was standing in front of the rig, and he had said that Captain Keegan had just made his way inside. I grabbed a mask off of the rig. I told the chief I was off duty and that I would be going in. He said, "Watch your back." I began to make my way into the building.

I had seen a couple of what I had thought were body parts in front of the building. I didn't pay it much mind. You still had a heavy flow of people leaving the building. I made my way into the building, down an escalator, where I believe I was in the concourse level. I believe that's what it's called.

I ran into Sergeant Sheehan and Patrolman Keith Roma. They were escorting people up the escalator. They were standing by it looked like a turnstile or a revolving door; I'm not sure. There were sprinkler heads going off on the concourse level.

John said something bad really happened. He said the overheads popped. There was a lot of heat here before. There's nothing happening now. He's going to stand fast.

I told him that the chief was looking for him and he wanted to coordinate all the fire patrol units, get them all together, and begin some type of operation coinciding with the Fire Department.

I proceeded into the building. I had told John, which is Sergeant Sheehan, that I was going to go into the lobby area where the elevator banks were to take a quick look, because I saw that there were no firemen on the lower level. I wasn't sure -- knowing that the elevators had dropped, seeing the condition of the hallways, the bent doors, the fascias of the hallways were knocked into the hallways.

I started searching the elevators, when a woman said there was another woman trapped in an elevator. I had gone over to the elevator with my tool and began to pop the door open. The elevator was cantilevered, so it was very hard. But there was an occupant inside.

I went back to where I saw Sergeant Sheehan and Keith Roma. There were two firemen, two truckers. One was an officer. I believe they were from 10 Truck. I can't be sure. I told them what I had. They came with their tools. All three of us tried to pop the door with the Halligans.

A member from the building maintenance crew came up with a Port-A-Power. He said, "I've got this. I can pop the door. I've got it." So with that we had all left. They had gone back to where Sergeant Sheehan and Keith Roma was. I had made my way up the stairwell.

On my way up the stairwell, I began encountering a lot of people on their way down, very calm, and they were filing out. It wasn't a panic. You could see that they were from upper floors. I had asked what floors. I believe the first floor I heard was the 26th floor, 27th floor. Given the time, it seemed this is how much time it's taking to get down. Very narrow hallway, stairwells going up.

I got up about four flights, found an open door onto the floor. I believe it was the fourth floor. I took a quick peek inside, saw no occupants, started making my way back up. Once again I was beginning to get respiratory now. I was beginning to get winded. I had come from South Street Seaport to this point and getting winded.

I made my way up to the eighth floor and did the same thing, stopped myself for a moment, found a water cooler, doused myself with some water, continued to make my way up.

I got up to the 13th floor, when there was a large man blocking the stairwell, people climbing over the top of him. I scooped him up onto my shoulder, and I began half dragging, half carrying him down the stairs.

I got to the 11th floor, and there was a woman sitting on the stairwell crying. I yelled, "Ma'am, you've got to move. You're blocking the stair. You've got to --" She said, "But there's a police officer laying on the floor." I took a peek into the doorway. I saw a police officer -- I believe it was Port Authority -- prone on the floor.

I had taken the man that I was carrying and passed him to two other civilians of large size. They were on their way down. I said, "Look, take this guy." They were very agreeable, no problem. One guy took the woman. The other guy grabbed this large man. They continued down.

I went over to the police officer. He said, "I was just trying to catch my wind. I'm very winded." I gave him my mask, get a couple of breaths. With that, two other police officers came, a sergeant and another officer. I'm not sure if they were Port Authority or city PD. They said they're going to take care of their man.

I asked them if they had a cell phone. I want to call my wife. She works in downtown Manhattan. She works right in the neighborhood. He said, "No, but I saw an office down the hall that had phones that were still operating." They were up there making searches, popping doors, et cetera, they had a ram through with them.

I dropped my mask there in the hallway. Air quality was fine. Very dim as far as lighting. But the air quality was good. So I dropped my mask, made my way down to the far end of the corridor, popped open an office door, called my wife, told her this is real bad, I'm going to be here a while, go home, get the kids, stay out of Manhattan, it's going to be a zoo, not realizing what was going on.

When I came back out to the hallway, I saw the sergeant once again, that police officer. He looked at me and he said, "Are you aware of what's going on?" At this time I did not. I didn't have a radio, and I just assumed it was one plane. He said, "This was a hit. They hit the Pentagon. They hit the White House. And we have another inbound coming at us now."

I looked at him kind of queer and I said, "You have another one coming at us?" He said, "Yeah. The other tower was hit also." He called on his radio, and his dispatcher said that, yeah, you have another one inbound, watch your back.

With that, they had started to go down the stairs. I went back and called my wife again. I figured I'm on the 11th floor of this building. If there's a plane inbound now and these guys were bailing out -- excuse my language, I'm done.

So I called my wife and left a message on her machine. I said, "Baby, I love you. I don't think I'm going to make it home. Just take care of the kids. I'll be back."

As I hung up the phone and started making my way back down the hall is when the rumble started. I thought it was our tower starting to collapse, being the volume of fire I saw when I had gotten there.

I ran down the hallway. As I ran down the hallway, I pass two other police officers. They were also, I believe, making searches on that floor. They must have been with the team. We passed each other in flight.

The sound became horrific. I was about maybe five feet from the mask. I just dove for my mask, scooped up my mask with one arm and I grabbed the stairwell doorway. I had half my body on the floor and the other half was in the stairwell. I figured if the stairs go, I'll roll onto the floor. If the floor goes, I can maybe -- it was a grasp at nothing.

This is what I thought the best way maybe out of this, because at the time with the sound of the wind blowing through the elevator banks, because it was air pressure coming in, I had believed at the time it was air pressure coming down. I thought the floors were coming down. But it was tower two falling, which once again I didn't -- it didn't register. I thought it was my building.

It must have rumbled for almost what seemed like an eternity, but it must have been only five minutes or so, between the sound of it and the dying down. The entire floor was enveloped in dust, smoke, minimal heat, and a very eerie silence.

Had thrown my mask on, took a couple of breaths. You could breathe it. Then I had gone right into the stairwell. There had to be 20 people piled up, I mean actually in a pile.

So I started peeling them off. I said, "Can you stand?" "Yes, I can stand." I'd stop them. I'd tell them to hold the railing. I grabbed the victim behind them, told them to grab the belt loop of the person in front of them. If it was a woman, I grabbed the bra strap. I actually grabbed the bra and told them, "Hold the bra, the other hand hold the railing," and make your way down. I started a train.

The people, once again, even as panicking and crying as they were, they were listening and they were making their move. They were on their way down. They were coughing and disoriented. I said, "Hold onto the railing and hold onto the person in front of you and just keep moving, just keep moving down the stairs."

After I cleared those people out -- it had to account for maybe 30, 35 people by the time the last one had gone by me. Once again I felt very comfortable on the floor now. The shaking had stopped. The ground was very solid. The wall seemed solid. The sound was gone. It was just a matter of people coming down the stairs.

I heard clanking from tools and masks banging against the wall, so I figured the brothers were on their way down.

I began to make my way down the hallway to look where the other police officers were that had passed me in flight. I got to the end of the hallway. I found no one. I went back to the phone and called my wife's office again. Each time I was just leaving a message. As I picked up to use the phone, the phone was dead. I wasn't able to use the phone.

I took out a window, about four windows, because now the quality of the air in the room I was in is in question. It was starting to get charged. So I started taking out windows. When I looked down, I saw ladders that were twisted and cantilevered. I saw light bars that were just -- it looked as if you had a blinking light under a thin layer of dust is what it looked like. It was the top of rigs.

Now I assumed that's where the tower -- I believed that the fascia or the upper floors had slipped from the building and dropped off, not realizing at all that the tower had fallen.

I began to make my way back into the hallway, when people started to come up out of the stairwells. They were coming up from the lower floors, saying that the second and third floors were gone, you can't get out that way, what are we going to do, in a panic.

Other firefighters had also now entered the floor. They were coming from above, and a couple were coming from down below. A battalion chief, a large man -- I don't know who he was -- he came in. I asked him if he was aware of what was happening. He said, "No."

I brought him over to the window where I was, and I showed him out of the window. I said, "Look, this is what we're up against." We both looked at one another like "We're screwed."

There were some firemen that were yelling "Bail out." They gave a bail out, everybody bail out, and they were making their way out of the building, down the stairs. Some civilians were panicking when they heard that, because they saw firemen leaving and saying bail.

The chief and I and two other firemen stayed with the civilians. We didn't go down the stairwell that they were coming up, we moved halfway down the hallway. We found another stairwell and started filing people down that.

We did almost a leap frog. I went down to a landing. I held my light until all the people came by. The chief and this other fireman had passed me. When the last person went by me, I made my way down the next level, relieving that fireman, and it was a leap frog to just try to keep the people moving and just make our way down.

I got down to what I believe is the lobby level. I believe it was the lobby level. It was a gray level, so if that's the lobby, it was the gray level. There were filing all the civilians to the left, which would have been south.

I was exhausted at this time, physically drained, trying to (inaudible). I was really wiped at the time.

Oh, excuse me, let me go back to the 11th floor. I have to do this. I'm sorry.

Q. Go ahead.

A. I had passed a Lieutenant Ed D'Atri from Squad 1. He saw me. He said, "Jimmy, where are my guys?" This is on the 11th floor after the tower had fallen. He had made his way up. He had said, "Jimmy, did you see our guys?" I said, "No, Eddie. Some bad shit just happened." He said, "Yeah, I know. I don't know where my guys are." He had gone up, and I had made my way back down the hallway.

This is after the last civilians had gone by, just prior to me going back to look for the cops. I believe Eddie stayed on the floor with me for a minute. We gave a quick search. Then he made his way up. After that I didn't see Ed anymore.

Going back down to the lobby level. I got down to the lobby level. There had to be six to what I believe were maybe ten companies in a staged area. They were standing there. They were talking with one another. Once again, a very relaxed mode.

The civilians were minimal at this time. There was a dark haze in the lobby, I guess from the settling dust from the prior collapse.

I had made my way out on the West Street side. Once again, I passed these companies, and even a couple of the guys joked. They said, "Hey, Patrol, what are you doing?" I said, "Yeah, we're going to be here a while." We all snickered and laughed, and then I had exited the building.

As I entered the building, a body fell maybe three or four feet from me and hit the ground. I got my back up against the wall and scooched along the building going north up tower one, going along. Two or three more bodies had impacted.

I ran over to what I believe is Eight --

Q. Yes, that's Eight.

A. Eight World Trade Center. I made my way along that wall and up and to the first bend. When I saw I had a pretty clear area, I made it over to this side. It's an L shape going on -- I don't know how to describe that area.

I ran into Patrolman Paul Curran. He saw that I was pretty taxed. Paulie looked wiped out. I said, "Paulie, what are you doing?" I said, "Where are the guys?" He said, "I really don't know. I'm going to go up and take a look for them." I said, "All right, look, I'm going to try to find out where our guys are, and we'll regroup back in front of the building." He said, "Okay."

He had left and gone north. I began to go up north and I said, let me turn around and go back the other way, because I was thinking to scoot down which would have been Vesey Street. So I ended up here. I started to make may way back down Vesey, and the building began to rumble. It was a very quick time between when I saw Paul.

As it started to coming down, I darted right back to the building which was eight World Trade Center, dove next to a concrete traffic barrier and a truck and just covered up, because at the speed it was coming down, I saw that there was no way to run.

I didn't want to run north, because I just didn't think I could outrun it, as taxed as I was, equipment I was wearing. I just didn't think I was going to make any time. So I ran maybe six to eight feet, dove, and I just ended up between this barrier and this parked truck, covered up.

After this it gets a little gray. I have no recollection of time. I remember making my way back down West Street, and I came upon an engine. There was a chauffeur and another guy next to the rig. He couldn't get his breath. I had gone through the same thing as Patrolman Curran, puking up the dry dust, trying to clear your throat, nothing was happening.

I gave the chauffeur my mask. He used it for a bit. I made my way over to the hydrant and started splashing my face, trying to drink down some water to clear this debris out of my throat, the dust was -- visibility was maybe five, ten feet.

I got back to the chauffeur. He said he was doing better. I splashed him with some water. We steam at the hydrant. I said maybe we can get the stang open or set up a fog pattern and try to knock down some of this dust to make a path for anybody that might have been this way. We tried that. We got no -- the pump didn't engage. I believe that we lost water pressure somehow. The chauffeur believed the same.

I told the chauffeur I'm going back over to the tower. I made my way back down north again. I remember hearing all pass alarms. Visibility was nil. There was heavy smoke. There was a lot of fire, a lot of car fires.

I realized at that time I had no strength. I physically just couldn't do anything. I saw no one. I saw no firemen. I felt I was alone. I had just lost Paul, who was my chauffeur when I worked with him. I figured he's gone. I remember turning and walking away.

An off-duty member from 105 Truck grabbed me and dragged me to a diner. There were other members from the Fire Patrol there. They cleaned me up. It was air-conditioned. They took my stuff off, flushed my face, my eyes, washed me down. I began to recollect what was going on now.

I immediately went to a phone. The proprietor gave me a phone, and I called the house watch here in Brooklyn. I gave them a head count of who was in the diner with me. There were Fire Patrolmen, and I believe there was one firemen.

I gave everybody's name. I told the guy on house watch, "Take the names down, mark the time. This is who is alive right now. I'm very unaware of who else is around."

I had commandeered a radio from one of the members from Fire Patrol who was in the diner at this time. When I had gotten the radio, I turned it on. It was futile. There were a lot of maydays. There were a lot of searching for people. The radio was useless as far as any kind of command. There was none.

I made my way back towards West Street, where I ran into Captain Greco, another member of the Fire Patrol, a couple of firemen that were wandering around aimlessly. Everybody was in shock. Anybody that was in that area was just mentally, physically gone.

After that it's really gray. I remember we made our way back. We tried to make a sortie back into the building. Physically nobody had anything. We started seeing a lot of incoming companies now, inbound companies.

Our supervisor had ordered us back to 40 Fulton, and we made our way back to 40 Fulton Street, where we regrouped, came back to Brooklyn, got cleaned up, got a little something to eat and made our way back to the towers to search. And that went on for days after.

Q. You thought about going back into the building. About a minute ago you said that. Which building were you going to go back into?

A. Tower one.

Q. Did you get a good view of it? It was just a pile of rubble.

A. It was a pile of rubble. All you heard were pass alarms.

Q. You heard pass alarms.

A. There were no firemen. All the guys that I had left -- there were ten companies in there, I'm sure, as far as the number goes. They were all in that lobby area. This lobby swung around. There were guys down this end. There were guys over there.

Once again, they were escorting the people -- when I came down, it was -- it was just a small doorway. It was an access doorway that we had come out, and they had filed everybody to the left. I had gone to the right. After that it's just gray.

I had believed at first, looking at the map, that I was here, which would have been 40 feet from Vesey Street, 20 feet from the building. It was six of one, half dozen of the other, because either way I was in front of this building, either here or here. I really can't remember.

I believe it was here because I remember there was a truck parked into it. There was a truck parked into it. I remember going back days later. I saw West Street directly in front of tower one was buried. Vesey Street and the top of this building, some debris had fallen this way. I remember I was right in this one little void, which the command center I believe was set up here.

Q. Right.

A. So that's --

Q. You're talking about adjacent to number eight World Trade Center, just west of the building called number eight.

When you went into the lower level of One World Trade Center, the sprinkler heads were going off.

A. Right, they were heads off.

Q. There was no fire; there was no heat. Their heads were off from a pressure surge like from the pressure created by the falling of building two or what do you think?

A. What I believe set those heads off is when those elevators had dropped --

Q. Why did the elevators drop?

A. They were sheered.

Q. They were sheered. We didn't cover that. People told me, yeah, I think the elevators dropped and the doors were blown out and all that.

A. Right.

Q. The elevators were sheered?

A. They were sheered.

Q. What did the elevator doors look like?

A. They were buckled, cantilevered. The one woman was -- how she was standing up, I didn't know.

Q. She was standing up? She was alive?

A. She was standing up and alive, as I popped it with my tool. I had a converted officers tool. I made my own little. It's very good as far as leverage and so on and so forth. I got the door open maybe six to eight inches.

That's when the guys from -- once again, I believe they were 10 Truck. He had put his officer's tool, my tool and the Halligan. We had both Halligans. But the door was so warped that we really couldn't get the strength to pop it open.

But when the guy pulled up with the Port-A-Power, he was very confident. He was like, "Don't worry. I've got her." It seemed almost like he had done this before, like he was here working. Once again, I had come off duty.

So this maintenance man had enough muster to get that tool and begin to work on the doors right away. It just led me to believe that he had things under control.

So myself and the lieutenant from whatever company that was were confident he could do it, and we had moved on.

Q. I wonder where he is now.

A. Exactly. He was ten feet from Sergeant Sheehan and Keith Roma.

Q. You're the first guy that told me that they saw D'Atri. I know D'Atri. Nobody else told me that they saw him.

A. When you speak to the others from Squad, they should tell you, because I had spoken to them immediately after that.

Once again, I'm doing this 23 years. You always think, yeah, if you give a location, you have a good idea where they can be. This changed all the rules. This changed all the rules. This went from a structure to a wafer in seconds, in seconds.

I couldn't believe the speed of that tower coming down. I heard the rumble, I looked up, debris was already 50 feet from the ground, on its way down. You looked and you ran. You just didn't --

Q. You reacted or you didn't survive.

A. You just moved. You just ran. You knew you were dead. I knew I was dead. As I thought of my children, life flashing before your eyes, true. You see it, you see it, you see it. I saw my boys, I saw --

Q. That's about it?

A. Yeah.

Q. Good.

CHIEF MALKIN: I thank Sergeant Canham for this interview. The time is now 1633 hours, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRE MARSHAL RICHARD MC CURRY

Interview Date: December 18, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATALLION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 18, 2001, the time is 1457 hours and this is Battalion Chief Steven King, Safety Battalion of FDNY. I am conducting an interview with Fire Marshal Richard McCurry from SOC or Hooper Street, concerning the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Richard, you can start whenever you want.

A. I was working a day tour on that day, an 8 to 6 day tour. I get in about a quarter to 8. I was doing some paperwork. I guess it's about 10 to 9. I heard somebody over the intercom say that the World Trade Center was on fire. I looked out the window and from our window you could actually see the World Trade Center, the New York skyline and I could see the smoke and flames coming out of the World Trade Center.

Immediately the Chief got on the intercom and told everybody to respond and to bring their turn out gear and to report to the command center. So my partner, Mike Owney and I, as we were getting our gear and get into the car to head on over, we heard somebody say that a second plane had hit the tower.

We headed in our vehicle, we arrive at the Brooklyn Bridge and at that point there they had closed the bridge to traffic so we were able to get over the bridge right away, because they were letting emergency vehicles over. We went over the Brooklyn Bridge, down Broadway and we parked our car on I believe it was Cortlandt Street right off of Church Street.

As I got my gear out of the trunk I could see the World Trade Center, both towers were literally a half a block away in front of me. I could see the heavy fire and smoke pushing out of the both towers. My partner and I then put on our gear, our boots and helmets and coat and proceeded into I believe it was tower number 2. We were looking for a Fire Marshal command post that we thought may have been inside the tower.

So as we got into the tower, I believe it was 2 World Trade Center was the first tower we were in, I could see the evacuation of the building and it struck me as being a very orderly evacuation. I don't remember anybody panicking. People were coming -- workers were coming down the stairs, there were Police Officers in the building, I saw firefighters coming in with their roll-ups. Some were going into the elevators and into the stairwells.

As we were looking for the command post that the fire marshals had set up, we didn't see anybody in that tower. We proceeded to go to the other tower through the underground concourse that they have there. At that point we didn't find any of our guys from the Fire Marshal's office, so we proceeded back to the first tower that we were in. Which I believe was 2 World Trade Center. At that point we were on the west side of the building and across West Street I could see that they had a command post set up at the world financial building and it looked like there were some Fire Department personnel set up at that command post. So as we exited that tower, at that point there were some jumpers. I could see the people who had jumped were in the plaza right in front of us. We went around the side of the building and we crossed West Street and at that point there was a Fire Department command post set up over there. I believe that's where Chief Ganci and some of the members were, at that command post.

So as I was standing on the steps looking up at the towers, I could see the people -- there were some people who had jumped. I could still see the heavy smoke and fire pushing from both towers and my partner, Mike Owney, my partner at the time, had seen Commissioner Von Essen standing on the sidewalk right in front of us. So we approached the commissioner and he was by himself and he started walking away. And my partner said, "Boss, this is a terrorist incident. You shouldn't be by yourself. There could be secondary terrorists out here and you have 'Fire Commissioner' on your back. You're a walking target.

So he told us he was headed over to Barclay Street to meet the Mayor at another command post that was set up over there. We said, "Well, we're going to go with you." So he said, "okay." So as we walked up West Street we made a turn on Vesey Street. We went approximately one or two blocks when all of a sudden we heard this big roar. It sounded like another plane coming in or it sounded like an earthquake, but it just didn't sound right. So we all started running, my partner and I, and we had the commissioner with us also. The next thing I know we were engulfed in this black cloud of smoke and we couldn't breathe, we couldn't see anything.

Calling out for my partner. Couldn't find him. Eventually made it up the block a little bit. When the smoke cleared, my partner was behind me and the commissioner was still with us. We walked about another block or two and wound up on Barclay street. We went about a half a block on Barclay when the Mayor and Police Commissioner Kerick walked out of a building. We literally bumped into them and they had a bunch of their aides with them.

So we looked at Commissioner Von Essen and he had spoken to the mayor and he said they were going to find a temporary command post. So we had gone a few blocks and we entered a restaurant. At that point we looked up and there was a big atrium with a lot of glass. They felt it wasn't secure enough so we exited there and we started walking, I think we were headed north now. I don't remember exactly what street we were on when I hear this same roar again. At this point I didn't know the first tower had come down.

So we just started running again, not knowing what this noise was and as I turned around I could see the second tower collapsing. And we were literally running down the street and we came to the quarters of I believe it was 24 Engine and 5 Truck on Sixth Avenue and Houston. So at that point we forced the door. There was a combination lock on the door. We forced the door. We got in their quarters. We had the Fire Commissioner, the Police Commissioner and the Mayor and a bunch of his people and a few more cops who had showed up. We set up a command post there for a few hours and they were making some phone calls and then about an hour and a half, two hours later their vehicle showed up. They decided they were going to set up a command post at the Police Academy. So we got in the car with Commissioner Von Essen and everybody headed uptown to the Police Academy on 22nd Street and on the 6th floor we secured an office. We made some notifications that the Fire Commissioner was going to be at this location for a while. We were giving out the phone numbers and they started setting up a command post. And that's where we spent most of the rest of that day. And then later on that night the commissioner went back down to the World Trade Center. We were with the commissioner. We were pretty much acting as his bodyguards and we wound up being detailed into that whole first week acting as his security.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

SUPERVISING FIRE MARSHAL RANDALL WILSON

Interview Date: December 20, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 20th, 2001. The time is 1136 hours, and this is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Supervising Fire Marshal Randall Wilson, who is assigned to Brooklyn base Hooper Street, director of training. The interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Randy, you can start whenever you want.

A. Okay. I'm assigned to special operations bureau of fire investigation. I was in my office at the time of the fire in the first tower that got hit by the plane. I was notified. I was the supervisor in charge that day. The other supervisor in charge of special operations was off.

I grabbed Ken Moody. He was the fire marshal. We went over, took the Brooklyn Bridge. While on the Brooklyn Bridge, the second tower got hit. When we went over, we were able to park our vehicle on Church Street.

We got out, just regular attire, shirt and tie and suit. We went down Liberty Street towards West Street. While on Liberty Street, we were notified make sure that we have full firefighting gear. My gear was in my vehicle. Ken Moody didn't have any gear, so I sent him into 10 Engine, 10 Truck to grab some gear.

I went back to my vehicle. I moved it even closer. It was roughly at Church and Liberty then. I got dressed. I picked up Ken Moody, and we went to the command post located in front of the hotel on West Street.

We were at that location. We were trying to set up a separate command post for the bureau of fire investigation. At that point they wanted us to relocate to Liberty and Vesey. So looking at the building, we walked around exposure two to exposure three, which was Church Street, and we were looking for Liberty and Vesey, which don't intersect.

At the time we weren't thinking that they didn't intersect. We asked somebody. They pointed us to the direction of Liberty. When we got to Liberty, we couldn't find Vesey. We turned around on Church. We were going towards Vesey.

While on Church Street in the area of Fulton, we heard the noise, and we were trying to go down the side street. Just making the turn onto the side street of Fulton and Church, I felt the wind coming.

So at that point I wasn't able to outrun it or find another location, so I went behind a car. I had a female civilian with me, whatever, and the tower came down. You couldn't see. We were waiting to see when we could start breathing or seeing or whatever.

After the tower came down and it started clearing, I was helping that woman. At the time that we were on Church, I probably had approximately about a dozen, dozen and a half marshals with me, trying to find the second location.

So at that point when the tower came down, I was trying to locate the marshals. Some had gone down the subway. Some had gone into buildings, things like that. So I had a difficult time finding them. I was trying to assist the people that were in the area.

Then the second tower came down. At that point everybody was dispersed. I wasn't sure where everybody was. I was finally able to reach somebody. To be honest with you, I honestly forget how I was able to find out, but we regrouped at Battery Park.

At that point I took the wide way around towards the Battery Park. Then Bob Burns would have come in from home, Chief McCahey and myself, we had gone back to the scene area to see what we could do to start setting up under command post, something along those lines.

That was pretty much it.

CHIEF KING: Okay. The time is 1140 hours, and the interview with Supervising Fire Marshal Wilson is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRE MARSHAL MICHAEL CAIN

Interview Date: December 20, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATALLION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 20, 2001. The time is 1057 hours and this is Battalion Chief Steven King from Safety Battalion FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Fire Marshal Michael Cain, who is assigned to the DFI SOC command, our technical services unit. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Mike, you can start whenever you're ready.

A. I got to work about a little before 8:00 o'clock that morning. I was in my office checking out some of my cameras and straightening up my office when one of the other Fire Marshals, Jim Murphy, said there was a fire in the Trade Center and it was a fifth alarm already.

I went over to his office, which faces the World Trade Center and I had my digital camera with me and I looked out the window and I could see the fire. I took a few pictures of it and then my supervisors were saying where we were going to go over there. This was a fifth alarm already so I went back to my -- I thought a minute and I said, You know what? I better set up a video camera in the window here. So I went to my office. I got a video camera with a couple of tapes. I set it up on the tripod in the window facing the Trade Center enclosing the top of -- the top, more like where the cash area was and I started the tape and as I was getting my fire gear ready looking out the window again, when we saw the second plane crash into the second tower. I left the tape running and I knew it was not an accident, you know, that this happened. So I gave Jim Murphy a little instruction on how to change the tape and he left the tape running.

I went with Bobby Burns and Mike Starace, we got in the car and we went over the Brooklyn Bridge. We went down underneath the -- down to the West Side Highway, came up West Street. We parked on West Street and I guess about Albany, West Street and Albany, got out of the car and started going up West Street and there were body parts in the street. The plane wheel was in the street. You could see the plane in the building. We went to about West Street, in front of -- West and Liberty, just before the pedestrian bridge where Chief McCay wanted to gather us all together just before we went to the command post. Then the Chief said to get my camera. I went back to the car, I got the camera out of the car. Bobby Burns went back to the car with me and as I got back up towards Liberty and on West Street Bobby Burns yelled to me, "run." I looked up. I took a few pictures as I saw the building start to collapse, I started running back towards like Albany and Carlyle streets and stopped again and I looked, I took a few more pictures and I knew I wasn't going to outrun this thing so I just ran and hid behind -- a found an ambulance. I just waited and the smoke caught up with me and I could hear the beams and the rocks, you know, pieces of rock would hit me on the helmet and I just hid behind the ambulance. It seemed like forever.

You know, I was in the truck company for a long time and when you go in through a search you look for that peek on the floor, that 2 inches that you always have the clear air and, you know, you can see your victim. I get down on the floor and I'm looking for that clean air and there ain't nothing. You know, I just stuck my head in my coat. Lucky I had my fire coat and helmet on and I just waited until what seemed like forever for the smoke to clear.

When the smoke started to clear I ran back towards the collapse zone, because I knew the rest of the guys were over there and when I got there the rigs were on fire, the pumper was on fire, the Ladder company was on fire.

I met up with supervisor Dave Lynn. You couldn't get through because of the pedestrian bridge, it was filled with debris. There was nobody on our side of the bridge that was hurt, so what I did was I made my way around the bridge down Albany Street, I guess, and down past the esplanade and then I started my way up towards the Yacht -- the North Cove Yacht Harbor and by the time I made it up there I almost made it to West Street again and all the E.S.U. cops were running towards me and towards everybody yelling, "Run." And I heard that distinctive sound again. The sound of the building collapse. I could see it collapsing and I started to run back towards the sea wall and as I was passing the sea wall, the Jersey State Police had a launch in the Cove Harbor and he was trying to pull out, but the bow line was still attached to the tire. You know, where they tie the boat up.

And I passed it by and then I looked up and the building and I said, "Oh, I can make it back there."

He cut the engine and I was able to make it back to whatever they call the metal thing they put the rope around and I was able to get it off. He had enough slack and I just through to the launch, the cop on the launch and I guess they made it out of the cove, because they had wounded people on the boat. And I ran back towards the sea wall and when I got there the smoke came again but it didn't stay as long. Because there was a big breeze that came off of the water there that pushed it back.

Then we just made our way to West Street, just looking for whatever -- anybody that was there. Then we grouped up and found people and regrouped back up at the marshal's with Chief McCay and everything. We went back. They had a temporary command post down by where the old Pier 1 was. We had Dr. Kelly back there and everybody else and then we all moved the command post up, just up to the college. I guess it was the college. We went back to the college. We did different things for the next 59, 59 hours.

Q. That concludes your interview?

A. Yes.

BATALLION CHIEF KING: The time is 1105 hours and the interview with Fire Marshal Michael Cain is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PAUL HYLAND

Interview Date: December 20, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 20th, 2001, the time is 1400 hours, and this is Battalion Chief Stephen King from the Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter 1st Grade Paul Hyland from Ladder Company 110, who was the OBN man on September 11th. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Paul, you can start whenever you'd like.

A. It's Paul Hyland from Ladder 110. It was about five or ten to 9:00 in the morning when we got the run to respond to Manhattan for a possible 1076. From actually the headquarters I could see the smoke coming over Manhattan going into Brooklyn.

Jumped on the rig going over the Brooklyn Bridge. That's when we got our first sight of the World Trade Center burning and, as we were actually crossing over, reports of someone from I guess -- because we had flipped over to radio transmissions and we had confirmed people jumping and we had perfect sight and actually we were looking to see what was going on, and this was going to be a fucked up job.

Going over the bridge, then we're trying to make our way down there. Went down Broadway. People running and trying to get out of the area. Very difficult, hard traffic. Went down Liberty Street. We were actually looking -- we were trying to figure out exactly the position of where we had to put the rig because they wanted us down, I guess, it was really on West Street and Vesey, and it turned out we had stopped at Chambers and Liberty and we were waiting there because there were thousands of people and everybody was filming and just couldn't get across and we're trying to figure out, and then there was a gigantic explosion.

I had the OB and I looked up and I just saw the top of World Trade Center go up like a lit candle. It just everything just lit up and I thought it was maybe a secondary explosion, because if you looked from where we were, they're twins, so you're going to picture the second -- I didn't see the plane go in and I thought it was just a secondary explosion in the same tower, and everything just came down on the street. It was just raining steel. We said we're not going that way. So we were going to back up and we had to go down to Broadway. We ended upcoming back. We were on Vesey and Liberty again. So we went back up and landed up parking the rig at Vesey and, I guess, Vesey and what street was that?

(Pause.)

A. I guess Vesey and the Millenium Hotel. Church Street. I'm sorry. Church and Vesey. We were coming across and we walked down. We had to go down to the command center. We carried all our tools, the bottles, everything, and as we're walking down, part of the plane engine was sitting right in the street, still burning. I said, look, this is the plane.

That was the other thing. Another engine company, as we were marching, did shoot right down Liberty Street with all the debris going right there. I thought they were crazy. I had no idea. I can't remember what engine company it was, but they shot right across.

So we ended going around to West Street. Lieutenant Mera, the lieutenant for that day, I guess he saw a command station, command headquarters right inside the north tower, which is Tower 1?

Q. One?

A. We went in, busted through one of the windows, opened up, made like a door. I can't recall the fire companies who were there, but we responded there. We were waiting. We knew we were going to be going up and it was a staging area for us. So I stood over by the -- I said let's get over by the elevator banks, put all our stuff down. Our Engine, 207, all came over with us. We were just sitting there talking, watching what was going on, and Lieutenant Mera came back to us and he said that we've got to respond up to the 21st floor, that there are people trapped. I'm not sure of the Chief that was with us who was assigned to us, maybe if you said his name, but I can't recall, and I think we had a maintenance guy with us at the time.

We were walking around. We walked to the back. I guess we were walking east inside the building, which was towards Vesey Street, right? Yes, where they had that mezzanine, they had an escalator coming down. There were just hundreds and hundreds of people just coming down at that point. The maintenance guy said I think the elevators are working, or it was the Chief said it. The Chief went around and says take a look at some of the elevators. I think we had a maintenance guy with us at the time. He said these low-rise are working, it will get you up to 16.

We said, well, this is not a normal procedure. We tried the firemen's service, brought the elevators down, put it in firemen's service, and about all of us got into the elevator. It was a little unsettling. We went up I think a couple floors. We stopped and opened up. It opened. So we went up to 16, which was great because, walking 16 flights, we wouldn't be able to operate.

We got to the floor, went into the staircase, I think it was staircase C. It was the one right there. It was on the south side or west side. We went out and there were just people coming, constant amount of people, just a steady flow, but we couldn't attack with the steady flow of people. I mean, the staircases weren't that wide. We were shoulder to shoulder with these people with tools, we're banging them, telling them to step aside, and they didn't understand. They're just panicking. It was a nightmare.

So we got up to 23rd and they were going to try and clear that stairway out and make it an attack staircase. We actually had the people come out of the staircase and walk down to the other one and we were going to make them go down this one and make this the firemen's staircase so we could come up. We dropped our stuff on the 23rd and then Lieutenant Mera said down on the 21st we have people trapped.

We get down to the 21st floor. Me and Artie Riccio from Ladder 119, we took the south end of the building. We split up. We paired off. Lieutenant Mera, Mike Beehler and Dave Sandvik took the north end of the building. We made our way around. There was no smoke. It was empty, but we were checking doors, forcing all the offices. We went around popping doors, popping doors, popping doors, all the way around, just anybody in there? Nothing. We were all getting very overheated and I have to say I took -- one of these offices were very expensive. I took a pitcher of water and just drank it right there, me and Artie, and then we got back. One of the doors we forced was like a water cooler -- it was microwaves and coffee pots and they had water and stuff.

So we got back to the other attack staircase, which was in the center of the building. We were all sitting. We were just waiting there for a few minutes, and we said we were going to go up to the next floor, and as we were waiting, everybody is sweating and hot and getting dehydrated. I told my officer, Wayne, I said, listen, I know where I can get some water. I said it's right over here. It's just down and to the back. I says I'm just going to pick up the cooler and bring it into the staircase so everybody gets water.

So he says don't go far. I says I'm going to put my mask right here. I'll just put my mask down.

I walk down and I make a left. Now I'm about 20 to 25 feet from the windows and the building starts to shake, and I look out and I'm just seeing all the steel from the south tower coming down right in front of my face, just all the steel, I mean, everything. I thought it was our building going down. So I just ran back, and the guys thought I was Derek Jeeter because I scooped up my mask, ran into the staircase, we donned our masks and we just stood there and the building shook and we just huddled like children.

It shook. We took about a minute or so, that's all I recall, a minute or two, then it stops. Everything was quiet. Then we went back out of the stairs. All the sheetrock, all the ceilings had come down in the building, guys were coming running back in. I think Dave and Artie said the windows were blown out and the wind blew through the -- lucky they didn't get sucked out. Then someone gave a Mayday to get out of the building, as I understand. I know it was just evac, but I didn't know if it was a regular Mayday or just evacuation. Everybody out of the building.

At that point it was only firemen I thought at that point and we're all starting to make our way down through the building not knowing that the whole south tower -- I thought it was just a partial collapse. No one gave any word that it was a total collapse or the south tower is gone or anything like that. I don't know. So we just start walking our way down, but there's a line of firemen all the way down in front of us. There's not a step that doesn't have a fireman on it and we're all walking down.

Q. Did you see civilians or was it all firemen?

A. I only recall firemen at this point.

Going down, going down, and at times you actually had to stop. There's just nowhere to go. I mean, they're not moving. We're like come on, guys, come on, let's go, let's go, and they can't. Probably because I don't realize that the lobby is probably as black as what I'm going to find out in about five minutes, knowing the way we're coming out and it's nighttime or it's debris. So we're waiting. We're like, come on, guys, let's go, let's go, and we're just waiting and it took a lot of time. We were up on the 21st floor. Those are double flights, I believe. One, two, scissor. That's one floor. So it's 42 flights of stairs.

So it took us quite a bit of time to hit the lobby and it was just destroyed. I mean, it looked like -- it wasn't the same lobby 15 minutes ago. It was just completely gone, every window was shattered, all the ceiling tile, the elevator banks had let go it seemed, the floor was all crushed down. I didn't see any -- I don't want to say I didn't see any bodies there right now.

At that point we were waiting and we're watching. It was all dust on the lower burn, and I did remember I went over because I knew where we came out right away -- where we went in. I went over there and I was just -- because we sort of got lost with some of the other guys and we didn't want to leave anybody behind. I saw Lieutenant Mera, I saw Dave Sandvik, I said, guys, over this way, this way. Everybody was coming out these doors because everybody was just going through glass. I saw chards of glass that guys were walking under. If they let go, they would have cut them in two. Then everybody got together, I know Mike Beehler, he was a proby, so I was watching him, and I said, all right, let's go. Then, I had to remember, I saw one of the dead jumpers that were right next to me.

But as we went out, now we're all overheated and stuff. We sat down right underneath the west bridge is it? The pedestrian bridge. We were sitting on top of a police car right underneath there. We sat there maybe like two minutes, three minutes. Wayne says, come on, let's get a little further away from the building, you know, if this building let's go, run along the sides of the building because that's the only thing that's going to protect you.

I think I saw -- I think it was two things. I think it was 6 Truck had put its aerial up on the hotel over there. I remember, going back, I don't want to backtrack, but I do remember when we were going in some radio transmissions that one fire truck pulled right up in front and one of the Chiefs was screaming at him get away from the front of the building. I can't remember the truck company that was there.

Then, going back to my story, we started walking north a little bit. We got maybe a half a block away and I was turning around watching. I think Wayne was saying don't stop, but I turned around and I'm watching this thing. I don't know. I just saw the top half of the north tower sink and sort of just sat down on itself, sat down, and then just started shattering and just blowing out like a Christmas tree. That's when I screamed, here it comes, run for your lives, and they all ran.

We ran -- I don't think we ran too far. Everything was just coming at us. I just hid behind a car. Another fireman, Tom, from a Manhattan company, I just said, well, what's your name? He said Tom. I said I just want to know who I'm going to die with, and we just hid behind a car. Then we saw what happened, the whole thing came at us, and we just kept walking north after that. We just wanted to get away from it as fast as I could. That's it.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Okay. The time is 1415 hours and the interview with Firefighter Paul Hyland is completed.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DAVID SANDVIK

Interview Date: December 20, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 20th, 2001. The time is 1440 hours and this is Battalion Chief Stephen King with the Safety Battalion, FDNY. I am conducting an interview with Firefighter 2nd Grade David Sandvik from Ladder Company 110, who HAD the roof on September 11th. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Dave, you can start whenever you're ready.

A. Okay. The day started out with I had the watch and I remember guys standing out on the apparatus apron and they could see the smoke coming from Manhattan, so we knew something was going on in Manhattan. I went back into the watch, I switched the radio onto the Manhattan frequency and found out it was the World Trade Center. Then right after that the news flashed and started showing the Trade Center where the first plane hit and I started getting dressed. I got my radio on, my bunker pants on, because we normally go to Manhattan pretty quick, just for a smoke condition at the Trade Center.

So I was standing right in front of the computer and the radio was already up to a third or fourth alarm and the computer came over and it was filling out the alarm with us, 205 and the battalion, respond to the north tower. So I got on the PA, told everybody we're going. It started out as like we're going to an unbelievable job at the Trade Center. That's all we thought.

Everybody gets on the rig, we start heading over the Brooklyn Bridge, and my position was the roof and I'm sitting in the middle seat, so facing backwards I couldn't see anything. I remember asking the OV what's going on, what's going on, and he said there are multiple floors on fire, and I'm just thinking, wow, we're in for a hell of a job. Halfway over the bridge, I guess midspan, all of a sudden I hear on -- we switch over to the Manhattan frequency now on the rig and I hear Manhattan calling Division 1, saying Division 1, almost like am I hearing you correctly? We got jumpers out of the Trade Center? Division 1 was like, yeah, we got jumpers, and right at that point I remember everybody went from being like, wow, we got a job, to like this is not a good thing we're going to, this is something like a worst nightmare. You never want to hear about jumpers but anyway...

So we get over there and we come over the Brooklyn Bridge heading down Broadway and we pulled down a street that leads to the back side of the Trade Center, it's off Church Street, and we get off the rig and at this point there's quite a few people, thousands of people coming up towards us, away from the Trade Center, but a lot of people, spectators too still kind of looking at what's going on. We start heading down the block and we get down to I guess about Church Street and the second plane hit, and I remember just being underneath. I never heard the motor of the plane, the sound of the engines. We just heard the explosion, you felt the explosion, and looking straight up and seeing that fireball that you see on the news, but we're underneath looking up now at it.

Lieutenant Mera, which was a great move, said to get back on the rig and we were going to try to make it around to the west side of the towers. So we ended up backing up to Broadway, then we head down Broadway, and at this point the streets were just thousands and thousands of people now. After the second plane hit, everybody was just fleeing Manhattan. We were able to manage to come down like a side street and we end up on Church Street now heading north and we end up, I guess, where like the farmers market is, somewhere in that vicinity, on Church Street.

So we get off the rig and now we walk up to Vesey Street, west on Vesey to the west side and then south on the west side, and we're walking past the north tower and I remember we were looking for the command post. We figured it was set up outside and we didn't see it. We actually walked past the tower and the boss said he remembered that the ticket said we were going to the north tower and we already passed the north tower, so he guided us to make a U-turn. So we walked into the north tower and the command post happened to be in the lobby of the north tower.

So as we get into the lobby, he directs us to go off to the side and relieve ourselves, take the extra cylinders, put them on the floor, take all our extra equipment and just put them on the ground to reserve some energy. As we start putting stuff down, I take a roof rope, put it down, an extra cylinder, put it down, I see Engine 207 come walking in. So I call them over and they come over and they start putting down their roll-ups.

We're in there maybe about a minute, two minutes, just enough time to get in there, put our stuff down, and then he came back over to us and said, okay, we got our assignment. We're going up to the 21st floor. We got a report of people trapped. So we pick up everything, put the roof rope back on, extra cylinders, and I happened to see a lobby guy, like a guy that works in the lobby, and I asked him which elevators does he have running, and he said all the elevators are out except for the low-rise, which will take us to 16.

So we get into the elevator and now it's us, I believe a Chief from Battalion 11, well, I'm sure of him, and I think there were some guys from an engine company, but I'm not sure about that. We take the elevator up to 16, get off, get into the stairwell, and we start heading up. The stairwell was pretty narrow and in the single file, us going up, civilians coming down. We get up to 21 and it happened to be a floor where the sign on the door says no re-entry on this floor. The nearest floor to re-enter was 23 or a floor below. The boss decided that we were blocking the traffic if we just stood there and forced the door, and so he said let's go up to 23, unload our stuff, almost make it like our own little command post, and then we'll come back down and then force the door. So we went up there. I got rid of the roof rope, extra cylinders. Whatever we didn't need we just left on

We came back down to 21, forced the door, went into the floor, searched the whole floor, forcing 40, 50 doors. There was a conference room. We forced that. We just finished searching the floor and I was with -- it was me, the boss and Artie, and the south tower came down and our building rocked. I remember windows blowing out and the air pressure in the hallway felt like we were almost in like a wind tunnel, and I remember the boss just saying get to the staircase.

So we ran to the staircase. It felt like an eternity, but we were standing there waiting and he's trying to call Battalion 11 on the radio and couldn't get them, couldn't get them. Finally, after about two calls, I said to the boss, I said, I'll run up to 23 and look for him.

So I go up to 23, look down a couple hallways. Complete darkness. There was nobody around. The floor was deserted. I come back down and I told him, I said, there's nobody up there. Nobody's on 23. So he says okay. He tries to call him again. Then at that point they gave the call for everybody to get out. Didn't say anything about the collapse of the south tower. We didn't know there was a collapse of the south tower. We thought -- well, I personally thought it was a collapse of the upper floors and that's what caused the building to rock and windows to blow out with the shift in the building.

Q. The upper floors of your tower?

A. Yes, the upper floors of --

Q. The north tower?

A. -- of our tower, yes. Not in my wildest dream did I think those towers were coming down.

So when they said to evacuate, get out, we got into the stairwell and headed on down, nice and calmly, nobody was running, nobody was pushing. It was just nice, calm, orderly fashion. We were checking floors as we were going down. I mean, checking a floor meant, if we got to a door, opened it and nobody was behind it, we continued, and if the guys in front of us opened a door, we passed that door. At one point, me and the OV, we came across a door that was locked and it couldn't have been checked because it wasn't forced. So we forced the door, opened it. I yelled down the hallway and no answer and I turned to my boss and said is that good enough? He said, yeah, that's good enough, and we just walked down, nice and calm.

As we got down to the lower floors, I guess,

I'd say we were on the 6th floor, traffic in the stairwell came to two stops where I actually sat down in the stairs. I sat down for maybe a minute and then the traffic started moving and we got back up and started going again. It was I'd say 95 percent -- I mean, it was almost all firemen. We had a civilian here, a civilian there, but it was mostly firemen.

We got down to the lobby, and when we got out of the stairwell, the lobby was deserted. Nobody was down there except the people coming out of our stairwell. We were walking through and the elevator doors were blowing off. The lobby was just like a complete mess. I remember grabbing the proby that day and we were looking down the elevator bank and I said, man, this would make a hell of a picture. Then, you know, we just kind of walked out. When we got to the edge of the building, all the windows were gone. There were guys outside telling us hold up or come out, and the guy in front of me stopped, the guys outside told him to stop and then all of a sudden waved us on out.

We came out and we ended up on the west side. Right south of Vesey Street there's a pedestrian bridge and we went underneath that bridge and we actually stopped there a minute. We thought we were safe, we were under cover and anything falling from the building, you know, we were protected by this pedestrian crosswalk, and the boss said come on guys, we're still a little bit close. Let's move up a little bit. So we walked up about a half a block further and we saw Engine Co. 224's rig, and he said let's go over there because we were running with them and we figured we'd start unloading our masks and loosening up our jackets, put some of our tools down that we had left.

So we get over to the engine and we just started taking a couple things off. I got my mask off, I put my Halligan down, and that's when the south tower came down. It was just unbelievable. We started running.

Q. The north tower.

A. The north tower. Sorry. Yes, the north tower came down. We started running up the west side, maybe got to the end of 224's rig. I'm running, looking up, and I can see the top of the tower starting to come down and it was just an unbelievable sight. The OV yells holy shit, here it comes. I'm looking at the top of the building and when he yells that, I look down and I see the mushroom effect come rolling down the street, and we knew we weren't going to outrun this.

So along the west side there, it was just masks laid down. Thank God they were left there. I remember I just took like three steps over there and grabbed a mask. I couldn't even get it on my back. I just threw the face piece on, threw my helmet back on, and we were swallowed up in this debris of -- you name it, it was in there. Total darkness. Didn't know if we were buried or -- we had no idea what was going on.

About ten, 15 minutes, you know, who knows how long it really took, but it was taking so much time and I remember saying, boy, it's a beautiful, clear day and I'm outside and I can't see anything in front of me. I thought my mask was just covered because I remember just wiping the front piece thinking I was going to wipe away the dust, and I still couldn't see. So I start searching the ground and I came across another cylinder.

So I set up the mask on the ground, getting ready to, if I ran out of air, that I could change the bottles. I didn't have to change bottles, but the air started lifting, and then all of a sudden I could see a couple of faint flashlights, so I knew other guys were walking around. So I got up and it started lifting and I just started heading uptown and before I knew it, I was out in clear air, and I kept going uptown and then we just -- somehow the company got back together and we walked uptown, I guess, I don't know, five, six, seven blocks.

Then we took a break on the center medium of the west side, and our can man wasn't with us. So the officer kept on calling him, calling him, calling him. Finally, we got through to the radio and found out he was all right, and he got reunited with us, I guess, about a half hour after that, and that was about it.

We stayed on the west side by -- what is that, a college over there? I don't know. We stayed up there, about eight blocks away, and then the recall, guys started showing up on the recall. I mean, me personally, we were just spent. The guy next to me was throwing up. It felt like we went to ten jobs in a matter of two hours.

Then that was basically it. We didn't really do much. Well, later on that night we went in, we searched the subway, found our rig, and they said, if you find your own rig, you can drive it back to quarters, which we did, which was about 10:00 o'clock that night.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Okay. The time is 1457 hours and the interview with Firefighter Sandvik is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN WILSON

Interview Date: December 20, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is December 20th, 2001. The time is 7:07 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with John Wilson, firefighter first grade, from Engine 58, in the quarters of Engine 58.

Q. John, just tell me the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. We were dispatched as soon as the second plane hit. We were watching it in the house. They sent us down basically right away. So we got down there pretty quickly. I couldn't really say the time. I guess we parked on West Street and, I would say, probably maybe Barclay. I couldn't be sure. It was a block or two away from the Trade Center, north of the Trade Center. There were a lot of rigs there, so we didn't get that close.

We started walking down West, and the first thing we realized were the noises we were hearing were people hitting the ground. So we had to kind of detour across -- we went, I guess, that median, over to the west side now of West Street, because we saw all these people coming down and we didn't want to get hit by them.

So we kind of detoured around West Street like to the west side of West Street, kept walking, took a lot of extra bottles with us, whatever we could take. I think we took a rope.

We were under the impression that the command post was at Liberty and West, so that's where we were headed. When we got there, there wasn't anybody there, no inclination, no -- it didn't seem like there was ever a command post there. But there was nobody around.

We didn't go down Liberty for the same reason as West Street, because people were jumping and there was crap coming off the building. So we kind of went right by this south pedestrian walkway on West Street, you know, that goes over, and I guess there was kind of like a parking lot or something on that corner between Liberty and Cedar on West Street here. We kind of were going through that, walking wide of the street so we didn't get hit by anything.

First thing I remember was we kind of got split up. There was eight of us. The lieutenant was worried that three of the guys had gone ahead. They walked I guess a little faster than us. So they were ahead. Now he was like where are they? We could see them up the block. They were further up Liberty when I first saw them.

Then we came over to realize that one of the brothers was down on the ground, and I went over there. I believe it was Danny Suhr from 216 Engine. He was on the ground, and his guys were with him. He was a mess. The other bunch of guys really didn't stand there that long, because they were taking care of their own guy.

Q. What happened? Did he get hit with debris?

A. He got hit with a body. I didn't see it, but that's what they told me when I went over there. I said, "What happened? Is he all right?" They said, "He got hit by" -- I don't know who told me, but that's what I was told. I didn't see that. He was crumpled on the ground, and he didn't look too good.

Then someone -- I don't know if it was a Port Authority guy, because there were a few people out on the street with white shirts and radios, like maybe from the buildings. One of those guys or a civilian gave me a radio. They said, "Here." It was a Fire Department radio. It said 216 on it. It was all full of blood. So I guess it might have been Danny Suhr's. So I threw it in my pocket.

Now we noticed Chief Scheffold walking up Liberty Street. We're yelling at him to get out of the street because we didn't want him to get hit, but he just kept walking. Now we were deciding where we were going to go. The command post we were assuming was probably in the Trade Center lobby by this time.

We ran into the same Port Authority security guys, whoever they were, because they had their own radios. They were telling us that they think it was in Two World Trade they said there were firemen in the lobby there. He said we could access that by going through the Marriott Hotel. There was a bar I believe on Liberty called Tall Ships. He said if we went through there we could go through the lobby, and then we could get to the Trade Center. So that's what we did.

We quickly ran across the street, and we got into the Vista Hotel through the Tall Ships bar. We walked through the lobby I guess of -- we walked through the bar. I guess we came to the lobby. From my recollection I thought we kind of turned to the right. It wasn't like a hard turn, but we went to the right, going east now. That's where we hooked up with the other three. We saw the other three guys that we got separated from. So we got together with them. So now the eight of us were in the lobby.

I don't know where they came from or if they were there when I got there, but Chief Scheffold, Chief Marchbanks, Chief Galvin and my lieutenant were having a little powwow. They were talking. The lieutenant said relax. We took our masks off. We were standing in the lobby.

At this time we were in the lobby of the Marriott. Me, I personally don't remember seeing other companies at this time. It was basically us and a few civilians, mostly people that worked there. It's totally hearsay, but I know a couple of the other guys, they'll tell you in their interviews they had seen 288, 23 Engine. So they'll be able to tell you better where they went. But I know of other guys from 58 did see other companies, but I personally don't remember seeing them.

I would say we were in the lobby I don't think it was more than five or ten minutes, and they were talking, I guess discussing where should we go, what should we do. I think the lieutenant was on his way back to us to talk to us, and we heard the loudest roar that I ever heard in my life.

Everybody just ran. We ran away from the noise. So the noise was to my east as I was standing the there. We ran back basically the way we came in, I don't know how far. All of a sudden I was just picked up. I felt the wind from behind me just pick me up and throw me. So now I'm on the ground.

Now I started crawling. Hopefully I think I'm crawling the way I came in. However long that lasted, ten seconds -- I don't know. It seemed like a long time. It just subsided, the noise. It was just like a crescendo sound like boom, boom, boom, and it just got louder and faster for like -- what did it last, ten seconds or something like that?

After it was over I'm amazed, because I thought that was the end of it right there. I was getting pelted. I was just trying to crawl. When I got up, I grabbed the flashlight. There was a flashlight on the floor. It wasn't even mine. I just grabbed it. The first person I saw was one of these hotel guys crawling around. I grabbed him and said, "Come on. We'll go this way."

Now I'm trying to call my guys. Now I started using the radio that they gave me outside, because I had, I would say -- four of the guys with us were probably basically probies. I tried to call them at the same time as I'm calling guys in the lobby. I'm trying to see what the hell is going on. Now it's pitch-black.

I hear my lieutenant on the radio. I don't know where he is, but he's calling me.

He's calling whoever he can call too. By this time I ran into two of the other guys, Mike and Scott, from 58.

Now it seemed like there were people all over the place. I don't know where they came from. We tried to sort of go out towards -- we saw light. I think it was towards Liberty Street. It was just like a light. There were no doors or anything like that.

A bunch of guys lifted up a rolldown gate that must have just fell down, because it wasn't there, I don't think, when we came in. So they lifted that up.

Now the lieutenant, he was calling us and I'm trying to find out where he is. I'm calling all the guys outside. Actually I think John Weber had the radio. I got him on the radio. He said he was outside already. He got out with three of the other guys, I believe. So I said, "All right. Stay outside."

We didn't know where the lieutenant was yet. I still to this day the three of us aren't sure, the three of us that were in there now still with the collapse, the first one, that we somehow located the lieutenant. I don't know if I found him or who found him. We don't even know. We just heard him now, without his radio. I think we just heard his voice. We went back towards the building in the lobby area. I believe he was behind the elevators that were facing south. I think there was a bank facing south and north.

So we found him. Now he's buried. He's behind this elevator. He's trapped. We told him that everybody was accounted for. That was a load off his mind. He was worried about where everybody was. I said, "We've got everybody." He was like, "All right. Then get me out of here." We're like, "All right. We're going to get you out of there."

At this point I personally didn't know that that whole building collapsed. I knew something collapsed on us. That was some scene there for a minute.

At this point -- I don't know if you want me to tell you this, because I didn't actually see that. But Chief Galvin had a rope, and he wrapped it around a pillar, and he went one way and he gave the bag to Scott from 58. He went towards where Lieutenant Nagel was with the bag.

So I remember him dropping the bag at our feet. We were standing there talking to Bob. He said he was fine. He said, "I'm all right. I'm not hurt." I gave him a flashlight to see if he could look around, see what was going on in there.

Then the weirdest thing was -- you mentioned before -- I never really heard any maydays. I didn't hear any of that. I didn't have the radio out of my pocket until the collapse happened. Now when I brushed myself off, it was in my pocket. So I didn't have the mic out or anything like that. So that's why I wasn't hearing anything.

113 Truck appeared out of somewhere. They weren't with us -- they said they heard on the radio -- I guess they heard that we were in there because my lieutenant was trapped. So they came in. Ray Brown was the lieutenant. I know him a little bit. His brother was a fireman here. So he came in. I guess there was four of them.

So Scott Paskewitz went out. We asked him, "Scott, why don't you go out and see if you can get some tools," because we had nothing. So he went out, and he came in -- I don't know if he came in, but 113 and him wound up coming in together. They had a partner saw, a saws-all. 113 brought in air bags.

We proceeded to try to do something with Bob. I don't know how to describe it. It was just a maze of junk. There were little studs, there was sheetrock, there were pipes, wires, everything.

He was just in this little corner behind the elevator. He said he was fine but it wasn't like he could walk out. I could see him. I could talk to him. The ceiling above him looked very shaky. Something had knocked out. It was like a pillar. It was a wooden-faced pillar.

A lot of those pillars I think had wood facing on them. The one I saw later when the building was coming down, it was just an I beam probably. I don't know if it was. That was leaning against the wall. It looked like it was holding a lot up. So we couldn't touch that.

Ray Brown, he was like -- I was kind of trying to watch the ceiling, and Mike got the saws-all. He cut, I would say -- at the same time, I forgot to say, it was Lieutenant Nagel, I'm talking to him. He told me that he could hear Chief Marchbanks and Chief Scheffold.

I was like, "You all right?" He said, "Yeah, yeah. Marchbanks and Scheffold are right back here." He could hear them, I guess; I couldn't. He told me that they were right near him somewhere; how far, I don't know.

So Mike had cut, I would say, maybe two pieces of pipe or the sheet metal or whatever he was cutting. He was cutting another piece. Now we heard this noise again, like this rumbling noise. I assumed the same thing is happening that just happened however long ago it was. It didn't seem like it was a half hour. It seemed to happen pretty fast.

So I just was standing right there. It was Ray, me, Mike and Scott. The other two guys from 113 actually left. Ray asked them -- he goes, "I'm going to go outside and see if I can go around." He was looking for another way to access Bob Nagel.

So it was just Ray, me, Mike, Scott and one guy from 113 that I remember being there now. So it was five of us. Now we hear this rumbling again. We're like, "Oh, Jesus. Now what?" We tried to run again. We were running the way I think we came in. We were running back, I would say, towards Liberty Street, in whatever's left of the hotel now. Maybe half of it is left now. I don't know.

So the same scenario. We get knocked down and pounded around and knocked around. However long, 10 seconds, whatever, 20 seconds, from what they say, whatever I read. It just seemed longer when it happened.

So now I'm still around after the second one. I'm like, "Oh, man, this is amazing." Now I'm screaming to Scott. I scream, "Scott." He said, "What?" I would say he was a foot away from me. We were laying on the floor, because I hit the floor and I rolled and I hit the wall. So I just stayed by the wall.

When everything stopped, the noise stopped and everything, I was screaming Scott's name. He was at arm's length away from me. I could touch him. I didn't see him. I'm calling him. It got black again, and it cleared up pretty good after the first collapse. I guess because it wasn't that big an area. It cleared up pretty good. We could see fine. When I got outside later, it was a mess out there like with the dust.

So now we heard the second rumbling. Now we ran again. I'm calling for Scott. He's right next to me. Now I'm calling Mike. He's not answering me. Ray Brown is not answering me. The other guy, I didn't even get his name. At this point I'm calling him. Nobody is answering. I'm like, oh, man. Bob is not answering.

So finally now I see a light. I'm screaming. The guy's saying, "Keep talking." It turned out to be a guy, Richie, from 113. He came to my voice with his light. Mike said something. Now he's coming. So now they're coming out. But I still haven't heard from Ray Brown.

I'm like, oh, man, Bob's not calling. I'm thinking they must be buried now, both of them. I didn't see Ray. So we're like let's try to make our way out of here and see what the hell happened, because I still hadn't in my wildest dreams thought that two buildings, both of them, came down.

So we started to work towards the way we saw the light. It turned out I guess it was around Liberty Street. It was right near that south walkway we wound up coming out.

Just as we're getting ready -- because we had to climb up -- I would say the rubble probably was like two stories high just to get up to go out, out of the lobby area.

I turned around and I see a figure coming at me. I come back down. It's Ray Brown. He's like staggering out. I grabbed him. He was a bloody mess. I said, "Are you all right, Ray?" He's said, "No, I'm not." So we grabbed him. We helped him.

Now we start climbing up out of the place. Nobody around when we came up and looked out. It was just like a ghost town. It was just like burning vehicles, the snow scene type of thing, cars buried, fires, cars on fire, puddles everywhere. I don't know what that was from. A lot of puddles, which I was afraid to step in, not thinking I'm going down a level. Trying to avoid that and trying to carry him.

The first person I remember seeing was a photographer, a guy with a big camera around his neck. I didn't pay him any mind. I saw a fireman too. I saw Jimmy Marketti, who is a chief now. He's coming towards the building with a pair of shorts and a T-shirt. He just came in on his motorcycle, he said.

So he starts helping us carry Ray. I'm tell him that Bobby Nagel, we lost him in the building. I'm having a very hard time carrying this guy too, because I'm a little tired, a little beat up.

So a couple other fire trucks, Scott got an EMS chair out of a broken down van. We put Ray Brown in the chair, tried to carry him in that. That was pretty difficult too, just up and down whatever, I beams, trying to avoid this water. For whatever reason, I'm thinking I'm going to sink.

Gathered up another fireman, start seeing people. He had oxygen. He threw oxygen on Ray. So I kind of pass him off to some other guys. I can't even carry this guy anymore. At that point Jimmy Marketti, myself and Scott went back and tried to get back into the building, basically to look for Bob.

So we went back in and were looking around for Bob. Actually when we first tried to go back in, I don't think we made it back in, because now a fire had started right by the area we came out of. There was a fire there. So we had to go around another way to get back in.

The area we got back into in the lobby area, believe it or not there was a pretty good size area that was unbelievable. There was still bottled water there that didn't break, the very southwest, I guess, of the hotel that we had wound up amazingly getting to.

So we climbed back in. Now we're going back over this pile of just rubble. That's exactly what it was, just piles of like ceilings that came down. It was a mess, trying to go up and down and around, calling him, no answer.

Now other people show up. I remember there was a guy from Rescue 1, I think I saw. I saw 252 Engine. It might have been an officer from 252 and a fireman. Now other guys just start showing up. Now there's a good ten people. I don't know where they're coming from, but maybe they heard us originally. I don't know.

They're in there. They're trying to go through holes. Everybody is just trying to get in. We're not getting anything done there. It was bad news. Bob is not answering the radio. His radio was kind of shitty to begin with, I think, because he was having a hard time -- even before the second collapse his radio was I think dying or maybe it was just all the crap in the air.

So we went back in. I would say basically futile attempts it turned out to be, unfortunately, to get back towards the area where we knew Bob was. The building actually collapsed right up to the pillar that had the rope on it. You could still see the rope. We knew we were just north of that.

How far could we have run after the second building came down? We were talking amongst ourselves, it couldn't have been more than 10 or 20 feet that we got before the building knocked us down again.

Then a chief showed up out of -- like I said, I don't know where these people came from. I'm not paying attention. Now there's a chief there, and he's asking us what's going on. I told him my lieutenant's in there, he's still buried, we have to try to find him.

He said, "Have you talked to him?" I said, "Not since the second collapse. I've had no communication." I said no communication with him. We have no -- in other words, no communication -- we don't know where he is, blah, blah, blah. He's telling everyone we've got to get out now, get out of the building. So he starts herding everybody out of there.

So we got out. He chased everybody out. We got out. I went back again. Numerous times that day we went back, kept going back in. I don't know why, piece of mind, I don't know, which you're not going to get by doing that.

Just to try to think I'm going to be able to find my lieutenant and the chiefs, which we never did. We still haven't to this day.

Basically after we got out of there that time, finally we got out of there. One guy, Mike, with me was limping badly. He said, "Oh, I'm all right." It turned outs his leg was pretty messed up. He was limping badly.

We walked towards the river, looking for an ambulance, an EMS or anything, trying to drink water, walked around, found him an ambulance. Actually we didn't find him an ambulance. We walked around in almost like a circle. We went to the river, headed back around, got our eyes washed out along the way somewhere, got a drink along the way, and came right back to where we started.

I think I went back in again. Mike at this point was hurting pretty bad, and I was starting to go find an ambulance to get him of there, which he didn't want to leave.

Basically that's what we did for the rest of the day. We just kind of walked around. After we got out of there, we took care of Mike.

He got in an ambulance. Actually he went with someone else. He wound up getting on a boat.

Everybody from here started showing up. I ran into the guys from my company; I don't know what time it was. They were under the impression the whole company was missing. I said, "No, Bob's missing."

Then we tried to get back in again. Basically all day I must have spent basically going in and out of there, to where Bob was. I really had no contact with other firemen that I remember in the lobby of the Marriott. Like I said, once you talk to all the guys from here, a few of them did, at least two or three of them I know.

Like I said, we got split up. So they saw the other companies and they got sent to wherever, and they were waiting for us. Otherwise we would have been in probably the same place they went. I don't know if they went up in the hotel or to the south tower. Like I said, you might hear that from some of the other guys.

Q. Is that it, John?

A. That's about it.

Q. Thank you, John, for all your help.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 7:30 p.m., and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN WEBER

Interview Date: December 26, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is December 20th, 2001. The time is 7:50 p.m. I am Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the New York City Fire Department, Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with John Weber, firefighter first from Engine 58, in the quarters of Engine 58.

Q. John, tell us the events of September 11th as you recall them.

A. We got the call on the second fifth to go down after the second tower was struck. We took some extra masks and any extra cylinders we had. We tied up some rope rigs to hold double bottles on, put them over your shoulder to carry. We figured we're going to need the bottles on the upper floors of this thing.

After we thought we were equipped well enough, we took off for the box. We went up, all the way downtown to West Street, where we parked the rig, and started getting ready. We took our bottles off. I had control that day, so I had the radio, I had two bottles, I had the roof rope. I had something else; I don't remember what. We were taking Halligans, axes.

We were taking every single thing out of the rig, basically, just to be well-prepared when we're up there. We didn't know exactly what we were going to do.

We started heading down towards the second tower. Somehow our boss was told that we had to report to the second tower. As we were following along, we wanted to make sure that we all stayed together.

Q. When you say the second tower, you mean the south tower?

A. The south tower, I'm sorry. Yeah, the second tower got hit, the south tower. We were supposed to head in that vicinity. Where exactly, I wasn't sure exactly where at the time we were supposed to go.

We started heading there. As we got closer to the buildings, he just kept on saying, "Stay close together. I want everybody together. I don't want to have to be looking for people." Everybody understood.

As we were going, the jumpers were coming down, as we got real close to both buildings. Jumpers were just coming down right near us, so we kept veering out further away from the building, kind of like around about, going around the back way until we can get a clearing.

As we were going around towards Liberty, the south tower around Liberty, that's when we saw I believe it was 216, the guy that got hit from the jumper. We saw his men with him or a group of men with him, firefighters, pulling him to the side.

They put over an urgent, I believe it was. He was badly hurt. We waited there with the company there with him until EMS arrived. That was the boss, Lieutenant Nagel, myself, John Wilson, Scott Paskewitz.

We kind of did split apart when all the jumpers started going. Some guys went to where they thought they could get shelter, and we of went around the other way. We stayed with him until EMS came. Then we made our way back in towards the south tower. That's when we saw Chief Sheffield and I guess the other battalion chiefs that were working that day from the 12th Battalion. We saw them walking.

We were yelling for them to come on the other side of the parking lot, because that's where the firefighter got struck by the jumper, that they were too close to the building, that something could happen to them.

We got their attention. They moved away. Somehow we all ended up going into the south tower. We looked up, we found a clearing. We literally ran across Liberty Street, across the parking lot, into the hotel there, the --

Q. Marriott?

A. The Vista, I think it's called, technically the Vista Hotel, the Marriott Hotel. We ran into that, because we were told there was a way to get through from the Vista into the south tower, which is where we had to go meet the chiefs and find out where we're going to operate.

We met in the lobby. We met the other two members that we split off from in the lobby. We were there maybe a minute or so. The boss said wait here. Lieutenant Nagel said to wait where we were in the center and relax, because we walked all the way from West Street. By the time we all the way around, it was a nice walk with all the stuff on, the extra gear. He said to take a blow, relax until we found out where we're operating, and I'll get back to you. Just stay here.

He went around to find the chiefs around the elevator shaft. By the elevator shafts is the last known place I know he was. We weren't in the building more than a minute when he told us to cool down, take our coats off, we took our coats off. We were hanging out, waiting.

I was just getting my bearings to see exactly where I was, and you just heard a banging, "bang, bang, bang." People yelled that it was coming through the window. The way the noise was going to me or to a lot of us, we thought it was another plane coming. It was two; why not three or four. It sounded to us like it was a plane coming through the windows.

Most of us that were in that little group there ran towards the entrance where we came in. As I'm facing out towards West Street, it was kind of like left. We ran left.

As we go, the ceiling started hitting us, falling down. We all just dove into a corner. There must have been 20 or 30 guys there. We just huddled, a big huddle, literally on top of each other, just like covering each other, right near it seemed like a desk or a bar, like the check-in desk or a bar top, something like that. We waited there until everything kind of calmed down for a while. It was all blacked out.

We got up and I remember the hotel workers, I guess, the maintenance man or security guy or whatever, or the manager of the hotel, asking one of the other members there of his crew, "What's the best way out?," because the front door that we were at that we came in was blocked. The rolldown gates came and all the debris were in front of the door. So he looked for another stairwell out. That was covered too. We tried to gather together as many people as we can. Everybody started working on that one gate again that we came in. We were able to lift it up enough and started shoveling guys out the door to get out of there.

I got out on the first -- right after the first collapse myself. I was with Peter Giammarino. Shortly after that we found Andy Ansbro, like right afterwards, sitting in basically the street, looking up at what was going on. We walked away from it a bit to see what was going on. Other guys were coming out the door, the hole that we had made.

A little while after that I heard my lieutenant doing a roll call, finding out where everybody is, calling, "58 control." I responded. "Who do you have with you?" I told him I had two other members with me. I told him their names. He said, "All right." That was about it. We all thought that they were out the other way; it was just a regular roll call.

We waited a little while. Other guys were coming out. Everybody was kind of heading in the same direction. We were right next to the south bridge, that pedestrian foot bridge. So we were right near there.

Some of the guys had concerns over whether we should be there. It was mostly up. It was 99 percent up still. People had concerns that maybe it's not the best place to be since everything was falling down still. They wanted to move out a little bit more.

We followed the crowd basically out towards -- there's another foot bridge -- I don't know what the name of it is -- that runs north and south. The north bridge and south bridge both run east to west, but there was another foot bridge that runs north and south between two buildings on the way to the marina. I don't know what street that is. I guess it's a little part of Liberty Street, maybe.

We were there. We started heading there. We started helping people onto boats. Giammarino, myself and Ansbro started helping people onto boats. Everybody there. Police was there, EMS was there, all different -- some people that were in the buildings, some people that were out in the street. We were just pulling them out of the way, out of what we called the fall zone, I guess.

We were working on that, and a little while later, 15 minutes, 20 minutes later, is when the second tower started going.

Q. You were still by the marina?

A. About near the marina. Between that foot bridge that ran north and south, as people were coming up, we were bringing them back.

Then 15, 20 minutes, a half hour -- I don't even know how long it was -- the north tower started coming down. We were actually able to see that starting to come down. Then it was just a plume of dust. You couldn't see anything then. You couldn't see anything two feet in front of you.

It was really dusty after the first one, but it started to clear out. By the marina you were all right. But after the second one came, everything was another dust ball for a while. It might have taken me five or ten minutes to get to the marina and five or ten minutes later is when the second one came down.

Then after that one we heard -- between the first one and second one coming down, I heard numerous maydays. Besides communicating with our boss, because everything sounded fine with them, trying not to clutter up the air because there were so many other maydays going on, we just monitored for a while.

There was one individual from a truck company -- I don't even remember what truck it was anymore. He was saying several times that he was just trapped, he was all right, he didn't know where he was, he was knocked out. Somebody kept on asking, "What building were you in? Where are you now?"

He wasn't sure at all. He said he got knocked out, he just regained consciousness, and he didn't remember where he was at all. He was okay, for the most part, just trapped. He couldn't get out. I heard that all the way up until the second collapsed. Then after that, I didn't hear his mayday anymore.

After that, after the second collapse, we saw Mike Fitzpatrick, another one of our members, and John Wilson coming towards us up towards the marina wall. Basically we went in with eight guys. I knew we didn't have a lieutenant anymore, and we were missing one other guy, Dave McGovern. We weren't quite sure where he was.

We regrouped and we had to start running lines from the marine unit. They pulled up. They wanted guys to start stretching lines up. It wasn't Liberty Street but one of the other side streets from where they were berthed. We started running three inch up or whatever. We started hauling that up. That's when we saw Dave McGovern come in from around the other way.

We stood there for a while and helped stretch the line a little bit. Then we heard the story from Mike Fitzpatrick and John Wilson and Scott Paskewitz that Lieutenant Nagel was trapped after the first collapse, that they were speaking to him, that they had tied a search rope and gave it to him.

I think they said they held his hand at the time, that they were at least somehow able to physically touch him. I think they held his hand or just let him know where he was, gave him whatever he might have needed at that time and were working on getting him out when they started hearing the second collapse occur, or what ended up to be the second collapse. They didn't know what it was.

After we all regrouped and they told us the story and we were loading hose off the marine unit, we decided that we were going to try to get back in that area and see if there's any way of helping him, if he's still there. We weren't getting a response off the radio anymore. But maybe there was a shot that they could get back in the same area.

That's what we did. We went right back to the Vista Hotel, all of us together, going up the heap, down into it. There were other guys there. I think one of the rescue companies were there. They were looking all through every nook and cranny. They found the search rope. They followed it into the debris. They said that they couldn't see him -- they couldn't find anything more. They were calling, but there was no response.

As we were in there looking, trying to find ways of getting into the holes from outside, they called us out. They told anybody inside -- they saw us going in. Somebody started calling us out, that there was another collapse potential for that half of the building. The Vista collapsed on the left side, but the right side was still pretty much -- two- or three-quarters of it was still together.

They called us out. We went out. We stayed for a little while, right on the heap, clearing stuff, looking for people. We went back in a second time after they had other guys in there. We went in a second time, looked around a little bit more. They called us out a little while after that. We came out. That was the last time I was in the building.

Then we started working our way around to where all the crushed rigs were, closer to the north tower, I guess where all the chiefs were, basically.

Q. The command post?

A. Where the command post was, right. The command post was I think closer to the north tower, in between but closer to the north tower where the parking garage was or something, right behind it, I remember, in one of the buildings, closer to the north bridge.

So we started heading over towards that heap, looking under -- every single man that was there had saws going, Halligans going, axes going, trying to pry the metal back. Once we found a rig, knocking on it to see if there was any response.

Then there was a large building, brick building, that was on fire, potential for collapse, that we started stretching lines for that, then using a hand line, alternating on and off. We were putting water on that. As you alternated off, you started searching and digging again.

That's basically what we did the whole day. I think we were there up until near 12:00 that night. We were there until at least around 12, maybe a little earlier but around 12.

Q. That's it, John?

A. Yeah, that's it.

Q. Thanks a lot, John, for your help.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JOSEPH PATRICIELLO

Interview Date: December 20, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is December 20th, 2001. The time is 12:48. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Joseph Patriciello, working in Engine 44 that day, assigned to Division 3, Battalion 9, covering.

Q. All right, Joe, just tell us in your own words what happened that day.

A. I was in quarters when the first plane struck. We were watching it. Shortly after the second building was struck, we received the alarm to respond immediately on the fifth alarm.

We weren't delayed for too long, but I waited until a riding list was prepared by my officer who I relieved. When that was done, we proceeded south to the alarm site. We took I believe it was 11th Avenue, one street that was closed off to allow us to respond. We proceeded south after coming over from approximately Second Avenue on the east side. We proceeded south.

We pulled in. I would say it was just at about Vesey and West Street we parked the rig.

We grabbed extra cylinders, and we proceeded to the command post. When we checked in at the command post, we were ordered to just stand fast pending an assignment.

While we were there, the command post was obviously being overwhelmed by all kinds of information and activity. At one point a captain, who I do not know from what company -- he was obviously assisting the people at the command board -- turned to me and requested that I proceed south to Liberty Street, in that area, to remove any apparatus or police vehicles that may be in the way.

I told my men to leave their cylinders, since we would be coming back shortly. They all accompanied me together as a unit. We proceeded to walk south to Liberty. At that point it was clear to me that there wasn't much that had to be done. We did request one police vehicle just to move. We didn't have to do it ourselves.

At that time there were maybe two or three car fires going in the vicinity of the pedestrian bridge. I ordered my men to grab some extinguishers, purple K's, and my men proceeded to go to apparatus that were nearby.

Q. John, one second. The pedestrian bridge, that was the south pedestrian bridge?

A. Yes.

As my men went to obtain some extinguishers, I happened to be looking up and saw the explosion or the building fail with the ensuing fireball and cloud. It didn't appear to me at that moment the building was coming down. But when the noise level began to pick up, it was obvious that something wrong was going on. We all proceeded to run southwesterly towards Liberty and West.

At that point there was debris coming down. Myself and my chauffeur ended up diving under the same car, and we were surrounded in a total cloud of darkness and dust, a heavy dusting, almost like a sandblasting effect, while we were waiting under the car.

It was quite a while. I can't say the exact time. It was very quiet. No more radio transmissions. We weren't sure if we were covered. We were under debris. We didn't know exactly what was the conditions that we were in.

But I could hear my chauffeur next to me. We were talking. I couldn't see him.

Maybe 10, 15 minutes when the cloud began to lift. I was missing three members. I decided to locate my members. I found two immediately. Both had injuries. One had needed stitches. Another one, he was complaining of a leg injury. It turned out he had a broken leg.

The last member -- I had my chauffeur with me. The last member I couldn't locate. However, it was maybe a half hour, three-quarters of an hour later I made contact with somebody who visually saw him being transported across the river to Jersey for medical attention. He received a collapsed lung and a broken shoulder.

But once all my members were accounted for and it was just me and my chauffeur remaining, since all three injured members were being tended to or transported away to receive medical attention, we continued to remain on the scene, assist with recovery. But more of our efforts were given to establishing water lines and getting some water to the area via the fire boats.

That's about it. We stayed there until about 9, 10:00. Myself, I had some -- well, I had eye abrasions that were looked at at the Ear, Eye and Throat Hospital. That's it. That's about it.

Q. Okay, Joe. Thank you for all your help.

CHIEF KENAHAN: This concludes the interview which is taking place at the division of training. The time now is 12:54.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF EDWARD HENRY

Interview Date: December 19, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. LAKIOTES: Today is December 19, 2001. The time is approximately 1215 hours. My name is Chief Arthur Lakiotes, New York City Fire Department Safety Command. I am conducting an interview with Battalion Chief Edward Henry 40 Battalion, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you would take me from the time of your response to right through the whole day's events, if you can.

A. We responded from the 40 Battalion's quarters. We were told to go to the Battery Tunnel and not to go into Manhattan, stay in Brooklyn. That was the original instruction. On the way, heading towards the Battery Tunnel and in the rear, we had a regular a.m. radio that we had in the car, that the second building was hit. The first building was already hit. The second building was now hit by the terrorist plane.

At that point, on the department radio we were instructed not to stop in Brooklyn, but to continue through the Battery Tunnel and to the World Trade Center area. As we entered the Battery Tunnel there was heavy traffic and we were held up for a while.

I was right behind the 48 Battalion I remember.

When we left the tunnel people finally moved the traffic and we continued into Manhattan and turned up West Street. We parked the car on West Street, south of the towers. Both towers were burning as we got out of the car. There were body parts in the street on West Street at this early part. So the only thing I could figure was that these people were either people in the plane or people who were driven out of the building. There were no jumpers at this time.

I reported up to the command post, which was on the west side of West Street and I stayed there for a little while. Eventually --

Q. Who did you see there? Do you remember anybody you saw there?

A. Chief Ganci. I spoke to Chief Ganci. He said stand fast. With that people started jumping out the windows from above the fire, splattering on the sidewalk. It was a scene like I had never seen before.

I watched seven or eight people. To tell you the truth I didn't feel like watching it anymore so I went to Chief Ganci and I said, "Do you have anything for me to do?" He said, "Yes. Go into the Marriott Hotel and make sure the units are on Channel 1 and Channel 3" I believe he said. The Safety Chief was with him handing me a paper. Chief Turi, I think. He handed me a paper with the two frequencies on it.

We had to walk south on West Street to avoid being hit by people jumping out of the window. My aide and I walked south on West Street, we got near a walk-over bridge. We ran across the street and we entered the Vista/Marriott Hotel from the side of the building to avoid the front where the people were coming down. We entered the Vista Hotel through the bar and into the center portion of the hotel. I gave the report to Chief Galvin. He was in the command post, inside of the Vista Hotel.

He told me he wanted me to go to the 70th floor of building 2 -- of building 1, I believe and check on certain companies. I don't remember the company, but one company I remember was Ladder 122. They were supposed to be up there. I found out later that they had not left the lobby area at that time. I found this out later on.

So I asked him how to get to Tower 1 and he directed me to my left, the left side of the Vista. I turned for a minute to talk to my aide. To tell him where you're going and everything and with that the Vista Hotel collapsed. It collapsed on my left side and on my right side. In the middle where me and my aide John Picarello were it did not collapse. It went completely black. You couldn't see your hand in front of your face. I was actually right next to the collapse. It tore my helmet off my head and it through the light out of my hand. I still had my mask. I had no light. I couldn't see anything.

Fortunately a couple of the workers that were with us had small flashlights, which I took one of the flashlights, I tried to calm everybody down and I told them we had to find a way out. Chief Brian O'Flaherty found a door behind the main desk of the hotel. The door led to a stairway going down -- quite a long stairway going down to the -- I thought it was the basement of the Vista Hotel.

He ran down and I stayed near the -- I ran to the bottom of the stairs and stayed near the bottom of the stairs. I instructed one of the workers from the building who had a light to stay at the top of the stairs. Most of the people who were with us stayed upstairs. I went to the bottom of the stairs and I kept calling out to the Chief, asking him if he found a door. Eventually he called back to me and said he found a door. I relayed the message up to the members who were on the first floor of the Vista Hotel and they all came down the stairs. I would say it was some firemen, mostly workers from the Vista Hotel. Of the ones who I know were there for sure was Brian O'Flaherty and I was told that Chief Stack was in the back, but I did not see him because it was so dark. I was told he was there. Anyway, we went down the stairs and went through a corridor which was under -- which I understand now was under building 1 of the Trade Center.

When I got to the end of it, we opened the door and we got out. There was a little area way, a little 4-foot high wall around this thing, maybe 10 by 10 with a 4-foot wall. Chief O'Flaherty told me he could not climb over the wall. And I said, "I'll climb over the wall and I'll go look for another exit." Which we knew there was one a little bit to the right.

That exit we couldn't get open because there was a lot of rubble outside. I climbed over the wall, went around to the exit and removed the rubble, pulled the door open. I called inside for all the men who I knew were waiting in there and I got no answer. So it was my conclusion that they must have climbed over a wall somewhere. They must have decided not to wait for me and they climbed over a wall and just got out the same way I got out.

At this point I started walking a way from the tower, tower number 1. I started walking away from it and I was looking up at it when it was burning readily. At this point I did not know that Trade Center 1 collapsed. I was under the impression that Trade Center 2 -- correction. Trade center 2. I did not know that World Trade Center number 2 had collapsed already. I thought the only thing that collapsed was the Vista Hotel that I was in. If I had known, I certainly would not have been standing there looking at Tower 1 and watching it burn.

So stuff was coming down, equipment was coming down, falling out of the building and I was afraid I was going to get hit with some of it. So I proceeded to an area where there was like a portico over part of the hotel -- part of the Trade Center. It was a substantial portico. It was held up with four small posts, as I remember, and I got under that so I would not be hit by anything. The only two people who were under that was myself and a fellow who I learned later was a dispatcher from the Jersey City Fire Department. He was taking pictures. I called my aide on my radio and he was the first person I got through to the whole day. I had a lot of radio trouble. When I got through to him I asked him if he was out and if the other people who were with us were out. He said yes, everybody was out. They all got out the same way that I got out. The only difference was I walked away from building 1. I assumed I was walking -- I was walking south. I assume. I might not be wrong. I didn't end up there. I ended up over here (indicating).

I assume I was walking southeast, away from the Trade Center. I could be wrong on that. But I was walking away from tower number 1. With that I heard this noise like a freight train coming. The fellow who was taking the pictures started to run and I started to run. Within one second this whole portico collapsed to the floor, pinned me to the floor. My face was 6 inches off the floor as rocks and rubble and everything were rolling past me. The only thing that kept me alive was -- when this came down, when this thing came down on top of me, apparently it hit something and it stopped about 3 feet above me. It wasn't that. It was another thing. It was over here somewhere (indicating).

So what happened was I laid there, pulled the helmet over my head, waited for all this rubble to pass by. All these rocks and everything were rolling. Shortly thereafter they stopped and this big cloud of dust where you couldn't see anything, it was like a fog, permeated the area. I decided I better try to crawl out of there. My legs were pinned a little bit. Not too bad. I was able to get them loose and I crawled towards where I felt cold air on the side of my face and I crawled and crawled and crawled and I finally got out into the open air and I saw either Ladder Engine 9 or Engine 6. I'm not sure. It was an one-digit number. It was either 6 or 9. The engine was running and the lights were flashing, but the amount of debris on the side of it was 30 to 40 feet high. I could not get into the rig, which was my intention, to get into the rig and call on the department radio.

My next thought was, well, maybe I should crawl under the rig to protect me from anything else that was falling. The engine was running and I thought that if I crawled under the rig I might die from carbon monoxide poisoning. So at that point I continued -- I said I just better continue crawling away. I kept crawling away, crawling away and then finally I got to the outside. I got to the fresh air. I could see the clear blue sky.

Just before that I had something had fallen across my back. It gave me a terrific welt across my back and it was very painful. I could hardly crawl, but I had to crawl to get away from it. I crawled a little more and I was out into -- I saw the clear blue sky. The first thing I saw in the clear blue sky was three fighter planes coming over and I said, "Geez, what happened? Are we at war? What is it?"

I crawled a little more and I found the guy who was the dispatcher from Jersey City. He was laying on the floor on his back, telling me he thinks he was having a heart attack. I was in no position to help him. I could hardly walk. I told him to clear all the dust and debris out of his mouth and lay there quietly and try to breathe some fresh air and that he would be all right. So he did that and we both laid there. I told him that somebody would come to get us shortly. We laid there for a substantial amount of time because apparently everybody on West Street was either dead or incapacitated. We laid there, I would estimate, at least 15 minutes and nobody came.

Finally I saw a fireman and I waved to him. The fireman came and I told him we needed two back boards. He said, "I'll be right back." He left and he didn't come back for another 15 minutes. I guess there was so much confusion and so few people around that he had a lot of trouble getting the back board. Anyway, finally he came back. To make a long story short, they put us on the back boards and they walked, they walked, they put us on two separate backboards and they walked with us it seemed like forever. A long, long time. All I could see was the blue sky and they put us in an ambulance. In the ambulance was a woman, an office worker who was very, very upset and a male office worker who told me that he had come down from the 25th floor. They loaded us and those two people and shortly after that we left and they took us.

There was all sorts of crazy rumors going on. The EMS woman in the ambulance told me that the Beekman Downtown Hospital had just been blown up so they wanted to take us to outlying hospitals. Now I ended up in Columbia Presbyterian Hospital, the Alan Pavilion, which is not where regular Columbia Presbyterian is. It's 220th Street, way above the regular Columbia Presbyterian. So I went from one ends of Manhattan to the other end of Manhattan. I was in terrific pain. My back was killing me. So when I get to the hospital I was X-rayed and I got cleaned up, all the stuff was washed out of my mouth. I was given an MRI for my neck and X-rays for my back. They told me nothing was broken in my back. It certainly felt like it was.

And with that, this is all taking a long period of time. With that we're into, by the time I'm treated they were into maybe four or five o'clock, I guess, in the afternoon. My brother Captain James Henry, 149 Truck, he found out where I was and he came up to get me. He came up to the hospital. ■ [redacted] So they wanted me to stay in the hospital that night. I said, "No, I can't stay. I gotta get out. [redacted] With that, I signed myself out and my brother drove me home still in my hospital gown and my boots and that's basically what happened. I got home and waited for Joey and Joey was never found. That's it.

Q. Anything else?

A. That's it.

MR. LAKIOTES: That takes care of it then. I thank you. That concludes the interview. It's approximately 1230 hours.

BATTALION CHIEF EDWARD MORIARTY

Interview Date: December 19, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. LAKIOTES: Today is December 19, 2001. The time is approximately 1030 hours. I am Battalion Chief Arthur Lakiotes, Safety Command of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with --

A. Ed Moriarty.

Q. Battalion Chief, concerning the events of September 11, 2001.

Ed, will you take us through the day and how the events unfolded for you and what your day was like.

A. I arrived here at headquarters and I was in the locker room at about 8:30. I came up the stairs after getting changed. I came up the elevator and I just missed Commissioner Fitzpatrick.

They must have been on the elevator as I was coming up. So when I got to the 8th floor, there was nobody, you know, of an upper level, on the 8th floor at that point. The first tower had already been struck by the plane. The second plane struck the second tower, the south tower. At that point I realized it was a terrorist act and I decided because there was, you know, most of our command staff was over at the scene, you know, Chief Ganci, Chief Nigro, I said, "You know, maybe I better stay in the building just for a short time and just make sure there wasn't going to be another hit in another area of the city." And that slight delay caused me to get involved with a situation here. I ended up in Chief Turi's office, because that's where the only phones were working. I started getting involved with mutual aide from the other departments outside the city. Jersey, Long Island, upstate. I got involved with the recall.

I was working back and forth with FOC, the operations command, Chief Ganci. And at that point we started to do some, you know, we were doing really a support nature. Time went very quickly and when the towers actually collapsed I was sitting at Chief Turi's desk on the phone with I think an upstate company that was looking to see if we needed help. At that point we were trying to arrange for staging areas for all of them to come into the city and to stage, and we were trying to get the outlying divisions to, you know, make sure that they would stage them and use them properly.

With that the first tower came down and subsequently at that point my cell phone. I could Chief Ganci, Chief Nigro with my cell. You know, because of the nature of the phone, and Commissioner Feehan. And I tried to reach them from here. I left the building and what I did was I went to the police academy where we had set up our OEM center initially. I was there and then I was at a couple of the Emergency Rooms checking to see if our members were being brought in there.

I went to St. Vincent's, but there was nobody there. There was one member from Ladder 6 who had gotten dug out with a separated shoulder, but that was it.

MR. LAKIOTES: The time is approximately 10:30. That concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ASSISTANT CHIEF MICHAEL BUTLER

Interview Date: December 21, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CANTY: Today is December 21st, 2001. The time is 1113 hours. This is Michael Canty, Battalion Chief, New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with Assistant Chief Michael Butler, Bureau of Fire Prevention, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Please state your name.

A. Michael J. Butler.

Q. And you're assignment?

A. I'm the Chief of Fire Prevention.

Q. Where did you respond to the World Trade Center?

A. I responded from home. I was on vacation.

Q. How did you become aware of the incident at the World Trade Center?

A. Via the television.

Q. En route to the World Trade Center, what did you see?

A. I saw the first tower come down when I was on the expressway prior to entering the Midtown Tunnel.

Q. That's the Long Island Expressway?

A. Long Island Expressway.

Q. Where did you park your car when you arrived at the World Trade Center?

A. I parked my car on Warren Street and West, on Warren Street facing east.

Q. On arrival did any civilian report anything to you?

A. No. A lot of people running.

Q. To whom did you first report to and where?

A. For lack of a better word, I reported to Chief Cruthers someplace on West Street shortly after the second tower came down.

Q. Were you given any specific assignment?

A. Chief Cruthers ordered me to assemble a staging area -- actually at that time it was called the operations post -- at Chambers and West Street.

Q. You never entered any building prior to the collapses; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Did you contact anyone in the buildings prior to the collapse of the buildings?

A. Negative. I did not.

Q. You previously stated that you were on the Long Island Expressway when the first tower collapsed. What was your location at the time of the second tower collapse?

A. I was on West Street approximately two blocks north, probably at the interaction of Murray and West.

Q. Were you in your vehicle?

A. No. I was walking.

Q. Where did you go?

A. There was a chief's car, a GMC battalion chief's car in that interaction. As the enveloping dust cloud reached me or prior to reaching me, I ran behind that chief's car with a small group young firefighters. It was a truck company, and it was a single digit. But I don't know who they were.

Q. Did you remove any injured civilians or firefighters prior to or following any of these collapses?

A. From the site? No. I probably assisted people as they were coming in to the operations post that I initially started to establish at West and Chambers.

Q. Was that more in a supervisory capacity?

A. Yes.

Q. Were these people seriously injured or were they walking?

A. No, this was mostly dazed, disoriented firefighters and civilians.

Q. Consider your handy talking communications for a moment. When you arrived -- what information do you have concerning handy talking communications at the World Trade Center?

A. I have no information on communications of handy talky within the building. When I took my position on West and Chambers, trying to make contact from West and Chambers via my handy talky with anyone in and around the Trade Center did not happen. And I know my handy talky was charged.

Q. Did you hear any radio traffic on the handy talky at that time?

A. No, there was no radio traffic, and there was no radio traffic on the air, the department radio, either. It was dead silent.

Q. This was following the second collapse?

A. This was following the second collapse.

Q. Which channels did you operate on, if you remember?

A. The universal channel, handy talky 1.

Q. Were you notified to switch to any other channels?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Given the current known status of any missing or deceased members, did you have any visual or verbal contact with any of these members on September 11th?

A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. Is there anything else that you would like to add to this interview as far as information concerning the events of September 11th?

A. No.

CHIEF CANTY: Thank you very much for your time, Chief.

It is now 11:30 on December 21st, 2001. This concludes the interview. It was an interview with Assistant Chief Michael Butler, Bureau of Fire Prevention, conducted by Battalion Chief Michael Canty, Bureau of Operations.

ASSISTANT CHIEF HAROLD MEYERS

Interview Date: December 21, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. CANFY: Today is December 21, 2001. It is 10:00 a.m. and this is Battalion Chief Michael Canfy of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Assistant Chief Harold Meyers, Bureau of Operations Citywide Tour Commander regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Please state your name.

A. Assistant Chief Harold Meyers, Citywide Tour Commander.

Q. Chief, after the alarm, what did you see?

A. I didn't respond to the original alarm. It was my day off. I was in upstate New York when I became aware that the World Trade Center had been hit by an aircraft. I came down and I arrived at approximately 11:30 in the morning.

Q. So you arrived after both towers had collapsed; is that correct?

A. That's correct. Both towers had already collapsed by the time I arrived.

Q. Where did you park your car, your vehicle, when you arrived at the scene?

A. When I initially arrived, I parked my vehicle at Park Row and Broadway. At that point I got out and I did a survey on foot to do a size-up and correct any obvious safety matters that I saw. I got around as far as I could on foot down on Liberty Street and I proceeded back around on Church Street as far as I could go.

When I couldn't go any further, I worked my way back to my car. I then moved my car to Vesey and West Street. I parked my car at Vesey and West and I did another survey from that location. Again, taking any corrective action that had to be taken as I went along, giving any direction that I had to give as I did my survey.

At that point, when I finished that, I worked my way back up to the command post. The main command post at Chambers and West and reported in to the commanders.

Q. While you were doing a size-up, it appears that you basically had circled almost the entire site, did you observe any victims due to the tower collapse, either civilian or firefighters?

A. Yes. There were several bodies. Some were dead, some were not dead. There were people receiving emergency first-aid. There were people that were in the process of being moved in the ambulances and there were other bodies that were kinds of staged waiting for removal.

Q. When you reported into the command post, you reported to Chief Nigro; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Did he give you any specific assignment?

A. Yes, he did. Chief Nigro directed me to continue monitoring conditions at the site. Specifically to monitor number 7 World Trade Center. We were very concerned with the collapse potential there, and to do whatever I could do to ensure site safety in that no additional people became injured. Also, to do what I could while up at the site to organize some sort of command or control.

Q. Considering handy talkie communications, you could only comment obviously following the seconds collapse because before that you were not on the scene.

How would you characterize the handy-talkie communications while you were on the scene on September 11th?

A. There was heavy radio traffic, but the handy talk I seemed to be working okay.

Q. Did you operate on more than one channel?

A. Yes, I did. I was operating sometimes on 1, sometimes on 2, and occasionally on 6.

Q. One last question. Do you have any knowledge about the status of any missing, injured or deceased members, where they might have been before the collapse?

A. No.

MR. CANFY: That concludes this interview. The time is now 1005. It is December 21, 2001. This interview was conducted by Battalion Chief Michael Canfy and the interview was of Assistant Chief Harold Meyers.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF STEPHEN RAYNIS

Interview Date: December 21, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 21st, 2001. The time is 12:15 in the afternoon. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Battalion Chief Stephen Raynis of Battalion 7. He is currently doing a UFO spot in the 2nd Battalion. The interview is taking place at the quarters of Battalion 2 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Chief Raynis, could you please tell me what happened to you on September 11th.

A. At 0848 hours I was in the 4th Battalion. I had just gotten relieved by Chief Ryan, Matty Ryan. The box came in for a plane into the Trade Center, second alarm. I took my gear off the rig; he threw his on, and he pulled out.

I turned on the department radio to monitor what was happening and the TV to Channel 1, New York 1. When I saw the second plane go into the tower, myself and my aide, Bobby Newman, grabbed our gear, and we got a police car to drive us down to the Trade Center.

We were there shortly after the second plane hit the south tower. As we walked down the block, we saw numerous jumpers from the Trade Center.

I reported in to the command post which was set up in front of the World Financial Center. I saw Commissioner Von Essen and a number of other staff chiefs, which I don't remember exactly who at the time, but B.C. Ingram from hazmat had asked me to set up a staging area for all the numerous firefighters reporting in.

I didn't have a radio, so I couldn't communicate. I had teamed up with Captain Brethel from 24 Truck who had a radio and who was off duty. Like I said, I reported in to the command post, and Chief Bob Ingram had asked me to set up a staging area for all the numerous firefighters reporting in. Originally I had started to set it up underneath the Winter Garden, but I realized that we were still a little too close to the command post. So I moved up to West and Vesey.

I had a couple of companies there. We were doing a search for a secondary device before we officially set it up. I had sent Bobby Newman back to the high-rise rig to get the sign for the staging area. I thought it might be in there.

At that time the first tower collapsed, which was the south tower. I was standing at Vesey and West, and I watched the tower go down. Then we got enveloped by the debris cloud.

I was teamed up with Danny Brethel at the time. We worked our way back, after a few minutes, back to the command post. There were a few injured firefighters and EMS workers right at the command post, and the only chief there at the time was Chief Cassano.

We assisted a few people into the garage of the World Financial Center. Then Chief Cassano ordered me and the units I had with me to set up another command post west of West Street.

We went through One World Financial Center. There was a search rope stretched. We had done a quick search of the garage. Then we walked through the building, out the rear door. I attempted to set up another command post on North Avenue and Vesey Street.

At the time I was trying to account for the people who might have been missing. So I was getting units together, trying to just account who might be missing, who was there.

I ended up working with Lieutenant Walsh from 3 Engine. I got status from him. He was helping me out. Then shortly after that the north tower came down. Again we got enveloped by the debris cloud which came down Vesey Street.

At that time whatever units I could get back together, we worked our way up Vesey Street to do a search of the street for any injured civilians.

The rest of the time I just spent trying to get the units back together again. Then I had heard that they were setting up a command post at Chambers and West. So at that time anybody I had over by the water in that riverside -- I forget what park it was, but North and Vesey, we walked our way over to the new command post at Chambers Street.

B.C. Hayden was there, and Chief Fellini I saw. At that point they asked me to set up a staging area again. So I went one block north of Chambers, and I set up a temporary staging area. As units were coming in, I just filled out a log of who was coming in. Most of the units were coming from the 40 Engine staging area, so they all had different numbers: 41, 40-2, all of those teams.

I worked with Chief Narbutt and Nardone at the staging area for the rest of the night.

That's my story.

Q. Okay. A couple quick questions. You said when you first went to the -- after Chief Cassano told you to set up a command post at Vesey, I believe --

A. Vesey and North Avenue.

Q. You had a couple companies with you. Do you know who they were?

A. No, I have no idea.

Q. You said you sent the aide back for the sign.

A. For the staging area sign.

Q. Was that in the 7th Battalion's car?

A. He was going to the high-rise unit to see if it was in there.

Q. Do you know where that was located?

A. The high-rise unit was located right by I think the walkway. That wasn't damaged until the second collapse.

Bobby Newman was pretty close. He was pretty lucky that he didn't get hurt or killed.

Q. You said there was a search rope. Do you know who stretched that? Any idea?

A. I have no idea. It was stretched when I got there.

Q. You said you were forming up units you mentioned with a lieutenant from Engine 3.

A. Yeah.

Q. Do you remember any units that you re-assembled?

A. No, I don't. Everybody was scattered, pretty much. I don't know. I don't remember.

Q. Okay. If you have nothing further, that concludes the interview.

A. Okay. That's it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PAUL DIPAOLO

Interview Date: December 26, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today is December 26, 2001. The time is approximately 1400 hours. I am Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes, Safety Command, conducting an interview with --

FIREFIGHTER DiPAOLO: Paul DiPaolo, Engine 205.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: -- regarding the events of except 11th, 2001.

Q. Paul, if you would, just tell me how your day unfolded, how the events unfolded.

A. I was home originally, saw it on the news. After the second plane hit, they gave the recall. I called Eddie Green. I told him I would meet him at his house. He said Richie Murray had already called him. I went to Eddie's. Richie picked the both of us up. We came to the firehouse. We got to the firehouse, got our gear. We picked up Rick Fowler, Paul Beck and John Urso, who were here already.

The six of us went across. The first building had already collapsed. We went across the bridge. We parked on I think it was Broadway and probably Liberty off Cortlandt, in that area.

As we're walking down Liberty Street, what we had heard was there were people trapped -- they thought people were trapped in the Burger King, which was on the corner of Church and Liberty, around the corner of 10 and 10's quarters.

As soon as we got to the corner, we saw Tom Boccarossa, who was the chauffeur of Engine 205 that day, standing on the corner by himself. We got to him. We said, "Tom, what's going on?" He said, "Everybody's gone." We asked him to explain, because we didn't know exactly what he meant. He said the last thing he heard, he couldn't get in touch with the engine or the truck.

About maybe three, four minutes after we originally spoke to him, we felt a rumble. Me and Paul Beck grabbed Tom, and we ran down Trinity, and I believe we made it probably right around the corner. I don't know what street that is. What street would that be right there?

Q. Thames Street.

A. Thames that goes all the way through. We made it around the bend, and the three of us made it right around the corner as everything came down. We got hit with all the debris. It knocked us down. We crawled into a little service elevator area in the building. There were I think one or two other firemen in there already.

We waited about it had to be ten minutes or so, and then we heard a voice on the loudspeaker saying if anybody can hear this follow -- because Tom we thought was hurt. He wasn't feeling good. He had been standing out there for the first collapse. He went onto the rig.

Me and Paul brought him -- let me see where it would be. We walked along Broadway probably to Pine Street, and that's where a security guard was with a bullhorn and a flashlight. But at that point it was all black.

We brought Tom into the building. I think it could have been the Equitable building. I'm not sure. We left Tom Boccarossa there, because they had set up a first aid station. Me and Paul Beck went back to find everybody else.

We met up with Richie and John Urso. They couldn't find Eddie Green; and Rick Fowler, they knew where he was, but he wasn't with us anymore.

After that we went looking for Eddie. In turn we found the engine. We met up with all the engine guys. We asked them if they had heard from the truck. They didn't hear anything.

Eventually we found Eddie. He had been buried under a lot of stuff, because he obviously ran a different way. Three of us ran one way. The other ones, I'm not sure which way they ran.

Then we finally got all together, and we went right to the area to start looking for people. After we met up with the engine and Lieutenant Hayes, we went back to the rig. We got the rig and we drove it down onto the west side, and we drove it right in front of 90 West.

Actually we supplied -- it turned out we supplied water to a standpipe in the building, because they had a couple of stangs going out of the window into the other building. That's where the engine stayed most of the day.

I was in the rig for a while. Richie was in the rig for a while. Then we basically just went around searching and stuff like that the rest of the day.

Q. You didn't see anyone -- you got there after -- okay.

A. We got there after the first building was already down.

Q. That's basically it; right? You found the engine, because I know they were --

A. Right. We found the engine after a while. We were just looking around and happened to see them. Richie Murray kept asking people on the radio, "Anybody seen" -- first Eddie. Then "Has anybody seen the engine? Has anybody seen Ladder 118?" We finally got in touch with the engine, but nobody ever heard from the truck.

So we have really no idea except Lieutenant Hayes had said the 15th floor. He thought it was the north tower going up. That was the last thing he had heard from them. Nobody actually heard from them. We have no idea.

We found the truck on the west side, right in front of West and Vesey. That's where the truck was. We have a picture of it there. So we know that's where it was parked. Then they moved it up Vesey to North End. That's actually where we found it parked after we were walking around all day, because then we started looking for it to see where it was. But somebody had moved it. We don't know who moved it.

Q. Yeah, out of the way.

A. They moved it up that way out of the way.

Q. Paul, thank you.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: That concludes the interview. It's approximately 1405

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TIMOTHY JULIAN

Interview Date: December 26, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 26, 2001. The time is approximately 12:45 hours. My name is Chief Art Lakiotes, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with --

THE WITNESS: Firefighter JULIAN, Timothy Julian.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: What company?

THE WITNESS: Ladder 118.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: 118, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Tim, if you would just tell me in your own words -- start with the response and then take me through.

A. All right. I'm assigned to Ladder 118. I was working in Engine 205 on a mutual exchange for the day tour. The box came in. I believe the plane crashed at a quarter to nine. We responded to a plane hitting the first, you know, north tower, just the engine, not the truck.

I had the backup position. I didn't have a radio. I also was riding backwards, and I remember going over the Brooklyn Bridge, and we still at that point probably thought it was an accident. I remember saying to the guys, "Guys, we're going to make history today." I meant that in a good way.

It was just a lot of hysteria, people exiting Manhattan over the Brooklyn Bridge. When we got to the Manhattan side, it was chaos, and I do believe that's one of the reasons why I'm still here is because at that point, I think we were responding to the north tower, and there was no access at all, so I think we made a left on Broadway at that point and started heading south.

Because I was riding backwards, I was a little disoriented. Finally, we made it to Broadway and Liberty, and the second plane hit, so that was probably about nine o'clock, and it was the loudest explosion I ever heard. It was mass hysteria, and screaming, and people running, and that's when we realized -- at least I realized it was more than just an accident. It was an attack.

There were some injured civilians at that point that came up to us asking us to help them, and we offered them some EMS bandages and what not and told them to keep moving.

We got back on our rig, and we proceeded south. I'm not sure which street we went west on, but we came back up Trinity Place, the corner of Trinity and Liberty, and we parked our rig, and I remember getting off our rig, [redacted]

A. He saw what was going on, believe me. Anyhow, we walked down Liberty Street west past 10 and 10's quarters. They already had a triage going on already, wounded civilians. In the street that day there was like a market probably going to take place, a farmer's market or shopping bazaar, whatever you want to call it. It was vendors wagons.

Now, at this point, Liberty Street was pretty much desolate, except us. It was Lieutenant Hayes, Chris Murray, fireman at 205, myself at backup, and then George Clancy from 205 in control.

As we were walking down Liberty Street, we started realizing that, not only was there bodies and debris in the street, some burning, paper and debris, metal, but we started seeing -- it wasn't even bodies. It was parts of bodies, and it was pretty disgusting and shocking, and I think we realized we were obviously in a bad zone, perhaps things falling from the building, and Lieutenant Hayes made a smart decision.

We saw a command post going on under the foot bridge at West Street and Liberty, but we walked to, I guess, Washington Street or even Greenwich. I'm not sure. Yeah, I think Greenwich. We cut over to Albany and down to West Street and back to that foot bridge, and I believe that's another reason the clock's ticking in our favor, not knowing at the time Lieutenant Hayes made that decision, figuring we were in a -- I don't want to say a collapse zone. We didn't think it would collapse but --

Q. Falling debris zone at least.

A. Falling debris zone. It was dangerous. Saw body parts everywhere. So we did that, and we made it to the foot bridge. At West Street, I remember seeing Chief Barbara. I saw you chief, but unfortunately -- I knew he was talking to another chief. I didn't know it was you.

At that point, I remember they were getting a report that a second -- another plane -- the Pentagon got hit, and we got a report another plane was coming in, and I believe it was a FBI agent, or whoever, or police, and he was saying it's not another plane yet. It is a plane, but it's a fighter jet, and in hindsight it turns out probably that was the fighter jet that was going to maybe shoot down that plane, but we thought another plane was coming in, and we were in a bad spot.

Q. Paranoia was bound to set in.

A. But upon his -- we heard it fly over, and then we felt safe. It wasn't a kamikaze plane, you know.

Q. Yes.

A. I remember being at that command post, and it was pretty much a lot of radio traffic and a lot going on, and we were kind of nagging Chief Barbara to put us to work. We saw several jumpers from Building 1, the north tower, on the West Street side, and every time we saw a jumper, every time we were anxious to go to work. Put out the fire, they stop jumping. And I remember Lieutenant Hayes saying 205, you know, he wants to go chief, and the chief barked at us, "Guys, open your coats, loosen up your masks and sit tight for a minute, stand by till we figure out where we are going to put you."

Because I guess on the original plan we were going to the first tower, but due to traffic and hysteria, we didn't make it there. Again, the clock is ticking in our favor, not knowing this, though, of course.

At that point, I think I remember getting an assignment to 216, 205, I think 217, and I think ladder 122, to go into 2 World Trade, report to another command post, and take it from there.

At that point, we got our gear together. We headed up Cedar Street to our left. Between us and the building was a small church, and there was a parking lot at the foot of that foot bridge, and there were several car fires going on. So we kind of went up Cedar Street for that very reason to avoid that to get to Washington Street, and then we were going to cut across to go into an entranceway at 2 -- the Liberty Street entrance at 2 World Trade, and that's when I saw 216 when they rounded the corner, and they were about 20 feet in front of me.

I saw them acting -- I don't know what's the word. Just excitedly, and there was a problem. I really thought that first they found a civilian injured, and I ran up as did other companies that were with us, and that's when I saw it was a fireman that was injured and down, and they began dragging him.

We figured let's get him out of the area. In front of 90 West on Cedar there was a scaffold. Let's bring him up to there. We figured that's more safe, and I heard them saying "Danny, Danny" and I realized. I looked down. It was Danny Suhr, from 216. I knew him from the football team. I still didn't realize that was him, you know. I just -- [redacted], I guess, but I remember help dragging him over there. I picked up his helmet, and we brought him to the entranceway of 90 West, and we opened up his coat and started giving him CPR as other guys ran to get a EMT paramedic and an ambulance, and I remained at 90 West working on Danny, and finally we got a stretcher.

We got him on the stretcher. We got an oxygen bag valve and off they went. I remained, though, at 90 West. I did remember having his helmet, and his helmet was split on top, and I put it to the side, and I know the guys -- I heard were looking for that later on. That was the last time I saw it. I remember at that time we packaged him, and he went.

I heard a rumor that Father Judge came over, but I didn't see him. I heard that Father Judge was perhaps on West and Vesey. No way he could have been on West and Liberty, but nonetheless, Danny made it to an ambulance, and our guys came back, 205, so now it was 216, 205, I think 217, and I'm not quite sure what happened to 217 and 216. I know two guys from 216 are missing, I believe. I'm thinking they ran across into 2 World.

We're are figuring now we were obviously in danger, falling debris zone. I remember standing on the corner of Cedar and Washington, putting my mask back on, getting my roll-up. I had an extra bottle, and my back to the trade tower. I'm in a bad spot here, you know.

I remember walking back to 90 West. 205, we regrouped together, Lieutenant Hayes, Clancy, Murray and myself, and at that point -- and there was a photographer from the Daily News, who now gave me a picture that I just showed to you, which I'm going to keep with my own (inaudible.)

Anyhow, I remember seeing him then at that point, and a building maintenance guy from 90 West came out, and he was waving us in. "Guys, come through this way."

And Lieutenant Hayes was contemplating finding a subway entrance through one of the buildings -- probably Bankers Trust or 90 West, if they had one

-- so we could get into 2 World Trade and work our way up. We figured it was dangerous in the street.

Q. Right.

A. So we cut through 90 West. The guy -- security maintenance guy pointed us out to, I guess, Albany Street, and we popped out that door, and we headed east again. I remember the photographer. He says he went west.

I don't know what happened, again, to 216 and 122. We came out from 90 West, made a left, headed east, and right when we got to the corner of Washington and Albany, that's when I heard the building collapse.

First I thought it was an explosion. I thought maybe there was a bomb on the plane, but delayed type of thing, you know, secondary device.

Q. I was convinced for a week it was secondary devices.

A. You know, and I just heard like an explosion and a then a cracking type of noise, and then it sounded like a freight train, rumbling and picking up speed, and I remember I looked up, and I saw it coming down, and I was able to make it across Washington to the very corner of Washington and Albany. I think it's the south side of Bankers Trust building.

I made it right to the corner, and there's a column right there, and I was with my guys. We all made it to like the column, and I remember it was plate glass behind me, and I'm thinking I'm going to get hit by this glass and like a porcupine. I'm going to get it, you know, but nonetheless, it rumbled.

It was the loudest rumbling I ever heard. The ground shook, and I got thrown down, and I remember it just got black, and I got knocked down. I remember being buried. I think I ducked more or less, you know, pieces of metal -- something hit me, not that heavy, though. Wasn't an I beam or else I wouldn't be talking to you, and I remember that being on me, and I kind of -- I was able to stand up and push everything off me, but now I felt like I was in the street or the sidewalk, and it was hot, smoky. I felt like I was in a fire, and I remember digging my way out. A lot of cementation, powdery insulation, whatever you want to call it. Almost like being in a blizzard with some metal debris right on me. Fortunately nothing heavy hit me.

I got my mask on, and I found my extra cylinder. I figured I need that, and I was looking for the building, 90 West, and I found it, put my flashlight on, and I found 90 West, and I was just about to smash the window of 90 West to get inside, and right when I did it, I felt a hand grab me and pull me in the doorway, and I think it was Engine 220, a lieutenant. I don't know who he was. He grabbed me.

I told him I was with 205, and we started hollering for each other, and we went into 90 West, and we kind of regrouped. We were missing Clancy for a short while, but we finally found him. He went into another building. Somebody else found him, and the ironic part is 90 West is now being collapsed on and is on fire. No, I'm sorry. Bankers Trust, and we're inside taking refuge.

We figured safer in there than in the street, but we figured once we regrouped and kind of calmed down, we took our masks off, and we talked to each other. It was kind of, like, all right, let's head back either West Street or, you know, head south a block.

So now originally we were with 220 engine. We got our act together. We went across Albany Street to the next building. I'm not sure what building that was, and we cut through that building. Now, it's two engine companies. We got no tools. I had my extra cylinder. I don't know if it was -- once we got in that side, but on the next street, a car outside. I think it was locked, and I remember breaking the door with a cylinder, and I think we went -- I don't know whether we went one more block to Rector. I don't remember. I know we cut through at least two buildings south, directly right through, and then we popped out on, I think, Rector and made it up to, I guess, Greenwich. I'm not sure if it was -- I think it was Trinity. We made it to Trinity.

Looking for our rig, we figured we'd head back to our rig, find our chauffeur, or even the command post, whatever we had to do, you know, and at that point the second building collapsed. I heard the same exact noise all over again. It was just a little further away, and there was people in the street.

We kind of heard them, people on the street wandering around in shock. We were like kind of hurrying them to get inside, get inside, and people had minor cuts and bleeding. I saw faces in a doorway on Trinity. I don't remember the address. 61 Trinity or whatever it was. Probably Trinity and Rector. It was the building right there.

I remember I saw people inside. We ran in there thinking let's get these people off the street in there and figure out what our next move is. And then the second building collapsed, and it was like a big wave again, a woosh, paper, and debris, and powder, and fire and smoke.

And at that point we were inside, and as it turned out, there were people in the building who wanted to leave, and we talked them in to staying, and we were trying to reassure them. Some people had cell phones. The phones were working. We told the people call your families. They helped us out. They gave us water. We washed our eyes out, towels.

I remember I called my fiancee. We're married now, but called her, and she works at [redacted], and I got her machine. Now, it's about -- do you know what time the second building collapsed?

Q. The second building collapsed at exactly 10:20?

A. 10:29 or something?

Q. 10:29.

A. 10:20? SO this is probably like 10:45, 10:35, you know.

Q. Right.

A. And I remember calling her and my mother, and I got both their machines, so now I'm thinking New York just got bombed by, you know -- so we kind of regrouped, washed our eyes out. They were caked, you know, ended up getting conjunctivitis.

Q. Sure.

A. After that, but anyhow we regrouped, got our stuff together, and we headed back to Liberty and Trinity, and we found our rig, and we couldn't find our chauffeur, Tom Boccarossa, but we ran into some of our guys that off duty, came in, came across, and it collapsed, and they just escaped the collapse from -- they were on their way to the area, and so they experienced pretty much what we experienced.

So we all kind of teamed up. We saw our rig. We got our rig from corner the of Trinity. It was buried. The windows were blown out. There was a couple of car fires going on. We moved some stuff out of the way. Richie Murray drove it. He jumped in it. He turned it around, headed south, and then he headed west. I don't know if it was Rector. Probably Rector Street. We cut back to West Street, went north again.

I remember we made it to about the Marriott, south of -- to Carlyle and West, and we made it to there, and at that point they were starting to stretch lines into 90 West, was pretty much going, and we stretched the line in there, and we were helping out, and it was just chaos everywhere.

Stretching a line here, help over here. There were guys setting up a hose to the draft from the river, and I actually knew a captain, Richie Weldon. He was a lieutenant at 74 engine when I was there, and I remember helping stretch like 3 1/2 for little awhile, and I remember going back to our guys, and we stretched a line into 90 West, and that was getting shitty, and they backed us out of there, and then we got an order to set up in the Marriott with a couple of other companies or on Albany. I guess between Albany and Carlyle, there was a Marriott right there.

We ended up walking up 40 fights of stairs with our roll-ups in the Marriott, and we brought a stang as well. Another company -- we were was taking turns carrying, and we made it to like 37, 38, 39. We set up at the windows on the north side and the roof, you know, multi-versile. The water pressure was horrible, and we were just shooting water on 90 West pretty much the rest of the day. That's where I spent most -- I spent the rest of the day, and then finally we got relieved maybe around -- I guess like 7, and we walked back down 40 flights of stairs, and our rig got ravaged, all our tools and flashlights. Everything you had left on the rig, gone. Mask --

Q. Sure.

A. And at that point, I remember heading over to West, I guess West and Liberty again, and just starting to search, and plough, you know, and I must have been there for a couple of hours. I don't think I had a watch on. I think that threw me off that day. Maybe I was better off, but I remember it was around eleven o'clock that night, me and a couple of guys, we walked to the foot of the Brooklyn Bridge, and we started getting rides from PD vans, you know, a car going over, and I don't know if it was that night.

One of the nights, New York, Manhattan trustee, Rudy SanFilippo -- I could be mistaken. Maybe it wasn't the first night, but one of the nights I was working, he gave me a ride over the Brooklyn Bridge, but I think the first night a police car -- I hopped in the trunk literally exhausted. I was covered in shit.

Q. Definitely.

A. My eyes were --

Q. Gone.

A. Shot, burnt, red, and made it back to the firehouse. That was the first night pretty much. I mean, Lieutenant Hayes -- I mean, traffic, we got delayed. Lieutenant Hayes made us go around to Albany, and then after Danny got hit, I really thought he got hit by debris, but the rumor was he got hit by a body. I didn't see it.

I know he was hit, obviously. It killed him. At the time we were working on him, I really didn't think he was gone, but I was obviously in denial. You know, you just want to help, but we helped 216 trying to help him, take the latest -- again, the clock's ticking, the bus, and then the guy from 90 West suggested we cut through. Lieutenant Hayes was, like, let's find a subway entrance to go underground into 2 and work our way up.

He was smart. He was thinking. There was a lot of chaos, and he kept his head, and 205, we stuck together. We bumped into other companies along the way, but I really believe that Tom Hayes -- you know, he made a couple of decisions right there that --

Q. That were right.

A. I'm still talking to you.

Q. That's true, sure.

A. And we all kept our heads, and we stayed together, and we had an idea if we stuck together, and with Hayes, you know. We worked as a team and I believe he saved my life.

Q. Sure. It was not a day where you knew what decision to make.

A. No.

Q. It was --

A. Especially when there was a collapse, there's a fire. There was a car fire. Like, what do you do first?

Q. Exactly. Plus as part of the event, your thought process takes a little bit of what you're actually seeing, because you don't believe what you're seeing.

A. Right.

Q. When you're seeing those towers come down.

A. I never thought they would come down.

Q. No, it's amazing. It's --

A. I knew we were going to have a bad situation, maybe a partial collapse, you know, whatever, but never the whole thing. No way. I was in construction many years before this.

Q. No, nobody had any idea that was going to happen, obviously.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: That concludes the interview. It's approximately 1305.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER VINCENT PLOVER

Interview Date: December 26, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF MC GRATH: The date is December 26, 2001. Is time is 0950 hours, and this is Battalion Chief James McGrath of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Vincent Plover, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Vinnie, if you'd please state your name and your company, and just recount for me the events as close as you can remember them.

A. Vincent Plover, Ladder 85. I was in Manhattan working a side job when I heard of the events, and it was after the second tower was struck that I decided to respond, so I went to 18th Street to 14 engine and got a turnout coat and pants, and I responded from there. I was crossing -- I was on 14th Street, and I saw the towers were still up. Both towers were still up at that point, but I lost sight of them as I was going -- I was going to the Westside Highway, and I got up on the Westside Highway, and I parked about seven blocks away to not interfere with traffic, and I got out of my truck, and I started running, and it was then I noticed that there was dust on the ground.

The dust increased, and I didn't know what the dust was, and then when I was about approximately one block north of the tower, because I saw people at the windows -- and so as I stopped, I looked up, and people had begun jumping from the -- and it was standing straight up, but not having seen the damage to the other tower -- a couple more minutes, and see if there was any change.

Approximately four minutes later, myself and the other -- the company that was there and the chief, we started running north, and at that point I headed back down to -- toward where the Trade Center parking lot -- but adjoining the Battery Park City.

So I joined up with a couple of other guys, and there was a pumper there, and I started the pumper and stretched lines, and we cut a hole -- exposed, and they were -- one would light the other one up, and then the gas tanks were blowing, so we started putting out those car fires, and then we got some foam after that. I ran into Ladder 85.

Q. The fellow, from Engine 14, the firefighter from Engine 14 that you were with, do you have his name?

A. Yes, John Dilillo. Now, he responded with 14 engine.

Q. Okay.

A. I left him at 14 engine. He would be better off staying with his company, so he responded with them, and he --

Q. Also, the chief that --

A. I have no idea who he was.

Q. Or the company that was there with him?

A. I don't know either. It was just --

Q. The name of the firefighter that was under the car with you?

A. No.

Q. Do you know what company he was?

A. There was a Brooklyn company that I was -- that I was there, and I used to be an engine chauffeur, so --

Q. 9 or 3 give any indication as to where they might be?

A. They -- I remember hearing -- but I understand that they got out.

Q. You didn't know where they were?

A. No.

Q. The radio? They didn't give a location -- you know might help us.

BATTALION CHIEF MC GRATH: Thanks for the interview, then. The time is ten after eight, and I thank you very much.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PETER FALLUCCA

Interview Date: December 26, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF MC GRATH: The date is Wednesday, December 26, 2001. The time is 1125 hours.

This is Battalion Chief James McGrath of the Fire Department of City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Peter Fallucca assigned to Engine 16, now working in Engine 153 in Staten Island.

It will be regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Pete, if just say your name and your company, and then in your own words, kind of relate everything that you can remember from when you received the alarm up through the collapses.

A. All right. My name is Peter Fallucca, assigned to Engine 153 in Staten Island. On September 11, I was on rotation in Engine 16 in Manhattan.

Starting right from the very beginning, I was in the house watch, sitting in the house watch at quarters of Engine 16. I heard it come over on the scanner. I heard -- I was actually sitting in the house watch. I actually heard -- sounded like the plane flew over our quarters, and I said to myself, I said, that sounds low for Manhattan for a plane to be flying so low, and then two seconds later it came over on the scanner.

I heard the guy say, "A plane just hit the World Trade tower. Send every available ambulance you got," I heard him say on the scanner. My lieutenant came running in. He said, "Did you hear that? Did you hear that?" I said "Yeah. He said a plane just hit the trade center," and we knew we were going to get sent in on that.

We suited up, and within two minutes, we were sent on the third alarm. We were on our way down there. We took the FDR Drive, and we could see the first building that was hit on the FDR Drive, and you could see an enormous hole in the side of the building from the FDR Drive, the first building that got hit.

You could see all the papers flying around it, all the -- you know, I guess the stationary from all the offices. When I first looked, I thought it was seagulls flying. There was so many, looked like seagulls at the dump, and we got down there, and as we are pulling in, we're getting into the side streets closer to the trade center, the people were lining the streets. All civilians lining the streets, you know, packed with people.

I think looking at the map, looked like we were on Church. We just were getting ready to pull up, getting ready to get out, and the second plane hit, and we started getting hit with debris on the top of the rig. We were huddled down in the bottom of the rig, because -- I mean, we were getting pelted with some heavy stuff, and at that time I didn't know that it was a second plane.

I just thought it was a secondary explosion from the first building, because I was on the opposite side. I was sitting behind the officer, and I couldn't see really the top of the towers, but the guys that were on that side of the rig, they were able to see, and I heard, "Holy, shit!" You know, he screamed, because he saw this big fireball, and then all the debris.

You heard the explosion and everything, but I saw the big fire ball. The stuff was coming down across the street. It looked like a meteor came flying across the street. They said it was the engine. I don't know what it was. It was a big fireball or something from the plane I guess, came from across the street in front of our rig, and as we get out of the rig, there's a cop, city police officer, in the street. He's telling us, "I'm getting out of here. I just saw a rocket." He said he saw it come off the Woolworth Building and hit the tower.

Now I see the two towers are hit. He says, "I just saw a rocket hit that building. I'm getting the F out of here. I'm getting out of here."

And we were like, holy -- I'm saying to myself, I didn't even go in yet. They're shooting rockets. I don't know what we're doing over here, but after I watched it on the news a couple of times, I could see it was a piece of the plane or something flew off the building and made like a -- it looked -- if you didn't see it actually come off the plane, you saw like the stream of smoke coming from one building to the other, but actually came from the tower, and they didn't go the other way, so he swore he saw a rocket, but at the time we thought it was a rocket. We thought -- I thought we were under attack, and we were under attack, naturally, but I thought we were under attack in the city.

You know, I thought guys were in these buildings with rockets shooting at the building, and we made our way in. We got into the lobby of the Tower 1, the first building that got hit. That's where we were called up.

Q. So you entered from the courtyard on Church Street?

A. Yeah, we walked through. It was a -- I don't know what building it was, but I remember walking underneath all the scaffolding. They had the scaffolding going over the sidewalks. They must have been doing work on one of them.

I remember walking underneath all of that, and they were telling us, be careful of glass going in, you know, look up before we go in this building, make sure there is nothing coming down. There's all kinds of glass and debris.

I remember looking up and seeing people jumping out, civilians jumping out, you know, and that was -- that's something to see, and I remembered as we turned, we got onto West Street, going through the courtyard we came to the entrance on West Street. I could see people jumping out of the second building that got hit, and you could see them hitting the ground and stuff.

I mean, it was a distance, but you could see it, and we got into the lobby of the first -- the north tower, and they were just setting up the command post.

I seen them coming in with the briefcase they open up. I saw the commissioner in there, Von Essen was in the lobby with us at the time, a couple of chiefs. I don't know who they were, and they weren't getting names.

It wasn't like you see guys shaking hands, hey, how you doing. Everybody was very serious because at this point, we knew we had a problem, and they had sent us -- I think it was the B stairwell. We went up the B stairwell. They hooked us up with another company, going up two companies at a time up the stairwell.

We took our roll-ups, plus extra bottles and stuff. We went up the B stairway, and I think they were going to send us up the 70th Floor. They were looking to establish a communication line. They had those phones in the hallways.

Q. Yes.

A. That's what they were looking -- our assignment was, I guess, to set up a communication line in that stairwell, and we were going up about 10, 12 floors at a time, taking five-minute break. I mean, you walking up, and people were coming down one way, we were going up the other.

Civilians were coming down one side of the stairs. We were going up the other. You know, it was very orderly, single file. Nobody was really panicking.

Q. Do you remember the company that was with you?

A. I think they said it was -- it might have been Engine 1. I'm not sure. I really don't remember. I remember talking to the guys after the fact, and they said it was Engine 1, but I personally can't be too sure of that. I don't remember the company, but I know they sent us up with another company to go up, and we went up to -- like I said, we got up to the 10th Floor. We took a break.

People were handing us bottles of water going up, civilians, words of encouragement and all that stuff, good luck, guys. We had a few people -- women crying. There was a light haze inside the stairwell.

Before we got in, all the elevators were crashed down in the lobby, and we were going to the stairwell. See all the elevators were crashed down, big slabs of marble on the floor, all the ceiling tiles of the dropped ceiling was falling down, wires hanging.

You see wires and stuff hanging inside the elevator shafts, because the doors were blown right off the elevators. There was one body inside the lobby. Looked like his legs were chopped off. I don't know where he came from, but he had already had a triage tag on him. It was a civilian. I don't know where he came from, how he died. Looked like his clothes were a little burnt up on him, but his legs were chopped off. I don't know where he came from, but he had a triage tag, so somebody must have tagged him before we got there.

So I can remember we started making our way up. We got up about ten floors, and we'd take a break and go up another ten floors. We got up to about the 23rd Floor. We were inside the hallway taking a break, and the whole building shakes. I mean violently, like earthquake shake.

Two seconds later the lights go out, and I hear guys going, oh, shit. I see guys taking off -- firemen, cops. Guys are saying, this building is not supposed to shake like this, and I see guys running down the stairs, running out of the building, and I told my boss.

I said, "I don't know what we're going to do." Usually I don't -- I don't -- I just do whatever the boss tells me, but I was asking him. We're under attack. Is that -- we were on the 23rd Floor. There were guys in suits up there on the 23rd Floor. Guys were telling me there were -- the CIA's got offices on the 23rd Floor. I don't know who, but it could have been building super. They had a lot of information, these guys were giving us.

They had told us that the Pentagon was hit. This was while we were sitting on the 23rd Floor. The Pentagon is hit. They hit another place in Washington. They shot a plane down, and as we were on the 23rd Floor taking a break, they telling us, fellows, we just got a report of a third plane headed this way, so when the building shook, like that, I figured we got hit with another plane, but we found out later that was the first building, Tower 2. That was the one that was collapsed, so that's what we found out. That's what that was.

And the lights went out, and I was saying -- to me it seemed like about five minutes. I heard on the radio Mayday, to get out. Everybody out of the building. All personnel out of the building, and I started -- I just started coming down, and I lost my lieutenant. I couldn't find my lieutenant.

One of the guys I think in our unit, he went down before they gave the order to go down. The only one I had with me was -- one of the 14 probies was with me. It was me and him, and we were looking for the lieutenant, calling the lieutenant on the radio. Couldn't find him. He wasn't answering me. I was yelling up the stairs.

We went down four floors at a time, and we waited. I waited for him to go down, and then we got down to the lobby, and I waited for him. He still never came down. I was calling him on the radio, and then I saw one of the other guys in our unit, the senior guy. He's got about 17, 18 years on the job. I told the probie,"Sean," I said, "Let's follow Timmy." I said, "Let's regroup with him, see what he wants to do."

He was helping carry a woman with a couple of other guys in a chair downstairs, so we walked with him. We helped him carry the chair, put the woman in the ambulance, and it was the three of us together -- me, Timmy Marmion, Sean Brown, together.

We walked down to -- I guess we got down to about -- it was the first block. We got down to Vesey Street. It was the first block. Yeah, Vesey. We had to be on Vesey, and I took my tank off, because I figured now I'm clear of all this debris falling down. I said "We're out. We're not going back in any more till we regroup any way."

And there was an EMT walking down the street. He was carrying a chief. The chief was bleeding from the head, and Sean Brown called me. He said he grabbed the other shoulder of the chief, and he helped carry the chief to the ambulance. I told Sean, "Make sure you come back here. Meet back here. This way all three of us are together," because we didn't know.

The chauffeur was still out on the street somewhere. We didn't know where our chauffeur was. The lieutenant, we had no idea where he was. As far as we now knew, he was still in the building, and one other guy was missing. Let me see.

He starts walking with the chief to get him in the ambulance. Me and Timmy were standing right under. We just took our tanks off and our jackets off, and that's when the second building came down. It came down right behind us.

So now we started running down West Street towards Stuyvesant High School. Take a peek behind.

You could see this black cloud coming behind you. You couldn't out run it, and you get caught in that black, and I felt like the push, you know, from this black cloud, and I got myself to the first building before Stuyvesant High School, and I seen guys go inside there, and I made the turn around the building, and I went inside that building, because, I mean, you couldn't see your hand in front of your face.

I was feeling the wall of the building to feel my way into the building, and we went inside the building. We looked outside the window. It looked like midnight at ten o'clock in the morning.

And then as it settled, we came out, and we were trying to regroup with the guys. We found Sean again, who helped the chief into an ambulance, and it was just the three of us for awhile, and we wound up finding our chauffeur, and then we wound up getting -- we had everybody together except for the officer. The officer wound up still being in the building.

He was with Ladder 6 on the 4th Floor. He survived. He was in the building, and we tried -- we asked the chief. They wouldn't let us go back in. Once we were out, they said, "You guys were in there already. You're not going back in." They wouldn't let us go back in because we were looking, you know, both buildings had went down at this point, and we were going to see if we could pull people out, find anybody still that was alive, and they wouldn't let us go back in. They said, "You guys are done."

So we sat around, and one of the other guys had something in his eye. As you're sitting there, you feel -- a burning in my chest. I had mud caked up in my mouth from inhaling all this stuff. I mean, I ate it, never mind inhaled it, and guys came over, anybody want to go to the hospital, get checked out.

So the guy who had scratches, he said he was going. I said, you know what, they're not letting us go back in. Let me go get checked out.

And I went -- they took me to St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital and checked me out, and they sent me back to my house a few hours later, and I stayed at the firehouse answering phones.

Q. Just a few questions.

You mentioned that your officer was with Ladder 6, and that you had a radio on.

Did you hear any of the transmissions from Ladder 6?

A. No, I didn't hear anything from Ladder 6, but on my way down, I heard one transmission that I do remember was from Rescue 1. I heard the boss from Rescue 1 telling all Rescue 1 members, meet up on the 40 floor.

When I was going -- that was when they gave the order to get out. I was on my way down. I don't know what floor I was on when I heard it, but it was fairly high. Had to be like in the high teens, maybe 20th Floor, just as I was starting to go down.

They were telling us to go down, and I heard Rescue 1 say to meet up, all rescue one members meet up on the 40th Floor, and I know all those guys are no longer with us any more, so they were somewhere headed to the 40th Floor, I would imagine, those guys.

Q. As far as --

A. I heard Maydays given for guys -- guys -- I heard of guys passing out. Still missing members I heard. This is before anything had collapsed.

Q. Can you remember any specifics, any specific companies?

A. No, I remember hearing that they found the boss from Engine 1. I remember hearing, found an officer from Engine 1, possibly DOA. I remember hearing that on the radio, but the only real one I can remember where guys were going was Rescue 1. I heard them say meet up on the 40th Floor. I heard that transmission for Rescue 1.

Q. And the highest floor that your company, Engine 16 got to, was the 23rd?

A. 23rd Floor. And we were going to go higher, but at that time they had ordered us out, and we went down. Like I said, I lost -- I mean, there was at that point, there was mass chaos. Guys were going up, guys were going down.

My officer, I don't know if he went on one of the floors, but however -- he wound up on the 4th Floor. When I was coming down, I never saw him. I wound up seeing an officer from 65 engine -- like I know those guys, because you get detailed in the same battalion, and I asked him.

I said, "Did you see Lieutenant Cross?" Lieutenant Cross was my lieutenant that day. I said, "Did you see Lieutenant Cross?" And he said, "Yeah, I saw him. He's on his way down." He even told me they want everybody out of the building. Start heading down. I said, "Are you sure you saw him go down?" Because I thought maybe this guy is looking for me. I don't want this guy to get killed looking for me.

And he said, "No, I saw him. He's on his way down," and I said, "You sure?" He said, "Yeah, he's on his way down. Come on, let's start going down." That was Piambino from 65 engine. He told me that. So I said all right.

I went down to the lobby, and I was standing in the lobby. At that point, the lobby was a ghost town. There was nobody in the lobby. There was no more command center in the lobby. There was nothing.

Every window in the place on the bottom floor was broken. When we first got there, just the windows when we went in there were broken, but the windows in the back of the lobby were -- there wasn't a window in the bottom of the lobby, and it was empty, the lobby. I didn't see anybody, and, I mean, you just had the guys -- trails of guys, dribs and drabs of guys coming down the stairways coming out of the building. That was it.

I mean, I saw all these guys. I remember seeing all the rigs in front of the building. There were rugs underneath that north bridge, because when I got -- we put the woman in the ambulance, when we came out, the ambulance was parked under the north bridge. I don't know if they ever made it out alive or not, if they survived or not.

Q. Do you remember any of the companies that were parked under there?

A. I remember seeing -- when we were going in, I remember seeing 6 truck, because I remember seeing them -- they got the tiller rig with the dragon on it, and a friend of mine that I worked with over here, he had just transferred to 6 truck. He was working that day at 6 truck, and I remember seeing Squad 18 going in.

Who else? I remember seeing 6 truck going in when we first went in. They were parked right in front just past the north bridge.

Q. As people were exiting the building with you, was everybody going north or were some going south?

A. I think people were going any which way they could get out pretty much, and then we got out, and we went north because we had the woman. I followed Timmy at that point. I was following the senior guy in the engine at that point.

I couldn't find the lieutenant, so I said let's go with him. You know what I mean? I got two years on the job. I figured he's the best shot. I don't know whatever he wanted to do. I mean, if he would have said, come on, we're going back in the building, I probably would have went back in the building.

I was just at that point -- I was lost, to be honest. I didn't know what to do. We left our roll-ups and our -- I had the standpipe position at that point, and I left all that up on the 23rd Floor. I just took my tank with me.

When they told us to get out, that was our only order. I didn't know what to do. I knew we weren't going to put a fire out over there. It was roaring. You could see from the FDR. You could see the thing was going, thick, black smoke. You could see floors of fire. I mean, you see it on the news. You could see the whole thing was burning.

We went with him, and that's where it pretty much ended for us until I got caught in that cloud of debris when it hit, that cloud, you know, blowing all over the place, but that was it.

Q. Is there anything else that you can think of that might be pertinent?

A. When I came out, all the people that I saw in the lobby, I remember seeing a guy filming in the lobby. There was a guy with a video camera in the lobby filming.

Q. Fireman? Civilian?

A. He look like -- you know, might have been a light-duty guy. He looked like he had a firemen uniform, but he didn't have bunker gear on. He just had the coat on and blue pants. It looked like a fireman, but it didn't look like -- he wasn't wearing -- he didn't have bunker gear on, and he wasn't wearing a helmet. Just he had a camera, and I remember him filming with a camera, and it wasn't like the amateur ones. It looked like a professional looking camera that he had.

I remember guys -- when we got out, I had heard that the other building collapsed, but I didn't know the extent of the collapse. I thought maybe it was a partial collapse, part of it broke off, floors collapsed, and I can remember coming out and seeing, you know, the ribs to the towers sticking in the street, but the front of West Street in front of the north tower was clear.

I walked out and didn't have a problem. There was nothing in my way to walk out. Just that layer of powder in the street, four to six inches of powder, that dust or whatever it was, papers and stuff like that in the street. That was it.

When you see people coming -- like I said, everybody was coming down. There were firemen coming down when I came down, but nothing that I can remember vividly.

Even all the civilians, I only remember one civilian because I saw him on the news. He was the blind guy with the dog. That is the only one -- if I had to pick somebody out of a lineup, I could probably pick that guy out of the lineup, because I remember petting the dog on the way up. He said the seeing-eye dog coming down the stairs.

That's the only guy, but otherwise, I can't remember too much faces. Two years on the job, you don't know that many people. I was on the rotation. I was only there just under a year, so I recognized the guys that were in the battalion, you know, cause you get detailed, but the rescue, I did hear that transmission about the rescue, and I remember hearing the transmission about finding the officer from Engine 1, but that was it.

I remember seeing some people jumping and pretty much...

BATTALION CHIEF MC GRATH: I want to thank you very much for the interview. I'm sure some of the information will be very, very helpful.

The time is 11:46. This interview took place in the quarters of Engine 153 in Staten Island.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

SUPERVISING FIRE MARSHAL JOHN D. LYNN

Interview Date: December 27, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Today's date is December 27th, 2001. The time is 3:24 p.m. I'm Battalion Chief Robert Burns, Safety Battalion, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with...

SUPERVISING FIRE MARSHAL LYNN: Dave Lynn, Supervising Fire Marshal, Shield No. 66, assigned to Brooklyn Bureau of Fire Investigation.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: This interview is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Dave, if you would, just tell us in your own words what happened that day.

A. On September 11th, I was working a day tour and my attention was drawn to the situation via the Department radio when I heard some kind of transmission asking the dispatcher, send me every ambulance you got. The phone started ringing and my Chief had the entire day tour respond over to the World Trade Center.

We drove over. I drove over, myself, and I had three members of my squad also drive over. We came through the tunnel, went through the tunnel, and it was sometime while I was in the tunnel that the second plane had hit. So I exited the tunnel. I parked soon thereafter on West Street, geared up and walked along West Street, where I noticed landing gear and the evidence of some kind of explosion.

I continued up West Street toward the Trade Center and I saw my Chief, Richard McCahey, off to the left on the west side of West Street. He waved me over. I came over with two or three of my guys, and he advised us that we were going to just stage there for a couple of minutes until we worked up some kind of game plan. We were there not very long trying sort of to size up, seeing how we were going to proceed, planning on how we were going to set up a perimeter, looking for like secondary devices, because at that time it was obviously a terrorist situation, terrorist attack, and so we were looking for trucks that might have parked, moved into the area and that kind of thing.

It's hard to deal with the time frame, but it seems as if suddenly there was a -- our attention was drawn to the south tower. There was some kind of explosion, you might say, up in the area where the fire was. Actually, in hindsight, that was the start of the collapse.

Now, we were very close at that time. We were up on West Street toward Liberty, very close to the hotel but on the west side of the street. So immediately, from my point of view, I knew that we were much, much too close, and we just started running. There was a group of us there, all Marshals. We just started running south on West Street to the corner, and there were a lot of people running and a lot of people bumping into each other at that corner and it was like a pileup of whoever was passing by, which slowed us all up.

As soon as I made the turn, I jumped in behind some van. It was like the second car off West Street going toward the river. I dove in behind the van, and it was on us already, you know, the noise and like a pressure wave, like a wind, and the dust cloud. Immediately I recognized that I couldn't breathe. I was slightly winded, I guess, from running. So, breathing deeply, I took in a lot of dust and realized that breathing was going to be a problem, and vision, because we were sort of blasted then, I got a lot of debris in my eyes.

So I stayed there behind the van for a while. At some point one or two people dove in behind the van. I couldn't see what was going on, but here one of them was wearing a mask, obviously Fire Department. Then he and I sort of exchanged -- you know, gave each other moral support. You okay? Yeah, I'm okay. Are you okay? That kind of thing.

The dust started to settle and I looked over to the guy next to me and it turns out to be Chief Cruthers, and we just sort of got up and tried to size up what was happening. You could see. Visibility started to clear up a little bit.

Some fireman came walking by. He was bleeding from the head but said he was fine. Myself and Cruthers gave him a quick look and he just had some sort of a minor head laceration. He said he was fine. He walked off. A couple civilians came running by. We directed them toward the river.

I remember hearing off -- I lost my radio, my cell phone, in the rush, and I couldn't find it on the ground. The ground was covered with debris. I heard one Mayday on Chief Cruthers' radio. So his attention was immediately drawn to the radio and then he started to walk off. He walked to West and then up toward the tower. At that point, I didn't see Cruthers again.

I went to the corner and I looked up West Street and it just looked impassable to get to that tower because I was going to head up that way toward the command post. So I went down the side street toward the river. There were a lot of civilians going down that way.

When I got down to where it started to clear up, there were crowds down there on the river. There were some people down there injured. There were some it seemed to be volunteer ambulance people. So I got involved in a little bit of assisting there. There were boats, tugboats pulling up to the river. People were climbing over the railing jumping onto these boats. So there were some cops down there. There were also some firemen. We were also trying to assist with that situation.

That eased up a little bit, and then I started to walk down, I guess, north on that river path, and I was headed up because we had another command post on the other side, I was informed, I was told. Then, as I took a turn on a side street, I guess that might have been Liberty Street, to go back up toward West, toward the towers, that's when the second tower came down. But I was a good distance away from it, so you could see it coming, there was plenty of time to take cover, but there was still that dust cloud.

Then I made my way into some building that was right there and got on a phone because I had lost my cell phone, I had lost my radio, and I got on a phone to try to find out where we were going to regroup. I called my headquarters. I eventually got someone at headquarters and I was told that we were regrouping down by Battery Park, by the old marine, the Fire Department's marine facility there.

But in that building where I had looked for the phone, there were a number of people that had taken shelter there and there seemed to be a lot of -- they were mostly civilians, a lot of women with babies, with children, and there were some EMS people in there assisting. They were making a plan to evacuate these people on some boat that was about to pull up. So I assisted people getting on that boat, and then I walked along the river to Battery Park, where there were a number of Marshals that had regrouped.

We were trying to get a head count to determine who was missing. We determined that at least one of our guys was missing. We worked up some kind of game plan where we would -- we were told by my Chief, I guess, who was at the command post, that we were going to try to locate or determine exactly who was where as to like what companies might have been where to assist in the or to streamline the digging or recovery process.

Then at some point later, I got involved in the arrest of some Saudi Arabian guy who was wearing stolen bunker gear, and that went for several hours into the night with the Terrorist Task Force.

That's about it in a nutshell. I don't remember seeing -- I worked at the morgue, so I pretty much know everyone who was missing, reported missing. I don't remember seeing any of those guys at the scene. So I have no information to offer as far as who might have been operating where.

BATTALION CHIEF BURNS: Okay. Thank you very much for the interview. The time is 3:36 p.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JAMES FODY

Interview Date: 12/26/01

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: The time is 1453 hours. This is Battalion Chief John Malkin of the safety battalion.

I am conducting an interview today with Captain James Fody, F-O-D-Y, covering in Engine Company No. 6, regarding the events of September 11.

Q. What follows is the interview with Captain Fody?

A. On the 11th, I was assigned -- I was a lieutenant at the time, assigned to Engine Company 7, located on Duane street, about seven or eight blocks from the trade center.

I was working that day. I had worked the night before. I was working that day on overtime in Engine Company 9 on Canal Street. I was only there about ten or fifteen minutes. One of my members was out in front of quarters and witnessed the plane come over the city and witnessed the plane hit the building.

Right after that, he came in, informed us an airliner had just struck the World Trade Center tower. I went outside and -- not that I didn't believe him, but somebody tells you something like that, you say, oh, well, you think you saw it, or -- take a look.

So I went outside, and we looked in the direction of the towers, and you could see flames and smoke emanating from the area of the trade center. So we went back inside, and we turned out the company.

Engine 9 is a satellite. The day crew was already in. I took one member from the night crew as an extra chauffeur to drive the second section of the satellite, and we responded to the trade center.

Ladder 6 is also quartered with Engine 9, and they also responded. Captain Jonas was working. We arrived within, I would say, six or seven minutes. I had the chauffeurs position the rigs on West Street and Vesey, which would be the northwest corner of the north tower, Tower 1.

Myself and the three other firefighters entered the lobby. We took roll-ups. We took extra Scott cylinders. I also took a search rope, and I took the oxygen. The members asked me what else should we take. I said, "Give me the oxygen. Maybe we can use that."

And we went in. We reported to Chief Hayden, who had set up a command post. He advised us to just try to pair up with another engine company. I went to the command board. They paired us up with Engine 15. Engine 15 I believe at that time had already entered the stairway, the B stairway, so I reported in to the board. They took down the information, and at the time we entered the B stairway, and we started up the B stairway.

It was a little bit crowded getting into the stairway, but we were able to get into the stairway. Civilians were coming down, and Fire Department units were headed up. The stairway was quite orderly at this time. Pretty much it was only room for two rows of people. Civilians were coming down one side. Fire Department was headed up the other side.

I told the members we are going to have to pace ourselves. Every five floors, we'll take a quick break just to catch our breath, make sure everybody is still together. We took a break on five, very short. We continued up.

I got a little bit ahead of them. At one point there, there was, I believe, a Port Authority detective behind me, who asked me two or three times, "Let me carry something. Let me carry something," because he saw -- so finally, I said, "All right, take the oxygen," and I told him what it was. In case we get separated if he can use it, that's what it is.

Somewhere around the 10th Floor, a little bit above the 10th Floor, I was a little bit ahead of the members, and Captain Jonas gave a Mayday for a member of Engine 9 with chest pains, so I turned around to see they weren't right behind me, and I had to go down about a flight or two, and I found one of my members.

You want names, of course.

Q. Yes.

A. The member was Ray Hayden. He's assigned to Engine 9, and I believe he was either crouching or sitting on the landing probably around the 10th Floor and was in some distress. So we helped him onto the floor, the 10th Floor, and after a minute to two, he insisted he was all right. "I'm okay. I want to continue . I want to continue."

We took a little bit time longer to assess his condition. We took his pulse. We looked at him. He seemed to be all right. We rested a few more minutes, and then we continued on.

We continued on about the 20th Floor. We took another quick break, went in on the floor to catch our breath. As we were picking up our gear again, getting ready to go up again, the building began to shake and sway, and I believe at this time the lights went out, you know, with all that going on.

We didn't know it at the time, but this was, in fact, the south tower collapsing. We just kind of stayed there for a minute to see what was going on. Within a minute or two, I heard a transmission on the radio that the 66th Floor had collapsed. It had collapsed into 65, but the building felt sound at this time. We continued on.

So from 20, we continued up maybe two more flights, somewhere between 22 and 23. We encountered Fire Department members coming down the stairs still in the B stairway, and they told us, "We are getting out. We're evacuating the building."

The order had been given. I didn't hear the order on the radio. I found out later on that it was given by Chief Pfeifer, the first battalion. They were in the lobby when the other building fell, and he had given that order. He may have given it on the command channel. That's why we didn't hear it.

So we left the roll-ups. We left the spare bottles just in order to evacuate quicker. Going down the stairs, it was again quite orderly. There were almost no civilians that we encountered. We did have to stop probably four or five times to allow other members to come in from floors or civilians -- the few civilians that were left coming in from the floors, but it was orderly.

Made it down to the lobby, exited the stairways, and the lobby at this point was pretty much empty. There weren't too many people in the lobby. I did encounter a lieutenant from Engine 212. He came up to me and said, "I may need your help. I can't find any of my guys." So I said okay.

There was still one guy -- I wasn't sure of where one of my guys was, one of the chauffeurs. I didn't know if he had come in the building or he was still outside. I said, "Let me get all my guys together, and I'm going to come back, and we'll help you search for your guys." I knew that he was from Brooklyn. He probably wasn't familiar with the complex there. I had been there, from being -- usually we're second or third due at the towers. I was a little bit more familiar about where we might be able to look for them.

We exited the lobby. We went past where the command center was, which -- there were no more chiefs there. They had all moved, I think across West Street. We went out onto West Street through the windows, which had been blown out from the south tower collapsing, and we turned north on West Street, mainly just because we were headed towards where the rigs were.

We got a little bit past, I believe, Vesey Street, which is the first street north of the north tower. We were in the middle of the street near the divider. We removed our masks and catching our breath trying to -- it was overheated and trying to catch our breath.

Within about two minutes of us being there, the north tower began to collapse, and we turned, and we looked, and we could see it was starting to come down. Somebody nearby me yelled, "It's coming down," which drew my attention it to, that plus the roar, so I just said to the guys, "Let's just run north. You know, just go this way."

Started heading up north, away from, because I knew we were too close, and would it collapse. At this point, I didn't know how far away we were going to get, whether the debris was going to hit us or not. I would say we ran -- I ran maybe 10 or 15 seconds before I looked over my shoulder, and you could see the dust cloud of debris and determined we couldn't out run it, so I'm not sure if I yelled to guys to try to take cover or I just motioned to them. I really couldn't see them that well. At this point, it was obviously chaos.

I had in my mind to try to get behind something, because I didn't know what was going to be in this debris cloud. I didn't know if there was going hot steel rolling down the street or fire ball, or shock wave, whatever.

I ran a little bit further, and I came to a Fire Department suburban parked perpendicular to West Street and just dove behind that, and within a second or two, the blast from the collapse hit the rig.

The street went completely dark. Very difficult to breathe. I was covered with dust and soot, and the concussion blast actually rocked the vehicle that we were leaning against. Probably three or four other members also dove behind the same vehicle. One landed on top of me, and one landed next to me, and we just stayed there until it settled down and we could see and breathe again.

I was kind of on the bottom of the pile, so I was trying to get somebody else who was there to see, because I didn't know how long it was going to be like this, see if there was a mask available inside the rig. It was a chief's car. Maybe there might be a mask there. We weren't able to get into the apparatus.

When things started to settle, I got up, and I looked around. It took me awhile to find everybody again that was in my unit. The time frame is -- I kind of lost it, to give you the time frame, because things I thought took five minutes may have taken an hour and vice versa. We probably took close to an hour to assemble everybody, find the other chauffeurs, and eventually we reassembled.

We moved further north up West Street, got together. I was kind of just waiting to see if there were any chiefs that were going to give orders or establish an assembly point. There really wasn't much of that going on yet. What we did hear within probably a another half hour or so, maybe twenty minutes, transmissions from Ladder Company 6, who was trapped in the building after the collapse, but they were still -- eventually they all made it out, of course, but being with members who were quartered with them, they wanted to go see what they could do for them.

There really wasn't much we could do. It was a pile. We heard over the next half hour, hour or so, transmissions back and forth from Captain Jonas about their location, and Chief Blaich trying to figure out where they were. They knew where they were. They were in the B stairway, but there was --

Q. When you look at the pile, where was the B stairway? So how to locate them -- how did that go? What mechanism would you use?

A. And just, you know, trying to climb over the pile at this point, seeing if it was -- eventually, we were able to get the pumper going. It was supplied, I think, by a relay from the boat, fire boat, on the river, supplied it, and somebody found access to the B stairway through the parking garage.

There was an entrance on Vesey Street, and we attempted to stretch a line through there to reach them from the bottom, but it was too much debris. It was completely packed with debris from the bottom. Must have taken three or four hours, and they extricated themselves from -- I know they were trapped with 39 engine, and 39 engine also got out, along with a Chief Picciotto was also with them. They were in communications.

There was also a chief there that didn't make it, Chief Prunty, I believe. He had covered down by us, s I knew him. I didn't know that he was with them at the time. I didn't find that out till later, but I know that he was communicating with 39 engine before he succumbed.

I'm trying to get the time frame right. After that, we were there quite late. We were there until about nine or ten o'clock at night, and eventually we got the rig. The rig was damaged, but drivable, and the members of -- myself and the other members of 9 returned to Canal Street, quarters at Canal Street along with a few other members, and I couldn't tell you what companies they were from.

After that, I went home. I returned after -- about midnight, I returned to my quarters, Engine 7, spent the night there, and the next day I went -- I went home to see my family in the early hours of the next day between nine and twelve, and I went back that night. I spent the next three or four days, just whenever we could get down to the pile and --

Q. Everybody got out okay from 9?

A. Everybody in 9 engine survived. Everybody from 6 engine -- I mean 6 truck survived, miraculously, and everybody from 7 and 1, where I was assigned, survived.

Q. Unbelievable.

A. Unbelievable, yeah. I know 7 made it up as high as the about the 30th Floor, 30 or 31 with -- Captain Tardio was working. I think he had three guys with him.

Q. The intention of the chiefs giving the orders more or less to engine companies initially was take your roll-ups, and you were going to fight the fire. Pretty much that's the way it looked, right?

A. Yeah.

Q. In the initial stages, that was basically the intent, right?

A. They were basically, I would assume, treating it as a high-rise fire.

Q. As a high-rise fire, yeah.

A. A big fire. My thoughts going up the stairs was I didn't know if we were going to put it out.

Q. Right.

A. But I assumed that we could get close enough that, you know, people were trapped, and we had to extinguish fire to get to them, or to keep a stairway clear or --

Q. What would you say the chances of getting to the 85th Floor, the 86th Floor, with these roll-ups, the bunker gear, a mask, an extra bottle, without the elevators? What are our chances?

A. Looking back now, practically zero. If the building -- and I couldn't -- I don't think you could find a person there that day that thought the building was going to come down.

Q. Right.

A. You probably heard that.

Q. Absolutely.

A. You probably won't hear anybody say that they really thought they weren't going to go in because it was going to come down. That was it was the furthest thought from their mind.

At one point, I figured we'll get as close as we can get. When we reach the point of exhaustion, maybe other companies coming in would be able to come up with only their bunker gear and pick up the roll-ups and continue, pick up the roll-ups and maybe even our masks, and be able to continue, or if we got close enough to fight the fire, they would be behind us, but it was going to be -- as it went on, it was going to be more of just a rescue evacuation and not really fighting fire.

Q. When you were in the lobby, did you notice the elevators, what the condition of the elevators was?

Was there any fire in the elevator shafts? Did you notice the elevator to any extent?

A. I didn't see fire in the elevator shafts. There was a good deal of soot, like a white soot all through the lobby. A couple of the doors of the elevators were buckled, so there was some kind of explosion or fire in there. There were -- in the vestibule between the outer doors and the inner doors, there were two civilian bodies burned. There was nothing we could do for them at that point, you know. I assumed something came down and just burned them. They might have been in the elevator or near the elevator and stumbled as far as they got.

I heard reports that there was one elevator working that some guys used. There were no elevators by the time we got there. All the elevators were out. It was one of the first things that was established. Elevators were not working.

If we were going to do anything, we were going to go from the stairs. That's pretty much it.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: That's pretty much it.

I thank Captain Fody for this interview. This concludes the interview and it's 1511 hours, and that's it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER EDWARD MECNER

Interview Date: December 26, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: It's 1609 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview at this time with fireman first grade Edward Mecner, Engine 5. The interview concerns the events of September 11th, 2001. We are in the office at Engine 5. There is nobody else in the office. What follows now is the interview.

A. I was getting off a 24. I worked Monday morning a tour, and I was on mutual I think Monday night. I was supposed to be getting off Tuesday morning at about 8:20 or 8:15 -- maybe about 8:00 Lieutenant Mitchell asked if there's a bagel shop. We got some bagels; we sat down.

Approximately 8:30 we got a run. Lieutenant Paul Mitchell was relieved, as was Firefighter Burnside from Ladder 20. They had early relief. Someone came in already. We responded to a run at 8:30 on Irving Place and 19th Street.

I think it was a 10-33, smoke in the area, some general false alarm or something.

From there we were directed -- they said that there was an explosion at the Trade Center. We were directed to go directly there.

I was the chauffeur that day. I started driving up 14th Street. I was going to turn left on Broadway. The member who ended up being missing, Firefighter Delvalle, said to take the west side. So I continued up 14th Street.

As we approached Sixth Avenue when you look south, you could see a big cloud of smoke, and at every big intersection, Seventh Avenue and Eighth Avenue, so forth, going West down 14th Street, you could see a big plume of smoke. So we knew this was something very serious.

We got on the west side, and we made it down in the general area of downtown Manhattan and the Trade Center area. We parked the rig on West Street maybe three blocks north of Vesey. There were other rigs there, so we couldn't really get much further.

The members of Engine 5 grabbed their rollups and irons, extra cylinders, which is procedure for a high-rise fire, and they proceeded down West Street going towards the north tower.

At that point I put my gear on out of the chauffeur's compartment. I grabbed a spare set of irons. I went down and I saw a chauffeur from 15 Engine and asked if he needed any help. He was on West and I think Vesey Street. He said he's okay. All the chauffeurs seemed to be okay.

So I caught up with Engine 5, and we proceeded up I think stairway A. On approximately the third floor, someone said to go over and cross over to stairway C, that there's not as many people coming down the stairs, it will be easier to make our way up.

We did that on about the third floor. We headed up to the tenth floor. I think we took a short break. We went up, and we stopped on the 13th floor while everybody stopped and took a rest on 13. There was a water cylinder, and we all took a drink of water. Everybody said we're ready to go up again, so we started going up.

We made it as far as 19. One of our members, Derek Brogan, started complaining of chest pains. We stopped at 19 and rested a moment. He said he felt better. We made our way up to approximately the 23rd floor, where we stopped again. He started having recurrent chest pains.

That's where I also saw some members of Engine 10 that I knew by name and a couple members of Ladder 9. One of them was also having some difficulty breathing and chest pains.

Also at that point I guess someone called for Port Authority ESU. I guess the ESU Port Authority guys brought up some oxygen, and I believe they gave it to Don Casey of 9 Truck, who I saw. I saw Bruce Springstead from 9 Truck. Engine 10 members, I saw Mitch Castiglione and another member, I can't remember his name, all who made it out of the building, because I saw them later on.

While we were on the 23rd floor, at one point I took off Don Casey's coat. I saw that he was having a hard time breathing. Derek's coat we took off, his turnout, because he was having the chest pains. I figured just to get the heat off him. It was pretty hot carrying all the stuff up. We found some water.

Then within a minute or two, it sounded like a missile was about to come through the windows, I guess maybe on every floor, but it sounded like it was going to come right through the 23rd floor. Everyone automatically just hit the deck, like you do in a war movie.

We heard a crash and the ground shaking, and everybody kind of like -- when we realized we were okay, everybody kind of got up and were wondering what was going on.

In a minute or two -- there was an order to evacuate. I don't know who gave the order. It was a verbal order. It wasn't over the radio. I didn't have my radio at that point.

Q. Where was your radio?

A. I left it on the rig when I was changing into my gear. I just put it there. In a hurry to catch up with the rest of Engine 5, I left it in the rig. I believe later on Richie Carletti, who came with Tom Lynn from Engine 5, they found 5 Engine and they saw my radio and he knew when he saw the radio and that the chauffeur's compartment was empty that I went in also.

At that point after the crash and the evacuate order, we began to descend the stairs. At about the fourth floor, there was a blockage. They couldn't make it across. Someone said to follow him, go across back to stairway A, I believe it was.

We crossed the hallway on maybe the fourth floor or third, something like that, to stairway A. We got down to the lobby level. Lieutenant Bohack was there, Derek Brogan, Jimmy Andruzzi and myself.

Now we were looking for Gerard Gorman, who was on the 23rd floor. We saw him with us, and he didn't come down. We waited about a minute, and Lieutenant Bohack gave us an order to get out of the building.

We headed out on the west side towards West Street. There was either a construction worker or ironworker waving us out of the building, constantly looking up, ready to run at any second to get out of the building. So we didn't look up. We just ran towards West Street and where we had Engine 5 parked. So we ran in that direction.

(Interruption.)

A. At that point we walked up towards the rig, and then I believe they said to start running because the building was coming down. So we ran again towards the rig. I guess the south tower fell at that point. Maybe it already fell. I'm not sure.

Q. The south tower was the one that fell and shook while you guys were upstairs.

A. That must have come down already.

Q. That came down.

A. So at that point the other building was getting ready to come down, and they said run. So we ran towards the rig. I got in the rig. I had to back it out of the street, the way it was parked. I couldn't see, because it was kind of cloudy and there were still people running.

Then Rich Carletti got in. My eyes were full of dust and stuff, so he got in and he backed the rig out. We parked it up another two blocks north. I don't remember the street now.

I made sure --

CHIEF MALKIN: I have to stop the interview to remove cell phones that are here. It's 1617 hours right now.

(Pause.)

CHIEF MALKIN: 1618 hours the interview resumes.

A. The north tower started to come down, and we ran north maybe at this point five blocks north of Vesey Street. I saw Derek Brogan in an ambulance, the member that was having the chest pains. I asked him for his home number. I told him I would call his wife if I can.

I walked up the street with some civilians. I was just assisting them. We were walking up, and I was asking them their names and so forth. People were trying to get through on cell phones. They couldn't.

I got Derek's wife's number. I wrote it down. I asked him if he saw Gerard. He said he did see Gerard Gorman, the member we were looking for that was on the 23rd floor with us. He said that he's also in an ambulance and he was taken to the hospital; I don't know which one.

I was able to get to a factory building or there was a business -- I don't recall what it was. They let me use their phone, and I got through to Derek's wife. I left a message saying he's okay, that he's in St. Vincent's, he's okay.

Q. You talked directly to her?

A. No.

Q. You think it was a machine?

A. I think it was a machine. So I just left a message saying Derek's okay. He's being taken to St. Vincent's Hospital, but he's okay. I think I asked for her to call if she gets the message, because we're having trouble getting through, to give my wife a call and say it's okay. I gave her the number. I believe I also was able to get through to my brother-in-law and tell him call everybody and say I'm okay.

I came back out of the building. I found Lieutenant Bohack at the rig, Rich Carletti, Jimmy Andruzzi. We repositioned the rig on Church Street and I think around Liberty. We were looking for some hydrants that we could use. Most of the hydrants were out. Our rig was one of the few that was in operation at that point.

We parked near I think Brooks Brothers. There's a store on Church Street. We found a hydrant that was out. There was a tower ladder trying to get in position, so we were assisting with that. When we couldn't find any good hydrants, we walked the perimeter of both towers, looking to see if there was someone in charge, something to do.

At that point Jimmy said he wanted to find his brother. He did see him, saw that he was okay. So then he came back and stayed with us the rest of the time.

For the rest of the day we were mostly around Church Street in front of Brooks Brothers. I think it's south of Vesey Street a block or two. We were generally in that area trying to get water out of maybe some of the standpipes in the buildings. Then they said that the 47 story hotel building -- I think it's number seven -- was about to come down.

We were around for the rest of the afternoon. At about 5:30 that did come down. We were in the area, so we ran down the street again. We ran east down whatever street we were on and ran east towards Broadway.

Q. Would the map help you locate what street were on? Let me show you this map. This is the north tower. This is Vesey Street, and seven is here. So where were you in relation to seven when it came down?

A. Well, Trinity and Church actually turn into the same street. We were I guess right around Fulton. We might have been on Fulton or Dey Street. We were generally in this area for a lot of the time later on in the afternoon. I guess my rig might have been parked around Warren Street when we first arrived, maybe Murray.

Q. So when seven started to collapse, you guys ran east on Fulton or Dey Street?

A. Fulton or Dey, and we met up around Broadway. At that point it was maybe around 6, after 6, 6:30. We kind of had enough. So I asked the officer if we could get ready to go back. At that point there were plenty of units there.

Jimmy Andruzzi and myself were there at that point for -- well, we worked 24 hours, and plus we were there for another 10 hours or so. That's going into 30-something hours of non-stop.

Q. You were tired?

A. Yeah. Plus we were in the north tower, and that collapsed. Now this other building is telling you run for your life again. I think we had enough.

Q. You didn't want to wait for the next one?

A. We were there for the two of them. We said at that time we're tired, and they weren't really going to get much more out of us than what we can give.

Q. What did the officer say?

A. He said we're ready to go.

Q. Did you go?

A. Yeah, maybe in about the next 45 minutes. Tommy Lynn was there at that point, Rich Carletti from Engine 5, a couple other members from Engine 5 that arrived sometime in the early afternoon. Wherever they were operating, I don't know. There were units from all over the city. It was hard to determine who was who and where everyone was.

Then we came back.

Q. Came back to quarters?

A. Yeah, in I think a police van or something. They escorted about 15 of us. We all piled in. When we came back to quarters, it was maybe 8:00 or something, 7:30, 8, and that was the end of the day.

Q. I want to ask you, somebody in the lobby of the north tower ordered Engine 5 to start going upstairs. Were you with Engine 5 at that point in the lobby of the north tower?

A. I just caught up with them.

Q. Just caught up with them?

A. Yeah.

Q. So you didn't see who the chief was that gave the orders to go up or who they spoke to?

A. No. I was just kind of in a hurry to catch up with the members.

Q. You caught up with them. They had been given the orders to start going upstairs?

A. Right.

Q. And you followed along with them. Okay.

Lobby conditions. Did you notice anything unusual in the lobby when you were there? Was there any fire in the lobby?

A. No.

Q. Did you see the banks of elevators, what the conditions was over that way?

A. I didn't look to see. I just tried to catch up. I saw them and they were headed towards I guess it was stairway A at that point. I just caught up with them and wanted to stay pretty much with them.

Q. Do you remember seeing any other units that were with you or that you passed in the stairway on the way up?

A. The only units I kind of recall seeing were the ones that were on the 19th floor and the 23rd floor. I saw a couple members of Engine 10 and the other members of Ladder 9 and a few Port Authority ESU units. That was about it. I don't remember seeing any other companies that I remember at this point.

That was it.

Q. That's about it?

A. Yeah. I think like Manny Delvalle at some point maybe around the tenth floor, after the tenth or 13th floor, I don't remember seeing him on 19 or 23. I think he was assisting a civilian. The last time I saw him was maybe around the 13th floor.

Q. Is he missing?

A. He's missing, right.

Q. On the way up, he stayed behind, assisting a civilian, and you got separated?

A. I guess so, because when we were walking up the stairs, all turnouts look the same. You're just kind of walking up the line, and civilians were coming down the stairway as well. I asked a few what floor they came from, and I recall someone saying 84. One of the civilians said 84.

I saw a restaurant worker. I asked him if he worked at Windows on the World, and he said no, he works in the sky lobby. I guess there's a restaurant, someplace up on 44 or 46, wherever the sky lobby is.

Q. You guys were going up the A stairway, that you recall?

A. We started off I believe in the A. At some point someone said there's less people in the C stairway, so we crossed over on around the third or fourth floor to the C stairway. Then we went up.

Coming down it was pretty much the same thing. We started down I believe in C, and then on the third or fourth floor there was a problem. There was something stuck in a hallway. We couldn't get down, couldn't continue down that stairwell. We crossed over to the A. Someone said this way, and we went down to A.

Then we went to the lobby where we waited for -- we were waiting for Gerard Gorman at that point. He was the last guy we saw that wasn't with us. Then Lieutenant Bohack gave the order to get out of the building. We waited another minute, and then we did. A few minutes later it came coming down.

That was pretty much it.

CHIEF MALKIN: It is now 1627 hours. I want to thank Fireman Mecner for this interview. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM GREEN

Interview Date: December 26, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: 1400 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Fireman First Grade William Green of Engine 6. We're at the quarters of Engine 6. There's nobody else in the room. The interview concerns the events of September 11th, 2001. What follows is the interview.

A. We were returning from an EMS run, and we pulled up to the intersection of Rose Street and Avenue of the Finest. That's right next to One Police Plaza. That's when we heard a loud explosion.

We were looking around. We didn't know where it came from. It was loud. A police officer pointed to the north tower of the World Trade Center. We looked up there, and we saw a hole, maybe about three stories wide, a jagged hole, somewhere in the eighties in the north wall of One World Tower. We thought it was a bomb.

We started responding. Lieutenant gave a second alarm because the exterior skin was damaged, and I believe he also transmitted a 10-60. We started responding to the World Trade Center.

We had to make a left on Gold and a right on Beekman. The firehouse is located at 49 Beekman Street. Two firefighters came out from the house. They were scheduled to work a day tour, Firefighter Bill Johnston and Firefighter Bob Emans. They jumped on the rig, and we started responding to One World Trade.

When we got over to Church Street and Vesey, the street was packed with people. There was actually people gridlock in the street, thousands of people. The apparatus actually had to slowly plow the people out of the way so we could respond.

The rig stopped first on Vesey right in front of Seven World Trade. There was a lot of debris on the ground there. Then we continued to the front of One World Trade. We made a left on West Street, heading in the wrong direction of the northbound lanes on West Street.

The chauffeur positioned the apparatus right underneath what would be the north pedestrian covered bridge that connects Six World Trade with One World Financial Center. The chauffeur took a hydrant, and we grabbed our rollups off the rig and proceeded into One World Trade.

There were people jumping out of the building at that point. They looked like they were landing on top of Six World Trade. Everyone was saying, "Let's get in. Let's get in before we get hit by the people." We ran into the building. It was me, Paul Beyer, Bill Johnston, Tom Holohan, and we had a covering officer, Lieutenant O'Hagan.

We entered in through the front doors of the lobby. The lobby was screwed. All the windows were already broken. Marble walls that surrounded the elevator shaft, they were cracked and broken.

Lieutenant O'Hagan, he reported in to the fire command station. We stood fast where we normally stand fast, basically right by the core there or just outside the core. There were some turnstiles that you had to go through to get like towards the core.

Lieutenant O'Hagan reported in. In a few moments he came up and said, "Okay, we're going to head up the B staircase." I'm still thinking a bomb went off.

I'm sorry, I forgot something. When we pulled up in front of -- when we first saw the building with the hole, when we saw the hole, it looked like a jagged hole about three stories high and wide. A bunch of papers had flown out. We thought it was a bomb.

When we got over there, just before I entered the building, I took a look up and I could see two exposures, almost three exposures. There were multiple floors on fire on three exposures I could see.

Just as we started towards the elevators, we were going to go for the B staircase. There were handy talky transmissions saying it's confirmed, airplane crash on the 86th floor.

So I thought to myself possibly it was an accident with a small Cessna or something. Or possibly it was a terrorist attack, they had a Cessna packed with TNT. I did not know it was a jetliner, nor did, I think, any members of my crew.

We headed for the B staircase. It was pretty much in the center of the core. We had to go through these turnstiles. I remember there was a lot of rubble on the floor there. There was elevator doors ajar. There were elevator doors missing. I could see an elevator car twisted in the shaft.

I remember I looked up at the ceiling because I thought maybe the ceiling got charred because there was a bunch of rubble on the floor. It was about three feet high in the middle. The ceiling wasn't charred. So I had thought the floor blew up.

I was telling guys afterwards the floor must have blown up. Maybe there was a bomb downstairs or something. But I came to learn that that was bodies. We had to climb over and around this pile.

Q. A pile of bodies, in the lobby?

A. I didn't recognize it as bodies. I don't know if my mind didn't see it.

Q. Burned?

A. Burned.

Q. Near the elevators?

A. It looked like rubble to me.

Q. Right.

A. Right outside the elevators, in the core. We had to climb up and around it -- it was like three feet high in the middle -- to enter the B staircase.

We entered the B staircase. I believe on the first story it was like a metal security gate on the first story. It's like someone couldn't hop up the stairs, and there was a gate that was open.

People were coming down. People were evacuating. We were heading up. The staircase was narrow. It was only two people wide. We were telling them, "Stay to the right. Stay to the right." We started heading up. I remember water flowing down the stairs like a rapid river, maybe the first ten stories. Then the water seemed to stop.

We were heading up, telling people to stay to the right. People were cheering us, saying, "The firemen are here. The firemen are here." They're patting us on the back. The higher we got, we started seeing injured people.

People were burned.

Approximately when we got to the 14th floor I heard a handy talky transmission, "Another plane! Another plane!" A little rumble. "Another plane just hit the south tower." That's what I heard on the handy talky.

We continued up. At the 17th floor my company was waiting for me, took a blow. We went into the floor. People were coming down. Other firemen were maybe behind us going up. They were taking blows at different floors.

My whole company regrouped on that 17th floor. We uncovered a little bit. We were sweating, and we were fatigued already. There was a vending machine there with a big glass panel with a bunch of waters in it and stuff, and guys went looking for change. So I took the axe, and I smashed the glass. It took about two or three hard blows. We were laughing.

Q. Oh, you're the guy they're looking for. No, just kidding. Go ahead.

A. We were laughing. We were laughing. We took waters, passed them out to brothers on the floor, passed them out to civilians on the stairs.

A few moments later we started continuing up again. We regrouped at the 31st floor. We took a longer blow there. When we were going up, people were handing us bottles of water too. The higher we would get up, there were some severely burnt people. People were helping people down.

At the 31st floor -- I was the last one to get there, again. The company took a blow. Lieutenant Atlas from 10 Engine popped his head in the door and said, "Come on, guys. We've got to make a push." Tom Holohan and Billy Johnston, they had a little bit of their wind, and Lieutenant O'Hagan. They said they were going start. Me and Paul probably needed a little more of a blow.

So they started in the stairs again. An officer came in from the A stairway, which was towards exposure 3. He came out of the A stairway and was asking me and Paul, "Where is the C stairway? Where is the C stairway?"

So Paul went towards the exposure 1 side of the building, and I went towards the exposure 4 side of the building. The C stairway was towards exposure 1, towards the front of the building.

He said that they wanted -- I don't remember what company this officer was from. I think it might have been 5 Truck. I'm kind of fuzzy on that. They wanted civilians in the C stair. Rescue 1 was also taking a blow on this floor. The whole company was taking a blow with us.

At this point the whole corridor filled up with civilians that were in the B stairway, the attack stairway, and they were evacuating to the C stairway. Then it cleared up that stairway pretty good.

A short while later Paul realized his helmet was missing. Rescue had left. They started up again.

Q. What's Paul's last name?

A. Paul Beyer. Paul realized his helmet was missing. We were looking for his helmet. I said, "You know, maybe someone from rescue took it by mistake, you know," because guys were uncovering and they put their stuff back on.

Then I was thinking maybe one of the civilians took it. But I come to find out, talking to other guys, that there was an Engine 6 helmet on the 17th floor where we took the blow. He forgot his helmet down there and he didn't realize it and we didn't realize it.

So he grabbed a roll-up and started in the stairs again. Oh, on the 31st floor we decided -- we had four rollups with us. We said let's take two rollups between four guys. And we left two rollups on the 31st floor.

So Billy Johnston and Tommy Holohan grabbed one. Paulie probably grabbed the other one, and I was buttoning up, getting ready. I was really fatigued.

I remember on the 31st floor there were two guys from 10 Truck, and there was a Port Authority police officer with a Scott pack, a uniform and a Scott pack, and he had medical supplies. I think the guys were having chest pains, and he was tending to them.

Paulie probably was worried about me, and he was saying, "Are you all right?" I said, "I'm all right. I'm all right." He told the guy, "Oh, check him out. Check him out." The guy asked me, "Are you all right?" I said, "I'm all right. I'm all right."

I entered the staircase. I started going up. I got to approximately the 37th floor. I had the backup position. I had a handy talky. The building violently shook like an earthquake, tossing us around. I donned my mask. I didn't know what.

Then someone opened the door from the 36th floor and said Two World Trade Center just fell down. I'm thinking it's one of these, it fell like on an angle, fell across many blocks. I didn't know it pancaked. The way the building shook, I didn't doubt him that it had fallen completely.

It might have been about 30 seconds later I had heard a handy talky transmission. I believe it was "Mayday! Mayday! Evacuate the building. Evacuate the building."

Q. On Channel 1?

A. On Channel 1. That's the channel I was on.

Then everybody was saying, "You got that? You got that? Evacuate the building. Evacuate the building." On the handy talky everybody is going -- I turned around and started going down. You could only walk. You would get a couple of steps, and it would stop. Maybe you would get a couple more steps, and it would stop.

Q. Full of people?

A. All firemen. I don't remember civilians.

Q. So there were so many that they were bunching up? You would walk, stop, walk stop?

A. Yeah, walk, stop. It was like people gridlock again. Everybody was calling everybody on the radio: This unit to this position. This unit to this position. I was trying to get my chance in. I called and I believe I spoke to Tom Holohan control, "I'm working my way down. We're evacuating. We're working our way down."

You get a couple of steps or a couple of floors, and it would stop. Guys were filing in from every floor. I was on the outside of the stairway, so as you would come down each stairway, that's where the floors were feeding in.

At one point there was an opening on the inside of the stairway. I realized let me move over there, because this lane is slow. I think that's what saved my life is that it was on the inside of the stairway as you come to each floor, they filed in on the outside of the stairway. Guys that I had seen coming down filing in on floors didn't make it. In hindsight looking at it now, I think that's what saved my life.

I worked my way down. When I got to the lower floors in the single digits, I had contact with my company officer. He was making his way down. I don't know what floor he was on. Around the fourth floor I passed this civilian. He might have been 450 pounds. He was huge, a man. I don't know what his age was, but he was huge, 450 pounds. He was taking baby steps like this.

I walked right past him like all the other firemen. I felt like a heel when I'm walking past him, and I'm thinking to myself as I'm walking past, what does this guy think of me, you know? I mean, I know now I couldn't have -- it would have blocked up the stairway more. I think it was about the fourth floor.

The next landing, the third floor, I remember two firemen carrying a woman. I believe it was a Caucasian woman. I don't think it was 6 Truck because that woman looked large and she was dark-skinned. I believe this was a smaller woman, from what I remember. I believe she was a Caucasian. It looked like they had it, they were making their way down.

I continued to file down. I got out of the stairs, into the core of the lobby. I had to climb over that pile of rubble again. There was some Port Authority personnel in there. He was pointing us towards the fire command station.

The lobby was really screwed now. There was dust and debris everywhere. I saw the front doors. There was debris all over the front doors that we entered. We walked towards the fire command station, which was on the exposure 1/exposure 2 wall. There was no personnel at the fire command station. I said, "Oh, this is bad."

We went up to the window. I was with a group of about 20 firemen. I don't remember who it was that was with me. We had to exit out a window, the last window on the exposure 1, close to exposure 2.

There was somebody outside. I don't know if he was a member. He was 75, maybe 100 feet away from the building. He was covered in dust. He pointed up and he held up. We knew that meant something was coming down. We waited. I kept looking back. More guys are filing down. There's a whole string of guys filing down from there. Some people jumped. Some people landed right there.

He said, "Come on." I stepped out of this window. I remember I started walking out the building. I was walking. I remember I looked to the right. There was a pile there. [redacted] I remember I looked to the left and saw what was the Marriott Hotel, and there was a giant V cut. From the top floor to like the third floor was missing. There was a lot of rubble out in the street.

I remember I was walking out away from the complex to West Street, and I could see across the street on the steps on World Financial Center what looked like some kind of command post was set up. I remember I saw 6 Engine there, 6 Engine where we had parked it. No personnel around it.

I don't know if someone yelled "Go north" or if I heard a voice "Go north," but guys were going each direction. I went north, with a bunch of other guys too. I walked under the foot bridge, started heading north. I got to Vesey Street. I kind of crossed Vesey Street onto the southbound -- I'm sorry, to Vesey and West. I continued up West, but I kind of diagonally crossed into the southbound lanes of West Street coming down.

I got maybe a third of a block, half of a block up there, and I'm looking back, walking slow, waiting for my guys to catch up, and someone said, "It's falling." I saw the guy that yelled it, and he was far away. He was far away.

Q. Back towards the buildings?

A. No, he was further away from the buildings, further north and further west. He pointed up. He said, "It's falling." I looked, and it looked like to me that it was starting to tip at a 45 degree angle right towards me, the antenna. But you don't see that in the video. But I've seen one shot over and over and over. They play it on the news. I guess it started to pancake, and then at one point it started to tip. It looked like it was coming right towards me.

To backtrack, in this state when the order came to evacuate, people started ditching their equipment, their tools, taking their turnout coats off. I was buttoned up. I had my turnout coat on; I had my mask.

I was trying to run. I was so fatigued. I felt like the Michelin man. I was trying to run up West Street. I made a left onto, I don't know what street it was. I think it might have been Murray. There was a baseball field there.

Q. You were north of Vesey. You're coming up to Murray. And there was a baseball field somewhere there?

A. Yeah. It might have been this street. There was a baseball field here, and it's a pretty big baseball field. It's two baseball fields wide.

Q. It's probably Murray street, just north of Murray street and just west of West Street.

A. Right. That's exactly where it was. I entered what appeared to be the outfield. I was trying not to look back. I was just trying to run, but I felt like I wasn't getting anywhere. I could start seeing this cloud coming at me.

I was just able to take my helmet off and get my face piece on and just get my helmet back on without snapping it, and I felt a blast. It might have knocked me to my knee and then I got up. It was all orange. It was papers on fire. I could see it was papers on fire. I could feel a little heat on the back of my neck and my ears. It surrounded me and then all of a sudden it just turned black, black ash.

I'm expecting, all right, something solid is going to hit me. Something solid is going to hit me. I'm pelted with small particles, but I'm thinking the antenna is going to skew me in the back.

The first couple of breaths I took from my mask were concrete, dust, crap, so I was choking in my mask. But I knew it was a better environment than outside. I could see that rolling black stuff.

I turned on my flashlight. It only shined about two inches. I knew I couldn't stay there. I walked across this baseball field blind like this, like a baby, with my hands stretched out in front of me. I walked a long time. I thought my air was going to run out. I couldn't run because I couldn't see where I was going. Even though it was a baseball field, what's going to be in there; right? But you don't think.

The direction I chose was I guess a diagonal direction, and I walked a long time and stumbling a little. The next thing I felt was the back of the batting cage of the baseball field. I felt the angle of the fence. I knew it was a batting cage.

So I started working my way to the right, and I found a lower fence and I said to myself this must be the dugout fence. So I worked my way all the way down it, around it, back down the fence. There's still no visibility. Then I felt the angle of the back of it. I said, all right, I'm at the back of the batting cage.

I was wondering if there's going to be a way out of this park now, you know. Some smoke started to lift, and I could see there was a break in the fence. I took my face piece off. My eyes were all irritated. When I came out, it was on North End Avenue, I believe, of that baseball field. North End Avenue.

Q. Right over here?

A. I think it was right here or right here. I'm not sure if it's Park Place or Wagner.

Q. We're looking on the map at North End Avenue at Park Place or Warren Street.

A. There was a news cameraman there. He's taking video of me. I'm kind of waving him off. I was pissed off he was taking video of me.

Two police officers came up to me and walked me up to the corner of Warren Street and North End Avenue, and they knelt me down and they poured a gallon of water over my face to wash my eyes out. My face was covered with dust. There was a police officer then that said there's a triage center in Stuyvesant High School. He escorted me down North End Avenue to Chambers Street where Stuyvesant High School is located.

I walked into the lobby of this high school, and there were hundreds of people there. I turned around and I walked back out. I felt I was all right. I wanted to recoup my company. I started walking down Chambers Street, and some EMS girl came chasing after me. She said, "Oh, come in. Come in." I said, "No, I'm all right. I'm all right." She said, "Are you sure? You don't look all right." I was covered in the dust. I said, "I'm all right."

I tried contacting my company on the handy talky. I went down to West Street. I started regrouping with other companies in my battalion: Ladder 1, 7 Engine. I saw the captain of 7 Engine, Captain Tardio. He said he had two members missing. I said, "I'm missing everybody."

I was trying to call my guys. There were no answers. Everybody started giving maydays, maydays, maydays. You couldn't get control. We had a chief who was trying to get control. "We've got a mayday. Let's get control." There was no control of the radio.

All of a sudden a wall of people come running up. They were afraid another building was going to collapse. I thought I was going to be trampled to death. I tried to run too. I maybe ran like a block north more. Then I knelt down. I was totally shot.

A short while lady an Army paramedic came up to me. He said, "Are you all right?" I said, "Yeah, I'm all right, just I feel cold." He said, "It's a warm day." I remembered it was a beautiful day. And I was freezing.

So he starts asking me questions. I was overweight. "Do you have shortness of breath?" Yeah, I had shortness of breath. He thought I was having a heart attack. I got scared. I thought I was having a heart attack too. He gave me a nitroglycerin pill. He flagged down two EMS guys.

They got an ambulance with the windows blown out. It had no equipment in it, just a stretcher. They put me on the stretcher. They brought me to St. Vincent's Hospital. They deconned me outside. They brought me into the emergency room.

It seemed like a whole team was working on me. After evaluating me and looking for injuries, they said they don't think I had a cardiac episode but I inhaled a lot of crap. They admitted me to St. Vincent's Hospital. I was there for two days.

Late in the evening is when several members of my company found me in the hospital. Apparently I was among the missing. I didn't know.

First at the door I told the nurse call my firehouse. She had contact with someone, but it probably wasn't someone from my company. It was someone -- who knows -- to let them know I was in the hospital and all right.

The captain and several members came. It was Captain Sakowich. He said, "We gotta know where you were operating, because no one knows nothing." I basically described where we were in the B staircase. It was pretty much in the center of the core. It was on the left side of the elevators, but it was pretty much in the core and we were working our way down, you know.

When we were on 31, we started going up. We tried to make the 44th floor. There was a report of an elevator on the 44th floor that went into the 60s. So I gave him all the information where we were.

CHIEF MALKIN: We'll have to break for one minute. It's 1429 hours. There's a phone call.

(Interruption.)

CHIEF MALKIN: The interview resumes at 1431 hours.

A. I think I got to the hospital like approximately 11:30 a.m., maybe 12 noon. They had me up in a room by 12:30. They contacted my firehouse at 1 p.m. The nurse contacted my wife. I went on the phone with my wife and I told her, "Just go home. It's a war down here." Of course she didn't. She came down to the hospital, and she stayed with me like the next 30 hours.

Like I said, Captain Sakowich in the evening -- it might have been 10, 11; it might have been midnight -- came to the hospital with several members from my company. He said, "Where were you operating? We've got to know where you're operating. No one knows nothing."

So I told him where we were in that B staircase, explained the whole thing to him. I guess I was kind of emotional. [redacted]

So they left. They didn't tell me they didn't find any of the guys yet, but I could see it in their eyes. I knew that they didn't find anybody else.

I turned on the TV then. I think it's about midnight. Only one channel came in, Channel 2, and it was very fuzzy. That's when I learned that the planes were struck by jetliners. I never thought it was jetliners, you know.

[redacted]

[redacted]

Another Lieutenant Atlas, Lieutenant Atlas's brother, came in and was asking me had I seen his name. He said, "You know my brother?" I said, "Yeah, 10 Engine." I said, "I believe he was above me. I don't think he made it." [redacted]

[redacted]

I was released from the hospital Thursday afternoon. I came to the firehouse. That's when I learned the four guys I entered the building with were missing, and they told me an extensive search was being done.

Two retired members brought me home that night. The next morning a retired member picked me up, we came in, and I went down to ground zero and tried to help with the line on the pile. It really wasn't good for me. I was coughing a lot. I had a paper mask for protection. You know the story.

Everybody was kind of upset because we were working where Three World Trade Center was. I said the guys are going to be where one was. But they assured me that, no, they were working there earlier and they needed some cranes to move some stuff out of the way so they could get in there more.

I guess that's about it.

Q. That's about it. Let me ask you something.

A. Sure.

Q. When you went in the lobby and you talked about the elevator doors that all, some were blown? What did they look like?

A. There were elevator doors that were missing.

Q. Missing.

A. There were elevator doors that were ajar.

Q. Right.

A. I could see an elevator car twisted in the shaft.

Q. Was there fire in the elevator shaft? Was there smoke? Any evidence of fire dropping down to that level?

A. That rubble was burnt rubble. I've come to learn from guys behind me they said it was burnt bodies. Like I said, my first instinct was to look up. I thought the ceiling might have come down. But the ceiling was intact. Then I was thinking well maybe the floor had blown up from the bottom. I guess my mind was processing, processing what this rubble could be. It couldn't be what it was.

[redacted]

Q. [redacted]

A. [redacted]

Q. [redacted]

What were your instructions in the lobby? The officer reported in to the command post?

A. The officer reported in to the command post, and then he came over to us and said, "We're going to take the B staircase, the attack staircase. B staircase is the attack staircase, and we're going to start walking."

Q. You were taking the hose up. Did you get the impression the idea was like you were going to fight the fire or what?

A. We were going to put the fire out.

Q. You were going to put the fire out.

Okay.

A. Even like in hindsight I'm thinking now the standpipe must have been compromised. That first ten stories, the water was falling down like rapids, ankle deep. You get tunnel vision, I guess. Just like I was studying -- I was studying.

Or the time of the explosion, when we saw the explosion and then when we got to the front -- maybe it was four minutes. Multiple floors were on fire now. Steel fails in 20 minutes. What were we thinking if we had to walk up there.

I know something I forgot. On the 31st floor I think there was a handy talky transmission -- I think a member of Rescue 1 -- he said, "Be advised it takes an hour and 15 minutes to get to the 31st floor." I said, "An hour and 15 minutes? That seems like a long time, you know." But I think that's what it was.

Something else I forgot. As we were heading up, after that second plane hit -- and that's the way I heard it, a handy talky transmission: "Another plane! Another plane!"

A small rumble, and another plane just hit the south tower.

We also started hearing reports from civilians: The Pentagon got hit, the White House got hit, the capital got hit, the Sears Tower got hit. We thought it was a war. It was a war.

Q. It was a war.

When that guy from rescue went on the handy talky and said, "Be advised, an hour and 15 minutes," in other words, we were an hour and 15 minutes into the operation?

A. I believe so.

Q. He was saying, "It's an hour and 15 minutes, and I'm just on the 31st floor"?

A. Right.

Q. This is to give some estimate of how we were progressing going up?

A. I think so.

Q. Exactly right, yeah.

When your officer reported in the lobby, did you see who he reported in to? Did you recognize any chiefs? Was Battalion 1 there?

A. I think Battalion 1 had just gotten in when we got there.

Q. Did Battalion 1 give him the orders to take your company and go up and do whatever? You don't know who he reported to?

A. No.

Q. Okay. That's good.

A. There were a lot of officers there. I remember when we first got there Squad 18 was there. They weren't even in their rig. They were in the building. I don't think they were in the lobby. I think they had already started going up, I guess.

The other units kind of converged at the same time. They were coming from different directions, gather their equipment and run in.

I remember there was a decorative wall in front of One World Tower. It was like a driveway that came up. It was like an oval. I remember there was like a concrete wall there, and there was a lady sitting on there. She was shaking. She was burned a little. She was just shaking. She was in shock. But we had a task. We had a task at hand. We were going to put the fire out, and we went in.

I remember seeing people jump when we were going in. It looked like they were landing on top of Six World Trade. Any minute we thought they could land on us, so we had to run in. We had to run in.

[redacted]

Q. Pretty much it?

A. I guess so, yeah.

CHIEF MALKIN: I want to thank Firefighter Green for this interview. It's 1441 hours. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER THOMAS LYNN

Interview Date: December 26, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today is December 26th, 2001. The time is now 1549 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department, City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Fireman First Grade Thomas Lynn of Engine Company 5. We are in Engine Company 5's company office. There is nobody else present at this time. The interview is in regard to the events of September 11th, 2001. What follows now is the interview.

A. I came in on the morning of the 11th, and the company ended up going on a run and had enough members where they didn't need me to go on the rig. They went to a box which turned out to be a false alarm. From that box they responded directly on the second alarm to the World Trade Center.

Hearing what was happening from the house watch, another member came in, Richard Carletti, and we took his car down and proceeded down towards the towers. We ended up parking his car by 6 Engine. We walked from there with our gear but no air tanks. We just had our gear with us. We ended up walking down Liberty Street, past the World Trade Center, which is Two World Trade Center.

We basically saw a lot of body parts and plane wreckage that was just all over the street. We just basically walked by that. We were walking down towards West Street, I guess it is, to the staging area, which was I guess across the street from the Vista Hotel, more in line with the building that holds the Winter Garden theater.

Q. Right.

A. From there we went from rig to rig to see if we could locate 5 Engine's rig and see if we could get air tanks. Once we did, we went back to the staging area. I told the chief that we were from 5 Engine -- I'm not sure which chief it was -- and that our members were in the north tower and we were ready to go in. Actually I said we were thinking of going in. He said, "No, no. You wait here. I'm putting a team together." He put us with a captain from 91 Engine, and we were standing fast there.

Then the south tower came down, and everybody just ran. We ran into the building where the Winter Garden theater was, and the debris was coming down. We just kept on running in there. The front of it collapsed.

Later we found out of where we went in, and we came out on Vesey Street. Yeah, we came out on Vesey and the West Side Highway and proceeded north on --

Q. West Street.

A. -- West Street until it cleared up a little bit. There were fires in the parking lot where Vesey Street and Murray Street was, and I ended up helping, with Carletti, helping stretching lines to put out those fires. There was really no hydrant pressure at that point.

Q. Where did you get the lines from?

A. I'm not sure which rigs. Whatever rigs were parked right around that area. Those rigs were still okay from the collapse of the south tower.

I just wanted to make note that Lieutenant Paul Mitchell, who was getting off that morning, from our firehouse, I met him at the staging area before the collapse of the south tower and talked to him briefly. I thought he was still on duty, but he had actually gotten off duty that morning and came back and responded there.

He, I believe, was sent in moments or minutes before the south tower collapsed. I believe he was sent into the south tower before. It seemed like almost right after he was sent in it collapsed.

Q. You saw him before that?

A. Yeah. I saw him at the staging area.

Q. Where was the staging area?

A. The staging area was on West Street at the West Side Highway in front of the financial building which houses the Winter Garden. There was a garage area that went down into the financial building, and that was basically where the board was set up.

I know I saw Von Essen there at one point, and I think Ganci and all those other chiefs were there also.

Q. This is the Winter Garden here.

A. Yeah.

Q. So it was somewhere in this area, on West Street somewhere in front of the Winter Garden?

A. Yeah.

Q. The staging area was in that area, you said?

A. Yes.

Q. You said that you saw your company officer --

A. Yeah.

Q. -- and he went to the south tower?

A. Right. I believe he went into the south tower.

Q. Okay.

A. So after that south tower collapsed, all the maydays came in, and you could hear everybody was asked to get out of the north tower, evacuate the north tower. We were looking for our members from 5 Engine and did meet up with some of them.

So we regrouped. We moved 5 Engine's rig, which was originally parked on West Street and between Vesey and Barclay, and we ended up moving the rig up to Murray Street off of West Street.

Then from there the members -- once we regrouped, though there was a missing member at that time, though there were a lot of maydays for missing members, so the lieutenant decided let's take the rig and we'll go around the whole area and back and get as close as we can to the towers. This is after the second tower collapsed, now. I guess I'm jumping the gun. A little after we moved the rig, the second tower came down.

Q. Where were you when the second tower came down?

A. When the second tower came down, I probably was about around Barclay.

Q. Still on West Street?

A. Yeah, still on West Street.

Q. The company was still there?

A. Yeah, still there.

Q. I'm confused. There was an officer with you at this point to order the movement of the rig?

A. Yeah, once we all got together.

Q. Was he on duty or the other guy was on duty?

A. No, he was on duty.

Q. He was on duty. Who was the other officer?

A. He relieved Lieutenant Mitchell in the morning. So Lieutenant Paul Mitchell, he had been relieved. From what I understand, he went all the way to Brooklyn, heard what had happened and then drove his car all the way back and ended up --

Q. That's the lieutenant that went to the south tower? I'm confused.

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay. He's the one that went to the south tower.

A. Yeah.

Q. Now you had the on-duty officer with you at the rig?

A. Yeah. They were in the north tower.

Q. Right.

A. They were in the north tower. They got out of there before the collapse, barely, except for one of ours, Manny Delvalle.

Then we proceeded around to Trinity Street with the rig after that and ended up taking a hydrant. Then we walked down I guess it was like Albany Street and then down to the west side to try to get closer.

Then we ended up not being able to do anything down there. So we walked back up to Trinity, moved the rig to I guess it was around Cortlandt Street and Trinity, took a hydrant. Then I think we walked down I think it was Vesey Street, but I'm not sure. We ended up helping hook up to tower Ladder 119 from the rig of 41 Engine. We were supplying the tower ladder, putting out fire in the --

Q. What were the conditions now as you were walking around here? What were the conditions in the World Trade Center? Was there a lot of fire?

A. There was a lot of fire in I guess it would be World Trade Center northeast plaza. I'm not sure. Unless it was the federal office building and the U.S. post office. I'm not sure. Or it could have even been Seven World Trade Center, now that I'm looking at the map.

Q. That's this building right here.

A. Yeah, I think that was the one that was on fire that we were supplying 119 with.

Q. 119 was working into that building to put out fire in that building?

A. Yeah. I think -- yeah, that must have been the building that was on fire at the time.

So we primarily worked on that, and my time is way off on what happened or how long we operated. It seemed like forever.

Q. Where was your rig at this time? It was still back on Trinity?

A. I believe our rig was on Trinity or it could have even been Broadway between Cortlandt and Dey, I believe.

Q. What were you guys doing with 119 now? You supplied them? You got a line from someplace?

A. Yeah. Actually we hooked up a line into a basement of one of the office buildings there, the riser. I'm not sure which officer turned on the pump station in the building, which created like 90 pounds of pressure, which was plenty of pressure and a lot more pressure than any of the hydrants had at that time. I don't know who thought of that, but that was great. So 41 Engine had plenty of water.

Yeah, that's what we did.

Q. You operated there for some time at that location?

A. Yeah, for some time.

Q. Did you operate a line there? When you say that there was plenty of pressure --

A. No.

Q. -- were you guys operating a line?

A. No, no, we weren't operating a line.

Q. What do you remember after that?

A. I remember meeting up with other -- we went back to the rig and took a blow and met up with other members that had come down from the company. I just remember being very exhausted at that point.

Q. The guys on duty from 5 Engine that you met, they couldn't account for the guys that were missing; right? They didn't know where they were? Was there an organized effort to go back and find them?

A. I don't really know.

Q. You're not aware?

A. I don't really know. I don't know if they were really aware of that, because of all the different transmissions and everything, whether or not -- maybe it seemed unbelievable. It seemed unbelievable to me -- I guess I can only speak for myself -- that one of the members was missing. I didn't know that he had gotten separated from the rest of the company.

Q. They were in the north tower at some point, and they got separated?

A. Yeah. But I wasn't in the north tower, so I don't know exactly what happened. So maybe I shouldn't speculate.

That's it. That's basically it.

Q. After you finished operating with 119, what did you say, you went back by the rig?

A. Yeah, we went back by the rig and took a blow. Then we ended up getting transported back to the firehouse. That might have been like 8:00 at night or something. Then we made a determination of what groups were going to continue on. I myself was relieved at like 10:30 that night, and then I worked the next day.

That's it.

Q. Okay. Pretty good.

CHIEF MALKIN: The interview is concluded. The time is now 1604. This concludes the interview with Firefighter First Grade Thomas Lynn of Engine 5, and I thank the fireman for this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT SPIRO YIORAS

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is December 28, 2001. The time is 10:28 in the morning. I'm George Cundari of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

A. My name is Spiro Yioras, rank is Lieutenant, command is Battalion 49, Division 4.

Q. Lieutenant, can you please tell us the events regarding that tragic day of September 11th?

A. On that day I was taken out of my battalion and redeployed to Battalion 46 for the tour due to no coverage over there. Initially, I was out on patrol when I heard a call come over the radio that there was a fire at the World Trade Center. Trying to find out more information, I got a message from Captain DeShore from Battalion 46 to come back to the station because we might be responding down there. As I responded back to the station at Battalion 46, we were watching the TV news, watching what was going on, and we saw the second plane hit the tower. Immediately we locked up the offices and we went right down to the Trade Center.

When we first got down there, we stationed on the corner of West Street and Vesey.

Q. How did you get there? What route did you take?

A. We took the 59th Street bridge over, down Second Avenue, and when we got down to like the 20s, we crossed over to the west side and we went straight down to the Trade Center.

Upon arriving on the scene, we met up with I believe Captain Wells from ERS. He was there. He was in charge of the scene and he gave us all assignments. I was assigned to staging. While I was doing staging, someone else appeared on the scene. I think it was Conditions 8. He already had started staging before I got there. Since he had everything under control, I went back to find Captain Wells and Captain DeShore and see what else they wanted me to do, how I was to be utilized.

Upon going back to the corner of West and Vesey, I don't know how long I was on the scene, it must have been like about maybe 20 minutes, 30 minutes, before the first tower collapsed. I just heard a rumbling noise and looked up and I saw parts of the building coming down and I just started running uptown on West Street.

Q. Prior to that collapse, did you see people, injuries coming towards you; were there a lot of people?

A. There were injuries there. There were people being loaded into the back of ambulances. I saw some of the people from Battalion 49 like Lillo, Abrille. They were working 49 Victor. I saw EMTs Paul Adams and Mous Diaz. They were working 45 Adam. But once that started happening, we all started running and I lost track of them.

I got caught up in the smoke and all the dust from the building coming down, and as soon as the dust and smoke cleared away, I went back to look for personnel because I remembered where they had their ambulances parked and basically it was in the area of the collapse. As I was searching for the crews, Lillo, Abrille, Diaz and Adams, I was also searching for Lieutenants Scaringello, Captain DeShore, for Captain Wells also and anybody else that I could find.

Walking down on West Street, I passed this overpass, this white overpass that connected from the Trade Center to across the street. I believe it had to be connected to the American Express building. As I went inside, through all the rubble, where all the ambulances and all the fire trucks were, I saw body parts all over the place. I only found one person alive in the whole thing. It was a black female, who I believe worked for a private ambulance. I'm not sure if it was Metro Care or something like that. She had a broken leg.

I yelled to some firemen that were standing by I believe it must have been 1 World Trade Center because No. 2 fell first, right? Yes. I had told them, you know, if they could come and help me with this female over here that had a broken leg, but they had injuries that they were taking care of also. Then a couple of minutes later, about five, six people showed up. I think some were civilians and I think one or two people were off-duty EMS personnel. I really don't know their names, but they were wearing IDs.

We grabbed a stair chair out of one of the damaged ambulances that were there. I believe it was a New York Hospital ambulance. We took a stair chair. We carried her across the rubble and I believe it was to the American Express building, underneath that overpass that connects to it.

As soon as we got underneath the overpass, the second tower collapsed. A lot of it fell close to the building and hit me. A couple of things hit me. I don't know exactly what hit me. I believe it was some bricks or wood. I really don't know. I couldn't tell you. But it hurt. It hurt.

We got stuck inside the American Express building. We couldn't get out of there. We couldn't find no way. We couldn't see anything. We couldn't breathe. I mean, I thought I was going to buy it. I really thought I was going to die in there.

Q. Were you with other crew members, with the patient, that girl?

A. With the patient and the people that helped me take the patient out of there. We were all stuck in that building. I can't tell you how long we were in there. It must have been about 15, 30 minutes. I'm just taking a wild guess. I'm saying anywhere from 15 to 30 minutes before firemen came in and took us out the back way of the building. Initially, when we tried to get out, all the doors were blocked from debris. We couldn't break any of the glass doors because they were so thick. I even tried breaking one of the glass doors with an oxygen tank and it wouldn't even break.

But finally, it seemed, like I said, 15 to 30 minutes before we got out with the firemen, and the only reason they came in and got us out was because they saw us go into the building after the second collapse. I should say before the second collapse they saw us go into the building.

Basically, they took me to the treatment center and gave me a little bit of oxygen, but then I went right back out there. I went back out there looking for my guys and everything else. I found a couple of them. I couldn't find Lillo. Abrille, I couldn't find him either, but I had heard word that he was safe; he might have been injured but he was safe. He was down in Battery Park, I believe. One of the other crews from 45 Adam, I found Mr. Adams roaming around and he was looking for his partner, Mr. Diaz. But we later found out that Mr. Diaz was in the hospital being treated for a head injury, a minor head injury.

Basically, for the rest of the day we were just looking for crew members, firemen. We were looking for any patients or anybody that we could find, and basically that was it.

Q. Were your radios working at that time?

A. The radio was working. That's another thing I have to say. Initially, when I found that patient after the first collapse, I had called on the radio to the command center to see if they could send me somebody over to help me with the patient, and they had said something like, "We have a lot of patients out here and we're trying to deal with it. See if you could deal with it by yourself inside over there where you are." After that, luckily, the other people came by and they helped me. But otherwise, most of the time I didn't hear anything on the radio except for that one little conversation that I had.

Q. In the parking garage, you didn't see any Chiefs or anyone higher than what you were?

A. You know, they might have been.

Q. You couldn't see anything?

A. But I really couldn't see who it was. I know I saw the Chiefs with the white hats, they were out there and everything else, but I just couldn't tell you who it was. I really couldn't name them. I know after the second collapse I saw Chief McCracken, Chief Villani, and they were all heading down towards Battery Park to regroup, and that was like after the second collapse.

Q. Basically, after the collapse, you really found no patients?

A. No patients, nobody alive. They wouldn't let us go back into the scene. They cordoned it off because they wanted to keep as many people out because they didn't know what else was going to happen, and they also said that some of the other buildings might not be safe also. So, basically, we tried to see if there were any patients or anybody coming up to us. But by then everybody had either been dispersed or been taken over to the treatment center at Stuyvesant High School, I think it was. Basically that was it.

MR. CUNDARI: Lieutenant, I'd like to thank you for taking your time and conducting this interview. This concludes the interview. The time now is 10:40.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

RONALD COYNE

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. CUNDARI: The date is December 28, 2001. The time is 1122 hours. I'm George Cundari, New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and assigned command.

A. Ronald Thomas Coyne, EMT, Battalion 44.

Q. EMT Coyne, can you please tell us the events of that tragic day of September 11?

A. On September 11, we had just finished dropping off a patient at Kings County Hospital, and at approximately 8:48 a.m., we heard screaming over the radio. We were just about going available. I called the dispatcher and said if she needed us, because I wasn't sure where exactly this incident was taking place, but I told the dispatcher we were available to go wherever they needed us.

She designated us to go to Vesey Street in lower Manhattan for what at the time they were considering it to be just a plane accident.

We shot down over by the Brooklyn Bridge. When we went over the bridge, we noticed both towers were on fire. We made the turn around off the Brooklyn Bridge to go on the FDR, and we were stopped by the Police Department to ask if we can carry a doctor. I got on the radio, and I notified the dispatcher that we were going to transport the doctor over to the World Trade Center.

They acknowledged it, and when we came out of the tunnel of -- I'm not sure what street you call it. I guess the Westside Highway, the tunnel out of the FDR. We got approximately over to the Vista Hotel, which was on Liberty, between Liberty and the first building, and at that time we saw people running towards us and cars gathering all over the place, police cars, ambulances, and then we noticed the tower was coming down.

Q. When you first arrived, the towers started collapsing?

A. Soon as we arrived, the south -- the north tower had come down. I know it sounds weird, but that's the way it was.

Q. There is a north tower, south tower. You think the south tower was the first collapse? You mean before the first collapse or the --

A. I was there when the first collapse happened.

Q. So it was most likely the south tower.

A. So then it was the south?

Q. Yeah.

A. Okay. I could be wrong in the way this is. The tower had collapsed. There was debris from the roof hitting the front of the ambulance, and we couldn't see a thing. I couldn't back up. I couldn't go forward. There were too many pedestrians running around.

I decided at that time to shut off all the vents, keep the lights on, and I told my partner, who was small enough, to try and climb through the back window that separates the cab and the back of the bus to go into the back with the doctor, and at that time I had asked the doctor to open up the NBC kit.

Q. Do you know the doctor's name?

A. I don't remember offhand.

It started to snow gray, and I could start getting a little field of vision. I decided at this point where -- because traffic was stuck behind us and on the side of us, that we would keep the ambulance where it was.

I got out and I started picking up these little old men, who were trying the cross the street, and they couldn't breathe, and I picked them up over my shoulder, two-by-two and carried them to the back of the ambulance and packed in approximately 15 people.

With that, I saw a Poland Spring truck, and the guy told me to start handing out water, if I needed it, and I took two cases and started heading out to the first tower that fell. I was giving out water to people as they were walking by, telling them where my ambulance was, so they could be triaged there, and then sent over to wherever they were going to send them.

Q. Did you have any radio communications at that time?

A. I couldn't hear anything. The dispatcher couldn't hear me. I couldn't reach the dispatcher. My portable wasn't working.

My main concern was I knew that we had people up there. I knew we had our own up there, and I knew we had a lot of civilians over there, and I just wanted to get up and try and do a rapid triage as fast as possible.

My partner is very new on the job, you know. I didn't think she would be as well-suited to do that job right then and there, so as I went up towards the north building, I noticed I couldn't gain entrance around that area because of the destruction of the vehicles, the building, so what I did was I went up, I would say, around Cedar or Barclay. No, Cedar. I'm not sure which way this is going.

Q. This is north, this is south on the map. You started heading north?

A. I started up heading up out of the tunnel.

Q. Yes, you came out of the tunnel, which is not the Battery Tunnel, but by the ferry, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You said that was the Westside Highway?

A. Right, we were here. This building came down first.

Q. The north tower, you mean?

A. I couldn't gain entry to the south tower, so what I did was I walked around Trinity and walked up in between the towers over by Washington Avenue, and I came up in between the Custom's building and the World Trade Center, northeast plaza of the building, and I explained -- there was a group of people that were trying to open up the exit door on 6 World Trade Center, but they couldn't because of debris that had fallen all over the place, so I cleared the debris, and I went in the basement, and I had counted 25 people.

I told them, you know -- there were all guys. I told them to gather around five-gallon water bottles. I showed them how to make a make-shift masks, and I was there to lead them over towards the pier where they were picking people up. At that point in time, you know, I had time to do six masks by this point, and at that time I went back up the same street, the same route, around Washington Avenue, and came up in between the buildings, and I was looking at the car garages, and the cars in the street, and me and three buddies of mine from street crime were breaking windows in the cars to look for infants and adults, unconscious adults, because there was so much dust on them that we couldn't see through.

At that point, I just heard a thunderous sound, and I looked up, and I saw the building start to topple, start to sway, and it was swaying our way, and we just yelled, "Run" and I tried to run as fast as I could, and I saw an SUV parked, and I figured that that would take some, you know, some of the hit, because I knew I couldn't out run the building, and by the time it took me to break the back window of the SUV, my safety coat was already on fire. My socks were on fire. I was already covered with soot and all sorts of particles that were coming out of the building. I climbed into the truck, and that's when pieces of the building lifted the truck and came through the front window and flipped the truck over, and I was trapped in there for approximately 25 minutes to a half hour.

I was falling asleep. I knew I was dying. I just prayed that I wouldn't be found like that. I felt as if somebody was giving me fresh oxygen. I was able to dig my way out myself, out of the truck. I crawled into the street through ash and the fire, and I found a door, and I opened up the door, and it was a tavern. I ran over behind the bar, and I took the seltzer spray and started washing my eyes and my face, because it was burning, and washing my back. I just -- I was just covered with burns and bruises, and I couldn't breathe at all.

What little breath I had was just whatever I could get. After that it started to clear up again. I searched the entire building to make sure there was nobody in it. There was nobody found. Whatever apartment doors were open, I just took a peak in to see if anybody was on the floor, and then I automatically locked the doors and left. Then I left the building, and I went back to try and find my partner, and I noticed that a lot of the ambulances were torched, flipped over, demolished, and I couldn't find my bus.

All the buses there were the same. I didn't know what to do. I didn't know what to think. I didn't know where my partner was. I didn't know where the doctor was, and I was just walking around and bringing people over to stores that had not been affected by it and putting them inside the stores so that they can at least get some water and air. Then I ended up running into one of the engine companies.

I explained to the captain who I was. I identified myself. I showed him my shield and my rank and told him that I couldn't find anybody else from EMS, and that I would be more than happy to stay with them until a commanding officer finds me and tells me where to go. That was directly in front of the north tower. There was a fruit place over by the corner, on one of the corners, and it had already been blown apart by the blast and the collapse. I entered it. I started washing off fruit. I had firemen complaining of cramping in their stomachs and in their legs, and I knew their potassium was dropping. So I was bringing out bananas, and apples and all sorts of fruit, baskets of them to hand them out to these firemen so that they could continue to do their job. I ran into Chief McCracken, and he had asked where I had been, and I explained to him that I was trapped in the vehicle for about a half hour, and I didn't know where anybody was. I couldn't find my partner. He ordered me to go to a triage station and start triaging patients.

So after he pointed out where the triage area was, I found my partner, and I just fell to the floor, and I started to cry, because I really, really would never forgive myself if I lost her. I was triaging the patients with the medic from St. Mary's and my partner, and we kept trying to go in, and we were pulling out bodies.

I was ordered to go into the ambulances that were next to it and strip whatever I could out of them, ALS and BLS supplies. We had numerous contaminated equipment that we were -- me and one of the -- a buddy of mine, whose name is Roger from St. Mary's, ran over to Beekman to drop them off to be cleaned off, and they gave us a new ambulance and brought it back.

We still couldn't find our ambulance. We didn't know where it was. I saw hands and legs, and I saw a woman impaled into a wall across the street from the building. I saw people jumping out of the windows when they were collapsing, going through cars and hitting the pavement, and that was only early in the morning. We sat there all day taking care of firemen basically. A lieutenant came up to me and told me that I didn't look well, that I should -- I should go back to Brooklyn and go get checked out. I kept telling her that there was more work to be done. She said she was going to check on me in a little bit, and 12 o'clock that night she decided to send me back to my division, at approximately 2330, twelve o'clock, she decided to send me back to the division.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ROBERT NORRIS

Interview Date: December 27, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF MC GRATH: The date is Thursday, December 27, 2001. The time is 1407 hours, and this is Battalion Chief James McGrath of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with Fireman Robert Norris, Engine 202, and I'm holding this interview regarding events that occurred on September 11, 2002.

Q. Bob, if you would just state your name and company and then in your own words just start telling me what happened from when you responded up until whenever.

A. My name is Robert Norris. I work on the Engine 202 in Red Hook, Brooklyn.

I came to work on that morning on September 11, at 5:30 in the morning to do some studying for an upcoming lieutenant's exam. I was on the incoming for Ladder 101 that day.

About 7:30 in the morning, I had gone downstairs to tell the members of the kitchen that I was due to work in the truck, that anyone who was there who was going home, that I was there to relieve them and they could take up. So after three or four times telling everyone that I'm here, no one would answer me. I said, "I'll be back upstairs studying. Whenever someone wants to go home, send him upstairs, and I'll relieve them."

Well, I kept studying till about 8:30, and I came back downstairs, and I repeated again, "Who's going home? Who's going home?" No one would answer me, and with a cup of coffee, I went out on the apron, and then we looked, and I saw that there was a cloud of smoke coming from over one of the buildings in Red Hook that I noticed it was coming from Manhattan.

Myself and a few other members ran up to the roof, and from there we were able to see that the tower had been hit or that the tower -- there was a fire in it at this time.

One thing I remembered, there were so many pieces of paper flying around that initially we felt that there were seagulls just hovering around the building. It was a pretty remarkable sight.

But at this time it was about quarter to, maybe twenty to. I'm not really sure what time the first plane hit. So we came downstairs, and being a mile and a half from the sight, we felt it was just a matter of time before we were going to be sent over.

So we kept saying, when are they going to call us, when are they going to call us, and time went on, and went on, and on, and on, and on, and we kept saying, who's going on the truck, and the truck, they were filled up. No one would leave.

So it turns out they did send a ticket over to the companies here in Red Hook to go over to what's called the staging area outside the entrance to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel in a convoy fashion that when they would need us, they would send us over.

202 was the first engine on the line. We were lined up on Hamilton Avenue on the -- I guess the Manhattan-bound side of Hamilton Avenue, at the entrance to the tunnel, and Red Hook -- I'm sorry -- Ladder 101 was the second company on that line.

Well, because we were there for a few minutes, we all got out of the rig, and we were standing there. We watched another plane come in. I felt the plane was coming underneath the pillar of smoke that was coming out of the first tower, but obviously it veered into the tower, and it took another hit.

We actually felt like a rumbling sensation over in Brooklyn. At that point, we heard it over the radio, whatever they called our staging area, you know, 202, 101, 131, 279, and whatever other companies were behind us. They were saying, go, go, go, go, go through the tunnel, so we all jumped back on the rig.

The TBTA had stopped traffic. One thing that I should mention, one of the members that we had working with us that day was a detail from Ladder 118, Anthony Gonzalez. He came over on a detail, and one thing I want to mention was the fact that since there was no room in the truck, I was able to jump on the engine and take the box in on the engine, and over in the staging area, Lieutenant Hawkins was giving out positions, and I knew that now from this point on that I would be working in the engine, because I'm primarily an engine guy, but as we went through the tunnel, most of the traffic had been stopped after the first impact, and there was considerable traffic in there, but as we were going through the tunnel, it was eerie to see all the people on express buses going into the city, and they were at the same level as the engines and trucks, and it was weird to see the eye contact being made from the people in the buses. It was eerie. They were making signs of the crosses, and lip synching, God bless you, be careful and such.

But the reason why I mentioned Anthony

Gonzalez was because after the first impact, he called his wife, and she was in the southern tower. He said to her, "We haven't gone over there yet, but we should be going over there shortly. What I want you to do is I want you to get out of that building now and just don't worry about it and just be safe."

So as we stood at the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel entrance, we saw the second plane hit, and Anthony had his cell phone with him, and he called his wife, and of course there was no answer. Sitting in the back-up position, I was sitting across from the control man, which was this Anthony Gonzalez. I only knew him in passing, but at this point, he felt that his wife was either in danger or considerably injured, so he was pretty much in shock at this point. It looked as if he wasn't ready to do anything.

Timmy Burke and I were saying how this is going to be a legendary day in the Fire Department because of the impact that the collisions would have on the department, as well as the city.

After considerable traffic in the tunnel, we came out, and all the traffic had been stopped northbound on West Street. We looked as if we were the first engine company to come from the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel as a regular engine company, not the squad or any other companies, and there was a number of airplane parts throughout the street littering the streets, as well a considerable amount of body parts that were all over the street that were, I guess, either from the airplane passengers or somebody that might have been up on the tower working.

202 had stopped in front of the northern tower. I'm looking at a picture here, and to clarify the names, we stopped probably right about in front of either 1 World Trade or the -- the Vista was a bit southern. I think we were -- we were in between the two pedestrians bridges, more towards the northern pedestrian bridge.

I was under the impression that we were across the street at 7 Financial Center, which I don't see on here. It's right near the Winter Garden, the building in front of the Winter Garden on West Street, but we had stopped in front of what I thought was the northern tower, 1 World Trade, and I felt that we stopped pretty dangerously close to the northern tower.

I jumped out, and I'll never forget, a huge chunk of steel had fallen maybe 15, 20 feet from me, and Lieutenant Hawkins screamed out, "Get on the rig. Get on the rig. We're going to move. We're going to move." And I remember jumping on the rig saying, I feel safe now, but had that piece of steel hit the rig, it would have split the rig in half, because it was such a considerable size piece, but Engine 202 had then driven across the median to the southern-bound traffic lane of West Street.

We jumped off the rig, and we went over to at that point the command center, which was a couple -- maybe a couple of hundred feet south of the pedestrian bridge, the northern pedestrian bridge. Maybe a hundred -- maybe 50 yards, we'll say.

We stood in the street. At that point, all the other companies started rolling in, and they had, I guess, moved the command center from wherever it was previously to where we stood, and it was pretty chaotic. There was nothing. No organization whatsoever. No one knew what was going on, who was going where, what building we were going to be sent into, what building they were speaking of. It was really chaotic.

One officer made the suggestion to have the companies move underneath the protection of 7 Financial Center in what was an inbound garage, underground garage, entrance. There were two driveways. One was an inbound, and one was an outbound. There was a wall in between the two, so you couldn't see the other side.

This officer had said, "All the engine men to the right-hand side and all the truck men to the left-hand side, and all officers report to the staging area," which appeared at this point to be on the downgrade slope or it would be the upgrade slope of the outbound garage lane.

We stood there for what felt like an eternity. There were a number of people that were jumping from the building, landing on what looked like an awning. It might have been the northern tower's marquee, I'm not really sure, but people kept jumping at an alarming rate, hitting the ground.

Because we were there for so long and because there was such chaos, a chief had mentioned, "Fellows, just, you know, relax a little bit, take off our jackets, take off your Scott pack." He goes, "You're going to be awhile here today. I suggest you save all your energies." Being a hot day that it was, a number of people removed their jackets and Scott pack, their helmets, and were standing around in this group of -- the engine men group.

There were a number of people who looked physically shaken up. A priest had come down and was checking over the crowd to see who looked as if they needed some assistance emotionally, and he pulled a few people to the side to speak to them.

At this point, the detail from Ladder 118, Anthony Gonzalez, kept trying to contact his wife, and he kept unsuccessfully calling. He was being consoled by our chauffeur, Mike Mahoney, who has known Anthony Gonzalez for a much longer time than I have. He was trying to console him by any way that he can. Anthony had removed his gear, as well, but he sat down in the back from where the group was witnessing the people jumping, and from where Anthony was sitting, I doubt he could see very much past the slope of the entranceway, because at that -- that's the height of the sidewalk, the point being Mike was consoling him, and myself and Timmy Burke were standing in the front area without our helmets on and our jackets on, witnessing what was going on across the street.

Anthony was by no means capable of gathering up his gear and going in. He just sat there in awe.

He was shaking his head and putting his hand on his head, just -- he was devastated.

At this point, there was a chief randomly walking back and forth, not necessarily, from my opinion, picking companies based upon officers signing in at the command center. It just looked as if somebody was saying, you guys in, you guys in, based upon -- in retrospect, those he looked as if were dressed and ready to go as a unit.

Companies arrived after 202 did, and they were sent in by no other reason, I think, that they were all collectively together. I was standing next to a guy who had just called his wife -- girlfriend, "I'm okay, I just want to let you know everything is fine," and I asked him -- I said, "Do you mind if I borrow your phone and call my wife?" And he gave me his phone, and as soon as I dialed my wife, the phone was ringing, and I heard what was a third plane coming in. I heard the propulsion of an engine and then an explosion.

We looked up and saw these huge chunks. There's one particular piece of this building that fell in its entirety that I'll never forget. It was as if it was a Schwartzenager movie taking place. It just came down showering on us.

At that point, with the phone in my hand, everyone started screaming, "Run," so we all ran into the garage, and I was expecting a fire ball to come chasing us down the driveway because of how the air pushed its way down the tunnel in such a fashion with such force.

I'll never forget. I closed my eyes and just waited to feel the heat coming, and it was an incredible force, but it wasn't the force that I was expecting which was flames. It was just the all the dust and debris, which was, you know, pea soup. You couldn't see a thing.

But it was, I'd say, 30, 40 some odd guys running down one entrance, one way of the garage, not knowing what took place on the truck side, the ladder side of the exit of the garage, but we all ran blindingly down into an area that no one ever had been in before. We couldn't find an exit. It was pretty chaotic down there for a period.

We tried to force a door. That turned out to be a storage shed. There was no other doors around for us to force. No one had any tools. There was no tools around, because at the time of the collapse, a lot of people had put down their gear, because they were standing there so long. All I had on was my bunker pants. I didn't have a radio. I had a radio. Didn't have my jacket. Didn't have my helmet.

And that was the majority of the people that I was around. A lot of them didn't have their gear with them. They were just -- you know, no one was prepared to start forcing doors, but people were screaming at one another down there, just trying to get back with the people they arrived with, and I remember Timmy Burke and I had said we were going to stay together all day, and I heard his voice, he heard mine, and it was as if walking in a pitch-black darkness. We were walking with our hand in front of our faces, trying to not walk into people or the wall, because it was just zero visibility.

Jimmy and I had paired up together, and we inch by inch started walking out towards the entranceway, and initially I felt that the debris had sealed off our exit from that entranceway, because there was zero visibility. We couldn't find anything with all the debris that was in the street, so I thought. In retrospect, it was all the dust that was lingering, but I thought it was actual pieces of the building blocking our exit.

We started feeling along the floor for like different types of tools and different types of equipment, and I remember finding a helmet from 226, and there were Scott packs around, and miscellaneous jackets and pants. We then heard Lieutenant Hawkins trying to reach us on the radio, and we walked back into the tunnel area. Someone had tied up a search rope in an area in the beginning of the -- not in the beginning, but in the area where the visibility started getting better, the deep part of the garage, and people started following this search rope.

Didn't it lead out to -- I guess from this picture this call it the Winter Garden, I know it as the place where Moran's, is the restaurant/bar over there called Moran's, as well as a cruise ship called THE EXCALIBER that my brother had his wedding on.

When we got back together again, Lieutenant Hawkins had found Mike Mahoney and Anthony Gonzalez, who was still shell-shocked, but even more so now that the collapse had taken place. We were speechless. There was a period of silence that was around us because there weren't many people that came out of this particular exit from the garage.

We had come out to the Moran's -- we'll call it a quadrangle or a courtyard area -- and it was eerily silent with papers flying around us and the dust. With that, we stood there in awe for awhile, not knowing what to do.

Lieutenant Hawkins just kept us cool and said, "All right, guys, you know, just everyone relax." I recommended maybe going back out there and seeing what we could do, because we knew of a way to get back at least to where we stood. You know, maybe we could climb out from under the debris or whatever. Lieutenant Hawkins, I remember him saying that if that building had fallen, it won't be long before the other one is going to fall, as well. He told us just relax. "We are going to find something to do. We'll be able to do some stuff later."

We stood there for awhile and because the southern tower fell first, this northern tower was more in line of view with where we stood. We were almost, you know, parallel to the building, so Lieutenant Hawkins recommended walking north along the waterfront to get out of the way, harm's way of the possibility of the second tower falling, the northern tower.

As we walked, we were watching a number of the New York Waterway ships, ferries, come over from New Jersey, and they were starting to have makeshift ferry entrances for people, civilians, who were coming over to this particular part of the area screaming, crying, some injured, some not.

There were a lot of people that were injured. We independently started helping people who looked as if they needed help, because as a unit we were without tools. We were without our own protection. I lost my jacket, my helmet. Anthony Gonzalez didn't have his Scott pack. He might have had his jacket. Mahoney might have had his jacket. Lieutenant Hawkins, I think had his jacket and helmet, but no light or no tool. We were helpless as, quote unquote, firemen without tools.

We just kept assisting civilians and just ferrying them onto the ferries to get out of the area to go towards New Jersey. I don't remember at this part whether we kept assisting civilians, and then Tim and I went to get something to drink, because the number one complaint was people were unable to even talk because of their mouths, as ours, contained all the shit. It was like pouring an ashtray in your mouth. It was terrible.

We went up to Stuyvesant High School, which actually wasn't Stuyvesant High School as we know it. There was an annex a few blocks down. I'm looking here, and it might have been on Vesey Street. Vesey Street there was -- well, looking here, either Vesey Street was this quadrangle or -- but there's a park that's over there, a grass park, and I believe it might be over Vesey Street. Okay. But the actual overpass and the Stuyvesant High School is at a different location. Actually, it's further up.

We went into what was an annex of the school. In there, Tim Burke and I tried to call our families and let them know that we were okay, but what I'm getting at is I wasn't sure if this took place after the second collapse or before the second collapse.

Tim and I had come back with cases and cases of juices that we were giving to civilians and firemen alike. As we went back with the drink -- and this is what, again, I don't remember what took place first. We walked back towards what says 4 World Financial Center, Merrill Lynch building. I remember being over there, and did I hear yet another -- what I thought was a propulsion of a plane, and then an explosion, and then we all dove to the floor.

There was a section of that park that was elevated with respect to the benches. I remember diving underneath a bench that was below an elevated part of the park, a grass section, and there was this cloud, because I wasn't sure how far the debris was going to be falling of the building itself.

I imagine people who weren't able to dive underneath this protective area just closed their eyes, because there was no telling how far this debris would fall, because looking at this picture, you'd say, okay, you know, you're way out of harm's way, but as we all know, the size of the buildings was immense.

At this point, we happened to see a lot of other firemen start trickling in. I remember seeing one firemen. He didn't have a helmet on. A young kid, he was walking with his jacket off on one shoulder, and he looked like he was shell-shocked, and I said, "Bro, are you okay?" And I remember I had some juices with us. I said, "Bro, are you okay? Are you okay?" And he didn't answer me, so I kind of like stopped him and shook him. I said, "You okay?" Because he was just so deer in the headlights that I knew something was up with him, and he told me that he jumped out of the 2nd Floor window, whatever that meant, whether that was before a collapse, after a collapse, during a collapse. I don't know which company he was from, but he looked emotionally pretty bad.

There were countless people on this waterfront promenade area that were requiring medical assistance, people saying they were having heart attacks, chest pains, those with visible lacerations, trauma, all being ferried over to New Jersey hospitals.

We felt helpless, because we had nothing. You know, they were asking us to get them what they were calling our oxygen masks to put on the people so they could be administered some oxygen, but I was kidding around telling my friends, you know, man, this is 4,500 pounds of compressed air, but they didn't understand what it was. They couldn't help it, that the best thing they could do was to hop on a ferry over to New Jersey regardless of how they were feeling. The best thing they could have done was to move over to that area where there were definitely some medical people.

I continued -- we had continued to help civilians and firemen alike, just trying to give them some type of direction, just reassurance of their well-being that it was okay. You're going to be all right. Just keep walking up ahead.

Of the groups of people that were coming in this area, we seemed to be the better of the group, because these people might have been closer to the secondary collapse than we were, than we were of the first. At least we had some bit of shelter.

I remember hearing -- getting back to prior to the first collapse, we listened to the radio, and I remember hearing -- I believe it was 33 engine said that 33 to chief or whoever was in command, "We have reached the 30th Floor. It's taken us an hour. We project that we're going to be another hour by the time we reach our destination." And I was thinking, once you get to that destination, what type of conditions will the standpipe system be, as an engine. I mean, as far as extinguishing fire, there will be very little head pressure up that far up with the standpipe severed. I don't know if there are multiple standpipes or safety systems that are intact to bypass severed standpipes, but I would say what could a fireman do with 40 floors of fire.

Q. This was prior to the first building collapse?

A. Yes, yes. As I stood there watching the people jumping, I heard a report of 33 -- I think it's 33, saying, "We're on the 30th Floor. We've been an hour, and it will take us another hour by the time we reach our assignments," whatever that might have been.

Q. Did you know if they were in the north or south tower?

A. That's just it. I was hearing reports from different people who weren't stating where they were from. I imagined if whoever was taking their positions knew where they were. 33 to command post, you know, I'm in this tower.

I wasn't aware of a separate frequency at this time. I didn't know if a separate frequency had been established before we arrived. I don't know of any additional circumvention to the radio chaos. There were a number of people stating that we have a man down on such and such a floor, chest pains, speaking of fire members. There were multiple reports of that.

Q. Do you recall any companies?

A. That I do not. I do recall saying that it was a shame to hear that people were giving very urgent messages that were being cut off by other urgent messages. Maybe it's where I stood. Maybe some transmissions were coming through clear and some were not, and I was getting the dribs and drabs, but it just seemed as if there were no clear, thorough messages being sent, because everyone was stepping on each other's toes.

After the first collapse, it was just chaos. I heard of -- I heard of one officer -- [redacted] it seemed as if they were talking to a dispatcher, because they said -- again this is a memory. This isn't -- I don't remember where I heard this, but they were saying how such and such to command post, we'll say, you have an officer down on -- I think they said Broadway. You have a fire officer down in the streets of Broadway, and then I remember a transmission coming back and saying, "Disregard, DOA."

So I don't know who it was or who they were speaking of, but it just seemed as if that was the beginning of a lot of bad transmissions to follow. Coming in with 202 and 101 as a group, and knowing that I was to have worked with the truck, we were concerned as to what their assignments were. We did not know they were sent in. Being separated via the wall, I wasn't sure they were sent in or they were next to me.

We didn't know their whereabouts.

I felt kind of, you know, petty getting on the radio and saying, 202 to 101, are you okay, because of all the other transmissions taking place that I felt nothing I could do at this point to help 101, because we were equipment-less, as well as if they were hurt, they would have need of the airways, as well, to make their transmissions.

After the second collapse, sometime later we saw people starting to come in that had been under recall, and we said, "Have you seen 101?" And they said, "Yes, we saw 101." They were down in the -- south of the south tower. This was maybe eleven o'clock, 11:30. I don't know. It was still relatively early. So A, I felt the need to try to contact them, as we all did -- I'm saying personally -- to see how they were, make sure everyone was okay, but B, again, I didn't want to start making radio transmissions just to meet up with people, because I was already intact as a unit, and if they were intact as a unit, why would they want to hook up with us?

As it turned out, the spotting of 101 were people that came in on the recall, wearing 101 helmets as a group. Someone had seen a collective group of guys wearing 101 helmets, thinking these were the guys that came in to work that day, so that's where the confusion took place.

We were hanging out, helping civilians and helping firemen with injuries. A lot of people with leg injuries, lacerations, again, just putting people on ferries. People were dying to get out of New York, hopping on the ferries.

I wanted to get back to help people down at the site to get back there and to help people search pretty much. I requested a few times to -- you know, can we get back down there, [redacted].

We stayed pretty much near the ferry areas, looked at the picture. It was probably at the end of Vesey Street, that little corner, that little -- I guess River Terrace and Vesey Street.

The ferries kept coming over there. We kept ferrying people over to New Jersey. After awhile, once that started calming down, we heard reports of members to go north to Stuyvesant High School, or we went up by Stuyvesant High School, and we were there for awhile just in awe, just walking around, feeling useless, nothing -- didn't feel like it was real. Didn't feel like it took place.

After awhile, we heard a report that there was a gas leak or possible gas explosion in Stuyvesant High School because of ruptured gas lines. There was a chaotic evacuation of Stuyvesant High School, which just made things worse, because even though there might have been a leak, it just seemed as if it might have been connected somehow with what we found out was terrorist attacks.

Not being able to see -- our eyes were killing us. Our mouths were dry as anything. We stood up by Stuyvesant High School in awe. I remember being just devastated, just speechless, with respect to the potential of victims and potential of department members.

I believe when I was down on Vesey Street my old company, 65 engine, were giving Mayday transmissions. This I remember very clearly. I heard a Lieutenant Piambino, 65 engine, saying, "We're trapped. We're trapped. We can't get out. We're trapped. We're trapped. Mayday, Mayday, Mayday." And that was one of many transmissions taking place at that time, but maybe due to my proximity, I was able to hear their transmission come out clearer.

Q. Was this prior to the second collapse?

A. This is what I don't remember. It could have been. It could have been, but maybe it wasn't. I don't remember. I don't remember, but as we went up to the building of Stuyvesant High School, did I see the whole company, five men engine company? They all walked out. They all walked up to the area of Stuyvesant High School.

It was like a little island in between the north and southbound lanes of South Street that people had started sitting on the walls after they closed the street's traffic. They just seemed they had been to hell and back.

Q. What companies?

A. This was 65 engine.

Q. 65?

A. Yeah, they all made it out.

The story which I would think was probably just the officer -- not that I was required, but I told him he did a great job, and he wasn't willing to relive it. He said that at the Christmas party. I understood, but I just said, "You brought your men home. You did a great job."

There was a picture of a member being taken out of the pile screaming in pain with a missing tooth that was in the New York Post either that Thursday or Friday. I remember it really ripped the heart out of me. It was a chauffeur from 65 engine, Armand Reno, who has 30 some years on the job, but he made it out, though. It was a real heart-ripping picture. He dove under the rig, and the rig had been crushed, and he was underneath it, and somehow he made it out.

As far as my time line, we pretty much stayed up -- stayed up by Stuyvesant High School with dozens of other firemen. There were dozens of other firemen around us sitting on West Street, but I felt for all the members that were there at the time of the collapse that really weren't up to going back in and doing whatever needed to be done, for whatever reasons the individuals were -- we needed a rest. We needed equipment.

The dozens and hundreds of people coming from the northern part of West Street and walking down, fresh members, members coming in on recall, I felt helpless sitting there, but, again, we didn't have anything to do what needed to be done, you know, without equipment and without hoses, tools.

We stood there for awhile. That was pretty much it. Consoling Anthony Gonzalez.

One thing I did mention, I did mention that happened. As we stood watching the people fall from the building, we looked at 202 was moving. The rig 202 was moving, and we turned around, and there was Mike Mahoney sitting there. For whatever reason, someone felt that the rig needed to be moved.

Someone had taken upon themselves to get in 202 and move the rig. I don't know how far they moved it, why they needed to move it or anything, but it was moved a couple of feet.

One thing I neglected to mention, Tim Burke and I had run out to get additional cylinders, because when we got off the rig initially, we kind of ran across the street to get out of any possible debris hitting us.

We went back up to the rig to get additional cylinders, and who do we see there at 202 rig but the Rescue 1 old timer. There is a -- I forgot his last name. He was just honored by the Holy Name Society.

Q. Angelini?

A. Angelini. And didn't he look at Tim and I and said, "Kid, give me your chauffeurs' masks," he tells us, and he was by himself, and we said, "Our chauffeur has it? You know, we don't have it." He kept going through our compartments, and I remember him walking into the northern tower as cool as a cucumber, not looking up, not anything.

Now hearing that him and his son -- I don't know what else to say, you know. It's not like I was in the tower, and I crawled out of a hole that was left open. I just -- we weren't sent in.

Q. Everything you said is certainly helpful. If there is anything else pertinent that you can think of --

A. At this point, no. Well, there is, I guess.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PAUL VASQUEZ

Interview Date: December 27, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTIS: Today's date is December 27, 2001. The time is approximately 1110 hours. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotis, safety command, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER VASQUEZ: Firefighter Paul Vasquez, Engine Company 284.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTIS: This is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Paul, if you would, just tell me verbally how the events unfolded for you that day.

A. I was at home, saw it on TV, the first. My wife woke me up. I saw the first building burning. I watched on the news. I called up the firehouse, asked what was going on, if they had a recall going on or anything. They said nothing yet, stay home, stay by the phone. So after the second one, I called again. They told me it was a recall. I came in.

I came in, got changed. The truck and the engine were gone already, 284 and Ladder 149 were gone already, and I just got changed, took one of the guys' own private vehicle and headed up the Gowanus to the Brooklyn Bridge. They were holding people there. Emergency vehicles were allowed to go over, and they were holding up guys in emergency vehicles waiting.

They sent us over, and then the rigs came over. We parked by the federal building over there, and it was already dust clouds, so I guess the first building already collapsed, and we started walking in, and not that long after that we heard, like, the rumble of the second building collapsing.

The first -- couple of us -- they were putting us in groups, trying to keep together. The first thing we started doing was -- I think it was Church and Vesey there was a bunch of cars on fire.

Q. Here is a map. You may be able to orient yourself.

A. I think it was Church, Trinity and Vesey. They were a bunch of car fires here on Vesey Street, and there was a couple of guys dressed in civilian clothes operating a hose line, so we took that from them and started trying to start putting out these car fires.

We were kind of hindered because of the lack of water, was like really bad water pressure, but we did the best we could, and we stayed there for I don't know how long exactly. We stayed there for awhile, started putting out -- trying to put out these car fires.

Later on World Trade Center, I guess, Building 5, that was burning. They saw a couple of firefighters on the roof. They brought a couple of trunks over trying to get the aerial up and trying to get a tower ladder up. The building was too tall, I believe, and they hooked up the -- I believe they got out. They came down. A little while later I saw a couple of guys coming out of there, and the tower ladder started trying to put out the fire there.

We went up to Fulton and rather Vesey -- no, Fulton and Broadway. I think it was 212. They brought an engine down to try to pump more water to the tower ladder. We stayed in this area trying to help with the hoses, help the tower ladders getting set up on Building 4 and 5.

Q. Any other companies that were there with you besides the guys at 284?

A. I saw apparatus from tower ladder -- now I can't remember the numbers.

Q. I know.

A. It's a mess.

Q. Most of us can't remember too much of that day.

A. We stayed in this area for awhile.

Q. Those building were going pretty merrily.

A. Yes.

Q. I didn't get around to that point. I stayed on West and Vesey, West and Liberty most of the time there. I saw some shots of that, the two, four and five, and they were going pretty good.

A. I mean, they had a couple like three or four tower ladders going, but the pressure wasn't there.

Q. The pressure wasn't there. You couldn't do much with it, no.

A. Couldn't do much with it. We stayed in this area for awhile, and we started wandering around, and we came around to where like 6 and 7 were, and actually 7, we were coming down this corner going to try to find something to do, and that's when they were telling us 7 is going to go, 7 is going to go, so we kind of backed away.

Then we made our way back down. I believe it looks like Trinity here, and there was a building on fire. I believe it was -- I'm not exactly sure.

Q. I think 1 Liberty was on fire.

A. I'm talking about further down, down in here. There was a fire in the basement. We took some hose off. I think it was 321, and we were trying to hook up to the standpipe, get water to the building's system, and then we went down into the basement of a building. We had -- the chief there didn't want anybody going down unless we had masks on. We had found masks. We went down, and we were trying to open -- force the door. We could feel it was hot, but they lost water pressure, so they evacuated the building.

And for a couple of hours they couldn't get water pressure. Saw smoke coming out of that building and we knew, you know, it was probably going, started going again rather well, but we just didn't have the pressure for it. You know, it was chaos, and nobody knew what was going on.

We did a search an of building. I don't even know where. There was a bar and a building next to it. It got hit pretty bad, looked like from debris and stuff like that. Did a quick search of the building, and it was empty. There was a dog in the bathtub, but it was a big dog, and we just left it there.

I mean, I think a little while later we made our way down to West and Liberty, see what was going on down there. There was nothing much we could do. Didn't look like anybody needed help.

A lot of guys hanging around, looking for something to do, and then I was going back up to Trinity, and that's pretty much where we stayed for the rest of the day.

Q. And then you just took off? Relieved or just too tired? How did you get back?

A. We were kind of tired, and then walked down to battery -- to the tunnel.

Q. You walked through the tunnel?

A. They gave us a ride through the tunnel, and the chief we were with, his car was parked on the other side, and he gave us a ride back to quarters.

Q. Great, good. Very good.

A. And, you know, everybody knows the water pressure seemed to be the biggest problem.

Q. Yeah, the water pressure was shot. We tried after the first collapse. We tried to test some hydrants, and they had water, but there was absolutely no pressure on them.

A. And then, you know, later on at night we helped them trying to search, but there was so many people on the pile, and too many people running over each other.

Q. Exactly. Nobody was hurt.

A. We went around trying to help out wherever we could.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTIS: I thank you.

That concludes the interview. It's approximately 11:15.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PETE CASTELLANO

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTIS: Today's date is December 27, 2001. The time is approximately 1155 hours. I am Battalion Chief Art Lakiotis, safety command, New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with -- FIREFIGHTER CASTELLANO: Fireman Castellano, 149.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTIS: Fireman Castellano, Ladder 149.

This is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Pete, if you just take me through when you started the response and how the events of the day just kind of unfolded for you.

A. I was working that day. We were scheduled for educational day. We got up to the rock. We went into house watch.

The first plane hit. We were watching it on TV. We started getting ready to go. The second plane hit. They told everybody go back to quarters, get your rigs and respond from quarters. We jumped in our cars, and we started going back to quarters. We took the BQE back to quarters. We got around the Manhattan Bridge. I saw Tower 2 come down.

We went back to quarters. Our rig was already gone. The night crew must have taken the rig, but we didn't know. We grabbed our gear. We started heading over to Manhattan. We got to the tunnel. They wouldn't let anybody through the tunnel, so we started going to the Brooklyn Bridge. We went to the Brooklyn Bridge. People were running over the Brooklyn Bridge.

We couldn't take the cars, so we started walking over. As we were going halfway over, a car came across with a couple of firemen, and we jumped on top of the car. We got across.

We walked down to Broadway. They had a command center set up there. The captain was looking for some men. He asked me if I wanted to work with him. We hooked up with him. We were waiting for orders. Meanwhile, guys were coming out of Broadway from the building.

Now, I'm not sure when the Tower 2 came down, if we were coming over the bridge or when we got onto Broadway, but the smoke got heavy again, and I seen Tommy McGoff, Lieutenant McGoff, coming from up Broadway. He was dazed. He just kept on walking. I tried to talk to him.

And then we went back to the command center, waited more time, and we got no orders, so we kind of went on our own into the area, the trade center area. We met a chief. He was looking for tower ladder guys. We operated with him for awhile. We were ordered down from the tower ladder because of a possible collapse at Tower 7. We went from there -- we went to West Street.

Another chief asked us to search financial center Building 1, see if anybody was in the building. We started making a search of that building. We were ordered out of that building. We got -- like collapsed. We were ordered out of that building.

Came down. Sat around for a little while waiting for another command. Building 2 or Building 7 about this time came down. There's some things that we did between that time, but Building 7 came down.

Went back onto the pile. Started, you know, looking through the pile, and, you know, what we could find, and then we came off the pile again. We hooked up with more of our guys, and we went back to Church Street, because our rig was on Church Street. We were looking for the guys that were working that day, that night, the night tour, and we hooked up with some of the guys from the night tour.

We operated on Church Street with the tower. We did searches in buildings. Ten o'clock came. Some guys left. Some guys stayed. We hooked up with -- I hooked up -- me and Freddy with Vinnie Marsala -- hooked up with 18 engine and rescue 3, and we started working on a guy that was trapped on top of an elevator shaft, and I wound up working my way down to the elevator shaft.

I held the line for them while they tried to vent the hose. Worked there for a few hours. They relieved us. Another company -- another two companies relieved the guys that were in the hole. I came out of the hole, went back to the rig. Me and Freddy Marsala went back to the rig.

I got on the radio, and I asked the dispatcher -- it was around six o'clock in the morning. I asked what him does he want us to do with the rig. I got the rig. There's nobody else -- me and another fireman at the rig. He told me to hang on for a second. Hang on. He'll get back to me.

About a half hour later, he got back to us. He says, "Get whatever equipment that you can get. Go back to quarters." So we took -- scavenged up whatever equipment we could scavenge up. We took the rig back to quarters. We got our rig back into service at quarters and left the firehouse around -- I guess around 10 or 11.

Q. The lieutenant you said you saw, what unit was he from? Come up Broadway dazed?

A. Oh, like I seen Tommy McGoff, Lieutenant McGoff.

Q. From?

A. Downtown Brooklyn company. I found out later he was there when the first fireman was killed by a jumper, and he went to help the fireman, and half his company went into the tower, and they were lost, and he couldn't find them. That's why he was in the state he was in, but that was -- I heard that story later.

I didn't know what the story was. I tried to talk to him, but he just kept on walking, and that's -- and then there's a lot of other stories. You know, that's the basics of what I did that day.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTIS: Very good. The time is about approximately 12:05, and that concludes the interview. Thanks, Pete.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER FRED MARSILLA

Interview Date: December 27, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 27, 2001. The time is approximately 1220 hours. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes. Safety Command, New York City Fire Department.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Fred Marsilla, Firefighter first grade.

Q. Ladder 149. Regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Fred, if you would just take me through your day as the events unfolded for you and your experience of that day.

A. Okay. As I recall, I was just about to finish my 24 tour, when we were watching TV, and saw the first plane hit, reports of it, and they didn't know what it was and the tour to come on wasn't supposed to be coming in that day because of educational day, so I had to wait until 9 o'clock to be relieved. Actually 9 o'clock came around and we were out of service at the time. I believe the second plane hit a little after nine, 9:03 or so. Being that we were all off duty technically, we had the response ticket saying that we were off duty.

Second plane hits and everyone is still here. We couldn't believe what we were seeing. Immediately our Lieutenant called over to the Chief and asked him if we were going to be in service or not. The Chief actually told him no, stay out of service. At that reply, Lieutenant told him no way, we are going to be in service, I'm calling dispatch to tell them we are going to stay in service. We did that and immediately after, we told the dispatcher, they sent us down to the mustering station at the Battery Tunnel. We were like 7th to arrive there. They sent 5 units across. The last unit I don't believe made it through. I think it was 228. They had closed it due to reports of a collapse.

As we looked in horror, the first one came down and that's probably what it was that caught them in there, much to our disbelief. We couldn't believe that this was happening obviously. No one could.

At this point, the Chief sent a few companies inside to help them, help get some of the civilians out that were stuck in the tunnel. They told us and the companies behind us start mustering at the Brooklyn Bridge. We went over there and were the first on the bridge. The amount of people that were coming over that bridge covered in debris was really an incredible sight.

Second one comes down at this point. They sent us over immediately after it comes down. We muster, originally I believe at Church and Chambers. Actually, let me see what street I came over the tunnel with. I believe that was Chambers and Church. Perfect. Originally it was Chambers and Church. Then they sent us all the way down to Chambers and West, right by the Manhattan complex there.

Q. Stuyvesant High School, the big white bridge that's there?

A. Right.

Q. Yes.

A. Is that Manhattan Community College also?

Q. I think Manhattan Community College is on the east side and Stuyvesant High School is on the west side.

A. Right. That's where they sent us. We all took our gear and prepared to do what we had to do. Had a little scare there at Stuyvesant, saying there was a secondary device and we all ran. Upon reassembling, the Chief sent us down to Vesey and West. Upon getting down to Vesey and West, they told the officer to man Ladder 12. So I jumped in the bucket with another one of my members. They tried to supply us water as best as they could. It was very bad pressure. We were pouring water on, I believe the customs building there. Customs building, Ladder 3 and hazmat truck. Incredible, incredible stuff.

At this point, 7, which is right there on Vesey, the whole corner of the building was missing. I was thinking to myself we are in a bad place, because it was the corner facing us. But you do what you got to do as usual. We operated till they finally started pulling people back. At that point they had reports of people missing in the customs building garage. The officer went down there with a squad company, I believe, and he started searching. I followed him into the garage area and he told me to wait there for him and give him a guide in case he needed help out.

I waited there until he made it back out. He got back out.

Q. Do you know what officer that was?

A. Officer -- Lieutenant Stringer, yes. He went in actually --

Q. Lieutenant Stringer?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that your officer?

A. Uh-huh. Actually I waited at the garage door like he told me and provided light for him to come back and he finally came back and we reported back to Vesey and West. At that point, they were backing some of the units out. I don't exactly recall if we stayed there quite a while or not, but I do remember going around the Financial Center at that point, the American Express building, through the back yard there and you could see through the atrium.

Q. We must have passed each other a number of times?

A. Yes.

Q. Because I did that route a few times.

A. Then around that area and then as you came around, then you get the other view from the other side because it was closed off, that building, the pedestrian bridge going down. That whole other area was basically closed off to the rest of the units.

Got around to that side. That's when we saw the incredible things that took place and the amount of bravery that everybody was taking to try and help as best as they can. Bucket lines and people digging. Debris was incredible, how much of it was across the street. You couldn't even tell the street from the sidewalk. It didn't look like a big pile at first, but you realized it later on because it was a gradual outlaying of material. It gradually increased in height as you went along, so it was like climbing a hill, you really don't know how high you are until you are up there.

Q. The perception wasn't real till you saw firemen standing on the pile. You could barely see them.

A. Barely see them.

Q. Then you have a perception of the mass that was there.

A. How deep it was. And how high it is. I mean you were actually standing sometimes 15, 20 stories up. It wasn't that much of a fall, because there was a lot of material along the way.

Q. Yes, but it was --

A. It was just incredible. We operated there, I told the officer we should have a designated point where we should meet in case we get lost. So we operated there for a while and probably throughout the course of the day we got lost a couple of times from each other, but we always found each other back. Like I said, we were probably there from 10 o'clock till, I didn't say this before, but being that we worked that day, 10 o'clock till later on at that night, till 12 or so. And just running into the other brothers from our fire house, guys that called on recall. Somehow we all seemed to find each other.

We worked together for a while here. Worked together for a while there. Rested a little bit. They pulled us back, I think it was like probably between 4 and 6, because of 7. 7 was the concern at that time. I didn't even hear it come down. Didn't hear it come down.

Q. Where were you?

A. I was right by the marina. So I guess it was a building in front of me that protected me from the noise, the rubble, plus there was so much noise going on with the machinery and the people there. Lot of background stuff going on. Never saw it come down.

I guess they waited till it cleared up and then we went back in again, did what we had to do. Took quick breaks when we needed them, because at that point, no one was -- everybody was just -- work best you can.

Q. Running on adrenaline?

A. Yes.

Q. Yes.

A. 12 o'clock rolls around and most of the brothers at this point just wanted to take a blow so they could regroup for the next day. It might have even have been later, I just remember that time for some reason. We all walked over to 6, Engine 6. Some guys wanted to take showers, some guys wanted to clean up. They had no electricity, no water, so a lot of guys decided to just make it to the bridge. Some guys who came on the recall went in their own cars and they went home. I decided to stay. I just --- I couldn't leave.

Pete and I made our way back. Pete Castellano stayed with me. We made our way back to the scene. Actually cleaned up a little, found a place that did have water. Cleaned up a little, made it back to the scene. I believe we started helping the companies that were on the scene from the front of the building at this time. This point we found our rig, which was located on Church and Fulton. So we had a good reference point as to what to go to. They had operated on the plaza's buildings there in front.

Q. Number 5?

A. Yes, they were engulfed with fire I heard.

Q. I saw pictures of that. Never made it around there, but I saw pictures of it.

A. Of it on fire?

Q. Oh, yes.

A. I didn't see that any of this.

Q. (inaudible)?

A. There was so much fire on every floor. Must have been a hell of a job just putting those out. Pete and I made our way down to the center between 4 and 5, and at that point they had located someone in an elevator shaft, so we all just, we formed a line passing stuff down.

Q. Bucket brigade?

A. Bucket brigade. It wasn't even a bucket brigade.

Q. But similar to it though.

A. Yes, similar to it.

Q. Bucket brigade with no buckets.

A. No buckets, just material. Acetylene torches and water and stokes and ladders. We were just passing them down to these guys. I stayed in the line with Pete. You know Pete, he's got to dig his nose in it there. He dug his way up to the front. He was actually helping them. He was holding the line for a while, trying to put down some of the fire, while all these guys were digging this guy out.

Around 4:00 o'clock from there, we went back to the rig. At this point it's freezing cold and we are all wet. I managed to have an extra shirt that I gave to Pete to put it on. We sat in the rig for a while and the rig wasn't being used. They were trying to get new companies in and out of there. No one would give us a straight answer if we could pull our rig out or not.

So we found -- actually I think we asked the dispatcher, I told him there were only 2 companies with the rig and that they wanted us to remain on the scene. They said no, go back and be prepared for the next day tour. So we ended up getting our rig, I drove back, drove our rig back. We got back by 6, 6:30 maybe. At that point, the guys who slept over, the guys who were coming in were coming in as well, so I took a shower, shower, the guys started cleaning up the rig as best as they could. Replenishing whatever they could on it, being that everything is depleted.

Q. They were all stripped. All the rigs are stripped.

A. Absolutely, all the rigs were stripped. Actually, we did have our cylinders, though, so -- and our masks. 9 o'clock came around and I had to go home and see the family and appreciate them a little bit.

Q. Yes.

A. Then I went home for that day and came back the next day for 24 hours.

Q. Very good. It was a tough day for everybody.

A. Yes, absolutely.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: That concludes the interview. It is approximately 12:35. Thank you, Pete.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER GERARD PISANO

Interview Date: December 27, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is December 27, 2001. The time is approximately 14 hundred hours. My name is Chief Art Lakiotes, Safety Command of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Gerard Pisano, Firefighter, Ladder 149.

Q. This is in regard to the events of September 11, 2001. Jerry, if you would, just take me through the day, how the events unfolded for you, and just kind of tell me.

A. That day we were assigned -- detailed to the rock for education day. As I was going to the rock, I was listening to the radio on the car, I heard that the first plane hit, a small commuter plane they called it. As I got to the rock, there was a TV playing in the front, and my Captain and three or four other members who were detailed there were watching the TV and we were assigned to come back -- actually as we were watching the TV, the second plane hit.

We were told right away to go back to our unit, where we would be, you know, everybody reassembled and probably get detailed down to the rock to the staging area, I mean to the site or to a staging area.

We did, we all got in our cars, we came back to the fire house. As we did that, the Captain that lives up the block was coming down the block. He took charge of us. About three or four cars got loaded up and we went to the staging area at, I believe Brooklyn Bridge. Actually we parked at Ladder 118's quarters, on that block, got together, we got as much hand tools and stuff. We walked over the bridge and we assembled over, I think it's Broadway and I forget what block that is. Let me see. Probably, yes, it was Broadway and Vesey. Right over there by Saint Pauls Church.

At that time it was -- you could tell there was a lot of things going on. We just waited to be assigned. That's about it. During the day, we were going back and forth. We were assigned to another officer and we were told to make a search somewhere, but we had no masks. We spent a good part of the day trying to find masks. There were no masks around. They were being worn by anybody that was on the recall, which I was pretty much. Working that day on the truck. So we had no masks. Then all we had was dust masks and that's all. We kind of like stood by for most of the day.

Then into the night, we were digging on the pile. Just free hand, you know, just going down there and doing whatever we could do.

Q. What time did you finally get back to the fire house, how did you get back to the fire house?

A. Our own car, we went back to 118. We got --

Q. You walked back --

A. Bus or something. I think we got a bus that was going over the bridge. We started walking over the Brooklyn Bridge and a bus was coming back with a bunch of firefighters. They stopped for us, we got on there and they let us off right on the other side, which our cars were parked, 118. We got into our cars and we came back here. Stayed here.

Then I went back to the site, World Trade Center, the next morning at 9 o'clock. Then that schedule came down, the A, B and C, 12 on, 12 off. 24 on, 24 off. I think it was the first day.

Q. Then they changed it to 24 --

A. They changed it very fast.

Q. They changed it a few times.

A. Few times.

Q. Where were you when the buildings collapsed, do you remember?

A. Yes, I was on -- I was in my car. I was on the BQE. Saw the first one, had a member in my car and I was driving and he told me there was -- that the building collapsed. I didn't believe him at first and then when I looked over, when I was able to look over, because I was following behind a police car, I was able to look over and I couldn't believe it. I saw the brown smoke.

Q. A lot of it. Amazing. Then were you at the Brooklyn Bridge when the second building came down?

A. No, when we came back. The second one, I think I was en route to the Brooklyn Bridge.

Q. Walking from 118's quarters?

A. Yes.

Q. It was very hard. A lot of people coming back the other direction?

A. Yes.

Q. Mass exodus. You were walking on the roadways or were you walking on the walkway?

A. I was on the walkway, and then actually one of the members was going across because he had all the tools in his car. I went across the catwalk to the roadway and I jumped into his car with a bunch of other people. Half the way over.

Q. Were you there when 7 came down?

A. Yes, I was there when 7 came down.

Q. Where were you then?

A. I was -- look at the map. I actually -- I think it was on -- let me see this.

Q. 7 was up on Vesey and West.

A. Okay. Right. I think I was on Murray.

Q. Behind it.

A. Yes. We walked all -- we actually -- we were doing actually fire duty. It was an Engine with just an officer and a chauffeur and we jumped into the Engine. That's where we got our masks for the night tour. There was masks on the rig. We jumped on there and there was some car fires on one of these blocks down here. I think we were on either Park or Barclay. That's where we were. We were on Barclay and figure like Church. When 7 came down, maybe we were on Park.

When 7 came down, there was a Lieutenant and another member and they went down. The Lieutenant went down, he was walking and he took a bad feed of dust. So we saw him. We ran over to him. We picked him up. We dragged him about a block up to Park and into one of those lobbies of an office building in it. During that time, we were given a man down Mayday. Officer down, member down, and we got EMS there right way and we got oxygen to him and stuff. I think he's doing okay.

BATTALION CHIEF LAKIOTES: That's good. Okay. This concludes the interview. It's approximately 1410.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: December 28, 2001. The time is 2:28 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Mike Regan of Engine 53 in the quarters of Engine 53.

Q. Mike, just tell us the events as you recall them from September 11?

A. Okay. Before we headed down to the Trade Center, we were assigned to a box on 42nd Street. We took that box in for a man stuck in an elevator. Took us a few minutes to get him out. We got back on the rig. They told us to stay 10-8. We started heading back, we started hearing Maydays and everything over the radio. Guys being stuck. We heard guys screaming, they were stuck under rigs. We weren't sure what was going on at the time.

At about that time, we got an okay from the dispatcher to head down that way. We shot across to the west side, we came up the West Side Drive, West Side Highway. We got off the rig. I don't know how many blocks. We were parked a few blocks north and we headed down. We got to about the pedestrian bridge, right off Liberty. Sorry, the one --

Q. The north bridge.

A. The north bridge. Right near Vesey. People started screaming and running towards us that the second building was coming down. We were unaware that the first building even came down. We didn't hear anything over the radio on it.

Q. You were working in the truck?

A. Sorry, yes, I was in the truck that day. The Engine went down before us. They went down on --

Q. Ladder 43?

A. Right. Okay. As everybody was running towards us, we waited for the cloud to disperse a little bit. Then we started heading in. People were running towards us. I was giving oxygen to people that were gasping for air, and when we finally got in there, there were a couple of Chiefs and a couple of people yelling and screaming about you know, fire over there, secondary explosions and we stretched a line off a rig and started putting out fires, me and Jerry Suden. Lieutenant Rohan told us to stay with that, that we would team back up.

I guess we were operating for -- it's hard to tell time, I mean time, time was so -- but we put out, I don't know, a couple of trucks, a couple of rigs, a couple of civilian cars, then they started taking guys off the roof of, I think it was building 6. We helped them take them down in the stretchers. We got a few of them out. We teamed back up with Lieutenant Rohan.

He got an assignment to -- he heard there was a Mayday for -- Battalion 2 was stuck inside. We hooked up with him and Battalion Chief Ferran. So it was me, Jerry Suden, Lieutenant Rohan, Johnny Colon, all from 43 Truck, and we headed over towards -- we went down Vesey to Church Street. We went into building number 5. We headed down the escalator of building number 5 and then we headed up into -- looked like a big crater. We found out later on that Chief Picciotto had some kind of megaphone. He had that going, and we started heading up that way.

We made it -- couple of us made it up there. There were a couple of guys coming back down that were hurt, so me and I think it was Todd Frederickson helped them down, back out of the crater. We took them down, EMS met us down in the bottom of building 5. They brought them back up to the ambulance. We went back in and it wasn't as clear as it was when we first were in there. They already went ahead, Rohan and a couple of the other guys.

We were calling for them. We couldn't get to them. They kept on going up. We stayed there for a while. We couldn't get in touch with them so Ferran was with us at that time. He came back out with us. We regrouped in building 5, we got a bunch of guys together, we went out on to Church Street and we got some tools. He wanted to go back in and try to find another way in. We ended up coming around Church Street. I think we went down Liberty over to the west side. We tried getting in that way. They ended up coming out on the west side. That's where we hooked back up with them. That's about all.

They wouldn't let us back in. I don't know what else.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. That's good Mike. Thanks a lot Mike, for your help. The time now is 2:34 p.m. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DENNIS FISCHER

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: December 28, 2001. The time is 3:07 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion for the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Dennis Fischer, Firefighter from Engine 35 in the quarters of Engine 36.

Q. Dennis, just tell us the events as you recall them on September 11.

A. Okay, basically I remember being in house watch slightly after 9 o'clock and seeing an explosion in one of the Trade Centers and shortly after that while I was still in house watch, we actually watched live the second plane hit the second building. As far as I can remember, we started gathering up all the tools we could because obviously we knew something big was going down.

I think maybe 15 minutes after the second plane hit, we got the call to go down. The ticket came in and we headed down. We didn't know at the time on our way down, during our trip down on West Street, the first tower had collapsed. That we found out afterwards. We didn't even know the first tower was down. We arrived down on West Street. I believe we stopped somewhere originally around West Street and Chambers Street and slowly we got a little bit closer. We had a Battalion Chief with us, got us a little bit closer so we weren't going to have to carry our equipment that far.

We passed a bunch of rigs parked along West Street. I'm not exactly sure where we stopped. I'm going to venture a guess it was somewhere between Chambers and Murray Street on the southbound side of West Street.

Q. Who was the Battalion Chief you were with?

A. Yes, actually I was with on Engine 35, it was Lieutenant Whalen was the officer that day and Billy Van Name was driving. I was on the -- I was in the back with myself, Keith Schroeder, Jim Powers, Brendan Lowrey and a Battalion Chief Mark Ferran also had jumped on the rig and came down with us and Lieutenant Mike Hadden also came on the rig with us. We had a total of about 8 people.

Chief Ferran was able to get us a little bit closer and we wind up parking. About that time, Chief Ferran and Lieutenant Hadden walked ahead of us a little bit, trying to find out what was going on and myself and the rest of 35, we grabbed our equipment, our rollups, control bag and we started walking down West Street. Basically we made it pretty far down towards the Trade Center area. I believe we stopped somewhere between Murray Street and Vesey Street. I think we pretty much made it almost to Vesey Street and right behind an ambulance parked on the side of the road, a Lieutenant instructed us to drop our gear.

A couple of us looked up at the building. One of the firemen had mentioned he didn't think he saw the first tower. A couple of us gazed up and we weren't sure if we saw one or not. Time is kind of fuzzy, but I would say maybe a minute after we dropped our gear, the Lieutenant was going to walk up to the command post and find out what was going on.

He got maybe 40 to 50 feet ahead of us. At that point, a bunch of people started running towards us, running north on West Street. At that point, a police officer stopped briefly as he was running by us. He said guys -- can I say what he said?

Q. Yes.

A. Guys, get the fuck out of here that building is going to come down. It's coming down. That building is coming down. We looked at each other. We kind of looked around, we didn't really think it was going to happen. Maybe 15, 20 seconds after he said that, we heard the rumbling. We looked up, that I remember as plain as day. I looked up and I saw from the top, I actually watched it with my own eyes, I saw the top start to pancake down. I remember looking at the proby I was with. We looked at each other in amazement. The time seemed to like stand still for a second. We looked at each other. We looked back up. We looked back at each other. It seemed like a bunch of time went by. It was probably like a fraction of a second. Everybody started just running the other way. I saw my Lieutenant as I was looking forward that was ahead of me running towards me, just waving me, just run, run. We just left our gear and just started running north on West Street.

I remember looking back and once it was all coming down, I was obviously far enough away where I wasn't going to be hit with debris, but I remember the cloud coming towards me and I remember thinking this is going to come get me faster than I can get away from this. I remember for a split second I wasn't sure if it was heat or smoke or -- I didn't know what was going to happen. I thought maybe we would get incinerated. I didn't know if it was just a ball of fire. I didn't know it was just dust.

The cloud of dust pretty much caught up to us. It overtook us and there was never really a time though that you couldn't breathe. It was really thick around you, but there was never a time when you couldn't get enough oxygen. I remember in the confusion running, I lost most of the company, just took off for themselves, we lost each other. I remember following the light blue shirt of my officer and I wound up in Stuyvesant High School, a little bit further north. I just kept running until I saw him ditch off to the side. Somebody was waving us into the high school from the front doors.

I jumped into there, into Stuyvesant High School and found one other guy from my company. We stayed in there for about maybe 2 minutes, until the big cloud of dust. It was like black outside, completely black. Even after just a couple of minutes it started lightening up, so we figured it was okay. So we grabbed a couple of masks that were just random on the ground. There was equipment laying everywhere. Couple of guys were just taking a blow. Me and my officer took masks. We threw on the masks and we walked out of Stuyvesant High School and started looking for the rest of our company.

Within about 15 minutes, we found everybody from Engine 35. A few of us were in the high school. We found a few guys on the street. We ran into Chief Ferran. We knew that we had everybody we came down with. Except for Lieutenant Hadden. The last we saw him, we knew that he walked further up north with Chief Ferran, but Chief Ferran had lost Lieutenant Hadden. Afterwards I know they might have been walking up, trying to meet people at the command post, so I teamed up with Chief Ferran and we searched the area for a little while.

Lieutenant Whalen and one of the other guys from 35 were searching the area. We switched to a different channel. We were looking back and forth to each other. A little bit of time went by, maybe 15 minutes, we found Lieutenant Hadden. We had everybody accounted for. After that we just did anything we could. We picked up a line here and there. We put out a couple of car fires and I would say within 20 minutes of the initial -- after the second collapse, myself, Keith Schroeder from 35 and one of the Lieutenants from 35, Lieutenant Hadden, we actually found a hand line from -- I'm not even sure, maybe 24 Engine somewhere, it was a two and a half. We operated a line underneath the second foot bridge that was collapsed.

Q. The northern foot bridge, by Vesey?

A. Yes, the first foot bridge over there. It was collapsed in one spot. There was about a 3 foot opening. There was a void underneath about -- you were able to crawl. You couldn't stand up. There was one guy from Squad in there and another fireman. I don't know who it was, but there was a couple of crushed rigs under there and a couple of cars. The cars were on fire underneath there and so was the rig, so all we basically tried to do, we went for the rig first, we tried to extinguish the fire in the cab, hoping maybe we could find a fireman in the cab. It was crushed too far to get anybody out. We didn't even know if there was anybody in there.

The car fires, we tried to put out. They were starting to light up underneath there. We didn't have much room at that point. A Chief and my other Lieutenant from 35 just made a motion for to us get the hell out of there. They thought maybe that thing was going to come down on us. It felt like kind of a futile effort at the time. We were just doing anything we could. I guess that was -- I guess that pretty much -- when we came out of the foot bridge, that had to be at least now about 45 minutes after the second collapse.

Then we just kind of regrouped and took a little blow after that. That was the immediate stuff that we did.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: That's fine, Dennis. The time now is 3:15 p.m. This concludes the interview. Thank you Dennis.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 28, 2001. The time is 1:38 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Todd Fredrickson, Firefighter from Ladder 43 in the quarters of Ladder 43.

Q. Todd, just tell your story as you recall it from September 11.

A. We responded down West Side Highway, we didn't get that close because there were so many rigs backed up, so we got out of the rig. We started walking down. We got pretty much to West and Vesey when the building collapsed. A big cloud of smoke was coming down. We tried forcing the gate right next to a building in an effort to get everybody that was running down the street into somewhere that was a little more secluded.

But by the time we were getting through the gate, the cloud was already on us. I guess guys didn't know if it was going to be hot or not. Some guys were putting their mask on. It wound up not being hot and we just started making our way down the street towards the World Trade Center. On the way down there was a cop. I guess we had jumped in the back of his police car, which I guess you can't get out of once you got in.

We got him out of there and then we just kept walking down. There was a bunch of fires all over the place. Stuff burning across the street, cars, cars, rigs. It was -- someone gave a signal for an EMS, the police emergency unit, whatever it's called.

Q. A 10-13?

A. No, whatever the police's rig. Emergency response.

Q. ESU?

A. Yes, ESU. They had one of their rigs on fire. They said there was ammunition in there so we were stretching a line there initially to put that out. I started jumping up on rigs and just putting the deck guns on and spraying it wherever there was fire. It was all over. Then we realized that that wasn't really what was important right now so we started moving towards the rubble.

Someone gave a Mayday. I guess it was someone trapped under one of the pedestrian bridges. We started to go under there to look. One of the Chiefs pulled us out of there. He said don't go under there. I saw them -- it was pretty chaotic. So we started to move towards, I believe it was this building, it was a black building, US customs building. That was still standing or relatively still standing. I'm not sure if it was the lower portion of one of the buildings, like a vestibule. It was like 4 or 5 stories.

We put a ladder up. We went up there and there was a fireman that had been killed. He was obviously dead and we just put a -- his jacket over him and then we just kept searching. We hooked up with one of the Chiefs there, Mark Ferran. Me, Lieutenant Rohan, who else was there, Johnny Colon and the Chief were all up there. We had radio contact with Chief Picciotto and a couple of guys he was trapped with. We had no idea where they were. They were telling us where they were, but we didn't really know what everything was, because we are not familiar with the layout down there and it was very confusing as far as the rubble was all piled on top of everything.

So they said they were probably on the fifth, sixth floor of a building in the stairwell, so we started searching. We got up on that vestibule. We were searching in there. We couldn't really find -- we couldn't really get a good idea where we were going. We decided we would pull out of there and we searched for a while in there and a couple of stairwells and we realized that it probably wasn't even the right building, so we went back down and I think we came out back where we were. We came out on Vesey Street.

Then we decided to grab some tools and then we started heading down towards Church Street. Then we made a right on Trinity and we came in through the other side. A lot of it I'm confused about, where I was at particular times. We actually wound up coming down in through that underground area, promenade, I don't know what they call it, the lower portion of the Trade Center. Like there is a little mall down there.

We were just trying to get to where we thought they would be, so we came into this one area down below there. We sort of split up. The Chief and myself went up through this hole. Everybody else followed Lieutenant Rohan. We had hooked up with a couple of guys from our company, Bobby Markardt, a couple of other guys. I think Mike Regan was with them, I think Johnny Colon was there. Tom Corrigan. They had went into an escalator, they went sort of under the rubble and up an escalator. They went one way. We sort of branched out to try to have two prongs of getting them.

Me and the Chief went up through this hole up into the rubble and on top of the rubble. At that point, there was a security guard that was stumbling through the rubble and there was a fireman who had -- he had his bunker pants on and a T-shirt, and his suspenders. Everything else was missing. He was in bad shape. I was the only guy that had a mask on at that point.

I had it with me. I wasn't wearing it, and the Chief and other guys come and blow because there was still a lot of smoke in there and there was all smoke and it was hot. Chief is like, take these guys out. I took two guys. Actually there was another fireman there. I don't know what company he was from. This is after the buildings fell.

Me and that other fireman took -- actually the other fireman, I know what company he was from, but he said he was in the subway when it collapsed. He wasn't in the collapse itself, but he was -- I guess he just hugged the wall and he thought he was in badder shape than he was and he finally came up the subway and I just sort of wound up hooking up with him.

Me and him dragged -- we got a security guard who could walk and the other guy was in bad shape. We dragged him out. He kept laying down and saying leave me. Leave me. I'm going to die. I said listen, get up, because there is other people that want to get out of here, so don't fucking play this game. He thought he was in the movies or something.

We dragged him out, we didn't go out the same way we came in. We went down the subway and back up the subway. I'm not really sure where we came out. I'm going to say we came out back over here because I was going in the original direction, then I ran into some firemen and they said your best way out is down the subway and back up. We took those two guys down, laid them in the street and one guy they just put in the ambulance and the other guy was just getting treatment.

Q. That was probably Church Street where you are talking about?

A. I'm going to say it was Church Street. Actually there was a picture in Time Magazine of just where we had brought the guy out. I don't know -- there was a subway station right there. I don't really know where it was, but assuming it was there, I grabbed a bottle of water and then I started heading back.

As I was going back, the Chief, he got turned around in the smoke or something and he couldn't find the hole that we came back up. So I started making a move towards him a little quicker. On my way there, they were pulling everybody out. So the Chief is like, you can't go in there, you can't go in there. I'm like well, there is a Chief trapped in there. I guess they thought that I was delirious or something. They are like oh, no, we searched in there. I'm like all right. Whatever. I wasn't going to stand there and argue with them, so I just kept going to where the hole I went in.

Went back up that hole. The Chief was -- I had to go into the hole and then walk a ways until I finally saw the Chief and I'm like Chief, over here. I went back out that hole. The radio was starting to die because we just had been using them so long. I mean this is going on for hours and hours. I'm just giving you the more pertinent points.

The Chief's radio was just about dead. Mine was still sort of working. We were getting calls from Chief Picciotto. He had a bull horn and he was hitting that off. We could hear where it was coming from, but all you could see was smoke. You had no idea if it was up or down. You knew it was up, but you didn't know if there was a drop or what was going on.

We started to make a move there and the Chief was like no, let's try coming from a different way, because it seemed like it was pretty far away from us. We went back out, I think -- I'm going to say it was just me and the Chief right now. I think we ran into Johnny Colon. We came back out to Trinity, I'm not really sure where we came out.

Q. Okay.

A. I'm going to say we came back out. We walked, I think around and we came back to West Side Highway and there was a bunch of Chiefs here. Then he was talking to the Chiefs for a while. Everybody was pretty shot, you know. We were drinking out of the can and everybody was pretty exhausted. We got there. There was a couple of Chiefs arguing. No one really knew what to do. It was pretty chaotic. The Chiefs are saying don't go in, don't go in, and then Chief Ferran was like, let's go in, we have to find these guys.

Now at this point we thought Lieutenant Rohan was lost too because their radios were dead and there was no contact with them. So now we are like, we lost those guys, because we didn't know what was going on there. We started headed back into the rubble and I think we went into the 3 World Trade Center. The building was half demolished. We went in, we climbed up over on top of the rubble till we get to a window. We went in the window and we searched in there for a while.

We hooked up with a retired guy and another guy, I don't know where he was from. We searched with those guys for a while. We searched that building and then we started making another move in and we got pulled out again, because I guess the Chiefs were getting more of control in the situation. They pulled everybody out of there.

They conversed for a while and one of the guys from 22, I think it was 22 or 13, his brother was lost in there. He is going what the fuck is everyone standing around here for, let's go in, let's give one more push, so I hooked up with him and two other firemen, went back in and searched around for a while. He started to realize it was sort of futile and everybody was shot. We pulled back out and that was pretty much the end of what we did.

But I mean that was eight hours into -- I mean it was probably like four or five o'clock before we stopped. Then we all went down to the water. Then we ran into Lieutenant Rohan about a half an hour later. We realized that they were okay and that they had pulled out the Chief, Chief Picciotto, and the guys from, I think it was 6 or 7 truck. That's all the pertinent information I can think.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. That's good.

Thank you Todd, if you have anything else you want to discuss, okay. Well, thank you for your help. The time now is 1:50 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT GLEN ROHAN

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is December 28, 2001, and the time is 12:55 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant Glen Rohan from Ladder 43 in the quarters of Ladder 43.

Q. Glen, just state the facts as you remember them from September 11th.

A. Okay. Ladder 43 was assigned after the second plane hit the second tower. Engine 53 went on the box, went out on the second fifth alarm to respond to the Trade Center. Approximately two minutes later we got a box to respond to 41st Street for a pedestrian with their foot stuck in a turnstile at 41st and Lexington Avenue.

So we proceeded to that box and found -- there was an ambulance there already. We did find a pedestrian with their foot stuck. 43 truck helped the maintenance people in the building get the person out, and we left and gave a signal 1037 for that box.

We made ourselves available. I asked the dispatcher if he wanted me to proceed south to the World Trade Center. We could see the heavy smoke heading north up the island. There wasn't any reports of any collapses of the building or anything like that, but we knew it was a difficult job and we wanted to get in on it. But the dispatchers told us to remain 10-8 and make ourselves available.

So we proceeded up Third Avenue heading back towards quarters, heading north up Third Avenue, when we heard a radio report on the department radio of somebody who screamed on the radio that they needed help. It was indiscernible, most of the words, but asking for help, saying things like "collapse," saying things like "people hurt," "buildings collapsed." The dispatcher wasn't able to identify who was transmitting and tried to get the person to calm down, but it sounded like something bad had happened.

The dispatcher then called for Manhattan to field comm., called twice, "Manhattan to field comm." There was no reply.

Then the dispatcher asked "Manhattan to the 1st Division." There was no reply. "Manhattan to the 3rd Division." No reply.

I turned to my chauffeur, Johnny Colon, and I said, "Johnny, this is bad. Something happened. I think the building, part of it, maybe, might have come down, the top part over the planes or something."

He then asked, "Manhattan to any units operating at the World Trade Center," and there was no response. So I said, "I have to get involved in this." I called the dispatcher and I said, "43 to Manhattan. We're on 57th Street and the West Side Highway," which is an entrance to the West Side Highway, which we were close. I said, "I'm going to head south and tell you what's going on." He said, "Go ahead, 43, take it in." So at that point, now, we were assigned to the box.

So we headed down the West Side Highway. There was absolutely zero traffic. We flew down there in probably two minutes. There was no reports on the radio of any collapse of the building. We could see a lot of smoke heading north, and we could only see one tower still remaining.

But from our angle and how I wasn't really sure how the buildings were configured down there, I thought maybe the building is being blocked by one of the buildings or maybe part of it came down and the rest of it is in smoke. Not enough for me to make a call to say I think the building is down. But we knew there had to be a partial collapse or something.

There was a lot of people heading -- thousands of people, it seemed, were running north on West Street. We proceeded down West as far south as we can go, and we parked at approximately Barclay Street. Probably between Murray and Barclay is where we stopped the rig.

We got everybody off the rig. We got a game plan, made sure everybody knew what our plan of attack would be and not to be running and not to be bringing the wrong tools, stuff like that.

We got it together, and we were walking south now down the West Side Highway, West Street. We got approximately to Vesey, a little further past Vesey, I would say about 200 feet from the tower, when we heard a noise. I wouldn't even call it an explosion, but it was enough to make you look up.

When we looked up, you could see things coming off the sides of the building of what was then number One World Trade Center. We looked at it for probably about five seconds before I realized that this building is coming down. There was a lot of people standing around looking up. I just said, "Let's get out of here." We ran north up the West Side Highway.

We got back to about Barclay Street, maybe around the New York Telephone Company building, and ducked into like a service center or loading dock of the New York Telephone Company building and let the cloud try to go by. As it did go by, as it flew by us, and then actually there was so much of it circled us and enveloped us.

At that point we all put our masks on, and we just hooked up a search rope and started walking back south. When we got to around the pedestrian bridge, that had been collapsed on top of rigs. We started searching through the rigs.

A lot of Fire Department apparatus were under the pedestrian bridge. A lot of them were a little north of the pedestrian bridge. We couldn't see anything south of the pedestrian bridge because it was blocking our whole entrance into the World Trade Center. There was a lot of automobile fires, a lot of Fire Department apparatus fires.

I responded with six firefighters. One guy had stayed back. He was going off duty in the morning, Frank Macchia. I said, "Frank, there's probably going to be a recall here because there's two planes in the towers." So he took the run in with us.

I split the team up into two teams. Some guys were putting out car fires, and some of us were searching through the rubble, just surface rubble, surface search, seeing if we could find somebody or something. There was just a lot of guys that were walking around like in shell shock, one and two pair guys. There was just nothing organized. Everything was chaotic. People were looking to do something, but they really didn't know what to do.

So luckily while we were searching right around the pedestrian bridge trying to look underneath the bridge to try to get into the rigs that were on fire underneath the bridge, I ran into Chief Ferran of the 12th Battalion, who at that time told me that we have some members that are trapped and on the radio in One World Trade Center.

I said, "Great. We've got a team. Let's go get them." It was a relief to get an assignment, because it was such a chaotic experience going on down there.

So all we had to do was figure out which building was One World Trade Center, because we were given this report. At that time Chief Ferran just told me, "Richie is stuck." And I didn't know who Richie was, but I knew Richie was a fireman. It ended up it was Chief Picciotto of the 11th Battalion.

He said, "Richie is stuck with some other guys, Jay Jonas, and they're in One World Trade Center, stairway A." I said, "Great." Now we had to find out which building was One World Trade Center, because none of us knew what the configuration was or what it used to be.

So we were asking a lot of people. No one really seemed to know. So we assembled our team, and we went up a 35 foot extension ladder that was raised against Six World Trade Center. We tried to get through that into Trade Center number one.

That's the first time I saw a firefighter that was dead. It was on like a balcony around Six World Trade Center. I believe it was a member of Engine 1.

We tried to get through Six World Trade Center, and we couldn't get there. It was collapsed in the rear in the east side of it and the west side of it, and we couldn't make it through. We went down through Six World Trade Center into a parking garage and exited on Vesey Street.

I said, "Chief, the only way we're going to get into the other side of this collapse" -- because all they could tell us was they were in a collapsed crater-looking like area. So I said it must be the center.

We went out on Vesey and headed east on Vesey to Church Street, made a right on Church Street and headed south towards Trinity towards the Millennium Hotel. Now building number five was on our right.

At that point I ran into members of Engine 53, who were working a pumper into fires that were burning around building number five. There were also members from 43 Truck with 53 Engine putting out these car fires, and they hooked up with us.

So now I had even more guys with me, because they wanted to know where we were going. We said, "We got an assignment. We've got to get these guys out that were trapped. We just have to find where World Trade Center number one is." So we hooked up with four other firefighters from my company.

When we went to the east entrance, eastern exposure of trade tower number five, we were told by a Port Authority guy if we went through number five we could get to number one. There was like a mall entrance where you had to go through a garage, and now we were in like a mall-type level of building number five. It had a bar in there.

At that point I saw a couple of firefighters that were injured, working their way out of that, because number five also had a partial collapse.

We worked our way through number five into what we thought would be the crater area of the center. This Richie was Chief Picciotto. And the only way that we found him was that he had a siren with him. He had a bullhorn that's carried in the battalion van. He said he's going to ring his siren.

We were operating on channel Number 5, thank God, because that's the only way we were able to communicate with him. Everyone else that was on 1, it was impossible to talk to anybody. So luckily he was on 5, which I'm assuming it was a command channel from the beginning.

Ferran and myself and Picciotto could talk very easily to each other. No one else was on that channel. He would hit the siren mode of this megaphone, and it sounded like a police car. It went "woo-woo-woo," like that.

We said, "Hit the siren. See if we hear it." When we first did that, it sounded a mile away, but at least it was something to go on. There was an escalator in building number five, escalators going up and escalators going down.

When we removed some debris around the escalator, we were able to go up into what was the eastern exposure of the crater, where the center of the World Trade Center was. All it was was rubble. It was steel that had collapsed inward. We could barely hear this siren going off, but it was something enough to go. I knew that it was west of us and south.

So every 20 minutes or so he would again use this siren, and we zeroed in on him. It took us, from the time we began to the time we got to him, about an hour and a half. From the time we began our search with the siren, it was probably an hour and a half to transverse the crater area with my whole group of guys.

We had guys around the top of the crater, on the right side of the crater and on the left side of the crater. It wasn't easy to walk even two guys next to each other through all this steel. There were high voids and there were fires burning. It was a dangerous area to be. But we had an assignment, and we knew you had to get to these guys.

They were giving us reports that there were two firefighters trapped below them and a chief that was in very bad shape. So we were trying to move through this area as quickly as we can to get to them. They're also asking us to make sure rescue was with us because they needed special equipment to get these guys out.

But we were pretty much carrying just about ourselves, because we were dropping tools as we were going because it was a tough crossing. It was hard to carry everything that we were carrying all this way.

We eventually got through to World Trade Center number one, and we saw Chief Picciotto, who was Richie, at the edge of a stairway. We basically told him, "This is the way to come." We set up a rope, because that area immediately outside of the collapsed stairway was very dangerous. They told us they had a civilian with them also, a Port Authority guy with them also.

I was very concerned at the point where are the two guys that are still trapped. These guys are okay. We just had to show them how to get out of there. I sent one of my firemen, Jerry Suden, out with this group of nine guys -- six firemen from Ladder 6, the Port Authority guy and a civilian -- and told him to take these people out, go back the way we came. That's the only way I knew out of this crater was the way we came.

The remaining three of us that were right there at that time proceeded into the stairway. I spoke to Lieutenant Jimmy McGlynn from 39 Engine who was still there, and he said, "Glen, you're never going to get them out. We need air bags. We need torches. We need the Hearst tool." I said, "Jimmy, we barely have a hook with us. We have a rope. Let's look at what's going on here."

So all those guys left and went out with my guy to get out of the crater. As it turned out, Jerry had to double back because the way we came was now engulfed in fire. We couldn't go back that way. There was too much smoke, too much heat, coming up from the steel. He had to find another way out.

What he did is he proceeded still heading west over --

(Interruption.)

A. Again, Jerry was forced to head southwest through an area of the crater that he didn't really know, but he knew that was the only way to get these people out of there.

By the time he got to the high point of the crater on the west exposure of the crater, there were other members trying to get to us that way. There were reports that we were missing, because the last transmission I had given to Chief Ferran was before we actually got to Picciotto.

He wanted to pull us out. I knew we were real close and I said we would be okay but we would get them out and we would be okay. But once I got in the stairway, we couldn't transmit anymore. We couldn't communicate. The radios weren't any good anymore.

So I couldn't tell him the men that were leaving, what we were doing. So he assumed at that point we're in trouble, so he was trying to get another group of people towards us, that we might be in trouble.

So we proceeded into the stairway. There was two four-inch voids in the corner of the stairway, of the collapsed stairway, where I could see the lights shining up from the two members from 39 Engine that were trapped, exact two stories below all of the members from Ladder 6 and Chief Picciotto.

So I looked at the two holes for a while. One hole there was no way you were going to open it up. There was too much steel. The other hole had sheetrock against one of the sides. So I knew with sheetrock you had to have a bay.

So I took the sheetrock out. There were two layers of three-quarter inch sheetrock. That added up to an inch and a half. Underneath that there were metal two by threes. I was hoping for two by fours, but I got two by threes. So that added four and a half inches to a four inch void, which I thought would be enough to get these two guys out.

I told them to crawl up one flight towards me, because I wasn't directly over them; I was on the other side of the stairway. I told one of the guys, "Crawl up towards me if you can." We have about eight inches now. I figured that would be wide enough to get the guys out.

We sent the rope down from two stories above where we were and sent the rope down to them for them to get a handle on the rope and pull yourselves up. As soon as I could my hands on him, I pulled the guy out. I asked him if the other guy was any bigger than him, and he said, "He is bigger than me." I knew it would be close. Jeffrey was scraping on all four sides. If I needed another inch, I would have had to cut something with a torch. It was just enough room to get them out.

Before they left, I asked them where's the chief, because there was an earlier report there was a chief injured, and I wanted to get to him. They never saw him. They had talked to him earlier in the day. They said, "We haven't talked to him in a while." They don't think he's still alive.

Q. Do you know his name, the chief's name?

A. It was Chief Prunty from the 2nd Battalion. So we said, well, I'm going to go down and make sure or if it's the last -- we're going to go get him.

So all they could tell me was where they were, which was two stories down. There was a door open a couple of inches, and he was somewhere past the doorway. But everything was collapsed against the doorway.

So I said, "Okay, you go up and out. There's guys now here. They'll get you out of here. We're going down to get him." So myself and two members of my team went down to where they were. We found the doorway that was open about a couple of inches. We had to climb to the top of its frame to get through.

I can still hear his radio receiving, but he wasn't answering me when I called him. But I could hear his radio receiving. I knew he wasn't far.

One of the members with me, Mark Carpiniello, he climbed up in front of me. I couldn't even squeeze through, it was that tight.

He got up through there, went in there, and I was telling him where if I push through the sheetrock there -- I knew he was within ten feet of us.

He wasn't getting through the sheetrock. It was like a huge electrical closet had collapsed against this door frame. It was only a foot, if that, on an angle to get in there he couldn't get through there. I said, "Try the other side." It's about four feet over. There was a big electrical-type job box. "Climb up on that. See if you can see some sheetrock over there, maybe get through that sheetrock."

He went over there, and he said, "Lou, he's here. He's right here." I said, "All right. Check him." He tried to get a pulse. He said, "I can't get a pulse. I'm not sure, though." So I climbed up in there, and I got into him and I got on top of him. He was fully intact. There was nothing crushing him. I checked him. He was gone. He was dead. He wasn't dead a long time.

I didn't understand what our losses could have even been at this point. I said, "We've got to get him out. We've got to get him out of here." He had fallen from a high -- he must have fallen from another stairwell or another part of the stairwell, and he landed on something. I think that's what -- he was all broken up inside. There was light steel on him, electrical conduits on him.

Now at this point rescue was above us, and rescue was sending down tools to us. One of the guys from rescue came down from Rescue 4, Dave -- I have his name. So we had saws-all and things like that.

We cut all the steel away from his back that we could, and we got ropes on him. We worked on him for over two hours to get him out. We had hooked up caribbeaners. He had fallen down in a position of actually hunched over. His legs were down in a void. His arms were free. He was just like on his stomach, like laying on top of a desk.

We got ropes around him. We could barely budge him more than a few inches. He was a big man. I would say Chief Prunty was probably 250, if I was to guess. After a couple hours of trying all these things, the void was just too tight.

Even if we had moved him off this little area, there was no way we would have gotten him through the doorway and through the little void that we had made two floors above to get 39 Engine out.

My guys were starting to tell me they were getting dizzy. There was smoke coming through this area. Rescue was calling down to us saying, "We're evacuating the area. There's another building coming down." I had to make a call, and it was a tough call. I said we'll come back. We said a prayer on him, and we said we'll come back and get him the next day. And we left. Unfortunately no one let me go back to get him, but that's a whole other story.

He was taken out on Friday by I don't know who. All I know is (inaudible).

At that point we went up. There was a lot of people from my company around that were there at the time helping. They actually got the lady, the one civilian, on the stokes while I was down in the hole, got the lady on the stokes and carried her out.

When I came out of the hole, there was a string of 100 guys leading us back towards West Street over the west end of the crater. You couldn't head east. There was gunfire going off. There was parts of the buildings coming down. You could hear little internal small collapses going on in the buildings around us.

We just walked towards West Street, where I met again with Chief Ferran and Chief Harten from the 10th Battalion, told them what we found. Unfortunately I felt terrible we couldn't get Chief Prunty out, but we were all still together.

At that point we headed just over towards the river. This was now about 4:00, 4:30 in the afternoon. About half an hour later number seven came down. I don't know how close seven was to us. I didn't even know where seven was. All I heard was seven now came down.

That was it. We really didn't do anything else. We looked to do other things, but at that point it was almost like a hold-back, hold-tight operation. They wouldn't let anybody else towards the crater. It was too dangerous.

That was it.

Q. Thank you, Glen.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRE MARSHAL STEVEN HEAVEY

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATALLION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 28, 2001. The time is 1136 hours and this is Battalion Chief Steven King, Safety Battalion FDNY.

I'm conducting an interview with the following individual: Fire Marshal Stephen Heavey, H-E-A-V-E-Y, from Brooklyn Base Squad 34. The interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Steve, you can start whenever you would like.

A. Okay. I was working the Monday overnight shift, which would go until 9:30 in the morning, so I was still in the office. I actually had -- I was supposed to work Tuesday but I had that off. I was working Monday night. So I'm in the office. It was a very quiet night so there wasn't much going on.

I was at my desk and next to my desk is the scanner, which is set on Brooklyn, and they announced the second alarm at the Trade Center. I forget the box for the particular tower and I turned to one of the guys that was working, was in our Fire Marshal class and he's a former 10 Truck member. So I said, "Hey, a second alarm at the Trade Center."

Then I switched the radio to Manhattan. There was some various communications. The only thing I remember is I guess it was the Engine 10 chauffeur very excitedly asking the dispatcher to send every ambulance you got. The only thing I remember is I believe the first division telling the dispatcher: "Go to fall back, step three."

By that time whatever TV channel we had on, I think it was 7, broke in with it and you could see a serious part of the Trade Center. It was unconfirmed reports of a plane crash. And we were just sort of all fixated on it. It was pretty much unclear what our role was. I mean we assumed we were going, but nothing official had come down. We were just sort of fixated by the TV.

And then the second tower was hit. We didn't realize it. I mean it just sort of lit up. I didn't know what it happened. Pretty much at that time we just made sure each guy had a radio. Normally only one team carries a radio. So we divied up the radios and basically we went out there. I was in a car. I was with supervisor Grogan, because I was an extra guy. So I was pretty much assigned like the aide. So the supervisor

Brian Grogan was driving and I was in the passenger seat.

We had a brief discussion of how we were going to get there. I said, maybe we shouldn't go through the Battery Tunnel in case there is a problem there. But we decided that was the quickest way that we were gonna get over there. So that's what we did.

We came through the tunnel, parked the car right on the right. I guess when you come out of the tunnel there we just found a place to put the car. We didn't want to get it too close. And we both put all our clothing on, jumpsuit and turnout gear and we started walking toward the Trade Center.

Somewhere on West Street we saw Assistant Chief Fire Marshal McCahey and he instructed us that the marshals were going to stage in front of 1 World Financial, which is just south of the pedestrian overpass on West -- at Albany. So that's what we did. We basically stood in front of that building. And that was really as close as we could get without being in danger of falling debris and victims, as it were.

You know, again, our role was unclear. I didn't know if we were gonna be given equipment to hump up or whether we were gonna be put to work in some sort of security role. It seemed to me a little too early to worry about the investigative angle. It seemed like there was a lot of work to be done.

Shortly after we staged there I was standing next to Fire Marshals Mazzarella, Coyle, Grogan was there, but I think he stepped away to try to talk to somebody or to see what was happening. And I remember Fire Marshal Mazzarella -- we were all looking up and he turned to me and he said, "You know, Steve, I think we're a little bit too close." And at that point there was a loud noise and the building from the upper floors started pushing like the dust and debris and a shower of sparks and it was clear that some sort of major structural failure was in the works and, you know, our instinct was to run. The guys started running.

They were all in their civilian clothes. I was the only one standing there in my full marshal gear, including the leather boots and turnout coat and helmet. So I was a little slower than them. Actually, I was a little stunned. I didn't know if I could outrun this thing because, you know, we didn't know if it was gonna fall on its axis or pancake.

So we ran south and made a turn, a right turn, which would put us on Albany Street toward the river and I figured this One World Financial building seemed to be a rather tall building in its own right and I sort of found a corner and sort of ducked into it and knelt down and put my hands over my head on my helmet, expecting to get hit with debris.

I remember getting hit with like sand and stuff. No debris, just sand. Then there was just a blackened cloud of dust and soot. It probably lasted -- you know, I held my breath as long as I could. It probably lasted about two minutes. It was rather difficult to breathe there. I was worried for a moment that I might actually get asphyxiated by this stuff. But then it broke enough at ground level. There was maybe a 2 feet ceiling you could start to see a little daylight.

Those marshals, some of them had gone into the parking garage and we were able to find most of them. I know at least John Coyle particularly had run -- we found out later he was ahead of us and he went west on Albany into one of these buildings.

Hudson View West or something, according to the map here, into the lobby just to get out of the dust.

We regrouped -- we tried to find a rear entrance out of there, but we couldn't figure it out so we exited the we way came in and proceeded west on Albany towards the esplanade. Were gonna try to regroup and determine what our next move would be. At that point there was communication on our radio that we should make our way south toward the battery, all the marshals were gonna try to rendezvous and make sure everybody was all right and try to figure out what we were gonna do next.

At that point I didn't know the extent of the collapse. I didn't realize it was a big pancake. I can't say I recall the other tower collapsing. You know, needless to say the whole area took on a very sinister tone. We didn't know what was coming next. Suddenly every mailbox and city bus was a bomb. You know, every civilian was a terrorist and we made our way down to the battery.

As we went, more and more Fire Marshals, we would see guys and there were civilians who were asking what to do because I was in my gear. I guess I was recognizable. Most of them were dazed. There was one Hatzollah Ambulance that had a guy on a stretcher. I instructed them to remain at the esplanade until the boats would come. Boats definitely came to the Battery.

Clearly they were safer at the esplanade than heading north. We made our way south to the Battery and ended up at that restaurant. There were the two Chief Fire Marshals. The Chief and the Assistant Chief ended up there. We basically stood by for a while and then we...

Q. Did you stay down there or later on did you have other jobs?

A. We were instructed to go to the Manhattan office, which we did. We were given some personal time and then we were --

Q. Where were you when Seven World Trade Center --

A. Oh, we actually from there, we made our way to the command post at the college.

Q. On Greenwich?

A. And I was actually standing on I believe it's Greenwich Street when 7 collapsed and I remember running about a block and ducking in. Because after the experience with that dust I didn't know how far this cloud -- but it seemed to disburse before it got to us. They were apparently further up north where it didn't affect us there. We stayed at the command post for a while. We were given something to eat.

I remember seeing one of the Fire Marshals there, Andy Difusco, bring in a man in custody, in handcuffs, from some sort of looting incident.

Q. You didn't mention the north tower. You're not clear about the north tower? Do you know where you were when it came down?

A. No. I know we went west on Albany to the esplanade, probably somewhere along the esplanade. But I don't remember hearing it. In other words, I don't remember it as an event, because the dust was constant. Obviously that collapse had produced more, but it didn't -- I don't recall another event.

Q. Is that pretty much it?

A. That's all I can remember.

BATALLION CHIEF KING: The time is 1147 hours and the interview with Fire Marshal Heavey is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRE MARSHAL JOHN COYLE

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 28, 2001. The time is 1101 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I am conducting an interview with the following individual, Fire Marshal John Coyle from Brooklyn base, Squad 34. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. John, whenever you're ready, you can start.

A. That morning I had worked the night before with Joe Mazzarella. Not a particularly busy night, I remember. We were all pretty much up having coffee downstairs at the base here. Steve Heavey was over near the department radio, which was on. He suddenly turned around and said a plane has hit the World Trade Center. Everybody looked at him and said, "What are you talking about?"

The TV was on. There was nothing on the TV yet. I remember a couple of us went outside and looked, and you could see smoke coming from one of the towers. You could just see it if you went around the corner of the parking lot.

A few seconds later, a minute later or so, Supervisor Lynn came out of his office and said, "Everybody goes." So everybody started grabbing their gear and taking as much gear as you could. We wanted to take basically our bunker gear and helmets and everything we could lay our hands on. I went to my car. I had a Halligan. I grabbed that. We threw everything into the cars.

It was myself, Joe Mazzarella stuck with me and John Murray was in the car also.

Just as we were about to pull out, the second plane hit. Everybody was flabbergasted. We took off. I was driving. Actually just before we took off, I asked Dave Lynn, I said, "How are we going to get there?" He said, "You've got to take the Battery Tunnel. They've closed everything else down. That's for emergency vehicles."

I actually said to him, "What about secondary devices?" That was the only thing I remembered from terrorist training, was watch for secondary devices and don't go rushing into something. This is obviously at that point a terrorist attack, because two planes had.

He said, "That's the only way you can go. You're not going to make -- everything else is closed down." So I took Third Avenue. We really went very fast. We cut in and out of traffic, siren going.

We got over Hamilton Avenue, then to the Battery Tunnel. It let us through. I just punched it through the tunnel because I figured -- I didn't want the thing coming down on me in case there was some other problem with that.

Actually later on I was talking to some of the guys a couple days after that, and I said I must have been going 75 through that tunnel. Actually Murray turned around and said, "No, I was in the back seat. We were going 89."

We came out of the tunnel, and there were rigs everywhere. There was debris falling from buildings, because that's basically where it comes out. So I just wheeled the car around and parked I guess it must have been like Rector Place or somewhere like that, just to the left of the exit of the tunnel. Actually it turned out to be blocked from the World Trade Center I think by a building, which allowed us to drive away later.

Then we grabbed all our gear. We popped the trunk. Everybody grabbed their bags and started walking up towards the World Trade Center complex. I guess it was Richard McCahey was walking around there, and they said everybody assemble in front of One World Financial Center.

So all of us, at least, all the marshals who came on that side of the World Trade Center, started assembling there. We were probably 20 to 40 feet in front of the World Financial Center building on a little raised platform just to the south of the south pedestrian bridge.

It seemed to us from that vantage that you were directly across the street from the south tower, although when you look at the map it seems to be off-center. You could see lots of debris falling from the buildings, what looks like ribbons almost, initially, little fine pieces of metal and everything. But as they fell, you realized these were enormous chunks of material coming down.

There were a lot of people jumping. That was horrible. I was shook up. I have never been that shaken up by anything before. I was standing there and I couldn't believe that you could see people apparently holding their coats out to try and fly or something and then adjusting to the landing. It was fucking awful.

Anyway, I remember Joe Mazzarella, who I work with a lot, said, "Just don't look at it." We were all kind of shaken. Firemen are all marching in. We were told, "Stand fast. Don't move." I had my helmet on, my radio with me. I don't think I had any other gear on at that point. I had my Halligan with me in case we could do something.

It was a little foggy as to what anybody could do at that point. I wasn't sure what anybody could do. It didn't seem you could put those fires out.

Then I remember seeing Dr. Kelly walk by. I remember a civilian, a middle-aged couple, a businessman, it looked like, but they seemed to be tourists or something standing near us. He was kind of smiling and pointing at the thing as if it was a tourist attraction, with his wife, I believe. He stood there for a few minutes.

Finally he said something to me. I have no idea what it was, but still with this kind of dopey grin on his face. I said, "What are you doing here?" He was like, "Well, this is something else," or whatever. I said, "If I were you, I would get the hell out of here," or words to that effect. He kind of looked at me funny, and then started walking away, it seemed.

There was a photographer there not far from us with a lot of cameras on him.

Steve Heavey and Supervisor Grogan had come in another car right behind us. They were there too. We were all standing kind of together. Grogan might have been sitting at the moment this thing happened.

I remember glancing to my right, and Joe Mazzarella was at that moment looking up. I suddenly saw his face like a look of complete terror, and he just turned on his heel and took off running. I started running after him and looking over my shoulder.

The tower was -- it looked to me -- I thought it was exploding, actually. That's what I thought for hours afterwards, that it had exploded or the plane or there had been some device on the plane that had exploded, because the debris from the tower had shot out far over our heads. It was raining down.

I ran south and then made a right onto Albany Street, which would be running west.

Q. Towards the water?

A. Heading towards the water. I was completely convinced that I was dead, that I had no chance of making it away from this thing. As I glanced up, I thought there's no way I can outrun this thing, there's absolutely no way, because it seemed to have gotten so far beyond these massive pieces of stuff.

[redacted]

[redacted]

I ran down the street, with pieces actually falling around me, the fastest I've ever run. Pieces fell around me. That big cloud thing enveloped me. As I made the turn -- I guess I made a left onto End Avenue, the first left.

But in my mind I remember thinking trying to get away -- I thought the building might be falling over completely, and I was trying to calculate in that fraction of a second, other than thinking of my daughter and things like that, how far is that building going to fall. It's going to crush these other buildings, I figured. I'm just trying to zigzag more or less away.

The debris cloud actually blew past me on Albany. I came out of it for a second on End Street, and then it came down in front of me too, and I was caught in it. I kept running. I could just see enough to run, and dove into the lobby of a building, a residential building, it turned out.

There were a bunch of civilians in there, and more people started coming in. I went back out and started pulling people in. Everybody was covered in this dust, really super covered. But nobody knew what had happened. I still thought it had exploded, something had exploded.

I started banging on apartment doors and actually found a woman who was doing construction in her house. She had a bunch of dust masks. She gave me all the dust masks, and she gave me a bunch of towels. I said, "Wet these towels." She gave me an arm load. I said, "Let's wet all the towels, and we'll hand them out to all these people."

I kept a dust mask for me. I gave one to a cop that was there. I handed out all these towels, and then went back out looking for people. I pulled a guy and his daughter in.

I then started walking pretty much away from it with everybody else down the esplanade. At that point I had no idea what had happened. It seemed that the thing had blown up. I didn't know what this dust was, whether it was part of the building or what the heck had happened.

There was a huge crowd walking down the esplanade. I ran into Brian Grogan after a few minutes. He seemed almost in shock. We didn't really speak much. It was senseless chatter on the radio. I couldn't make heads nor tails of it.

I got down to the battery. I think that's where I ended up. I know I was at that fort at some point. Then the other tower came down. When that dust cloud came again, I gave my mask to a little girl who was with her father. I ran south. They were in one of those little nooks in the fort.

Then I kind of wandered back up. I ended up up near the exit for the Battery Tunnel again, trying to get back towards the thing. Then I heard on the radio all marshals are to report to -- and I have no idea where it was. Oh, near the Jewish memorial thing.

I made my way over there, found Mazzarella. All the guys who were with us were okay. We stood there for a few minutes, and eventually I said, "We shouldn't even be here. This is the Jewish thing. This is a terrorist thing. This is a dumb place to be standing. This thing might blow up." No. Everybody I think at that point still thought these things were blown up. So I was fully expecting anything else to blow up.

I think we mentioned that or somebody mentioned it to one of the supervisors, and then they said, "Oh, yeah, okay." Then they took us down to the very end of Battery Park near a restaurant and made us sit there for what seemed like hours, but it was hours.

Eventually we were all wanting to go back up and help. They were saying, "No, you have to stay right here. We'll maintain control," which made no sense. Finally they said, "Go see if your car is okay. If you can get your car out, bring it back here."

We went back up, me and Murray and Mazzarella, found the car, which was completely covered in rubble but wasn't really damaged badly. We cleared the windshield off, got in it and drove it back to the base of Battery Park.

Then at some point they said, "Okay, we're reassembling now up on West Street." I guess it's the West Side Highway there. It's quite a bit up. There was a school, and they used that as an assembly point. I don't know the address.

Q. Manhattan Community College?

A. That might have been it.

We drove back up there, pulled in. Our car was promptly surrounded by rigs. We went into this thing and stood around for more hours. Well, it was hours with the cops. I don't remember that many firemen. I remember marshals, cops.

Rumors were sweeping, that the Washington Monument was down, the Sears Tower was down, all the stuff like that.

Eventually we made our way back -- I don't remember how -- to Manhattan base. They said, "Go get your car again," eventually. We went to get the car. We were inside the perimeter, more or less -- that's where the car was -- of where Seven World Trade Center was.

We started back going east, I guess it is. I don't know what street it is. Let's see. Six or seventh. We were probably here.

Q. Murray?

A. Murray, I'm guessing.

We started going back east. We were inside this perimeter, although we didn't realize it at the time. We saw a rig with the compartments opened. We stopped. They were actually reversing. I kind of pulled up along side them. Murray yelled out the window, "Your compartments are open." The guy yelled something back at us. They kept backing up.

We went forward to I imagine it's the corner of Murray and West Street. Just as we were approaching it, we saw a person run north in front of the car, and then Joe Mazzarella, who was sitting in the passenger seat, just started screaming, "Reverse, reverse, reverse, reverse." I didn't even look. I just threw it in reverse and punched it. We flew backwards without being able to see out the rear, and building seven came down in front of us.

At that point we just parked the car. I pulled it over, and we walked back and left it there until much later in the night when they told us to finally retrieve it.

Q. When you backed up, did you go across West Street?

A. I'm guessing -- if we were on Murray, we probably approached West, whatever this is here. Because it came down basically like this, right in front of us. I just reversed it back to the street here.

Q. And debris went past Murray Street, would you say?

A. Oh, yeah. It was like another one of those giant clouds. It shot through here. I didn't even know what happened at that point.

While I was down at Battery Park, I finally got through on my phone to my father and said, "I'm alive. I just wanted to tell you, go to church, I'm alive. I just so narrowly escaped this thing." He said, "Where were you? You were there?" I said, "Yeah, I was right there when it blew up." He said, "You were there when the planes hit?" I said, "No, I was there when it exploded, the building exploded." He said, "You mean, when it fell down?" I said, "No, when it exploded."

I still didn't realized what had happened. I totally thought it had been blown up. That's just the perspective of looking up at it, it seemed to have exploded out. But that I guess was the force of the upper stories collapsing down.

That's really it. After that then they had us kind of compiling lists of missing members and then going to the various stations and trying to figure out who had been working and who had jumped on the rig and compiling all these lists.

Then we returned back to Manhattan base. After that we just stayed here for about three days at the base. I slept on the floor in the weight room. Then they had us up that morning.

Q. Okay, John. That's good.

CHIEF KING: The time is 1119 hours, and the interview with Fire Marshal John Coyle is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRE MARSHAL JOHN MURRAY

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Today's date is December 28, 2001. The time is 1007 hours. This is Battalion Chief Stephen King, Safety Battalion, FDNY. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual, Fire Marshal John Murray from Brooklyn base.

Q. This interview is concerning the events of September 11, 2001 and John, you can start whenever you want.

A. You just want me to state everything?

Q. Start from the beginning and tell us your story, you know, how you got the call, where you were, what you did?

A. We were here.

Q. Brooklyn base, right?

A. Yes, here in the base. I was working the night before. We were sitting downstairs and whatever time that was, 8 o'clock or so. We were sitting there with the TV on and we were talking. We had the scanner on. We heard on the scanner some voice from 10 Truck or 10 Engine, said start rolling all available ambulances, somebody intentionally put a plane into the World Trade Center. We turned on the news Channel 1 and we see that it's on fire. You look at the thing and the building is this big and the fire is this big, so we figured maybe it was somebody accidentally flew one of those little single pilot planes into the thing and, you know, no big deal. You knew it was going to be a big deal and you knew we were going to go. So we all got -- we were all getting ready to go. The boss that's working the night tour goes this is going to be a long drawn out day. Anybody got to take a shit, anybody got to do anything, do it right now. Get ready, get everything you need because you are going to be there all day long. Okay, so some guys go take a shit, get ready, we all get our shit together. We are getting ready to go out the door. The TV is still on. We see the second tower explode. There was nothing, at least those first few minutes, there was nothing about another plane. It was just that the thing exploded, so now we thought that it was a bomb.

We jump in the car, we take off, we shoot over there and we were shitting in our pants driving over there because now we figured it was a bomb. We didn't think it was another plane. We went through that, they were closing down the tunnel, we went through that tunnel. It was 89 miles an hour or 98 miles an hour, I forget what the hell it was. We were flying. Get out of the tunnel as fast as possible, we figured it sounds like a good thing to blow up, the tunnel.

We get there, we pull up on West Street and you know we see this lines of cars, lines of trucks. So we couldn't really go too far, so we figured we would just pull over right there. I don't know what street that was. It was just outside the tunnel. Down here somewhere. On the water side of West Street. We popped the trunk, we get our gear, we carry our bunker gear and stuff in a bag. We get our gear, start walking, there is like a bike path there on West Street. So we start walking up the bike path and the whole time you are hearing, boom boom boom, you know, more fucking bombs, what the hell is this. They kind of sounded like block busters or something. We were walking and I'm like what the fuck is going on. More bombs going off? As we are walking, we see a detective looking, everybody is looking up and we are kind of looking forward walking, you know, heads up guys, we got jumpers. That's when I look up and see all these people.

Anyway, we were supposed to meet up with the Marshals at a command post set up on West and Liberty which is where it was, which actually it wasn't. Looking afterwards it was maybe 10 feet south of that overpass, which is south of Liberty.

Q. Between Cedar and Liberty?

A. Yes. That's basically where we were. We were in front of the World Financial Center. Of course now we are sitting, you know, one of the things, put a helmet on. So we put our helmets on, some of the other guys went back to get their helmets and we are there looking up at the towers and we were no longer even focusing on the south tower, because the fire seemed to be darkening down. But there was still 10 floors of fire roaring in the north tower. We are all looking at this thing saying what the fuck are we doing here.

Looking up at the World Financial Center and saying this is a stupid place to be standing, because if they hit the World Trade Center, why not blow up the World Financial Center. At some point, actually I think we were -- I don't know where we were, we were either -- we were right at the corner there, I think, of Albany Street when we were still walking. Some guy was running around with a radio. They hit the Pentagon. They hit the Pentagon. Like I said, now we are standing on World Financial Center saying this is a fucked up place to be.

We kind of migrate back down to the street and we were standing there because that's where the command post is. Where the Assistant Chief Fire Marshal was in charge. He really didn't have anything specific for us to do. We were just kind of milling around like I said, staring up. My supervisor for the night tour, he was kind of in shock. What's the matter. His brother worked in the north tower. That's really fucked up. Like I said, we were standing there watching the north tower and not even paying attention to the south tower.

Then you look up and it's like holy shit, the building didn't come down, it shot straight out over our heads, like straight across West Street. Holy shit, there is no fucking way we are going to out run this thing. Everybody, asses and elbows, we ran south on West Street, turned the corner on Albany Street and --

Q. Towards the water?

A. Towards the water, yes. I ran into somebody. We both went down. The person got up and kept going. By this time all the shit was hitting the ground. I was like maybe three or four cars up from the corner on Albany Street. I crawled underneath the car. It was a Caprice, blue Caprice, like ours. I crawled underneath the front bumper. All the shit starts coming down. The fucking car keeps whacking me on the back and the shit is hitting me.

When the whole thing came down and everything went black, it got real hot. I felt something digging me in the side. It felt like it was burning me. This is fucked up. I'm going to fucking burn to death, sitting here under this car. First I thought I was going to be crushed under the car. Every time it hit me, it was like everything kind of quieted down. Okay, I wasn't crushed, that's one good thing. I started feeling around, I'm not burning, so that's another good thing. It was completely black.

I started reaching around, you know, laying on my face, I started reaching around out from under the car, trying to feel things. It was like nothing on top of me. It was like, you know, something must have fallen down, something big must have fallen down over me on the car. I'm underneath something because it's completely black. So I start sliding out from under the car, reaching out further and further and then reaching up above my head. There is nothing above my head. So I stand up, I'm reaching, still reaching, in all directions. Now I'm standing up like in front of the car, reaching all around, saying oh, fuck, whatever this is it's big. It must be like half the building fell down. There is this big void over. I reached around and there is nothing. So then I start calling out, anybody out there, anybody. Yes, I'm over here. Somebody is over here, okay. You okay, yes, I'm fine. How -- anybody else, yes, yes, you okay, yes, I'm fine. So now I'm figuring that thing was, fuck, that thing was banging me on the back and on the head. Maybe I'm blind. Nothing. I didn't see anything.

Then finally it starts lightening up. It starts getting grayer and grayer and I start walking around, calling to people, everybody, yes, everybody okay. At this point, I turned back around and I go back. Once it started getting gray, I went back to the point where we were standing to make sure that everybody was out of there. There was a trailer inside of a fence, in front of 1 World Financial. Like on the corner of Albany and West. That thing was on fire. There was just bits and pieces. There was the steel that was (inaudible). All sorts of shit right there. You know, little things were on fire here and there.

But the whole row, up and down West Street, every car, every rig was on fire. I still couldn't see, everything was still gray. I could only see like two feet in front of me, but I could see the glow for about two blocks of everything that was still there.

At this point I go back to the spot where I'm standing and I start digging around, I find my bag with my bunker gear in it. I am looking around. There was nobody there. No people so I figured good, everybody got out of there. I started heading back to where I ran to because I knew there were people there. And I'm back and forth, you know, people, anybody see this company, anybody see this company. No. I don't know. There was nobody back that way anyway.

So I ran into the SIU supervisor in Queens, Jack McCauley. He was one of our instructors in school, so I come across him. He's okay. Okay. I go back towards the water, found an ambulance. I got some gauze wrapped around my face, went back. I found another supervisor from here. J.D. Lynn and a guy, a photo guy, another Marshal. They were like, 1 World Financial Center I guess has a parking garage there. They were tucked in there. Asking anybody see anybody, is everybody okay. Nobody knew anything, just us 4 people that we saw.

I'm starting to go back again, like back towards like West Street kind of thing. Then the other guy Jack saying come on, let's go over by the water. Let's see what we can do there. So we all go, gathering people as we are going, come on, everybody go towards the water. We went back, grabbed a couple of people, people with broken legs, dragging them back towards the water. There was police boats, tug boats, all sorts of boats, like right there, at the end of Albany Street. We were just -- anybody hurt, anybody injured, just tossing them over, over the rails on to the boats.

At that point, those are the only people that I saw, these 3 other guys, other than a couple of firemen and the Chief was one of the guys yelling for companies on Albany Street.

Q. Do you know who the Chief was?

A. No. Actually I did see, I came across a doctor on Albany when I went to go get the gauze. I came across a doctor. I saw Dr. Kelly and her entourage and when we were on West Street, Dr. Kelly was there with us. She was looking for some sort of command post that was supposed to be in the World

Financial Center or something. She had gone in there, she came out, she went into another door and she was like right around there with us and the last time I saw her, she was heading back north on West Street. That was just about the time that the tower came down. She was wearing a dress then and when I saw her on Albany, she was wearing like a T-shirt or something and she didn't have her dress on.

So those guys were coming this way. I saw a doctor who was wandering around. You know, everybody okay. We ended up, we were over there, putting people on the --

Q. By the water down at the end of Albany Street?

A. Yes, putting people on the boats.

Q. Is the north tower still up?

A. Yes, the north tower was still up. It was about that time that you hear that same rumble, oh, fuck, it's happening again, now telling everybody run down, down toward -- actually before that we were telling people just to go down.

Q. South?

A. Yes, south on that promenade there. Head down that way, just everybody go. Now you hear that big jet airplane going again. Fuck. Everybody starts running and this time, like I said, it was coming down when we were right there by the water, ran down maybe 50 feet or something. There was park benches, ducked under a park bench and this time it was just dust. It still went black. There was no debris falling. We were far enough away.

Q. (inaudible) coming up the water, you know?

A. Yes, well, not really. When the dust came down, but it definitely cleared up by the water faster than it did in the streets. At this point, I had a radio that I had lent to Jack. We were back and forth, like I was sticking with him. We got -- we were back and forth calling on the radio for people. At this point, McCahey calls. Everybody meet at West Street by the entrance to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. Everybody meet there. So now we are -- I should say we are here so we went down south maybe a block or two from Albany on the promenade. So we started heading back and we were wandering back and forth because there is like one street doesn't go through and then another street there was fences there.

We ended up, we came back, we came pretty close to Albany. There had to be another street. I don't know where it is, but there was one street south of Albany I think that we finally made it to West Street. Now we are heading down West Street and we come to the point where we were all supposed to meet up and it's just me and him. There's nobody else here.

We are calling back and forth on the radio; we are here. Where are you. Oh, we are here. You are not here. Well, we are on our way there, where are you, we are standing there, there is two of us standing there, you said this is where you are and everybody is supposed to meet. So everybody starts gathering together and they say this is no good. We are still in the dust cloud. So they say go down West Street and meet at the top of the Battery Park.

So at this point that's where I met the other guy from SIU from the Bronx, Delancy. He had a woman in the car, he had his car there and he had a woman in it. A woman and a baby. I get in the car with him, see how she is doing. We started driving towards the top of Battery Park. She is kind of screaming and crying. She had the baby and her other daughter and her mother were with her and they got separated. We get to the top of Battery Park, whatever that cross street is. There are hundreds of people walking past.

She finds her mother and her daughter there. She goes on her way, everybody ends up going back around and they end up going down the tip of Battery Park and getting on boats and taking people everywhere.

The next thing we are here like regrouping, kind of waiting for other guys to come. We are just telling everybody start walking across the Brooklyn Bridge.

The rest of the day was kind of all screwed up like that. Hurry up and wait, do nothing. Later on we basically have everybody, except there were still some guys up, I don't know where they were, but we were trying to get everybody together. One of the things is go get your cars. We go back, we get our car. We bring it back down to Battery Park, shit flying everywhere.

We get there and now we are all going to meet here at this Manhattan Community College. There is a command center being set up there. Everybody go there. We go back up that way.

Q. How much later was this now would you say, do you have any idea of time?

A. It was much later.

Q. Couple of hours?

A. Yes, I had no idea. I have no concept of time from that day. We drive up there. We parked the car on one of these streets up here. We are on West Street. We parked on West Street. So we go to the command post and they have some shit. They got some letter bomb or something they thought they had. Things going on back and forth. But upstairs, they had food and stuff. We go upstairs. They were assigning what duties different people would do. You go here, you go there. They were basically trying to keep people away from trying to go back to the towers and digging, which everybody wanted to do but they didn't want you doing.

We go there, we get something to eat, we go downstairs and we get told to go to Manhattan base, which is on Lafayette and Houston Street. So we go get our car, start heading cross town, can't be this street. It has to be this street here, when building 7 collapsed. So it came down, we are going cross town. There was a rig pulled around the corner and one of its compartment doors was open. We tell the guy, we stopped on, I guess it was like right here somewhere.

Q. Warren Street.

A. Yes, it's got to be like right here. Because we backed straight across. We tell the guy, look, your compartment door is open. I don't know. It's not my rig, some guy, one of the Chiefs just told me to move it. There was 3 guys in the car, myself, Tom Doyle, and Joe Mazzarella. He is sitting in the back and we are telling the guy about his compartment door. Back up, back up, back up, whacking us in the back of the head. You can see the building, you can see it over, there was like a parking lot in the little building. You see the building coming down. Oh fuck. We reversed and shot straight across West Street. Good thing there was nobody standing behind us because they would have got run over, parked the car and walked to Manhattan base.

Q. Hard day.

A. We get there and we get our assignment to go -- we had the old Fifth Division, you know they had the old charts. The old Fifth Division to go to every fire house and gather the list of names of the day tour and the night tour. So we were going and it was like 5 o'clock in the morning before we were done with that. Then the rest of the week was the same thing.

BATTALION CHIEF KING: Okay. The time is 1033 hours, the interview with Fire Marshal John Murray is completed.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREMAN JOHN WANSLEY

Interview Date: December 29, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today is December 29, 2001. Time is 1240 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with John Wansley, Fireman first of the City of New York assigned to Engine 45. He was detailed to Ladder 58 on September 11, 2001.

Q. Fireman Wansley please tell me what happened to you regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. Well, we relocated down at 20 truck. We were there maybe 10, 15 minutes. The first building collapsed. About 10 minutes after that, they gave us a box to respond down there for a woman trapped in a building. In the meantime there was a lot of people who were coming in. There was, you know, a total recall. We were putting extra gear on the rig. We responded down there. We got down there. I guess it was probably Cedar and Broadway. We took two steps off the rig and we just heard loud noise and figured it was the second building coming down and we ran around the rig, just dove behind the rig. The dust came and all of a sudden it was just pitch black and smoke. I thought I had seen some fire coming. I thought that was the next thing. I got up, I walked down the block about halfway down one of the blocks away from the buildings, I turned around, looked, I seen there was no fire there. I turned around. I walked back to where the rig was.

We all regrouped. We grabbed some tools, saws, hooks and everything else. We made our way and ended up over on West Street on the other side. When we got over there, one of the Chiefs had told to us to go look for 65 Engine. That's pretty much what we did. We started climbing up through the pile and looking for 65 Engine and anything else you could find. We just ended up somehow stretching lines. We went up into the pit up there with a line.

We just operated for a few hours, then we all regrouped back over where our rig was and I ended up in the hospital that day because I couldn't see no more. I had to go get my eyes cleaned out. That was pretty much it.

Q. Okay. When you said you saw the recall was in, do you know the people that got on your rig when you responded, were they from 20 truck?

A. I have no idea. There was just a lot of people coming in. I think there was a Chief from that quarters. I think maybe a squad was even in there, so it was a lot of people coming in.

Q. When you say your rig was at Liberty and Broadway?

A. I think that's where it was.

Q. You walked down the street towards Cedar?

A. When?

Q. When you first responded.

A. We just stepped off the rig and as soon as we got off the rig the building came down. We weren't standing in the street two seconds as the building came down.

Q. Did you see any other companies parked when you pulled up?

A. No.

Q. You said the Chief. Do you happen to remember what Battalion or anybody that said to go look for 65? Did they indicate where they thought 65 was, any location?

A. No.

Q. They just said that way?

A. I'm not even sure if it was a Chief who said it. Somebody had said go look for 65, Engine 65. We just started climbing over through the pile. Never found it either.

Q. Did you see any other companies doing basically what you were doing, do you have any idea what your location was at that point?

A. Yes, I know exactly we were where. We were actually where the south bridge comes across. Across --

Q. Liberty and West?

A. Yes, I guess that would be. It was definitely West Street. 90 West Street is right there on the corner. Right there where one bridge was still up. That's where we went ended up coming that block right there. When we got there, somebody said go look for 65 Engine. I don't know who it was. Maybe it was just -- you know what, at first we ended up staging where all the ambulances were for a few minutes there. Then we ended up going right over right to where the bridge was. I don't know who it was. It was just a boss that told me we got to go find 65 Engine. See if we can find 65 Engine.

Q. Were there any other companies with you?

A. Yes, there was other companies operating in the area.

Q. But you don't know who they were?

A. Not assigned with us, no.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Is there anything else you can remember? If not, the interview is over. Thanks.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JAMES WALLACE

Interview Date: December 29, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: Today's date is December 29th, 2001. The time is 12:50 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual, Firefighter James Wallace of Ladder 58 of the Fire Department of the City of New York, at the quarters of Engine 45, Ladder 58 in the office of Battalion 18, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Wallace, tell me what happened to you on September 11th.

A. Okay. We got relocated to Ladder 20. We were there maybe ten minutes. The first building had fallen down, collapsed. We got a report of a lady trapped in a building on Cedar Street. We responded. We went down Broadway. We got to Liberty, and we stopped the rig. As soon as we stopped the rig, we got off, it wasn't even a second, the second building fell down.

At that time we got hit with a heavy cloud of smoke and debris, and we just ran to the other side of the rig, finally got our face pieces on. It took like five minutes. We regrouped. It started to lift a little bit. We said we've got to go in there and see if we can get anybody out.

We took forcible entry tools, saws, everything, and we got in there. We couldn't get past Liberty and Cedar, so we went around the back to West Street. When we got to West Street, we were there a little bit, met up with some other companies. We went in underneath the walkway, catwalk, whatever you want to call it.

There were rigs everywhere, a rescue rig. As I was saying, people trapped. We heard maydays. We were just climbing over debris, under debris. Cars on fire, ambulances on fire, upside-down. Everything is all over the place. Crawled around, looked, looked, looked. We didn't come up with anything.

Rescue was in the middle of the pile at the time. They got jammed up. They needed a line. We stretched a line with 14 Engine. We operated with Rescue 3. We operated with them for a little while. We still didn't come out with anybody.

After that as time went on, we just kept searching. They were saying building seven was going to collapse, so we regrouped and went back to our rig. We went to building four or three; I don't know. We were going to set up our tower ladder there. They said no good because building seven is coming down.

We waited for building seven to come down. Then we went around the corner with our tower ladder, set that up and shot water on it until about 12:30 at night. We got relief finally. Then we went to the hospital, got our eyes washed out.

That's about it.

Q. When you said you heard any maydays, any identifying names or any companies that you could recognize from the maydays?

A. No.

Q. You just heard a lot of maydays; right?

A. Right.

Q. You said you were operating with other companies. Any idea who they were?

A. Like I said, 14 Engine we stretched the line with. Rescue.

Q. All right. 14 Engine, they were what, Liberty and West by that south walkway?

A. It was like maybe an hour into the operation when rescue went into the middle of the pile. They needed a line, so we helped them.

Q. I'm just saying 14, I'm trying to find out where you hooked up with them. Any idea?

A. When rescue said they needed a line, 14 Engine, the chief assigned us to work with them and that was it.

Q. Okay. If you can't remember anything else or if you have anything else to add.

A. If I think of it, I'll let you know.

Q. Was it a battalion chief?

A. Yeah. He just got promoted too. He was the guy that got the engine -- who was that guy? When he got the medal?

MALE VOICE: I don't know. Oh, Warner.

A. Warner.

Q. Oh, Ron Warner?

A. Warner.

Q. Battalion Chief Warner told you to stretch the line?

A. Yes.

Q. That was near building three?

A. No. That was by the motel.

Q. By the motel?

A. Yes.

Q. And that's --

A. Liberty and West.

Q. Liberty and West.

A. Right underneath the catwalk.

Q. Okay. Anything else that you can think of?

A. That's it.

CHIEF KEMLY: Okay. Thank you very much your time.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MARK WESSELDINE

Interview Date: December 29, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today is December 29, 2001. The time is 13 hundred hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter first grade Mark Wesseldine of Ladder 58 of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The interview is taking place in the office of Battalion 18 in Ladder 58's quarters, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Firefighter Wesseldine, please tell me what happened to you on September 11, 2001.

A. I was detailed to the rock for the day tour to teach educational day. Basically we didn't get the program started. Once the first plane hit we basically went into the office to watch what was going on. When the second plane hit, Chief Santangelo told us to shut everything down and send everybody back to their own quarters and wait for an assignment. With that, he told our members, everybody at the rock to start getting their gear and assemble, and that they were going to get a bus to bring us to the site.

With that, everybody assigned to the rock has gear there. I didn't have any gear so I just got in my truck and drove downtown on my own. I was fortunate enough I had a red light behind my seat from when I used to be a volunteer Fire Chief, so the Police Department waved us right in. I went down and parked -- I was parked on Canal and Church Street. I was parked on the sidewalk. I was basically running up Canal Street, figuring that I could just basically carry bottles, doing something. I didn't need gear to carry bottles up and downstairs. I was somewhere, I was somewhere in the vicinity of Park, close to Park, somewhere right around there. There was a lot of people coming out. I mean just mass people just leaving, as would be.

I saw rigs, I don't recall any numbers, but they were just basically parked there on the way in in different locations. Next thing you know, you could hear the noise. You could hear the wind blowing and then the dust came and once the dust came that was it. I was asking the people that were running what was happening, they said the building just came down. I didn't think the building came down but that's what it was. It was the first building. This was, I don't know, 10 o'clock, somewhere around there, because it took a while to get down there. Then it was just, you couldn't see nothing. You couldn't breathe. You couldn't do nothing. I said well I'm useless here now. I had to wait a little while for the dust to settle, then I went back, got my truck, drove up here and at that time, there was I guess a total recall so all the off duty guys were just starting to get back in.

Captain Principio was here. They just assembled us. We got our gear together, got what tools and what not together and we went to the Division and then we took a bus back down there. We didn't operate for a couple of hours later after that. All we did was go in and they told us to -- with the company they told us to go in and find a rescue collapse rig, see if it was serviceable. We went in and found that. We reported back and then they had us do victim tracking.

That was basically until later on in the day. We didn't do anything until later on in the day. I didn't report in to anybody because I never actually got to the site, because you couldn't see where you were going at that point.

Q. When you went to the rescue collapse rig, do you know where it was located?

A. It was on West Street, but I don't know the corner street. Because we actually went in, went through a couple of buildings around back and came out on the other side. That's where we found it. Who was there? Nick was with the rig. I can't think of his last name last name right now. Nick Giordano was with the rig already from Rescue 3. So when we came back we had told the command post that there was a guy from Rescue 3 member with a rig, it couldn't have been moved at that point, but there was somebody with the rig and it was intact. I mean it was damaged but it was intact.

Q. Anything else you can remember?

A. Nothing I don't think of any importance on the initial one. Like I said, by the time we got in there it was hours later and there was plenty other guys in there already doing work. All we did basically was dig and check and search ambulances in that courtyard when we got there later on that night.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: If you have anything further, otherwise the interview is over. Thank you for your time.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RICARDO RODRIGUEZ

Interview Date: December 29, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today is December 29, 2001. The time is 1320 hours. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter first grade Ricardo Rodriguez of Ladder 58 of the City of New York Fire Department. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Ladder 58 in Battalion 18's office regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Fireman Rodriguez could you tell me what happened to you on September 11?

A. All right. We initially got the call here to respond and relocate over to quarters of Ladder 20. We arrived there. We were there probably a half an hour or so. Second plane hit. Tower came down, second fifth alarm was given. We were told to respond down to respond down to I believe somewhere around Church Avenue and -- Church Street. Building somewhere down there. There was a report of a woman trapped. We were slightly delayed because members that had come back from Ladder 20 were piling on to the rig with their equipment. We had about 15 guys strapped on to the outside of the rig. We headed down there. We went down -- we worked our way to West Broadway. Headed straight down West Broadway. We got to West Broadway and Liberty. That's where we stopped the rig, Lieutenant Scotto decided it was safer to just stop the rig and not get any closer than that, which I don't think we could have, because there were girders in the street going down Liberty.

As soon as we stopped the rigs, guys got off the rig. I was probably the last one. I was sitting behind the chauffeur. I was probably the last one getting off the rig. When I got off the rig I could see the chauffeur -- I heard the chauffeur yell something. He was running up Liberty Street. I turned, I could hear a rumble, I turned and all I saw was this huge black cloud, 50 story black cloud coming at us. Only thing I could think of was to duck. It hit us. We were choking for a while till I was able to clear my mask and put it on. We had 3 civilians near us that were choking. We tried to give them air as well.

Once it cleared some, guys came back -- some of the guys that ran -- there was a man in one of the buildings that opened the lobby door and yelled to the guys to run in. They went there. Well, as they got back together we got everyone -- make sure everyone was safe, got together, we grabbed every tool we had and we proceeded down Liberty Street. We went down Liberty Street, as far as 10-10's quarters. Because of the debris field we couldn't go any further than that. We went through their quarters, came out the back of their quarters, headed south about another block or so and made our way over to West Street.

At that point I would say it was like midnight all through this time. By the time we hit West Street, we started working our way up West Street towards the towers. That's when it started to clear and you started to see a little bit of daylight.

We got to that point there and we were probably under the walkway. At that point we just went into the pile. There was a Chief up there giving out orders, whatever, but the radio was a mess, with all the Maydays and everything else. The only person I could recognize up there up on the pile was Ralph Tiso, Captain Tiso from rescue. He was searching around up there and found, I think it was some members trapped on the other side of the other pile. At that point the Chief yelled to everyone help stretch a line, we stretched the line. We operated a line to get those members back across.

After that it was just basically searching around. I really don't remember much more than that, taking a break around 2 in the afternoon. Then going back later that day. We were told to get our rig, because number 4 was totally involved and so we went, made our way back to Liberty and Church. The rig was gone. So we eventually wandered around until we finally found the rig on Vesey and Church. I think Ladder 120 was setting it up at the time.

We took the rig back over at that time and then some Chief came up and said he wanted the rig out of there because what was it, 6, number 6 building was going to come down. So we ended up pulling the rig up another block or so. Eventually he ordered everyone over by City Hall.

That was it.

Q. When you went into that hallway, the guy pulled you in?

A. I was by the rig. I never had a chance to leave the rig. About 3 or four of us that was stuck right by the rig. There was no chance.

Q. Did some of your company go down that hallway or was that the guys from 20?

A. The chauffeur, William Smith and I think there might have been a couple of guys with him that went into that building, I'm not sure. Like I said it was -- I just remember myself, Matt Hagan being right opposite, because he had the jump seat next to me so he was right alongside me in the rig. There were 3 civilians that were standing up in the street gawking when we pulled up. So they got hit there.

Q. When you went through 10 and 10's quarters, you said you went through their quarters?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see anybody in there?

A. There was someone in there that came out to us and said listen, you guys can make your way through here. I can't remember who it was. So we went that way. We went through there. Because we were going to attempt to try to start climbing up above. He said no, you are not going to get through there, come through here. We worked our way back through the back of 10-10's quarters.

Q. Anything else you can add or is that it?

A. No, that's it. Like I said, after City Hall, after that, after number 6 fell, later on we were called to set up the rig over on -- I forgot what street.

Q. Vesey and West you said before?

A. That's where it was initially, but we had to move it down another block and then down a block so we could hit what was going on in 6.

Q. When you heard the Maydays, could you identify anybody that was giving them, did you hear at all?

A. No, not at all. The only one I remember was the voice of one guy saying he was choking, he couldn't breathe.

Q. But he didn't identify himself?

A. There was just so much going on on the radio, so much traffic, between Maydays and the urgents.

Q. Captain Tiso, that was the Captain in Rescue 3, you said Rescue. I just wanted to make sure it was Rescue 3.

A. Right.

Q. That was towards West and Liberty when you were under that walkway?

A. West and Liberty, yes.

Q. You don't remember the Chief?

A. No, I don't remember the Chief.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Okay, anything else, otherwise the interview is concluded. Okay, thanks for your time.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JAMES CURRAN

Interview Date: December 30, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: December 30, 2001. The time is now 1233 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview today with Firefighter sixth grade James Curran of Ladder Company 8. We are in the quarters of Ladder Company 8. There is nobody else in the room. This interview is in regards to the events of September 11, 2001. What follows is the interview with Fireman Curran.

Q. Take it away.

A. Okay, a guy called the fire house about 8 o'clock and asked me, it's not an emergency but I have been smelling gas in the area of my house. He lived on 313 Church Street. He asked if we would follow up on it, so I told him to call the non-emergency number for the Fire Department. They will decide if they want us to go check it out or not. So we did. At 8:30, we got toned out for odor of gas on the corner of Church and Lispenard.

Us, Engine 7 and Ladder 1, we all responded with the First Battalion. We were there for 5, 15, 16 minutes. We had found out what grate the leak was coming from and our Chief Pfiefer was bent over with the gas meter. We heard the plane, we looked up. It was low enough that it rattled the buildings we were standing at. We saw it come out from behind the buildings and hit tower one and like I said, a fireball, looked like 10 or 20 stories big, shot out the south side of the tower and then out the hole that the plane made going in.

We all jumped in the rig, geared up, drove down. We had a straight shot. All the cars were pulled off to the side and people were looking at the building. We went down, I believe we went down Lispenard to the West Side Highway. Made a U turn and we couldn't pull in any closer. We tried to get into the taxi indent, but there were people on the ground burnt on the West Side Highway to where you would have had to run them over to get any closer. So we got out of the rig, went in the lobby. Engine 7 pulled up right behind us and Ladder 1 was behind them I believe.

We went in through the revolving doors. There was a mini lobby. There was like brown haze, smoke in the lobby. A lot of the marble slabs were falling off the wall, cracked. There were two people in like the little section of this lobby. One guy was burnt pretty much to a crisp and his jacket was the only thing left on him. Put that out with a can and then there was a lady off to the right of us that was alive but she was screaming that she couldn't breathe. So I hit her with the can and cooled her down.

Q. Where did these people come from?

A. I don't know if they were in the elevator or what not, but they were the only two people I saw in the lobby and they were right in the entranceway. Like I said she was still smoking when we got in there. The other guy was dead and she was just screaming that she couldn't breathe.

After I used I guess about a half a can on her, we went through the lobby. All the elevator banks were kind of blown out at probably 70 degree angles, 60 degree angles, and there is all rubble and spot fires in the lobby.

Q. Where did that come from?

A. I think they said that the fuel went all the way down the elevator shaft and when it finally hit rock bottom it blew out all the elevators.

Q. Is that it?

A. That's what I have been hearing. I don't know. I don't think anybody really knows. It was pretty much rubble in the whole lobby walking through.

We got back to the escalators and the police had people running down both escalators trying to keep them calm. We finally got them to channel them all down one so we could get up. We went up there, looked towards the courtyard and all the windows were stained, people hitting the courtyard I guess.

We went around the inside ledge that was between the elevator shaft, the corner of the building and the escalators. This stuff was still dropping and breaking the windows. We walked all the way around again trying to find a working elevator. There was finally one right near the command post, by the silver desk in the northwest corner of the mezzanine level. It was working. Lieutenant Halloran made the call, he was like no, we aren't taking the elevator. In this case we will walk. I believe that's the elevator that 20 truck and squad 1 wound up catching and went to the 16th floor.

We rested on I think the 19th floor was the first one we rested on and we were just walking up. People were coming down.

Q. You had orders to go up, was there a Chief there or you just start decided to start going up?

A. No, at that point First Battalion I think was the only Chief there. So he was kind of overloaded so Lieutenant Halloran made the call. Let's just get up there, we got to go up and get people down and out.

Q. Right.

A. So we started up. I think we were on the third or fourth floor when the first person we saw had both of her arms burnt. She was coming down. I don't know what floor she had come down from, but we were going up. It was us, Engine 7 was with us because their Captain had a roll up. We were all kind of just working together. That's why we only made it to the 30th floor because we were going slow instead of killing them. We had 90 floors to go.

So we were walking up. I think some guys from 33 Engine were with us. When we rested on the 19th floor, a guy from my class from 9 truck jumped in. He was with us. So like 28 Engine is right behind us actually going up. I didn't see any of them until we were going down. We went up, we rested on like the 19th floor. There were people on that floor getting out, going down the stairs. We made sure all of them, they had an open spot to file into. We rested probably 10 minutes there. We made another push and then we stopped on the 23 floor because there were people there. That was the first time that we had a break for water. They gave us water out of their offices. That's again when I ran into John Tierney from Ladder 9. I realized he was with us.

After the 23, actually we were sitting on the 23, when I don't know -- it wasn't the tower going down, but the building shook and vibrated. I was sitting right next to the first elevator shaft, just my sleeve was in front of me. There was a breeze strong enough coming out, it ruffled my shirt and we all just dove into the stairway. Probably I dove about 5 guys just stacked 5, 6 guys out. Then it subsided. At this point the air conditioner was still working. Everything in the building was still functioning fine. We just didn't know what it was.

We went back out, got our bunker coats on, went up again. It was real slow going up because there were people coming down and with your equipment, trying to squeeze by them and at the 30 floor we stopped again. We had to make another push. We had thrown gear down. We had our masks on the floor. The only thing I kept my gloves and my helmet in my hand at all times. I called my mother from the 30 floor. I was talking to her on the news when she freaked. She watched tower two come down while we were on the 30 floor. I was on the phone with her. I told her I will call you back. I got to go. She didn't know if we were going up or down at this point.

I don't know what Chief it was. I didn't see him before it and I didn't see him after, but he is the one that made the call, all FD get out now. We are going down staircase B.

Q. He was with you?

A. He popped out of nowhere. He wasn't with us going up, but he came out of nowhere, he had bull horn and he is saying everyone off the phones, all FD, we are leaving now.

Q. No reason, he didn't give you a reason. He just get out?

A. Yes, actually said get the F out. I don't want to use profanity. He stressed we are leaving, we are leaving now. Let's go. There was probably 60 of us on that floor. What companies I don't know. Because I think there were all different floors congregated on the 30th. We were all walking over to where our equipment was, our masks, all that. He said you don't have time, leave everything, let's go.

We started going down and on the way down, there weren't many civilians. There was the one heavy set lady that I know Ladder 6 wound up getting out. We had her at first, big -- we took her probably about 10 floors. She had to rest so 33 Engine, I believe it was, 33 -- I'm not sure, they said oh, we got her now. So they were taking her. Then I guess 6 truck wound up getting her in the end.

But we went down and there weren't -- there weren't really any -- the last civilians that we saw that were around we let go in front of us. Going down I know 28 Engine was with us. 33 Engine had a few guys with us. John Tierney from Ladder 9 was the guy behind me on the stairs. 7 and 1 we were with still. Guys in my company remember seeing some guys from 20 truck. We saw guys from Rescue 1 branching off on to a floor when we were going down.

Q. What stairway were you in, do you remember?

A. B.

Q. B stair?

A. Yes, to the ninth floor. At the ninth floor, an engineer told us we are going to switch staircases. Because at that point that was the staircase everyone had found blocked when they got to the bottom. At that point we switched to staircase A. That led us down to the west side of the tower on the ground, ground level, I don't know if it has a name. We were all in the lobby. There was -- I don't know, the whole lobby from where the stairs were to where they had whoever was in charge down there. It was probably, I don't know how many firemen. Probably 10 or 11 companies (inaudible). They were all standing around I guess waiting for an order. That's Danny Murphy made the call. He was like tower two went down, what's holding this one up. I think we should leave. It was almost like that's the call everyone was waiting on. I can't remember who said it but someone said get out.

Q. Who is Danny Murphy, who is that?

A. He is one of the senior guys, he was working with us that day. As soon as he said that, all the heads turned and they started filing out. I don't know how many companies got out before us but we finally broke into the line. We started going out. I was the second to last guy from my company and then Sal was behind me, Sal Butera and Lieutenant Halloran.

We started filing out and following the line of the building. I got just to underneath the north walkway. A guy started screaming to run. When I got underneath the north bridge I looked back and you heard it, I heard like every floor went chu-chu-chu. Looked back and from the pressure everything was getting blown out of the floors before it actually collapsed. I ran north up the West Side Highway. Sal ran west somewhere and got blown off, got burnt on the back of his back and went to the hospital, but I ran north. Everyone in front of me was a ways in front of me. I didn't see anyone behind me.

The Captain from Engine 7 and me came out the cloud just about the same time. We went over, washed our faces off at a hydrant and I went back down, once I teamed up with the rest of my company. Me and Danny Murphy went down to look for Lieutenant Halloran and all the other guys were going down looking for their people.

Like I said, I don't know what it was when the building shook when we were on the 23. Everyone seemed to think it was the tower going down, but I don't think so. When we were on the 30th is when I was on the phone with my mother and she watched it on the live on the news collapse while we were in the 30th.

Q. How long did it take you to get from the 23 to the 30?

A. Not long, probably another 15.

Q. So the first shaking couldn't have been the plane hitting tower two?

A. No, we were on the 16 floor when it was confirmed that another plane hit tower two. At that point, someone that was supposedly Secret Service, which disappeared, we never knew where he went, he said there was a third incoming flight. That was --

Q. He was telling everybody that.

A. At that point, I didn't know if -- we looked at each other and like well, do we go up, do we go down. At that point it's like well, if it's going to hit our tower it's going to hit our tower, let's keep going up. Turned out to be a false report but we couldn't find the guy after he said that.

Q. (inaudible)?

A. Vanished. I don't know where he went.

Q. Who was the Lieutenant from 8 truck?

A. Lieutenant Halloran.

Q. Was he on duty that day or was he volunteering?

A. Yes, no, on night tour, the only reason we were even all there was our company was out of service at 0900 for company medicals. So we had to ride till 9. He was on the night tour. I was the only one that wasn't on my normal schedule. I was working for a guy who was working --

Q. Where was he, was he with you when you were climbing the stairs, were you guys all together?

A. We got split up at one point. But we all met up 6 floors later because him and Kevin Dinkins wound up going up straight to the 30th and when we stopped with the Captain from Engine 7. Maybe another 15 minutes we were all linked up again on the 30th floor. Actually me and him, we had gone up to the 31 and forced the door. As soon as you took it you smelled jet fuel right away so we shut the door.

We said all right, we will go back down to 30th where the rest of the guys are. There were probably 6 of us that went up there. When we went down that's when I decided to make a phone call because my mother works at the Bank of New York building. I was just calling to make sure she was all right and tell her to leave, which she was, but she was at home. She didn't make it in. That's when tower two went down. I was on the phone with her.

Q. Where did this Lieutenant go, when was the last time you saw him?

A. When we were in the lobby, we all collected right near the command post, but then after Danny said what he said about we should get out, we had already started making our way over, but all 6 of us were at that pillar of painted glass that we wound up walking out.

Like I said, the only thing I can think of is either once he got us out he went back, maybe just to tell the Chief for accountability. 8 trucks out. My guys are out, I'm leaving or he might have walked out right behind us and something hit him. He walked back in.

Q. You guys were exiting the lobby of the north tower and that's about the last time you saw him --

A. Yes.

Q. You are not sure whether he went back in?

A. As soon as we started filing out, was the only time we got separated the whole time down there. But it was just one of those things. It was such a short time from when we were filing out to when we heard run, that, you know, maybe we would have gotten to the north bridge to where stuff would have hit us and collect again, but we didn't even have the chance to do that. We were just going underneath the bridge when the guy started screaming run. That's the only time we really got separated.

Q. What happened after the north tower came down, what did you wind up doing?

A. Like I said we ran up north. I got just past the beginning of the phone company building when the dust cloud came. I went up there, we cleaned our faces up a little bit, got some of the concrete out from us. Cleaned ourselves up a little bit. I wound up finding Danny Murphy. Everyone got separated. It was just bunker gear running everywhere. Once Danny saw me, he grabbed me. He is like let's go. So we walked right back down calling for Lieutenant Halloran.

There was guys coming up around us. We were asking like yes, we saw him back there. So we thought he was --

Q. Okay.

A. Standing out on the West Side Highway. But we went down and then once you were actually down, no, I haven't seen him, I haven't seen him. We looked for about an hour. That's when we finally went back to the fire house to call our families and say listen, we are all right, this and that.

Q. How did you get back to the fire house?

A. We walked. We all gathered what tools we had here and we walked back down and then the recovery had been started. Like you said I don't know what it was on the 23 floor. But definitely it wasn't the tower going down. The only thing I heard on the radio -- I heard lots of Maydays going up. Guys having chest pains on like 10, 11th floors.

Q. You can't climb with bunker gear, I couldn't do it. I'm surprised you guys. 19 floors you said before you stopped. I couldn't do more than 5 floors. You are young -- but a lot of guys --

A. The only thing that saved you, with everyone coming down, you had to stop at every half landing, so you only did it half a floor at a time. By the time we hit the 19th, we were --

Q. Yes. How long do you think it would have taken you to get to the 80th floor if you had gone to the 80th floor?

A. I'm guessing probably 4 hours, 3 and a half. It took us just about an hour, maybe a little over an hour, to get to the 30th.

Q. The Engine companies that you saw were they carrying rollups up?

A. I think that's what saved us actually, because the Captain from Engine 7 was an older gentleman. He knew that they would need an extra roll up so he grabbed one. He was hurting, we stopped, we always stayed with him. We never left him. Every time -- he lasted as long as us, I'm surprised, because we were all ready to stop every time we did. The stops were getting more frequent. We stopped on the 19, then we stopped on the 23. Then we stopped on the 30th. We probably would have stopped every nine, 10 floors after that.

Q. You have to do that. You had to do that or you would have a heart attack.

A. Thank god the air conditioner was still working. On the 30th floor is when the electricity went off. The lights went out and then the fire alarm systems started going off. The only thing on there was strobes.

Q. Could you see then? Were there emergency lights in the stairway?

A. No, actually the staircases's emergency lights weren't on.

Q. So what were you doing?

A. One of the night guys had flashlights.

Q. You had your flashlights?

A. Yes, but I think the floors that were already passed, I think people chopped the doors open so light coming in from the windows. It wasn't light, but it was still I guess enough guys with flashlights and whatever, you could see. What's weird is the smoke condition on the floors actually got worse on about the 22 floor. John Tierney actually asked me, he is in my class, he recognized me right away. He is like you want some air from my mask, because I left mine on the 30th. I told him no, in case you need it keep it, and he didn't make it. He was two guys behind me on the stairs and he didn't make it.

I think me and Sal were pretty much the last two out of the building before it came down. I think the guys behind us, I think they all ran west or south.

Q. That wasn't good.

A. No. If you ran north you were unscathed. I think Sal ran like northwest. He got knocked down and thrown I think like 20, 30 feet. Stuff was laying on him. He was actually laying on the ground next to a Chief. He forget his name. The guy said his name. He was like oh, it's good to not be alone at this time. They couldn't see each other, couldn't know anything that he got burnt on the back of his neck. Came out of the clouds and the paramedics grabbed him, ripped his coat off. They hosed him down and took him straight uptown, I guess Columbia Presbyterian, whatever it was, all the way uptown.

But I ran directly north. A lot of guys ran west. A lot of guys that never operated down there, whatever, I had a phone company job before the Fire Department that my office was down over in that area. So I knew -- I would rather run up the West Side Highway where there were no interruptions, pavement, as far as I could run, then jump over a middle island. Then who knows what you are going to run into.

Q. Right.

A. But I know a lot of guys ran west. A friend of mine in 207 Engine did that. He got picked up, he rode the cloud like 70 feet, till he hit a chain link fence.

Q. No kidding.

A. All he saw was a square. We was -- what if this didn't turn out to be a fence.

Q. Is he all right?

A. He broke his thumb. He actually, when tower one -- when tower two went down, and got buried in rubble and him and a guy dug themselves out and then tower one came down on him and tossed him again. So he is still a little out there.

Q. He's a lucky guy.

A. Very lucky, lucky twice over.

Q. Twice over, right.

A. That's basically -- everything besides that is all jumbled up who I saw. The only reason I remember 28 Engine is because I think it was every half landing, the companies would scream 28, I'm here. I'm here, all right, all right. Then you got to the next floor, 28, there was a guy Wade, I think his name is, from 33, that was with us the whole way down. Just a whole mix up of all different companies.

Q. When you got back to the fire house you never went back that day? What time did you get back to the fire house?

A. Back to the fire house, I'm guessing, probably 11:30 in the morning. Maybe 11:30, 12 o'clock.

Q. The next morning?

A. That afternoon. The building collapsed at --

Q. 9:30, 10, 10 o'clock?

A. We were down there for a couple of more hours, down there until about 12, 12:30, came back and then we went back down that night. I didn't go home until Thursday morning.

Q. Thursday morning.

A. We would do like 6 hours down there and then we would man the rig for whatever hours. I was pretty much down there in the area for three days. I don't know how many loads of laundry I did because everything would be itching like crazy every time you came back. All that is like a whole blur to me, because afterwards I was in shock. I don't know if I was in shock or couldn't believe that I lived or not or what. I just know we dug for like 6 hours a day and manned the rig for the other hours.

Q. Did you find any firemen when you were digging?

A. No, we were always sent to spots where we never found anyone. Although that spot right after we left is when they got deep enough, they wound up finding one or two guys here and there. Then they brought in the ABC platoon thing. I just did the 24 on, 24 off [redacted] Lieutenant Donahue got me detailed to 18 Engine. They took the squad out of service. I worked there for by a week, at 20 truck's quarters. No more fire duty. Then after that, I went back to regular chart.

Q. Is that it?

A. Yes, that's basically it.

BATTALION CHIEF MALKIN: It's 12:55 hours. This concludes the interview, I thank Firefighter Curran for the interview. That's the end.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TIERNACH CASSIDY

Interview Date: December 30, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today's date is 12/30/01. The time is 1136 hours, and this is Battalion Chief Malkin, Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Third Grade Tiernach Cassidy, Engine 3. We're in the quarters of Engine 3. The interview concerns the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Okay. You can start anyplace where you were when you got the run.

A. At the time on 9/11, I was on light duty at the 1st Division. I was right over at 20 Truck and Squad 18's quarters on Lafayette between Spring and Prince. I arrived there for light duty 8:00 in the morning.

I go out on the top of the building for my morning cigarette. Usually I'm the only person out there smoking. I think by the time I got there it was maybe 8:30. The first plane had already hit. You see plainly from the roof of the 1st Division the towers.

Everybody was on the roof. The shock and dismay and fear in everybody's eyes, the firemen, everybody that was there that didn't go down there that was on light duty with me because they didn't do what they call the total recall at that point.

Of course we're all asked, "Let's go, go." They're like, it went to a fifth alarm. We've got enough guys down there. Don't worry about it. It's taken care of. Still I was in shock. I was standing there, standing on the roof, not watching the TV, standing on the roof watching.

We don't actually see the second plane hit, but we see the impact. We were on of course the north side, so we saw the huge explosion engulf the whole top of that building. [redacted]

When I could talk after that, I said, "Now we're going. You know, let's go."

Q. Sure.

A. The guy in charge of the guys on light duty that day said, "I know. You guys still aren't going. You have to wait. You're not going. You have to wait until the call is made, until they say we can go." He's calling to see if we can, because we all want to go.

Then we start going downstairs. 20 and 18 left when the first plane hit. So we go downstairs. We go down the back stairs of the 1st Division, and we set into 20-18 and we start grabbing, putting gear together, because we were going to go anywhere.

Then the first tower came down. Then the guy that was in charge of us came running down the stairs. He's like, "Everybody's going who wants to go."

47 Truck was relocated to 20. Whether they were relocated there or just going down to pick up gear, I don't know. They were stocking their rig with cylinders and tools, radios, anything they could get their hands on.

Myself and ten other members that were there on light duty, we all jumped on top of 47 Truck, and we headed down Broadway. This is now after the first tower had collapsed. We're going down Broadway, and people were already flocking up Broadway, up Lafayette, everywhere uptown.

On the way down people were blessing themselves as we were going down. I'm standing on top of the rig between the bucket and the cab, between the ladder and the cab. People were blessing themselves in this gloominess of going down. It was like out of a movie. I couldn't believe what was going on.

But we get down there, and all the guys that we had on the top of the rig -- we had ten guys and whatever other guys came in from 18 and 20. We couldn't see once we got past City Hall a block ahead of yourself. You could see one block at a time and that's it from that first dust cloud and the smoke and whatever.

We stopped when we get to Fulton Street just to get our bearings, and everybody on the back -- as I'm sitting by the cab, so everybody by the bucket, they all jump off. I think it was five guys, because we said we wanted to make sure we had a team of five guys. So I guess the first team jumped off the back on Fulton, and then the truck took off again.

We leave the truck on the Broadway side of One Liberty Plaza between Cortlandt Street and Liberty. We all get off the rig, the members of 47 and the members I was with from light duty, and we start packing stokes baskets with spare cylinders, tools, whatever we could carry.

Civilians are running up to us saying they can't breathe, so we're giving them hits of the cylinders, of the masks -- we had cylinders, but we didn't all have masks. I didn't have a mask yet.

We start walking down Cortlandt Street from Broadway, going west, and we're carrying the stokes basket, myself and the team I was with, the other four guys. We started hearing the pancaking of the north tower now.

I looked at the officer I was with. We both looked at each other like what's that? Not thinking the second one would be coming down.

Q. What did it sound like?

A. It sounded like a plane just getting ready to land, just getting closer, coming in; a bowling ball getting closer when it's ready to hit that sweet spot, you know. But it didn't take us long to realize what it was. We didn't look up. We just ran back to the rig, thinking that would be safety or just away, anyway.

So we ran back up Cortlandt towards Broadway, and the other guys, I'm not sure where they all dove. I opened up the door to 47 Truck and stuck to the side of the rig and pulled my helmet down over my ears.

I remember right across the street from one Liberty the other building had a monument or something. It was a big square with a hole in it. It's been sitting there forever. I just remember watching that and thinking this is it.

Whatever debris is hitting me in the head or hitting the truck and falling next to me, I'm still looking at this monument. Then the monument slowly disappears from the cloud it was covered in, that we were all covered in.

However long it took, I don't know. As soon as debris stopped floating on us, we dusted ourselves off, we went back to the stokes basket, found it, picked it up, and continued down Cortlandt.

Then halfway down Cortlandt before we got down to Church Street, we heard a mayday being given already in one of the buildings off to the right, which is the East River Savings bank. There was a member in there. I'm not sure what company, where he's from, but he had a broken leg. The other three members needed to take him out.

So it was just myself and the officer now left with the stokes basket, and we continued down. While those three other members assisted this firefighter, the officer and myself went to the corner of Liberty and Church. It was on the corner of 10 and 10.

We dropped the stokes basket there. I used to live down on Maiden Lane years ago, which is a block and a half from the World Trade Center. So I knew the area really well. I was telling this to the officer on the way down, "I know this area."

So we got down to Church and Liberty, and he asked me, "Which way should we go?" And I didn't know. We couldn't walk through 10 and 10. The street was at least three stories high of debris covering 10 and 10. I think we walked down Cedar, down Greenwich, down Albany, until we got down to the West Side Highway, West Street.

We got to West Street. They had some sort of command structure set. We saw some white helmets. At first we started asking, "What are we doing? What are we doing?" Nobody really had a specific answer.

At that point we just needed more tools. So we saw there was an ESU vehicle, emergency services unit, police vehicle, squad cars, whatever, and we tried to get into those to get some more live-saving ropes, utility ropes, anything we thought we could use, a Halligan maul, what we needed.

Then I found a mask, so I masked up, cylinder. I had a life-saving rope, utility rope, Halligan. The officer had -- no, I had the maul, he had the Halligan, he had his mask. Then we walked down West Street I think right -- no, actually we went further down than West. We went all the way down Albany. We went past West down to Liberty between the -- right before you get to that -- it's like another atrium almost set up. It's by the Gateway Plaza area.

We hung a right up Liberty Street from there, and we entered between the Marriott -- I'm sorry. Yeah, between the Vista International and Two World Trade Center. Here is where we entered the site.

I couldn't tell what rigs were on fire while we're walking by them. We had hose lines stretched. We helped stretch a line quickly just to get it over debris. Then we continued. We didn't know what -- we didn't know where to start looking. We could have started looking where we were standing, but we wanted to get in, get in, get in.

I remember the World Financial Center, Two and three World Financial Center, being at my back, because it was the biggest buildings -- I only knew what was north, south, east and west. That's as much as I could tell from living down on Maiden Lane for four years. I could only tell which way was north, south, east and west. So every time the officer asked me, "Cassidy, where are we?" I looked around and see Two World Financial Center there. I would be like, "That's west, that's north," and that's all I could tell him.

When we got to pretty much between one and two, I would assume -- because once you're in there at that time, you had no clue.

Q. It's like a mountain at this point; right?

A. Yeah.

Q. Both buildings are down, you're on top of a mountain?

A. Correct, correct. We didn't know exactly how high we were up. Some of the voids that we saw, of course we went -- the officer, he was all gung ho. I was sticking with him.

I went for the life-saving rope, give him one end, he would tie himself off, and I would be up top and tie it to whatever substantial object I could. He would go give a quick search just to see -- because there were still maydays being given all over.

Q. Did you guys have a radio?

A. He had a radio. He had a radio which he took.

Q. From 20 Truck?

A. From 20 Truck.

I don't know how long we were walking around. It was about two hours prior to building seven coming down until we finally found somebody. We were walking around for at least three hours.

Finally we find this huge hole. I'm standing on the top of this huge girder. Nothing was moving on this girder, the size of these things. So I'm standing on top of the girder. At this point now we couldn't carry all our tools anymore. It was like climbing a mountain, with an extra hundred pounds on you, you just can't do it.

I started leaving tools left and right. I was leaving the Halligan. I just held onto the life-saving rope, which it's a good thing I did, because when I got to the top of the girder he said he's going to go down. So I unfurled the life-saving rope again, and he goes down in this hole and he comes up -- it wasn't a hole; it was a big gaping gash. It was about 35 feet down, 30-40 feet.

So he goes down, and he comes up the other side and he scales this other I beam to get up. He gets to the top of it, and I'm almost out of rope. So he says there's another gap, another void, over here. He said, "I'm going to be out of sight for a couple seconds." I was like all right. I didn't have a radio now. I couldn't even hear him, how far he was away.

So I tie off, and I go down to the bottom of the hole, and I started coming up. He said he found him. It was the guys from 36, that Port Authority cop, three civilians and a friend of mine, Mickey Cross.

Q. I know him well.

A. Yeah.

So the Port Authority cop comes out first. There was a chief there, two chiefs, I think. I don't even remember.

Q. These guys were down in the hole? Where were these guys, all these guys?

A. The fourth floor of the north tower when it came down.

Q. And they were in this hole where he was looking around? What condition were they in?

A. The other hole was 60 feet deep. How the tower came down, it came down on itself. So it was just pummeled into the ground. How they survived, I have no idea. I couldn't believe it.

I mean, I thought that day we were going to find hundreds and thousands of people walking out. You know, we'd just take them out.

But those 10 or 11 we found right there, that was it for that day.

Q. What were they in? Why were they waiting to be rescued? Were they in a place where you had to dig them out?

A. They needed a life-saving rope to come down and get them. They were down that far. There was no -- they didn't know which way was up, which way was down. 110 stories comes down on your head and you're 60 feet down --

Q. Were they dazed?

A. Oh, yeah.

Q. What kind of physical condition?

A. They are --

Q. So they needed assistance to get out of there?

A. Definitely, definitely. If you talk to Mickey -- the Port Authority cop comes out first. The life-saving rope is taut now. I'm like, "Come on. This way. This way." I'm just like directing traffic, you know. I get up to the top of the girder again, and now it's a tough climb to get to the girder.

So I use my body like a bridge. He gets up on my leg and then my shoulder and he's up on the girder. He lies there on top of the girder, and he gives me the biggest hug and he starts crying. For me it was like, "All right, no time for sentiment. You've got to get going. You walk that way."

At this point now the officer I was with was giving calls for the stokes basket because the civilians that were down there were not walking out. So the guys -- I forget whatever squads, rescues, whoever was showing up, I see them off in the distance. They're like, "Who asked for the stokes?" I was waving, "Over here."

I pointed to the Port Authority cop. "See those guys? Walk that way out, the way they're coming in." He's like, "All right." He walks out under his own power. Everybody that got out -- the next guy that came out, I forget -- I don't know who the chief was, but he had brass, white shirt. Nicks and scratches, bruises, you know. Mentally not with it. Totally dazed.

Q. Mickey Cross is okay?

A. Mickey was the third guy to come out. At first I didn't see him when he was coming down the pile. He slid down the I beam, you know. I grabbed his hand when he was coming up. He looks up, and all he has is a cut on the top of his nose, on the bridge of his nose.

I said, "Hey, Mickey." He just looked at me. He didn't remember who I was. He said, "Which way out? Which way out?" That's what he said. I just pointed. You could still see the Port Authority cop and the chief walking for a while. I just pointed to them and "Follow them." So he walked to them.

Then the guys from 36 came out next, 36 Truck. Then we started running civilians out. Then the stokes came in. At this point I was wearing Squad 18's gear, so I guess these guys from rescue now and squads that were there, it was their operation, squads and rescue's work. I don't know. I had this gear on, "Come on," blah-blah-blah. So maybe I kept in the action a little longer.

So we got all the civilians out in stokes. We brought in ladders to help, because the I beam that was going up. So it was some makeshift way to make it a bit easier to walk around.

Then, like I said, building seven was in eminent collapse. They blew the horns. They said everyone clear the area until we got that last civilian out. We tried to give another quick search while we could, but then they wouldn't let us stay anymore.

So we cleared the area. Our staging area at that point was on Vesey. It was down on Vesey, Vesey off West. We were probably a block up West on North End and Vesey, because I remember Marine 1 was docked right up here, and they were pumping water. They were pumping lines of water.

Q. Where did you find the hole where you were digging for Mickey Cross and all these people? Whereabouts was that in the site? Tower one?

A. That was tower one but it was --

Q. Somewhere in the pile?

A. -- the southeast end of tower one, because it was like I was dead center. As I said, I remember looking back and seeing Two World Financial Center behind me.

Then we sat on Vesey, and doctors were coming around. My eyes were just -- everybody's eyes that was in that dust cloud were killing me. So the doctor looked at me and was like, you need an eye wash. I was, yes. They washed my eyes a couple of times.

We were making sure we had all our members. I'm not sure if it was at that point when I ran into my company. I think it is. Yeah. First I was just sitting by myself. Then I first saw somebody here, Angel Rivera. I saw him; he saw me. He came over and gave me a big hug, and he started crying. I didn't know any -- because we lost five guys. He was with them. He was in the Marriott Hotel with them. He took out two civilians. I don't want to be telling someone else's story, if you want to talk to him.

He was senior guy on the truck, and I think he had the irons. He had the civilian with him. So when they heard another mayday on a higher floor in the Marriott, they were like, "We're going for the mayday." He was going to go with them, but they were like, "No, you have a civilian. Get the civilian out." He didn't want to, but he did. That was the last time he saw them. So he wasn't in good shape.

So yeah, then we just stayed on Vesey until building seven came down. There was nothing we could do. The flames were coming out of every window of that building from the explosion of the south tower. So then building seven down. When that started coming down, you heard that pancaking sound again.

Everyone jumped up and starts running west towards the water. I hear somebody yell, "Run and don't stop running." It wasn't half as high. It was only 47, 52.

Q. 40 stories, yeah, 47 stories.

A. Like that's nothing, 47 stories coming down; right? But the dust cloud didn't go as far west. I guess it blew whatever part north and south. But it came down as far as West Street. Nobody was injured with that.

So that was it. As soon as seven came down, we were going back in. I got together with my company, Engine 3, and Lieutenant Walsh was working. We went to work. Where did we go? I'm not even sure where we went after that. I think we just went to the building seven area, checking around there.

I was there till about 10:30 that night, 11:00. I got back to the firehouse here at 12 midnight. I know that. My captain was surprised to see me, because I was on light duty. Maybe he wasn't surprised; I don't know. But I came walking in the door with everybody else in the companies. Some rescue company from Long Island or something or upstate dropped us off. He saw me drag myself in. "Hey, Knickknack, how ya doing?"

That was 9/11 for me.

Q. I wrote down one question here. When you were walking down Vesey Street when you first got there and three of the guys that were with you went in to help a fireman with a broken leg --

A. Correct.

Q. -- how did you know he was in there? Did he call to you verbally? On the radio? What?

A. Another civilian came running up to us saying there's a fireman hurt in here.

Q. Right.

A. We all went in at first. The two guys, one went to either side of him. He was laying down on the floor. He still had all his bunker gear on and everything, but he couldn't walk on his leg. I'm assuming it was broken.

Q. Yeah, yeah, yeah.

A. The other two guys picked him up, and the third guy just gets behind him. That was it. They were looking for another stokes to put him in. We had all our tools in this one. There was a bus up the corner of Broadway somewhere, an ambulance, but that wasn't going anywhere. That was buried. We were able to grab the stokes from it. They grabbed the stokes, put him in that and then they carried him away.

Not to say we weren't waiting, but we weren't. We had other things on our minds.

Q. Why was building seven on fire? Was that flaming debris from tower two --

A. From tower two.

Q. -- that fell onto that building and lit

it on fire?

A. Correct.

Q. Because it really got going, that building seven. I saw it late in the day, and like the first seven floors were on fire. It looked like heavy fire on seven floors.

A. It was fully engulfed. That whole building -- there were pieces of tower two in building seven and the corners of the building missing and whatnot. But just looking up at it from ground level, however many stories it was, 40-some-odd, you could see the flames going straight through from one side of the building to the other. That's an entire block.

Q. I wonder what was burning in there. What do you think was burning? It's an office building. There's not a lot of wood in there.

A. You figure, that jet fuel, that explosion that hit, everything just came out. Remember that explosion? It was massive, that fireball. That jet fuel just --

Q. It was jet fuel, yeah. That must have been where it landed. That's probably where a lot of the jet fuel went.

A. A 25,000 gallon tank I think it had?

Q. It had to go somewhere.

All right. Is that about it?

A. Yeah.

Q. That's good.

CHIEF MALKIN: It's 1203 hours. I thank Fireman Cassidy for this interview. There was nobody else in the room during this interview. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DEREK BROGAN

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: Today's date is December 28, 2001. The time is 6:55 p.m., and this is Lieutenant Joseph Chiafari of the safety command of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with Derek Brogan, firefighter of Engine 5 of the New York City Fire Department, regarding the events of September 11th.

Q. Derek, I'll ask you to state your name, unit and tell us what took place on that day.

A. My name is Derek Brogan, assigned to Engine 5.

We went out of the box about 8:30, at Irving and 19th Street. Food on the stove. As we were taken up from the box, we were backing out of 19th Street, and we heard a plane go over our heads. So me and the backup man, Jimmy Andruzzi, looked at each other. We realized it was low. We actually mentioned it to each other. We continued backing out into the street. Just a minute later our officer told us that a plane had hit the Trade Center and that we were going on the second alarm.

As we were going there, we heard the 10-60 transmitted. Going down 14th Street, we started looking down the avenues and saw a lot of fire down there. We mentioned to each other that we had to stay together and this was going to be probably the biggest disaster we've ever seen.

So we continued down to West Street and made a left turn, getting a better look at the tower. We knew that we had to go there and try and help the people out.

We parked by the Verizon building. All the members got off the rig. We all grabbed extra cylinders. Manny Delvalle was with us. He had the door position. He didn't take a roll-up; the chauffeur took a roll-up. He figured he was just going to park the rig on a hydrant and took off for the building.

We got in the lobby. I believe either the lieutenant or Captain Atlas from 10 Engine came up to us when we got in the lobby and said that we were to team up together, 10 Engine and 5 Engine. We thought that was strange. We thought they would be up there already.

Just as everyone was starting to walk towards the center stair, which was the only stair we thought led up to the upper floors, we heard the next plane hit the other building. We looked out the windows at the reflection on the Financial Center and saw the fire plume coming down.

Then we really didn't know what we were up against. We were kind of hoping that it was an accident at the time for the first tower. But once the other building got hit, we realized that it wasn't an accident anymore.

We started marching up the stairs. I'm not positive about what floors it was, but we took a break on like 10 for a few minutes. All the people were coming down, they were very calm. They would yell from a couple floors up that there was a burn victim coming down, and everyone plastered themselves up against the wall and the burn victim would come down. It was amazing to see that they were actually smiling that they were almost down the stairs.

Maybe about the 13th floor I started having chest pains. I remember now what it was from. I had crossed my extra cylinder over from one side to the other side. I felt a tear go across, but in the chaos of what was happening I never put two and two together.

So we stopped for a few minutes, got some water. I felt better. I started walking back up the stairs, got to 19, and I had chest pains again. So we stopped. The lieutenant was going to leave me there with a couple of other guys to go back down. But I started feeling better, and we went up again, to the 23rd floor.

There the chest pain was getting very irritating. They called mayday for somebody to come up and give us oxygen, because there was myself and two guys from 9 Truck there. The guy from 9 Truck was yelling that he couldn't feel his arms.

So the Port Authority ESU cops came up. They gave us some oxygen. There was an FBI guy I think on that floor or one of the floors just below it as we were walking up. He told us the Pentagon got hit and the other tower got hit. He misinformed us by telling us that NYU Hospital got hit. I remember him saying that to me. And he said, "We still have four planes in the air, and we don't know where they are."

We were in an outer office on the 23rd floor on the southeast corner, which I guess faces tower two. Then we felt the rumble. You just heard this noise that sounded like the subway train going by but magnified by a thousand.

When we heard that noise, we just all got up. We didn't bother to look out the window. We just made an exit out of that room. We got to 9 Truck. I remember them yelling that we had to close the doors behind us. We closed the doors behind us, and I went to go back in the stairwell and there wasn't any room in the stairwell. It was loaded with people.

So myself and a guy named Schroder from 10 Engine went down the hallway and found a closet, and we darted into the closet. We were in there maybe five to ten seconds. Then we heard a knock on the door. We opened the door. At that time the lights went out and the whole place just was -- you couldn't see anything. Dust, smoke, whatever it was.

Outside was a Port Authority cop. We dragged him in with us. We couldn't get him all the way in the room because he was laying on the floor and his leg was hanging outside of the doorway. This wind came down the hallway and blew the doors open that were in that office that we were in. I remember me yelling that his ankle was getting crushed outside the door.

That subsided after about 20, 30 seconds. The rumbling was still there, but the wind was gone. We opened the door. We yelled outside where 5 Engine was, because you couldn't see anything. They said they were here. They just kept on yelling. We found them in the stairwell.

We went down with a number of civilians, maybe like nine or ten civilians and maybe four Port Authority cops, it seemed. We were all carrying people and sharing our masks with them.

As we got back in the stairwell, we didn't know whether we were going up or going down. But the rumbling was so intense that we didn't really know what had happened. We just assumed that our building had been hit by another plane.

The officer just looked at all of us and said, "That's it. We're getting out of here. We're done. We're of no use to anybody here. We've got to get these people out."

So we started going down the stairs. It was a real slow haul down the stairs. We got to the fourth floor, and the stairwell was filled with rubble. We couldn't go down that stairway anymore. So we went out into the hallway through the fourth floor, and the officer again yelled that we have to look for windows. Maybe we could blow out a window and just get fresh air from a window, whatever it was that was in his mind.

We went down the hallway, couldn't find the windows. Then we heard him yelling, "Anyone in the stairwell, go to the lobby." We followed his voice back to the stairwell, went down the four floors, and we had lost another member from Engine 5. We had lost Gerard Gorman.

We had lost Manny Delvalle on the way up the stairs. We saw him on maybe the first or second floor, and then when we stopped on ten, we posted a guy at the door and he just never passed us. But he was carrying an oxygen bottle.

Instead of carrying a roll-up, he had the EMS oxygen bottle.

Our thoughts are that he might have stopped to help one of the civilians that came down that was burned. That's kind of what we hoped he had done, because that would probably have put him back in the street.

We had lost Gorman, so we waited down at the lobby. We came down the center stair and were waiting in the lobby, yelling up the stairs for him to come down. He wasn't coming down the stairs, and there wasn't anybody else coming down the stairs. Our officer told us that he saw Lieutenant Donnelly on the down the stairs. He's from 3 Truck. But I don't remember seeing him even, he vividly remembers seeing him and trying to make him come with us.

We waited in the lobby probably about a minute, and then the officer just told us that we have to cut our losses and try to find our way out, because you couldn't see anything. There was gas leaking all over the place. The marble was falling on top of us.

So we proceeded to go to West Street, pretty much the same place we came in. There was no windows in the lobby when we showed up, and there was no windows in the lobby when we were leaving.

We went to step outside the window, and we caught a figure. I don't know -- I remember his face, but I don't remember what he was wearing, whether he was a fireman or a cop or a civilian. He was probably about 50 yards away from us.

He just started yelling, "Come on." He was looking up at the building and waving his hand at us. So we went to walk outside the window. Just as we stepped out, he started saying, "Stop, stop, stop." That's when all the bodies -- I don't know how many bodies, but a bunch of bodies came down at that specific time. It looked like it was raining bodies.

After about ten seconds, he just started screaming, "Now you've got to run." We ran and ran and ran and we got onto West Street, and we started walking, looking for the rig. I couldn't find the rig, which was only parked a block up.

We looked back at the building, and the dust had already settled from tower two falling down, but we were blocked from the view. We didn't know what had happened. So we look at our tower and just assumed it was still standing. So we didn't know whether to go back in or not.

The guy just started screaming at us again, "It's coming down. It's coming down." We just took off. We couldn't find the rig. Me and Jimmy Andruzzi got split up. I went up and I tried to jump on the back of an ambulance that was going north up West Street, but it only went ten feet and stopped in traffic. So I got off of that.

I started running up West Street. I still had my mask on and looking back at the cloud that was coming behind us. A clear burst of air came right before the dust cloud came and blew my mask off my shoulders. I just kept on running.

I found a girl on West Street talking on a cell phone like nothing had happened. I just grabbed her under the arm and went up to Stuyvesant High School and sat down there.

That's pretty much where the dust cloud finished.

From there I saw a guy from Cabrini that works in the Cabrini ambulances that is familiar with us because we went with him all the time. He just said, "What's the matter with you?" I said, "I have chest pains." He put me in the ambulance. We went to Cabrini. They did an EKG. Everything was fine. They told me it was a pulled muscle under my chest.

They gave me my -- well, first on 19th Street they decontaminated me with a garden hose, stripped all my clothes off in the middle of 19th Street. After they did the EKG, they just gave my clothes back and sent me back to the firehouse.

I came back, called the division to tell them that I was back here, and they sent me around to all the neighboring hospitals around here to start writing up lists of who was in the hospital, who was admitted, who was treated, who was released.

That's basically all there is about it that I remember.

Q. Good. What was the highest floor you had gone up to?

A. 23.

Q. 23. Do you recall how long it took you to get up there in terms of time? Can you estimate from the time you left the lobby to how long to get up there?

A. I never really looked at the time line in the face of that. We were in the lobby when the second plane hit, and we were on the 23rd floor when the other building collapsed. Was that an hour? I'm not positive.

Q. It was close to an hour.

A. Yeah. It was a very hard walk up.

Q. Actually when you got to the 23rd floor, you actually went out on the floor itself.

A. Right. That's where we left to get some relief from going up the stairwell. That's when the chest pains set in, and that's when they called a mayday. They came up within three minutes. They gave me oxygen. Within two minutes of giving me oxygen is when the other building fell.

Q. When the other building fell, then, it was the dust and debris from the other building that wound up on your floor?

A. Yeah.

Q. Had the windows, I guess, blown?

A. There were no safety lights. Nothing went on.

Q. It was total darkness now up there?

A. Total darkness, yeah. We just happened to be with two guys from 9 Truck which we know. They're right down the street from us. So we teamed up with them for a little bit, and they went a separate way and went down a rear staircase, and we went down the staircase that we're familiar with. We went down that one and got to the fourth floor.

Q. You've since seen those two guys from 9 Truck?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear anything unusual on the radio or you weren't wearing a radio that day? You had the nozzle position; correct?

A. Yes. I didn't have a radio. I didn't hear any maydays for anyone to come out. I do remember a guy from 10 Engine trying to find his officer. I don't know if he was the control man or backup man or whoever had the radio over there.

I remember the officer saying that he was on the 43rd floor to come on up, and they were coming up with us. I guess it might be a little easier going up without a roll-up, so he was making good headway on the stairs.

The staircase we were in, we were only taking two or three steps and stopping, two or three more steps and stopping. As you got higher up, maybe for the first nine or ten floors, you were sailing right up the stairs. But then as you got more into the heart of the building I guess where more of the population was, it was harder to get up the stairs.

Q. I assume there were people coming down the stairs at the same time you were going up?

A. There were a lot of people coming down the stairs. It never ceased.

Q. Do you remember what stairway designation it was, by chance?

A. I believe it was C, which was the center of the building that we went up. We might have went up that staircase to about 14 or 15.

Then we just couldn't make it up that stairway anymore, and we left to I think B, which would be on the southeast corner and went up that stair. That's where we got up to the 19th floor first and then the 23rd floor after that.

Q. So the original staircase you did take, that was the one that was blocked around the fourth floor level?

A. No. From what I believe, there's only one staircase that goes to the lobby of that building. The other staircases go to the sky lobby or the promenade or whatever that level is called. We went right up the center staircase in the core of the building where the elevators were, and we went right up there.

When we were coming back down, we were coming back down the southeast staircase, which I think was B. I'm not positive it was B. I guess the rubble had come up and gone through the windows of the lobby and then to the staircase and just knocked it out. That was the rubble that was blocking our path to get down.

Which actually the guy that they were calling for, Gerard Gorman, found his way down that staircase with a couple guys from 20 Truck. I guess it wasn't as cluttered as we thought. We just had the lead guy in front of us yelled back there's no more stairs, they're all gone.

So in the darkness we believed everything we heard. I was sharing my mask by putting it on people's faces. Gerard Gorman was sharing his mask by purging it. So maybe with that loud hissing noise going on, he didn't hear that we were getting off at the fourth floor.

That's the only thing I can imagine, that we were all close together, but we couldn't see anything. You would have to really get down like eight, nine inches from the floor just to see the glow-in-the-dark strip that was on the staircase to find out where the last stair was on the landing so you could make the turn.

Q. Any people you had seen prior to going up the stairs in the lobby that you know are not around today or any people you saw on the upper floors that did not make it through this?

A. We didn't see 33 Engine, which we thought we would see. We didn't see any familiar faces, no familiar faces. We teamed up with 10

Engine, and that's who we stuck with all the way up.

I remember asking a number of people while we were going up, the civilians that were coming down, what floors they were coming from, how high up they were. I don't remember hearing anybody from like above the 60th floor.

We had the mind-set that we were going to the 80th floor for some reason. I guess I just overheard that in the lobby, that we were going to 80. In hindsight, it was higher than 80, tower one. But I remember on the way up we were counting floors. We stopped on a certain floor like 10, we've got 70 more to go; 20, we've got 60 more to go.

I really don't know what we would have done when we got up there, but we were trying to get up there. We even started dropping our stuff to see if we could have the companies that were further up, leave their stuff and come back down. We would just go without our rollups.

I was even thinking we would switch bunker gear with them, trying with what company you have to go as far as you can, go with a chain. But I really don't know if that would have been (inaudible).

When we were a couple blocks away from the building, we heard the noise coming down. It was just like dominos only it was probably going faster and faster and faster. Then you just couldn't see anything.

Q. This is the second collapse?

A. This is the second collapse.

Q. Do you remember your exact positioning, where exactly it was when you started to run at that point?

A. We were just beyond the Verizon building, which I think the Verizon building is the north side of Vesey Street.

Q. North side of Vesey, yes.

A. So we were just a block beyond that.

Q. So actually on West Street, though?

A. On West Street. Luckily that's the way we responded, so that's the way we started going to leave. Had we come in from the south side, we would have tried to go south and wouldn't have been able to go south. I don't remember seeing the other building laying in the street as we came out, but I don't remember the giant dust cloud from the other building either.

I saw that guy that was 50 yards away that was waving us out of the building. When tower one fell down, I don't think we would have been able to see 50 yards with the dust cloud that came from that.

I only remember seeing the two guys from 9 Truck. Other guys they said they remember hearing 3 Truck giving maydays, having gotten a radio at that point. We were just preoccupied with trying to carry some people and hopefully trying to find our way out.

There were a number of times we didn't think we were going to make it out. You thought when we got off the 23rd floor, that was it, you were clear.

The chest pains, I thought it was a heart attack. I had never had any heart attack before, so you really don't know what it's supposed to feel like. But it didn't feel good.

When the fourth floor was blocked, I thought that our luck had run out there. When we got to the lobby, I thought our luck had run out there. Then when the bodies came down when we were leaving the building, I certainly thought that was our last chance.

I would estimate we were out of the building maybe two minutes before it fell down. So in that little time line, I think it took us between 20 and 25 minutes to come down from the 23rd floor, which is a long time. It seems like two minutes, but it was a long time.

Q. Sure.

Any recollection of any talk of the elevators before you went up the stairs? You were in the stairwell, of course, but any talk of the elevators?

A. Someone did mention in the lobby about the elevators, but it was quickly dispelled. The elevators aren't working. The elevators aren't working.

I do remember seeing Joe Malone from Battalion 6 as we were walking in the battalion rig was parked on the east side of West Street by the center divider in the street. He waved to us and told us to be careful upstairs. He's gone now.

I don't remember seeing Chief Williamson that was with him, but I remember seeing Joe standing in the street at the back of the rig, waving to us.

Until the second plane hit, we really thought it was an accident. We didn't put together it was the clearest day, one of the clearest days I've ever had. We didn't put together that that plane went over our head until when we actually were told that another plane had hit.

I didn't know until I got to Cabrini Hospital that another plane had hit the other building, that it was actually a plane. When they were decontaminating me, I thought maybe it was something a little more sinister, you know, because they wouldn't tell me anything. They just told me --

Q. Of course. You go by sounds or what you hear. It's like not knowing exactly what's going on.

A. They were just telling me that I was exposed, and I didn't know what I was exposed to. I was just hopeful. When I heard it was another plane, I was actually kind of relieved that that's all it was.

I do remember questioning myself, transferring from Staten Island to Manhattan.

Q. A lot different, huh? A high-rise building as opposed to a two- or three-story building.

A. I transferred here.

Q. Anything else of importance that you feel is necessary to add to this interview?

A. The evacuation of the people seemed pretty orderly coming out. I don't know if I would have been that orderly if I was running out of the building and I had the recollection of what happened in '93. They were definitely organized. Nobody was pushing, shoving.

There was no emergency lights. There was no intercom system in the building that I remember hearing. If you read the papers, they said that they were announcing to get out of the building. I don't remember hearing any intercom system remarking that the other tower got hit or they were evacuating tower one. None of that. None of the emergency lights worked.

They should have had more staircases going to the lobby, because when you come out at that promenade level and you have to walk outside in between the buildings, and there was no one between the buildings.

That's about it. I really don't recall much else. I really didn't recall much when I came out of there. It's just bullshit sessions that we had in the basement that triggered your mind to remember what happened. Just the guys talking to each other was a great asset to try and piece this together and figure out that we were just as much victims as everybody that was in the building. We didn't have a chance to do anything. We didn't have a chance to put the fire out, which was really all we were trying to do.

Q. That's all we can.

A. I don't recall anything else.

Q. That's all. It's what you remember, basically, on that fateful day.

A. Yeah.

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: So the time is now 7:18, and this concludes the interview that we have this evening with Firefighter Brogan.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RONALD CIFU

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: Today's date is December 28, 2001. The time is 5:05 in the afternoon. This is Lieutenant Joseph Chiafari of the Safety Command, and I am here today conducting the interview with Firefighter Ronnie Cifu of Engine Company 16 regarding the events of September the 11th, 2001.

Q. Ronnie, state your name and your company and describe for us what had taken place on September the 11th.

A. My name is Ronald Cifu of Engine 16.

September 11th I was working the day tour. I got here a little early. About 8:45 the run came in. I heard a plane had hit the World Trade Center, and I kind of figured that we were going to be going. So I got on the rig and turned the radio on. I was listening to it on the radio. Right away the box was transmitted, and they sent us initially.

From here I got on the FDR Drive and headed south from 29th Street. I made good time. Once I got past the Brooklyn Bridge, I was able to get a good look at the towers. There was an incredible amount of fire, at least ten floors as far as I could see.

From there I was debating on which route to go. I got down to Battery Park, and I decided not to go through the tunnel, underneath the battery and out onto West Street. I got off, and I think I went up State Street to Church. I went up Church and made a left turn onto Liberty, but there was too much civilians and traffic on Liberty. So I backed out, and that's when the second plane hit.

I heard an explosion, and the guys got off the rig to back me out. Then the debris started falling. We got hit with a lot of debris on Church and Liberty. I continued north on Church, and I made a left turn on Barclay. I went down Barclay, took a hydrant over there. We all got off the rig.

I walked to the Trade Center through the plaza onto West Street. I was with the members of Engine 16. The officer and the members went into the building, and I started helping the other MVOs supplying water to the building.

We had the north corner of the north tower. There was a Siamese connection there. We had that supplied. There was a Siamese connection on the south corner of the north tower, and we had that supplied. We were relaying water from across the street to one pumper to the Siamese.

Once we had the building supplied with water and all the other chauffeurs were doing pretty okay and everybody was hooked up, I was plotting my next move. My next move, I was thinking about going into the building and down to the basement and maybe starting the fire pumps or checking with the engineers.

That's when the first person jumped. I was on West Street. I backed up a little bit. Then another person jumped. There had to be at least 15 people that just jumped in the amount of like ten minutes. The time was around 9:15, 9:20 at that point.

When I first got there, there were a lot of maydays and urgent messages. One of the messages I heard was we lost an elevator, and then there was a second message that we lost another elevator.

As the operation continued, there was a lot of debris falling. As the people were jumping, I kept on backing up onto West Street and heading a little north. I was sort of like underneath that north bridge.

As all the debris was falling, I think that's when the south tower started to collapse. I remember a lot of people running, and I looked back and I just thought it was more debris. People were running past me. So I continued to run with them, and I was running north on West Street. I turned around and I saw the dust cloud. Before you know it, that caught up to me and I was engulfed in that.

Then I was crawling on West Street. I was worried I was going to get hit with part of the building or somebody was going to run me over. Sure enough, there was a police car and he was running north with his lights on, and he was crashing into the wall, the divider wall, which he kind of had me pinned up against. And then I jumped up onto the grass, and I started crawling along the grass.

The dust continued. It was completely black. I would say that lasted about 10, 15 minutes. Once that cleared, I kind of went and regrouped with a couple of the other chauffeurs. I got back up on my feet and went back to my rig. I pulled my rig a little closer. I hooked up. We were trying to keep some of the dust down. We had a couple of the stangs going to try to keep some of the dust down.

I wasn't really sure if there was a collapse. I thought it might have been a partial collapse, maybe just the top floors.

As far as water, I'm not sure if we had enough water into the building. We could have used a little bit more. I'm thinking that maybe the plane severed the standpipe system itself.

That was about 15, 20 minutes after all that took place, and another 10 minutes after that -- it was about 30 minutes between buildings -- then the second building came down. I remember seeing the top floor, about five or six floors, pushed out and to the west, and then the whole building came down.

Then it was the same scenario all over again. I started running up West Street. This time I got behind one of the rigs and just waited for the dust to clear. Most of the dust cleared. Then I got dusted off. I regrouped with a couple of guys.

That was pretty much it for me for the day. I was kind of like knocked out of the kitchen. At that point they pushed everybody north up to Chambers Street to the staging area, and they weren't letting anybody back towards the fire.

I remember seeing companies. I remember seeing rescue, Rescue 1. I remember seeing 3 Truck, Ladder 2. That was the last time I saw them. I remember hearing Ladder 7 on the radio, on the handy talkies. I couldn't get a clear picture as to what they were saying. They just seemed to be checking in with one another. That was the last time I heard Ladder 7, and that was before the collapse.

That's about it.

Q. Do you recall who from Ladder 7 you heard on the radio, the voice?

A. No. I heard the officer maybe the OV, or the roof. They were all kind of like checking in with one another.

Q. As far as the companies that you said you saw like Ladder 2, Ladder 3, did you see them in the street? Did you see them in a particular part of --

A. I saw Ladder 3 in the plaza between like Barclay and the World Trade plaza. They were just heading in. I saw Ladder 2 heading south on West Street. Rescue 1, I remember seeing them on West Street. That was all before the first collapse.

Q. You mentioned about hooking up to the Siamese on the north side of Vesey Street?

A. Yeah.

Q. Do you recall which apparatus it was hooked into?

A. No. It might have been 1 Engine supplying that. I don't remember which rigs it was. But we had the building covered. We had all the Siamese connected.

Q. Just waiting to be used, if it was ever used.

A. Yeah.

Q. Did you go in the building at all at any point?

A. No, no. I started walking towards the building. I was thinking about going in, checking with the engineers, and something told me that's just not a good idea. I turned around. That's when people started jumping. I just backed off from there.

Q. All right. Anything else you feel of importance that you need to add?

A. I think the standpipe system itself might have been severed, so I don't know if the standpipes were ever used. If they were, I don't think we had a good supply of water. I don't think we had a good supply of water from the hydrants. It seemed like we were getting -- the pressure was just dropping as we used all the hydrants in the area.

The water pressure seemed to be a problem. It was just the more hydrants you were using, the less pressure you were getting and you just couldn't supply.

Even after the collapse when we were starting to relay water to the car fires and stuff like that, we just couldn't get the water. I think that was a big problem.

Q. Do you recall what you were operating, what pressure you had, what you were drawing from the hydrant from the operating panel?

A. The hydrant pressure was down to like maybe five, ten pounds, and we were losing water. I noticed that at a couple of different locations. Towards the end of the operation, they were relying on the boats supplying water from the river.

Q. This is later on? This is after the collapses had taken place? This is when they were trying to control fires that were taking place around the surrounding area?

A. Right. Even when I went down there a week later, it was the same problem. We just couldn't get any pressure out of the hydrants.

Q. You weren't aware of the pressure of the hydrants before the collapses, though?

A. No, no. I was just stretching lines and making connections between the chauffeurs.

Q. Very good. All right. Anything else?

A. I don't think so.

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: This concludes now the interview with Firefighter Cifu. The time is now 5:17.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TIMOTHY MARMION

Interview Date: December 28, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: The time is now 4:20 in the afternoon. This is an interview with Firefighter Tim Marmion, M-A-R-M-I-O-N, from Engine Company 16 of the New York City Fire Department. I am Lieutenant Joseph Chiafari of the Safety Command conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Okay, Tim, can you state your name and describe for me the events taking place on September 11th, 2001.

A. My name is Tim Marmion from Engine 16. I worked night tour the night before on Monday the 10th. I was scheduled to work the day tour on the 11th.

We got the call at about I guess 10 to 9. We came down to the Trade Center. When I got on the rig, one of the guys told me -- I had been in the rack before that working the night before. We had a pretty rough night, so since I was in the rack, I wouldn't have been aware of anything going on.

The guy told me -- what I heard on the voice alarm was explosion in the Trade Center. When I got on the rig and started down there, a guy told me a plane had hit. At that time they thought it was a small plane.

We proceeded down the FDR Drive. You could see the Trade Center from there. At that time I realized it was more than a small plane, a bigger aircraft, because you could see the fire and the size of the hole in the side. You knew it was much bigger than the guy thought it was.

We arrived underneath the Trade Center at about 9:00. We went to move the rig. We tried to make a turn. We couldn't make the turn. So we got out and repositioned the rig. As soon as we got back in the rig, that's when the second plane hit. We proceeded around the corner, and I believe we parked an Vesey Street.

We walked around into the lobby where the command center was. There was Commissioner Von Essen, Chief Feehan, I believe Ganci was there, and I'm sure Mykal Judge was there. There was a bunch of guys standing there. Those were the only people I saw in the lobby besides building personnel. There were no firemen in the lobby.

They told us we were with 1 Engine. 1

Engine arrived a few minutes later, and they told us to take three rollups and a standpipe kit up between the two companies so we could piggyback them up there, switching on and off every six floors or so, taking a breath in between. As far as I know, they told us to proceed up as high as possible to see what was going on up there.

We started up. About every six floors or so we would switch on and off with the rollups. There was a steady stream of civilians coming down. There was a steady stream of firemen and a few cops scattered in there going up. It was orderly, both sides.

We got up to the 22nd floor. We used that as a rest area. The officers went to find a command center they had heard about which I think eventually wasn't one of our command centers; it was a Port Authority command center that was on that floor.

At that time is when the other tower fell. We were in the tower by West Street. I believe that's tower number one. So at that time the tower number two collapsed. We were on the 22nd floor. We waited for the officers to get back and regrouped.

The building shook. The lights went out. There was some discussion about continuing up or to leave the building. I had heard on a radio that somebody else was wearing standing next to me, "Evacuate the building."

We had a brief discussion. I was told that they meant the civilians. I felt at 10:30 they weren't trying to evacuate civilians. The civilians were leaving at a quarter to 9 when the first plane struck. It was a foregone conclusion that they were leaving the building.

At that time when they told people to evacuate -- that was the word I heard, "evacuate" -- they were talking about us, get out. I believe the officer of 1 Engine tried to call down to the lobby just to verify that. Whether or not he got through, I'm not sure. I'm assuming he did, because then he turned around and told us to get down.

We proceeded down. I made sure that all the guys in our company were ahead of me and they were starting out. We proceeded down, it was an orderly evacuation, people leaving the building at that point. Everybody was leaving at that time. There was very few, if anybody, going up at that point.

Around the 10th or 11th floor was where I saw the large black woman that 6 Truck had encountered. There were at least 10 or 12 firemen ahead of me that had asked the woman if she wanted help down. There was a security guard from the building, a Port Authority cop or someone with plain clothes and with a gun. He was adamant that he had her, he would take care of her.

So we continued on down. The next floor there was a woman on a stretcher that was being carried by a civilian. A couple of fireman, myself included, relieved those people on that stretcher and carried her down the remainder.

I met a couple of the other firemen that were at the bottom of the stairs waiting there for me, and we took the stretcher from there and brought it out to an ambulance.

As far as I know, there was no smoke condition in the lobby at that time. I thought the command center was still being manned. I don't know if that's true at this point. There were people over there. I assumed it was the same people that I had left earlier, probably an hour, before. That might not be the case. I'm told that Ganci and Feehan and those guys went across the street, actually by that time.

We took the person out. We put her in an ambulance that was parallel with the Trade Center on West Street. We proceeded to walk north on West Street. We were out of the building a couple minutes, less than five, I would think, I was told, and the building started to come down. We ran up West Street.

We regrouped again, got all the guys together. Eventually we dove into one of those buildings that were there to get out of the smoke. You could feel the smoke and the heat from where the building hit the ground. We regrouped and just waited in the staging area.

We wanted to go back. I told them that we had lost our lieutenant. We didn't know where he was. Also our truck wasn't heard from in quite some time, and we wanted to know where they were. Nobody really had any information at that point.

Pretty much the rest of the day we just searched the perimeter looking for these people. Eventually our officer who had lagged behind somewhat, he told us that he climbed out of the building. He was in that area with 6 Truck and that woman.

He was in that area with several others -- a couple chiefs and other various people. He had climbed out two or three hours later. I actually didn't see him until probably 9 or 10 or clock that night when he came back to the firehouse. We got back about 8:00.

The rest of the day was just us sitting in a staging area. They told us we couldn't go back in. That's about it.

Q. Okay, Tim. You mentioned the 22nd floor. Do you recall what amount of time it took you to get from the lobby to the 22nd floor?

A. If you could tell me what time that building collapsed.

Q. The other tower collapsed approximately like 5 after 10.

A. So we were on the scene for an hour at that point. It probably took us 45 minutes to get up there, I would think. I would think at about a quarter after 9 we started up. So if that happened a little after 10, I would think 45 minutes.

Q. 45 minutes?

Do you recall what stairway designation that you took up?

A. The stairway probably close to West Street on that side of the building, next to one of the elevator banks. They also told us to stay away from the elevator banks, that they were coming down.

Q. Yeah, they were afraid of them collapsing.

A. I don't remember any of the companies that were up there on the floor with us aside from 1 Engine. The 1 Engine officer, by the way didn't make it out. He perished. I don't know if he lagged behind getting guys down, trying to get as many down as possible. He didn't make it out.

Q. Okay. Very good. Anything else you want to add that has any importance to yourself?

A. Yeah, I was wondering if they actually had a plan for us, what we were going to do once we got up there to the 50th, 60th floors, if there was any idea whether or not there was any stand pipe in service for us to carry these rollups up there, what was going to be the plan.

Did we have a plan to put out this fire or was it just -- that was the scary thing for me when I entered the lobby and didn't see any firemen there. I have been to many third alarms, and that's one thing, when you have third alarms, there's a hundred firemen around the command center.

There wasn't one fireman in that lobby that I saw. There was only four chiefs and the Commissioner, something like that. Apparently their idea for fighting this thing and trying to get people out was just everybody up, everybody up.

The thing that scares me -- people say that we weren't lucky with this thing. I think we were. I think if this building would have collapsed an hour later, we would have had a thousand firemen in there. If it would have collapsed three hours later, we would have had 10,000 firemen in those buildings.

That was going to be their aim, get everybody in there. If they weren't up in the building, they would have been standing around the command center in the lobby. They would have set up another one inside the other lobby.

So I think we were blessed when we only lost 300 guys at that time. We would have lost less civilians, but we would have lost tons and tons more firemen. I think that's something they should think about.

I don't know how they planned on putting that fire out. You've got 20, 30 --

Q. You bring a rollup up there with the intention of using it on a fire.

A. I don't know what the other intention was.

Q. Yeah, bringing it up that many floors.

A. I don't know what their idea was going to be for us to use that. I can't believe they thought -- I wonder if they had gotten any reports whether or not the standpipe was even working at that time. I can't believe it was working if the inner core of the building was destroyed when the plane hit. That's where all the standpipes are.

Q. I don't know if it was available or not.

The officer of Engine 1, any other individual you may have seen prior to the collapses that you knew that did not survive this?

A. Not that I was with. He was really the only one. I only considered us with 1 Engine. We had seen 3 Truck on the way in. They had asked us which way was the lobby where the command center was. We pointed them to where we thought it was, and that's where they all proceeded. They went ahead of us. I guess being a Truck company, they told them to go right up. I don't believe any of those guys made it out. It was a small group.

They weren't with Patty Brown and those guys. It must have been other guys that made their way down there on their own. I wasn't sure if they had masks on. I'm not sure.

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: All right. The time is now 4:32. This now concludes the interview with Firefighter Marmion.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STEPHEN ZASA

Interview Date: January 2, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF McGRATH: Today's date is Wednesday, January 2nd, 2002, the time is 1436 hours, and this is Battalion Chief James McGrath of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Stephen Zasa of the 21 Battalion. This interview will be regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Battalion 21.

Q. Steve, if you'll please state your name and just tell your story from the receipt of the alarm until as far as we can go.

A. I'm Stephen R. Zasa, Firefighter 1st Grade, and I've been detailed in the battalion for the past year and a half, and I was working the morning of September 11th. We responded to a box at Bayley Seton Hospital. We had received a report from the members coming out of the hospital that a possible plane had struck the World Trade Center.

Upon hearing that information, we took a ride down to Bay Street, and we had seen a lot of white smoke coming from the area where the World Trade Center is. So we proceeded to the pier, the Navy port where the ships dock down there, and we parked facing the World Trade Center and we saw a heavy smoke condition coming out of the top of the building. I think Chief Vallebuona at the time got on the radio with the dispatcher asking why it was only -- at the time, as far as we knew, it was a second alarm. We didn't see any signs of fire or flames. We weren't sure if a plane had really struck the World Trade. It was just a rumor. We didn't hear anything.

Upon that time I heard a plane roar. I had my window down and on my side we saw a plane flying very low come right across us and with a loud, you know, the engines revved up, and I had mentioned to him, I had no idea that it was heading towards that way, and I just said like where is this guy going, you know, he was extremely low, not realizing it was another plane heading towards the World Trade, and we saw it struck the building, we saw a big mushroom of flame, of fire coming up, and it was like disbelief, and he had gotten on the radio and notified the dispatcher another plane had struck the World Trade Center.

Then we were dispatched to the 32 Battalion. From there we had picked up a Chief, I don't know even his name, and an aide, extra cylinders, and we went through the tunnel, proceeded to the west side.

Q. Here's a map, if it will help you at all.

A. Maybe West and Liberty we were? Maybe West and Vesey we were. I guess it was Vesey. When we got out of the car, Chief Vallebuona -- I can't remember. We just got out of the car and he went to see if he could get some information, came back to the car, and I just remember looking up and seeing the flames coming out, knowing that we had a -- you know, they were having a tough time up there.

As we opened up the doors, I couldn't even tell you how long it was after that but it wasn't too long, we had the battalion doors open, we were standing there, and then we saw everything -- we looked up and everything just started coming down. So we proceeded to run, I guess, towards the water, and we just got caught up in that cloud of smoke. I just remember turning around and seeing the cloud of smoke coming down and it just engulfed us.

I couldn't even remember if I heard things on the radio and I just can't remember. I remember just kneeling down and just stuff coming down all around us, choking, gagging on -- inhaled a lot of that dust. I heard somebody calling out. It was just like dead silence for a while, I didn't have no gear, no turnout coat, I just put my hands over my head, and I heard somebody calling out. I answered after a while and it wound up being Chief Vallebuona and we got together, made it to -- tried to find our way around.

We made it to a building. There was a doorman. We banged on the glass. He let us in. There may have been one or two civilians with us. We stayed there for a little while and we made it back out again and headed to where our battalion car was. I can't even remember what transpired during that. All I remember was he found a mask, he handed me my mask, he said it was going to get worse before it gets better, and then we heard the second rumble coming down and just took off again.

Upon that I fell to the ground and a fireman came up to me. He had his mask and full gear on. Again, I didn't have my gear, my helmet. I had nothing. He was sharing his mask with me and I think it was a PD guy with me. We got to a building a few blocks down. It was cops, a couple firemen, took us in the building, cleaned everything off, rinsed my mouth out again, came outside, saw parts of the plane on the ground and then just made it back to the car. I didn't know where Chief Vallebuona was then. I saw him at the scene again and we just remained there for a while and that was it. We started seeing the guys coming up from the ferry. I couldn't even tell you how long that was. I think that was about it.

Q. Is there anything that you can remember, any companies, any --

A. I just remember seeing a rig there. I looked for an extra cylinder on the way back up again. After the second plane came in, there was nothing. Dead silence. I just saw flashing lights again. No cylinders, didn't hear anybody, just maybe saw a couple guys at the curb, just guys milling around, I guess. I think everybody was in shock. We heard planes flying up above and thought there were still attacks. Everybody was kind of like crouching down again, kneeling down, not knowing if they were dropping bombs or what was going on. It was just a lot of silence, you just saw the lights on the rigs and I may have heard radio transmissions. I can't remember. Basically, that's about all I can remember.

Q. Can you remember any of the specifics of any of the radio transmissions?

A. No, at this time I can't.

Q. Okay. Is there anything else that you can possibly think of that might add to this?

A. No, that's just basically it.

BATTALION CHIEF McGRATH: Okay, Steve. I want to thank you very much for the interview. This will conclude the interview, then. The time is 1445 and thank you very much for all your help.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF THOMAS VALLEBUONA

Interview Date: January 2, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF McGRATH: Today's date is Wednesday, January 2nd, 2002. The time is 1353 hours. I am Battalion Chief James McGrath of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Battalion Chief Thomas Vallebuona. This interview would be regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. This interview is taking place in the quarters of Battalion 21 in Staten Island.

Q. Tom, if you would just start from whenever you received the alarm, and responding to the scene and tell us in your own words exactly what happened.

A. Myself and Steve Zasa were working the night tour in the 21 Battalion. Around 8:00 in the morning, we got a run to the hospital, Bailey Seton Hospital, which is close to the shoreline of New York Harbor on Staten Island.

As we were taking up from the box -- it was a 1035 -- a fellow came down the stairs and told us that he just heard from his wife that there's been an explosion in the World Trade Center.

So from there we went down to the quarters of Marine 9, and we were watching across the bay. We could see the fire in the north tower, when the next plane that was going to hit the south tower flew over our heads.

I called up the dispatcher to volunteer to go to the first one, and after the plane went over our heads we were notified to relocate to the 32 Battalion.

We then relocated to the 32 Battalion -- we got there pretty quick. The bridge was already closed to traffic. The cops there were doing a great job. We talked to the dispatcher and made notifications. I could hear Rescue 5 wanting to go, and they weren't telling them to go yet. Then I think they were relocating them, but I was telling the dispatcher I thought they should send rescue because they're going to need all the help they can get.

When I got to the 32 Battalion, we found the crew from the 32 Battalion was in quarters, but their car was not there. Upon arrival we were notified to bring them over to a command post at the World Trade Center, and I believe it was Vesey and Broadway, which at that time I wasn't really sure where that was.

So we took as many cylinders as we could in the rig from the depot at 101 and 202, and we proceeded through the tunnel. The tunnel had already been closed by the Fire Department. There were staging units there. We were waved through.

Upon coming out of the tunnel, I looked up West Street, and I could see a lot of apparatus. So I decided because the Brooklyn dispatcher had asked us to come back to Brooklyn if we could and I wasn't sure of the location of the command post they gave us, so I decided to stop on West Street, roughly in front of 90 West Street, opposite, actually, and walk up the street, because I could see chiefs setting up on the other side of the pedestrian bridge just beyond Liberty Street on West Street on the sidewalk area. I could see three chiefs setting up there. So I figured I would go up there and ask them where they wanted me to bring the chief from the 32 and if they wanted me to stay.

Upon walking up, as I got to the other side of the pedestrian bridge, I asked them if they wanted me to stay. They seemed actively involved. I looked up. I realized how bad things were, and I said they're going to want me too.

I decided to go back to the car and get my gear, because we weren't sure and we figured we would just report in there because there was a lot of activity going on, although the street seemed amazingly empty. It was a beautiful, beautiful fall day.

Upon getting back to the car, I started to grab my turnout gear. I told the other chief we'll go up there, see what's going on, that we'll check in up there and I'll be right behind him, let them know that we have some cylinders here, as silly as it seems now, when I heard "boom," an exploding sound, a real loud bang. I looked up, and I could see the Trade Center starting to come down, the south tower, which I guess I was about a block away from.

Looking up in total amazement, I couldn't believe what I was seeing, which probably everybody was in the same boat. I saw stuff coming off the side of the building. It looked like a giant fountain. It was actually beautiful in a strange way. I said I can't be here; I must be back in the firehouse.

But within seconds -- it was probably less, because they say the building came down in eight and a half seconds, I realized that we weren't far enough away from this building and we were going to be hit by stuff. It seemed like you could just see stuff spiraling out like a cone.

So we proceeded to try and outrun it, myself and my aide, Stevie Zasa. We were holding hands. Within seconds we're engulfed in a cloud that you couldn't see your hands in front of your face. It was hard to breathe, if almost impossible. You felt like you were eating the dust. You could hear things falling around you. You couldn't see anything.

We didn't get hit by anything, luckily. We hunkered down because we didn't want to keep on running, because we couldn't run. The thought in my mind is we were going to end up like the people in Pompeii, totally buried in ash and dust.

When I saw the cloud coming towards me, it was brownish and like a color that I said this has got to be hot. You didn't know what it was. I figured we were going to get burnt up, but we didn't.

After half a Hail Mary, I said we've got to get out of here. So we started to crawl around. We worked our way south, and we worked our way west one block. I don't know whether there's a street on West Street that would be off that, but probably down to Albany. We made our way down to Albany Street, according to this map. I would say it was Albany.

I went down Albany and to the buildings on the corner of Albany and End, but on the east side of that building, I got in there and I found a store. We opened up a store, and we started to bring people in there. People were walking around in this cloud. I had a light, so I was directing people in with the light, and we were bringing them in. A lot of people were in there. People were just wandering around. What seemed like minutes but actually it turned out to be, I guess, 20 minutes or more when the dust finally cleared.

We got back to the apparatus, which was parked opposite 90 West Street. There were firemen coming up the street. I remember seeing -- I'm not sure what the fellow's name is. He was running up the street. He said, "Come on, Chief. We've got to do something. We've got to do something." I said, "Wait a minute. Let's just figure out what's going on. Let's get our act together."

As I looked over in front of me, I guess Chief Cruthers had just shown up, because he didn't look like he was dusty or anything; he looked pretty good. He had his car there. He had plans or map -- I don't know -- on his car.

I procured my mask, because I figured the other one -- it only made sense that something else was going to happen. I put my mask on and I had it ready. I had no gear still, but I had a mask because I didn't think I could breathe that stuff again.

I went over to talk to Chief Cruthers. I saw guys running up the street. I was trying to stop them from running up the street, but I don't know what happened to a lot of those guys. Myself and Chief Cruthers started to talk and I said, "What should we do?" And "ba-boom" again, the same sound, the same noise, the same shuddering, shrilling noise of the metal falling as it cascades down. Even though it's further away, it seemed like almost a worse cloud.

We were engulfed again in the cloud, but we sort of had a better idea. The stuff was hitting around us more, it seemed like, that time. I don't know why. You could hear like things hitting the ground, "boom, boom, boom," and stuff. Still we were lucky.

I lost track of everybody this time. I lost track of the aide. I was on my own. I really don't remember how we got out of that one or if it cleared sooner. But the next time we came up the street, I used my mask this time to try to take a few shots. It turned out being a mistake because I got the proverbial shot of crap in my face and dust, my eyes were impounded.

We came back, and I didn't know where Stevie was, and I was really upset about that.

Where I thought Chief Cruthers had run, there was a big piece of the World Trade Center. I don't know how it went over the walkway.

Where I saw a line go up the street towards the pedestrian bridge -- probably I guess you would call it the east side of the pedestrian bridge, there was a line going up the street there. I don't remember if it was from the squad trying to take a line up there. But I was trying to hold people back, and they went up there. But where that line went up, there was nothing but a pile of rubble on top of it. There must have been like 15 -- I don't know how high it was.

I heard radio traffic, but I couldn't figure out what was going on or who was doing what. I walked my way up the street and I went under the pedestrian bridge. When I came out, it was clear. Now the dust was pretty clear. I saw Charlie Blaich was on top of a pile there directing -- he looked like a Currier & Ives thing, the old Currier & Ives. I couldn't believe, he was calm as hell. He was doing a terrific job directing guys that I couldn't.

I said, "Charlie, I don't know what's going on here. I'm really kind of beat up." I was pretty beat up. I said, "I'm going to go down, and I'll get water," because we had some pumpers hooked up before this and ready to go both times. I think even before the first one we had a pumper hooked up on West Street and ready to go.

I told Charlie -- he didn't recognize me, because he said I looked like a black man dressed up in white face. It's not funny, but that's the way it looked.

I went down the street, and we started using the pumper. 90 West Street had a couple of floors of fire going at the time. There was a fire on the first floor, and we felt there was a fire in the basement. We went in the front vestibule door, and the air was sucking in.

So we got some lines, and we were going to try and extinguish fire in that building. 90 West Street also had a -- which we were very concerned about, had a scaffolding around it all the way up. It was a gigantic building, under construction.

The apparatus was starting to burn up on the street, and there were a lot of fires burning all around us. A lot of cars were starting to take off, some ambulances. I think it was 113's rig was starting to burn up. A guy said, "Chief" -- It was not that you didn't care. I did care. We were trying to do stuff. Guys were cooperating. I was the only chief there at that time. People would take leadership very well. Whatever you wanted to offer, they would do. Guys were very cooperative.

So we got some lines going and we were trying to knock things down, and the lines basically went flat. They didn't go flat, but they went limp, almost. You realized right away that the mains must have gone out in either the first or the second collapse. Basically our water supply was nothing. It wasn't even enough for one line coming off that pump. We were trying to work on other -- trying to find other sources of water.

The time span now I couldn't really even tell you as the day went on like how long this took, how long that took. We gave up on 90 West Street as far as an interior operation goes, because we had no masks. We had no communications. We had a limited amount of people. Quite frankly, that would have been a fifth alarm, that building, without what was going on.

My objective at that time was to not lose anybody else at this fire, which I felt at that time would be a miracle. Of course as we all know, that has become a miracle that nobody else really died after this that we know of.

I just tried to keep people out of the way of 90 West Street. After we realized we couldn't do an interior operation, I tried to keep people from walking up underneath the scaffolding. I was grievously concerned with that because all day long you could hear it seemed like rivets or whatever pinging off the thing going "ping, ping."

We tried to set up in front of not 90 West Street but the Marriott and work off that corner. For some miraculous way, I told guys to go down -- I don't know how this ever worked out, but I told them to go to the waterfront and see if they could see a fire boat.

It seemed like within a remarkable amount of time -- I don't want to say minutes, because obviously it couldn't be. It seemed like shortly thereafter lines were coming up the street, three and a half inch lines.

We supplied the standpipe with non-potable water at the Marriott, and I sent a guy from 108 Truck -- I'll never forget that, because it was a former company of mine. A guy said, "108 Truck here." I said, "Go get a stang," which we all know that's not what we call it anymore. I said, "Go to the roof of the Marriott, and you take a line off the manifold and we'll start" -- because the roof of 90 West Street was proceeding to burn at that time also.

The objective, as I'm telling you, was to keep the fire from extending and to not lose any more people.

We got hand lines into the Marriott also, and we operated off the standpipe. I don't know how we did it. Companies were coming in from New Jersey who were helping us stretch lines. People were really working good. We had a couple lines going across from the Marriott and off the roof.

That fire I heard was burning right through to the next day, but I felt like at least we knocked down and did confine somewhat the fire there.

It wasn't total chaos. As people came up the street, if I saw somebody from SOC -- it was a wonderful thing to see the guys from Staten Island come in and all the guys I knew. It's remarkable how fast that was happening.

As people would come in, I would have guys work with me. Bobby Mosier showed up, and he showed his terrific ability to lead. But as guys would come in, I would send guys from SOC up the street up to Charlie, and we would keep the guys down there to confine the fire.

I would say around 4 or 5:00 I was kind of burnt up, and I couldn't bear to see another building fall down. So I took a walk down the street and took a rest. I told Bobby Mosier. He said he didn't mind. A lot of chiefs were there at the time around West Street at that sector. I just sat down for a while, relaxed, called home and told everybody I was alive.

I went back and tried to do some more as it got dark, but I couldn't see. So I went down to a clinic that was set up on Washington Street down there someplace, a triage center. A doctor couldn't wash out my eyes, so I got a ride over to the hospital on the other side of town. I walked back, and I guess around 11, 12:00 I went home.

That's about it, I guess.

Q. Just a couple of quick things perhaps you could clarify.

Do you know whose pumper it was that you were taking the lines off to go to 90 West Street?

A. The pumpers ran out of water.

Q. But do you know whose pumper it was?

A. No. We started getting things going. I remember 15 Truck I believe we used as a tower ladder also on the side there at 90 West Street with Captain McKinney, Timmy McKinney, a couple guys.

The pumpers there -- you know, people were coming in. It was amazing the stuff that was going on; it really was.

The other thing, as I'm sure you're aware, not too much, there were body parts all over the place. It was just total --

Q. What about the company that was stretching, do you remember any of the companies?

A. I had 108 Truck. I had the Captain of D9. I think he had his guys. We knocked down a fire on the first floor of 90 West Street, and he went to the entrance to the basement. He's a pretty good firemen -- which they're all great firemen -- but he had tremendous amount of heat, had no mask. He felt there was no way we belonged in the basement there also.

What other companies? Let me think. It's really hard to recall because things were so screwed up and guys were coming in. I really can't remember the company numbers. I don't know why. It's just hard. There's a lot of stuff you just don't remember.

Q. I'm sure.

Any radio transmissions that you can remember?

A. I heard maydays in the beginning. Whose they were, I can't really remember. I always tried to train myself to key in on maydays, [redacted]

The guys were really terrific. I never had more people follow orders and do the right thing in my whole time. Guys went up the street that should have gone up the street. It was terrific.

But the units I just can't remember, Jerry. I really can't remember what units, the numbers. We got our order from Marine 1. A lot of firemen came over from New Jersey -- I don't know how they got there; I guess by boat -- and they were stretching lines up the street too, quite a few lines.

Those fire boats, I tell you, if they don't know they need new fire boats by now, they're never going to know.

Q. All right. Is there anything else in particular that you can think of that you might want to add?

A. That's it.

Q. All right. I want to thank you very much for all your information.

CHIEF McGRATH: This will conclude the interview, then. The time is 1412. Once again, this interview took place in the quarters of the 21 Battalion.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RICHARD CARLETTI

Interview Date: January 2, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: Today's date is January the 2nd, 2002, the time is now 7:35 p.m., and this is Lieutenant Joseph Chiafari of the Safety Command of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual, Richard Carletti of Engine Company No. 5, about the events of September the 11th, 2001.

Q. If you can for the record state your name and location of where you were working at the day of the incident.

A. Richard Carletti, Firefighter 1. I was working at Engine 5. I was assigned for a 24-hour tour assigned at 9:00 a.m. that morning.

Well, here's how my morning starts. I usually come in around 8:00 like everyone does, but I went to vote, so I was late. I was coming up Allen, which turns into First. When I was crossing Delancey Street, I saw a jet in front of me, which was the first jet. He was pretty low. He was probably about 30 stories. Now I'm heading north and crossing Delancey Street on Allen and I see the jet make a move toward the Trade Center. It made a southwesterly turn from that point.

I proceeded up First Avenue, left on 14th, parked in front of the firehouse. Fireman Lynn was there. He said they were out on a box, they wouldn't let him on because they thought they had a good job, and right then he told me a plane just crashed into the Trade Center. It was the same exact plane I just saw.

I proceeded upstairs. I got dressed. We left here about five to 9:00. We made a left going west on 14th Street, left on Second Avenue. I was in my personal car. We started taking the lights on First Avenue. We got to about 2nd Street and Second Avenue and we saw Ladder 7 was on a gas leak. We asked them if they were going to the Trade Center. They said no, they weren't assigned yet. We were on the east side of the street. We went to make a right on Houston, and right when we were making the right on Houston, we saw a fireball in the sky, which at this point was the second impact, so that puts it 9:06, turning right onto Houston.

We went down -- I figured I was in my personal car, we wouldn't make it down Broadway. We thought it would be backed up. I made a left on Lafayette, which is a one-way north. I was going south. I stopped in front of 20 Truck. There was one guy there. He said everybody already left. We proceeded down. We went on the side of I guess Lafayette, right down by City Hall, we made a left and we parked over by 6 Engine on Beekman, parked the car on the sidewalk, grabbed our gear and proceeded to walk up Beekman to Park Row, down Park Row to Broadway. We stopped in front of a building, left our boots inside the building on Broadway, got dressed and proceeded west on Liberty.

When we turned the corner west on Liberty, figure it was probably about 9:15 at this time, there was a good 20 floors of fire in the south tower. I mean, it was pushing red on at least 20 floors from what we could see. I turned to Tommy and I said, Tommy, this building is in danger of collapse. In my opinion, I didn't think there was going to be a catastrophic collapse, but from the fire load, there was no way.

When we passed 10 and 10, there's a bridge that runs I guess into one of the buildings directly south of Trade Center No. 2. There's a pedestrian walkway. As we passed that, we came into the debris field. It was jet parts and body parts. I distinctly remember seeing a woman's hand. It was cut off at the wrist. She had wedding ring, so it had to be a left hand, and then I looked to the left and I just saw the rib cage with nothing in it and there was just debris.

At that point we stopped for a second and we heard impacts, which I guess was jumpers hitting the pavement. To our right, there was a parking lot right on West and Liberty. There were about seven cars on fire. We just walked -- there was a line there just dropped. We walked across West Street, found an engine company, and they said the command post is just north of here in front of World Financial Center.

We walked up there and we told a Chief we were two from 5 Engine. He told us go in the street, secure masks, irons, whatever tools you can get, and he ordered us to not go into the buildings, to come back to the command post. So most of the rigs were stripped in front of the Trade Center. There was nothing in them. The equipment was already taken.

We walked up West Street, past the Verizon, one block north of Vesey, and we found our engine, 5 Engine, parked there. I guess the chauffeur's radio was on step. I guess when he changed, he forgot to put it back on. I took his radio. We looked in the rig. There was nothing in there. All the doors were open. It was pretty much empty. I found a mask on 91 Engine. We looked for about another five minutes. We didn't find any other equipment. So all we had was one mask between the two of us.

We went back to the command post. We met a captain from 91 Engine, told him who we were. He walked over to the command post, told them who we were, and that's when we saw Paul Mitchell. He just got made out of Ladder 110. He was a covering officer here, covering lieutenant. I figure at this point that was probably about quarter to, ten to 10:00. So I saw all the Chiefs there. The officer from 91 took our names, told us to stand over there.

There was a driveway there that went into, I guess, one of the World Financial buildings. We went over and we stood on the burn in front of the Winter Garden room. We were just south of the north bridge standing on the grass area. I think EMS was setting up their command post behind us. When I saw Paul Mitchell, I was joking because he had a firefighter's helmet on instead of a lieutenant's, so I guess he grabbed equipment from 110. He got off that morning.

We were standing there. The officer from 91 says stay here, we're going to get two more guys and get teamed up, and what went through my mind was – the only thing I was annoyed at was that we were going to have to hike 80 floors. We stood there for about ten minutes and I just heard a loud groan by everyone in the street. I guess the south tower started to lean. The top 30 floors leaned over. I was looking up at the north tower. I was trying to monitor more what was going on in the north tower with the radio, and they were on three different channels at this point.

I looked up and about the 70th floor I saw the western wall of the south tower start to belly out. Tommy turned, said run. He started running and I turned around behind him and we ran into the revolving door of the Winter Garden room, which is a glass atrium, I guess about ten stories high. As I went through the revolving door, I was in with an EMS guy and I either tripped her up or knocked her over. I remember picking her up. We went back around to the back. Everybody started going into the Winter Garden room. I remember the floor rumbling and the lights went out at this point in that hallway. Everybody started to go into the Winter Garden room. It's got a glass roof, so I told them to move north.

We went to the American Express Building. We ran north. So this was about five after 10:00. We proceed to go back out on the north side of the building. The dust was just too intense. You couldn't see more than five feet at this point. So we went back in. We waited about another five minutes. We went out. The Captain from 91 Engine was covered in dust. We looked in two more rigs for any equipment. There was nothing. We went to the corner. We saw Tom Manley, sergeant at arms of the union.

We stood on that corner. A Chief came over and ordered us to go north. He wanted everyone to go north. I said, Tommy, let's go back to 5 Engine. When we walked back to 5 Engine, we found Lieutenant Bohack, Firefighter Jim Andruzzi, Firefighter Eddie Mecner backing the rig up and Eddie was all over the road with the rig. They came out of the seat and I got in the seat. We backed into a side street, turned the rig around and proceeded north and we parked on Warren Street one block south of Chambers. I guess now this was about 10:25. We stood there for another four minutes and the south tower collapsed -- I mean the north tower collapsed.

When the north tower collapsed, I remember seeing the antenna do a little rock back and forth and I could just hear the floors pancaking. I heard it for about 30 pancakes, just boom, boom, boom, boom, and the dust blew up to us.

We ran about one block north. The dust settled. We went back to the rig, threw the equipment back on the rig, what was on the sidewalk, our jackets and radios. We took the rig. We went east. We made a left on Greenwich and we proceeded north. We came back around in front of Stuyvesant High School. They were setting up a command post there. I mean, you could listen to the monitors. Basically they wanted engines was booster tanks to come down and extinguish the car fires then going.

We stood there for about another 20 minutes. That's when we figured out who we were missing. We were missing Manny Delvalle, Gerard Gorman and Brogan were now missing at this point, and Eddie Mecner confirmed that Brogan was put in an ambulance, and about ten minutes later Gerard Gorman came walking up. He was covered in dust and pretty shocked. So he proceeded to get in an ambulance and go to the hospital at that point.

We got the rig cleaned up and we proceeded from -- when we were on Chambers Street, we were blocked out. We went over, down to Chambers Street, we went across behind City Hall, made a right. We made a U-turn past City Hall along the Brooklyn Bridge. We went over to the east side, completely around Manhattan. We came up Broadway from the south, made a left on Exchange and a right on Broadway, and we came up to Thames and we shut the rig down and there was absolute silence. There were only six firefighters at this point over there. It was about 15 minutes after the collapse, the second collapse.

We checked the hydrants. We only found hydrants working on the east side of the street. The west side were all shut down, were all dead. At this point it was Bohack, Lieutenant Bohack, Andruzzi, Mecner, Lynn. They proceeded to walk north up Broadway. I stayed with the rig. I eventually moved the rig forward where I ran into my brother's Lieutenant and he had a spare rig. He was going to go down Dey Street and I was going to augment him, but another engine decided to augment. I came back around. I parked on Liberty and Broadway and I proceeded to augment 247, which was on Church and Liberty, and we stayed there until about 6:00 o'clock that night.

We went back to the house, we got our eyes washed, we went back down at 11:00 p.m. with 3 Truck, with the rest of the battalion. We went to 10 and 10 command post. We went to about the middle of the pile, but we were just -- at this point we extinguished fires most of the night almost in the center of the complex and just west of what was left of building No. 4. We were on the pile just with three hand lines putting out fires until 9:00 o'clock in the morning.

Q. So that was during the nighttime, then, you were putting fires out on the pile?

A. Yes. And that was it.

Q. So you had mentioned about repositioning your rig just prior to the second collapse?

A. Our rig was parked -- I don't know the name of the street. It's one block north of Vesey. It was on the northbound side facing south. They came and they were parked on the hydrant. When I got there, Eddie was backing the rig up and he was having a hard time with it and so I got in the seat. We backed into a street and then we proceeded to go north.

Q. Had any of the guys that were working with the rig, had they returned back to the -- the guys who were working in Engine 5 that day, had they returned back to the rig?

A. Yes. At that point it was Lieutenant Bohack, Firefighter Andruzzi, Firefighter Mecner, and at that point we were missing Firefighter Brogan, Firefighter Delvalle and Firefighter Gorman. That's when we went up to Warren Street and we parked. Then when the second collapse happened, that's when we brought the rig --

Q. Around?

A. We went up to Greenwich, made a left. Greenwich is a southbound street. We went up, came past I think it was Manhattan Community College. We made a left. We came back down Stuyvesant. From this point we just went like a complete circle back down to Stuyvesant High School. Then they told us there was a bomb scare and we had to move the rig north from there.

Q. You said you were wearing a handy-talky. Were there any significant handy-talky transmissions that you did hear at any point prior to, during, or after any of the collapses?

A. About 10:15, 10:20, I finally heard the Maydays for the north tower, to evacuate the north tower. Prior to that I didn't hear any Maydays. I mean, I heard a lot of chatter, nothing of really any significance. I didn't hear any Maydays or anything.

It was mostly command post instructions of the Chiefs being moved around. I didn't hear anything else. That's the first time I heard the Mayday.

Q. About 10:15?

A. Yes. We also started repeating the Maydays on our radios because we were on the corner of Vesey and West Street. We were on the southwest side, that's when we were standing with Manley, and they were also blowing the air horns.

Q. Besides Lieutenant Mitchell that you had seen, any other individuals that you had seen that you're aware of that did not make it out of the collapse debris?

A. No, he's the only one I can remember. I don't think I saw anyone else at the command post. I remember seeing Hayden and I saw Ganci.

Q. At the command post you saw Chief Ganci?

A. Yes. I saw Von Essen there.

Q. This is the command post that was on West Street?

A. West Street. It was on the garage ramp in front of I guess that's -- I think it's 2 World Financial Center. There's a south building in the World Financial Center complex.

Q. Right. On the same side as the Winter Garden?

A. Yes.

Q. So you never entered any of the tower buildings?

A. No.

Q. So, primarily, when you came around from the Liberty Street side, you walked on West Street?

A. Yes. We were across the street.

Q. Oh, on the west side of West Street?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. Because when we stood in front of -- right past 10 and 10, past that north -- we were really underneath the bridge. There's a pedestrian bridge that used to cross Liberty just south of 10 and 10. Is that a Bankers Trust building there? I don't know what the name of it is.

Q. I'm not sure of the name of the building.

A. Blockbuster.

Q. There's a south walkway, though, that goes across West Street.

A. When we got past there, that's when we entered the debris field and you heard shotgun blasts, and when I looked -- I don't know if Tommy looked, but I could see what was lying on the ground. It was just a pile of meat, red. So I said to Tommy, let's get out of here. There's too many humans coming down from the building. I figured that had to be about 9:15, 9:20, and there was a good 20 to 25 floors of fire.

But, see, there were no Chiefs on that east side of that building. When we walked down Liberty, we were the only two firefighters on Liberty. There was no observation on that side.

Q. Nobody was on the Liberty Street side or the --

A. No. 10 and 10 was empty. The doors were open and there wasn't a soul in the building. I don't know if they were open. I think they were open. We looked and there was no one in there.

Q. So, actually, on the Liberty Street side there was no apparatus that was parked there?

A. There was apparatus parked on the corner of I think it was -- or it probably might have been Ladder 10 that was parked on -- Liberty's got two lanes in each direction. It's got an island in the middle of it. They blocked off -- there used to be two ways in each direction. I think it was Ladder 10 that was parked there. I'm not sure. I don't really remember. I remember when I seen the body hit the ground, I thought I saw Ladder 10 parked there. I mean, I don't remember.

There were engines parked across the street. I don't remember who they were. They were across on Liberty, across West Street. I don't remember seeing any other -- in truth, I don't remember seeing any apparatus but that one on the corner.

Q. Otherwise everything else was in the middle of Liberty or on West Street?

A. West Street, yes.

Q. Okay, Rich. Anything else of significance that you'd like to add to this interview that you feel it's important?

A. No. Just that when we walked down Liberty, I found that we were the only ones there and that was odd to me. There was no observation on that side of the building.

Q. Okay.

A. When I got to the command post, what was I going to say? I mean, I've got seven years on the job. I remember telling the Chief I think this building is in dire need, it's going to collapse.

There was one point at the command post, I mean, I don't know about the battalion, but I felt I could have just walked away and no one would have known, but I didn't.

Q. You did what you thought was right.

A. Yes. I mean, I ran ten minutes later, but that was self preservation.

Q. The intentions were well at that time to do what you had to do to go down there. Okay. So if there's nothing further?

A. No.

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: This now concludes the interview with Firefighter Carletti. The time is now 7:54 p.m.

File No. 9110420

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER GERARD GORMAN

Interview Date: January 2, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT CHIAFARI: Today's date is January the 2nd, 2002. The time is now 8:25 p.m. and this is Lieutenant Chiafari of the Safety Command of the Fire Department of New York City. I am conducting an interview with the following individual, Gerard Gorman of Engine Company No. 5, regarding the events of September the 11th, 2001.

Q. Would you please state your name and the unit you were assigned to and position for that day?

A. Gerard Gorman, Engine 5, control man.

Q. Can you tell us the events of September the 11th?

A. I came in and relieved one of the two details from 6 Engine. The other guy, he made it out, and the other guy, John from 20 Truck, John Burnside from 20 Truck, he was relieved by Manny, who didn't make it out.

Q. When you say relieved, he had worked here the night before; is that what you're saying?

A. Yes.

Q. So this is prior to --

A. This is like 8:15 or something.

Q. Okay. This is before the alarm had come in?

A. Right. He got relieved by him. Burnside, then went to 20 Truck and relieved somebody there, and we'll get back to this later, but the guy who helped lead me out was the guy that Burnside relieved. So it was like, I guess, an ironic twist you could say. Anyway, so we relieved these guys, and then around 8:30 a box came in that sounded like a phone alarm came in for 19th Street and Irving, and that's a nice area, you never get a phone alarm from there, so we thought it was a good box.

We got on our rig. We were second due. 14 Engine was first. We were second. Ladder 3, I don't know who the second truck would be on there. 7 maybe. I don't know. And it was really nothing. We barely got off the rig and then we were just checking hydrants and stuff. Then the officer yelled there was a 1060, we tried to make ourselves 10-8 real quick. 1060 just came that a plane crashed into the Trade Center.

So we backed the rig up. We started down Irving. I remember looking up. We were walking towards P.C. Richards. At P.C. Richards I was trying to see on -- they had all these TVs in P.C. Richards and I was trying to see if they had it on TV already and they didn't. There was an interview on the Today Show.

We made the right turn on 14th Street. Then when we get down like Broadway and 5th Avenue, you can see the Trade Center, you can see the plane hit. As a matter of fact --

Q. What do you mean, you could see the plane hit?

A. You could see the aftermath of the first plane hitting.

Q. Oh, the aftermath. Okay.

A. As a matter of fact, Derek Brogan, who was with us, had said that plane was flying low when we were on 19 and Irving before it hit. He said, gee, that's the plane that hit it. I didn't notice it, but he did.

Anyway, so the box came in. We went. We were yelling at the chauffeur not to go down Broadway, to go down West Street, it would be faster. We went down West Street and we could see it in the raw. Pretty much in the rig you could just see fire from the skin. You could see the skin cut like in an angle, and I remember, we didn't know it was an airliner and I thought maybe it was an executive jet or something. I knew it was bigger than a Cessna, you know, a private plane, but I didn't think it was that big. You could see about eight or ten stories cut in an angle. I remember saying, well, the good news is it's vented, you know, dopey fireman thing, and I remember just saying in the rig, I remember talking to Manny in front of me and saying just stay together, stay together, stay together. I was going to say it so often.

Then we got down there towards West Street. It was funny watching the people as you go down West Street watching it and stuff. So we go down West Street. We got off a block north of Vesey Street and we all got out of the rig. Our chauffeur came with us, too. We all got dressed up. Everybody was taking extra cylinders. I was control, so I got the irons and the control bag. Manny took the oxygen, which he took a little longer, but it was a good idea.

So we went in and we rushed in --

Q. You had a radio, of course, right?

A. I had a radio. I had control radio. So we rushed in to the lobby and pretty much pretty quick the guy, Gregg Atlas, who didn't make it out, from 10 Engine, came over to us and said to us, 5 Engine, you're going up to the fire. Just put water on the fire.

Somewhere along the line I heard the elevator drop. He said, oh, shit, and just right after he said that, you heard a huge explosion, and I looked to my right and I could see the reflection, just the whole Financial Center, a reflection of flames just turn orange, basically, because it's all glass, you know, turn orange and you saw it.

Then we just start marching up the stairs. I don't know which staircase it was, B or C. I don't remember. It was around and we had to walk around an elevator shaft sort of. But we were with 10 Engine. 10 Engine was ahead. I think their officer got ahead of us because it was like trying to get into the subway train on rush hour, you know, because there's two people coming out of the door at a time and it was overly full and we're trying to rush our way in, and he might have got ahead of us. He got a good head start. We all had a hard time getting in to the stairwell and we were yelling to people as we were going in there, as we finally got in, everybody stay to your right, everybody stay to your right. We got in and we started marching up. That's the last time I saw Manny. I never saw him again. Because he was behind me, I think. I'm pretty sure.

So we start marching up and about the 4th floor, 5th floor, one burn victim came down. I think she said the 60th something floor. I don't know. I think I heard that. I'm not sure. I don't think that's possible, but I can't be sure.

Q. Sixty?

A. Something floor.

Q. Sixtieth floor possibly?

A. It could have been possibly with the elevator. I don't know.

Q. You saw this person and you were on what; you were still on the lower floors?

A. Yes. 4th, 5th, 6th, something. Before we took a break. We took a break early at around the 8th, 10th floor. See, the problem with taking breaks was every fourth or fifth floor was the only entry point, and you've got to realize, we've got the key for every door, basically, the Halligan, but to take the time to force a door, we stopped the whole line of people behind you. So we just waited until we opened a door and go. I think we stopped at the 8th floor.

See, at that time somebody yelled, get oxygen for that lady. She was walking down. She was a burn victim. Her skin was peeling and stuff and she -- I think I seen a picture of her later in one of these photo galleries. I can't be sure. A lady maybe in her forties or something. We think that Manny gave her oxygen because he had the oxygen with him and that he had helped. He got delayed back.

So we're marching up. I didn't know whether he did that. I don't know if he was two guys behind me or one guy behind me. I don't even remember. I wish I did.

Q. So really that's the last you ever had any contact with him?

A. Right.

Q. But he didn't notify anybody or say anything like I'm going to --

A. We never heard him.

Q. In other words, he wasn't like right directly behind you where he turned around and said that --

A. See, we weren't because when we had to get into that stairway, we were just like a mass of humanity. It wasn't like you could get in one, one, one, one. It's like the subway, you know, one person get in with 20 people behind you. Like I said, the officer from 10 was way ahead. That's what I think happened to him.

So we got on the 8th floor and we took a blow. We were looking out the stairway for Manny, but you can only open the door so much. The doors open in and they were only going two across the stairs. The doors had nowhere to go other than against that wall, and any time you opened a door, we stopped the line. Now, if we're stopping the line from way down there, can you imagine what it was on the 90th floor just below the hit and everybody's trying to rush out and they're fucking opening doors? Every time you opened a door, you stopped the line. That's like kicking me in the head. I bring it up to people now, these doors should be sliding doors in all the newer buildings. I know you can't do it now but...

Q. It's after the fact.

So actually you're walking up the stairs. Intermittently you're stopping. So how far are you walking up and about how long does it take you to go up?

A. See, I only know that by the time we get to the 24th floor, that's when the first building collapsed, the south tower.

Q. Is that had highest point you remember getting to is the 24th floor?

A. Twenty-third or fourth. I'm not sure.

Q. Okay. And that was around the same time of the first --

A. I can tell you who was in that office. It was Blue Cross/Blue Shield.

Q. The same floor as Blue Cross/Blue Shield; is that what you're saying?

A. That was the 18th floor for sure, the 19th floor. I'm not sure what was on the 24th floor. Anyway --

Q. So, in other words, you wound up stopping at that point, then, to the 24th?

A. Yes. We stopped a couple times.

Q. Go ahead.

A. We stopped. 10 we stopped and like 13th, 14th, 15th floor. Then around the 18th floor the guy Derek was saying he had chest pains, our guy. He had chest pains and we went to check him out. We got water. I remember cops opened up the water, you know, the machines and stuff.

On that floor, on the 18th floor, there was already a lady, a black lady, she had air from a respirator which was on the floor. She was being attended to and I was now looking for a respirator for Derek because Manny had gone. We thought Manny was with that burn victim, maybe out of the building helping her or I don't know. I didn't know. We didn't know. So we went to help her. We were helping Derek.

In the meantime, I'm trying to find the rest of the guys of 10 Engine and our officer. We're trying to find them. We were supposed to be together because that whole time we're thinking we're still going up there to put the fire out. Later on we're hearing, now, after the fact, that people were saying there was an evacuation when that plane hit, the second plane hit, from the get-go. We didn't know. Because we're trying to call down to say that we had a firefighter down. At this time there were a lot of Maydays, a lot of Maydays going on for firemen with chest pains, a shitload of them.

Q. You mean that you were aware of; you heard a lot of Maydays?

A. Yes. You were like at that point, because you had your hands full yourself. You couldn't help. So I'm trying to get oxygen for our guy, but when we were looking around, I ran into the guys at 1 Truck at that point and we started forcing doors. We were looking for fucking oxygen for Derek. We didn't find any. So then I tried to call up by the fire phone, you know, the red phone, call down. There was no answer.

Q. The fire warden's phone?

A. Yes. We tried the fire warden's phone to call down to the lobby command post. Nobody picked up. Nothing. Dead. It seemed like it was dead. I mean, we still had electricity and stuff, we still had running water.

Q. The lights were still working up there?

A. Yes. Because I remember taking a coffee pot and just throwing water over our heads like that. So we had water. There was water working in those pipes. We don't know if the standpipes worked. But I would have loved to have tested the standpipes, but it was too crowded in that stairwell to do it.

Q. You never knew.

A. I mean, we're trying to go two floors below.

Q. Of course.

A. It would be nice to know but....

Q. So you were attending to --

A. Derek. So, finally, we probably get to a land line, I called 911 and I said there's a fireman down. That was definitely the Blue Cross office. I went into a cubicle.

Q. You used a telephone?

A. Yes. I walked into the cubicle and called.

Q. You got a 911 operator?

A. Yes. Or did I call the dispatcher? You know, I don't even remember.

Q. You identified yourself as --

A. A fireman in the building. It was either the fire dispatcher or -- I might have just called the fire dispatcher. I don't remember, obviously.

Q. In other words, you don't know if you called on the 261 number or the 911 number?

A. Yes. I don't remember. I think I probably called 261. I'm sure it would be on tape if you still got it, you know, tell them we had a firefighter down. Then we tried to make our way up again. We made a push. He said I feel all right, dah-dah-dah, then he felt bad again. Then a couple Port Authority cops came up with oxygen, and as we were administering the air, we ran into a couple of guys in 9 truck who were having problems themselves.

Meanwhile, somewhere in this whole picture, I was trying to find a Chief -- now I'm going back and forth because things are popping in my head. But like on the 18th floor, after we called the dispatcher or whatever I did, I remember telling -- I was trying to find -- like I only found a Captain and I said, is there any way we can tell the people down below to drop their roll-ups, to drop their weight, basically. We're hauling up there, but we're going to be in no shape to do anything.

Q. No. It was just like just get the manpower up there.

A. Yeah, get the manpower. We'll bring the hoses. We got the hoses this far, so let's get the guys behind us to drop their roll-ups because it's fucking -- you know, I'm not thinking there's 20 fucking floors higher either. My sense is we've got to hit the first fire we see and that's it. I remember doing that. I don't remember who I told it to. I remember the guy had a mustache, but I didn't see his picture or anything. I think he's a Captain somewhere.

There was something else that I wanted to say. We marched up to the 23rd, 24th floor, like I said, and the Port Authority cops came and they gave Derek oxygen, and somewhere during this thing there was a huge rumbling and we were about to mount up there -- oh, I know what I wanted to say.

On the 18th floor, when I ran back into the guys at 10 Engine and they were resting and they were throwing water on themselves and trying to cool off and we were doing the same thing, I asked them where their officer was. They didn't know. So they called him on the radio, Gregg Atlas, and they said to him, 10, 10, backup, or 10 control to 10, whoever the control kid was, and they found him. He was on the 43rd or 46th floor. So he was 23 floors ahead of us. But right there, when he got the initial break-in to that stairwell, that was like enough where he probably had a clear path, you know, he's a little lighter so he went faster.

Q. He made it that much faster than you guys?

A. Yes.

Q. Plus he's not carrying any additional weight.

A. So I wanted to bring that up. I'm sure they do, too. They did. They're now being interviewed. But he was 23 floors ahead of us at the time. Well, it was on the 18th floor when we made that call.

Q. So you recall him mentioning that he was --

A. I was next to the guy when he called.

Q. He actually called on the radio?

A. Yes.

Q. And he actually made contact with him; he said he's on the 40-something floor?

A. 43rd or 46th floor. We said, oh, shit, he's way ahead of us. But he never asked us where we were. He must have had his hands full, too.

Q. I'm surprised you were able to get through that many floors on the radio.

A. Yes. We didn't think of that. We fucking didn't think of that shit. I mean, you're hearing Maydays like crazy.

So now I get back to we're on the 23rd, 24th floor, we're drinking water, we're getting loaded up again to go back up, we're taking our roll-ups again because we didn't hear nothing about no this is an evacuation. We still don't know, of course, and we're trying to stay together with 10. We're like making more and more of an effort to stay together because it's very hard.

Then it was like a fucking rumbling. It was like an earthquake. It was like worse and worse. All the windows blew in. It got real dark.

Q. The floor you were on, the windows blew in?

A. Yes. I think so.

Q. Wow. So, in other words, they gave way?

A. I think. I think. I remember diving into the core of the building by the elevators. I fucking forgot my mask, dove in, just diving. It was like an earthquake. It was shaking and then the lights went out and it got shitty in there. We all made it back in the stairway, all got out -- I mean, our officer, Lieutenant Bohack, said that's it, we're going out. That's it, we're out of here. He made the call. I don't know if he heard it on the radio or not. I didn't hear it. He said, we're getting out of here. I found my mask. Actually, Eddie Mecner gave it to me. He was the chauffeur who came up with us. We started our way down and there were still civilians coming down but less, not as thick.

Q. There were still people coming?

A. Yes. But they weren't like from offices. Some of them looked like custodians and stuff of some sort, and I started sharing my mask with them going down the stairs. We just turned the regular air on because at first, the first guy put it on didn't take a breath, so I just turned the thing on and give it to him. Every time we hit a landing, I gave him a quick hit, a couple, three, four people, I gave them quick hits on the way down. It was dark. You could only see the reflector lights. My flashlight died. It always dies when you need it.

We start our way down. We start our way down and the rest of the company had switched stairs at some point and I didn't know that because I was lagging behind with those civilians, I guess. I didn't hear them switch and I kept going down the same staircase. I don't know if it was A, B, C.

Q. What did they switch?

A. They switched staircases.

Q. They switched staircases?

A. Somebody told one of the guys like on the fourth floor that it was locked and you can't get out, so they switched. But I didn't know that. I guess he had bad information or maybe I did switch and didn't even know. I don't even remember.

So I kept on going down and then I hit the bottom of the staircase where there's like some sort of a custodian locker area, and there were two guys from 20 Truck there that were leading the people out. I forget the name of the black guy and some guy -- the guy I told you that Burnside relieved, that guy. I forgot his name now. I know the faces in my head.

So they led us out and we actually went through this custodian area, the lockers and stuff like that, and we ended up not on the lobby level but the level above, like that mezzanine level. We ended up there and there were doors going out into that -- not the concourse level, I guess, that's the lower level, but the outside level, the park area level on Vesey Street. Remember where they used to have the concerts and that globe thing and the fountains?

Q. This is outdoors now?

A. No, I'm not outdoors yet, but that's where it led to.

Q. That's where it leads to?

A. Right.

Q. Because you're actually like --

A. In the lobby but on the mezzanine.

Q. So from that stairway you were coming down, you actually wound up in the custodial locker area?

A. Yes.

Q. Not directly into it but --

A. Yes. We went right by it. We went right in it. I walked right through it.

Q. Really?

A. There were lockers. I think it was a custodial locker area. I think. Then I got there and there was a cop at the door, but he was off duty. I remember talking with him later. He was putting his retirement papers in or vacation papers in or something like that. I can't remember.

There was a guy, he was in one of the smaller buildings, 4 or 5 World Trade Center, he's under the overhang of that and he was looking up, and he was looking up because bodies were jumping and he was giving us the go, okay, when to let people out to go, and at that point we started letting the civilians out and they ran. They got led out. There was a guy, he was a lookout, and he looked out and, I mean, this is like -- it must have took 15 minutes to get down those stairs, I guess. Maybe. I don't know. I have no idea how long I was out there.

A Chief came over to me and ordered me to help, you know, help them get back. All right. He was a black guy and I've never seen him before. I have no idea who the hell he is. I still don't know. So he ordered us to stay there and help. So I was helping, we were letting people out, they were coming down and coming down, and it was not a steady stream, but it was like three here, three there, like three then a minute break. I remember looking down the lobby and seeing like companies coming in and coming out. I could see them marching through the lobbies. I didn't know who they were.

Then it was the last batch. We were --

Q. So you're observing this from an upper level?

A. Yes. But you could see. I just saw them marching by like briefly. I don't remember anybody I know and stuff like that.

Q. Approximately what time do you think this is?

A. This is ten minutes before the collapse. And nobody, you know, like nobody -- at that point I did not know the first building collapsed still. Didn't know. We thought it was a missile attack or something like that. We thought we were under attack. They didn't have any idea that this building could collapse. I didn't hear nothing. As a matter of fact, the radio traffic I heard after the first building collapsed, I remember distinctively somebody yelling looking for Chief Barbera, yelling for Chief Barbera, where are you, something like that. I heard a Mayday for a fireman down. I thought I heard Ladder 3 give a Mayday, either it was for a fireman with chest pains or maybe the collapse. I'm not sure. It could be something I heard about now and I'm still thinking in my memory, you know? I don't know. Anyway, I didn't know that first building collapsed.

Q. You didn't know.

A. No. Didn't hear no evacuation, didn't hear nothing over the PA system. So the Chief told us stay, and then there was a guy, some Port Authority emergency service cops, an ESU cop, and a guy from Squad 18, Pat Kelly, they had just brought a heart attack victim down on a chair, a heavy guy, and had a hard time carrying him through, and he was the last guy that they got out. So they had a hard time with all the debris down. They were rolling him, you know, once they got him down on the lobby. But once they got outside the doors and they had the go-ahead, they had a hard time getting him through the debris because they couldn't roll him all the way and they had to pick him up and stuff like that.

Then me and the other guy, we looked and there was nobody else coming. For some reason we decided to leave. I don't know why. We leave. I remember seeing as I got to the overhang on the other end of the smaller buildings and --

Q. This is now you're exiting the building?

A. Exiting the building.

Q. Do you remember what exit, what door it led out to?

A. That was the lobby on whatever area that -- what kind of area was that? I'll tell you what it led to.

Q. Does it go directly out to West Street?

A. No. It goes to Vesey Street. On Vesey Street there's a staircase and escalators. That's where it led to. So on the overhang I remember seeing a frigging Bomb Squad cop and I asked him, what the hell blew up? He goes, I don't know. Oh, shit. Fucking he don't know.

So I ended up going down there, and then between the two small buildings there's an opening, a space, and then I heard rumbling again right as I was in that space, me and the Port Authority cops, the ESU cop, the Bomb Squad cop, I guess, we heard the rumble. We all ducked into the overhang of, I guess, 5 World Trade Center, where the staircase was. We ducked in there and everything got dark. I mean, it was like a rumble and it was like another earthquake again. I just dove into by the window between two metal bars, got down like that. I had my mask. I should have put my mask on at that point. I didn't think of it.

Q. It's still strapped to your back, your mask.

A. Yes. But never on my face because it was a sunny day, clear as a bell.

Q. But things are still on your back, though.

A. Yes.

Q. This is actually on Vesey?

A. That staircase is on Vesey. I got a picture at home of it. It's an outside staircase.

Q. It's on the opposite side of the street of Vesey?

A. No. It's on the same side.

Q. It's on the Trade Center side?

A. Yes, with the escalators and stuff.

Q. This is where you're jumping into right now?

A. Yes. I jumped into that and all the dirt came in your face, it got real black and dark, couldn't see, and all the dirt, it was just like you had your mouth closed but it like forced its way in, there was so much pressure. I started gagging on it and then I started choking. I thought that was it, you know, and then here we go, I mean, here we go. And it stopped. It got quiet. It just stopped right before I was ready to fricking -- I mean, I was eating the crap. It got dark and we stayed there and I remember the cop behind me goes, this is the second time it happened to me, I think it was a Port Authority cop, the second time it happened to me, and we were standing there, like we just waited until it lifted.

Q. You were holed together there for a little while? How long were you there for?

A. I don't know. Five minutes, ten minutes. I don't know.

Q. It was still totally dark.

A. Yes. Then it like lifted and we went down the stairs and kind of like you dug yourself out a little bit. It's not much dirt but --

Q. What do you mean, you went down the stairs? You still were not at sidewalk level at this point?

A. No.

Q. This is still taking place where you were huddled on the --

A. We're on top of the staircase. Top of the staircase.

Q. So when everything cleared away --

A. We went down the stairs.

Q. Was it accessible to move through the way you were going?

A. Yes. We just walked down the stairs.

Q. It was cluttered with debris?

A. Yes.

Q. But it's not like any of the people that you were next to or near were trapped?

A. No, nothing. We didn't hit a thing. Like I said, I didn't know that building collapsed then either. That never went in my head. The Trade Center, shit, you didn't think of it. You couldn't tell if you looked up. There was nothing to look up to. It was black. If I had looked up, I still wouldn't have seen it. I wouldn't have known.

Let's go, I know the way out, one of the cops said, and you came out and you were on Vesey Street and all you see was cars on fire all over the place. I was like shook up, I guess. I went down Vesey Street. We went down Vesey Street and I hear this guy screaming the ESU truck is going to blow because they were worried about the ammo, I guess.

Q. Oh, really?

A. It's going to blow, get out of here. I went down to is it Murray Street? It started clearing up around there.

Q. This is walking on what street, West Street now, most likely?

A. No. Washington.

Q. You were walking down Washington?

A. Yes.

Q. Toward Murray?

A. Yes. No, Greenwich. It's Greenwich Street.

Q. So you were walking north on Greenwich Street?

A. You know what? I don't know about that. I can't tell on this map.

Q. Okay.

A. Murray. I ended up on Murray, going down Greenwich.

Q. So you were with the cop?

A. Yes.

Q. Anybody else from 5 Engine that was --

A. No. I lost them early. I lost them. I was alone.

Q. And those two guys from 20 Truck?

A. They had left beforehand. I was like the last guy leaving. Some guys here think I'm the last guy out, but I guess those guys from 6 Truck were.

Q. Knowing how people split up at that particular incident, I mean, no one company remained intact totally. So you were with nobody from 5 Engine and then nobody recognizable from any of the surrounding companies when it actually collapsed?

A. As a matter of fact, going down the stairs, I heard my officer call me on the radio. He called me by name and I tried to call him back and I couldn't get through. I tried and I tried and I couldn't get through. It was just, you know, there were 500 guys.

Q. As you were coming down the stairs?

A. Yes. I guess when he thought he lost me, which he did. So anyway, I went down Warren Street. I remember some black guy giving me water or something and there was a bar to the left going towards West Street and the guy is like go in here. So I went in there and I got like water or something to drink and from there I called my wife to tell her I got out. It was the Brady Bunch Tavern.

Q. That you were safe and that you made it out of there?

A. Yes. Because they didn't know, you know. I talked to her, then left there. You wouldn't believe that the bar was packed. There were people there in the bar drinking. I figured there was like three guys there. I don't know.

Q. They probably didn't know what was happening themselves either at that point.

A. I didn't even look at the TV or anything like that.

Q. So, unfortunately, you lost contact with them. Any significant things other than what we discussed, anything that's significant that you think you need to add?

A. No.

Q. Like people that you had seen?

A. I saw Timmy McSweeney from 3 Truck in the lobby on the way up. Like I said, I saw that guy, Gregg Atlas. I remember that guy, Gregg Atlas.

Q. He was also in the lobby?

A. Atlas was the officer from 10 Engine who died.

Q. That's the person that you had the last --

A. That's the guy who talked on the radio.

Q. -- radio contact with him?

A. Yes.

Q. And he said he was approximately --

A. Twenty-three floors ahead of us.

Q. Up on the 40th something floor, right?

A. Yes. So he was way ahead of us. McSweeney was the only guy I saw from 3 Truck, but he just walked by. I didn't really say nothing to him. I'm good friends with him. I didn't see guys who I know around here at 33. I remember seeing 39 Engine going past us at one point when we had the problem with Derek, and I was telling the guys, take your time, take a blow. I remember telling that to the kid. I think they got out. Somebody said to me they were trapped below 6 Truck. I didn't know that story. There's so many it's ridiculous.

Q. There's some good stories that come out of this also, you know, people that wound up being trapped for a little while and then they wound up coming out of it alive.

A. I mean, we got more people out just staying there. Also, while I was there in the lobby, the guy who was looking up when the bodies were jumping, the bodies would jump and you'd hear a huge explosion and you'd see just blood spatter on the windows. It was like gruesome. It was bad.

Anyway, we went down Warren Street and we ran into the guy we saw before, Richie Carletti. I ran into him.

Q. This is later on. This is after you had left the bar.

A. Yes.

Q. Exactly. So we know you took a rest over there in the bar area.

A. Right. I was looking for my company and trying to make contact with them.

Q. The lighting had died out early on, like after that first collapse.

A. There was no light.

Q. So on the way down there was no lighting in that stairway at all.

A. No. Only just the reflective black paint, that's it.

Q. Like you say, your flashlight went dead?

A. Yes. Like it always does when you need it.

So I went down Warren Street. I was glad to see Richie. He was going to clean me up, but he said he saw 5 Engine and at that time I thought Manny was all right.

Q. Like you said, the last you knew of him he was carrying oxygen into the building in addition to his roll-up I would imagine?

A. Yes.

Q. Carrying oxygen and an extra cylinder maybe?

A. We were all like frigging pack mules.

Q. Like carrying whatever you could at that point.

A. It's like, in hindsight, maybe it wasn't the greatest idea in the world. But when we left the rig, we didn't know the elevator was out.

Q. How we depend on the elevators normally.

A. We're not designed to walk that many floors.

Q. No?

A. I mean, this gear is designed for five stories of walk-up, not 90.

Q. Exactly.

A. What can be designed for 90 stories of walk-up? There should be a policy. I mean, if we've got a 20-story walk-up like we had at the Waterside. We had the Waterside fire in April and the elevators went bad. We made it up there first due, so it was all right for us, but the companies that came behind us had to walk 24 stories and they're shot.

Q. Of course. You're totally exhausted. Your legs start to give out at that point.

A. Not only that. The worst part is, you keep on talking about the weight, but the worst part is you're in a frigging oven. There's nowhere for the heat to go. You'll never run around a block in a coat, you know?

Q. I know. Our bodies are giving off a lot of heat, you're working, your metabolism is working.

A. That's why there should be like, if there is a huge calamity, there should be some sort of like every other company drop their roll-ups, like lighten the load or something like that, because it's just -- some sort of system because, you know, we do depend on the elevators.

Q. True.

A. If the elevators aren't going, we have no other plan.

Q. Absolutely not.

A. So, I mean, that's what I'm trying to bring up. I don't know who to talk to.

Q. And you knew early on that the elevators were not --

A. I said, oh, shit. It maybe saved my life. It might have saved my life, the elevators being out.

Q. Right. But you knew 10 Engine had said that we're going to have to take the stairs after you teamed up with them.

A. Right. But I think it may have saved my life. We went up there to put a fire out, but then again, who knows, if we put water on it, it would have done anything. You don't know.

Q. You wouldn't have maybe know how close you wouldn't have gotten. I mean, all good intention, but you don't realize how close you would have gotten.

A. We don't know.

Q. All right.

A. Also, then, when I got up on Warren Street --

Q. Up until that point, then, when --

A. I remember going on West Street, I'm hearing calling for 33 Engine on the radio. I thought they were all right. I was shocked.

Q. This is at what point you heard them on the radio?

A. I didn't hear them on the radio. I heard them calling for 33 Engine. I thought they answered, but it wasn't them, when I was on West.

Q. This is, again, later on, after the collapse?

A. Yes.

Q. We're going to concentrate up until that point then.

A. All right. I'm going to tell the whole story.

Q. That's okay.

A. I ended up in the hospital twice that day.

Q. No, that's all right. But the thing is we're just trying to get back to the collapse. That's all right.

A. I ended up in the hospital twice, but I never put my name down or nothing.

Q. You were probably in a state of shock of what had happened.

A. That, too. And I felt like I wasn't that hurt, so I thought there'd be so many more people coming and I wanted to get the hell out of the way.

Q. More serious injured.

A. Yes.

Q. Even though you might have been in shock and upset and injured.

A. I didn't want them wasting their time.

Q. No. You would think serious injuries are going to come out of this.

A. Not enough, I guess.

Q. All right. So we'll take this as -- unless there's something else really significant you want to put into this.

A. Also, when I came in that morning, Lieutenant Paul Mitchell was here. He was relieved by Bohack. He was sitting at the door. He was leaving.

Q. He was the officer that worked the night before in 5 Engine?

A. Apparently. I don't know what happened to him.

Q. He was also amongst the missing people?

A. Yes.

Q. He was working here?

A. Right.

Q. He already left, though?

A. I don't know. He was in the midst of leaving when we got the run.

Q. But you had gotten that run before this whole thing.

A. Like 8:30, yes. So I don't know.

Q. All right.

A. I'd just like to make the points like I was just making.

Q. Which is good.

A. The stairways, there weren't enough stairways. I don't know what the hell the papers were talking about, how they were big enough. They say they were more than big enough for regulation. To me that's ridiculous.

Q. Not with the amount of people that were in that building, the amount of people that were trying to come down. It was very tight.

A. No.

Q. Actually, you're going up single file --

A. Single file.

Q. -- and they're coming down single file, and it's not continuous; you're pausing as you're going up, right?

A. Yes. It's not like continuous. It's like slow.

Q. And like you say, trying to open up doors, if anybody tried to open up the door --

A. You stopped the flow. That's why there wasn't enough stairs. Then you find out later it was truss construction. Like, oh, shit. I didn't know. See, if there is ever a plane that did that again or anything of that magnitude and we really can't put that fire out and we decide early the only thing we could do is facilitate the self-evacuation, and like any person coming down, if there's one person in the stairs, an old lady, a guy who is a little bit too big or whatever, I'm being politically correct, and they'll clog the whole stairs and it's not even full and it's clogging.

Q. He's hindering other people from coming down.

A. If we somehow just take that guy and move him along or that lady and you just move them along quicker, we are saving more people up there. I mean, on a regular high-rise fire, that's not true. We just go up there, we put the fire out the best way we can. But if we ever have a situation like that, if we just get in there and help the self-evacuation as quick as we can, that would save more lives.

Q. It would make more of an impact.

A. Yes. Even though they say we did and all that.

Q. There probably could have been more people that we could have gotten out of this thing.

A. Yes. I mean, it's not Monday morning quarterbacking, it's learning from it, because it's just something nobody ever dealt with.

Q. No, of course not. You're learning from experience.

A. I just wish, you know, I don't know how they could do this in a liable -- I don't know what goes into this, but it would help. That's my opinion, if anybody wants it.

Q. Well, it's good to mention, right?

A. Yes. I wanted to make sure -- I really didn't want to do the interview, but I wanted to make sure those points got out. What I see in the paper, I heard nothing about evacuation on the radio. Nothing.

Q. I'll tell you, the way the building construction is designed to evacuate only from the floor where the incident is taking place down to a couple floors below where it is, not your entire building is being evacuated, I mean, you're clogging up the stairways to a point where people can't safely make it down, unless -- you know, we're talking about hours here. We're not talking about making it down very quickly.

A. Yes. I could only imagine what happened on the floors below the fire, what clogging went on there.

Q. Right.

A. The building is on fire. You can't do nothing about who's already gone.

Q. No. We have no control over the building.

A. We should. Did you see this? You see this? You open this door, the people in here were stopped, and these guys are pushing --

Q. Trying to make it --

(Interview ends abruptly.)

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN AMATO

Interview Date: January 2, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today's date is January 2, '02. The time is 1330 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview today with Firefighter third grade John Amato, Engine 68. We're in the quarters of Engine 68. There's nobody else in this room at this time. The interview concerns the events of September 11th. What follows is the interview.

A. We got the call early that morning to go to 35 Engine. We got down to 35 Engine. We mucked it up with a bunch of other companies. We took some equipment from 35 Engine. Then we got the call to go down to the World Trade Center.

As we were driving down to the World Trade Center -- actually we took a little detour because a couple of -- I think 64 Engine was leading us. We didn't exactly know how to get down there, which delayed us a little bit, thank God.

When we got down there, we parked I'd say maybe 10 blocks, 10 to 12 blocks away from the World Trade Center. We gathered all the equipment, the rollups, the standpipe kit, and we started walking down the West Side Highway.

As we were walking down -- actually as we were driving down, we heard that the first building had collapsed, which is the south tower?

Q. The south tower collapsed first.

A. The south tower collapsed first. We didn't know what kind of collapse it was. We thought it was a partial collapse. We thought it was maybe two floors pancaking.

At that point we were walking towards the building. We still didn't know it was a total collapse. As we get closer and closer, we notice that the smoke is clearing. We don't see the south tower. Now we're starting to talk to each other, started to actually worry what's in for us next.

As we approached Chambers Street, kept walking, still no one had told us about the total collapse. We get down to about Barclay and Vesey Street, which is a block away from the overpass, the bridge overpass that goes across the West Side Highway.

All you hear is a rumbling in the street. It sounded like an earthquake. When I was a younger kid, I was in an earthquake and it felt like the same exact feeling. I looked, and I could see the antenna on the top of the roof coming straight down.

We all turned and just threw our rollups down and started running as fast as we could. I took about five steps, I turned back to look behind me, and the debris was on my heels. Guys were just scrambling through the streets. Finally the debris overcame us, and you couldn't see anymore. It was like pitch-black, total darkness.

I kind of ran into a building. I hit the building. One of the gentlemen working in the building I think I see was an engineer pulled me over towards the entrance. I went into the entrance. You couldn't see. It was dark as night.

Finally a few minutes went by, about four or five minutes went by, it started clearing, and we started looking for members of Engine 68 as well as all the other engines that had driven down with us.

We found everyone. We were told to stay at Chambers Street until further notice.

That's about it.

Q. That's about it? So you stayed at Chambers Street?

A. We stayed at Chambers Street. They didn't give us permission to go back in there, since we had already been involved with the collapse.

Q. So you stayed there for some period of time at Chambers, the staging area?

A. The staging area, yeah.

Q. And then from there you left? You took your rig back to 68 at some point?

A. Oh, yeah, I'd say about 11 p.m. that night.

Q. Wow.

A. Yeah, we stayed there the whole day.

Q. The whole day, and they never put you work?

A. No.

Q. Were there a lot of companies at the staging area?

A. There were a lot of companies there.

They just didn't want anyone involved with the immediate collapse back in there. That was their idea. Since we were on paper as one of the companies, they didn't want us to go.

Q. You really didn't interact with any other companies or anything like that? You were walking in, it started to collapse, you ran out, wound up at the staging area eventually, and that's about it.

Is everybody from 68 okay?

A. Yeah.

Q. Everybody came back?

A. Yes. We had minor injuries from running into, not being able to see. We did have some minor injuries, including myself.

CHIEF MALKIN: Okay. It's 1336 hours. This concludes the interview with Fireman Amato. I thank him for the interview, and that's the end.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PAUL QUINN

Interview Date: January 8, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today's date is January 8th, 2002. The time is 2028 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter first grade Paul Quinn of Engine 55. We're at the quarters of Engine 55. Also Chief O'Donnell from the Safety Battalion is in the room at this time. What follows is the interview.

Q. Can you just start where you were when you got the run.

A. Okay. We were at a box on -- I had my rig parked on Church and Canal Street for I think it was either a gas leak or an odor of gas. I don't know what time that came in. It came in before the run, obviously, for the Trade Center.

I guess the chief was getting ready to let us go, and we heard a big bang. I thought it was -- first, because it was a run for either a gas odor or a leak, that maybe something exploded in the street.

The officer looked out, my officer, and he saw the tower. A couple floors looked like they were all aflame, one floor or whatever. So the chief told us to go down there. He let I guess all the companies go to the Trade Center.

We got down there. The officer told me -- when we got there, he said, "Help 7 Engine stretch to the standpipe. See if you can find a hydrant. See if you can get water." So I did that. I started to help 7 Engine's chauffeur. I put my bunker gear on and stuff.

I looked up, and somebody said there was an airplane. So I thought, okay, it was a small Cessna or something like that that hit the building. I'm looking up and I say, okay, there's a lot of fire, but it's vented. There's going to be a couple of hose lines we're going to need to do this.

So I helped 7 Engine. There was a guy in the street, and there was a civilian with him and another fireman. We put him in a stokes basket and brought him over to an ambulance on the southbound side of West Street, brought him over the median and put him in an ambulance.

I went back to work. I was helping him and stretching lines. My time frame is all off. I can't put anything into chronological order.

Q. Okay.

A. I got a line to my rig to 10 Engine, then hooked up into one of the buildings, and just the bodies were falling. It was a mess. Guys were coming off rigs.

As I said, companies were coming in. I can't tell you what companies. I know I saw -- guys were taking masks. The guys were coming in. Extra guys were coming in off the rigs, coming in more than they were assigned with. They were getting masks from different rigs, I guess. One of the guys took one of the masks and the other guy got another mask from the rig.

Q. Listen, this is not mandatory. If this is too difficult, just tell me. I'm not here to question you at all.

A. Yeah, I know.

Q. You don't have to do this. You can decline this. I'm not ordering you to do this.

A. Yeah.

Q. I feel for your position. If you find it too difficult, just tell me and we'll stop and we'll just call it a day. You don't have to do this.

A. Yeah, I know, I know.

You're asking me what units showed up.

Q. If you remember.

A. I think that I saw 5 Truck. I'm not sure. I think I remember seeing one of the guys. I said, "Do you have a mask?" Now I'm looking for masks and stuff like this.

I was by the rig, and somebody said the building's starting to come down, take off. So I started to run, and the north overpass, the pedestrian, I was kind of like there, and I got behind that or in front of one of the rigs. I was either going to go underneath it or -- I got, I guess, near the front grill, the front bumper.

I stayed there until the -- it felt like a damn tornado. It was black for a long time. I was near the median, so I kind of made my way north. I had the dust and the soot and swallowing the debris, whatever you want to call it. My eyes hurt bad. My eyes were bad. I felt like I was closing them on sand paper, kind of.

Then the other guy, Bobby, caught me. He kind of saw me. Made it to another ambulance and they gave me oxygen and I guess water and stuff like that. Then they told us we had to evacuate that because the second building was going to come down.

So I got out of there and I'm walking around. I'm trying to find -- I went one way -- I don't know where this ambulance was. I get out of there. It was a M.E.R.V. It had a ramp. You didn't step up on it. So I get out of there, and I'm walking around, "Where should we go?" or something like that. So somebody said, "No, go this way." So they pushed, and I guess I just followed the rest of the crowd or whatever. The second tower started to come down, I guess the north tower at that time.

We made it into a construction booth, a construction trailer. Again it turned dark. It turned black. I was going to go behind that. But I was kind of like in the middle of a crowd with a bunch of cops and firemen. I made it into this construction trailer, and I looked out the window. Again, it was black.

I tell you, my time and the sequence is all off. I went up to where the command post -- I was going to go outside and see if I could do anything, but my eyes, they were hurting, they were burning. So every time I'd go out -- I'm useless if I try to go out and do something here. So I guess after a while -- my time is all off.

I made it up to the command post, and I saw somebody. I started losing it. I eventually made it to Beekman Downtown Hospital, and my brother found me. Later on that afternoon we came back here.

Q. Your brother's name is John?

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay. That's good?

CHIEF MALKIN: This concludes the interview with Firefighter Paul Quinn. The time is now 2036 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ROBERT SIRAGUSA

Interview Date: January 8, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today's date is January 8th, 2002. The time is 2041 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview at this time with Fireman First Grade Robert Siragusa, Engine Company 55. We're in the office of Engine 55. Also in the room is Chief O'Donnell from the Safety Battalion. What follows is the interview.

A. I was at the firehouse approximately 8:15 that morning. We were waiting for the company to return to quarters. They were out on a run previous before we got in. Then as we were waiting -- actually from the television we found out that a plane had hit the Trade Center.

We then proceeded probably a little after 9 -- yeah, I guess it was around 9:15. We knew obviously the company wasn't coming back any time soon. So I and two members from the night crew that worked the previous night that were relieved already decided we were going to get in one of the private cars and go down to the site.

As we were proceeding to the site, we had word on the news, on the car radio, that a second plane had hit the Trade Center en route. We found out that that had happened. We approximately arrived at the Trade Center complex about five minutes after the second plane had hit.

At this time we had had our bunker gear with us, and we had proceeded to the command post on West Street, which we mainly remained there for most of the next 20 minutes. We had debated on whether we should go into the building and help out, look for our company, but we decided probably not to because we had no SCPA, we had no gear, we had no radios and nobody would know where we were if we got lost or split up.

So we basically stayed in the street, thinking that sooner or later we would get up there to relieve or help the company, whoever needed help.

We did help stretch some lines in front of the building with the engine companies, helping the chauffeurs in the street. As we did, debris was flying out the windows. Bodies were flying out the windows. It was getting pretty bad in front of the building.

A couple minutes later one of the chiefs on the scene -- I don't remember who it was -- ordered all personnel in the street to remove themselves across West Street, which is basically where we stood on West Street directly across from One World Trade Center for the next couple of minutes, watching the insanity.

Probably a couple minutes after that I think -- what time did the first building come down? I don't even remember. Whatever it was, 9:20 or 9:40 or something.

Q. 9:55 south tower collapses, 9:55.

A. That was the first one. Okay.

So then we basically remained at the command post along with a lot of other firemen.

Q. At the time that the south tower came down, you guys stayed there? Were you enveloped in the cloud?

A. Actually as we heard a radio transmission of "Collapse, collapse, collapse," that's when everybody just went their own way. I looked up and I saw the top couple of floors starting to come down. So I took off into the building directly across from the World Trade Center, which was --

Q. On the west side of West Street?

A. West side of West Street, which was probably the World Financial Center, it was called. We ran in there, a few of us, about 10, 12 guys. We ran into the building, ran about 50 yards to the rear of the building and dove behind a wall. Then we heard the tremendous roar and collapse of the first tower coming down.

We were pretty much safe from the dust cloud because most of the windows stayed intact. Only a few windows broke. So we pretty much survived that pretty well.

Immediately after the building came down, we then came back out to the front of the building in front of West Street and saw the collapse.

At that time there was a couple of guys really in bad shape in front of the building, guys that probably didn't get far enough away, that were kind of staggering in front of the building.

So what I did is I just grabbed a few of those guys. As a matter of fact, two of them, the chauffeur from 24 Engine and the chauffeur from 55, who was working the night tour, who I was supposed to relieve on the day tour, they were in pretty bad shape.

They were pretty much in shock. They didn't know what happened. They were incoherent. I kind of just walked them a few blocks north to an ambulance to get them checked out, because I didn't know if they were hurt seriously or not.

After I made sure they were okay, got them in the ambulance, I proceeded back down West Street to the front of the Trade Center. There were numerous burning materials. There were car fires. We proceeded to try to extinguish some of them, but there was a big problem with the water. There was very low water pressure. We did have a problem with that, but we did the best we could trying to extinguish the perimeter fires all around the area.

Like I said, some guys did go back right into the collapse area, but I stayed back and did that. As we were doing that, 30 seconds, 30 minutes later, whatever it was, there was another transmission, probably a last-minute thing. I heard, "Collapse, collapse" again. This time the north tower started to fall.

I took off running again. This time I ran west down towards the water on Vesey Street, and this time we wound up in the park over there by Battery City, I believe it is, or by the waterfront, as the second tower collapsed. The second time it was down and was really insane. There was a lot of firemen down at that end.

Everybody was kind of pretty much in shock at that time. We didn't know what the hell was going on or what to do. So we regrouped with a bunch of firemen. With a bunch of guys we regrouped. We just came back to the front of the building again. This time it was a bigger mess than it was the first time.

A lot of the guys just went right to work after that. They just got right back in that rubble, started looking for people. Some guys just kind of retreated and just sat down and they were in shock, just gave up and just sat there. Some guys were just walking around in a daze.

Q. They didn't believe it.

Were they pulling people off the pile? Did you see any of that?

A. Not much, no.

Q. After a collapse there's supposed to be surface victims.

A. Right.

Q. But it doesn't seem like there were any surface victims.

A. No, the only surface victims, as you know, were probably Ladder Company 6 and one or two other people, I think. But that was basically it. Everybody was pretty much buried in there.

It was just an eerie silence after that. It was an eerie silence, no radio transmissions, nothing. All you heard was Ladder 6 giving their mayday. Everybody kind of centered their attention on getting those guys out.

That's what we basically did. We continued to put out the perimeter fires.

Q. At some point did somebody take charge? Were there any chiefs around or any officers that said, okay, we're going to break into teams? Did you get any sense of that?

A. Everybody was so widely scattered. I think Chief Blaich is probably the only guy I really heard on the radio try to get something going, yeah. Basically, as I said, the first concern was to find Ladder 6. He kind of organized everybody, let's find out where they are, let's try to get them out.

They were in the south tower, the second stairwell. Nobody knew exactly where that was, because there was nothing left.

Q. So Blaich was sending teams of guys to go try to kind Ladder 6 in whatever stairwell?

A. Right, right. They were trying to get into the rubble area.

Then basically after that the fire boats came in, because we had no water. So basically most of the day and the next couple of hours I was stretching line from the fire boat. I teamed up with a bunch of guys getting water from the fire boat in front of the Trade Center.

Basically that's what I was doing for the rest of the day, just stretching a couple lines back and forth, from out here, stretching up Vesey in front of the building to the manifolds.

That was basically what the day was about. I don't know if I can get into any detail than that.

Q. That's okay.

How did you finish up the day? You worked there until 10:00 at night, you said?

A. Just about 9:00, when I teamed up with my company. We finally teamed up, because there was only three of us there. Basically after that we kind after ran into each other about 8:30, 9, and went back to the firehouse about 10.

But the guy you just interviewed, Paul, he was really in front of the building. He was the chauffeur that day.

Q. Yeah, he was saying.

A. He really got in there. He walked out without a scratch. I think he dove under one of the pedestrian bridges here. He's a lucky man.

Q. He told me.

A. Yeah, yeah, he was a lucky man.

Basically that's what the day was all about. Do you have any other questions?

Q. I'm trying to think.

How long would you say, like, the first building collapses until it cleared up, until you could see what the lay of the land was?

A. But most of the dust cloud went north and south, for some reason. Not much came west, for some reason -- I don't know -- because the buildings were there. They had the big tall buildings across from West Street. But most of the dust went, like I said, north and south.

So where I was, it cleared up pretty quickly. But to tell you how long it took to clear, I would say it was pretty quick, minutes.

Q. Minutes?

A. Minutes, I think.

Q. And some guys jumped on the pile. They had an instinct or the wherewithal to try to jump on the pile.

A. I believe some of them, yes. Some guys did jump up on the pile, jumped onto the mezzanine in front of the World Trade Center. There was like a mezzanine. Other guys went up there to look around. They had a tower ladder right there.

Q. Was there a lot of fire in the Trade Center collapse area and stuff at this time?

A. No. Basically there was a fire -- in the part of the Trade Center that was standing, the mezzanine area -- one of the towers? It must have been. There was like about six or seven stories left. I don't know if that was -- was it Eight World Trade, maybe?

Q. Yes.

A. I think it was Eight World Trade, which --

Q. That was burning; right?

A. That was burning.

Q. That's what caused the fire in that.

A. That was definitely burning. There was a lot of perimeter fires, rubbish and cars.

Q. Cars, yeah.

A. And of course there was smoke coming out but no active flame, not that I noticed anyhow. I don't remember.

Q. Okay. About it?

A. That's about it.

Q. Good. Okay.

CHIEF MALKIN: This concludes the interview. I thank Firefighter Siragusa for the interview. The time is now 2053 hours

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PETE METZGER

Interview Date: January 8, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today's date is January 8th, 2002. The time is 2058 hours. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Pete Metzger, fireman fourth, Engine 55, regarding the events of September 11th. Also in the room is Battalion Chief O'Donnell of the Safety Battalion. What follows now is the interview with Fireman Metzger.

A. On the morning of September 11th I got relieved about 8:30. Engine 55 had a run for a gas leak on the west side. From there 55 went to the towers. Me, Pat Schuppel and Fireman Siragusa made our way to the World Trade Center after the second plane hit the towers.

55 was parked in front of the north tower. I went there and grabbed my helmet, which I left on the rig. An older chief kind of motioned us all across the street on the west side, West Street, to the command post, where we waited and tried to get into the building.

We were there probably 15 minutes before the first one came down. As it came down, we all went underneath the building right there. I'm not sure what building it was. It might be --

Q. It's on the west side of West Street, the building?

A. On West Street. I guess it was the Merrill Lynch building. I think it was probably the Merrill Lynch building has an underground parking garage. Everyone that was at the command post went under that.

I came back, searched that area, the underground parking garage, went up, saw a little of the command post. I was with a captain. I don't know who it was. He said, "Let's go on out the back." As we made our way out the back, which is in the little green area near the harbor --

Q. Right.

A. -- the second tower came down.

I hooked up with Pat Schuppel, who I started with. Probably for a couple minutes we hustled. We just regrouped back there on the water. Then we went back to the towers, where we started putting out car fires and whatnot.

Some guys needed help up on the promenade deck, the second floor of I guess it's the customs building or one of these buildings, on the corner of Vesey and West. So I went up there and started helping this Squad 288. I carried out a couple bodies or at least one body that I remember. I think it was a captain.

I worked up there a little bit, came on down.

Q. The guy you carried out was a captain?

A. Yeah.

Q. Do you know what happened to him; do you know?

A. I don't know. His injuries were not conclusive. He was kind of intact.

Q. He was out in the street?

A. No. He was up on that second level of the building on the corner of Vesey and West. I guess it was Six World Trade, probably the customs building, but I'm not sure of that.

We kind of worked up there a bit. We came on down. We went up to Barclay street, went north and west, made a right on Barclay, down Church. From there I saw a member of 55 Engine that was hooked up with another local company.

I said good-bye to the squad buddies. From there we searched a big old hotel that was on I guess Trinity, the Millennium Hotel. We searched all the rooms in that place, found nothing. We came on down. It took a while.

About that time --

Q. How did you get into the rooms?

A. There were a couple companies working together, and the first couple doors we popped. Then someone found the maid's keys. They found two maids' keys, master keys, and we swiped.

Q. Who was working in there with you; do you know?

A. Who was working in there?

Q. Just off the top of your head, if you can remember.

A. There was a local company. It might have been Engine 15 or 18. The captain was there. I'm not sure if his boys were there. Then there was a Brooklyn company. I'm not sure who that was.

Q. Okay.

A. There was a bunch of us, and the officers had the keys and they would open the doors, and we would all go in and search them. All the rooms were immaculate. The first or second floors were dusty. Everything else was fine. So we did that for a while, you know, 50 stories.

We came on down. From there, I think that's when seven was going to come down. So they backed everybody out, somewhere near Church and Trinity, I guess. I remember being near the cemetery, and there's an old Church building up there. I'm not exactly sure where we were. But we were up in the Church, Park, Murray, Barclay, this area.

So we sat there for a while. Seven World Trade came down. After that came down, we all kind of regrouped. I think we started to stretch a tower ladder down Vesey Street towards Seven World. This was kind of late at night. Maybe this was 8 or 9.

I saw 55 Engine, so I abandoned that stat ship, me and the other 55 guy, hopped on with our 55 gang, and we kind of did a little cruise around the Trade Center area, did a little digging in the north tower, and then we came home by 12 or 1 or 2.

Yeah, that was that.

Q. That was it?

A. Yeah.

CHIEF MALKIN: This concludes the interview with Firefighter Pete Metzger of Engine 55. The time is now 2103 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF FRANK CONGIUSTA

Interview Date: January 8, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today is January 8th, 2002. The time is approximately 10:50. My name is Chief Art Lakiotes, Safety Command, New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with --

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Frank Congiusta, Battalion 48.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: -- regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Frank, if you would, just take me through the day, how the events unfolded for you and explain to me how the day went for you.

A. I was at home reading the paper, and my neighbor came over and said a plane hit the World Trade Center. So I went next door, and I watched it for a while. Then the second plane hit. I said it's time to go to work.

I went in, and I drove to 240's quarters to pick up my gear. There were three other guys there, so we all got in my car. We were going to drive to the Battery Tunnel and walk through the Battery Tunnel.

While we were on the Prospect Expressway, the first tower collapsed. When we got on the Gowanus, I figured the top would fall off. On the radio they said the tower collapsed. We were trying to see what was left of the first tower that collapsed, and we couldn't see anything. But it was hard to tell through the smoke.

We got to the Battery Tunnel, we parked the car, and they wouldn't let walk us through. They said they were afraid the tunnel would collapse. So they said they were going to send a bus for us.

So we waited for the bus. We got on the bus. When we were in the ditch on the Gowanus -- what is it?

Q. The BQE?

A. That's when the second building collapsed. I would guess we got there 10, 15 minutes after the second building collapsed. It was a complete mess. It was like walking onto the moon. Anybody we saw appeared to be in shock.

Q. That was after the event?

A. Yeah.

The first chief that we met was Chief

Callan. [redacted] Then there was some deputy there from Queens that asked us to search the customs building, which was still standing.

So we figured out a way into the customs building, and we searched the eight floors of the customs building on the west side. The whole middle of the building was blocked out by collapse.

We came out. Chief Fellini was there by then. I reported to Chief Fellini that we had searched the top eight floors with 43 Truck and 294 Engine. I reported that the west half of the customs building that we could get to that was accessible was negative, and he told us to search the subbasements. We went down and searched the subbasements.

While we were searching the subbasements, they decided that Seven World Trade Center, which was across the street, was going to collapse. So they called us out. We were so far down, we couldn't hear them. But we came out after we searched the subbasements. Actually we came out on the Seven World Trade Center parkway street. When I came out, they were calling us on the radio to tell us to get out.

Then I reported that the search was negative, and then they wouldn't let anybody near the site pretty much, because Seven World Trade Center was going to come down.

After that I started doing a casualty report. I was there until like midnight doing casualty reports.

Q. Where was your location?

A. We were at West and Vesey.

Q. West and Vesey?

A. But then what happened was once I started doing casualty reports, I started walking all around the site, and anybody I saw with a helmet number that I thought would have been there, I asked them if all their guys were accounted for.

So I made one list of companies that everybody was accounted for, and I made another list of who they thought was missing, which was --

Q. Who did you give that to?

A. Stanley Door ^ CHECK was there, I think. Actually we went further down to Stuyvesant High School, and I forget the name of the chief that was there. They have like a spiral book, and they were entering all the names in a spiral book. Somebody else had given them many of the names I had, but a lot of the names I gave them they didn't have. That was basically it.

And when that was done, I was shot and I went home.

Q. How did you get home?

A. I walked downtown through the Battery Tunnel, got my car, and I drove a couple of the guys to 168. I drove a couple guys to 168, and then I drove home. I had to work a 24 the next day. I was working up and down the next day. That was it.

Q. Thank you, Frank.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: This concludes the interview. It is approximately 10:55.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER NICHOLAS BORRILLO

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 9, 2002. The time is 1300 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Division of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual --

FIREFIGHTER BORRILLO: Firefighter Nicholas Borrillo, first grade, Ladder 1.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York. We are at the quarters of Ladder 1, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Go ahead, Nick. Tell your story.

A. We were at a box for odor of gas in the street on Church and Lispenard. We were investigating that. We were just about ready to take up from that box and come back when we heard the roar of the engines of the plane. Before we knew it, it was overhead. Within two seconds it hit the north tower.

We all jumped on the rig. It was Ladder 1, Engine 7, Battalion 1, Ladder 8, Engine 55, if I'm not mistaken. We headed down Canal Street to the west side. Then we headed town to the Trade Center. We pulled up in front of the Trade Center on West Street on the east side right in front of the building. There's a bus stop right in front of the building. We were right there.

We got off the rig. We kind of gathered ourselves a little bit, discussed what we were going to do.

Q. Where did you park the rig?

A. The rig was parked on West Street facing north, right in front of the building. As I said, there was a bus stop that was right there. We parked a little bit north of the bus stop, probably by that big overhang.

Q. Okay. Right at the bridge that goes across West Street.

A. After that.

Q. It's not after that?

A. There was a big overhang when you walk into the tower. There's an overhang on that part of the building.

We went to the fire command station. We waited for some orders. Chief Pfeifer was in charge of the fire at that time. We were trying to find out if we were going to get our Port Authority radio that we normally get. Those never came.

We tried to get information about the elevators. That took a little bit of time. I don't know how long it might have taken, but before we actually knew that, we didn't have any elevators and they said start making your way up.

We started going up. We went to the B staircase. There were lots of civilians coming down that particular staircase. It was a few minutes even before we were able to clear out enough space where we could see to start going up.

Maybe on the second floor I thought I heard a little bit of an explosion or something. Later on we found out that there was a -- there was a Port Authority guy on the staircase in our vicinity. He confirmed that another plane had hit the other tower.

We still kept going up. It was a slow go going up. It was really congested. We were single file going up. The civilians were single file coming down. We were just telling people just to stay calm, just get out of the building, the best way you can.

We were getting a little separated from each other. We tried to just keep with each other, just in case there was anything -- we didn't want to have to look for anyone on the way out.

A couple guys were behind us, so we had to stop maybe two times as we were going up. We climbed up to the 23rd floor. We were waiting for a couple of our guys to come up. They finally hooked up with us, and we took a break. There was a water display thing like for sodas and everything. We got into that, because we were just overheating. We took, I don't know, a five-minute break there.

Then we heard a rumble. We heard it and we felt the whole building shake. It was like being on a train, being in an earthquake. A train is more like it, because with the train you hear the rumbling, and it kind of like moved you around in the hall. Then it just stopped after eight or ten seconds, about the time it took for the building to come down.

We just kind of looked at each other like what the hell was that? Then it stopped. I had left my mask, my helmet, my jacket down the hallway. I said, no, I might need that, let me go back and get it. I ran back and got that. A couple minutes later, not that I heard on my radio. I didn't hear the evacuation order over my radio, but there was a chief from the 11th Division, I believe, Picciotto.

Q. From the 11th Battalion.

A. The 11th Battalion.

He was probably coming down from like 30 or something like that. He was telling everybody directly to leave the building. So we got our stuff, we started going down. There were still civilians in the staircase. We probably got to the civilians around the 10th floor. So we kind of slowed down a little bit. We didn't want to panic them.

We really didn't know what was going on. We didn't know the whole building fell down. We just didn't know that. Maybe if we did, maybe we would have made it a little more urgent. It was really pretty calm in the staircase. Nobody was yelling or screaming. The civilians were fine.

We got down. I don't know how long it took us to get down, maybe 20 minutes. About that time we came down, we got down to the lobby, walked towards West Street. We figured we would go back to the fire command station. There was nobody at that fire command station.

I waited for one of the other guys, Steve Olsen, to come down. He was about two minutes behind me. We walked down to the West Street side where our rig was. As I said before, I spoke to him for 10 or 15 seconds. We were looking up at the building. We were like, how are we going to fight this one? Let's regroup and walk north. I said, "Joe, are you coming with us?" He said, "I'll be right there."

Me and Steve got to about -- walking north on West, we got to maybe half a block to a block north of Vesey when the north tower fell. We just hauled. We were running. There were a bunch us running. I actually got up around two blocks.

The dust cloud was right behind me. It overcame me a little bit. I got up to Stuyvesant High School. I ducked into the school, rested there for two or three minutes, came back outside, walked on the sidewalk back down. I didn't know where Steve Olsen was, and I didn't know -- (inaudible).

I asked where they were. Everybody else was with him. He said everybody else was with him, the officer and three other members. We sat up a rendezvous point. I think it was Harrison Street, maybe, Harrison and West. We kind of regrouped right there.

After that we scattered up and got back to the firehouse. We had no masks. Some guys didn't have their coat on. Some guys didn't have their helmet. We said, let's go back to the firehouse, let's get our second gear and then we'll get back down to the Trade Center. We had no tanks or anything.

That's it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT ROBERT BOHACK

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 9th, 2002. The time is 1100 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the safety division of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual --

LIEUTENANT BOHACK: Lieutenant Robert Bohack, Engine 5.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: -- of the New York City Fire Department, at the quarters of Engine 5 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Okay, Lieutenant, go ahead.

A. We had a box at approximately 8:40 at Gramercy Park. The available was given. We were picking up, and I heard over the radio that a plane had hit the Trade Center. We were dispatched right away, I believe fourth due on the second alarm.

We proceeded westbound on 14th Street. I then made a left, heading south on West Street. I could see the tower clearly from that vantage point. There was a huge hole in the tower I figured about 85 floors up. It was about four or five stories wide, triangular-shaped, and smoke was ripping out under heavy pressure. I could see flames, and I could see smoke starting to rip out of the top floors.

We proceeded southbound the traffic was getting heavy. We moved over into the northbound lane, and then we proceeded south. We stopped the rig approximately one block north of the north tower on the northbound side of West Street, facing south.

Got out of the rig. I had a five-man engine company. I took my chauffeur with me. I didn't think we were going to hook up to anything. We were too far away and proceeded to the lobby of One World Tower.

Q. The north tower.

A. Okay.

We reported to I believe Chief Pfeifer, and I believe Chief Hayden was there too. As well as Commissioner Von Essen. We were told to team up with Engine 10 with our rollups and all our masks and extra bottles and proceed to the 79th floor and operate.

We started going up the stairs as a team. There was a large number of people coming down the stairways. It was a little narrow. There was only room for two people wide. It was slow going up. We stopped on the 13th floor for about two minutes because there were too many people coming down. We were with 10 Engine.

We took a two minute break and then went up to the 19th floor, where one of my guys, Derek Brogan, he was complaining of bad chest pains. Even though he's a young guy, he looked okay. He was a heavy smoker. So we decided to stop.

He was sweating a lot, so we stopped on the 19th floor. We got some water and poured cxv

cx water over our heads. We took our gear off for a few minutes. I monitored him. In about 10 or 15 minutes, he said he was okay.

[redacted]

[redacted]

I called him on the radio. He didn't have a radio. I was hoping that maybe he was next to somebody. He wasn't answering. There was so much radio traffic anyway, you couldn't get a word in edge-wise, too many maydays for chest pains.

So we stopped on the 19th floor. He said he felt better after about 15 minutes. We got our gear up again, started to proceed up the stairs stairway A, I believe, until the 33rd floor. Then he was really sweating and said the chest pains were shooting down his arm. So that's when I made decision that's it.

We put our gear down. I called for oxygen. Within two minutes two Port Authority ESU cops came with an oxygen resuscitator. They were there quick. I was amazed. A couple firemen, I think one was from 9 Truck -- I forget his name -- he was there taking a break. All the fat guys were taking a break on the lower floors, me included, you know.

We gave him oxygen. Another fireman who was there, he was a nurse. He looked at him and said, "Lou, I don't think he's having a heart attack. His skin is good. His pulse is good. I think it's something else." I said all right. We'll just hang out and let him rest.

Two Port Authority cops were with us. After a couple minutes, he said he felt better. It was probably ten minutes later. I said, "All right, the thing we're going to do, I want you in an ambulance. You're done for the day."

So one of the guys that was there -- I think it was the guy from 9 Truck -- said, "Lou, I'm going down. I'll take him down." I said, "No, I want to stay together." I was already missing Manny. I don't want to worry where he is. "I said, we're going to down together. We'll drop off our gear, go down, put him in an ambulance. When I know he's on his way, we'll come back up."

So we left our stuff down, tools, kept our masks on. I had my light. We began, with the Port Authority cops, to come down the stairs. As soon as we got into the stairway, the building started shaking like an earthquake. I thought our building was coming down. My mind was saying there's some kind of wind compensator up there in the upper floors, a big, huge vat of cement. Did you ever hear of that? I know the building moved.

Q. Yeah.

A. There's some kind of huge ton of weight up there. It's a huge vat filled with cement and it shifts. When the wind is blowing one way, it shifts to the other way with the wind to compensate.

I thought if that thing shakes and comes loose from its supports we're fucking dead. So that's what I thought it was. I thought our building was starting to collapse. I said, "Let's get the fuck out of here, now. We're out of here."

We start going down. We went down the C stairs.

Oh, before that I found out that the other building had gotten hit. One guy told me a couple weeks ago that it got hit while we were in the lobby. I didn't know that until we were on the 13th floor or 19th floor and were taking our break. I looked out the window, and I saw like 30 floors of fire in the other building. I'm thinking, this guy is having chest pains. I have a report of a missile attack or other terrorist attack. 30th floor, there's a fire here, 10th floor there's a fire here, missiles coming, heart attacks, this is ridiculous we're out here.

We started going down. The building shook. I said, "This one is coming down, let's get the fuck out of here." I didn't see the two Port Authority cops after that. I had four guys with me. I was missing one member from the get-go.

We started going down. I saw a couple guys who were going up on the way down. Kevin Donnelly from Ladder 3, I asked him, "What are you doing?" I said, "Let's get out of here."

We saw a couple civilians that were there, but mostly the stairway was clear. We chose another stairway. We chose the C stairway. I guess that's facing the south tower. That's very close to there.

It started getting dusty, shitty and dark. The lights went out about -- we were maybe on the 15th floor. The lights went out on the 13th floor.

We were going down. There were still a few civilians, a few more firemen. It was dark. One of the guys who was sharing his mask with a civilian who was scared. We had to help him down.

Then we get to the third floor, and the stairway is partially blocked. They couldn't pass that back up. There was mostly firemen, a few civilians. I told my guys, "I'll go find another stairway. Stay here."

I walked to the fourth floor, go across. All the lights are out. I find the A stair that we went up. I stayed in the stairway. I yelled to my guys, "Let's go. I've got another stairway. I've got another stairway." They come. Only three guys come.

The crowd was obviously, or probably from the collapse of the other building. There was debris from the other building coming down and pushing in. Because we were in the stairway facing the south tower. So that must have pushed in the outside wall, that's what caused a breach.

In the dark (inaudible), and Gerry Gorman was able to get past, along with a couple guys from 20 Truck. I didn't know it at the time when I called my guys -- I didn't want to lose the stairway and go back. So when they came, three guys came. Now I'm missing two guys, Manny from the get-go and Gerry Gorman, who made his way down to the B stairway.

[redacted]

[redacted]

With that, as soon as I said that, the building made a groan like steel twisting. I didn't have to tell those guys twice. We just started making a B line for West Street or the western side, the entrance we came in.

With that, we ran out the front. There was, I think, a chief's aide sort of as a lookout saying, "Come on. Come on. Come on." We stopped at the entrance as soon as he waved us on, we go. We get to him. He was maybe 50 yards ahead of us, in front of us. On West Street I get to him and he says, "Look at the building, Lou. The other one collapsed, and this one is collapsing." He showed me, about 20 stories up you see a crack in the building. I look, "Holy shit, the other building's gone."

I said, "Get the fuck to the rig." We run to the rig. I'm with two other guys, Richie Carletti and Tommy Lynn. They came in their cars. Before that I'm down two guys, Gorman and Manny Delvalle. Now I'm back up to five. I've got two stragglers.

[redacted]

So we get to I think either Warren Street or Chambers Street. I think it was Warren. We made a right on Warren, got out. We've got all the dust and crap all over us from the other collapse. I just wanted to get my bearings straight, give a little thought, because there was no command structure. There was nothing. Nobody can get on the radio. The fucking radio was useless.

We get out. Mike Butler, chief of fire prevention, comes to me and says, "Look, Lou, I don't have a radio. My radio is dead. Can I have yours?" "Here you go." I ain't going back there. As soon as he got that, we walked maybe half a block, and that's when the building pancakes down.

Then the smoke and the shock wave comes up one street. We run. We hide behind C.U.N.Y., you know, the college there? There's like a big wall that sticks out. We hide behind there. The smoke and the dust and all the crap is outside the rig. The rig was stopped up.

We get back on the rig, and the rig was full of dust. I told my chauffeur, "John, I want to make a 360 survey to see what the hell we've got." I don't know what the hell we've got. I can't see shit down that way.

We go all around to Broadway and go up Broadway and turn right and it's like a frigging war zone. We go up to about Thames Street, and we find a hydrant that worked. We hooked up. I said, "You know what, we're going to have to relay water to somebody. We've got to get water on this place. I'll go check it out."

He gets water. He ends up relaying to 247 Engine from Brooklyn. They were operating. We walked up all the way to Church Street up here, Thames Street. We walked up Broadway it seemed about -- I can't even see these streets. Liberty, Cortlandt. I can't even see Liberty here. Right here, Broadway and Thames or Cedar, right around here, that's where we find a hydrant.

We pumped this way and this way, up this way. We go walking up Church, and we go to Dey Street. I found Engine 252's rig destroyed. I found 41 Engine's rig.

Q. Destroyed?

A. No that was good. That was good.

Five World Trade, this building here, was fully involved. You don't realize even then where things stood. I said let's go and maybe put out the fire. That's what we did. We got water. We hooked up to the gravity tank of one of these buildings here. We were getting like 80 to 100 pounds intake. So we stretched a line as far as the tower ladder here. We started getting water on the fire on this fucking building.

Q. Was that seven?

A. No, seven was here.

Q. Okay.

A. (Inaudible) that wasn't on fire.

Q. Right, yeah.

A. This was on fire. This one, we were worried about this. We started knocking this down.

[redacted]

We ended up pumping for two days. I heard that the water department shut off a lot of the mains because they were flooding the subways. They probably were.

That's basically it. We weren't in the building probably from 9 till, oh, after 10. We were in there for a while. It took us a while to get down the stairs too. It took us probably -- I left when the first building collapsed, and we got out probably five minutes before the second building collapsed. (Inaudible.)

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ALBERT BARRY

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: The time is 1200 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

FIREFIGHTER BARRY: Firefighter Albert Barry, Engine 65, third grade.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: The interview is being conducted at the quarters of Engine 65, and it's regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Okay, Al, do you want to give your story?

A. Okay. We got the call at 9 a.m., third due on the fifth alarm. We rolled up to West Street and Vesey where our chauffeur let us off. We grabbed the rollups, an extra bottle, and proceeded to the north tower and entered the lobby area through a broken window.

I believe we went up the A stairwell. It was pretty congested with civilians coming down. We kept telling the civilians to stay to the right, we're moving up to the left. We made it to about the 16th floor when the south tower collapsed.

We did not know that. This is all hindsight, of course. The only thing that I can recall that happened was there was a big whoosh of air that pushed from the south up to the north. The building moved a little bit, nothing out of the ordinary, I guess.

From there we made it to about the 20th floor when we heard a radio signal for a mayday to remove ourselves from there, the building was in eminent collapse. On our way down, the stairwell was pretty much fluid. We were sharing air with civilians.

Nobody that we came down with was injured in any way just some civilian was hyperventilating. There was, I recall, an older woman that was being carried down by some civilians in a chair. We told the civilians to put her down and we immediately took command of her, checked her vitals, and she was all right.

I helped carry her down a little bit. Then we passed her along to some other civilians who carried her down some more. It was a quicker pace because people were making room for her to come down.

I guess we got to about maybe the fifth floor, and the power was out. There was a bit of a smoky condition at that point. But everybody continued down. Nobody was running. It was very calm.

Once we made it to the lobby, (inaudible) seemed to be a triage set up in the lobby area. Our lieutenant said there's no need for us to be in here, let's make our way out the way we came in, and that's what we did. Once we came out the window, there was debris all over the place.

I've been told that Chief Al Turi was directing everybody to move north. He was screaming at the top of his lungs, "Go north!" with a megaphone in his hand, he wasn't even using the megaphone.

We took a few steps out, turned around, and the north tower was coming down. It was coming down on our back. That's when we just started running up, and at that point 65 Engine got separated.

I made it through the smoke, through the debris, once everything cleared. Being that 65 Engine was separated, once we made it up to Stuyvesant High School, that's when everybody was pulled back together. 65 Engine was brought together again.

That's about it, the long and short of it.

Q. Okay. I just have a couple questions.

A. Go ahead.

Q. Did they give you a specific task? In other words, when you came in, did they tell you to go to the 30th floor or the 50th floor?

A. Yes, there was a chief, I guess it was at the staging area. There was basically just one chief standing there saying, "All right, you guys make your way up to the north tower." I don't know --

Q. He didn't tell you to go to the 30th floor or the 50th floor?

A. No. He just said make your way up to the north tower. That was it. We got our rollups and gear and everything else and that's it. That's about it, then.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER STEVEN ROGERS

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 9, 2002. The time is 2050 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER ROGERS: Firefighter Steve Rogers, Ladder 1.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York. We're doing this interview at the location of Ladder 1's quarters regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Steve, if you would just tell us what happened that day.

A. On September 11th I was on Staten Island. I heard it on my car radio that the World Trade Center was hit by a plane. Immediately began making my way into the city. I got there rather quickly. On the way here I heard the second plane had hit. Right before I got in my truck, they said that the top of tower two had collapsed.

I entered the firehouse here, Ladder 1, and began to put on my gear, get on my gear that I would need. I met two other firefighters, Kirk Pritchard and John McConnachie from this house, Ladder 1. We all suited up.

Before we left, the lieutenant that was here wanted to set up a triage center at the firehouse for the injured civilians that were in the street, so we pulled up all the equipment from the basement, all the C.F.R.D. equipment, stokes baskets, all the stuff he thought we would need.

There was a couple doctors available from across the street that came in. At that point we left them here to run a triage center, the lieutenant and the doctors. We jumped in my truck, the three of us. Actually there was a film maker there, a French film maker that was filming that day.

We proceeded to go down Church Street the wrong way with my truck. At this point I believe there was a lot of debris on the street a lot of dust and papers from the collapses of Two. As we made the turn, we passed the mayor and the police commissioner. We told them a triage center was at the firehouse. If they needed to go to the triage center. They said thank you, and we continued down the street further.

I parked my truck approximately on the corner of Warren and Church and got out and suited up and continued walking down Church Street towards Vesey, where we had seen multiple civilians injured and hurt but ambulatory. They were walking. We directed them to ambulances that were parked on Church Street, and we continued down.

We made a right on Vesey going towards West Street. At that point I saw a guy from 4 Engine, Bob Humphreys, and I asked him what kind of equipment he had in his rig, masks and stuff. He said his was already stripped.

So we continued to work our way down Vesey. Each rig we came across we stopped and checked for masks and tools that we needed. We continued down towards West Street. When we got to the corner of West and Vesey, tower one began to collapse. We ran wherever we could. I ran north by the corner of Vesey, and I was already getting hit with stuff.

The other fellow, other firefighter, John McConnachie, went the same direction I went; the other firefighters didn't. They stayed close to the building, which was World Trade Center Six. We were basically getting hit with all kinds of stuff. (Inaudible), black, dark.

Then we just tried to get our bearings. It was a good -- it felt like an hour but probably 10 minutes, 15 minutes of darkness. We heard people yelling for help. It took us a while before we could get our bearings and find each other after it cleared up to where we could work our way back to (inaudible).

I found one guy, John McConnachie. The other firefighter, Pritchard, they were putting in an ambulance. He was hit in the back with something. He might have a fractured back.

At that point it was very quiet. There was only like two or three of us there. There was no one around, no injured people. The rigs were on fire. There were people coming up one at a time (inaudible) it was going to come. A fireman here, a fireman there, a police officer.

I understand they were working on the mezzanine of six. There was a five-story, four-story mezzanine level, and ^ INAUDIBLE. I believe a fireman from Ladder 1, John, we found. We got 12 Truck -- we moved 12 Truck into position to set up the tower to bring people down.

We had help from Engine 1. That was the engine that had the stokes that we brought down with the tower ladder. We operated back and forth with the tower ladder for a half hour or so.

At that point there were a lot of firemen that started to come, older firemen, and from the recall. I got relieved by another chauffeur. I forget what company; maybe from 12 Truck. We came back and we were going to try to put some fires out because there were fires burning. Rigs were burning, underneath the rigs. We checked for engines that were operational, hydrants. We did that for about another hour or two.

Then I was feeling shitty, so I came back to the firehouse. I went to St. Vincent's probably around 3:00. I had a cut on my hand and trouble breathing.

Q. You know what I wanted to ask you, did you see anything, Stevie? Like when you got there, did you look at the buildings at all? Was there cracking? Was there an indication that it was going to come down before it came down?

A. I honestly -- I don't remember. I really didn't see it. Number two was totally collapsed. When I looked up, all I saw was a lot of smoke from the fires and stuff. So you really couldn't see the top of the buildings very well. (Inaudible) from the jumpers. I really couldn't see structurally how it collapsed. There was just too much fire and smoke.

Q. How did you know it was collapsing? Did you hear the noise?

A. The noise immediately -- as soon as I heard it, we knew it was coming down. It wasn't like, oh, what the hell is that? It was like a noise you never hear in your whole life. It came down. I only ran like five feet when I got hit with stuff. I had to cover up. It wasn't like you could run three blocks before you were hit with stuff. It was a matter of feet. There was debris everywhere.

Basically we could have definitely gotten killed because it was all around us.

Q. You know what I think that I found is that guys that were like on the corner of the building got less stuff on them than guys were like --

A. Directly in front.

Q. Yeah, directly in front and on the sides. It seemed like the corner kind of --

A. Kept it --

Q. It went four ways but it didn't come towards the corner, which is something you always expect from a collapse. But that really seems to have been -- the command post was right across West Street, and that got buried.

A. Right. It was directly across.

Q. So you figured that side went that way; this one went this way. But if you were in this area here, a lot of guys seemed to have made it out.

A. Well, you saw the chit; right? The chief that gave the original alarm, the third alarm, was inside. The third alarm said report to West and Vesey to the staging area. If they had made that the command post, that would have been -- everybody at the command post would have been gone.

Q. Right.

A. That's where I was.

Q. Probably what they did, I think, was they may have moved it down when the second tower was hit. Maybe they started out there. Then when the second tower was hit, they may have moved here.

A. They had the one inside the building and the one --

Q. They needed one outside.

A. When it collapsed, they moved it to the opposite building, and then they got hit with the second collapse. They survived one collapse, and then they got it.

You're lucky. I'm been on the job 16 years. Every time you've got a tower job, and the chiefs are looking. They say move it out of the way. They set their command post up at around 10 o'clock.

Q. The area of the collapse zone would have been to Canal Street. Right. If it would have come down the way we expected it to come down, God knows how many people would have been killed.

A. We were in the collapse zone.

Q. We're probably lucky that it came down the way it came down.

A. Oh, yeah, definitely.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOSEPH CASALIGGI

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's is January 9th, 2002. The time is 1430 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER CASALIGGI: Joseph Cassaliggi, firefighter third grade, Engine 7.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Who is assigned to the New York City Fire Department. We're conducting an interview at the quarters of Engine 7 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Joe, if you would please state what happened.

A. On the morning of September 11th we were operating a box up on Church Street Near Canal. There was an odor of gas in the area. While we were out operating, we heard the first plane coming in. I turned around and I watched the plane crash into the north tower.

I got back on the rig. We raced down there. We were actually one of the first companies on the scene. We pulled up right in front of One World Trade Center, right into the cul-de-sac right in front of the canopy.

So we got off the rig. I noticed there were several people sitting in the grass in front of the building burned head to toe, gray, just staring at us. The captain ordered us to grab four rollups. We went into the building. We went into the lobby.

The lobby actually looked like the plane hit the lobby. From what I understand, I was told afterwards, that a fireball shot down the elevator shaft and blew out all the windows in the lobby and blew out the elevator doors.

We searched for an elevator to see if there was one operating. There was none. The captain said we were going to walk up the stairs. At that point my mask had started leaking air from the high pressure coupling, and I had to go out and change my cylinder.

I left my rollup and my standpipe kit in the lobby. I went outside to the rig, changed the cylinder. While I was changing the cylinder,

I was keeping an eye because the chauffeur was hooking up to the standpipe. I was keeping an eye, making sure he didn't get hit with anything.

It was at that time when I saw the second plane hit the building. I called a mayday. I told them the second plane hit the south tower of the building. I wasn't sure which floors it was, but I knew it hit the upper floors of the south tower.

Debris was falling, body parts were falling. We ducked for cover inside Engine 7, but the rig was getting bombarded with debris from the building, debris from the plane. We saw bodies crash landing right next to the rig. So we couldn't stay there.

We abandoned Engine 7, and we headed north. We couldn't make it back into the building at that point. We headed north. We got up to Vesey Street. We stayed on Vesey for a little while. Another firefighter had come over asking us if we had a radio. So the Engine 7 chauffeur gave him his radio, and I was control so I had mine.

I radioed the Engine 7 captain, did he want me to stay with the chauffeur or did he want me to meet him in the building, because the Engine 7 chauffeur didn't have a radio. His response came in broken up. I thought he said give him my radio and meet him on the 15th floor. I found out later he said don't give him the radio and meet him on the 15th floor.

So I gave the chauffeur my radio, and I went into the building. I saw Chief Pfeifer. I told him, "I don't have a radio. I'm going up to meet Engine 7 on the 15th floor." He told me I wasn't going up if I didn't have a radio and I didn't have a partner.

I stayed in the lobby. I didn't know at that point if he was getting me a partner or if he was getting -- I thought I was going to stay there, I wasn't going up. I didn't know what I was doing at that point.

So I stayed around, waiting to be told what to do. I was in the lobby for about 40 minutes. Finally I took Chief Pfeifer aside again and I said, "Chief, if you're not going to send me up, I'm going to go out by the rig and I'm going to help the chauffeur." He told me a good idea, go out and stay with the chauffeur.

I stood by the blown out windows. I was looking for clearance, trying to get somebody's attention to tell me that I wasn't going to get hit with something as I was running out. I couldn't get anybody's attention in the street.

I saw another body crash down through the canopy. At that I just said screw this and I just ran. I ran to the street, just hoping I wasn't getting hit.

I met up with the Engine 7 chauffeur. We stayed together at least for a few minutes more. They were trying to clear the area. So we were getting pushed back up to Vesey. I think we got as far as almost Barclay.

As I was leaving the building, I heard them at the command post talking about moving the command post to the other side of West Street. I suggested to the chauffeur we make our way back to the command post, let somebody know who we are and where we are and that we're okay.

So we started making our way back. When we were about -- we were on the opposite side of West Street now on the west side, making our way down. As we were standing underneath the foot bridge that connects Three World Financial Center to the World Trade Center. We were standing under there, and we watched -- throughout the whole time being outside, we must have watched 50, 60 people jump.

I was watching one guy hang onto the outside of the building, the outside of the north tower while I was standing under the bridge. Then there were police officers talking about a third plane coming into the area.

Then a few minutes passed. I was standing under the bridge. We had heard a loud rumble, and people just started running in our direction from the Trade Center toward us. I never even looked up. We just turned around and started running. It was me, the chauffeur, and there were two plain clothes cops running next to us.

We just started running for the Financial Center. I saw a Fire Department lieutenant in the Financial Center. He was holding the door open for us. He yelled to us to get down, we weren't going to make. I guess I don't know what I was running from.

We grabbed the two cops, threw them on the ground behind one of the support columns for the pedestrian bridge and just dove on top of them. We got hit with the debris from the building. It felt like I got hit by a car. It knocked the wind out of me.

Gasping for air, I got a mouth full of dirt. I spit that out. I gasped again and got another mouthful of dirt. My mask was on. I had it turned on. My face piece was swinging behind me. It was an effort to reach back to grab my face piece. I held it up to my face and purged it.

After that I got a little bit of air from that. I couldn't even give any of it to the chauffeur or to the two cops. I just kind of held it in front of my face.

Everything just got deadly silent. I opened my eyes, I couldn't see a thing. I leaned up. I kind of sat up, so I knew I wasn't pinned under anything. I didn't know what happened. I thought a plane hit the Financial Center and part of the building came down. I really didn't know what happened at this point.

I sat up, and I thought to myself, okay, I'm not pinned. We're just underneath something and they have to find us. I made sure the other three guys that were with me were okay. The officer that had seen us duck yelled to us, "Is everybody okay?" We yelled back, "Yeah. How do we get out of here?" He came in and got us, took us out through the back of the Financial Center.

At that point somebody handed me a bottle of water, gave me some oxygen. My chest was killing me. I was having difficulty breathing. I found an ambulance, got into an ambulance. They were going to take me to the hospital.

We tried radioing Engine 7. We couldn't get them on the radio. We weren't getting any transmissions on the radio at that point. We couldn't hear anything. So we didn't know what happened. We tried raising Engine 7. Nothing.

I got into an ambulance. I told the chauffeur I was going the hospital. I suggested he come with me, but he stayed. We got separated at that point. I was in the ambulance. We got a few blocks, and the ambulance got stuck in gridlock. We sat there for a few minutes.

Finally the driver of the ambulance turned around in this little window and just yelled to the back and told everybody to get out and start running. I popped open the back door of the ambulance, and there was a crowd of people running in the direction the ambulance was facing.

I jumped out, and I just ran with the pack. I didn't know where I was running. We ended up by the water a block north of Chambers, at Stuyvesant High School and the elementary school there. I ended up by the water. Then everything calmed down again.

I figured, okay, let me figure out where I am. Now I have no radio. I have to figure out where I am, where I've got to be, just get my bearings. So I looked up, because when you're in downtown Manhattan and need to get your bearings you look for the Trade Center.

I looked up and I'm looking around and saying where am I, but I can't even see the towers. I didn't know what happened at this point. A person was walking past me talking to somebody else. I just overheard him say, "I can't believe they fell."

As he was saying that, I'm looking at the spot where the towers should have been, and I realized I saw the outlines of the other buildings. That's when I realized and I thought everybody in my company was dead. I'm the only one. I don't know where the chauffeur is, but we're the only ones that made it.

I wandered around West Street for a while trying to find a radio. I was jumping in rigs and trying to find a fireman, and I couldn't find anybody. Finally I found a fireman from I think it was Engine 5. He said he thought he had a heart attack and had just came out. He was sitting on the curb. He didn't have a radio either. I figured the two of us will stay together, and we'll find an ambulance, we'll get to the hospital.

I must have passed 50 people and said,

"Will you let somebody downtown know" -- I gave them my name and my company and said, "Let somebody downtown know where I am and that I'm okay and that I was taken to the hospital." I got into an ambulance and ended up at Cabrini Medical Center. I stayed there for about six hours, maybe a little less than six hours.

I got back to the firehouse. A police sergeant offered to give me a ride back down to the firehouse after I was released from Cabrini. I got back to the firehouse about 3:00 in the afternoon. They told me that they were looking for me and the chauffeur, that we were the only two from the company not accounted for.

Q. All the other guys got out?

A. Yeah, everybody from our company -- I don't know how. That's when I heard that Engine 7 got up to the 30th, 35th floor, somewhere in there, and they had gotten out just before the building came down, before the north tower came down.

Basically --

Q. That's it?

A. Basically that's it. That's what I remember.

Q. Anything you want to add?

A. Just that I've had a cough since then.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF BRIAN O'FLAHERTY

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is January 9th, 2002. The time is approximately 1140 hours. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes, New York City Fire Department, Safety Command. I'm here interviewing Battalion Chief Brian O'Flaherty of the Safety Operating Battalion regarding the events that occurred on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Brian, if you would, just start us off I guess when you got the note, when you saw the towers and then as the events unfolded for you that day.

A. I was in quarters. I had gone in the conference room, and I was typing up an interview from the Astoria Boulevard fire, and one of the guys from the marine unit, Eddie Mauro, came in the room and said, "Chief, you have to see the fire in the World Trade Center." I said, "Now?" He said, "Yeah, right now. You've go to see it. It's unbelievable."

We left the room, walked into the kitchen. As you walk in the marine division kitchen, you look out the window over the East River and you could see real heavy smoke pushing out of the north tower upper portion of the building, heavy smoke. I didn't see any fire; heavy smoke.

[redacted]

At one point I guess Mike gave me the binoculars. I looked through. You could see them coming out. You could only see two sides of the building. Just around that time, I handed the binoculars back after seeing a few people jump, and I heard the dispatcher calling the 1st Division and telling them they had reports that people had jumped from the building or were jumping from the building. But it was a casual report.

I wanted to get to the phone to just tell the Manhattan dispatcher to tell the division that -- I asked Mike -- we had seen, I figured, a couple dozen people, two or three dozen people. We only saw two sides of the building. I wanted to tell the dispatcher, let the division know, this wasn't just one or two people jumping; this was a real problem. They could land on your head and kill somebody coming out from a hundred stories up.

I just dialed the Manhattan dispatcher. The noise in the kitchen area was too much to hear, so I just stepped through the weight room, closed the door. I identified myself and started to tell them about how many jumpers, let the division know.

Just then out of the corner of my eye, I could see this plane. I just remember the dark. It was in the shadow. It looked low. I thought, "What the heck is the guy doing?" I watched it, watched him turn and crash right into the south tower. Right away I knew it was terrorism or terrorists. I didn't know what the first one was, but I knew what the second one was.

I had the dispatcher on the phone. I said, "Stop talking about the jumpers. We just had a plane go into the south tower, another plane." He said he saw it, I assume on television. We both hung up the phone. That was the end of the conversation.

I came back out from the weight room into the kitchen, hung up the phone. Now it was noisy. These guys had all seen it. The television was on at that time. Maybe they were starting to play replays. I think shortly after they played one replay. Everybody knew it was terrorism.

Just then Larry had walked into the kitchen, Larry Stack, and said, "Wow, these guys have their hands full. What do you think, boys? Should we go give them a hand?" We just talked about that. Everybody said yeah. We turned around. It was Brian Meyers, Mike Telesca, Larry Stack and myself, and everybody decided get dressed, get ready.

I remember Larry telling Brian to get the car ready, put turnout gear in it, hand lights, any radios, whatever we could find. Battalion had already responded. We were right there. Mike was going to work on I think the Gorumba case. He had held Meyers to work over with Telesca. Larry and I were going to work on Astoria Boulevard.

So we got everything together, and we decided -- we grabbed some notepads. We grabbed a bunch of boxes of gloves, the blue ones for blood-borne pathogens. We grabbed gloves, went downstairs. Brian had asked what car to take. I said, "Let's take the red and white." We had the two cars, the red and white or the blue. I said, "because at least it's got the lights on the roof."

We went downstairs, and Brian had all the stuff in the car. We left the Navy Yard and started heading over. We only had one radio. We had one radio, maybe three hand lights. That's all the stuff we could find. I remember in the car ride over Larry kept saying, "We only have the one radio. Everybody stick together until we find a command post, tell them what's going on."

We came out of the Navy Yard, down Flushing. We weren't sure what bridge, but as we look we could see the Manhattan Bridge. There was no traffic on it. So we said we'll take the Manhattan Bridge. We went over the Manhattan.

From the top of the bridge, you had a pretty good view of both the buildings, heavy smoke coming out. The south tower you could see fire and smoke. The north tower was still just sort of heavy smoke.

We cut down by Police Plaza, by City Hall and around the end of City Hall Park. We went west and got to Church Street. Now the traffic was getting bad, because now there was a lot of people walking from the scene. We saw a lot of vehicles to the left, so we went south on Church. We stopped just around the post office before you get to Vesey. It was all blocked up.

I got out of the car, and I told Larry I saw an FBI agent and I was going to start talking to him. I gave him my card, and he gave me a card. I said I thought that that second plane that went into the south tower was a military plane, like a transport or small cargo military.

The reason I thought that, I found out later, the sun never shined off it. It was a dark-color plane. It ended up, I found out later, it was why. It was United Airlines. They paint their planes a dull gray and blue. I didn't see any shine off the plane when it went from dark to sun.

I just gave him cards. I left, turned around and said, "Where the heck did they go?" I couldn't see the car. I realized they had crossed over Vesey, and the car was right over there. There was a subway entrance on the west side of the street right by the cemetery.

Q. Church?

A. Yeah. The car was right up there, right by the entrance to the subway. Brian might have even have jumped part of the curb. They were getting the stuff out of the trunk. We were all getting dressed, putting our turnout gear on, full turnout, bunker gear, helmets, a couple lights, the pads and stuff. Larry again said, "We've got to stay together until we get to the command post."

I looked up, and there was debris coming down, papers, I know, papers all over the air. We looked at each other, the command post, where is it going to be? It's going to be on West Street, someplace around the area where it was during the bombing.

How are we going to get down? We knew people were coming out of the north tower. There was all this debris. I looked across the street, and I knew we could go down like you go into the subway, right down to the concourse. So we did. We went in off Church, in the door, down one flight of stairs to the concourse level. I just know how to go from working in rescue and working the 1st Division when I was in the union.

We cut across the concourse. The lights were on. I remember the lights in the stores were still on in the concourse. Not all the lights, not all the lights in the hallway, but the lights in some of the stores were still on. I saw that.

I started cutting across. Just about the time you could see -- now you get to the area where all the escalators come up from the PATH line. That's on our right. Now it's dark. There were no more lights in the hallways.

Just before you get there, I looked to the left. There's a hallway where there's an entrance to go to the south tower. I could look to the south. You could see figures of people, firemen or helmets, in the south tower. It's the lobby of the south tower. It's too far to see anybody.

Just from passing where the PATH escalators come up on the right, there was an engine company. It's a Brooklyn company. I just remember three numbers. They came up and said, "Chief, how do you get to the south tower?" I said, "Go up a ways. You'll see a sign to the right. Just make a right. You'll go to the south tower."

Just after we passed them, we walked up, and the sprinklers are going off. You could see the sprinklers going off. I think it was Larry that said, "That's a good sign." Of course now we know that wasn't. That was the water draining out of the system. The sprinklers were going off in that concourse level. In the area of the south tower, all the sprinklers were going off.

We cut in. When you go into the lobby at that area, that's not the lobby of the building; that's like that street-level lobby.

The command post level lobby is higher. That's in the north tower.

I don't know, I was just looking a little bit. Larry said it before I saw it. He said, "Holy shit." All of those fixed windows in the lobby were blown out. They were gone. He said it, and I was looking at it. He said, "We can't go out there." I don't remember why -- I knew why.

Q. The lobby of the hotel there?

A. No, the lobby of tower one, the north tower. We walked in the lobby. The long, fixed windows are blown out.

As soon as Larry says it -- I'm looking at the windows, and Larry says, "We can't go out there." I knew in my mind why, the debris coming down or people coming down. As soon as he said it, there was no doubt.

I quick looked to my left, because I know from '93 in that other incident, the bombing -- I looked to my left, and I could see there's four doors out of the south end of the lobby that go into the hotel. They're not really greatly marked, but you go through those doors.

I said, "We'll go this way." I said something about the hotel. [redacted]

When we first go through those doors, it's dark in there. There's no lights, and the hallway is dark. We're walking through. As we're going through, you could see light at the other end. I'm walking through, and I could see these concrete columns, big concrete columns, three feet, maybe even larger than that, maybe up to four feet in diameter. I just made note of it.

Then as you come out of that, there's a circular area. It's like a rotunda. I remember the ceiling was higher there. The columns were all around that, all around the walls. Again, I said they weren't there in '93, those towers. I just said in the back of my mind they must have put those things in when they rebuilt this place, because that's about the area where the bomb went off.

At the end where those columns were and then -- the columns ended, and just before you walked into the lobby -- we were looking toward the lobby, and I could see the glass windows, see the high ceiling of the lobby.

I could see a bunch of people, Fire Department chief -- I could see back of the coat "Deputy Chief Galvin," so I know it's Tommy Galvin from the 3rd Division. His back is to us. The rest of the people are facing us.

I don't know if I say something to Larry or just point to him. In my mind the intention was to go over and see Galvin and find out where the command post was, exactly where the command post was.

As we were walking towards him, about, I'd say, six to eight feet from Galvin, and a lot of guys are looking at him, but the one guy, Freddie Scheffold from the 12th Battalion, he looked at me, I looked at him. You know how you make eye contact with somebody and you acknowledge each other, it's just that nod, I know he sees me, at that exact moment I can feel -- or hear the noise first. I hear a noise. Right after that noise, you could feel the building start to shudder, tremble, under your feet.

Somebody said to me, "What's going on?" I said, "What's going on? The fucking building -- the goddamn building is coming down." I actually said, "The fucking building is coming down. This goddamn building is coming down." I knew what was coming down. The building I was in was coming down.

I looked real quick forward. I didn't like that option because it was a big, high lobby, a lot of glass. I figured it was not that well supported. I remember seeing those columns. Whoever was next to me -- I thought it was Telesca, but it ended up being Myers, Brian Myers. He said, "Where are we going?" I turned and said, "We're going back to those columns."

I remember taking a few steps and trying to run, and you're either thrown or blown off your feet. I remember I ended up my face was right up against the wall, a column was right near my left shoulder, a big column. That's it.

It was a terrible noise. Besides the building shuddering, the sound was horrendous. To me it sounded like steel cutting through steel. That's how I explain it. You're laying there. There's stuff hitting you. I had my right hand up behind my head and neck, and I just said let it be merciful, because you think it's all over. There's stuff hitting you but nothing -- the stuff is debris flying around.

Q. Nothing --

A. Nothing hits you. The next thing you --

Q. Somebody compared it to as pelting you.

A. Yeah, but it wasn't heavy.

Q. No.

A. It was like stone, stuff hitting you and everything. I thought it was ceiling tiles, the suspended ceiling and shit like that.

All of a sudden the noise stops. There's no more shaking. Later after a couple seconds, you listen. My hearing is not great, but I think it's pretty acute at this point. I'm really listening. I don't hear anything else going on, it's all right.

I was just ready to say something or try to get up. Actually I think I tried to push myself up a little bit, and right away I know my left shoulder, my arm, is hurting. I laid there for a couple seconds. Then I hear somebody cough behind me.

As soon as I hear somebody cough, I yell, "Who is that?" Again, I always think it's Telesca, but it's not; it's Myers. I said, "Who's that?" He recognizes my voice. "Chief, where are you?" I could hear his voice. I know he's behind me.

I have my hand light, the chief's hand light. I knew it was on. I could see it was on. I put it up over my head. It was dusty. I started moving the light. "Can you see the light?" He said, "No, I don't see the light." "What the hell's going on?" I couldn't figure if it was debris or just the dust.

I said, "I'll keep moving the light." I do it a few more times. He said, "Oh, I see you now. I'll be right there." In a real short time, he's next to me. I said, "You've got to help me get up," because I couldn't push myself up. I tried to push myself up. I wouldn't put pressure on my shoulder. He helps me up to my knees.

As soon as I get to my knees, I realize my helmet's missing. I said, "Do me a favor. My helmet's got to be right here. Just find my helmet. My glasses are gone." He said, "I don't have a light." I hand him the light. I just stayed there kneeling, feeling around a little bit. He wasn't gone long. When he was back, he gave me my helmet. I said "Thanks," because I was afraid something now was going fall and hit me in the head and kill me.

He gets me up to my feet. He said, "What the hell happened?" We turn around, and maybe, again, six, eight feet behind from where we left -- I don't think we traveled -- it was floor to ceiling debris. It was just solid, from as high up as I can look, which is pretty high at this point. It's floor to ceiling debris. I'm looking at that.

I think Brian hears it first, these voices, before I do. I was looking at the debris and looking around at the light. He gave me the light back. I think he yells, and I don't know if it was Telesca or Larry -- no, I think Larry answered. We start to move towards him.

I could hear some guy yelling, "Mayday, mayday," on the radio, handy talky, "There's been a collapse. We're trapped." I looked. It was Eddie Henry from the 40 Battalion. I recognized him. He was yelling.

We get to Larry. By the time we get to Larry, the next thing I know, all four of us are there: Larry's there, Mike Telesca, Brian and myself.

I think Larry said something about -- because nobody was answering Henry. He said something like "Nobody's answering. You should knock it off." I said, "Larry, let him yell. Maybe somebody will hear him. Nobody knows we're here."

Larry turned one way, I turned another, and there was a lieutenant there. There was a whole bunch of debris. I remember him saying, "Hey, Chief, Chief, there's a guy trapped in here." He disappears through a small hole in the debris. I tried to follow him. As soon as I tried to follow him, that stuff hit my left shoulder. It was like, whew, stop, don't attempt that again.

I back up, and Larry is coming again. Larry said, "What's up?" I said, "Larry, this guy says he's got a guy in here trapped." I told the guy, I said, "I can't get through there." I turned around and I said, "Just keep talking to the guy. Find out his name," you know, all that stuff.

I turn around, and Larry is behind me. He said, "What's going on?" I said, "There's a guy in there trapped." I said, "I tried to get through. I can't. I hurt my arm, and I can't get through." He said, "All right. Let me go."

I said, "If you're going through there, we trade lights." I remember he had the fireman's light. He had a hand light. I had the big chief light. I said, "Here, take that light. You go through there. I'm going to go" -- as soon as I said "Go," he said, "Whoa, whoa, we've got to stay together." I said, "Larry, we're still fucking trapped in this building." I said, "You try to get the guy out. I'm going to go back the way we came in and see if we can get a way out." I said, "But I'll come back to you. If you find the guy, come to me. That's what we'll do."

I leave. It's collapsing. When I get away from this area in this hallway again, it's like a lean-to. But just before I get to the hallway, I find a door. I open the door. It's a storage room. I quick look in. There's no outlets.

I remember feeling cold air. I thought in the back of my mind "Close the door." If you stay to the left, you can bend over and walk up this hallway. Down to the right where it's like a lean-to, you have to crawl. I stayed along the wall. I go along.

All of a sudden there's this guy yelling, and there's a door open and it's a civilian. I asked who he is, and he says something about hotel security. He said, "I've got a door. I think it's an exit." I said, "Where does it go?" He said, "Down." I said, "Down where?" He said, "Well, I think you have to go down one or two flights."

I said, "Whoa, we're not going down anyplace." He said, "Give me a light." I said, "Nice fucking try. You're not getting my light either." I said, "Stay here. We're not going changing levels. We have other people at this level. We're going to leave together."

Then I continue up. I go up and find where we came in, but the rolled-up gates come down and they're solid, metal. I have no radio. So I take the hand light, and I bang on the door. I bang on the gate. I wait, hoping somebody will answer.

A little while, nothing. I banged some more. I did that like three or four times. I realized there's nobody answering on the other side, and I can't keep staying here. I don't have the radio. I don't remember who had the radio. I think Larry had it. I'm not sure. I had no radio. You can't hear anything.

After three or four times banging, I said this is no good. I start to turn back to go back towards where Larry and everybody was. But as I go back, I noticed a door on my right I didn't see on the way out, because I was focused on those gates.

I opened that door up. It might have said exit on it -- I'm not sure -- or a light. I opened the door. Ten feet in, there's another door. I quick open that one, go to the next one, and there's a third door. I said "Oops, this is no good." Too many doors. I go back.

Just as I go back, there's a civilian, and I don't know if it's the same guy I met the first time or not. Again, civilian clothes. I said, "You stay by this first door. You keep the door open. I'm going through the second door. There's another door. If I start yelling, you just yell." I didn't know if I was going through a maze or not -- "You just yell."

As soon as I opened the third door, there's a hole in the wall. I could see out onto West Street. This is a block wall, and the hole is about, I've got to say, four and a half to five feet off the ground. But you could see out. All you could see is the dust and debris at that point. I don't see anybody out there.

There's a door to the right. I opened that door. Then I could see a door that says exit, another door. I said screw this. I run back. Okay, I have a hole the wall. I have a door marked "exit." I run back. I start moving back. There are civilians there. I start yelling, "We have an exit here." I tell them, "You keep yelling."

Just then Ed Henry comes. He's the first guy that gets there. So he goes back with me. I tell the guy, "Keep yelling." The guy starts yelling, "Come this way. We have a way out. We have a way out."

I went back with Ed Henry. He gets to the opening in the wall. I remember he yells a couple of maydays on the radio. Again, he's frustrated because he's yelling and there's nobody answering.

I said, "Ed, there's a door there." We open that door. He goes down. He leaves me. He goes down, and I watch him. He pushes and opens eight inches or so and it won't move anymore. I said, "Shoot." I said, "There is still nobody there." I said, "I can't really help too much." I turned around and said I would put my back against the door, you push. It opens to maybe 12 inches, but it stops like dead. That's not going to work.

We go back. He's still yelling the mayday. I said, "Ed, use the hand light. Use the light." He's shaking it back and forth. In a few minutes he comes -- again, he's frustrated. Now more people are -- no, they're not there yet. I can hear the guy yelling. I can hear people coming.

Ed Henry gets a chair, and he climbs on this chair. I said, "Where are you going?" He said, "I'm going to go over the wall and see if I can get the door open." He's climbing up already.

I thought, "Oh, shit, he's got no helmet on." I said, "If you're going over the wall" -- and I give him my helmet. I'm afraid if he goes over the wall and something hits him in the fucking head he won't be able to open the door for us.

He no sooner goes over the door and disappears. He goes to the right. I can't see him anymore. I said to myself, "That wasn't smart, giving up your helmet." I knew why I did it.

The next thing I know, Larry's there. These two officers -- oh, Brian Myers is there.

I thought Mike was there, but he wasn't [redacted] I don't know what happened, but he wasn't there. I know now. But he wasn't with us. And the two guys.

The one guy said, "Who are you?" I said something about the guy that was trapped. Larry said, "Yeah. This is the guy. We have him." I said, "Where are you from? A company?" He said, "No. We're from rescue school. We shouldn't be here." I know I had a feeling we weren't supposed to be here either, because nobody knows we're here.

And there were a couple civilians. I think maybe in general between Ed Henry, his aide, Brian, I figured there was about ten people there at most. That's all that came from the area that survived.

I turn around, and I could see somebody with a white helmet walking, which to me looks like he's walking towards us. I keep watching. He's getting closer. I don't have my glasses. My glasses are gone. He's not too far away, and I realize it's Ray Downey.

Larry had talked to one of the civilians, and the guy had some kind of problem. I didn't know if he was hurt. I didn't know if he had a heart condition. I remember Larry saying this guy said he can't -- we're going to go out, if we have to go over the wall. This guy said something about he couldn't, he needed help.

Just then Ray came. I was talking to him. We were talking through the hole in the wall. He said, "You're not going to believe what happened. This guy has got to get out of here." Larry comes over. Larry's talking to him. I backed up a little bit. I think Larry or Ed, one of them, said, "Let's go. We've got to start getting out of here."

I turned first and said, "Larry, I'll stay here, because I'm going to have trouble." He said, "Knock it off. You're the first guy we're getting out of here because you can't take care of yourself."

We go over there, and I think he wants to lift me up. I see the chair there that Henry had pushed over to the side. I said, "Grab the chair and put it to the back, turn it backwards." I stood on the chair backwards, maybe stood on the back of the chair, and then Brian Myers and Larry boosted me up on the wall. I swung my legs around.

Ray is there and he wanted to grab me. I said, "No." I just put my right arm to his right shoulder, he put his arm up, and I slid down the wall. He kept saying to me, "Just walk away from the building as fast as you can and head towards Feehan and Ganci. Can you see them?" He pointed to them. I could see just two white helmets way across West Street, almost by the curb. I could see them.

I started to maneuver around. The sidewalk wasn't too bad with debris. There were a couple rigs there. I remember seeing 10 Truck. That's where the sidewalk comes in and curves in. That rig was partially turned in like that. I remember seeing the rig there.

I saw 10 on the ladder. I saw 10 Truck on the ladder. I walked behind that in front of a pumper. I decided to walk across West Street. There's all that dust like a moonscape. As you walk, every once in a while -- on dust, I didn't realize it then but what you're doing is the dust is covering that stainless steel. When you have stainless steel and dust, it's like a shuffleboard. When I got that quick movement, my arm would go, "Oh, don't do that fucking move anymore, stupid."

I'm moving across that. I'm trying to pick my way. It was pretty slow in the beginning. I see somebody with a black helmet coming from my right. I just tried to keep moving. I'm focused on those two white helmets. I keep going. I get across the street.

About a third of the way over, the guy with the black helmet comes. I don't realize who it was. I know now it was Al Fuentes, because we talked about it. I never realized. I guess I was so focused on getting to Ganci and Feehan.

He helps me about two-thirds of the way. After about two-thirds of the way across West Street, most of that debris stops. It's easier to maneuver. He leaves me.

I get to Ganci and Feehan. "Just tell them how many people there are. Who's there? Where were you? How many people survived?" I said there was about 10, maybe 11 people where we are. "Anybody buried?" I said there were two guys that we found. One guy was buried. One kid had dug himself out, one lieutenant, and the other guy, they went back with Larry and got out. I said that's the only two they said they heard, because they said there's nobody else they heard. All I saw was debris from floor to ceiling. We were just trapped in this little corner of the building I'll show you on the diagram later.

Okay. Ganci turns around and says to me, "Can you move on your own or do you need help?" I said, "No." He had his hands full. I said, "I'll move on my own." Just as I'm leaving, he said, "Where's Ray? Where are you guys?" I turn around, look back at the hotel. Again, you can't see -- I don't see clear without my glasses, but it's still dusty. I could see Ray's helmet. I could see the white helmet.

I said, "You see the helmet?" He said, "Where? Where?" I see it. It's right where the building bends almost in the hotel. I said, "Right there. That's Ray. Okay. Larry and them are on the inside of that wall." All right, he knows where they are now. He said, "You take off."

I think it was around then I opened my coat up and I stick my hand into the coat, close the coat up. I'm looking at debris. It's better to stay up on the sidewalk, on the sidewalk across the street, move along. Then at the point where the roadway moves in, it goes under where the bridge goes across.

At that point it clears up a little bit, and I move more to the right onto the street, off the sidewalk, move into the street. I get under the roadway --

Q. The pedestrian bridge?

A. The pedestrian bridge. I wanted to stop, because, one, I knew I was protected from debris coming down. But something in the back of my mind said, "Don't fucking stop because you're not going to stop moving." So I didn't stop.

I walked a little bit further. If I had to guess, it would have been a tower ladder I saw. I saw Rescue 1's rig on my right. I remember seeing it. It wasn't really damaged, nothing from the first collapse. It had a lot of dust all over it. I saw it there. Nobody by the rig.

Just passing that, I'm walking. I think there's a tower ladder to my right. I saw a guy walking. It's Joe Angelini from Rescue 1. I do a double-take, because he didn't have a Rescue 1 helmet on. He had bunker gear and everything else on.

I said, "Joe, did you see Rescue 1?" He said, "No, I'm trying to find it." I didn't realize he had been on light duty and came from SOC over at the TAC unit. I said, "How much further is Vesey Street?" because that's what Pete told me. Pete said, "Get to Vesey Street, and there's ambulances there. I said, all right, that's where I'm trying to get to.

Joey said, "You will see the collapse units parked up there." It wasn't that much further. I remember seeing Rescue's 3 collapse rig. I remember seeing the Volvo on the front. The Volvo cab was facing West. That was the rig -- I walked in front of it.

I went up there, looked around, and I saw no ambulances. I saw a lot of people around. I remember seeing somebody in a white helmet. I don't think it was one of ours. It could have been EMS, just because I don't recognize who it was.

I remember asking the question, "Where are the ambulances?" Somebody said, "Oh, two or three more blocks." My famous quote is "You've got to be fucking kidding me" at this point because I made it this far and two or three more blocks at this point doesn't seem like an option.

Somebody off to my left, I don't know if he touched me on the shoulder or I heard his voice. I turned a little bit to my left. He said, "Chief, you don't have to go there. Just go west. Go west." He's pointing. "Go west on Vesey. There's a triage area up there much closer."

I start walking west. I don't think I get more than 100 feet up past the curb line heading west on that street, and the first thing I hear is this roar and people screaming. I have a chance to look over my left shoulder.

As I'm looking over my left shoulder, I see a shadow coming towards me. I thought it was another plane. I didn't think the building was coming down. I thought it was another plane. I couldn't believe it.

I tried to run. I couldn't run. I moved as fast as I could. I knew there were people running past me; I could feel it. The next thing, you're again blown, thrown off your feet.

At this point now I'm trying to protect my left arm. I'm using my right arm to protect it. It's in the coat. I drove both my knees into the ground. I'm still not putting my hand out, and I smacked my face right into the ground. I bounced off the ground. Oh, shit. Look up. Just before it turns pitch-black, all I can remember seeing was blood all over the ground, laying there. The next thing it goes pitch-black. You can't see anything.

All I knew is there was a chain link fence right next to me. I tried to, again, turn my face, nose, over towards the fence a little bit. It didn't make a difference because within half a minute or so I couldn't breathe. There was blood in my nose, and all that concrete turned to like cement.

I got my hand over my head again. I can't even believe this is happening. This is the second. What is going on? I can't believe they didn't shoot the plane. I thought it was a plane. Why didn't they fucking shoot this plane out of the air.

I put my hand over my head. Again, I think it's all over. Let it be merciful a second time. I said this is unbelievable. I could feel things actually flying through the air. I can't hear them. I actually feel like pressure changing. I know there's shit flying through the air. I said something is going to whack me. This is going to be over. I'm laying there.

All of a sudden somebody again behind me -- I could feel them not far from my right foot. I can hear the voice, "I can't breathe. I've got to get up." I said, "Don't get up." First off, it's pitch-black. There's no way you can tell where you're going. Two, I feel these things flying through the air. This guy, "Let me get up," you're going to get fucking killed. I said, "Just stay on the ground, put your face to the ground and try to breathe the best you can.

Don't get up."

A couple minutes or so, I hear the guy saying the same thing. I said, "Don't get up. Just stay down." To me it seems like five minutes. I don't know, in the back of my mind, how long. But it's dark for a long time. It's hard to breathe. You could hardly even breathe.

The next thing you know, you could see off the ground a little bit of light. You see it just starting to lift. Okay. He said something, and I said, "Let it lift a little bit more." Just as it lifted a little bit more, he said, "I'm out of here." I said, "Whoa, whoa, you've got to do me a favor. You've got to help me get up," because I couldn't get up. I couldn't even move at this point.

Whoever it was, he came up -- I remember somebody grabbed the back of the coat, my turnout coat, helped me to my feet. I'm on my feet, and that's it, he finished his commitment. I see this guy gone. I think it's a civilian, only because the only thing I can really see is a guy with civilian clothes and a white shirt running, no turnout gear. He's gone.

I hobble out of there with two of my knees killing me and everything else. I hobble down the street. The first thing I see is I could see Louie Garcia. I could see the chain link fence, the lot on the right, and then there's a building up there.

I see Louis Garcia. I'm talking to him. He said, "Oh, God, Brian, you're alive." He told me to go inside, there's EMS in there. I go inside. It's like a deli or something, some kind of food establishment. EMS guys in there.

I was looking for water. I saw a cooler, and I said, "Give me water." I'm trying to drink it. I had these guys telling me, "Don't swallow it." "No shit, Sherlock, give me the fucking water." I was just trying to drink it, spit it out, drink it, spit it out. I can't breathe through my nose. I'm doing that.

Just then Louis comes back in, and Joe Callan. I remember Chief Callan sat right opposite me. I heard him say, "Oh, Brian, you're alive. Oh, my God, you're alive." I looked at him. He said, "I was with Father Mychal. He was right next to me. He's dead." [redacted]

[redacted]

An EMS guy came over because Garcia said something, he looked at a couple of things, he went to touch my arm. I remember him saying, "We've got to get him out of here. I can't treat him." I don't know if he came with me or he got somebody else. Two people walked me around the corner. We were going around this building to the harbor side, and that's where the triage area was.

They did a quick triage. They take me in the lobby. There was a captain or a chief EMS there. I said, "You've got to get this fucking triage -- you've got to move this area. It's too close." I'm thinking if this is another plane they can't -- in my mind now, there's another one coming behind it.

They triaged me. After a while I guess there's nobody coming in. One of the bosses came in and said, "Get all the firemen. Get them." Some man comes over and said they're going to put me in a chair stretcher. By now they had put a sling on my arm, a cravat type sling.

I got another bottle of water from some civilian, because I'm still trying to wash everything out. That was it. They put me in a ambulance.

There was a captain -- they were laying him down. They said, "We have to put more than one person in the ambulance." There aren't many ambulances there. I saw the jump seat. I said I wanted to sit up so I could control and hold my arm. So I went up in the front in the jump seat.

They said, "Chief, can you open your legs up? They put the gurney or the stretcher in, and there was a captain. I remember holding hands, talking. I remember him saying he was covering 22 Engine. I don't remember his name. He was under the bridge when the collapse occurred, and he thinks he's the only guy in his company that survived. I know they were talking about him having broken bones in at least the arm and leg on one side.

They put a couple more civilians in the bus. When the bus door was closing, I remember the guy saying, "Where are we going?" I heard them saying, "All firemen go to Bellevue, Bellevue." That was it.

Two things I left out earlier, or one thing, I guess. When I'm by Ganci, I can hear -- it's got to be on his radio, because I don't have a handy talky. I hear a guy giving a mayday, "Mayday, mayday, mayday." He identifies. He goes right through the whole procedure.

This is Ladder 4 O.V. identify yourself. Mike Brennan, a young guy I know. I don't think Pete answers him, but whoever answers the mayday, I hear they said, "Where are you?" Ladder 4, they were in the hotel -- I remember him saying that -- and he's trapped.

That's the point I'm leaving and Pete's telling me, "You get going. Head north to the area where the ambulances are."

That's really the only handy talky message I heard other than trying to give maydays earlier. All we had were the visuals.

Q. Yeah, sure.

A. That's it.

Q. With the map, where do you think the hole was?

A. What hole?

Q. That you came out of.

A. Oh.

Q. See where it says the World Trade Center three, Vista Hotel?

A. I don't know if it's the Vista anymore.

Q. No, it's the Vista International Marriott.

A. Marriott.

See where the bend is?

Q. Yeah.

A. It's past that bend, the end of the building.

Q. Right.

A. Maybe 10, 12 feet from the end of the building back towards that. It's on the flat section.

Q. You walked directly across to Two World Financial Center?

A. I probably moved diagonally a little. See where that red line is?

Q. Right.

A. Because, as I said, remember that's where that little bend is. I walked behind 10 Truck. 10 Truck is partially into that, nose in, because when you come off West, you can pull in.

Q. Right.

A. Bent in. I walked behind them.

Q. So you wound up --

A. Then when I walked behind them, from there, then I go straight across. So on this map I'm probably heading -- yeah, right --

Q. This isn't exactly. The pedestrian bridge on this map is too far north.

A. But I'm walking towards that Two World Financial Center.

Q. Yeah, okay.

A. Because I could see that building. I could see it. I thought I saw ambulances over there. I even thought one of them flipped over.

Q. Okay.

A. There were big pieces of steel laying out in the street long ways. I remember seeing that.

They're not on the sidewalk, but they're right by the sidewalk, because when I leave them I realize the sidewalk is right there.

Q. They're above the sidewalk.

A. What?

Q. They were on that grassy knoll on top of the sidewalk.

A. No, no. They're right by where the sidewalk starts, right in the street.

Q. In the street.

A. Pete and Feehan are way across not too many feet, because I don't realize it when I'm talking to them, but when I leave them I see the sidewalk. It must have been a couple feet.

Oh, when I leave Pete, when I turn, I turn around and I go behind him when we're looking for Ray, to point to him. That's the first time that I now see what happened. Now I see --

Q. Off to your right.

A. I could see the parts of the steel still standing. I could see the steel cut through the hotel. Before I never saw what happened. I didn't know what happened. Now I know the tower came down. To me it looks like 100, 150 feet of steel is sticking up. But there are other pieces I could see where they cut right through the hotel.

In my own mind I think everything -- we got in that -- we were probably in that area, just that little area where the bend is. From there where that bend is, that's where we are. That's the piece that survived. I think everything south of that is gone; maybe not. But I think everything south of me was completely gone, at that point.

Q. Yeah.

A. I walk across, see them, then walk up. You're right, this is further back.

Q. Right.

A. It bends in under here.

Q. Where the Winter Garden is?

A. Yeah. It bends in under there. When it bends in towards the Winter Garden is where I come in off the curb and then move up.

Q. I know they've got you on videotape over here.

A. Okay.

Q. You were talking to Al.

A. I don't know who I talked to.

Q. I know, I know. We were all in multishock.

A. I don't know who I talked --

Q. They've got you on videotape here on the right on the part I saw, on this corner. Then you're saying you went up this street.

A. Now I go this way, because whoever it is, when I get here and I said there's no ambulances here -- it's not a big, long conversation. It's like, "Where the fuck are the ambulances?"

Q. Exactly.

A. They said, "Two or three blocks north." I said, "No, I can't walk two or three more blocks." So I go here. I bet you I don't get -- 100 feet up here when this thing starts to go. I don't really know.

In my own opinion I thought what happened was one of the things that made me survive the second one was I got far enough that this building shielded this, the corner. I got just far enough up that corner of that building was shielded from debris.

Q. Yeah. Okay.

A. About 100 feet over here. After you see me here, maybe 100 feet from there, that's when I hear that noise. You don't have it marked here, but there's a building here.

Q. A building there, yeah.

A. This is a lot. There's a chain link fence and a lot.

Q. Right.

A. This is the building. It has a deli here, and the entrance to the building is over here on the side by the harbor. That's where the triage area is.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Okay. That concludes the interview. It is approximately 1225 hours.

Thank you, Brian.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN BUTLER

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 8, 2002. The time is 12:12. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Division of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter John Butler, Firefighter 1st, assigned to Engine 6 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the engine office of Engine 6. This is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. On the morning of September 11, Engine 6 was taking up from Box 201 at approximately 8:40 and as I turned around by the Brooklyn Bridge I observed a blackened area in Tower number 1. The engine officer of 6 Engine, Lieutenant Thomas O'Hagan, transmitted a second alarm. We came back to quarters and I picked up two additional firemen who were waiting outside the quarters and we arrived at number 1 World Trade Center at approximately 8:47.

I immediately decided or I was gonna go into high pressure. I kept -- one of the firemen I picked up, who was an engine chauffeur, with me to assist in the stretch of the line across West Street because of the traffic, we hooked up into the standpipe and I put Engine 6 into high pressure and I notified Battalion 1 that we were in high pressure.

Members of Engine 6, at this time I don't know where they entered the building. I heard one communication regarding a Mayday situation which was transmitted by Marine 6, that they thought they had observed a major collapse of Tower number 2. While we were operating at this spot, we were there for approximately one hour before the second plane hit Tower number 2 and up until that time myself and the other member of Engine 6 were unaware that a plane had already hit Tower number 1. We were under the impression that there was some kind of a fire up there, an explosion. We thought it was like an air conditioning room within the building. At no time did I hear any communications about a plane hitting.

When a second plane struck Tower number 2, I observed a large fire ball traveling from south to north. At that time I took the other fireman, Fireman Robert Emans, with me and we proceeded to run up West Street. We ran approximately one block and then we stopped to try to figure out what exactly had happened and some short time later Tower number 1, with the radio antenna on it, started to pancake. At that time we proceeded to run some more up West Street. A cloud that ensued from the building collapse, when it hit the ground picked up great momentum and it was right behind us all the way up West Street. We ran approximately five blocks until the cloud subsided.

We gathered our thoughts and at that time we proceeded over to 7 Engine on Duane Street to see if we could find out exactly what happened. Nobody had any additional information. We then proceeded from 7 Engine back to our own quarters on Beekman Street.

At that time, I was in communications with Deputy Chief Hill of the first division and he instructed me to be the liaison to Beekman Hospital to coordinate information about how many members were being treated, extent of the injury, company identification. I did that for approximately four hours until I was relieved by Chief Oehm of the first battalion.

At that point, we rejoined the members of Engine 6 up at the site on Broadway and Fulton Street. The only thing I can say about this whole incident, it was a complete surprise. Like I said earlier, at no time did we know that a plane had hit Tower number 1. We must -- I must have observed the tower approximately two minutes after the first plane had hit and at no time did we know that a plane had hit. I heard no communications to evacuate the building. I was in communications with members of Engine 6. They were on the 27th floor, proceeding upward. I heard communications from a squad company that informed them that it was an hour's climb to 30.

The only other thing I have to say is probably in the future modification should be made about truck companies responding into incidents like this. When they can observe from a distance the height of the building and the location of the fire, they know they are not going to use their ladders so they should just drop the members off in front of the building and reposition their rigs at a safe distance away from the building to avoid being hit with debris or falling bodies or as in this case, a total collapse of the building.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Thank you, John. It's 12:50 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER BRENDAN LOWREY

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the New York City Fire Department Safety Battalion. I'm here to interview Brendan Lowrey, firefighter 1st of Engine 35, in the quarters of Engine 35.

Q. Brendan, just tell me what you recall from September 11.

A. Okay. As we were getting close to the site, we heard on the department radio, while we were still in the rig, we started hearing all kinds of collapse reports, maydays. Guys were actually on the department radio saying they were running out of air. Then we heard -- finally we heard the dispatcher say, "Manhattan to command center." Nothing. "Manhattan to command center." Nothing. Then finally said, "Manhattan to anybody at the scene." Again nothing. So that's when we -- we really didn't know the whole building had come down. We thought maybe the top.

So we got off the rig and we picked up our stuff and started -- we were on West Street, walking south. We were reporting to Vesey and West. We got off the rig, we started walking south to the command center when a Police Officer stopped us and said, "hold up, guys. I have helicopters --" he was on the cell phone "-- on the cell phone here." And he says "When this one comes down, it's coming right for us." Meaning coming up West Street.

So we kind of delayed and, you know, looked at each other and then a chief -- we got down a little bit further, I think, and a chief told us, "okay, guys. Hang out here for a minute." And I would say less -- less than -- I don't know. It's hard to tell the time. It was probably maybe a minute or two minutes. Very brief after that the second one came down. And we watched it come down and, you know, it was coming towards us. We didn't know what it was. We didn't know if it was a building. It was black. You know, so we didn't know if it was heat, the building, whatever. It was just a huge black cloud that was chasing us, you know. So there we are, we're ducking for cover and the cloud passed us and then --

Q. You ducked behind a car?

A. What happened really was I fell down and I got caught in a stampede. It was like a doorway or something on West Street, you know. So the thing went passed us. We waited a couple of minutes. Surprisingly the smoke, the black cleared within a few minutes and it was just the grey. So we figured we have to, you know, go back down there and see what's going on. You know, see if we could find anything.

So we made our way down West Street and our particular company got as far as where the walkway had collapsed by the command center.

Q. The north walkway?

A. The north walkway, right. So we did most of our operating around there. There were some pockets of fire. We actually found a pumper that was operable. A lot of them were crushed and everything. And we were, you know, shooting some water -- the pockets of fire were like 8 stories of a building. You know, stuff like that. I threw up a couple of ladders to those smaller Trade Center -- the black ones.

Q. There were some people in the customs building I think there was?

A. Yeah. So there was stuff like that, you know. So we did some searches. Then they told us they wanted us to go down in the garage. Like the -- there was like an underpass. I guess it's like a garage going into underneath. So we started walking down there and we only got in about 30 yards. It was just sealed off so we came back out.

You know, we operated down there for a while. You know, we couldn't -- we weren't doing much but just, you know. Okay. You want to ask me some questions?

Q. No. Do you have anything else to add? You can keep going.

A. No. I want to think about it a little more. I don't really think we did much more than that.

Q. Okay.

(Recess taken.)

Q. Okay. Go ahead.

A. One other thing. The only company I recognized that's sitting in my head was 5 Truck. It was about 30 yards north of that walkway that was collapsed and if had its aerial extended into the --

Q. The Customs building?

A. -- Customs building. The west side of the Customs building. And that had been pretty well crushed and the ladder was bent and it looked like guys had gone up into that area and I didn't see any.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. Thank you, Brendan. The time now is 12:02 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEVIN GORMAN

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: This is January 9, 2002. The time is 2:32 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the safety battalion, the Fire Department of City of New York, conducting an interview with Firefighter 1st Kevin Gorman from Ladder 22 in the quarters of Ladder 22.

Q. Kevin, just tell us the events as you recall them on September 11.

A. We responded down West Street, parked the rig, you know, got extra cylinders and stuff, headed for the buildings.

We were stopped before the north tower by an EMS guy, myself and John Malley. Pointed to jumpers. So the other guys had gotten a little ahead of us. He was telling us get blankets for this jumper and stuff, but there were plenty of jumpers, so we just passed him.

Now we are on West Street, and we hear an urgent message. We were between the two towers. At that time, I would say we heard an urgent message from OEM, it said, where OEM informs us that there is a third plane en route, pull back to the command post.

So we pulled back to the command post, which was the parking garage there, and lined up with everybody, stood there, waited until we got orders. The captain -- I think was Mike ^ inaudible -- came up and ordered all truck companies to one side and then brought us all to the south tower.

We headed down underneath the south pedestrian walkway, stayed under there because of all the debris, and bodies and stuff, and then one by one we kind of ran into the hotel, you know, looking up, we ran into the hotel lobby entrance, or I think it was the restaurant entrance.

Wherever it was, it was facing, I think, south, so it was right near the south pedestrian bridge. Ran into there, got into the lobby there, opened up our jackets, got some water from some of the people that worked there and stuff, employees, and were waiting further instructions.

Lieutenant went to, I believe, Chief Galvin -- I'm not sure who it was -- got our orders to go to the 77th Floor and above of the south tower, headed out of the lobby of the hotel, which in the hotel there were other firemen. I don't recall from what companies. Not too many guys I recognized, so it must have been probably Brooklyn companies.

I saw Joe Rivelli from 25 truck, and then we headed out of the hotel lobby, passed Chief Galvin, and were, as far as we knew, heading for the south tower, passed another couple of chiefs walking through a walkway, made a right turn, were heading towards what we believed to be the south tower. There are some discrepancies. I don't know if you heard. We are not sure of exactly if we were in between or -- went through this other lobby, doorways, walked into that lobby.

Everything was dark. Water was coming down and everything like that, and then the shit hit the fan. Just everything started rumbling, a lot of noise. Turned around, went back the way I came, got probably five steps through the doorway I had just came. I don't even know if I got to that, because there was a walk -- there were bars in front of that that weren't there any more, got knocked off my feet and sent -- was buried under some stuff and pushed across the floor, and after everything stopped dug ourselves out, put the flashlight on, yelled for each other and then exited the building.

I couldn't even say which way. Towards air. You couldn't really see anything.

Q. Did your whole company get together or --

A. Everybody but the lieutenant ran into each other, so we all saw each other. We got underneath by this glass partition. One guy went to look for the lieutenant. We stood there for a couple of minutes and then exited the building.

Q. Then what happened? Where did you go from there?

A. Ran outside. We ended up being right by where the command post was, went over some wall outside, a cement wall, went across the street, made radio transmissions. I was speaking with Lieutenant Reilly, my officer. He was asking me who I saw.

I said I saw everyone, and since I got out of the building, I've seen -- and I said the names of the members that I saw from our company. I saw Lieutenant Wall from 47 engine, another fireman from 47 engine right out on West Street there, and then we stood there, waited.

We were talking on the radio. He was trying to make sure that -- he was looking for the one member of 22 that went looking for him, so we were trying to get radio transmissions with each other, and then we started heading north towards the rig.

Q. But that was after the first collapse, right?

A. Yeah.

Q. So what happened?

A. Now we are by the rig for the second collapse.

Q. On West Street?

A. Yeah, and there were guys working on me. I had a cut on my head. Fernando Camacho had a cut on his head. Guys were giving us water, wet rags to put on our head, and we were standing there, and there was a cop I knew who came by and gave me a drink of water, and then as he was standing there, he said, "Aviation just reported that the north tower is leaning." I said, "Which way is it leaning?" He said,"This way."

So we started to turn around walking. John Malley, who was right behind me, I turned around for him, because he was doing something, either putting his coat on or something, and as I was looking at him I heard the explosion, looked up, and saw like three floors explode, saw the antenna coming down, and turned around and ran north.

Q. About how long would you say it was from when the police officer told you it was leaning?

A. Within 30 seconds.

Q. Did you know if he had a lot of warning or did he just find out himself?

A. It was my personal opinion that because they -- as I was going a little north towards the rig, they were coming this way, and they all seemed to be hustling out of the way, even before he got to me. So there was a group of cops that hustled north before he got to me, so that crossed my mind, why is -- seeing they were -- you know, I don't know I was aware that even the south tower collapsed. I remember seeing, like, a hole in the hotel, down the middle, but I don't think I was aware that the south tower had collapsed.

Q. Now you went north, and you had the second collapse. What happened at this point? You got engulfed in smoke again?

A. In the ash. Went into the school that was there, washed my face off a little bit, washed my eyes out, came outside, trying to reach the officer again.

We all grouped up there right by that pedestrian bridge, Stuyvesant, I think.

Q. Yes, by Chambers Street or --

A. Yeah.

LIEUTENANT GERARD REILLY

CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is January 9th, 2002. The time is 2:15 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York conducting an interview with Lieutenant Gerald Reilly from Ladder 22.

Q. Jerry, just tell us the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. Okay. We responded on the second fifth alarm for the south tower. When we got down there, we parked behind 25 Truck on West Street. We walked down and got to the command post. I don't know how long we were there, a few minutes. They had everybody line up behind the officer.

Oh, before we went to the command post, I saw Ladder 2, Freddie Ill, in front of the north tower. He was having his men run across one at a time because of the jumpers. I'm pretty sure they went in the north tower.

Then we went to the command post. They told us to line up in single file, everybody behind the officer, and they just sent us in. We were supposed to go to south tower. The last person I saw there was Captain Fuentes. He was the last person outside I saw.

Then we walked down to Liberty Street to go under the overpass there because of the jumpers. I thought the hotel was the south tower. We ran across and went in the hotel lobby, and we couldn't find the command post. I don't know how long we were there, maybe 10 minutes.

We split up engines and trucks. I saw Ladder 24, because that was my old firehouse. I knew one guy working there. I was talking with them. I saw Engine 23, Charlie Gaborini. I think they went up in the elevators in the hotel.

Chief Galvin walked in and we went up for our assignment, and he gave us 75 and above in the south tower. I asked him, "Can I go up in these elevators?" He said no, we have to go out to the other building.

So we went outside, and there was a lot of debris falling. We walked around under a little underpass. We went across into the lobby. I thought it was the south tower, and three of the other guys working with me thought it was the south tower, and two other guys think we're in the north tower.

So we probably were in the building maybe a minute in the lobby of the tower, whichever one we were in, and that's when it came down. But I thought it was an explosion in the hotel, because all the debris came down, it was pitch-black, the whole building shook.

I worked my way out to West Street. It ended up I had about eight civilians with me. I made contact with all the men in my company except for my chauffeur. I was missing my chauffeur. I had no visual contact; I made it on the handy talky. I accounted for them all, except for Steve Klee, the chauffeur.

So when I was outside, I got the civilians out to the street. When the smoke lifted, the dust and everything, I went back in looking for Steve, and I couldn't find him. When I came out again, I talked with Billy Wall, the lieutenant in 47 Engine, and he said he saw Steve Klee.

I guess we were standing in front of the north tower when that one collapsed -- oh, before that, we were on Channel 3 on the radio frequency. It ended up that Steve Klee was on Channel 1. That's why we couldn't contact him.

But on Channel 3, a kid from 4 Truck -- it ended up his name was Brennan -- he was giving a mayday, and nobody was answering him. I talked with him, and I told him -- he didn't know where he was, what building, what floor.

I told him I thought it was a bomb in the hotel, because nobody said the building collapsed. I told him, "Just try to make your way down to the street and you can make your way out." So I talked to him for a few minutes, and then we were cut off. It was stepped on.

Then I was standing in front of the north tower when that collapsed. I heard the noise, looked up, saw the rumble. I was right on the north corner, the north part on West Street. When it started to fall, Billy Wall from 47 yelled "Run!" to his men.

We ran. I don't know how far I got, maybe half a block, three-quarters of a block. We dove behind a van. It was me, him, Jack Ginty from the union and some supervising dispatcher.

Then it became pitch-black again. Me and Billy Wall were using our mask for the other two guys. Then it started to lift, and we worked our way up West Street. We got all the way up north.

Then I had to account for the men again, which I eventually did. I was trying to let everybody know that now we're all accounted for, and nobody took a roll call, nobody did anything.

Anything else you need?

Q. No, that's good. Thank you, Jerry.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 2:21, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PETER GIAMMARINO

Interview Date: January 9, 2002

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 9, 2002. The time is 12:36, and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the safety battalion of the Fire Department of City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with Peter Giammarino, firefighter 2nd, from Engine 58 in the quarters of Engine 58.

Q. Peter, just tell us what you remember from September 11.

A. Okay, chief. On our way downtown, I think it was somewhere in the 40s, we made a turn towards the west side to go down the west side. I believe we took the Westside Highway, and all the cops had their guns drawn, so we knew -- you know, we knew there was -- we knew beforehand, actually. After the second plane hit the south tower, we kind of knew it wasn't an accident.

So when we pulled up with all the rigs, I think we stopped about -- there was a pedestrian crossing. I think it was Vesey Street and West Street, and we had a couple of extra guys on the rig, so we grabbed everything that we could: Roll-ups, extra bottles, life-saving rope, Halligans, search rope, everything that we can carry, that we can think of, which was pretty much everything, all the CFRD equipment.

And as we approached the towers -- I remember when we got off the rig, our lieutenant told us to stick together, so that was our main objective, to get into the building, if it's going to be a long operation, to stay together.

So when we got down towards the towers, we kind of got separated inadvertently, because there were jumpers, and they were pretty much landing right in front of us, and it was hazardous. That fireman from 216 -- I think it was from 216 -- that got hit by a jumper, he was right next to us, right close to us, so when he had gotten hit, somehow as a company, we split up.

Between that -- and there was -- the whole block I think was on fire. All the parked cars were on fire. There were a couple of firemen hooked up right to a hydrant fighting the car fires. I don't know what companies they were from, though. I didn't notice that.

So between -- basically we had to navigate ourselves into the building without getting hit by either the debris or jumpers, so we split up as a company. So half of us went in and half of us remained outside, and then eventually we were able to get into the lobby of the Marriott.

We were there just a few minutes. I mean, when we first walked in, I saw some guys from 131 truck. I rotated through there, so I knew them, and one of the guys said to me that he had just heard that the Pentagon was bombed, be careful up there.

So we went into the lobby just a few feet towards the elevator banks, and our lieutenant said "Stand fast, open up your coats, cool off a few minutes, and I'm going to go see what we gotta do."

And it seemed like maybe it was a minute. It wasn't that long at all, and we heard this sound that kind of sounded like an airplane. We thought it was another airplane hitting the towers. That's exactly what it sounded like, you know, and it gradually got louder. And someone yelled, "It's coming towards the windows," like the front of the Marriott that might have been like an atrium or something like that.

So we basically -- we all ran for cover somewhere where we could, you know, just wherever we ended up. There was nowhere to go really. Then it got black, and there was a lot of wind, and stuff flying all over, and then when everything stopped, we were trapped in there, and we had to negotiate our way out, so I was with two other guys from my company, and maybe one or two other firemen. I don't know what company they were from, though, and we found our way out, and we let some civilians out, and we heard a radio transmission from my lieutenant. I didn't have the radio that day.

Q. Lieutenant Nagel?

A. Lieutenant Nagel. He had made a radio transmission. He was giving a role call. He wanted to know where we were and who was with us. So it didn't sound like he was trapped or anything like that.

We thought -- the three of us thought that the rest of our company was out of the building, so we lost all radio transmissions, and then there was a Mayday given, so we didn't want to jump on the radio on top of that.

I think it was Fireman Brennan from 4 truck. He was saying that he was knocked unconscious, and he had no idea where he was. He gave that two or three times. He gave his name and his company and what had happened to him, and I later learned that he was in the lobby of the Marriott, and Lieutenant Nagel had mentioned to the guys in the lobby that he was like 10 feet from him, so they were in that same area where the elevator banks were.

We also had a couple of chiefs from the 12th battalion in that area, too, Chief Marchbanks and Scheffold.

So after the south tower had come down, me and two other guys from the company had gotten out. Ansbro and Weber, and we were just trying to regroup. We didn't even know what had happened. I didn't even think the tower had come down, because when you look up at them, at a certain angle, one hides behind the other. Like at a certain angle, you don't realize that there's two there. That is what I thought I was looking at. I had no idea that it had come down, so I just couldn't focus at that time, you know. I couldn't really comprehend what had happened.

So somehow or another, we had got away from the debris field a little bit, and there were injured civilians and police, and we started assisting them, and then before you knew it, the other tower, the north tower, had come down or started -- it came down, and so then I realized really what had happened with the south tower.

Q. Where were you when the north tower came down?

A. When the north tower came down, we were by -- there were some boat slips. We were in that area, so when the north tower came down, we were over there, and just a few minutes later Mike Fitzpatrick, who was our chauffeur that day, he came. He hurt his leg, so he was like walking with a limp or he was favoring that one leg, and he had told us that we were missing Lieutenant Nagel and David McGovern.

At that time, we thought David was missing, because he was separated from all of us. I'm not sure when he got out after the north tower or the south tower came down, but there were three guys from 58 after the south tower that came down that were in the lobby in the Marriott trying to free Lieutenant Nagel, because he was trapped. He was in a tight spot, but he was okay, and they were working with 122 truck, and then another few minutes later the other members from the company came out, and we regrouped, and we went back into the lobby of the Marriott again, because we knew where our lieutenant was, so we were hoping that he was still in that void where he was.

So we were in there just for a few minutes

maybe and the chiefs pulled us out. They told us we had to get out, so we got out, and then later on we went back in again, and they pulled us out once more, and that was it. They said we lost radio transmissions, and we couldn't risk any members to go in there at that point, because the Marriott was leaning.

It turns out that it leaned for awhile until they knocked it down, but at that point, it was leaning, and they didn't want to put us in that risk of coming down on us.

That's basically it. Do you need anything after that?

Q. No, that's fine.

A. We did actually -- we heard that 288 -- there were some members from 58 that saw Squad 288.

When we were in the street with the fireman from 216 that had gotten hit, the other half of the company went in, and they had seen 288 in the lobby, and one of those guys was on the telephone, and I mean that -- I didn't see that. That's what they had told me, so he was calling someone before they went up whatever, and they were just a couple of minutes before us, ahead of us, and I think also 279 might have been just a few minutes ahead of us also, Engine 279.

Q. You think they went into the south tower or they were all in the lobby?

A. Well, I had spoken to guys from 131 truck, and they had told me that -- I don't know. I think they're dispatched differently to the trade center, but for some reason I think they were together in the lobby, and the engine 279 had just went ahead.

They were just ahead of the truck, but I didn't see 279. I did see 131, though. I don't know. I really don't know where.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: That's fine, Pete.

Thank you. The time now is 12:48, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHEVALO WILSON-DeBRIANO

Interview Date: January 11, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT DUN: Today is January 11th, 2002. The time is 0615 hours. My name is Richard Dun working for the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name.

A. Chevalo Wilson-DeBriano.

Q. And your rank?

A. Paramedic.

Q. Where is your location of work?

A. Battalion 50.

Q. In your own words, just tell us what happened on the day of September 11th.

A. I was here. I was extra personnel, so I didn't have a partner. I was instructed by the -- or actually I saw it in the lounge, an incident happened, the World Trade Center, fire, listen on Citywide radio. They said it was a plane hit. They put MERV 4 on standby. I was told by the supervisor to stand by, if MERV 4 was to roll, I would have to go on with the MERV. The second plane hit and then we were told to roll, go to Battalion 46 in Elmhurst, Queens, and stand by there.

We ended up going over to Battalion 46. We stood by momentarily. Then we were told to roll. We continued from there down Queens Boulevard. We had a view of the burning World Trade Centers. When we crossed the 59th Street bridge, we heard over the radio people screaming that there was a building collapse. We crossed Manhattan, went down the west side. We went down past Vesey Street, past the pedestrian bridge. We stopped the MERV. There was a lot of smoke. We started helping a few injured firefighters who came on the MERV van for treatment.

Then we felt a rumble. My partner, who was the driver, told me that he thinks there's another collapse, so we have to egress by foot and leave the vehicle, and it was a rapid, running egress from the area with other police officers, firefighters and civilians to avoid the debris and dust cloud.

Q. Do you know exactly where you left the vehicle, where the vehicle was parked?

A. Yes. Approximately, looking at this thing, I believe it was beside 6 World Trade Center. Yes. So a little south of Vesey Street on the West Side Highway.

Q. Okay.

A. We continued. I ended up walking up to Chelsea Piers. Then I walked back down to try to find my partner. I didn't find him for hours, but he was okay. The vehicle was in bad shape as far as dust. It had to be cleaned off. Then we moved the MERV van over to another location. I'm just trying to remember the actual street.

Q. When you first arrived, did you see a lot of debris, a lot of chaos?

A. Yes, a lot of chaos, a lot of smoke. You couldn't really see.

Q. Was there a lot of debris on the ground or engine parts, body parts?

A. No, no, I didn't see any of that. I didn't see any of that, no. We were on the West Side Highway, so I think we were still a distance from that.

Q. All right. So after the first collapse, you relocated?

A. Well, no. The first collapse had already occurred.

Q. So you were there for the second collapse?

A. The second collapse, yes.

Q. Then after the second collapse, you relocated down to --

A. Well, as I was saying, when we were crossing the 59th Street bridge, that's when the first collapse occurred. So by the time then we got into Manhattan, we went to the West Side Highway and we stopped the van, we stopped the MERV van, and we started treating some firefighters. Then the second collapse happened.

Q. Okay. Then you egressed.

A. Then we had to egress by foot.

Q. How long after did you go back to your vehicle?

A. That took a while. I believe it took around three hours. Yes, around three hours to get back there.

Q. Did you see any chiefs that you recognized who were in the plaza or wherever you were?

A. In that immediate area, no.

Q. No officers?

A. No, I didn't see it. No. Other than when I walked up and walked to Chelsea Piers. That's the only time I really saw EMS people. I only saw vehicles passing.

Q. Were they parked and covered with debris or were they voluntaries just lining up to go in?

A. At Chelsea Piers?

Q. On the walk up.

A. On my walk up I mainly just saw some dust-covered vehicles but mainly just emergency vehicles going in and leaving the area.

Q. Then what did you do after you got to Chelsea Piers?

A. I got to Chelsea Piers. They were just lining up. It seemed like there was a lot of confusion there. But I couldn't find my driver. I had to check all around to see if the driver was there and he wasn't there, so I started going back, I started walking back to the area.

Q. You left the MERV down there?

A. Yes. The MERV was left down by Vesey Street, yes.

Q. So you walked. Did you ever find your partner that day?

A. I did find him. He said he just ran a different direction. We had got split up and I did find him hours later.

Q. Did you triage people at Chelsea or did you do any work at Chelsea?

A. At Chelsea, no. They were just lined up there.

Q. So that was the end of the day?

A. No. We went back. We went to the MERV van. It had a lot of dust on it, but the driver had relocated it to another location. Man, if I could just remember the street. It was the street that JFK Jr. lived on.

Q. Okay.

A. But that street, we were there, and then from there, from that location, then we started -- we set up for triage there and we were pretty much there most of the day, then, most of the day, setting up for triage, and that's where we ended up viewing the collapse of 7 World Trade Center, which was another time when we ended up having to egress a little bit.

Q. So about what time did you end the day?

A. The day was ended -- I worked 23 1/2 hours straight. So, if I started at 7:00, it ended like at 6:00 in the morning by the time we got back.

LIEUTENANT DUN: That concludes the interview with Chevalo. Thank you very much for your time.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN JOSEPH RIVERA

Interview Date: January 14, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. McCOURT: The date is January 14th, 2002. My name is Tom McCourt, investigator for the New York City Fire Department. We are currently at the World Trade Center command post. Being interviewed is Captain Joseph Rivera from Division 4.

Captain Rivera, would you identify yourself, please.

CAPTAIN RIVERA: Captain Rivera, shield number 9815 of the Division 4, Queens division. I'm the duty captain assigned there.

Q. Captain, could you please tell me the events that transpired from your perspective on September 11th, 2001?

A. What actually transpired -- in fact, I'll start from the beginning. On September 11th was my first day assigned to the borough of Queens. I was transferred from the borough of the Bronx. I was to report to their division office at 0800 hours in the morning, which I did.

While there I was awaiting the arrival of Chief Carrasquillo to have a one-on-one with him, which is when the incident occurred. He called me up and told me that he was on his way in and that we would meet downstairs and head into the World Trade Center incident.

We met downstairs, got into his vehicle. We responded, he, myself, his aide and an EMT. I have no recollection of the name.

Q. Do you remember who his aide was?

A. His aide was Sal San Sangeniti was his last name. I don't remember who the EMT was.

We were in route to Manhattan. We exited the Midtown Tunnel. When we exited the Midtown Tunnel, the second plane had already hit. We arrived there roughly about 9:30 in the morning.

When we got there, we left the car on West Street down by I believe it was Rector. I'm not sure. I think it was Rector. And we walked our way up to where the command post was, which was opposite building number two, Two World Trade Center.

Q. What was the action going around at that location at that time? What was the activity?

A. It was total mayhem. There were people running all over the place. There were body parts on the floor that we noticed. There was rubble. There was just total chaos.

As we were walking up to the command post, we were trying to get a gist of was going on. When we finally got to the command post, we met with Chief Gombo, Captain Sickles and Lieutenant Moore, who were already there along with other fire officials and some firefighters. This wasn't inside the building; this was across the street on West Street.

Q. West and --

A. West -- I believe it was between Liberty and Vesey.

Q. Okay.

A. On the other side of the street.

While there, we were looking up at the fire and we heard a loud rumble; and when we looked up, that was the start of the collapse. When the building collapsed, ironically we had a building behind us that had an underground garage, and we all ran into that underground garage. In that underground garage we were trapped for approximately 10 to 15 minutes.

There were a number of injuries, minor injuries. A lot of us were breathing in a lot of that powder, whatever you want to call it. Anyway, we managed to get out of there. A firefighter found a stairwell that brought us up about two and a half stories.

We managed to go up two and a half stories, come up out of the building from the rear and managed to go around up towards -- what is this over here? Up towards North End, running down toward North End to where we established a command post on Chambers and West.

Before that we also got caught in the second collapse. While we were running, we were running and trying to find cover in some of the surrounding buildings. Every time we got close to one of the buildings, they were telling us there was a gas leak and we should get away from that building.

Chief Carrasquillo was under the impression that we may have left some people behind, so we went back to make sure that everybody was accounted for.

Q. After the second collapse?

A. After the first collapse.

Q. After the first collapse.

A. So when we went back, making sure that everybody was accounted for, we got caught in the second collapse, but we managed to get out of that right away.

What we did is we ran towards the water around to North Street and up towards Chambers and West, which was where the command post was established. While there I took command of the MERV and all of the volunteers that were coming, hospital staff, doctors, nurses, et cetera.

Q. When you went back to check for the missing people, did you find everybody that was missing?

A. Everybody that was with us was accounted for. That was Chief Carrasquillo, chief's aide Sal San Sangeniti, Chief Gombo, Captain Sickles, Lieutenant Moore.

Q. Anybody injured at that point?

A. Lieutenant Terranova.

Well, the one that was injured was Lieutenant Moore. All the rest were overcome by this powder, this thing that we were breathing.

Then from there we were on for a good 25, 26 hours, the regular operation.

Q. Right. You stayed there the whole --

A. Yeah.

Q. Until the next day?

A. Yeah. We were able to go home and come back the next day and start it all over again.

I wasn't injured. I breathed in a lot of the stuff. Luckily I wasn't injured.

I don't know what to say. I think we were all traumatized. I think the only real injury that I remember was Lieutenant Moore.

Q. What was the extent of his injuries?

A. I think it was a leg injury. He hasn't been back on duty, but I think it was a leg injury.

Q. Is there anything else that you can add or you might want to add to it?

A. No. So many things happened. After we left the building that we were trapped in, a number of things had happened. There was a building there that had senior citizens supposedly trapped in the basement, so we were trying to get them evacuated. Then they told us not to, that it was probably safer to keep them in the basement because of all of the dust in the air.

Then there were other people that would run to us with minor injuries, cuts and bruises and stuff. We were trying to give aid when we were in route to -- actually running for our lives, running away from the site to the command post.

Q. Did you experience any radio problems or communication problems or anything like that at all?

A. I think everybody experienced radio problems. We were trying the contact each other to make sure everybody was accounted for. We couldn't get across. Too many people on the radio. The radio traffic was horrendous.

Q. All right. There's nothing else you can add --

A. No, that's it. A half hour felt like 30 days. But that's it. That's all I can think of now.

Q. Okay, Captain. Thank you very much.

MR. McCOURT: The time is 557 hours.

That concludes this interview.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's January 10, 2002. The time is 1230 hours, and this is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER VIOLA: Steve Viola, firefighter 2nd Grade, Engine 47.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York, at the quarters of Engine 47, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Okay, Steve.

A. We parked about three blocks up from the towers, and we walked down underneath the pedestrian bridge. It took us a little while to get across into the hotel because of the debris coming down, but we ended up getting in there, and the chief, the deputy chief in there, had all the engine companies go to the left, all the truck companies go to the right, and he brought all the officers over to him and told them their particular assignment and told us to switch to Channel 3. I remember that.

I think it was the security guy, a guy that worked in one of the towers, took us. He said there was an elevator working, and he took us into the north tower, and there was one elevator out of 6 in the bank working.

22 engine went up before us. 13 truck went up before us, and then one of our guys -- one of the guys from 13 truck. Our guy went in with 13 truck, and he was coming down with the guy from 13 truck to bring the elevator to us, and when he was either going up or coming down the elevator, that's when the south tower collapsed, and it sounded like a bunch of explosions.

You heard like loud booms, but I guess it was all just stuff coming down, and then we got covered with rubble and dust, and I thought we'd actually fallen through the floor into like the PATH tubes, because it was so dark you couldn't see anything, and from there it was a little hazy from there on, but I remember our lieutenant trying to take us back out through the Marriott the way we came, but that was -- we couldn't go through that way, and we ended up coming out through -- I guess it was the base of the north tower out onto West Street, and ended up -- me and another guy put on one of the ambulances, and we were just waiting to leave on the ambulance.

We were in there -- I don't know how long we were in there. For awhile, because one guy, they thought he had a broken neck, and they actually went back, because one of our guys was still in the elevator, so they went back to see if they could get him out, and then while we were in the ambulance, the driver came out and said, "Get out and run to the river," because that's when the out tower was coming down.

And we ended up getting down to the water, right behind -- I think it was a school building, and after the big dust cloud passed over, we made our way up West Street, like six, seven, eight blocks, and another ambulance came and picked us up. How far up that was, I'm not sure.

Q. Is there anything else you want to say?

A. No, that's basically it. We never really got to go up, so I never really got to do anything.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: This concludes the interview. It's approximately 12:37.

Thank you for your cooperation, Steve. I appreciate it.

THE WITNESS: You're welcome, chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN DRUMM

Interview Date: January 10, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 10, 2002. The time is 1345 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER DRUMM: Firefighter John Drumm.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Assigned to Ladder 16 of the Fire Department of the City of New York, at the quarters of Ladder 16, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. John, if you can just tell in your own words what happened that day.

A. The first time I found out about the whole incident, we were in the kitchen of the firehouse when someone came in and told us they just had heard a plane crashed into the twin towers. We went out to the house watch from the kitchen, listened to the department radio. About a minute after getting into house watch, Engine 39, which I was assigned on that day to -- I was assigned to work in Engine 39 on September 11th. About a minute after I went out of the house watch, Engine 39 got sent on the run.

Q. Let me just stop a second. Okay. Go ahead, just from where you were.

A. 39 got the run, like I said, a minute after walking in the house watch.

Two of us got into the back step of 39 and two other members drove down the high-rise rig, high-rise number 2, and we made our way downtown. While we were on our way down, we heard over the department radio in the rig that the second tower had also now been hit by a plane.

After heading downtown on Second Avenue, we came across on Houston. After we were coming across to the west side of Manhattan on Houston, looking southbound along the major avenues, I could see both towers --

(Interruption.)

A. As I was saying, when 39 was making their way downtown, we had used Houston Street to go across to the west side. And as we passed other major avenues, you could have a clear view downtown. I was able to see both the north tower and the south tower, both in flames and plumes of smoke over them.

We came down the West Side Highway. We parked the rigs just south of Vesey Street, on West Street we parked. As we were getting out of the rigs, there was a chief that was instructing the chauffeur of 39 and the driver of the high-rise to move them further down West Street, more in the front of the north tower.

I'm not too sure, after hearing the chief say that, how the rigs were moved, being a member of the inside. We just grabbed our rollups and headed for the building.

We headed towards the north tower. We were assigned on the run to report to the north tower. We made our way into the building through the northwest corner of the building. The windows on the first floor were all broken out, so we didn't even go down to the doorway. We just went into the corner of the building, which all the glass was blown out, and used that way to get into the building.

As we were approaching the building, we had walked underneath the passenger bridge that's just south of Vesey and hugged the wall, because on our way into the building there was a lot of debris falling and, as everybody knows, there were also people jumping. On our way in, we were able to see a few of those people. So we were hugging the wall of the building just on the northwest corner of tower one to avoid the debris.

We made our way into the lobby of the north tower, where we saw a command post being assembled and a battalion chief or a battalion aide had seen us coming in, and he instructed us, 39 Engine, to team up with 65 Engine, which we did. He also instructed us to use the B stairwell to ascend. We were instructed just keep climbing until you get upstairs to where you can help other companies set up your lines, stretch and go into operation.

We made our way up the stairs from there, the B stairwell. The highest point we climbed was the 31st floor.

Q. Wow.

A. As everybody knows, there was civilians coming down at the same time on our way up. There was one behind the other on their right of the staircase, and we stayed towards the center of the staircase, the firemen, on our right, the center of the staircase, and made our way up.

We met some very nice people on the way up. They offered the firemen water and actually I want to put that in the record because it was a nice thing. One civilian offered to carry my rollup for a while at one point. I said, "Thank you very much, sir, but I'll get it."

We helped a few civilians get down a little bit. Most of the civilians we passed were able to walk on their own. A few civilians I met on the way up were actually being helped by civilians too. A woman who was a burn victim, one of the firemen helped clear the stairway at that time because they were carrying her and it took a larger width of the stairwell. So we cleared all the civilians out of the way for that, just made sure the civilians stayed in order, which they did. They were very orderly.

When we got to the 31st floor, at that point -- we ascended as fast as we could, but there were other firemen in front of us and slowly but surely making our way up. When we got to the 31st floor, Lieutenant McGlynn, who was the officer of Engine 39 that day, had instructed us to stand by on the 31st floor where he was going to wait for further instruction or try to hook up with a nearby chief.

I'm not too sure exactly what he was trying to find out everything. But he was probably maybe seeing if they wanted to start stretching lines from a lower standpipe. But he had told us just to stand by while he waited to talk to a chief.

While on the 31st floor, as I said, we were told to stand by by Lieutenant McGlynn, our officer for the day, waiting for further instruction. As we were waiting, we waited in the hallway on the 31st floor out of the stairwell to stay out of the crowd of civilians and all, not to clog up the stairwell. We waited for our instructions in the hallway of the 31st floor.

We also first went in there to make sure also -- when we were about 12 floors below that there was a transmission that there was several members and police officers on the 31st floor that had chest pains and difficulty breathing. Being an engine company, we went in there to see if there was any CRFD work we could do on the members.

As we went into the stairwell, also waiting for instructions to be given to Lieutenant McGlynn, everybody was being taken care of on the 31st floor, all members that had chest pains and difficulty breathing. Someone had already gotten to them and was giving them oxygen.

So besides making sure everyone was okay, we were waiting there. Maybe we were on the 31st hallway for approximately five minutes when all of a sudden a large crashing, thundering, roaring -- it's almost impossible to really explain with those words, but it was so much more noise than I could ever really explain clearly.

The members that were nearby, we all went and got down on our hands and knees on the floor, not knowing what this was, walls, floor.

I had no idea. I had no idea what was happening until I got out of the building later in the day I had found out what happened. Later in the day I found out what was going on when all of us were on the floor and all that roaring was going on was the south tower collapsing.

While on the 31st floor and still in the building, I didn't know that. As I said, I didn't know the south tower came down until I was out of the building and away from the collapse.

But while we were on the 31st floor, everyone was down. Everybody was on their hands and knees. It was almost confirmed by -- it made me feel comfortable of not knowing what it was that one fireman was standing up -- I'm not too sure if he was a rescue member. I think I remember seeing a blue patch on his helmet. I'm not positive of the number. I think it was a blue batch on his helmet, and I think it was a rescue member.

He was telling all the members in the hallway, maybe about 20 or 30 firefighters in the hallway at the time, to relax and calm down, that it was only the skin of the building. I remember that clearly, this firefighter saying that. That relaxed me a little bit, not that I probably even thought that it was the south tower collapsing or what it was, but it was just something very disturbing.

In a way he comforted me a little bit. But as I found out later, it was not just the skin of the building coming down; it was the south tower.

After the noise had stopped, there was a transmission on the radio that I had. I was in a position on 39 control that day, so I had a radio so I could hear it myself on my radio. There was a transmission that I'm guessing was repeated about five times: "Imminent collapse, imminent collapse of the north tower. Immediate evacuation." At least five times I heard that.

Q. A lot of guys didn't get that. That's good that you got it.

A. Yeah. Now I don't know how everything happened with -- how the radios were with the members on the upper floors, but on the 31st floor I was able to hear that they wanted the north tower to be evacuated.

We were waiting for the officer's order before taking up and start walking, maybe a couple minutes past where he was confirming, listening for further transmissions or talking to other officers that were in the area. He wasn't sure that's what they wanted us to do.

We started to descend the building at that time and went right back into the B stairwell and descended down all the way to the lobby in the B stairwell.

On our way down it was a lot clearer, the stairwell, of civilians. On the way up it was one behind the other order -- orderly but one behind the other of civilians on the way down the staircase. After standing on the 31st floor and the collapse of the south tower happening and making our way back into the stairwell, there was a lot less civilians. Most of the civilians hopefully at that point were already down. But there were still a few we ran into on the way down.

One woman we assisted. She was having trouble breathing. The only air we had left was a cylinder. One of the members had a cylinder and I helped to purge it to let the woman get a hit off our mask. So we gave her the mask. She was able to walk after that, and she was with two civilian men that were going to stay with her the rest of the way down.

On the way down we also ran into -- most firemen that we saw were heading down the staircase at this time, but approximately the 20th floor I remember running into Captain Ill of Ladder 2 and Officer McGlynn, my officer for the day, talked to him a little bit, asking him if he had heard the transmission.

Being right next to Lieutenant McGlynn, I was able to hear that conversation. Captain Ill said yes, he did hear it, and he was just making sure that everybody was out before he was heading down.

With McGlynn knowing that he heard the transmission, we continued to climb down. As we got down to the lower floors, we walked a little bit slower. It was very congested with firemen down at the bottom of the staircase making our way out. But eventually we got down to the lobby.

Lieutenant McGlynn was leading. I followed him. We walked back in the same direction out of the stairwell B, which is between the elevator bank, back to West Street. So we were heading to the exact spot where we came into the building, which was the northwest corner of the building.

Lieutenant McGlynn came to a stop, I'm assuming this was to check that all his members were out of the stairwell. I looked at Lieutenant McGlynn on my way past him, thought I made eye contact with him. He actually didn't see me.

All the firemen in front of me were still walking, so I followed them out the northwest corner of the building, which wasn't even a doorway, just all the glass on the lobby floor had been blown out. So it was a clear passage through there, the exact same corner of the building we came in.

We hugged the exact same wall of the building that's just north of the north tower. I'm not too sure what that is, whatever that building is. Building five?

Q. The customs building.

A. Yeah.

Q. I think that's building six, but it's the customs building.

A. Building six. It's the building that's on the corner of Vesey and West.

Q. Yeah, right.

A. There's a big sidewalk in front of the north tower, but I just hugged the wall of that for the same reasoning --

Q. So it would be this building.

A. Yeah, we came out of this northwest corner of the north tower, and this was right along the sidewalk. So we just hugged this wall of the U.S. -- Q. Customs building.

A. -- customs building. And when you follow this wall back to the West Side Highway to the street, it's right where the passenger bridge is.

So when I got to the passenger bridge, I was probably walking at a normal pace, not running, all the way to that passenger bridge from the building. And as I approached the passenger bridge and just got underneath it, there were two firemen that were standing there, looking back up toward the building.

As I approached them, all of a sudden I heard a bunch of firemen, including these two guys I saw, start yelling, "Get out of the way! Go, go, go! Don't look back! Don't look back! The building's coming down!"

Of course like anybody else, instinct takes over and I look back. As I was underneath this passenger bridge, I can see the north tower at the top starting to come down. With that and everybody yelling just go, whoever I listened to -- I guess I listened to -- one fireman said, "Let's go north on West Street."

So right from the passenger bridge I kept going back, and why I was going that way too was you go back to your rig after a job or whatever. That's where our rigs were when we left them was Vesey and West. So I was heading that way anyway. Thank God he also said north and I continued on West.

As soon as he said that, I looked, saw the building come down, and just took off running north on West Street. I ran as far up as Stuyvesant High School. About just north of Vesey Street is I guess when the building was very close -- at the ground, and now the dust cloud was starting to push up West Street.

Just north of West Street I guess I started seeing the dust cloud. One fireman I saw in the middle of the street continued holding cylinders, but laying on the top of the cylinders was a mask. So he probably assumed that maybe the whole thing had a mask in it, complete mask.

He said, "Run, grab a mask!" I ran over to the container. He had grabbed a mask, but the only thing else that was left in the container was --

Q. Cylinder?

A. A cylinder. I just kept running. But just after that container, which was like at the corner of Vesey, the smoke just came right over us. So from Vesey Street until Stuyvesant High School, we were searching through this dust cloud.

I had left my mask up on the 31st floor. When they said to evacuate, they just said drop everything. So I dropped my mask, dropped my rollups, and just said let's get out of the building. So I had no mask when this dust cloud came. So I used my hood as some type of vent to keep some of the stuff from going in my lungs.

Probably from Vesey all the way to Stuyvesant High School I was in the dust cloud, actually searching my way up West Street. I was still thinking of training in proby school, you know, hug the walls until you find a window frame.

I found the curb and a parked car. Thank God the car was faced the right direction, and I was using the front end as the direction to point north. I kept walking that way, because I could not see anything. All I could hear was everyone screaming and yelling.

There were one or two firemen that had tripped on the way up. I picked them up. They weren't hurt. They just tripped over something probably on the street. I picked them up and kept going.

But eventually when I got to about

Stuyvesant High School, I was able to see through the dust cloud. I made my way inside Stuyvesant High School where I was coughing for a little while. I don't know if I was there maybe half an hour, clearing my mouth out with some water. Some of the teachers were bringing water over to me, and the security guards were helping out.

As I got my senses back together and all and had help from people to strip off my gear and cool off, I guess, and civilians were helping me out. Finally -- I don't know how long it was, maybe half an hour -- I stopped coughing and was able to gain my senses and feel myself and everything was all right. I started thinking.

I didn't know at the time but I found out later in the day that when I left the north tower in the lobby I had thought my officer had seen me, Lieutenant McGlynn, and he hadn't seen me. When I continued out of the building, the other members of Engine 39 made their way out of the staircase and saw Lieutenant McGlynn. Lieutenant McGlynn asked them if they had seen Drumm. That's my last name. They all said, "No, I didn't see him." "Did you see him?" "No, I didn't see him."

I would never have known if they came out. Thank God all four of them are alive. But they had gone back into the staircase to search for me --

Q. Oh, Jesus.

A. -- not knowing that I came out of the building. To find out more -- I believe they've been interviewed too and it's on the record. But I think they made it somewhere, they told me, maybe around to the fifth floor and thank God that the staircase was able to withstand the weight that it stood.

They had their trauma and I don't want to tell you a story that they'll tell their own if they haven't all right. But they had an ordeal. If they didn't come out, I probably would have never known that they had gone back in for me. But thank God they're alive. That means a lot to me that they had gone back in for me. It means a lot more than I know that they're still alive.

I think that I can go on with the story in detail, so I think that's pretty much my experience from getting the run at the firehouse to getting out of the building. I guess after getting out of the building and getting my senses back together at Stuyvesant High School, I geared back up and started heading back down. I don't know if my radio was turned down or turned off. I wasn't listening to the radio when I was in the high school coughing.

I made my way back out to the street. The radio was still working. I turned it on or it was on. I started listening to the radio as to what the heck was going on. I knew the north tower had come down, but not until really I was done running at Stuyvesant High School had I found out that the south tower was the noise I had heard when we were still on the 31st floor. That's when I realized that both buildings were down was after I came back out into the street from Stuyvesant High School.

Over the radio I was hearing the chauffeur of 39, Arthur Meyers, trying to raise Engine 39. I heard that message from him several times. Eventually I was able to get through the radio. The radio was of course very busy.

Eventually I was able to just get in a couple words with him. I knew who it was. He asked my location. I told him who I was and where I was. We met up at -- I don't know if it was Vesey or -- what's the next one up?

Q. Barclay.

A. Yeah, somewhere near Barclay, near Barclay and West Street, I ended hooking up with him. Maybe a half an hour after or an hour after the collapse, I ended up finding him. He went on to try to raise Engine 39 for a while longer. Then the radio was just so busy. There was no response back from 39.

What we were thinking then -- we didn't know what to think, because the radios weren't working. We didn't know where they were, because I didn't know that they hadn't come out of the building. I thought they were with me and the rest of the crowd of firemen that, like I said, walked out of the building to that passenger bridge. But I thought they were with me the whole time.

So we couldn't raise them on the radio. We just decided to stay together the rest of the day. Pretty much nothing after a while. We stayed together. Maybe a couple hours later I ended up running into some of the truck guys from Ladder 16 at Vesey and West. Lieutenant Dan Williams was the first one I saw, actually.

I didn't believe it until I saw each one of the engine members, but Lieutenant Williams was the first one to tell me they were okay, at least that they were alive. That is when I started to find out, because there is a restaurant that is off of West Street down in Battery Park City. But near Vesey, a block in off West, there was a few members.

Lieutenant Williams said, "Go to the front of this restaurant on the corner, one block in off of West on Vesey," where I met up with one of the members who was actually out on rotation, but he was here at the time.

Firefighter Bob Bacon was the first one I saw. He was one of the four members that had gone back into the building for me. That's when I found out the story of what they had done. I was really upset at that point that I knew they did that but also glad that they all came out.

Two of them I think had gone to the hospital. Nobody had any really bad injuries except abrasions, cuts, problems with breathing. I believe two of the members, Jeff Coniglio and James Efthimiades, I believe they went to the hospital from the scene right away.

When I saw everybody eventually, they all got the biggest bear hug I ever gave anybody. But I finally heard the story that afternoon from Bob Bacon. I saw him. Then later in the day I saw Lieutenant McGlynn. Actually I just hooked up with him just before -- up near Stuyvesant High School where they were reassembling us at one point. I just hooked up with him, didn't even get to talk with him, when building seven, was that what it was?

Q. Yeah, building seven.

A. At like 5:00.

Q. 5:00, yeah.

A. 5:00 in the afternoon. I just ran into him and was about to talk to him about the story, and everybody is yelling "Run!" again. We made our way up away from West Street a little bit. We were actually heading into the school anyway.

They were trying to reassemble I think inside. So we ran into the school. Then I'm talking to him.

I think the next day I saw James Efthimiades. Then I saw Jeff Coniglio on Thursday. I finally was happy I saw all the members were alive.

I believe that -- everything is so small details from my experience on September 11th.

Q. Okay. Is there anything else you want to add? Anything else?

A. No. I mentioned seeing Ladder 2.

Q. Yes, you mentioned seeing Freddie Ill?

A. Just by the time we got downstairs, there was very few civilians I saw. I guess all the work we did on our way up keeping them orderly -- from what I saw on the way down, very, very few civilians were left, and they were coming with us. Everybody I was with felt on our way down all the floors were clear and there was no other civilians in the building.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Okay. That's the end of the interview. The time is 1420 hours, and that concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER HUGH METTHAM

Interview Date: January 10, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 10th, 2002. The time is 10:45 hours. This is B.C. Frank Congiusta of the Safety Division of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER METTHAM: Fireman Hugh J. Mettham.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of Ladder 18 of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Ladder 18, and this interview is regarding is events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Hugh, go ahead and tell your story.

A. The morning of September 11th starts like most mornings in firehouses around the city. Firefighters make coffee, catch up on firehouse news, check the apparatus and find their riding position for the tour. This is all interrupted around 8:47 by a plane that crashes into the north tower of the World Trade Center.

Little did Lieutenant Borega, Firefighters Charlie Maloney, Harry Coyle, Steve Merenda, Ralph Cardino, Kevin Murray and I realize that this incident would change all of us, the Fire Department, the city we work for, and would become the most tragic and eventful day in New York City history.

Ladder 18 is located on the lower east side of Manhattan and is housed with Battalion 4. On September 11th Battalion 4 responds after the initial plane crash. Ladder 18 responds eight minutes later, approximately 8:55, on the fifth alarm to box 8087, World Trade Center, north tower.

Over the department radio we hear that people are jumping from the upper floors and that the whole building is being evacuated. Charlie Maloney, who is very knowledgeable about fires and building construction, mentions to us that he has a funny feeling and doesn't like the sound of this.

Lieutenant Borega tells me, the chauffeur for that day, to respond to the World Trade Center by the FDR Drive through the West Street tunnel at the battery. Just before reaching the West Street tunnel, the south tower is hit by another plane.

Even though we hadn't witnessed the crash, the planes and thick black smoke from the impact could be seen before entering the tunnel. We all sensed the terrible reality that we were heading into something much larger and more horrifying than a single plane crash.

Lieutenant Borega immediately looks at me, and we both verbalized something about a terrorist attack. My foot starts to bounce on the accelerator pedal, dancing with anxiety.

It was just south of Liberty on West Street that we first encountered debris from the plane crashes. I steered away from Liberty Street and head north on West Street, away from possible impact from falling building parts and jumpers.

Since we were heading to the north tower, I parked the apparatus under the pedestrian walkway bridge that goes over West Street. The bridge affords us protection from debris falling off the tower while we make our way to the command post in the lobby. Still we have to hug the outer portion of the tower, hoping that nothing falls on or near us.

Once inside the lobby of the north tower, we prepare for a long climb. Lieutenant Borega goes to the command post to get our floor assignment. While waiting we watched the chaotic scene unfold before us. Jumpers fall from the sky and crash on the pavement outside the large lobby windows.

The fire commissioner moves through the throng of firefighters, telling us to evacuate the building, seeming to imply not to worry about putting out the fires.

Fire Chaplain Mychal Judge is silent, seeming to be praying for all of us, his eyes not looking at anyone in particular but silently speaking to all to be safe.

At this time Harry Coyle nudges me and whispers, "Kevin's father is in one of the towers." I think of the tremendous emotion and anxiety I have and know that Kevin has to bear with the extra burden of having a relative on the upper floor of the tower.

Lieutenant Borega returns to the command post at the lobby and tells us to start on the third floor and work our way up to help evacuate people. We will check the stairways and floors and assist civilians who are trapped or need assistance coming down.

I am surprised and a bit relieved that Ladder 18 is not climbing far. But the words "Make your way up" clearly means that we are eventually going to climb.

We decided to drop and leave our spare air cylinders in the lobby. The extra weight is not needed. We all sense we must conserve our energy and climb slowly and quietly. I grab a few bottles of water from the abandoned newstand and hand some to Harry. Water will be needed.

As we enter the stairs, we meet people evacuating the upper floors. Some are wet and exhausted. I am impressed by their behavior, no shouting or pushing but openly concerned about the firefighters' welfare and for others still coming down.

When we reached the fourth floor, Steve and Ralph forced a few doors, and no one is found. Charlie, realizing that some of the lower floors are probably maintenance areas, tells us to take a quick look around and then to go up.

We enter the fifth floor. Once again we are in the maintenance area. Lieutenant Borega tells us to find all the stairwells and staircases that lead down. We discover that three staircases are in use evacuating people.

Suddenly the north tower starts to rumble and shake violently. We all head to stairwell B and huddle near the door while the floor we are on shakes and rumbles for 30 seconds for more. Lights go out, and we are thrown into total darkness. Stairways and hallways fill with smoke and dust as the rumble and roar subsides.

All of us start to speculate on the cause of the rumble. It could be another plane crash or localized collapse. Someone in the darkness mentions a bomb. There is little time now to ponder what just happened. What could shake the north tower so violently?

Lieutenant Borega tells us to start a lighting relay with our flashlights to assist the civilians that are leaving the staircases and converging with us on the fifth floor. Apparently smoke and dust had filled it up or down the staircases and elevator shafts, causing civilians to look for another way down.

Communication abruptly stops on our department radios. Only a few mayday and urgent messages are heard and then abruptly end. Charlie Maloney decides to go down stairway B to see if the staircase is still usable. The rest of us guide and redirect civilians from stairwell A and C to stairwell B and wait for Charlie's words to send them down.

Stairwells A and C are heavily charged with smoke and dust and appeared to be unusable at this time. We are concerned that we are unable to contact Charlie. But with growing anxiety among civilians on the fifth floor who want to evacuate, we guided them down to the lobby.

At this time with no other civilians coming down any of the stairwells, Lieutenant Borega tells us to leave the fifth floor and says, "Let's get out of here." I questioned Harry Coyle about Charlie's whereabouts. He assures me that Charlie went down stairwell B and is probably helping people leave the lobby. As Lieutenant Borega, Steve, Ralph, Kevin, Harry and I descend, I can only hope that we will meet him there.

The scene in the lobby now is complete chaos. Small fires and smoke rise from one area. Marble sections that line the walls have smashed. Cable, glass and elevator parts litter the area. We maneuver around the debris looking for Charlie and are met by a rescue firefighter saying that there are Fire Department members trapped on the 11th floor.

Ralph and I exchanged glances. We turned around and start to ascend the B staircase again to assist in the rescue effort. Ralph says to me, "Boy, we're tempting fate now." We reached the sixth or seventh floor and are met by many firefighters coming down the stairs, informing us that the upper floors are collapsing and that there's a heavy odor of gas and fuel.

Fearing for our safety through the rapidly deteriorating conditions, Lieutenant Borega tells us to head back to the lobby. Hoping that Charlie has left the building, we meet Engine 28 in the lobby. Harry and I mention to one of the members of 28 that Ladder 18 is leaving the tower. Lieutenant Borega also tells Engine 28's officer that we are leaving.

Debris can be seen falling outside the lobby's broken doors as both companies attempt to leave. Once again we are forced to hug close to the outside perimeter of the building, fearing that debris might fall on us.

We reach the pedestrian walkway on West Street, and Harry sits down on the back step of a fire engine to catch his breath. Steve and Ralph continue north on West Street, unaware that Harry is feeling sick.

I look at Harry and then glance over his shoulder. I am stunned by the terrible destruction just south of the north tower. I try to come up with some explanation for it but can't. Something is telling me to leave this area right now.

I tell Harry, "If you can get up, I think we should move now." Harry nods, says something and then rises from the back step of the engine. Lieutenant Borega, Kevin, Harry and I start to walk fast in a northerly direction on West Street.

15 seconds later, near the corner of Vesey and West Street, we hear a terrible roar behind and above us. The upper section of the north tower begins to collapse and push out a wave of smoke, ash and debris.

We run in fear of our lives. The entire north tower collapses, and we are not going to outrun the tremendous cloud of ash and debris that is toppling down and bulging outwards.

Kevin and I dive under a fire truck while Lieutenant Borega, Harry and Steve take refuge behind or under other parked apparatus. I hug the ground in a fetal position, protecting my eyes and face from pellets of concrete that are bouncing off my fire helmet and body.

A dark cloud of dust and ash engulfs the undercarriage of the fire truck. I gasp for air and pull my hood over my mouth and nose. The noise from the collapse is intense.

Shall I continue?

Q. Sure.

A. Unexpectedly, the loud crashing sound subsides. It is strangely quiet. [redacted]

[redacted] I raised my head and move backwards, holding my hands up and touching the bottom of the apparatus chassis. I move about eight feet until I am able to get off my knees. I yelled at Kevin that we are not buried.

The dark brown cloud begins to diminish. I make out outlines of vehicles ahead. Kevin moves next to me. Squinting and peering through the haze, we try to focus our eyes while stumbling and moving north on West Street.

We leave the terrible fire and destruction behind us and start to look for Lieutenant Borega and the rest of Ladder 18. A few minutes later emergency workers and firefighters can be seen moving in all directions. One stops and tells Kevin and me to sit down on the curb. He pours water on our heads, and we try to clean away some of the grit that is lodged around our eyes.

With our vision improved, Kevin and I continue to look for Ladder 18. Lieutenant Borega, Charlie, Harry and Steve spot us about ten minutes later. It was a tremendous relief we see all of them, especially Charlie Maloney who had left us earlier inside the tower.

We also find Bobby Newman from Battalion 4 who tells us how he narrowly escaped from the collapse of both towers. He surely looks that way with both of his shoes blown off his feet.

I asked Lieutenant Borega where Ralph is. He says, "We have to continue looking for him." Steve mentions that Ralph is running ahead of him when the north tower collapsed but isn't sure where he hid or escaped to. It would be many hours before we heard of Ralph's whereabouts. He ended up in Engine 7 and Ladder 1's quarters on Duane Street after being hustled into emergency pickup truck that headed north to 14th Street after the north tower fell. He's rattled but okay.

Ladder 18 is extremely fortunate. All of us make it out of the north tower. The hours we spent after the collapse seem now to be a complete blur. That destruction and fire after the collapse dulled our senses and overwhelmed us.

The shock of witnessing the mass destruction and chaos close up after just escaping the towers brought on a sense of futility. What could we do to help? All we could do is just hope that other firefighters, police, rescue workers and civilians made it out. We knew that it would take an extraordinary rescue effort to find and reach anyone alive.

I go on to thank everyone from the 4th Battalion and Ladder 18, from our most junior members to our most senior firefighters who have shown courage, dedication, compassion and humility in the most trying of times.

I am fortunate to work in a great battalion and firehouse that through these difficult times has done what was necessary. Your courage and compassion started the moment the WTC was attacked and lasted through the long sad months of autumn which were full of memorial services and remembrances.

All of you should be proud to be firefighters in Ladder 18, the 4th Battalion, in New York City.

That was my report of what happened.

Q. I can't ask you any questions on that. That pretty much covers everything.

Is there anything else you would like to say that wasn't in your thing?

A. No. I mean, the thing was with the radios we never heard anything as far as getting out.

Q. Okay.

A. When communications stopped, we heard nothing as far as evacuate or anything else.

When we got down to the lobby the second time, we left the building. We left the north tower through the exit on West Street. When we left, it was with many other firefighters, many other people still in the lobby. No civilians. It seemed to me mostly emergency workers and firefighters.

Q. Were they trying to get out at this time?

A. They were in the lobby. I think maybe they were waiting for other people to come down or they were waiting for orders or anything else.

When we arrived down to the lobby, we met 28 Engine, and at that time we were concerned about ourselves, we were concerned about finding Charlie Maloney. We saw 28 and said we're going, we're leaving right now.

They must have looked at us and we saw the severity of the situation and we said we're leaving right now. They followed us out.

Q. They did, huh?

A. They did.

Q. Thank God.

A. Yeah, that was fortunate. The unfortunate thing was that there was a lot of other companies, a lot of other firemen still in the lobby. The only regret I have is that those firemen and fire woman or whatever, rescue workers, they probably could have left also.

Q. Yeah, once it started coming down, it was too late.

A. That's the hard thing about it, knowing that there were so many other people still left in that lobby --

Q. Who could have got out.

A. -- that could have got out.

Q. Thank you for the interview, Hugh.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: It's 11:05, and this concludes the interview.

File No. 9110442

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM WALSH

Interview Date: January 11, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 11th, 2002. The time is 12:00. This is B.C. Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

LIEUTENANT WALSH: My name is Lieutenant William Walsh. I'm assigned to Ladder Company 1.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Ladder 1 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Bill, if you would please tell us what happened that day in your own words.

A. Okay. All right. I reported for work about 8:00 that morning to start a 24. We received a run about 8:30 in the morning for a gas leak up at Lispenard Street and Church. We were operating at that box along with Engine 7, Battalion 1 and Ladder Company 8. I believe 55 Engine was there also, maybe Engine 24. I'm not sure.

After about 15 minutes, we conclude our operations there. Lispenard is about one block south of Canal Street. I believe the chief gave the code for a gas leak, 10-40, code 1. All the units were about to go 10-8 when we heard this loud roar. Everybody thought -- or at least to me it sounded as though there was going to be a Con Edison steam explosion. This was about a quarter to 9, I'd say.

So everybody looked up to where they thought they heard the sound coming from, and we saw an American Airlines plane. To me it looked as though it was going treetop level right down West Street. Then he appeared to rise a little bit.

We were under the impression -- he looked like he was going down, but we didn't hear any mechanical difficulty. We couldn't figure out why an American Airlines plane would be so low in downtown Manhattan. We sort of expected him to veer off and go into the Hudson.

But he just rose a little bit, his altitude, leveled off, and he was headed straight for the Trade Center. So just before he got to the Trade Center, it seemed as though he gained power. We were just watching this airplane on target for the World Trade Center.

All of a sudden, boom, he disappears into the Trade Center. You hear this sickening noise as if two pieces of fiberglass had hit. You hear this loud explosion. He just disappeared into the Trade Center.

You could see a huge fireball come out from where he hit. I guess it was about ten stories high of brown smoke coming out and thousands of pieces of paper being thrown through the other side of the World Trade Center.

So immediately everybody got into the rig. We automatically responded down to the World Trade Center. We went up one block north to Canal Street, made a left, went straight down to West Street. Then we headed south from there. I imagine we got down there in less than two minutes.

So when we had gotten down to the front of One World Trade Center, which happens to be West Street -- that's the main entrance -- what I observed was a lot of ash on the ground, a lot of paper on the ground, no vehicle traffic whatsoever, no civilians whatsoever. It was like the area was a ghost town. I guess there was pieces of burning debris on the ground. I really couldn't say what it was.

On the way down there, what I heard over the radio was a Battalion 1 chief giving a report that a large plane had hit the World Trade Center. I heard the officer of Engine 10 saying to send every available ambulance to downtown Manhattan because a plane had just hit the Trade Center. Engine 10 would be first due. Ladder 10 is first due. I didn't hear any transmissions from them. Me, Ladder 1, is second truck.

So we had parked the apparatus right in front of the glass overhang on West Street, which is the main entrance to World Trade Center number one. We all gathered our tools, and we headed to through the front door.

Now, the front door is a revolving door. There is a vestibule of about ten feet, let's say, and there's another revolving door. There I noticed two civilians that had more than third degree burns.

They were in pugilistic position. They were black, burnt. Their skin and their clothes were burnt off. They were smoldering, and they were trying to get up. They were just moving around. I had estimated they had less than half a minute left in their lives. So we had just passed them by.

What I observed as I was going through these doors and I got into the lobby of the World Trade Center was that the lobby of the Trade Center didn't appear as though it had any lights.

All of the glass on the first floor that abuts West Street was blown out. The glass in the revolving doors was blown out. All of the glass in the lobby was blown out.

The wall panels on the wall are made of marble. It's about two or three inches thick. They're about ten feet high by ten feet wide. A lot of those were hanging off the wall.

Q. Wait a second.

(Interruption.)

A. What else I observed in the lobby was that -- there's basically two areas of elevators. There's elevators off to the left-hand side which are really the express elevators. That would be the elevators that's facing north. Then on the right-hand side there's also elevators that are express elevators, and that would be facing south. In the center of these two elevator shafts would be elevators that go to the lower floors. They were blown off the hinges. That's where the service elevator was also.

Q. Were these elevators that went to the upper floors? They weren't side lobby elevators?

A. No, no, I'd say that they went through floors 30 and below.

Q. And they were blown off?

A. They were blown off the hinges, and you could see the shafts. The elevators on the extreme north side and the other express elevator on the extreme south side, they looked intact to me from what I could see, the doors anyway.

So we reported to the lobby command post. Engine 10 was there. Ladder 10 was there. The lobby seemed to fill up with firemen very quickly. I was reporting to the 1st Battalion Chief, which is Chief Pfeifer. At that time he was with the 1st Division Chief, which was Chief Hayden.

Two of those chiefs were trying to collect information, which was very difficult for them, because as far as I could see the class E system I do not think was working. I can't say for sure, but these chiefs depend upon the information from the class E system, and I don't think that the class E system was working properly.

Normally there are World Trade Center building personnel that come down and they hand you Trade Center radios, which you can stretch the length of the World Trade Center. These people were not around. So as far as I know -- I was there for at least ten minutes -- there were no World Trade Center people to assist these chiefs.

The Division 1 aide, which was Chris Waugh, he was in the lobby. He was setting up the board, the command post board. I remember one time Chief Pfeifer, I made eye contact with him. He was about to tell me something and then he changed his mind quickly and told me to hold on.

We were there for it seemed to me like about ten minutes or so. Then finally the Division 1 aide said to everybody, "Just go up any stairway that you can and handy talky me what stairway you went up."

So I headed for the B stairway. I did not want to deal with elevators. So Ladder 1 --

Q. Were there any elevators working or no? Probably not, I assume.

A. I couldn't tell about the express elevators. The elevators that I mentioned before that were on the extreme north end and the extreme south end, I don't know about those elevators. But I headed for where the service elevator was, which was in the center where the lower floor elevators were, the ones where the doors were blown off them.

So I had known where the B stairway was, and Ladder 1 had opened up the door to the B stairway. Within several seconds we noticed civilians coming down in an orderly fashion and some water coming down the stairs. I assume that this water was either broken standpipes or sprinkler pipes that had gone off.

I had my thermal imaging camera with me, and then I realized that I did not have my search rope. I figured that I didn't need my thermal imaging camera to find fire at this point but I did need my search rope.

I instructed my members to wait in the lobby next to the B stairwell. I went outside to my rig, and I swapped my search rope for the thermal imaging camera. I came back, and we all of us started heading up the stairs.

My OV, which was Steve Olsen -- I don't think you mentioned him before. We'll get into that later.

Q. He was interviewed already, probably.

A. He didn't mention it.

Q. I just have guys that haven't been interviewed. So anybody that was interviewed I don't even know about.

A. He went up ahead of me, which is something I didn't like. But anyway, he's an aggressive firefighter. He went up ahead of us. As we started making our way up the stairs, it was a little bit slow going. You had to pace yourself because you knew you were going up 90 flights of stairs.

This battalion chief had asked us to turn off some sprinkler heads that had activated on the fourth floors and other floors that I can't remember. So we started turning off sprinkler heads.

I believe that we took a rest on maybe floor number seven and then again on floor 12. We made our next stop on floor number 19, which is as high as we had gotten. We were all sweating and debilitated at that point.

Do you want me to get into who I saw?

Q. Yeah, sure. That's good information.

A. I remember seeing the officer from Ladder 5. His name is Lieutenant Warchola. I remember seeing him on the stairs with his company. I remember seeing Captain Jonas of Ladder Company 6. We had passed each other on the stairs. They would take a rest; I would pass them. We would take a rest, and then they would pass us. But those two officers I remember seeing as we passed each other on the stairway.

After turning off some sprinkler heads and sometime waiting for my crew members to rejoin us, because the pace was very slow going up the stairs because if somebody had stopped ahead of you, whatever floor that was above you, you had to wait until the line had started again. Everything was fairly orderly as far as the civilians descending and the firemen ascending.

I remember a Port Authority chief. He was black, and I believe he had either one or two stars on him. I remember him trying to get together his men on the stairwell and it looked as though there was about four or five of them at the time. I had mentioned that this was the B stairwell.

This happened on about floor number 10 or so. He was trying to regroup his men, and he wanted them off the floor at floor number 10 or 12 or so. I guess he wanted to give them instructions.

Ladder 1 had made its stop at floor number 19, because at floor number 19 you could tell that were soda machines there, candy machines, as soon as you opened up the stairway door and looked inside into the occupancy.

I think the guys were breaking open the soda machines to take water, juice and cookies from the other vending machines. We were all sweating heavily at this point. A lot of us took off our helmets and masks and turnout coats.

I believe that Ladder 6 had also stopped around that area also on floor number 19. I had to wait for two of my members. I had to wait for Damian Vancleaf, and I had to wait for a member of Ladder Company 10. I believe he was the OV that day.

He was going to be operating with me because, I guess he lost his unit somehow. I guess being the OV he just assumed that he was going to be operating the elevators and it didn't work out that way. Anyway, he was straggler, so he attached himself to me.

So I had to wait for Vancleaf and this OV from Ladder Company 10. They finally joined us at floor number 19. I can't say how long I was there. I believe it was about like 10:00 that I had gotten to that point. We were on I guess you would call it the West Street side of floor number 19. Engine 5 was on the east side, which would be abutting World Trade Center number

I had heard through the Engine 5 officer a mayday, because one of his members believed he was having a heart attack. He said something about chest pains or something. I'm an EMT, so I went over there across the floor on floor number 19. I guess it would be exposure 3 side.

I inquired about this member, but he seemed okay to me. He seemed to make a quick recovery. Maybe it was just a fast chest pain. He was having chest pains. He was okay.

So I tried to gather my members, because they didn't like the progress we were making at this point. They felt as though we should be a little bit higher up.

Lieutenant Fody, who was assigned to Engine 7 -- he's now a captain of Engine Company 6 -- he was working overtime that day in Engine Company 9. He was on the floor with us taking a rest. I think he might have started up the stairs, the same stairwell that we were using. I believe he left about ten minutes before I did, and this was about 10:00 we're talking about.

At this point I think my chauffeur -- I was trying to collect all my members, and I had all of my members, with the exception of Firefighter Olsen, who I knew was on the 22nd floor because I tried to find him through the handy talky and he told me that he was on the 22nd floor. I said, "Wait for me on the 22nd floor. Don't go any further," because I wanted all my members in a group.

So we were about to regroup now, and it must have been about -- I guess it was about 10:15 at this point. My chauffeur, Firefighter O'Neill, he said he had to go to the bathroom. He was looking around the floor for a bathroom. He finally finds one.

We're waiting for him. We must be waiting for about five minutes or so. I guess I was still on the exposure 1 side, the West Street side, in the hallway. I could look to my right and see 19S, and I could look to my left and see 19N, which apparently meant north and south.

About this time, 10:15, 20 after or so, I feel a rumbling of the building. It felt as though -- I got knocked from one side of the hallway to the other side. It felt like you were in a subway car standing up and the subway car was making a turn and you were getting shifted back and forth. That's the way that it felt.

We later find out that this was World Trade Center number two collapsing. It had hit World Trade Center number one, and I guess it hit the Marriott Hotel. I didn't know this at the time, because we were in the stairwell, which is basically soundproof and no windows. So I didn't know that the second World Trade Center had been hit by the second plane.

All this time I operated on the tactical channel, Channel 1, at this point. I felt as though it was a localized collapse. The lights went out, and the ceiling panels fell down, dust fell down. The emergency lights stayed on.

I could look around and see pieces of debris in the hallway. It didn't seem like much debris in the hallway, but there were pieces of debris in the hallway. I did not have any access to any windows at this point because I was in the hallway. No windows were around us to the outside. You didn't know what was going on outside.

So I was about to collect my members and start heading --

Q. Did you know the second tower had been hit by a plane?

A. No, no.

So I started collecting my members, and I was about to go up the stairway and I heard maydays to get out of the building. I didn't really know who gave the mayday. It could have been one chief giving it to another chief who was operating on the command channel and that chief might have given it out -- I'm not sure. I just heard, "Get out of the building."

So I collected all my members and informed Firefighter Olsen to get out of the building. He didn't acknowledge me. There was a lot of handy talky traffic going on at the time. Four of my members went down ahead of me, and then I was the next one to go down.

As we were going down the stairs, on the lower floors there were firemen taking rests. I couldn't identify the companies. I assume that they were Brooklyn units, units that came subsequent to us. They were hanging out on the stairwell and in the occupancy, and they were resting.

I told them, "Didn't you hear the mayday? Get out." They were saying, "Yeah, yeah, we'll be right with you, Lou." They just didn't give it a second thought. They just continued with their rest.

So I made it down to the lobby, and the lobby looked as though it was in the same condition as I had left it as far as the debris all over the lobby. I looked out to West Street, and south of me I could see the rubble of a building. I would later find out it was the rubble of Two World Trade Center that had fallen down.

I decided to head north. I could see like four of my members that had run ahead of me. I was at the glass overhang, and I could hear bodies hitting the glass. As a matter of fact, I could see it, bodies jumping, hitting the glass overhang in front of West Street, which my rig was right in front of that also. There was debris on my rig. My rig looked smashed at this point. Again, nobody was in the street, and there were no cars in the street.

I got outside of the building. There were bodies falling down, and there was some debris falling down. There was a lot more ash in the street. From the entranceway to the World Trade Center going north, there's a pedestrian overpass, and I wanted to make it there. I think it was about 50 yards up or so. This is going north on West Street now, just before Vesey Street. There's about a 50-yard run.

I just held my breath and just hoped that nothing came down and hit me, and I ran to this pedestrian overpass. There was a fire engine there hooked up to a hydrant, and there was the chauffeur that was there. I didn't really get a good look at the chauffeur or get a good look at the engine company that was there.

I made it to the pedestrian overpass, where I stayed there for a while. I was trying to collect my thoughts, because I couldn't understand what was going on. Then there was this person who had a badge around his neck. He was in civilian uniform, but I think he had a blue windbreaker that identified some agency that he worked for.

Q. OEM?

A. No idea. He was a black person. He said we were in the collapse zone. I had just assumed he knew more than I did at this point, so I just started walking fast. When I reached Vesey Street, which is only about another 20 yards up or so, I started walking very quickly now, north, up West Street.

I think I was about a block away or so, maybe even less, and I turned around to take a look at the top of the World Trade Center. There was lots of smoke or dust where Two World Trade Center was, but I didn't focus on that. I had no idea that the second World Trade Center had gotten hit. I focused on World Trade Center number one.

The wind was blowing south that day, and you had a clear view of the World Trade Center. I could see where it was heavily on fire. I assumed it was about the 95th floor or so. All of a sudden, it starts coming down.

That put a panic into me.

I just dropped my tools, and I started running north as fast as I could. But then the debris started coming down, and to me it sounded like the roar of a freight train. In the background you could hear beams hitting beam like an erector set falling down.

All the dust and ash had finally hit the ground and started mushrooming the width of West Street and had started going east, and then it started mushrooming towards me. I started running as fast as I could, but I was overtaken by this. I was blown down. I thought that was it for me. I thought that I was dead.

After everything turned black and after several seconds, maybe 10 or 15 or so, I opened up my eyes. I was covered with ash. I could see like little pockets of fire around me. I thought I was in hell or purgatory at that point. I realized that I had survived.

I got up and I continued to run north. I lost all of my equipment. My mask fell off, my helmet and my lights and all of that. So I just ran north, and I ran as far as I believe it was Harrison Street or around that area, which is about four blocks north or so.

That's where I ran into Captain Tardio of Engine 7. I ran into other members of Engine 7, other members of Ladder 1 that were working. Everybody had survived that was working that day from this house, Engine 7, Ladder 1.

Then Captain Tardio and I believe a member of Engine 6, Billy Green, were walking together. I finally met them. Captain Tardio seemed stressed out because he was under the assumption that he had lost two of his members who were tending the rig.

We got his turnout coat off, his mask, his helmet. I told him I would help him look for these people. I think I had gotten in touch with other members of my company, of Ladder 1. I had either physically seen them or heard them over the handy talky. So I knew all my members had made it.

So Captain Tardio, myself and Firefighter Olsen started to walk south now, and we were going to search for these two members that were missing, Firefighter Spinard, who was the chauffeur that day, and Firefighter Cassaliggi, who were with them.

Later we would find out that Firefighter Spinard had escaped and Firefighter Cassaliggi was taken to the hospital shortly before number One World Trade Center fell.

So I continued to walk south. I think Firefighter Olsen and Captain Tardio had stopped to get some water, but I kept on walking south. I believe at Vesey Street I ran into Battalion Chief Pfeifer. I asked him if he was okay. He asked me if I was the same. I told him that of the two members that we thought we were missing he said that he had seen Firefighter Spinard. So Firefighter Cassaliggi was just missing at this point.

Chief Pfeifer asked me if I had seen his brother, who was the lieutenant of Engine Company 33. I said I would notify him if I run into him.

Then I ran into Battalion Chief McKavanagh, and he asked me if I was okay, because I was somewhat dazed at this point. I had lost all of my gear. So he told me that there was a triage station here at Ladder Company 1, Engine 7, I should go back there.

He asked me for my handy talky because he was with Lieutenant Wiebicke, who was assigned to Ladder Company 1, we were coming off duty, and he could use my handy talky. So I gave him my handy talky.

I went down as far as Vesey Street, and it was all a big dust cloud. I heard over other people's handy talkies that there were electrical fires and gas fires. It was just a dangerous situation down there. I felt as though I was insecure at this point.

Q. Understandable.

A. Not in full control of my faculties here.

Then there were other building on fire, we would hear over the handy talky [redacted], where I ran into my chauffeur, Firefighter O'Neill. We rested for a while.

I also ran into Lieutenant Bob Rocco.

I believe he's assigned to Ladder Company 9. He came in off duty.

I think I was there until maybe 12:00 or so at Harrison Street and West. Like I said, I was with my chauffeur. I guess the other members of my company had already gone back to quarters. Myself and Firefighter O'Neill went back to quarters. We walked back to quarters. I believe I got back to quarters about 12:30 or so.

I just reconfirmed that the whole house had made it, that the whole house survived. There were numerous off-duty members here. Everything was pretty much under control. It was already set up, this triage center.

There were other firemen that I didn't recognize. They would be taking some of the gear from the company. I guess they were called in from home, didn't have any gear. They knew this firehouse and decided to take whatever gear that they could and head down to the World Trade Center there.

I was impressed -- after this collapse had what happened when I was on my way back, I kept passing by tons of firefighters and EMS personnel and construction workers and civilians. It reminded me of the minute men, these people that day. They were just helping out. Anyway, that's besides the point.

I had gotten back to quarters about 12:30. I went to the back room and just watched CNN for a while. That's all.

That's about it. Do you have any questions for me?

Q. Yeah, one question I have is when you looked at the north tower when you could see it, was there any indication before it was coming down? Did you see cracks in the side or anything?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. There was no indication that it was going to collapse before it actually started collapsing?

A. No. I believe the hole that I had seen in the World Trade Center -- I don't know if I said this initially, but the hole seemed about three stories high, that this plane had made a three-story hole in the World Trade Center.

The fire seemed to be confined to about maybe one or two floors.

Q. Really? Is that all?

A. Yeah. I was throughout the whole floor. It was the north side there was heavy fire, and the west side there was heavy fire throughout maybe two floors or so. I couldn't tell what was on the south side or east side because I never got there.

There was never any smoke in the building. I never incurred any smoke in tower one.

Q. I have another question. When you could see the building -- because a lot of people have said they didn't see the building. Could you see what floors people were jumping from or was there smoke coming out of all the floors above the fire?

A. When I had gotten there -- I'm talking about later on.

Q. Later on?

A. Just before it collapsed. Was there smoke coming from all the floors?

Q. Just curiosity.

A. To me it looked as though everything was confined --

Q. To the two floors?

A. -- to the two floors, to the three floors or so. I've seen pictures of the Trade Center on fire, and right in the middle of this when the two of them were standing. It seemed as though it was heavy smoke throughout the whole upper floors.

But when I had looked at the World Trade Center after I had gotten out of the building, it didn't seem to me that that was the case. Obviously it was, but it didn't seem the case to me. I just remembered seeing two floors of heavy fire from the north side of World Trade Center one and the West side of World Trade Center one. All of a sudden things collapsed one floor, and then within a second or so it just imploded.

Q. Thank God you got out.

A. Maybe I was out of the building maybe three minutes or so and it came down. I don't know how that happened, but it just did.

Q. Is there anything else you want to say?

A. When I was in the B stairwell, one of the firemen from another company had told me that the second tower was hit with another plane. He said that the Pentagon was hit with another plane, and he also said that the United Nations was hit with another plane.

Well, throughout my experience on the job whenever you get into a heavy fire situation, you always hear these rumors that never turn out to be true. I thought that this was the case, because I had never heard it from anybody else that day that the second World Trade Center was hit, not over the handy talky, nowhere.

I didn't hear anything and of course did not see anything, because the B stairwell didn't have any windows. Whoever I had rescued on the floors, they didn't have access to windows either.

The B stairwell was pretty much soundproof anyway. I didn't know how soundproof it was until I compared it against the Two World Trade Center falling on us. That was just a rumble in the background along with the vibration of the building shaking.

But I thought it was a localized collapse, and I thought that the Trade Center was a very sturdy building and we wouldn't have to worry about the localized collapse.

Q. Nobody really thought that they would collapse. Thanks a lot, Bill. That was excellent. That was a lot of detail.

A. The kind you guys are looking for.

Q. Yeah, yeah.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TYRONE JOHNSON

Interview Date: January 10, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 11th, 2002. The time is 10:45 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Division of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER JOHNSON: My name is Tyrone Johnson, firefighter first grade, assigned to Ladder 24.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Ladder 24, and this interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Tyrone, would you please tell your story.

A. Okay. As the day started off, I came to work early. I was milling around house watch. Maybe about quarter to we were in house watch watching the TV. We saw the hole in the building of the north tower. At that time we didn't know what was going on, so we were just watching, watching. Then we saw the plane hit the south tower. After that we got dispatched to go down to the World Trade Center.

I was chauffeur that day for Ladder 24. We went down the West Side Highway. I stopped the rig maybe two blocks away from the command post. We got our gear together, walked to the command post and waited for our orders.

As we were waiting for our orders, our company --

Q. This is the command post on West Street?

A. On West Street, the command post on West Street. We passed up the Fire Commissioner and Mayor Giuliani at the time. At that time we were standing outside for a little while. It was a bad sight because we were watching people jumping out of the building. At that time they told everybody to go to the back of the command post, which is a garage, to the rear of the command post, and wait for our orders.

Then maybe about five, ten minutes later, we were ordered to go into the Marriott Hotel. At that time the company and three other companies in front of us went inside the Marriott Hotel.

Once we got inside the hotel, we met a chief. I don't remember what chief it was. He gave us the command just relax for a while before you find out what you want us to do.

(Interruption.)

A. At the time we were waiting for our command to go to the Marriott. We went to the Marriott. We got inside the lobby. The chief told us take your gear off, relax, until you find out what you want us to do.

Maybe 10 or 15 minutes later he gave us the command put the gear on because we're getting ready to head upstairs. There were about three companies in front of us. We were the last company to go up the steps. Maybe about five minutes into the process of going up the steps, that's when the building collapsed on us.

At that time we were thrown all around the place. Guys were laying around, covered up. I was messed up and covered up. Beams were thrown. Guys were injured. Just maybe a quick couple minutes -- it seems like a lifetime, though -- a few minutes I uncovered myself, got a hold of the rest of the guys in the company and we found our way out of the building.

We just searched our way out. We saw the light, and we crawled out of the building.

Q. Did you have to crawl up?

A. We had to crawl down, maybe down half a floor, and then crawl up to get out the door. Once we got out of the building, we started walking towards the water, which is on the West Side Highway. At that time walking maybe we ran across other firemen milling around.

Then we heard another rumble. Then I turned to my left and looked up. It was the second tower coming down. After that we just ran, ran, ran, ran. A black cloud of smoke just caught up to us while we were running towards the water. We got covered again. I got knocked down and covered again. I got up and made my way to the ambulance and I was taken to the hospital.

Basically that's it.

Q. Is there anything else you want to say?

A. I'm trying to think. It was like four companies that were in the lobby with us at the time. I only noticed two companies, Ladder 24 and 22 Truck. The other two companies, I didn't see them leave the building.

But just to get out of the building, we had to lime over the beams, crawl through holes, all kinds of rubbish to get out of the building. Half the hotel was gone. Half the hotel was gone. We just happened to be lucky we were in the half that didn't fall down. We just climbed out.

Q. Okay. Thank you, Tyrone, for your cooperation.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: It's 11:05, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JAMES DUFFY

Interview Date: January 14, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 14th, 2002. The time is 1150 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER DUFFY: James Duffy.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Firefighter third of Ladder 24 of the New York City Fire Department. We're in the quarters of Ladder 24, and this interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Jimmy, if you would just in your own words say what happened that day.

A. We were in quarters when the first plane hit. People came out to the firehouse and told us that a plane had crashed into the twin towers. So we turned the news on.

The engine went down on the third alarm. We were still in quarters. After the engine went down, Captain Brethel and Father Mike -- Father Mike came across the street, got into his car, and Captain Brethel drove Father Mychal Judge down to the Trade Center.

About five minutes later we saw on TV from quarters the second plane hit. As soon as the second plane hit, we went on the second fifth alarm.

Before this happened we put extra Scotts into the rig. We had a few of the depots. We put all the Scott cylinders from the depot on the truck. We wound up going down West Street. There was traffic on West Street, so we went on the northbound side going south on West Street.

We got down there. We parked on West Street about two blocks north of the towers.

Q. Just a second.

(Interruption.)

Q. Okay. Go ahead.

A. We parked on West Street about two blocks north of the towers. We pulled up. As we were pulling up, 35 truck was pulling up also. They were getting off the rig at the same time we were getting off our rig.

We tried to walk to the command post, which was across the street on the west side of West Street, directly across from the towers. We were reporting there. We report there. We saw different companies, my old company, 204. I saw 101 Truck. I saw Stackpole there. He was at the command post that day.

I just saw jumpers. I saw about 20 to 30 people jumping out from the upper floors and hitting rigs and the pavement and the ground and apparatuses, and the glass atrium of the Marriott they were hitting. I guess about five or six jumpers jumped at a time.

The chiefs were yelling to get more truck companies. So we sent our fire truck companies in. We were one of the truck companies to go in.

Q. Where'd you go in?

A. We were told to report to the south tower, but the only way to get to the south tower -- you couldn't walk down Liberty Street to get into the main entrance because of the jumpers and the falling debris, so we had to go in through the corner entrance of the Marriott, which is on West and Liberty. We went in there.

Lieutenant McLaughlin was the officer. He looked up and he was keeping an eye out for debris, because we had all our equipment plus an extra cylinder. So he kept an eye out and he said, "When I tell you guys to run, just run." He was looking up, and we ran right into the lobby.

We got into the lobby, and there was still a lot of Marriott employees still there. They were getting huge things of water. We drank that. We were just waiting our turn to go into the south tower and report to the command post.

We were waiting around. 122 Truck was over there right next to us. 22 Truck was in the lobby also. Then we were just waiting to go into the south tower. As we were waiting, we looked up and all I saw was -- I heard this huge noise, and I saw hundreds and hundreds of people running towards us. They were running out of the south tower to the Marriott, to the lobby.

We just turned. We started to like run also. We got about ten feet before getting blown across the lobby. We got blown across the lobby, just got covered with debris. Apparently after we determined we were still alive, we got up and couldn't see anything at all with the dust and everything.

One of the guys in the company, Tyrone Johnson, I saw him right next to me. So we stayed together. We were trying to get a way to get out. We didn't know if we were buried alive or not. We thought we were.

We wound up finding -- a metal rolldown gate came down where we came in, I think where we came in. We wound up pushing that up, and then we wound up signaling -- I had a flashlight. I was signaling to people come this way. I know there were quite a few Marriott employees still in the lobby, so we were trying to get all of the employees plus the firemen.

I remember hearing a mayday for Ladder 4. The officer was giving a mayday. He was knocked unconscious, and he didn't know where he was.

After we wound up getting out, we had to climb around this rubble. We were sliding down twisted metal beams and climbing up and just getting through all this debris and trying to help the Marriott employees as they were coming out also with us. That took a little bit of time. I got separated from Tyrone.

Once we got to solid ground, I wound up hooking up with another guy from my company, Frank Ocello. When we got on solid ground outside, the second tower came down on us.

Q. Where were you when the second tower came down?

A. We were out on solid ground, like right around the area. But when the second tower -- we just ran. We wound up running down towards Battery Park City down by the water. We just ran west, and we wound up down by the water, down by that marina down there.

My mask was blown off me, so we wound up -- there must have been about 50 firemen and probably about 20 cops down there by the water. We all ran into this restaurant. There was a huge cloud coming down to the water. We wound up going into this restaurant. There were civilians down there. I remember there were people with baby carriages and stuff like that. We went into the restaurant until the cloud cleared.

We also asked for a roll call, and they said there was a gas leak at Stuyvesant High School, so they were closing that area off so we really couldn't get back to the rig. I guess we were on the south side of the towers. So we had to go to the north side to get back to the rig.

So we just did a roll call over the radio, and we just wound up staying, helping. We wound up staying for many hours helping stretch line off the fire boats to the rigs to help put the fires out. That's what we did.

I guess all the other members -- four other members went to the hospital. Me and Frank helped out and we wound up going back to the fire.

That's basically it.

Q. You don't want to add anything else?

A. No. That's it.

Q. Do you know, the four other companies that you were in the lobby with, did they all get out?

A. No, no, 4 and 22 Truck got out that was Frank...no, no.

Q. Jerry Riley?

A. Jerry Riley. And 122 got out all right because I stopped by that night. I stopped by to see these guys 'cause they were right next to us. So they got out. I think 25 Truck was with those guys, and they didn't get out.

Q. Yeah.

A. They were supposed to report to Chief Barbara in the south tower.

Q. You said a lot of people were running out of the south tower. Any civilians?

A. Yeah, oh, yeah.

Q. Any firemen or all civilians?

A. I just remember people. It's really hard to say at this point. I know there were civilians. I thought I remember mostly civilians. There could have been some firemen. I don't know.

Q. When either tower came down, did you have any advanced warning?

A. Oh, no. I didn't know what it was when we were inside. I didn't know the building had collapsed, actually. I thought it was a bomb. I thought a bomb had gone off. That's why I really didn't know until after.

Q. Afterwards?

A. Yeah, that that's when it came down. I wasn't expecting that. I thought it was a bomb or something that went off.

Q. Glad you made it.

A. Yeah.

Q. Thanks for the interview. Again, what we're going to do is we're going to try and put everything together and figure out as best we can what happened.

A. Yeah.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: It's 12:00, and that's the end of this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER THOMAS SPINARD

Interview Date: January 11, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is 11 January 2002. The time is 1210 hours. This is B.C. Frank Congiusta of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER SPINARD: Thomas Spinard, Engine 7, firefighter first grade.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Ladder 1. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Tom, if you would please say in your own words what happened that day.

A. Well, I just came on that day during a 24. I relieved the chauffeur probably about 8:20 or so. We got a box on Church and Leonard of an odor of gas. So Engine 7 and Ladder 1, Battalion 1, responds. It turned out to be a false alarm.

As we were at the box, a plane passes us overhead real low. You could hear it; you could feel it. We turned around, and it just impacted the building, building one. With that, everybody got on the rig. We started driving.

I drove over to Canal Street and made a left on Greenwich, went down Greenwich, passed right in front of seven, made a right. When I made the right, there was debris, windows, metal and I guess plane debris right on the floor there between seven and I guess that would be six.

Q. Yeah, that's six.

A. Where the foot bridge is, that little overhead. Yeah, I came down and made a right. There's that little foot bridge that went across. I went up West Street after.

Q. This is West Street over here.

A. Yeah, this is the foot bridge over here.

Q. You were at the north; right?

A. We came down Greenwich. There's that little chrome foot bridge. We went under that and found our way over there. We went up to West Street, made a left, made a U turn. I parked right in front of one and hooked up.

When we pulled up in front of one, we saw the lobby windows were blown out already. You could walk into the building without the doors, just where the windows were.

Q. Wait a second.

(Interruption.)

A. I went to West Street and made a left. I made the U turn where you can make the U turn in front of One World Trade Center. I pulled up right in front of the building. I stayed out. I didn't go under the overhang that they had there. I stayed out along the curb where the hydrant is.

I hooked up to the hydrant, and I started stretching back to the Siamese connection on the corner of three, not far away, about three lengths away or so; about two and a half lengths, it was. I started pumping. We didn't wait for anybody's signal. We just started doing our own thing then.

Q. Did you start doing high-pressure pumping?

A. We're not a high-pressure pumper.

Q. Oh, you're not a high-pressure. Okay.

A. No, Engine 7 is not a high-pressure pumper.

I believe we were the first engine hooked up. There was a rig right along the curb there. It was a ladder. It was a tiller, so I don't know, whichever one, maybe 6 or something. I'm not sure.

There was a guy laying in front of it, a civilian. We also had two civilians blown out to the middle of West Street on the divider there. It's about two feet high with dirt and grass they were sitting up there. I don't think they walked up there. They were just blown up there. They were all women. They were naked. They were burnt up. They were alive, but they were -- maybe they made it; I don't know. The ambulance took them away. The guy down here who was laying down in front of the rig, the ambulance took him away also.

As I was hooking up, I had debris falling, people, glass, file cabinets. I saw a file cabinet come out. There were just chairs -- they were looking to break the windows with anything, I guess.

I couldn't call the captain. I was trying to call him the whole time. I couldn't get in touch with my captain on the radio. I estimate --

Q. When you were pumping, was water going into the building?

A. Oh, definitely.

Q. Oh, yeah.

A. Yeah.

Q. You don't know where it was coming out?

A. I don't know what was happening to it. I was pumping at 200 pounds, and I was getting a flow. Everything was fine, yeah. I had a good hydrant. I had, like I say, three lengths going in. It was right in front on the corner over here, that little set back. It was right there. Yeah, no, it was definitely pumping.

There was a lot of commotion going on. After a while I'm standing out in the street over here -- well, for a short while I was in the rig right in front of the building. Debris was landing next to it. Finally I said this is no good.

I had a proby with me -- I don't know who he was -- and I had my control man, who went into the building, his cylinder malfunctioned, emptied right out in two seconds. So I went to high-pressure hose. He came back out. He went to get another one, but at that point they had taken the chauffeur's one off the rig already, somebody.

So now he couldn't even go back in because he had no cylinders, no nothing. I said, "Joe, just stay with me." That's what we did. I needed help anyway out there, so he stayed out with me. He watched my back while I hooked up, actually.

Q. Because of the debris, yeah.

A. Because when you went to the building, stuff was really coming down heavy, glass and everything. It was just unbelievable. In fact, even our line was getting little pin holes in it from the glass.

Q. From the stuff coming down?

A. Yeah. We tried protecting it, but there wasn't much to cover it with. Usually we put a door or something. But we didn't have anything.

There was a guard booth in the middle of the street, a glass reinforced like bulletproof. I said, well, this is good for some kind of a protection. It was right in the middle of West Street. So we went in there for a minute or two. Then I started saying, you know what, even debris is landing close to here. Let's get out of here.

We walked over to the bridge, the --

Q. The north bridge.

A. Right here. I'm not sure what you're looking at. The north bridge.

While we were still in the middle of the street, another plane comes in, makes a big circle, comes around from like the Statue of Liberty direction, and hits two. We can't believe that another one is coming in. Joey got on the radio, "Another plane just hit the second tower." I don't know if he said mayday or what, but he yelled "Another plane hit the second tower."

At that point debris was flying all over, the fireball, fuel was coming down, fireballs were coming down. We just ran west and north. Then after a minute it calmed down a little bit, so we started to come back. We ran over to the rig, checked it to make sure it's still pumping okay and the hydrant's still good, we're still getting good pressure. Everything was fine with that.

We're still around there. The people who were removed at this point by the ambulance were in the street. I saw three people down there. They were all removed.

I don't know what time later a loud rumble -- it sounded like an explosion. We thought it was a bomb. We ran under the bridge, me, Joe Cassaliggi and two police officers; I think one police officer and one Secret Service. We ran under the bridge. There's a column there, over here, right on the sidewalk, a big six foot round masonry column.

We get behind that, and number two tower comes down and debris comes right around us. Heavy debris is hitting the front of the column, light debris is make it around, dust and little particles, and then the dust cloud hits us. Then it got real hot. It felt like it was going to light up almost.

After a few minutes, we get up. Everybody's okay. We make our way into the American Express tower. We come out the back of the tower. They put us in an ambulance. They start giving us oxygen, because we were all -- we couldn't even walk we were in such bad shape.

We were in the ambulance for a little while. They said we have to get out and evacuate because the other tower's coming down. We get out. We start running north on North End Avenue. We make it to the construction trailer, maybe over here someplace, one of these blocks. I think it was this block. The second tower, number one tower, comes down.

Now with this I'm still trying to call my captain. I can't get in touch with him. We only had one radio, because one radio we gave to 3 Truck. Being that me and Joe were together -- the control man radio, he took a radio, because we didn't need it, and we gave it to them. That was before anything came down. We were trying to call Engine 7. We never got an answer from them at all.

After the second one, they took Joe away in an ambulance. I said, well, I'm not too bad. I'll stay around. I walked back just to see if I could pull anybody out or put fires out or whatever. There were cars burning in the parking lots over here, big paper debris fires going on all over the place.

That was it.

Q. I've just got to ask you a couple of things. Did you look at the north tower before it collapsed?

A. Did I look at the north tower before it collapsed? I looked -- no, because once number two came down, I couldn't see anything.

Q. You couldn't see anything. Okay. I thought maybe you could see.

A. I'm looking up at the fire and thinking, wow, we're going to have a tough job there and it will probably burn for days, but I never thought it would come down. It did.

Q. Is there anything else you want to add?

A. I didn't go into the lobby, but I could see into the lobby. It seemed like there were people burnt. Guys were saying there were people burnt on the elevator, people burnt in the lobby. I heard them say there was marble blown off the walls. I imagine the concussion came down the elevator shaft or something and blew everything out.

We were pumping -- we helped 55 Engine who were also in the street. They connected to a hydrant over here across the street. We connected to that and also helped them get a line in. I think there's one over here someplace too. Or 6 Engine maybe had it.

Q. Yeah, 6 Engine said they were there.

A. Yeah, they were right under the bridge; right?

Q. Yeah.

A. So we helped them. And Joe Torrillo was with us too.

That's it. It came down so fast, you couldn't even run. It was about seven or eight seconds. You heard that loud rumble. I looked up, but I still didn't see it come down. It looked like it got fat like a big clump. It wasn't a fire cloud; it was like another cloud around it. I just started running. I said, "Come on, Joe. This way." We ran to that bridge and we huddled, and that's it, it came down right around us.

Any questions?

Q. I was just saying, my brother-in-law, he has a picture taken from a helicopter after Two World Trade fell. This whole area was engulfed, all the way over to the rivers.

A. You couldn't see.

Q. With dust and dust. I don't know how anybody could have possibly seen what was going on. I mean, the cloud was just -- you could see it right down the street. You could see the top of Seven World Trade in the picture. It's probably one of the famous pictures now that I remember. I'm almost sure it's before number one fell.

A. Because I thought the first 10 or 20 floors, I didn't think the whole thing -- I'm looking at it, and I don't see it missing, because of the cloud. It's maybe 10 floors that collapsed or just the roof. I didn't think the whole thing came down. I still didn't believe it.

Then when I got far away from it, I looked back and said, oh, shit, I see smoke but I don't see any kind of building over there. I went like, whatever, two blocks. I walked up to Murray Street, and you could see a little better when you're far away than when you're right under it.

But the visibility was zero. It was like a black cloud. We couldn't even find our way to the doorway here. There was a lieutenant that saw us -- that was behind the glass. He saw us run there as it came down. Then when it settled down, he yelled, "Hey you guys. Over here, over here," because we couldn't find our way. Between all this shit that had piled around over here around the column, because the shit was just flying, like tin, like mostly lightweight stuff. None of the heavy beams came that far. They landed around over here.

Then I thought it was gonna light up. That's how hot it got.

Q. You figure everything was heated from the fire.

A. I'm figuring, shit, now I'm going to burn to death. I lived with this, and I'm going to burn. It didn't get that bad. We got out of there, and they worked on us and that was it.

I met up with a chauffeur from 55 Engine. We took him to a trailer here, construction trailer, cleaned him up. I forget his name. But his eyes were in real bad shape. He wore glasses. I don't remember if he left them on or off, but he was terrible. He couldn't see. Nobody could see, but he was really bad.

The next day I went up to St. Vincent's Hospital. They said a guy had a cornea transplant. It wasn't him. I think it was a civilian. But somebody that had debris in his eyes.

Q. I know I couldn't open my eyes the next day. My wife had to put water on them.

A. I went home that night. The next day they sent me back. I was on 90 West Street, Engine 7, Ladder 1, putting out fires on the seventh, eighth and ninth floor for about three or four hours with nothing, no cylinders or nothing. You just didn't have them.

Q. Part of that dust might have been pulverized glass that nobody --

A. Yeah, right, it could have been pulverized glass. Everything was disintegrated. You know what the doc said? The cement is actually, it's because there is lye in it.

That's rough stuff. When I went to my doctor, he said, "You may develop asthma. Right now you're okay, but your lungs are like borderline." Because I was failing the test that we give. I went to see a doctor at NYU, like an hour-long test, and I just passed it.

Q. What's it called?

A. It was medication.

Q. Like the methyl-something test?

A. They gave me a test. Then they medicated me, and I had to wait 15 minutes and then take the whole test over again. But it wasn't like a cold air thing; it was some kind of medication.

Q. Wheezing.

A. The guy medicates you right then and there. You inhale it, you wait 15 minutes.

Q. Yes. I think they try and bring on --

A. You take it again --

Q. It stops you breathing, though. It tries to make you labor in breathing?

A. No, it didn't do that. I think it tries to open it up, and it sees the difference, tries to compare the difference between the first and the second test. I was out like five weeks medical leave. I feel better now, but I still keep wheezing. I'm still taking the inhaler.

(Interruption.)

Q. Thank you for your cooperation, Tommy.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: That's the end of the interview. It is now 1325.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 14th, 2002. The time is 1215 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER YAREMBINSKY: Mike Yarembinsky.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Mike is a firefighter first class assigned to Engine 1 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Engine 1. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Mike, if you could please tell your story in your own words?

A. We got the box at 9:00. Engine 1 got assigned on the fifth alarm. We took the West Side Highway to get down to the Trade Center, and on the way down we saw smoke coming out of both buildings.

At one point as we were getting closer, the smoke looked like it was lightening up. We thought that they were getting some water on the fire. But by the time we had arrived, it had darkened down again.

We parked the car on the West Side Highway. I don't know the street, but I believe it's the block north of the Trade Center on the West Side Highway, the north tower. Each member took a fold-up and a cylinder, and we started approaching the building.

We entered the building on the west side doorway. We got into the lobby --

Q. That's the north tower?

A. North tower.

When we got in the lobby, the first thing we saw or that I saw was there was a body covered up in the lobby, a dead body. We walked over to the command post. The command post was on the north side of the building in the lobby. My officer went over to the chief and found out our assignment. I don't know what chief. I don't know what battalion.

The assignment was to go with 16 Engine to the 70th floor to operate a line. We took the B stairwell up, and we were making our way up.

There were a lot of civilians coming down. The civilians were handing us water and this and that. The civilians were very calm.

So we continued up. At about the 11th floor, we stopped to take a break. We were maybe on a one-minute break. We stopped on the 11th in the hallway out of the stairwell. Then after about a minute or two, we decided to keep going up.

When we got to 22, we heard there was a Port Authority command post on 22. So we were stopped there. My officer wanted to find out some information, my officer Lieutenant Andy Desperito. He went over to the command post.

We noticed in the hallway that the elevator shaft had been blown out. There was nothing there, no doors, no framing, nothing. When you looked down, all you saw was the cables for the elevator and the brick work that was surrounding.

Q. Was it burning?

A. No burning, no smoke coming out of it.

When he came back, on his way back when he was walking towards us, the entire building started to shake. This is when we were on the 22nd floor, in the hallway. Initially we thought that our building was coming down or some part of it was collapsing. What we found out right after that was that the south tower had just come down.

So the lights went out in the hallway. I guess the emergency lighting stayed lit in the stairwell. I remember that the civilians at that time were becoming less and less. So we decided it was time to go. We were going to continue up to the 70th floor.

So at that point we had some guys who had dropped their masks and stuff, so we were putting all our stuff back on. We were totally geared up, getting ready to go back up, when a Port Authority man came over to us. He must have been an administrator because he had a suit and tie on. He told us that the south tower had fell, that this was a terrorist action, and that we should leave the building.

We were still going to go up because we were waiting for our own order from the department to go down or whatever the case may be. Maybe less than a minute after he told us we should evacuate, we got the order from the department. This was as per my lieutenant telling us.

So we decided to go down. We started to go down. It seemed like 16 Engine was in front of us, and me and Lieutenant Desperito were in the back of Engine 1 it was like Engine 16 in front and then the rest of the guys and then me and the lieutenant.

At this point on our way down, there were like no civilians in the stairwell. I saw maybe a couple of stragglers. There were two guys. I asked them how they were doing. They had handkerchiefs over their mouths. They said they were fine. They were walking down calmly.

Those were the only two I saw, until we got to the sixth floor when me and the lieutenant ran into who we think was Josephine, which is who ended up with 6 Truck down there that we found out later. He told me he's going to lend a hand. I don't remember 6 Truck being there. I remember two Port Authority police being there. This is approximately the sixth or the seventh floor.

He said he's going to lend a hand. He told me go down, get the guys together, move away from the building, and he'd be right down. So I continued down. He stayed there. I got down to the lobby.

When I got down to the lobby, I noticed all the windows had been blown out and there was dust all over the floor, still not realizing that when they said that the south tower had fell, they meant the whole building. Nobody really comprehended that at that point.

I remember looking out to the street, and there was nobody out there. I really couldn't figure out what was going on at that point, why there was nobody there. I said, this is a big operation. There should be more rigs outside, this and that.

I went over. I had left the fold-up because we decided only every second man between the two companies was going to take a fold-up, and the other guys would take cylinders. When we got to the 11th, the guys that had the cylinders took fold-ups. We traded. So I had left my fold-up down by the command post.

I went, I picked up my fold-up. I saw one of approximate members of my company, Kirk Long. I said, "Kirk, come on. We've got to go. We've got to go out of the building." The windows were all blown out, so you could walk through the frame. We exited the building out of the northwest point of the north tower and started walking diagonally towards where our rig was.

On the way to the rig, we saw the other two guys from our company. They were already outside. We said, "Come on, guys. We have to stick together." We got over to the rig. I threw my stuff up in the rig, my mask, and I threw the fold-up on the rig.

I remember looking up and seeing numerous jumpers, one right after another. I maybe wanted to go back, but it was a crazy thing. You're very helpless.

So we just continued to walk away from the building on the West Side Highway north. I don't know how much time elapsed, but I would say between one and three minutes -- it's hard to judge how much time elapsed -- when somebody yelled out "It's going." I looked up, and I saw the building started to come down.

I can't tell you what street I was on. I remember running north on the West Side Highway, kind of diagonally towards the water. I turned the corner as the dust was starting to hit me, and I got myself into a building.

At that point all of us had split up. I didn't know where anybody else was. I was looking. There was a bunch of firemen that went into that building also; none of my guys, though.

After that I looked outside. It was pitch-black. A fireman came in with a mask. He took it off. I put it on. I went outside. I wanted to look for the rest of the guys in my company.

A couple minutes passed. The dust started to settle. I took the mask off, dropped it in the street, and I commenced to walk up and down the West Side Highway from Chambers to the site, and I can't tell you how many times, looking for the guys in my company. It had be at least 45 minutes passed, me going back and forth, looking for guys, asking people, "Have you seen anybody from Engine 1?" because I didn't know what happened.

Finally I did run into two guys from Ladder 24. I hung out with them for a little while. I asked them if they saw anybody. They said no. Actually they said the chauffeur, Joe Falco, from our company got hurt. They put him on a boat to New Jersey. So I knew he was okay.

I guess maybe another half hour passed and finally I ran into the guys from my company. I wanted to find out what happened to the lieutenant. It was still up in the air. We didn't know if he made it or not.

We started walking back to the site with another fireman from 12 Truck, and we were going to help out down there at the site, this and that. We were about a block away from the site when somebody said someone had found Lieutenant Desperito.

So I asked, "You found him? Where is he? Is he all right?" He said, "No, I'm sorry. He didn't make it." I said, "Are you sure it's him?" He said, "Yeah." I said, "Describe him." He described him to a T, so I knew it was him.

Q. Where did they find him?

A. They found him in I believe it was the hotel next to the Trade Center. I can't tell you exactly, because I didn't see where they found him. I don't know where they found him, because they had already pulled him out by that point. They said they found him in a hallway in the hotel or near a stairwell in the hotel.

But I had spoken to a Port Authority guy that was with Andy the whole way down. He said that they were trying to get out the mezzanine level, the overpass that leads to the Financial Center. They said that's when the building started coming down. He said they were about ten feet apart. This guy apparently made it, and Lieutenant Desperito did not.

I don't know if they were saying they found him in that section of overpass or maybe he got blown in through a window to a hotel. I really don't know exactly where he ended up, because I heard a couple of different things.

That was a little bit of an emotional impact, so we took a little breather. Then we said, okay, let's see if we can help out down there. We started walking over closer, and then somebody else said Father Mike didn't make it. [redacted]

We stuck around a little bit longer, and we just looked for a couple of people that we knew. We talked to a few people. We went over to a chief -- now, this is a lot of time that had elapsed. We might not have left there until about 2:00 in the afternoon. We were walking around, and we told the chief that we were going to leave and go back to quarters and we never came back.

Q. That's it?

A. That's it.

Q. Anything else you want to say?

A. Nothing else that I can recall right now. That's pretty much the whole story.

Q. That's pretty interesting. Very good. Okay. Thanks a lot for your cooperation, Mike.

A. You're welcome.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: It's 12:45, and that's the end of this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JAMES MCGLYNN

Interview Date: January 2, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF MALKIN: Today is January 10th, 2002. The time is 9:28 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Malkin of the Safety Battalion. I'm conducting an interview with Lieutenant James McGlynn of Engine 39 regarding the events of September 11th. There's nobody else in the room, and we're in the office of Engine 39. What follows is the interview.

A. I was in this office when it came over the PA system that there was a report that a plane hit the World Trade Center. So I turned up the volume on the department radio and turned the TV on. You could see from the silhouette that it's obvious that a fairly large-size plane has hit the World Trade Center, the north tower, and that it was obviously going to be a major fire disaster, a huge loss of life.

Pretty much about the same time, over the department radio I heard an officer giving a report to the dispatcher to send all available units, send as many EMS ambulances that they could, that there was going to be a major loss of life.

Pretty much about that time we were dispatched on the third alarm with the high-rise rig. The high-rise rig is an additional apparatus that we have in quarters. It's mainly used to support high-rise fires. It provides different tools such as fans, electrical generators, hour cylinders, things of that nature.

We left here pretty much immediately. We responded with five guys instead of four. It was right at the change of tours. One of the guys was an experienced chauffeur, and he said he wanted to take the run in. I wanted an extra guy to drive the high-rise rig who had some experience. He said he wanted to take the run, and I said, "Fine, let's go."

So I responded with five guys. We headed down Second Avenue. I can just remember looking up and seeing the smoke coming from the north tower, large smoke billowing out, heavy, heavy thick smoke. So we knew obviously that we were going to have our hands full.

One thing I noticed was the traffic was for some reason very light. We went down on Houston Street I would say within -- from here, this on 67th Street. We were on Houston Street somewhere in the area of eight or nine minutes, and this is at rush hour. It can take you that much time to go around the block at this time. This particular day for some reason or other traffic was light.

We were heading across Houston before we made the left on West End Avenue. At that time I saw the plume of heavy fire engulf the north tower, what looked like the north tower. I thought it might have been a secondary explosion, it might have been a bomb. I didn't know what it was. It turned out later that I found out that that was the second tower being hit.

From my approach, they both were kind of lined up, so you couldn't distinguish one from the other, especially when you just saw the top 20 floors or so that were just totally engulfed in smoke.

We pulled up. We arrived, I would say, probably from here to there -- it originally came in 8:45. We were dispatched at 8:52. I think we were down there right around a little after 9, because we were there maybe a minute after the second plane hit.

I saw Chief Ganci and his aide as I got off the rig. His aide said, "Watch out. There are people jumping." We pulled up right along side the north tower on West End Avenue. The aide said, "Watch out. People are jumping." I just said okay.

At that point I decided to walk under a pedestrian crosswalk. Now, from this map it looks like it's over here.

Q. That's the north walk bridge on West Street.

A. Right. There's a second one down here.

Q. At Liberty Street.

A. To my knowledge, there's one much closer here, but maybe I'm mistaken. Maybe the map is off. But to my knowledge, it's much closer here, because I remember walking under the pedestrian bridge.

As we were walking, I was watching out for people jumping, because we got right about here and I had people stop and wait. I said okay, let me take a look up and see if I see anybody coming down, before we ran from this point into the building.

Q. Where did you park the rig now?

A. The rig was on West End Avenue.

Q. This is West Street, and West End Avenue is way over here.

A. I'm sorry.

Q. So you were on West Street?

A. West Street, yeah.

Q. You were near the north walk bridge someplace?

A. Yeah.

We basically reported to the north tower with my guys. Everybody had their rollups, an extra cylinder, the standpipe kit. We reported into the command station there. As soon as we walked in, one of I guess the aides said, "Start walking up the B stairwell with your men and team up with Engine 65."

We walked all the way up. We started walking up and stopping, I would say, about every ten floors or so because of getting tired. I said there's no sense getting all the way up there and being exhausted. So we were stopping about every ten floors to regroup, passing people who were evacuating at that time, civilians.

We made it up to approximately I believe it was the 31st floor. On the 31st floor we felt the building began to shake. It appeared that that building was starting to come down.

Q. Your building?

A. The north tower.

Q. Right.

A. [redacted]

Q. He didn't appear to be excited?

A. The building was shaking at this point, so I believe he was crying. But he was definitely upset. I don't know whatever happened to him. I don't know if he ever made it out.

After the building stopped shaking, there happened to be a chief there. I asked the chief, "What's going on?" There were different things being said among the guys. Like one guy from rescue was saying he was thinking it was just the facade of the building, that nothing was going to happen to this building, that we were safe. I said, "Well, I hope that's it."

It felt kind of like it wasn't immediately right around you. The fire was on the 80th floor. We were on the 31st. Any time I've heard of a collapse, it was never an entire building like this turned out to be.

Anyway, I said, "Okay, Chief, what's going on?" He's on a different channel than I am. I figured he was getting different information. I believe he got information that the south tower was down, and he just said we're evacuating and that's it. Okay, fine. That's enough for me. Let's just evacuate this building and see what's going on.

I was thinking maybe he knows something more than I do, but I was also wondering how we were now going to fight a fire for a building that's on the 80th floor if we're abandoning the World Trade Center. This is not good. Obviously you can't do a surround and drown on the World Trade Center.

So we just basically started walking down the stairs, and at this point we passed some civilians, not many. It was mainly firemen who were evacuating. We stopped to help some civilians out to give them some air that had some problems. The stairway was fairly clear.

We passed some units on the way down. The only one I remember specifically was Freddie Ill from 2 Truck. I said to Captain Ill, "Let's go. We're evacuating. Let's go. Let's get out of here." He said, "Is that on your orders?" I said, "No, it was a chief on the 31st floor." He said, "Okay. Just let me get my guys."

Anywhere, there was some confusion down there as to whether the order was given to -- I found out later whether to evacuate, and then I heard was rescinded and then it was issued again. That's all what I've heard is rumors. I can't say that that's exactly happened.

So we continued down the stairs to the lobby. We made it out into the lobby. When we made it to the lobby, I could see outside how bad it was, how the street was now full of concrete dust and fallen building parts.

It's obvious now, what happened was that vibration that we felt was the south tower collapsing. It wasn't this building. It was the south tower that had come down.

I saw what was going on outside, and I said, okay, this is really bad. I grabbed my guys and said, "Let's do a quick roll call and make sure we have everybody. Everybody stay together." When I took the roll call, I realized that I was missing one guy, John Drumm, detailed to the truck.

I asked the guys when the last time they saw him, and they said the last time they saw him was the second floor. We had been helping some people down along the way, and I assumed that maybe he got stuck with somebody and wasn't able to get them down the stairs.

We went back into the stairwell. I said, "Okay, let's go see if we can help John out." We went back into the stairwell. We walked up three or four flights. Again I said, "Are you sure you saw him on the second floor?" They said, "Yes."

We yelled on the fourth floor, we yelled on the third floor, the second floor, yelled on the handy talky. No response. I said, "Okay. He must have kept going." At that point we turned around and decided to exit. We said, "Okay, let's get out of here." When we turned around to exit, the building came down.

I believe I was between the second and third floor on the half landing, and it started to shake and vibrate. Then I heard the sound of floors imploding one on top of the other. You heard it coming, and you heard it getting louder and louder and louder and louder and things are coming down on top of you.

I hit the floor, and I rolled to the wall and just kind of covered up into a fetal position and started saying my prayers. Finally that stopped, and the debris started coming. When the loud banging stopped, I said, okay, at least I'm not going to get crushed or I'm not going to get crushed on impact.

Then the debris kept coming, and it started covering me up and I thought, oh, God, I'm going to die and just get buried alive. I said I would just rather die quickly than get buried alive. Then that stopped.

Then I felt this strange thing like air rushing up. The only thing I thought, "Am I falling? Am I going to heaven?" I didn't know what was going on. I think my only explanation is that that was the outside of the building tumbling to the street and then forcing air in and then it having nowhere to go but it came up. That's my only possible explanation of what happened there.

Then that stopped, and I just waited around and kind of nothing else happened. I stood up, kind of brushed myself off and kind of felt all my body parts. I said, "Well, okay, I'm alive and I'm okay." It was kind of a shock; there was nothing missing, nothing broken, nothing.

Q. You were in the stairwell at this time on the second or third floor, somewhere over there?

A. Yeah.

Q. Could you see daylight? Was the building collapsed? Was it black?

A. No, at this point it wasn't black. It was kind of like a twilight. There was some very little light. Initially it was very dark. Then all that, the smoke and the dust and everything, lifted and you could see.

Q. Daylight?

A. There was still smoke and there was still dust. It wasn't pitch dark, but it wasn't like daylight.

Q. Right.

A. Then finally after a while I began to see light come in.

Keep in mind, obviously, that that whole area when you see the films, whatever, that whole area was just filled with dust. So there was going to be very, very little visibility.

But after a while when that settled, that's when we realized what happened. That's when we realized and we started to see light come through, and it came through what was left of the building. That's when you realized that this whole building had come down and really what was happening. I still didn't think that the whole building came down.

At this point I talked to my two guys below me. We're okay. I had three guys with me. Two guys below me were okay. One of the guys was with me. He was okay. Everybody basically around us was okay.

One guy from Ladder 6 was with me, Chief Picciotto was with me, and Ladder 6, a couple guys were right above me. Also at that time Chief Prunty -- I started giving maydays over the handy talky, about a hundred maydays, and no answer, no acknowledgment, no response. You just kind of waited around a little bit.

Shortly after I gave the maydays, Chief Prunty contacted me on the handy talky, and he was trapped. He gave me a general idea where he was. I said, "Chief, okay." He told me that he was trapped and he was losing consciousness and he wasn't doing well. I said, "Chief, just hang in there. We're going to come and get you. Just hang in there."

I was able to walk up a flight of stairs. The stairs, instead of being in a normal position, they were kind of pushed out like they were against the walls, and there was no way out down. That area was blocked off. I could go up, but there was -- Ladder 6 was above me. They said, "Stay where you are. There's nowhere to go up here."

Keep in mind that just walking on this thing, you're afraid the whole rest of the thing was going to come down. They said, "There's no way you can go from up here. Just stay where you are."

There was a door there. I was able to force the door with the guy from Ladder 6, the door leading out of the stairwell onto that floor. We crawled in. I looked around in there. I thought there would be possibly some way out or something like that, not having an idea of the full impact of what happened.

No, can't go anywhere there. I crawled back out. I tried to reach the chief again and said, "Chief, hang in there. Rescue is coming." I just tried to give him some kind of encouragement to hang in there and see if there was anything we could do.

Q. This is all handy talky contact?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did you really have any idea where he was?

A. No, not really. I knew he was in trouble. I asked the guys below me, do they know where he is? They could hear him without --

Q. The handy talky?

A. -- the handy talky.

Q. So he was near you.

A. So they could hear him, but they couldn't get to him. They were in a very precarious situation also. They were in an area where they were on this area, and right next to them was just this hole and the hole went down like 30 feet or something.

I just said, "Okay, hang in there." At this time you're still thinking that, okay, there's going to be help arriving soon, not really grasping the full impact of what happened, just saying, okay, let's just hang in there.

He could talk. He was breathing. He said he was pinned. I said, "All right, listen, we need some outside help here. We can't do anything." There was no way I could get to him. I said to my two guys below, "Can you get to him at all?" They said, "No." I said, "All right. Just try to talk to him. Try to keep him conscious. See what you can do, and let's just see if we can get some help."

This was very early. This was probably 11:00 or so.

The dust and everything after a while began to lift. You saw a little bit of light come in. When you saw light, you began to get a better picture of what happened. When I say "light," I saw like a beam of light of a couple inches or something, not something where all of a sudden it was daylight.

You just saw a beam come there, and that's when you knew where you were kind of. You knew there wasn't 50 or 60 floors on top of you or 100 floors on top of you. We were on the third or fourth floor, and it was a 110-story building. There could be 100 stories on top of us, which means --

Number one, I saw light. So I said, okay, that's a good thing. At the same time I know I'm seeing light and I'm saying that means that this building is down.

So we just kind of stayed there, tried to make contact with other units. At some point probably maybe an hour or so after that -- I don't know if it was Captain now Chief Jonas made contact with some outside units or maybe it was Chief Picciotto. I'm not 100 percent sure who made contact.

But there was contact with outside units, and they said, "Okay, we know that you're there, but we can't come for you right now." They said they had a 40-story building, which I guess was --

Q. Was it Seven World Trade that was on fire? Across from the north tower.

A. I think it's this, Northeast Plaza.

Q. Northeast Plaza?

A. That came down too; right?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. I think that's what it was. That came down. Well, they said that's fully involved at this time. This was a fully involved building. I said, all right, they're not coming for us for a while. Now you're trapped in this rubble, and you're trying to get a grasp of an idea of what's going on there. I heard on the handy talky that we are now fighting a 40-story building fully involved.

Now you're trapped in rubble and the guys who are there are fighting the worst high-rise fire in the history of New York or history of the world, probably. I don't know, 40-story building fully involved, I guess that was probably the worst.

Q. I would have been tempted to start cursing and say, "Come and get me and forget the fire."

A. Well, I was saying to myself, well, you know, they said they can't come for us. I was thinking of Chief Prunty because I'm saying, all right, I'm alive. I was, needless to say, scared to death that something else was going to fall on us, that this building was going to come down and we were all going to die, after surviving the worst of it.

At the same time I'm thinking of Chief Prunty, who is a floor or so below me, and there's nothing I can do. [redacted] We couldn't go down; we couldn't go up.

Q. How were your guys at this time?

A. Amazingly they were pretty good. Bob Bacon was with me. He was banged up a little bit. He had blood from his teeth. I think he chipped a couple of teeth. Two guys below, I don't know how they're in this darkroom, dark area.

Basically what happened with them, Chief, is that they were in the lobby and they entered the stairwell. They opened the door to the stairwell, and I think they stayed there when myself and Bacon went up looking for John Drumm.

Since they opened the door and stayed in that stairwell, that saved them. Chief Prunty stayed in the lobby, and he was directing people out of the building at the time. Before that I was standing out there too saying, "Okay, let's go, let's go. Come on, let's go." He just was in the wrong place, because the lobby came down. When the building came down, he was in the lobby and there was nothing to stop it.

The only thing in the stairwell, it's kind of strange, just because that guy who was in rescue on the 31st floor, he said the safest place to be is in the stairwell. Well, that makes sense. Sure enough, we just happened to be in that stairwell when it came down. Purely God or accident, whatever, that's where we were.

When that stairwell came down, what happened was what forced the stairwell to stay up except the building materials collapsed and made that give way. But where we were, that part of the building just fell around it. I could draw you a diagram.

I could show you that all that was left -- just roughly say here's the World Trade Center. This is 110 stories. We were somewhere in here, and this is the stair. When this whole building came down, this is all that survived, this little nub --

Q. Unbelievable.

A. -- of about, I would say, five stories. That's where we were. We were in there.

What happened is the rest of this stairwell, when the building collapsed, took this with it. But at this point all this stuff just kind of --

Q. Peeled off to the sides. There was a mountain on the top. That was a protected area.

A. When we came out, right here there was this gully. It went something like this. I remember when we finally came out, we had to walk down into this crater. I just remember looking out here and seeing like right here people looked so close, but when I walked down they looked like far away. It was like are my eyes playing tricks on me? Why do they look -- your senses were off.

Q. What formed those gullies on the side? I mean, obviously there were eight basement levels below that, probably, so this is more or less like a collapse from the building parts --

A. Right, all the stuff, right.

Q. -- just pushing everything down next to the building.

A. Right.

So basically we just stayed there and waited and tried to make contact. Finally we made contact. I think Jay Jonas -- I don't know exactly who, but I know he made contact with Chief Visconti. The thing was we were trying to tell them where we were. We just kept telling them we're in the B stairwell.

I remember everybody had the same exasperation I did. We must have told them a hundred times: "B stairwell in the second floor, third floor, fourth floor of the north tower. I mean, B stairwell, second, third, fourth floor, north tower. B stairwell, north tower." "Where are you?" "North tower, stairway B, second, third floor."

You could hear they didn't understand where we were. I'm keep going, "My God, why aren't you listening?" Then they said, "Where's the north tower?" I was like, "What do you mean, where's the north tower? The World Trade Center. There's Two World Trade Centers."

Even though we knew there was a collapse, the idea that both of these buildings were totally down --

Q. Just fallen.

A. -- and this was all that was left was something that was just --

Q. You couldn't understand that?

A. No. It was unimaginable.

Finally what happened was one of the guys from Ladder 43 and I'm sure other companies set up these wire ropes and were able to find us. Chief Picciotto had a bullhorn or something, I think, that he used. I guess you can make some kind of siren device with that or something. They were able to key in as to where we were. Then they made contact. Ladder 6, as I said, was right above us. They had that woman Josephine.

When they made contact and I said, okay, I sent my guy up, Bob Bacon, and I still had two guys below. I had to tell people where Chief Prunty is. Glen Rohan from 43 Truck -- I sent Bacon up with the guys who were in the hallway when they said, okay -- when they finally made contact, then we knew how we were getting out. They were getting out by going up. 43 made -- I didn't have that kind of view, so I didn't know how we were going out at this point, were we going from the sides, from below or what.

Finally 43, okay, yeah, we're getting up. Come up the stairs. Okay. Go up the stairs. I sent Bacon up. One guy from 43, Lieutenant Rohan, came in, came down the stairs. I know Glen. I said, "Glen, glad to see you. How are you?" He said, "How are you?" I said, "I'm all right."

I said, "Listen, I've got two guys below here that we've got to get out somewhere." I showed him my flashlight. I said, "I'd dig right below here, but I'm afraid to touch anything. I'm afraid the rest of this is going to come down."

That's when he told me -- he said, "Well, there's not much left on top of here." I still was just like -- it was indescribable. There's not much left up here.

Anyway, he came in. I didn't want two guys standing on top of this half landing, because I was afraid it was going to collapse. There's a crack in the floor, and I said, "We have to enlarge this a little bit. If we enlarge this, then I think we can get them out of there."

I asked them, "If we enlarge this crack, can you guys get out of there?" They said, "Yeah." One guy, Jimmy -- keep in mind, he's the younger kid. He said, "Yeah, I can just crawl through that."

This other guy, Jeff Coniglio, who is always making jokes about his weight, he said, "Lieutenant, there is no way the fattest man on the job is going to fit through that hole." I just said, well, thank God he's making jokes about this because I'm about to collapse. I'm about to lose it. I said he's making jokes; I know his spirits are good.

Basically then Glen enlarged the hole. He also, through his construction experience, recognized that there was an elevator shaft alongside of him and was able to, with the Halligan -- that wall there was not cinder block; it was sheetrock. So they banged a hole through that and passed a rope down and then were able to crawl up through there and get those two guys out.

These two guys came out, and then Glen Rohan and one guy from rescue and 53 and 43 came down. Through the elevator shaft or somehow or other -- I'm not exactly sure how -- they were able to find Chief Prunty, but of course at this time he had passed. They just said, forget him, he's gone. I don't think they got him out of there for a couple days.

Q. Who pierced the sheetrock wall?

A. Glen Rohan, Glen Rohan.

Q. And where did he puncture it and for what reason? He was above you?

A. He basically at this point was -- I'm not a hundred percent sure of what happened, but he looked down and he was trying to figure out how he was going to get these two guys up because -- Coniglio from his view would give you a better understanding, because I was kind of standing behind. The wall next to them was double sheetrock. He recognized that. Like I said, I think he used to work construction. He said, "We can go through this."

I know it had something to do with puncturing that wall. Like I said, I never saw exactly where they were, because I didn't want two guys on that half landing. I said one guy on this is enough. With his flashlight he looked down. I was kind of standing on the stairs at this point. He gave them directions. He said, "Listen, this is the best way to do it."

I think it just was an easier way. I don't know exactly what he saw. Maybe there was debris. Maybe there was no way they could get up that way. Maybe it was easy to enlarge that hole. He told me once before, but I never followed exactly how they got out.

So basically then after they made contact or when they found Chief Prunty's body, there wasn't too much else to do. Getting him out was now going to be recovery; it wasn't going to be a rescue. We told them upstairs what was going on and that they needed some equipment to get him out.

At the same time they wanted everybody out of there. They didn't want anybody in there because --

Q. They were afraid of collapse?

A. Uh-huh, especially since he was gone there wasn't much sense.

I walked out at that point and just kind of looked around. I saw the devastation. It was just mind-boggling just something you couldn't imagine. Both these building were down. Granted, they were both on fire when we walked in, but they were still the World Trade Center. When you come out, it looked like something out of a war movie. It looked like something in a picture of Nagasaki or something, blocks and blocks of rubble.

Q. You can't believe it.

A. No, especially in that area. I used to work in the south Bronx before. This was --

Q. Lower Manhattan.

A. Richest area in the world.

I just climbed out of there and followed the ropes down, followed the I beams up and over. At the same time we were walking out, and sure enough, that building was still involved. I'm like, is it going to come down next?

Just when you thought it was over, you're walking by this building and you're hearing this building creak and fully involved in flames. It's like, is it coming down next? Sure enough, about half an hour later it came down.

Q. No kidding.

A. I mean, thank God everybody was out of there at that point.

I just wandered around, found my men, told them that everybody was out, everybody was okay.

Q. You got all your guys?

A. Everybody was out. That's the most amazing thing about it. We were all there. We hear of all the companies that lost total companies. That's the strange thing about it was when you came out that you just had this tremendous joy that you survived it.

At the same time you heard the numbers of people missing, you're talking about like 50 companies, you're talking about 300 people. No, they're going to find them. They found me, found us. It's going to be --

The next thing it's the next day or so and nobody was found and you realize that was it.

Q. You walked out of the building. You walked down that depression and up?

A. Yeah.

Q. You came out like north of the north tower? You were up around Vesey Street somewhere over here next to the fire building, the building that was burning? You walked up this way and you found your guys on Vesey?

A. Yeah, I think I walked down Vesey or whatever and down here.

Q. To West Street and then north?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Where did you wind up? Going to the hospital or went to quarters?

A. I stayed there for a while. Where is Stuyvesant High School?

Q. It's over here someplace.

A. I walked. And there was some other school up here, College of Insurance? No, it was north of there. I walked up here somewhere, and I think a lot of guys -- where is everybody at this point? Were they over here? Murray?

Q. Yeah, I think the staging area was somewhere in here.

A. Right around here, and this seemed like miles, because it was just -- I walked up here, kind of stayed here for a while. I was looking for some people. Then I ran into two guys, and they said they were up here somewhere. So I walked up there and I found them and basically just told -- saw people.

I stayed there for a while, and people started telling me about people that were missing and stuff. Oh, they're going to find them. They're going to find them somewhere. They're in the voids and stuff.

Then finally I walked back, because the command post was set up somewhere. I just wanted to let everybody know at the command post that we were all okay and were found and everything is all right. So I checked in at the command post, let everybody know that everybody was fine.

Then there was the triage unit or whatever, the medical unit, and I just had my eyes washed out, because they were just filled with dust. I just wanted to get the dust out, because I had scratched the cornea once before and I didn't want to go through that again. So they cleaned it out and they said everything was fine. I said, good, okay, let's go.

I basically stayed there, I guess, until 6:30, 7:00. Then 16 Truck was coming back, and I said, okay, I'm going to go back to the firehouse. Basically that was it. I came back here.

[redacted]

Q. Unbelievable.

I have a question to ask you. When you first came in the lobby and whoever told you to go up and join up with the other engine, what did you think they were telling you to do? Fight the fire? Bring your rollups? This was going to be like a firefighting thing? I was wondering what their thought process was.

A. Their assignment was to head up the stairway and do what you can.

Q. That's it.

A. My mind at this point was, all right, we're not -- I don't think we're going to be able to put this fire out. If I get up there -- I mean, 80 floors, this is not going to be --

Q. It's going to be a long time.

A. This is not going to be a one- or two-line operation.

Q. Right.

A. Let's just get some men up there. Maybe we can hook up a couple two and a halves. Our primary thing is obviously life. If we see people that can't walk out, then we have to carry them out.

I don't know of any engine company -- I don't know the closest people got up. In your experience what was the highest anybody got up?

Q. 40th floor I think is the highest I heard, the 40th floor. I think the squad or the rescue or somebody reached the 40th floor. But I didn't hear anything above that. Most guys reached about 31. The early companies that got there were on around the 30th floor.

The companies were basically on the 31st or 33rd floor, something like that. The quickest-running companies, the ones that reached the highest, when the order was given to get out of the north tower, and then they reversed and they came down.

I did hear a story. The story was that most of the companies that I interviewed, anyhow, got up to about the 31st floor before the south tower collapsed, and then they got orders to start reversing and come down.

A. Do you know what chief was on the 31st floor in the north tower? I'm not sure.

Q. No. I think that they were telling me some chief. They didn't recognize what chief it was. The people that told me from 6 Engine, he didn't recognize the chief. I'm trying to think. Because like the local chiefs were down to the lobby or something like that.

These were like secondary chiefs that made it up and were running around inside the building and that got that message on the command channel. Then they started telling people, "Get out. Get out. We're not going up anymore."

I can't remember what guys told me. I don't remember them telling me Chief so-and-so. I think they were more or less saying a chief was up there, and he told us get out.

That's about it?

A. That's about it.

Q. That's about it.

CHIEF MALKIN: It's now 2215 hours. I thank the lieutenant for this interview. This is the conclusion of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ARMANDO RENO

Interview Date: January 13, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 13th, 2002, and the time is 12:55 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Firefighter Armando Reno from Engine 65 in the quarters of Engine 65.

Q. Armando, please tell us the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. We received the box approximately 9:00 o'clock. Already had the rigs fully loaded with EMS equipment and flashlights because I knew from previous experience in '93, I was there for that explosion, you need a lot of flashlights there. Anyway, we had a good response time going down -- heading west up 42ndnd Street to West Side Highway, went downtown. There was really very little traffic.

I stopped by the north tower, let the guys off. I was the chauffeur for 65 Engine and I pulled over to the first hydrant I saw, and I picked up a chauffeur from 1 Engine also. We started to hook up to the hydrant, but we saw a better hydrant closer, right on the corner of Liberty and West. As I went to pull away, somebody took my mask off the rig on the side, so I was yelling and screaming back and forth, and I couldn't figure out who took it. They left.

Anyway, I went to Liberty and West to look at the standpipe connections there alongside the hotel, and obviously they handled the whole building, all the standpipe connections for the whole complex. Also, I drove a high-pressure rig and I thought maybe, you know, it looks like it might be needed because the 80th floor the plane hit, and the second plane didn't hit at this time yet, the south tower.

I was working by the south bridge. There were numerous car fires there. I was located by the south bridge and the chauffeur from 1 Engine was with me. There were two lengths of a 2-1/2 inch line stretched off the hydrant there on the south side of Liberty Street. We were putting out the car fires, or attempting to, and there was no -- the water had no effect on the car fires at the time. I started thinking about getting the foam off the rig, and I also noticed there were numerous bodies by Cedar Street, and I was thinking of getting the EMS equipment off the rig, putting gloves on and starting to get the bodies, putting them in bags. Well, body pieces. I have a hard time talking. They had to pull a tooth in my mouth. That's it. I lost a tooth.

About five minutes later I got hit by -- there were numerous people coming out of this hotel, International Hotel there around the corner, and we were directing them to the south side of West Street, directing them west.

Q. The west side?

A. Across, yes, go across West Street, directing them to go across, to make tracks, get going. There were two firemen there with me. I don't know what happened to them. They were also helping direct these people. Also, I had told the chauffeur from 1 Engine, there was a can and a nozzle from those two 2-1/2 inch lines, I mean the lengths, to come around the other side of the bridge and protect the bridge also from the car fires, and he came around, and that's the last I remember. I couldn't tell you any more.

Q. You didn't know about the collapse, like you didn't hear it or anything?

A. Didn't hear it at all. Didn't hear it, you know, what happened there or anything else at all. I remember --

Q. You ended up under the overpass, when you were found, I mean? Where were you found?

A. I was found at the foot of the overpass, sort of right by Cedar Street someplace, around there. Up heading east on Liberty, maybe about 200 feet.

Q. Okay. So what do you remember? You were knocked unconscious. What do you remember next?

A. The next I remember, guys attempting to take me out, actually pulling me out really. I remember telling them stop for a moment and I adjusted my body a little bit and they pulled me out, and the next thing I remember is my son in the emergency room. He's a Fire Department EMS employee and he fixed the collar. The doctors put the collar on me wrong. I had a cervical collar on. They put it on wrong. He had to fix it for me.

Really, that whole week in the hospital, I remember very little. I don't remember seeing any Fire Department personnel other than the guys from my own company coming up to see me, and that is really it. The limousine ride, the guys in 65 Engine picked me up in a limousine and took me home, and even that I just remember a little bit, coming to the firehouse and then going home. I just remember very little of that.

Q. From conversation with other people, do you know what happened to you? After that head beam collapsed, like what hit you or anything?

A. I don't know what hit me. I don't know. But it really made an impression on my back. I got a couple of wounds, it looked like shrapnel wounds across my back, like a depression. It looked like a handrail, like someone hit me with a handrail across my back. I don't remember. I couldn't remember nothing.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: All right. Well, the time now is 1:04.

Q. Oh, you have something else to say?

A. I think there was a Chief's car. I remember a Chief's car, a battalion car, coming down Liberty Street and turning onto West Street. I remember that pulling around because I was thinking, well, if you stretch a line from the rig because you might need more water, and I was looking back at the rig and I was thinking of all that (inaudible) and where the car was I have no idea, where they came from or where they went or anything. I don't even remember looking at the battalion number on it. That was it.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Well, thank you, Armando. The time now is 1:05 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOSEPH PETRASSI

Interview Date: January 13, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 13th, 2002, and the time is 1:15 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Joseph Petrassi of Engine 65 in the quarters of Engine 65.

Q. Joe, just tell us the events as you recall them of September 11th.

A. Okay. On the 11th, at approximately 9:00 o'clock a.m., we got the ticket for the World Trade Center. I believe it was the first fifth alarm. We went up to the west side and proceeded to go to the Trade Center. We could see the fire when we hit the West Side Highway. You could see it from the rig. We continued up and our chauffeur dropped us off at West Street and Vesey. We got off, we grabbed our roll-ups, grabbed an extra bottle and we went into the north tower.

At the north tower there was a Chief that directed the Lieutenant to take his men and work his way up, and that's pretty much what we did. We started heading up.

Q. Did you walk or take the elevator?

A. No, we walked. We had our roll-ups and bottles and we walked up, and I believe it was around the 20th floor that we stopped to take a breather. I'm not sure if it was at the 20th floor or 22nd, that's unclear, but we felt a shake, the building shake, and things just started getting like different. A little bit after that the Lieutenant said, well, we've got to make our way down, and we pretty much took whatever people were in the stairway, came down with them.

Q. Were there many people in the stairs?

A. Yes, the stairs were pretty full.

Q. Coming up and going down?

A. Going down. Well, when we were going up, people were coming down. But I think when we started coming down, it seemed like there was maybe a little more urgency to it. That was it. We made our way down to the lobby. The lobby looked like it was blown out, like the elevator doors. We came out of the building and we were looking up and the tower seemed to blow out, but it was on fire, and the Lieutenant said to run and we ran north up West Street. You could the feel the stuff hitting you on the back as you were running. It felt like it was right behind you. I just dove under a truck or some apparatus or something. I remember diving, but I couldn't even tell you what it was. Then everything went pitch black, everything went silent. I was disoriented. I didn't know where I was. I really didn't know what was going on. It took a couple of minutes to get my thoughts. Then I started calling out to the company. I was calling out anybody from the company. Eventually, we got together and we found each other. That was it. We went to the area. We were directed by some Chief to go north, to keep going north, and we were ordered to stay there.

Q. Okay. When you were in the lobby, is there anybody that you recognized that you knew or a company that was still in the lobby?

A. That I personally saw, no. But there were guys that did see them. I had mentioned at the time that --

Q. Do you know what company?

A. 2 Truck, Captain Ill. I think he might have been like on the 7th floor, that somebody had mentioned that as we were going down they had called to him. Just from hearing guys from other companies who told me they had seen a couple guys from 2 in the lobby. But I personally can't -- I don't remember specifically seeing anyone that I could say that I saw them exactly where.

Q. Okay. Is that it?

A. Yes.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 1:20 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER BRIAN RUSSO

Interview Date: January 13, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is January 13th, 2002, the time is 2:25 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Brian Russo from Engine 91 in the quarters of Engine 91.

Q. Brian, just tell us what you remember from September 11th.

A. Okay. I worked the night tour on the 10th and I was due to get off at 9:00 a.m. I hadn't been relieved yet. When the run came in, actually, 91 Engine responded. I actually responded with the rack unit because that detail had come in. So I responded on the initial fifth alarm for the first Trade Center. I believe that was the north tower. I think the box came in like 8:48 in the morning. We responded.

We arrived at the scene on the corner of Vesey and Church, adjacent to the north tower, across the street, in that direction. There were numerous rigs. It was myself, another firefighter from 91 and a covering Captain. We didn't have any gear. All we had was our turnout coat and boots and helmet, no radio, no masks. So we couldn't really monitor the radio handy-talkie traffic.

Proceeded to walk south along Church towards Liberty Street surveying the scene. There was debris, fires breaking out, numerous bodies. Then when we hit Liberty Street, we made a -- if you're looking south, we made a right onto Liberty heading towards the West Side Highway. This is after the second plane had hit the tower, hit the south tower.

We arrived. We had just seen a fireman get hit by a body, I believe it was Danny Suhr from 216, and they were pulling him away from the building, and we decided to take cover on the south side of Liberty under a scaffolding. There I remember seeing the members of 58 Engine. It was about four or five guys from 58 with their roll-ups, and there was so much debris coming down that they decided to head into I believe the hotel, the Vista Hotel. That's where we left them.

We continued to walk towards the West Side Highway and then over to the command post, which was on the West Side Highway, on the west side, right in front of the World Financial Center. So we met up with the rest of the members from 91. We were instructed to secure a set of irons. We tried to get a couple of extra masks, whatever gear we could find, and we were going to be sent into the north tower with an engineer to search the lower levels.

There were numerous companies there. I remember seeing Chief Ganci, he was there, you know, other guys from 91, other companies. I couldn't tell you exactly which companies were where, but since I didn't have a radio, I couldn't really monitor who was going into what building and who was assigned where.

As soon as we started heading towards the building, that's when the first -- the south building came down.

Q. Which building were you heading into?

A. We were heading towards the north tower, I believe, and that's when the south tower came down. Most of the guys ran back across the West Side Highway into one of the Financial Center subbasements. I guess it was a parking garage it would have been. I guess I was a little bit removed from them, a little further north, so I decided to run up West Street, the West Side Highway there, West Street, and I just headed north. That's where I was going. That's when the cloud hit. I got knocked down underneath the pedestrian bridge. Then you just hunkered down waiting for the smoke to blow over.

After the smoke had cleared considerably, I went back to where my company had been because I didn't realize that they were on the other side of the building. They had gotten out, but I couldn't find anybody. So I headed back south towards the towers. A couple guys from I believe it was -- I remember seeing Lieutenant Ray Murphy from 16 Truck and other men from 16. The guys were kind of a group and headed back down and see if they could find anybody, find out what was going on.

Then just pretty much met up -- I remember seeing Lieutenant Casey from 91, hooking up with him, and I just went down, tried to see if I could do anything, looking for people, victims, whatever, and searching down there. That's when the north tower came down and that's -- I mean, you just headed back up the West Side Highway, once again, trying to avoid all the debris coming down.

After that they decided to pull everybody out and I know -- what building was it? Building 5, I believe, the other tall building there, the third building that came down, they were evacuating people. So everyone just pushed up West Street all the way up towards the high school there. I forget the name of the high school.

Q. Stuyvesant?

A. Stuyvesant, yes. That's kind of where they ran the operation from there. In between the north tower and the south tower coming down, I believe I saw Chief Ganci somewhere along the way there. I don't know where he was heading to, but I saw him somewhere along the line. I wasn't sure. I'm not too clear of when that was. But other than that, that's pretty much it. Besides those few people I remember, everything else was you couldn't tell who was who, and wondering whether we were ever going to find pieces and stuff like that.

Then we tried to get back down later on to do some more searching, looking for people, but they had blockades up by then, so they weren't really letting people back down, and we just sat and waited to do something later on pretty much. That's about it.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay, Brian. Thank you for your help. The time now is 2:34 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RICHARD RATAZZI

Interview Date: January 13, 2002

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATALLION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 13, 2002 and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Richard Ratazzi, firefighter from Ladder 16. The location is the quarters of Engine 39.

Q. Rich, please give us the details as you recall them from September 11th.

A. We had just gotten off duty the morning of the 11th. Myself and Firefighter Curatolo, we were watching the -- we had heard the second alarm on arrival for the south tower. Excuse me. The north tower, the tower that got hit first. We were watching in-house watch when the second tower got hit. When the fifth alarm went in right off the bat, the truck was called. The engine had already been called because of the 10-77.

The truck got called shortly after that when it went to a fifth alarm. Lieutenant Murphy drove into quarters right after the rig had left. He told us we're gonna go down, three of us. We wind up going in the back of a police car. We had grabbed spare mask assemblies from upstairs. We had two of them.

There was three of us in the car. When we got down there we were parked -- the police dropped us off on West Street and we proceeded down West Street. We checked the rigs. We found 16, we checked the rig. We got two cylinders off of that. We had gotten face pieces here.

We proceeded down. We found a fire patrol. We got a third mask out of fire patrol and we grabbed some tools off of 16, what we could find, and we proceeded south on West Street. We wanted to meet up with 16 and we were gonna go to work with them, if we could find them. We were headed south. I believe, according to the Lieutenant, we were looking for the command post. We came under the north crosswalk on West Street. We got in front of the Marriott when what sounded like another plane coming in. Everybody was -- a group of guys, I can't remember which companies they were all from, everybody just stopped and looked up and that's when the middle of the Marriott blew out at us. Everybody took off running north. At least myself and Rob and Lieutenant Murphy did.

I ducked on the back step of Rescue 1, which was under the north crosswalk. They ducked in front of Rescue 1. I don't know whether it was under the rig or in one of the rigs. Then in a couple of seconds everything got black. I heard a gentleman yelling for help. I didn't know if it was Rob or Ray so I yelled out to him, "Keep yelling. I'll find him."

I came across what wound up was either a plane clothes cop, a security guard or a civilian. I'm not sure. He wasn't injured. He just had to find his way out. So I lead him back out to West and Vesey. Once he got out to members out there I turned around, proceeded back down West Street where I eventually met up with Lieutenant Murphy and Firefighter Curatolo who had come across I believe -- it was a fireman. I believe it might have been a chauffeur to an Engine Company. I'm not sure which company. They told me to drop my tools and assist him back out to EMS, because I believe his shoulder was all broken. It was approximately about two blocks back up to Vesey.

I left my tools there. They said they were going to stay together so I left my tools. I took him back out to Vesey. When I came back there was no sign of my tools, there was no sign of Lieutenant Murphy or Firefighter Curatolo. I proceeded to look around. There was a lot of rigs in the area. I was looking for flashlights, any lights for people searching or anybody in general. There was nobody around. I eventually came across a chief that came out of the loading dock on West Street and I informed him that I was missing two guys from Ladder 16 and that we didn't have radios, and he informed me that the area had been evacuated and that ladder 16 had been evacuated and they went through the loading dock and out to the water, the Battery Park marina area. I said, "Are you sure?" And he said, "Yeah. I don't know which Chief it was.

So I proceeded down through the loading dock. I went out to the water. I found nobody from 16 Truck, but what I didn't know was Ladder 16 was the last truck at the command post waiting to go to work and the Chief was actually talking about them and not Lieutenant Murphy and Firefighter Curatolo who I was with. So I proceeded assisting a couple of guys, I don't know from which company. I was taking Firefighter Reeg from 44 Engine up to EMS. So I assisted in getting Firefighter Reeg up to EMS. I switched the fire patrol mask for a Fire Department assembly that was up there and I proceeded back down Vesey Street, going back towards West Street. I got up as far as a little bus stop and the house for the parking garage or for the parking lot that was on the corner of West and Vesey when the north tower came down.

So I turned back, I ran up Vesey towards the water. I got blown off my feet. I looked up, I was in front of what I believe was the Merrill Lynch building or the entrance. There was a glass atrium entranceway that had the statue of like four people. The four glass doors were open so I ducked into there. I shut the glass doors behind me and a wall of black smoke and soot and everything else came past us. It was about ten to fifteen people came running through the building that I guess were working there. They weren't firemen. They were looking for a way out. I informed them to stay with me, that the street was here and once everything lifted, if you go out, go left towards the water.

When it all lifted, they went left. I hooked up with two guys, I believe they were from Queens. I informed them who we were missing and we went back down West Street thinking they might have come north again on West Street. We got up to the corner of West and Vesey. We were up by 5 Truck when a gentleman threw a chair out of, I guess, the 6 World Trade Center. He was on the floor below the top, the second set of windows in from the corner of West Street and Vesey. He threw the chair out the middle window. I remember he was wearing a white shirt, black tie, had a mustache, black hair, like nothing had happened to him. It was about the only windows left intact. Like his office door was closed. So we yelled up to him not to jump, that there would be people coming to get him. Which there was companies on the way down going up there.

At the same time we heard yells for help from the crosswalk, the north crosswalk which had collapsed. We came upon what I believe was a photographer and two other people. The only one that was injured was the photographer whose leg was busted and he was laying against the vehicle. So we went back down Vesey to get a back board by the marina -- by the water. Excuse me. We grabbed two EMS workers, we came back down and we got him on the backboard. He was a rather large individual. He started throwing up, he started going in and out of consciousness. We tried to give him a little air from the mask. That made him even more nauseous. He wanted to sit up so we kind of rolled him on his side. After that he was pretty much out of it. We got him up, we tried to get him over the debris. We had a problem lifting him up and over the debris. We yelled for help. Two women Police Officers were standing a little north of us. They finally came over and helped us and we brought him up to EMS up on Vesey and then after that we let the guys know that I had to go get some oxygen because I was having a problem breathing and I was having a problem seeing from all the debris in my eyes.

They informed me -- actually somebody had taken me into one building. When we got in there they informed me that the EMS was moved up towards the Battery Park area. So I went back on Vesey towards the water looking for oxygen and came across Chief Callan. I informed him who I was missing. He seemed to be in somewhat of a state of shock. He was being assisted by I believe it was EMS. So I proceeded north because they were moving EMS north to North End Avenue. So we got up to I guess by the time everybody stopped, I guess it was up by Stuyvesant High School.

BATALLION CHIEF KENAHAN: I think that might be Chambers.

A. Which might be Chambers and North End, where I was assisted to by EMS. The lady gave me some water and I started throwing up. She told me just keep drinking it and throwing it up if I had to, to get everything out. She asked me after about ten minutes how I felt. I informed her that I was still lightheaded but I didn't have the headache that I had. I let her know to save the oxygen. I was gonna go back out towards the street.

I went into I guess where they were setting EMS up in the building. I found the sink, I was flushing my eyes out. I got another drink of water, I was throwing that up. I proceeded out to the backside of the school, I ran into Firefighter Drum and Firefighter Meyers from Engine 39. They assisted me back out to West Street, because I believe they were evacuating that area. There was a gas leak.

When I got out to West Street, I guess it was the Hotzolah Ambulance Service was there. They wound up flushing my eyes for about 15, 20 minutes and giving me oxygen and then they proceeded to take me to St. Vincent's where I pretty much got a scrub down, checked out. They didn't really do anything and released me. I then went into the Emergency Room to see if I could find any members from my company. The only one I had come across was Chief Cassano and I called his family and informed them that he was all right. I stuck with him. He told me to stay with him and he wound up giving me a ride back up to the firehouse here where I stayed for an hour and then went back down to the command center on West 67th Street where we sat there for a couple of hours. That's about it.

BATALLION CHIEF KENAHAN: Thank you for your help, Rich. The time now is 1116 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JOHN SNOW

Interview Date: January 13, 2002

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATALLION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 13, 2002, and the time is 12:22 p.m. and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion for the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Firefighter John Snow from Engine 21, in the quarters of Engine 8.

Q. John, just tell us the events as you recall them from September 11th.

A. Okay. We got assigned on a fifth alarm, responding to the north tower. We got down there, I'd say, pretty quickly. I believe we parked the rig on Vesey, near the north passenger walkway. We responded in and we took -- the captain said take some extra oxygen air bottles with us. So we got our roll-ups and we went into the north tower. By then I guess it was really bad on the upper floors, because we weren't inside the lobby long before they started jumping. You could hear the tremendous sounds, hitting the concrete. And it seems like it took a little while before we got orders of what to do. Because when we were in the lobby the second tower had already been hit and people started running and yelling, "There is another plane coming at the building." So we didn't know at the time it was finally a military plane. We thought it was another hijacker or whatever. We didn't know it was hijackings at the time so people were just running around the lobby of the north tower, thinking that we were under another attack and then that turned out not to be true.

So I guess it was another, I'd say, ten minutes before we finally got a assignment. I remember the captain saying, I guess the Chief told him, we're not trying to put the fire out now. We're going to try to save people. So we, along with 22 Engine and 13 Truck, we went over to the elevators and myself and I think it was Mike Byrne, he opened -- someone had said that there was someone inside an elevator in the lobby and we managed to pry open the elevator and there was a woman in the back. She was scared to death. We got her to come out. And then 13 Truck got an elevator to work, because we were assigned to go up to the 27th floor of the north tower. This was the out from 13 Truck, he started operating the elevator. Guys went up in two or three trips. I guess within five minutes 22 Engine, 13 Truck and myself, 21 Engine, we were on the 27th floor. We took it to the 24th or 25th floor and then we walked up a couple of flights and I'm not really sure of the time frame as far as how long we were in searching that floor, but I knew there was a tremendous crash of the south tower coming down, but we didn't know at the time it was the south tower. We just thought it was upper floors maybe that -- maybe an upper floor that had collapsed, because there was a tremendous crash and everybody just hit the deck. Nothing happened after that so we really weren't sure what was happening. We weren't really getting any radio communications and so the Captain just said, you know, we kept searching the floor. It didn't seem like there was anyone on that floor.

And then I guess after another couple of minutes the Battalion Chief, I'm not sure of his name, but I think he was with the 12th Battalion, he came on to the floor and he said, we're evacuating. He said, "This floor is clear. We're evacuating everybody out." So we just started going towards the exit and Captain Burke said, all right -- he figured the stairwells were gonna be crowded. He said, "If we get separated or whatever, we'll all meet at the rig." So we started our way down and the stairs were very crowded. Guys were helping civilians still coming down. There was a person in a wheelchair. So the descent down probably took fifteen to twenty minutes. I didn't have a radio, but Mike Byrne had a radio. He said -- I don't know how far behind the Captain was from us, but he had talked to the Captain a couple of times on the way down the stairs on the radio and the Captain said to him a couple of times to meet, we'll all meet at the rig. I guess the last time he talked to him was when we hit the lobby floor. He must have said, I guess, "Everybody meet at the rig."

I remember when we got to the lobby floor 65 Engine had just gotten down also and that's when one of the guys of 65 told me the other tower had collapsed, because I still hadn't known it up until then. And we saw some guys from 2 Truck in the lobby. They said they were just waiting for their Captain and they were gonna be getting out.

So there were still some people from those fire floors that were trapped upstairs, I think a couple of people still hadn't jumped. Somebody was saying in the lobby, "Somebody got hit about a jumper. You guys gotta be careful even leaving the building."

So we started moving out towards West Street. It was myself, Mike Byrne, Jimmy Foley started walking towards West Street and I guess we just hit West Street when we heard the roar or the rumbling. We just looked back and heard the rumbling of the tower coming down and everybody just ran up West Street towards where an overpass was.

Q. Was that the north overpass?

A. Yes. Heading north. It was kind of like you knew that the dust and everything was catching you. The guys just started diving, tried to dive behind something and then dust and other debris just overcame everybody. Everybody was just trying to get cover behind something and then just, you know, it kind of took a long time for all of that to lift. And then everybody was just trying to think of where everybody else was. Did all our guys make it, get out? You know, just communications were pretty bad so we just tried to hope that everybody got out. It took a while before we finally gathered all the guys back together again and the only guy, you know, that eventually hadn't got out was the Captain. We weren't sure about our chauffeur because it took a while before we were ever able to get in contact with the chauffeur, because he was running from the rig because our rig got pretty much destroyed and he said he was lucky. He had just walked away from the rig a little ways when it was coming down so he had a chance, he was able to run far enough so he didn't get hit with all the debris.

Then just everybody -- the next couple of hours it's kind of foggy, but everybody was just kind of like walking down towards the collapse. You know, trying to find out where everybody was. So everybody was pretty much in shock or whatever. That's as much as I really remember about everything.

BATALLION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay, John. The time now is 1232 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PATRICK CONNOLLY

Interview Date: January 13, 2002

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATALLION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 13, 2002 and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion for the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Patrick Connolly from Ladder 16, in the quarters of Ladder 16. The time now is 1135.

Q. Patrick, just tell us the events as you recall them on September 11th.

A. Basically I live in Queens and my house looks right at the tower, and I was jogging and not too far from Haz-Mat 288 and saw the first explosion and immediately, you know, saw what was developing and knew it was something pretty serious. My brother Brian who works for Ladder 17, he was at home so I decided to run to his house and just let him know, make sure he was aware of what was going on. When I got to his house we turned on the TV, and when we turned on the TV we saw the second plane hit.

So we decided right then and there that we were just gonna go in on our own accord and he had said to me he was gonna go in. He had to go to the Bronx to get his bunker gear. I said I had been issued my two sets of bunker gear the night before from the Quarter Master. So I said, "We'll just use my stuff." We used a 1620 key over on haz-mat and got a helmet and a pair of boots from -- because you only get bunker gear with a pair of boots and a jacket, two sets. So that's what we did. We went to haz-mat and they were all gone already at that stage. We looked on the vacation list, took the helmet from one of those and we made our way through the Midtown Tunnel. My brother drove us -- my other brother drove us to the Midtown Tunnel.

We got off there, we jumped into a police bus going in and that police bus drove us to the intersection of Canal and West Broadway. Just as we were entering into the Midtown Tunnel the first tower collapsed and, you know, kind of just getting ready as we were riding in and my brother's telling me, "I don't know what to expect."

And we got off at Canal and West Broadway and we're looking down on the tower. There was a lot of debris in the area. From up there, from the collapse of the first tower and we decided to walk. We you can walked about a block and then a Police Ford Explorer picked us up. It was a mounted, actually that had a horse carriage on the back of it, and they drove us three blocks north of the Trade Center, which would have been the intersection of West Broadway and Warren Street. And we got out there and he said he couldn't take us any further. So as soon as we got out of the car then the debris field was a lot thicker and basically you could see the tower burning and stuff, but you couldn't really -- you couldn't pick out fine details and we just saw people running around aimlessly. So we were just grabbing them and shouting at them and pointing them in the right direction. A couple of people couldn't -- they were just sitting down. They refused to get up. We picked them up and carried them out a little bit and then they kind of got the message and they moved on of their own accord.

We walked down and we saw somebody and we asked them where the firemen were and they said down and to the right, which would have led us right to the command center. Down to Vesey Street make a right turn. That's what our approach was. When we got to the intersection of Park Place I think it is and West Broadway there was a EMS bus there, a EMS SUV and we looked inside and we saw a Scott mask and we saw a search rope and we saw a medical bag. We thought they would come in handy so we broke the window and took that stuff out. The Scott mask, I tested it and it didn't work so I just left it where it was. We took the search rope and we took the medical bag, and we just proceeded to walk south on the north basically, but walking south towards Vesey Street.

So when we come to the intersection of Vesey Street and West Broadway, you have to go left or right. We were going right heading towards the West Side Highway and as soon as you turn right, about seven steps after you turn right there is an overhead foot bridge that would lead from 7 World Trade Center into 6 World Trade Center. We were coming over just there, right there and as we approached that, the underside of it, I said to my brother, "I said, this thing is gonna come down on top of it." And he said, "Then we'll just run to the other side of it." So as soon as we got under it we ran to the other side of it and the debris was falling so we were kind of cautious when we came out. We came out and maybe about one step past it and as we came past it my brother had said to me -- you know, the whole way down he was explaining to me that this is nothing like what you deal with, what you're expected to deal with. He said, "There is a lot of people gonna be hurt on the outside." He was a policeman so he was all concerned about a secondary device.

So he was saying that, you know, he kept drilling that into my head: "Secondary device," "Secondary device," "Secondary device." You know, it's not over. There is something else that's gonna happen. He goes if that first tower came down, he said, this might go down too. He was telling me not to go into the buildings. He said, basically, if you see firemen we're gonna look for them and help them immediately and if we see pedestrians, whoever we saw we're gonna help them.

Basically, when we got underneath to the other side of that foot bridge, to the west side of that foot bridge, he said to me, "You know, we should probably split up at the next corner in case we get jammed up in this thing together." And I was just like, you know, totally naive. I just said, "No. You're crazy."

And as soon as I said that, I felt the ground shake and I looked up and the whole top of the tower was starting to fall and my brother turned and he didn't even look up. He turned and there was already about a foot of debris on the floor and as he turned he went to push off with his legs, but he was pushing too hard and he slipped in place and fell. And I reached down and as I turned again I reached down and caught him right in the back of the pants and I threw him. I lifted him off the ground and I threw him up to his feet and I threw him too hard and he actually fell down again underneath the foot bridge and he got up again and I got up again and I basically came -- the foot bridge was there. I got to the corner of West Broadway and as soon as I got to the corner of West Broadway, I made a right turn. As soon as you make a right turn on West Broadway right there, not even a foot north on West Broadway there is a service entrance to 7 World Trade right there and I saw another fireman standing right there. He was standing right there. Chides me like "In here, bro. Dive in here." The door was closed, but it was inset, you know, 18 inches as is normally, a normal 36-inch door would be. As I make a left, I saw my brother who was directly behind me. And I just left my feet. I drove for the one corner and as I dove for the one corner I saw that my brother was out here, right out in the wide open spot.

The next thing, I just started getting crushed from above. I was just getting hit. But nothing hard. Like just, you know, considerable smacks and stuff like that, but nothing that you couldn't take. Nothing that was pulverizing me. And I took my T-shirt, shoved it into my mouth, held my nose closed, took one last breath and waited to die.

Apparently it got a little bit harder and the noise got really severe. It sounded like a severe wind storm, a severe rainstorm. The next thing I know, like maybe a half a minute passes by and it suddenly got very quiet again. So I get very quiet. I kind of threw my shoulder like that and all the things that were on top of me kind of shifted off and I couldn't believe it. I couldn't believe that you're alive. I tried to scream for my brother, but I had the shirt in my mouth. I tried to pull the shirt out a little bit, and all the air was forcing into my mouth so I shoved it back in again.

I knew that the door was there on my left-hand side. That's the only thing I knew. I didn't see that other fireman. The who was calling me, I didn't see him. I didn't see him, I didn't hear him, but I knew the door was there. So I hit it like that (indicating), like three times like that and then I heard three knocks coming back from about 5 feet off, which was where my brother was. So I kind of felt better about that. At least I felt he was okay because we couldn't communicate really through talking and I just kept hitting the door and hitting the door and hitting the door, and eventually maybe ten minutes later I felt my brother's arm grab my arm. So of course obviously you're emotional, you're grabbing each other and hugging each other and going through the whole gamut of emotions and while we're doing that, the door pops open.

We're not sure, you don't know what to think. Is it an explosion? Is the building starting to settle and forcing the door out? We didn't know. And then as the door opened up the fireman that was calling me was on the other side of the door. Somehow he forced the door and was pulling us into the space, into the -- now basically into the belly of 7 World Trade and he explained that he was a Fire Marshal, named Joe Brosi and my brother Brian, he knew Joe before he was a Fire Marshal working 17 truck. So he and my brother, they were partners. It was like a real strange coincidence. Obviously a very happy one again to get together. The radio, Joe's radio, he was the only one that had a radio. He was the only one actually working that day. His radio was starting to go crazy. I heard maydays on his radio and I heard, you know, there was a lot of confusion on the radio and I was all excited and they thought, Brian and Joe thought that we were in a fall out shelter, but it was getting dustier and dustier. The conditions were getting -- the visibility was starting to deteriorate a lot.

The only thing I knew, that I wanted to do was I wanted to go back out the door that we came in and make a left turn and walk straight up West Broadway out to safety. They were a little bit more controlled. They decided to stay put about five minutes. And think things through and they were gonna go down. There were some interior stairs and they were gonna go down to probably more like a bomb shelter area and I think when Joe looked, it looked like it was destroyed. So we decided that we would tie the search rope off to the doorway and the three of us hand in hand decided that we would walk out. And as we came out we started to walk north and slowly but surely and up and over and under steel and cars were -- cars with tires and cars were popping and they were just starting to light up spontaneously and there was near zero visibility at this stage. It was better though than it was right after the collapse. And then we walked up two blocks. We walked up, there was a hot dog stand there. We broke the window in the hot dog stand, took bottles of water and we were washing our eyes, because our eyes were burning. We made a left on Park Place. We got to the corner of Park Place and I'm not sure what street that is right there, but basically that intersection here, right in that corner right there there was an office building and we ran into that office building and we ran in and we were washing our face and getting all this stuff out of our eyes and we reached over and there was a doorman there and we asked him, "Is everybody out of the building?" He said, "Well, I just want to check the second and the third floor." So we said, "well, we'll just get cleaned up and we'll help you out." So we went in, we got cleaned up and we helped him out searching the building. Then we came down again. When we came down, we're right over here at this stage (indicating).

Q. So that's the corner of Park and -- we're not sure what street that is.

A. Right.

Q. Okay. It's between West and --

A. -- and West Broadway.

Q. And West Broadway. Okay.

A. And one block -- exactly one block west of West Broadway or one block east of the West Side Highway. And right when we were there at that corner you looked back on what is going on and somebody had screamed that one of the buildings, surrounding buildings was coming down as well. So we told that guy, "You gotta come with us." He was pretty hesitant. We said, "You gotta come and that's it" and he decided to join with us and he started to move.

As we started to move north on that street I ran into staff Chief Mike Butler, who was a friend of our family's and immediately grabbed him and he was looking -- he wasn't really in great shape either. He just basically was kind of all dusty just like we all were and just kind of trying to put some sort of plan of action into place and he said, "Pat" -- he said, "Pat, you set up over there for ladders and give me another line over there for engines." And that's what we did. We just tried to get people together and get ladders on one side and engines on the other side, when a call came through again that there was a bomb in the area. Then we all got to the West Side Highway and we ran towards Manhattan community college. That's pretty much where we stayed then like everybody else until about midnight that night when we were one of the first companies to go back in searching on the main pile of debris. And that's pretty much it. I didn't see any -- you know, because of the timing of everything, approaching it from the north side it was really, really quiet. There wasn't many -- there was no apparatus at all on West Broadway. There was nothing at all. No firemen really at all on that street. I didn't see any of them at all. I didn't see any of them in front of me. I had hoped that we were gonna meet up with them. Unfortunately, I don't have any information regarding to who and when and where, and that's about it.

BATALLION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay, Pat. Thank you for your help. The time now is 1150 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC KENNETH DAVIS

Interview Date: January 15, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT DUN: The date is January 15, 2002. The time is 1540 hours. My name is Richard Dun of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

PARAMEDIC DAVIS: Kenneth Davis, paramedic, Shield No. 3204 of Battalion 22.

Q. In your own words, could you please tell us what happened on the day of September 11th, 2001.

A. The morning of September 11th, I was going to do some volunteer work for Mark Green in Manhattan, and we met in Long Island City at the union office. From the union office we were going over to the city, a bunch of us in a van, and we took the 59th Street bridge. As we were driving over the 59th Street bridge, just looking out the window, we saw a plane hit the World Trade Center, what we thought was a plane, and out of disbelief, I was like did anybody else just see that? They're like what? I said a plane just hit the Trade Center. Everybody was like, oh, yeah, right. When they looked, you could see the flames and the smoke starting and they're like, wow, it must have been one of the little planes. I said, no, it looked like a jet. So now everybody was in panic because we didn't know, it was a clear day and we figured, well, is it terrorists, is it accidental? It was such a clear day, you can avoid it but...

So we went over to Mark Green's office and we got on the phone and called to see where they needed us. We figured if something big like that, you'd find out where everybody's got to be. They asked us to go up to Metropolitan to pick up an ambulance up there and whatever equipment they could give us. A bunch of us shot up there in a van. From there we went down the FDR Drive towards the Trade Center and there were just thousands of people running towards you on the FDR. It was surreal.

So we got down to South Street, to the ferry terminal, and set up a triage station. There was a doctor there, an anesthesiologist, I believe Mark Heath was his name. I know he shot a lot of video on his digital camera while he was there also. I helped him set up triage in an area upstairs in the ferry terminal.

Q. Were you receiving a lot of patients at this time?

A. Not what we were expecting because a lot of people were just getting out of there.

Q. Running by you.

A. Just running. Basically, you saw people that were wounded and you were grabbing them because they were in such a state of shock that they didn't know what was going on any more than you did and they just wanted to get out of there. Some people, as you were grabbing them, they didn't want to sit still for anything, so you were just grabbing their clothes and using their clothing as bandages and just say okay, fine, hold this and keep going, you know, don't go back that way. I saw some patients at the ferry, and the building had already collapsed, the first tower, so we went down, a couple of us, to the site to see if we could help down there, and it was just sheer madness. You couldn't see anything with all the dust in the air.

Q. Did the first building go down yet?

A. Yes, the first building had already come down.

Q. Okay.

A. What made it really bad was just trying to breathe. It's not fog, it's ash, and you could only see so far. But, literally, we didn't have masks yet or anything because we just were there. We found bottled water or whatever and cracked hydrants. You were just scooping water into your mouth and spitting mud out and people were running by you and they're running in every direction because they didn't know which way to go.

Q. Was there a lot of chaos and confusion?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any officers from the service?

A. There were police officers everywhere, firemen everywhere, apparatus all over the place. It was kind of like a discotheque, the easiest way to describe it, the lights from the trucks and the fog machines, that's how it looked, and people screaming and just running and you're tripping over each other.

Q. So did you leave your vehicle at the South Street Seaport?

A. We were transported up. They had taken a couple of patients to the hospital.

Q. Which one? Beekman?

A. I believe Beekman. So we hopped a ride up and jumped down from there and ran up there.

Q. And went on foot?

A. Yes.

Q. So at this time you had no longer --

A. I no longer had a vehicle. But they were everywhere. Some were crushed already, melted looking. But they were everywhere. The keys were in them. You could get in if you needed it and go. But it was a mess, going through the ashes, some places a foot thick, two feet thick.

Q. This is still the first building?

A. Yes. The second building had just started to come down and you could feel the rumble in the ground, and we were like, it can't be the train because you know it's not running. So we all started to run down the street and the building had come down.

Q. Which way did you run?

A. Honestly, I don't remember which street I was on. It was just, like I said, it was chaos, and running down the block I had tripped and fallen and my left knee blew out and I fell on it and I was in a lot of pain. I was just holding it and a fireman and a police officer grabbed me and dragged me up the street. But meanwhile, while I was laying there, I reached down to see what I had fell over and it was somebody's lower leg that had apparently got blown off them in the explosion. So that was pretty sick to say the least.

I got up the street, got some tape from one of the firemen up at the corner that had some supplies,

I taped up my knee and I kept working. Again, it was just trying to get people out of there, get them to different hospitals and whatever.

Q. Did you see any EMS officers that you recognized?

A. At Ground Zero you'd see so many people.

Q. Do you remember in what location around Ground Zero?

A. Over on the side of -- well, I saw some people by Trinity Church.

Q. So that's down here. Trinity is down this way.

A. Then over on the other side by City Hall.

Q. City Hall is over this way.

A. Yes. They were setting up in a building. They were starting to set up inside one of the buildings over there.

Q. So you were more on --

A. On this side, yes.

Q. The east side; you were on the east side?

A. Right. The eastern side, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. It was on Broadway, I believe, a building on Broadway. They were setting up inside the building that they wanted to get patients in there and that building started to tremble a little. So they said, hey, let's get out of here, too. So everything we had just brought in there we started handing back and forth like a big convoy, just handing it back and forth to each other out of there. Then they were going to set up in City Hall Park, and I said you can't, it's outside, you can't have patients in all this soot, you can't breathe. So then they were moving them down to another building over that way and I said, well, they had enough people there. My knee is really hurting. I said, if something else collapses, I'm not going to be able to run, so let me get back down to the ferry terminal and help there. So that's when I went back to the ferry terminal.

Q. That was South Ferry?

A. Right.

Q. Because they had (inaudible)?

A. Yes. This is Whitehall Street, whatever it is.

Q. South Ferry.

A. So we were over there and we had the triage set upstairs, and basically it was just a lot of bumps and bruises that we were seeing because a lot of people were just getting on boats and ferry boats and leaving and they had barges that pulled up, people just got on them to get them out of the city, to get them over to Brooklyn or to Jersey, wherever they took them. But it was a lot of bumps and bruises, a few broken bones, gashes, cuts. It was not as many patients as we really thought we were going to see.

Q. Did you see anybody that were missing that you know of?

A. Not that I know of. I know people that are missing or have been declared dead and I know of them. I don't recall if I saw them or not that morning because some of them I was close to, I honestly don't remember if I saw them that morning or if I'm just remembering them in my head because I saw lots of people there. It's just crazy. It was craziness. You'd hear the alarms from some of the firemen's Scott packs going off.

Q. Did you have a radio that day?

A. No. I didn't have radios they give out, and if you had one, you couldn't get through to anybody because everybody was screaming.

Q. That was the thing, because they're trying to clarify, people who had radios, were they able to communicate?

A. I don't think so. Like every fireman that I was around that had one --

Q. Mayday Mayday.

A. It was all Maydays, it was guys yelling we're over here, we're over there, we got one here. It was nuts. The police that were down there were really -- they were phenomenal. They were just grabbing stuff and helping everybody. The firemen, they're used to doing the disaster stuff, but it was just so overwhelming. But the police were really -- they were a lot of help. I would say, hey, can you grab this and they were like yeah. It was really good.

Q. So about what time did you wrap up?

A. Well, I went back to the ferry terminal after I got hurt and I stayed there until almost 11:00 o'clock that night before they told me it's now time for me to go to the hospital. I would have stayed. I guess the adrenaline keeps you going.

Q. Did you go to the hospital?

A. Yes. I ended up going on the ferry over to Staten Island to St. Vincent's. They x-rayed me, medicated me and all, and I went home. Since then I've had to have surgery on my leg.

But it was pretty intense over there. I know guys that were looking for their ambulances when they went back, they weren't there. Somebody could have just used it or whatever. But it was weird. You'd go down the street and see parts of an airplane, the wheels, that were in the middle of an intersection in one corner and it's part of a plane. You don't expect to see that in Manhattan.

LIEUTENANT DUN: Okay. This concludes the interview with Kenneth Davis. The time now is 1550 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC JOSEPH JEFFERSON

Interview Date: January 16, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT DUN: Today is January 16, 2002. The time is 7:40. My name is Richard Dun working with the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with...

PARAMEDIC JEFFERSON: Joseph Jefferson, paramedic from Battalion 26, Shield No. 2410.

Q. In your own words, can you just tell us what happened on the day of September 11th, 2001.

A. Basically, we were doing our tour of duty or we were in the beginning stages of our tour of duty and we were at Bronx-Lebanon Hospital, we were in the Bronx, which is about 173rd Street and Grand Concourse, when we heard that a plane had struck the World Trade Center. We were still basically finishing up. Then we heard that the second plane hit. We were in contact with the dispatcher, who said that she needed some units to go down there. So we were dispatched to go down to the World Trade Center. So we left from there and went down to the World Trade Center.

Q. Did you take the streets or did you go to the highways?

A. We took the streets to the highway, basically.

Q. Okay. When you got down there, how was it?

What was it like when you pulled up or when you got close to the site?

A. Well, once we got -- we took the FDR and we came around the back, the back way, up West Street from --

Q. South Ferry.

A. South Ferry, that exit. When we got down there, it was just almost like a death silence. I guess you could say it looked like a war zone I guess.

Q. Did you see a lot of debris?

A. You could see part of the plane or what we thought might have been. There were cars on fire. There were body parts.

Q. Was there a lot of chaos, people running, trying to get away?

A. From the angle that we approached, from that side, there wasn't a lot going on. There were numerous vehicles that were heading towards Ground Zero, I guess, which is what we call it now.

Q. At that point, when you got there, did the first building collapse already?

A. No. We got there before the buildings came down.

Q. Before the buildings came down. So the buildings were still standing?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. So as we drove up, I guess we got to -- I'm looking at the picture now. I'm trying to see where is West.

Q. This is going uptown and that's downtown.

A. So we were coming up this way and there was somebody --

Q. Liberty and West? There was a triage station.

A. We actually never made it up to the triage center. This is the tower right here, right?

Q. Right.

A. This is the first one that came down?

Q. Right.

A. As we got to about here, traffic was being diverted to go from the northbound lane to the southbound. They were setting up the vehicles there. We turned to go up that way and a firefighter came running out from one of the towers and he was basically saying are you guys medics? He flagged us down, are you guys medics? We're like, yeah, what's going on? He said, well, one of our firefighters is down and we need some help. We have EMTs in there and they're screaming for medics. So I stopped the vehicle, came around, grabbed my trauma bag. My partner got out of the vehicle and said you want me to grab the other stuff or what? So I said okay, yeah, grab it and run ahead a little bit to see what they have.

Q. Is that where you left your vehicle and that was the last time you saw the vehicle or you got back to it?

A. We got back to it.

Q. Oh, okay. Because people left vehicles.

A. Right. So I guess the vehicle was parked on like the side street.

Q. On the west side before Liberty?

A. Right. So as I went down that block towards the World Trade Center, No. 2 building, they were bringing him up on a stretcher and we actually met him on the corner there, and they had their vehicle and the BLS vehicle was there and they were in the back. So I jumped in to see and it was the firefighter who had I think got hit by someone that had jumped out.

Q. Do you remember his name?

A. No. I don't recall. [redacted]

[redacted]. Plus I don't know where my partner is. My partner never met me at the vehicle. So she said, well, just go to the hospital. So basically what I did was I went back into the vehicle, I grabbed my equipment and I exited the vehicle, closed the door, and the BLS took him to the hospital with about four firefighters.

So I went back to where I believed the vehicle was supposed to be but it wasn't there. So I said where's my bus? Anybody seen 302? Anybody seen 302? He said yeah, yeah, he went off that way. I said what? He said yeah, your partner took the vehicle. I said no. I was like he didn't leave me. I know he didn't. So it was like where is he? So then I was looking around, I turned back around, and right about where I had met the other guy, my partner pulled the vehicle up here --

Q. To Liberty?

A. To Liberty.

-- to try and meet us and somehow we missed each other. But the vehicle was there, but he wasn't. So I went to the vehicle, I went to open the door and the door was locked. I went around to the other side to try and see if I could get the equipment out, and as I was standing there, I heard this rumbling and I looked up and the building was coming down.

Q. That was the first building coming down?

A. That was the first building, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. So I took off and I ended up hiding on -- I ran past -- I guess that's 90. The building that was the next over is 90 West. I remember I passed that building (inaudible) into the building. So I turned around to run into the building, but the stuff was coming down so fast that I wasn't able to get into the building. So I ended up hiding in the windowsill trying to cover up and basically the stuff was coming past me like an avalanche, you know, it sounds like a freight train. So I looked back and I saw like this big piece of wall about -- it had to be about maybe four feet long and about three feet wide or something like that, it came across my back, knocked me down to my knees. I was like, God, I'm going to get buried alive here because there wasn't that much space. I tried to break the window to get into the window and there was a fence, a gate inside of the window, so I couldn't climb into the building through there. So I was just there waiting until it all stopped.

Once it stopped, you know, I'm sure it sounds very familiar, it was like just nothing, just silence and you couldn't see because of the cloud of dust.

Q. Did you have a radio that day?

A. I had a radio.

Q. Were there any transmissions going on?

A. At that point I didn't have the radio.

Q. Okay.

A. But it was just silence. Then, trying to breathe, it was like you started coughing and gagging. Then you started hearing people calling out for help (inaudible). I stood there for a couple of seconds and then I heard a couple of secondary explosions and some vehicles were engulfed in flames, you know, they were on fire. So I go this is not the place to be. I hope I'm talking up loud enough. I grabbed my trauma bags and put it back on my shoulder and I started feeling around. I called out for help a couple times for myself and then I realized I'm supposed to be the help. Then I started telling people come towards my voice, come towards my voice, because I knew I was on West Street, I didn't know exactly where, but I knew that, if they were further into where the buildings were, they should probably come out towards this way and walk up towards the South Ferry.

I saw a female cop. She had a flashlight, so she was able to help direct the people who went into one of the buildings, and they had already had some water and they had garbage cans filled with ice set up. So some people came in and began to like wash their faces off and stuff like that. There was a vehicle parked, Vehicle 440. It was parked like in front of that building. So I went inside that vehicle and hooked up with an EMT, she was from Jacobi, with a guy who was injured a little bit, he had hurt his leg. So I treated him.

Q. Okay.

A. What else? I mean, it was so much. As I was treating him, another EMT came in and he was hurt. A medic was bringing him and she said Eddie's hurt bad. He had a gash in his back and his arm was broken. So I splinted his arm.

Q. Eddie who?

A. Martinez.

Q. Martinez.

A. The EMT, his last name was Joseph.

Q. From Jacobi?

A. From Jacobi. Lamanna was the medic that brought Eddie over there. But as I splinted his arm and treated him (inaudible). As I splinted his arm, I was helping (inaudible) and stuff like that and we told him grab some equipment because I don't think that this would be a good place, it might be a collapse, it's damaged or crushed, if not totally destroyed. So I said, if anything else falls, because I didn't know how much of the building fell, I didn't know whether it was just the top or whatever, I said I don't want us -- being inside the vehicle is not going to be the safest place, so let's just grab some equipment, couple up the 02 and bandages and stuff like that and let's get into this building. Basically we were moving towards, like I said, back towards South Ferry. I hadn't seen any supervision or anybody, basically, except the few people that had been...

So as we went into the next building, I said let's go into this next building, wait a couple of seconds. Other people were coming in. That's when I met up with my partner. We basically experienced almost the same thing. He was hiding in another windowsill because he was unable to get into the buildings. But after that a few more people came in and we said, listen, we're going to try and get you guys out of here, just stay put for a second and just make sure that it clears up a little bit and we're going to get you guys as far to safety as we can.

Eddie Martinez started feeling a little bit worse. I thought that he might be developing a pneumothorax because of the size of the gash in his back. It was pretty deep. I sent him with Karen Lamanna and another voluntary EMT in a stair chair with oxygen towards the treatment area. I heard there was some kind of treatment there at South Ferry. I said get him down there, they had some buses or whatever, and I said I'm going to double back and help the people that were left.

Q. Building 2 still didn't come down yet?

A. No. After they went down --

Q. South.

A. South. I went back and I said okay everybody, let's get a head count and see how many people are in here and we're going to start -- so I went back out -- I said stay here and let me just make sure the coast is clear, and as I was going out to go, that's when the second building came down. So I ran back in the building. It felt a little bit safer because it was one of the big buildings. So I sent them as far back into the middle of the building as possible. The windows were shaking. It was like all over again.

After that subsided, a couple more people came trickling in. After cleaning them up, we did a head count and we had like about 20 people. So little by little, as it cleared up, we brought them down, went into another little place, you know, it was like taking them section by section, and we got all the way down to where there's like a health club or something that was down there.

Q. New York City Health and Racquet?

A. Right. We got them there and I told them listen, I said remember my name, I'm Paramedic Jefferson, I said I'm going to get you guys out of here, I don't know exactly how, but just stay put. There are some bathrooms facilities here and there are some phones, if you want to make a phone call or something, do that, and I'll be back in a couple minutes and we're going to get you out of here.

So my partner and I left there and started walking down towards south and, funny thing, a lady in a mini school bus drives by and she's like, excuse me, I need to find the Brooklyn Bridge, I need to get across it. I said, ma'am, I can't promise you I can get you across the Brooklyn Bridge, I said, but I need your help. I have about 20 people that I need to get over to the hospital, would you mind giving some assistance? She said I don't know, I've got to ask my boss, I've got to ask my boss. So she calls and initially he goes no, no, get back to the house. It's like can you tell him -- he has to have heard on the news, we're in the middle of a crisis here and we really need his help. So she says the paramedics really need the help, and he was like okay. It's like what is he going to say?

Q. You could have commandeered them.

A. Basically, that's what we ended up basically doing. I said tell him that you're giving us a hand. We need the use of this vehicle. So we took it back to the Health and Racquet Club and we got all the people and got them lined up. We had a lady with a baby, this was like an infant, still only maybe a month or two old, a guy with two cats and a lady with a little dog. It ended up being like about 22 people that we put inside the school bus and we drove them up to Bellevue Hospital in the school bus.

After that we doubled back and came back down. We got as far as the Brooklyn Bridge. I said I'll take you to the bridge, ma'am. I can't promise you that you'll get across, but I can take you there. So we brought her back down there and my partner and I walked from the Brooklyn Bridge back to the World Trade Center, and we treated some other firefighters.

Q. Did you ever make it to a treatment center or a triage center?

A. For us to get looked at?

Q. No. From the Brooklyn Bridge, you went back. You just were free-lancing in the street, helping people?

A. Once we got all the way back there, we ran into one of the chiefs. I forget the name at this time. But basically, once we got all the way back down there, it was still kind of chaotic, but there was still a little order --

Q. There was an EMS officer around at that time?

A. Yes, there was an EMS officer around at that time.

Q. Okay.

A. He said, listen, I want you to gather all our people, try and keep them together here. He sent out a couple of groups to scavenge some equipment together and so we had a little treatment center that we were setting up right on -- I think it was actually right on Liberty towards the water.

Q. Liberty and West. South End Avenue.

A. We were like up in here.

Q. South End Avenue.

A. So that's where we staged and basically we were treating people and we were helping. I didn't even realize the extent of some of our own -- I think that was -- we stayed there -- I don't even remember exactly what time we left, but I know my partner's shoulder began to hurt more, my wrist was a little swollen, I had a cut, I got a couple of stitches.

Q. So you basically stayed a lot after, like after 9:00 o'clock, roughly?

A. I think we eventually got back here about 9:00, between 8:00 and 9:00, 10:00 o'clock, somewhere around there.

Q. That's good enough.

A. We were there well into the evening.

Q. All right. Anything else you'd like to add?

A. Anything like what? I mean, while I was there, all that we could do was really pray that we would come out alive, everything was happening, and it was just basically God's mercy that we were able to survive.

LIEUTENANT DUN: Okay. That concludes the interview with Mr. Jefferson. The time is 8:00 o'clock.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT WILLIAM TRUOCOLLO

Interview Date: January 16, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. DUN: Today's date is January 16, 2002. My name is Richard Dun. The time is 0700 hours. I'm with the New York City Fire Department.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with William --

A. Truocollo.

Q. Truocollo?

A. Battalion 26, shield number 1585, working 18 Charlie.

Q. Can you tell me in your own words the events leading on September 11, 2001?

A. We were assigned to the tower collapse, at which point we went down the -- we went local to Manhattan, because the West Side Highway was backed up. Once we got down there, we parked in front of 125 Barclay and that's where we met Chief Wells. He told us to get everything on a stretcher, all our equipment, and we walked with him and he staged us at Liberty and West. Just pretty much watching people jump or fall out of the towers. I don't really remember radio transmissions because there was so much noise. But we maybe were there 10 minutes.

Q. Was there a lot of chaos when you pulled up?

A. Yes. I mean we didn't know where to go initially. The Chief happened to pull up right next to us.

Q. Were there a lot of civilians running around?

A. Yes, there was people running all over the place. A lot of emergency vehicles going back and forth. People almost getting hit by police cars and everything shooting around over there. So from the whole time we were down there, when we went to the staging area, maybe about 10 minutes, 15 minutes. We were told, grab the stretcher, we are going into -- I don't even remember. I think we were going into the Marriott to stage in there. I was just looking up to make sure nobody fell or jumped on us. We got in front of the -- I believe it was the Marriott. I just heard somebody yell run. I tried to run back towards the staging area.

Q. Was that the first collapse?

A. Yes. I woke up. I was partially underneath a -- I don't know. It had to be some type of motor vehicle, because I could see the exhaust and there was a firemen digging my leg, because my legs got buried, the rest of me was underneath the car. That was it.

I remember he pulled me out and I actually thought a plane was coming because of the roaring sound. That's when he told me the tower collapsed. We went into what was supposed to be a safer location and we were there maybe not even 5 minutes when they evacuated us and then we heard -- I heard another collapse. I don't know if that was 7 or if that was the other tower.

Q. That was probably the other tower. 7 collapsed much later.

A. Later. I was already -- we went through the -- past the West Side Highway and they put me on a boat, the Jersey City police harbor boat and that was it. I went to Jersey.

Q. That was the end of your day?

A. Yes. I mean I was admitted there. I had various injuries and everything.

Q. Because I interviewed your partner (inaudible) than getting hurt (inaudible), triage or anything (inaudible).

A. Yes. Like I said we were staging, we went over there. We were told by Chief Wells we are going into the triage area. The last thing I remember even telling my partner, I was looking up at the towers and the last thing I said was, you know, I don't think we should be near these buildings and that was it. That was really it.

I didn't treat any patients. It was just chaotic. We were just running and screaming. Nobody wanted to be where we were at. Everybody was trying to get away from it.

MR. DUN: This concludes the interview. It's 705 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JOSEPH CONZO

Interview Date: January 16, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. DUN: Today is January 16, 2002. The time is 5:45 a.m. My name is Richard Dun of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Conducting an interview with --

A. JOSEPH CONZO, EMT, shield number 2577, assigned to Battalion 26 in the South Bronx.

Q. At this time in your own words, could you describe the events leading on September 11, 2001?

A. On September 11, 2001, I was assigned to 18 Charlie, tour 2, out of Battalion 26. We responded to the World Trade Center from the Bronx. I'm not sure of the approximate time, but it was after the first plane crash.

En route to the World Trade Center, the second plane hit, half way down there. Going down the West Side Highway, we responded down the West Side Highway and we got down there. I was fortunate enough to park my vehicle 301 by 125 Barclay Street, about 2 or 3 blocks from the World Trade Center.

From there, there was multiple volunteer units, multiple fire apparatuses, PD, so on and so on.

Q. When you got to the scene, was it chaotic, a lot of people?

A. It was pretty much chaotic. Just multiple units just coming in and stuff like that. We were told to respond to a staging area which was directly across the street from, I think the Marriott. Directly across the street. That's where everybody was staging up with their equipment and the first Chief I encountered was Chief Charlie Wells, along with Captain Karen DeShore.

Q. Were there a lot of patients, walking wounded around?

A. At that time no, it was just multiple fire suppressions and PD and EMS units. We were all told to stage across the street with our equipment. We were told to put on our helmets, our turnout coats and stuff like that. At that time, there was just multiple fire personnel, fire suppressions running in and out of the buildings, stuff like that. Both towers were burning at the time. There really wasn't any debris coming down from our side and that's it.

As we staged across the street, Chief Charlie Wells grabbed my partner and I and said we are going into the building. From this map here, we entered the Marriott Hotel on Liberty, on west side and Liberty and as soon as we were entering in there with our equipment, we heard what seemed to be a third plane hitting, but I found out later it was the collapse of the World Trade Center 2.

As that was happening, Chief Wells instructed us to run. I ran into the building and Chief Wells and my partner ran back towards the staging. I was fortunate enough to seek cover under a table there while the building collapsed and subsequently escaped unharmed.

Q. Were you trapped?

A. Yes, I was trapped for about -- I don't know, a good 15, 20 minutes. It was just total chaos. It was myself and three other firemen. The entrance we had came in was totally sealed off, another entrance was totally sealed off. It was totally pitch black. Dust, debris, just complete serene atmosphere. The only noise that was going on after the rumbling was the firemen's passive alarms going off.

Fortunate enough for us, a wall had collapsed down into the street. We were able to climb out. I didn't even know I was out in the street until I walked into a light pole. That's how black and dark it was.

After getting out and searching for my partner and Chief Wells, I couldn't find them, I proceeded across the street into a store there where I cleared my face and just started searching for survivors. I fortunately found my partner about 10 minutes after getting out of the building. He was completely buried under debris and stuff like that. I found him and a fireman.

I grabbed him, we proceeded to walk towards the water and I linked up with Captain DeShore, [redacted] and a few other EMTs. We helped evacuate some injured firemen and civilians on to these boats that were coming over from Jersey. I don't know, about 15 minutes after that, the building that we were in collapsed, the second collapse happened.

From then on, my partner was already on the boat.

Q. The second building, was that 7 World Trade Center?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. So that's the third building?

A. Okay. Yes, third building. My partner was already on the boat to Jersey, because he was injured. Karen DeShore, a few other EMTs and firemen were on the boat, and I stood there and I was fortunate enough to commandeer a golf cart, a gator, which was the only thing that could possibly maneuver, so I started evacuating patients to the ferries and stuff like that.

Later on, after evacuating a lot of people from the waterway there, I ran into Chief McCracken and became his personal driver, and gatored him for the rest of the day. Then I stood the rest of the day down at South Ferry.

Q. So around what time did you end your day?

A. I ended the day about 1 o'clock that morning.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add?

A. No, that's basically it. We did the best we could. Not I nor anybody else that I spoke to who was down there even imagined these buildings collapsing. We staged where we were told to stage and we just followed orders. We did the best we could.

MR. DUN: This concludes the interview with JOSEPH CONZO. The time now is 550 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TIMOTHY BROWN

Interview Date: January 15, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Today's date is January 15th, 2002. The time is approximately 9:20. My name is Battalion Chief Art Lakiotes, safety command, New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with --

MR. BROWN: Tim Brown, OEM, detailed out of Rescue 3.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: Pertaining to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Tim, if you would, just take me to when you first heard about it and then how did the day's events unfold for you.

A. OEM's offices are in Seven World Trade Center, so we were there when the first plane hit. I was on the third floor. I was eating breakfast. The electricity went out in the building for about three to four seconds, and then it rerouted and came back on. I knew something major had happened, although I did not feel any vibration or hear any crash from where I was sitting.

The folks that were in the cafeteria where I was that had a window seat all got up pretty much at once and started running. I asked them what happened. They said a plane just crashed into the tower, which was the north tower.

So I ran down the escalator to the lobby level, where I saw my direct boss, Calvin Dreydon, who is the deputy director for operations for OEM, going down to the street level. He told me to go up to our office on 23 and make sure that we were getting our EOC up and running and that our communications was being properly supervised. We call it our watch command.

So I went up in the elevator to 23. First I went to my desk, got my portable radio. It's a police radio, fire radio and OEM radio. I went into our watch command. The supervisor, Mike Lee, was there running operations, so we were fine there. I went into the EOC. We had the supervisor, Mike Berkowitz, there running that, so I was comfortable that we were doing our job properly.

I went down to the street level. There was a lot of debris falling in the street, which is Vesey Street. My car was parked on Vesey between the federal office building, the post office, and Five World Trade. I went to my car to take off my tie and my shoes, put on boots, helmet, and a Mayor's office jacket.

I went back to the corner of West and Vesey, where the police department was calling mobilization. Our car two, John Odermatt was there. I told him that I was going to go through Six World Trade into One World Tower to the fire command post.

I walked in the walkway between five and six to get a three-sided look at One World Trade Center to see what it looked like. The whole plaza area was burning debris, plane parts and bodies; a lot of fire in the plaza area.

I communicated with a Port Authority cop who yelled at me and told me to get out of there, it was too dangerous. Of course he was standing there. I don't know who that guy was.

I went into the lobby of One World Trade Center. A lot of people were self-evacuating very orderly, quickly. People were helping each other, and they were streaming out as quickly as they could.

The one thing that was limiting their escape the most was probably the size of the escalators. They were bottling up at the top of the escalators, trying to get on the escalators, trying to get down. But it was orderly.

I believe you have to go down a level to get to the fire command post. So I went down that level. I went past the core of the building where the stairwells were. There were a lot of firemen there. By "a lot," I would probably say 30 or so firemen there.

The people I remember seeing were Terry Hatton and Chris Blackwell. Terry Hatton from Rescue 1 and Chris Blackwell from Rescue 3. I gave them both hugs. Terry said to me, "I love you, brother. It might be the last time I see you." Then he went in the stairwell. Then Chris Blackwell looked at me and said, "This isn't good, Tim." That was the last I saw him also. Those are the two guys that I remember seeing, although there were a lot more people there.

From there I went to the fire command station where my boss was, Calvin. I believe at this point Rich Schirer was there. I think I saw the Commissioner there. I think we had a tape, kind of, of the people that were there.

Q. Yes, I think so.

A. Yeah, I think the tape came in after I left.

Q. Yeah, it could be.

A. I was probably there for three minutes at most. We did right away -- one of the thoughts that crossed my mind almost immediately was to get air cover from the military. We weren't sure this was a terrorist attack, but we knew there was a good possibility that it was.

So we had sent that message pretty quickly back to our communications folks to try and get in touch with the White House and with FAA and try and get some help.

There were a lot of people streaming in and out, a lot of firemen coming in.

The second plane hit. Again I did not feel that. We did not know that happened until a fireman came into the lobby and told us that another plane had hit number two, the south tower. Calvin directed me to go to the command post in the south tower to help the Fire Department with their operation there and to let him know everything that was going on.

I'm not exactly sure how I got there. I remember going out through a broken window and running I believe south along the West Street side of the complex as fast as I could so I wouldn't get hit by anything.

I remember running across a parking lot. It was across from the hotel, which would have been the southeast corner of Liberty an West. There's a parking lot there. It was near the pedestrian walkway and all that.

Q. There's a large parking lot.

A. Right.

Q. The building that was up there, would it be a Church?

A. It was gone from there.

Q. Yes, obliterated.

A. Okay, okay.

Q. It was just a very huge parking lot, black top.

A. Right, okay. I was over there.

Q. I was a lieutenant in 10 and 10.

That's why I remember a lot.

A. Okay. So this is your neighborhood, then.

Q. Yeah.

A. Okay.

So I remember running across a lot of debris. I didn't have on fire gear, so I remember trying to avoid the fire as much as I could. I ran into the doors of the Two World Trade on the Liberty Street side.

I saw Chief Burns inside there. He was the first fire personnel that I saw in the lobby. I asked him if there was anything I could do to help. He was like, well, it's just like -- there was nothing anybody could do except try and get people out.

So we tried to encourage -- I remember seeing a six-person team from ESU in that lobby. I directed them to wait. I directed them to wait and not to go upstairs until they reported in to Chief Burns so we had some accountability of who they were and where they were going to go. They finally did communicate with Chief Burns, and then they went upstairs.

Again, an orderly evacuation of two. A lot of people were leaving.

We finally set up -- prior to this I believe it was the west side of the core of the building there were elevators. Someone had come to me and said that there were people trapped in one of those elevators.

So I ran around the corner, and the hoist way doors were open, but the elevator car was only showing about two feet at the top of the door. You could see all the legs of the people that were in the elevator. I would guess there were about eight people in the elevator.

The elevator pit was on fire with the jet fuel. People were screaming in the elevator. They were getting smoked and cooked. There weren't a lot of firemen there at the time. I grabbed some of the Port Authority employees and asked them where the fire extinguishers were and told them to get as many fire extinguishers as they could so we could try and fight this fire. As they were doing that, firemen started showing up, and I started asking them to get big cans, let's try to put this fire out.

I turned around, and I came face-to-face with Mike Lynch from Ladder 4, who I knew. I worked for Ladder 4 for a year. He was one of the young guys there then. I knew Mike was a very competent guy. I said to Mike, "You've got this?" He said, "I'll take care of it." I left the elevator knowing that he would take care of it.

I went to the command board -- which before this I went to the phones which were in the southeast corner of Two World Trade in the lobby area, trying to call the White House and trying to call Albany and trying to make sure that we had some kind of air cover and some kind of help in the air.

I could not get through to Washington because of the things that were going on. I did get in touch with S.E.M.O. up in Albany, and they said they were already ahead of us and they had already spoken with people, trying to get us air cover.

So being comfortable with that, I went to the command board which they were setting up right next to the doors on the Liberty Street side, the south side of Two World Trade, inside the lobby. At that command board were Chief Burns, Chief Jack Fanning, and I remember seeing Carl Asaro also there. So at this point I just stayed in the background, because things were crazy.

Someone, a fireman, came in through the lobby, through the doors on the Liberty Street side, and told us that there was already a fireman who was killed on the Liberty Street side by a jumper, a guy from 216. Although we knew it was serious, we knew that disaster was beginning to happen.

Now the people coming down the stairwells were not so healthy anymore. A lot of people coming down were burned very badly. A lot of people were broken and bloody. There were people helping people, like carrying people.

We had been directing people to go to Seven World Trade where we had set up a triage area, and I was directing them to go underground as much as they could to get to seven. But a lot of these people that were coming down now were not ambulatory and overwhelmed. So the lobby started filling up with badly injured people, people that were dying.

So watching all the confusion, I always try to think of what I can do to help. I said, well, we have no EMS in the lobby, and we're going to have to move these people or everybody is going to be stuck in the tower and we're not going to be able to evacuate.

I told Chief Burns that I was going to go find EMS and bring them back into the lobby, which is something that saved my life. I went out to the Liberty Street side. I saw Mike Lynch again at Ladder 4's rig, which was pulled right up next to the building, taking the Hearst tool off the rig.

He yelled to me to help him get it off the rig and carry it in, so I started running toward him. Before I could get to him, another fireman had come up and started helping him. So I said, "Are you all set?" He said, "I got it."

I ran to continue my mission to find EMS. I found EMS staging underneath the pedestrian bridge at West and Liberty. I saw my friend Charlie Wells. I got under the pedestrian bridge where they were standing so we were protected, and I said to Charlie, "We need you guys in the lobby of number two." He looked at me like I was crazy. He said, "All right. Just give me a minute to get helmets on people, and we're going to go in with you."

So I waited I'm thinking around two minutes there. He got two paramedics, himself and me. I said, "Okay. Follow me." We ran to the south side of the hotel to stay close to the building, trying not to get hit. We ran along the edge of the hotel.

When we ran by the southwest corner of the hotel, I noticed that the doors to the Tall Ships restaurant were wide open and there were people inside there.

As we ran towards the rear, which is the three side of the hotel, and rounded the corner to go into Two World Trade Center, in the doors, we heard the roar above us. I know I never looked up. I don't think anybody ever looked up. But there was no question what it was. It was a very tremendous sound, which I think we hear on the tapes.

So we just turned and ran for our lives. Now it was the flight/fright thing, because everybody knew we were all going to die. We ran back along -- I knew right from the start that I was going to go into the lobby of the hotel to try and get protected.

As I ran by the medics, I yelled at them to follow me. Charlie and one of the medics, who I don't know their names, followed me into the lobby of the hotel. The other guy ran back toward the pedestrian bridge. Charlie tells me everybody lived of that group.

We ran into the lobby. No sooner did we get into the lobby of the hotel, which was crystal-clear when we went in, then it went completely black in an instant with the dust.

The roar was just getting louder. The dust started blowing in our faces. I'm guessing around 30, 35 miles an hour the wind was. Everything started blowing toward us that wasn't nailed down. You could not any longer run into the wind because you were getting pummeled by stuff. You couldn't see anybody to communicate. You couldn't hear anything. It was becoming our grave.

So I turned around and started running back toward the door where I came in. Intellectually I knew we couldn't go outside, because we would get killed by the steel. So now I knew we were trapped. I wound up crawling on the floor as the wind got stronger and the roar got louder.

I found what I'm guessing was a 12 by 12 boxed out steel column, which I tried to become one with. I got as close as I could to it. I hugged it, hoping that anything would tent over me. I just held onto it.

I had a helmet on. The helmet got blown off by the wind. I'm no meteorologist, but I'm guessing that the wind at its height was around 70, 75 miles an hour. I had to hold onto that steel column with all my might so I wouldn't get blown out into the street, not realizing it was probably all over, thinking about my brother and things like that.

I thought it lasted four minutes. Somebody told me it lasted a much shorter time than that. But it stopped. You could hear an eerie silence at first, and then you could start to hear people starting to move around a little bit, people that were still alive. I was amazed that I was alive.

You still couldn't see anything. I went back toward what I thought was the door where we had come in from Liberty Street. As I got over there, I ran into a truck with its lights on. By the front of the truck, I thought it was a box truck. I did not recognize it as a fire truck, although it could have been. I thought it was a bomb. The headlights were still on, very eerie.

I turned around and ran the other way, thinking that it was a bomb, telling everybody to run the other way. We ran into a steel rolldown gate that was down. Someone had said we can get out this way, so now there were more people around.

So all the men -- I couldn't tell you if they were civilians or firemen. It seemed to me there were a lot of civilians here. Our fingers were going underneath the door. We tried to lift it up. After we got it up two inches, you could see all the fingers coming the other way, because there were people trapped on the other side of it.

We got that door up about two feet, and there was a girl behind us that said we found a way out. So everybody formed a chain. There was a fireman that knew he was already outside in the rubble, but he was okay. He was screaming at us to come toward him, "Come this way. Come this way."

So we went that way, which was the West Street side of what was left of the building. We went across. Then I just wanted to get away from the building, so I ran across all the rubble over to the American Express building, where I went in the lobby there. I just wanted to get to the river and to be able to get a view of what was going on.

I went into that lobby, and all the doors were locked. I couldn't get through those doors. I tried to break the glass doors, and I couldn't break them.

I had the police and fire radios in my back pocket, so I did not hear what was going on, really, on them. I had the OEM radio in my hand, and my boss was calling for help. He was trapped. That's what brought me back to reality.

I went back out to West Street, ran north on the West Street side over the rubble, trying to find him, thinking that he was dying, trapped in the rubble. I went by Chief Feehan, who I know for a long time, shook his hand. He said "Be careful, be careful," to me. I kept running. I remember him being on West, north of the American Express building. He was alone at the time.

I went up to Vesey Street and made a left going west on Vesey Street toward the river. I found Calvin at four World Financial Center. A fireman had already rescued him and pulled him out. He was with EMS.

Then my other boss, car 2, John Odermatt, grabbed me and said, "Timmy, we have to go and try to reestablish city government. You've got to come with me. Calvin is okay." So we left Calvin in the hands of EMS and went back north on West Street.

At some point -- I'm not sure where --

I either went in Barclay Street or Murray Street over to West Broadway and trying to find our command bus, which was a little bit further north on West Broadway. I started walking north on West Broadway when number One World Trade Center started to collapse.

I looked back over my shoulder. Everybody started running. That collapsed. I knew that my friends were in there. I just ran north on West Broadway. I used a telephone, a land line, because I couldn't use the cell phone to call my brother to tell him I was still alive. That phone call was made an hour and 42 minutes after the first plane hit. So I know that's the time line.

Then we wound up just up at 24 and 5 with the Mayor and other folks up there. I saw Terry's wife up there. I had an unhappy encounter with her.

Basically that's it. We just tried to regroup after that. That's everything I remember.

Q. A lot of guys that were in the --

A. Lobby.

Q. -- restaurant, 131?

A. 131 Truck?

Q. Yeah. I was wondering if you ran into them.

A. They were in the lobby and they were --

Q. I guess the gate was between the restaurant and the hotel lobby. When they closed the restaurant, they use the gate to segregate the restaurant from the rest of the building.

A. Oh, okay.

Q. They said that they got that up. They went out to Liberty Street on the corner.

A. Oh, okay. So they were coming toward me as I was coming toward them.

Q. Right.

A. You couldn't tell who was who or anything like that.

Did any of those guys die? Mostly everybody that was in that lobby area --

Q. In that general area of the lobby, the guys got out.

A. Further north than the lobby.

Q. North and south. It seemed like you were in the middle.

A. I think I was in the south end of the lobby. That's that part that's still standing.

Q. I'm saying, if you were on the south side or the north side, it looks like you --

A. Lived.

Q. -- survived.

A. In the middle where two came down, it sliced it in the middle. You have guys that were in the north part that lived also?

Q. Yeah, Tommy Gallagher was in the north part, and Brian, when the first collapsed.

A. Right. Then the second one. I heard there's videotape, actually, of number two -- of the hotel in between the collapses. So you have two parts of the hotel standing, and the middle is gone.

Q. Yeah.

A. You can see it?

Q. Photos, not video.

A. Okay. Photos.

CHIEF LAKIOTES: That concludes the interview. It is approximately 9:45.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JAMES WALSH

Interview Date: January 16, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 16, 2002. The time is 1215 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Please state your name.

LIEUTENANT WALSH: Lieutenant JAMES WALSH.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: He is assigned to the Engine 3 of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Engine 3 and this interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Jim, if you'd just tell us in your own words what happened that day.

A. Starting from the beginning, at the time of the first plane hitting the north tower, a bunch of guys in the firehouse had yelled something about a plane hitting the north tower, and then at that point the boxes started coming in, and at 8:48 the battalion gets a run to go for the 1076. Engine 3 wasn't actually on the 1076 at that moment, but all the members of Engine 3, including myself, all assumed we were.

My engine chauffeur had rushed up to the house watch area because somebody heard 1076 and Engine

3 goes. I yelled do they want us to take the high-rise rig? My engine chauffeur already was on the voice alarm contacting the dispatcher and saying do you want us to bring High-Rise 1? The answer coming back on the voice alarm was take everything you've got.

We later found out from people that -- a dispatcher I know had told me that you actually weren't assigned at that moment. You were assigned two minutes later and without the high-rise rig.

So then at that point Engine 3 was following Battalion 7 out on the response with High-Rise 1 going southbound on Seventh Avenue. After you cleared around 13th Street and St. Vinny's Hospital, the World Trade Center comes into view, and as we were looking at it, you know, you're getting a pretty good look at it from here. One of the things my chauffeur said to me eventually as we were going down Seventh Avenue was do you think this is an accident? I'm looking at it and I said I don't know, but I know for a fact that's not a small plane that caused that hole in the building there.

Going down Seventh Avenue, we approached Canal Street and Battalion 7 made a left-hand turn. I'm not sure if they were going to take West Broadway or what street they were going to take down, but as we approached I looked up at the situation and said to my chauffeur, I said that looks like it's going to be traffic. Let's take the West Side Highway right there or West Street. We made the right, High-Rise 1 followed us, and we started going down West Street. Again, we still had a very good look at the building from where we were, and at that point we saw up the tower actually jumpers had already started coming out of the building.

Again, the traffic condition on West Street was -- for five to 9:00 in the morning on a business day, it was like something had already happened and there was almost no traffic, so we were not hindered at all by going down West Street. We went down until we hit Vesey Street and my chauffeur, literally, overshot, he was flying down the block, flying down West Street and past the north tower, and I said to him, Bobby, you just passed the fire building, and we ended up almost parallel to the south tower.

We got out of the rig to turn my chauffeur around and we were going to bring him back up West Street towards the north tower and my chauffeur, Scott Holowach, for High-Rise 1, he got out of the rig and yelled to me I'm going to park the high-rise rig underneath the north pedestrian walkway going from the Financial Center or American Express Building into the north tower. He was referring to protecting the rig from all the crap coming down is the way he stated it.

They turned the rigs around. We got them turned around. I was walking back up West Street. My engine chauffeur found a hydrant someplace up there in the (inaudible). My high-rise chauffeur, he got out of the rig. He started coming back towards the rig, stood there, and he was about to pull his (inaudible) and he just ended up standing there and looking out towards me. As I was coming up West Street, I started hearing sounds getting very loud, and I never bothered to look back because the sound got extremely loud. It was the roar of the jet plane, which I didn't really know. It was the airliner coming in. I remember running back up West Street towards where my chauffeur was from the high-rise rig, and running at the same time I was trying to get down at the same time it seemed like.

Then I heard the explosion, continued running up to Scott, and I said what was that? I was under the impression that maybe it was a fighter plane because it got so loud. He said, no, another airliner just hit the south tower. I turned and looked and I could see all the damage already. At that point, I guess, the one thing I could say is, as I had said to my chauffeur, I don't know if it was an accident. Now I knew this was no accident, that something was going on.

My chauffeur grabbed a hydrant in the median of West Street there. He was going to hook up to it. In the meantime, I know that my high-rise rig chauffeur talked to Chief Ganci and told him that another plane just hit the south tower, and Ganci almost probably couldn't believe it himself until my chauffeur, Scott Holowach, pointed at the building to him. At that point Ganci came around and told me, Lieu, get Engine 3 out of there. We're going to set up a conga line of ambulances on West Street for the casualties that we're going to have for this thing.

I know my chauffeur was probably looking around, when I told him he had to move the rig, that he was probably looking for another hydrant. At that point I said, Bobby, don't worry about getting a hydrant. Just get the rig over there. He ended up parking it on the grass over by the financial building, I believe north of the pedestrian walkway and -- almost at the corner of the building there at Vesey and West, where that building meets.

He came back. He was getting the high-rise rig all set up. He was going to start getting the tools that we were possibly going to use. At this point Ganci had already given me one order. Chief Downey showed up and we're telling him we've got the high-rise rig, and he basically ordered us to stand fast, he didn't know how he was going to use us yet.

They were starting to set up the command post in the driveway of the American Express Building. Then eventually they made the order for having the staging area in the driveway. We had my four guys there, and the one or two decisions that I made that day that affected (inaudible). The one thing I was going to say is that the Chiefs started staging with Downey and they had the command post table out with all the command units checkers on it. (inaudible) up from the driveway and my guys started walking in that direction and I basically stopped the four of them, there were four firemen and I want you to go 100 feet north by that doorway over there. [redacted] [redacted] They were getting about 50 guys there separating engines and trucks on one side. I wasn't really thinking of a collapse.

Q. You were thinking more of an attack?

A. My biggest concern was I felt, like I said, we knew this was no accident now and I'm thinking that if a van or something comes around the corner parked with explosives, I said, if they saw a bunch of firemen standing someplace, that might become their target if they came around the corner. I mean, I remember telling a police officer at the scene don't let the civilians that we get out of these buildings linger around, make sure they keep moving away because, again, I believed we were seriously under attack at this point and you didn't know who was going to try and do what to us. I mean, it could have been somebody that could have acted like they just came out of the building and I'm confused. That's how I was thinking. That's what I was telling my guys. I said, if something else happens, here's where I think you can go to get away. I went over and stood in the command post area, basically in the driveway, and left them there about a hundred feet north of me.

We were there for a long time. I would almost sit there and tell you that -- my recollection probably isn't exact, but I almost thought Ray Downey was there the whole time. But I have been told since that he showed up in building one.

Q. Yeah, he was in the north tower.

A. So I didn't know that. But it seemed like he was there, they had the staging post there, there were a lot of Chiefs there. Ray Downey was back at the staging area in this driveway which was either in front of the American Express Building or one of the Financial Center buildings. Ray Downey turned around, looked at us and said, I need three engines, three trucks and a Battalion Chief to take the north pedestrian walkway in towards the north tower.

A lot of time has elapsed since the last statement I made before he put captains -- you know, we were just standing there for a long period of time. He said that to us, he said it three times, and I'm pretty sure he was emphasizing use the pedestrian walkway to get into the building, he's trying to make sure that we don't get hit with any more jumpers. I'm sure we could use the pedestrian walkway as protection. I think the moment he finished saying it the third time, I heard the sound and we looked. It sounded like gas or an engine or something, and it was the south tower starting to collapse, and I think it was -- the sound I heard was the sound of the fire and gasses being compressed by the top part of the building above where the plane hit coming down and pushing the smoke and gasses out. I think that's what I heard.

The last sound I heard, I was probably about five feet from Chief Downey. I feel like I had an instinct in me that I wanted to run past him and up the driveway to get to my guys, but I saw the top of the building moving and I just turned and started running underneath into the garage. I didn't think it was a good choice as I was running there.

The building didn't fall the way you would think tall buildings would fall. Pretty much it looked like it imploded on itself. I looked over my shoulder once after I was running. I didn't hear it coming down. I believe it must have been blocked out. What I saw was it looked like the garage door was gone. It was just all black.

As I kept running, I felt the air rushing and I actually felt the dust envelop me. I kept running in the other direction thinking there had to be a doorway or a stair someplace on the other side of the building and it was a stairway up. That I remember and the next thing that happened to me was when I got -- as I was approaching the doorway, I know I was in my mind and heart saying please be open, ran to it, and just as I got to it, the door swung open and a fireman's head popped out. I jumped into that stairway and literally there were like 35 or 40 guys in the stairway, which I don't remember seeing them running out in front of the building.

At that point now, I'm making my way up the stairs, I'm getting past a few firemen and things like that, I get past them and I heard somebody say we need a tool. I yelled out, not that anybody heard me, I said is there an officer's tool (inaudible) and I kept making my way up. All of a sudden the door was open. The guys were moving out of that door, but we were still inside the building. We moved towards the next door, which went into an area in the back of this building someplace almost opposite of the marina. When you look out, there's a little park land there.

The first two guys hit the door, they opened the door the first time and they pulled it shut right away. It was like looking at nighttime. It was 10:00 o'clock in the morning. It looked like it was night when they opened the door. I remember saying, probably not convincingly, we have to go out there, guys, and it was just a matter at that point, now, I had left my four guys someplace else other than what I was told to do and I thought maybe I had cheated myself and I was worried for them for them. So that's why I had to get out.

The guys did open the door again. At this point I know I was making my way towards the door, and going out I heard some people say put your mask on. I heard people saying different things, this and that. But at that point all I cared about was getting around the complex of the Financial Center buildings. I went to North Avenue through that park land, came up to the corner of Vesey, and when I got to the corner of Vesey, I could actually see daylight down Vesey towards the Trade Center complex again.

As I started walking down Vesey, there were a lot of people moving around, mulling around, and I'm looking for my --

Q. Firemen or civilians?

A. Both. I'm looking for both. I'm looking for my guys now and I'm making my way east on Vesey Street from North End Avenue and I'm towards the west side again. Surprisingly, the four guys that I had put by the doorways, that's the spot where they came out on Vesey Street, it was through a lobby area where all four of them popped up.

Q. Did you ever try and call them on the handy-talkie or was that just impossible?

A. There was no radio traffic, actually, that I can tell you I remember hearing. It was like I didn't care about anything I had on me anymore. My helmet gone. I didn't care what I had. I was just looking for them. As I started making my way up Vesey Street, they came out of that building onto Vesey. I found all four of them.

Q. Whew, that's something.

A. Yeah, I know. My chauffeur, he was the one guy who I didn't move because he was probably taking care of the high-rise rig. But I found the four of them and then we went and looked for Bobby. We found him someplace closer to the corner of Vesey and West. He literally popped out of a hole and was all covered in white dust and everything else, and now I had all my five guys back.

I remember looking around a little bit. I saw a fireman from 12 Truck, Terry Finneran. He wasn't working. He was already down there, I guess, on his own, in his own gear, and I saw him and I saw a couple of other guys, people that I didn't know who they were, and I just made the statement, guys, we've got to get away from this thing. Let's start heading towards the Hudson River.

So we started moving from Vesey and West and headed west on Vesey back towards North End Avenue, and before we got to North End Avenue, the north tower started coming down. So almost like at that point I was looking for other people that were in the area, but I wasn't going to keep my guys here. That was basically what happened.

Q. Did it turn dark night again?

A. No.

Q. Or were you far enough away?

A. I think we were far enough away that -- it was amazing that I would tell you that the south tower came down and everything from it was in the area like over towards the west side. When the south tower came down, after running and coming out on the west side of the Financial Center buildings in the park land area and facing the marina, you could barely see the marina through the dust. It was like nighttime. All of that dust seemed to come west towards the Hudson.

When the north tower fell down, we were on Vesey heading towards North End Avenue, and it was like, when that building fell, watching it fall, from where we were, it looked like -- I can't tell you how the south tower fell, only from seeing it on replays. That one looked like it really came down pretty straight like it really imploded on itself. The north tower looked like, when it started to fall, it looked like the top fell more towards the north and didn't implode as straight down as the south tower is basically all I'm saying.

Q. That's the way it looked on the tape, too.

A. When you look at it, and when we looked at it from Vesey Street and North End Avenue, it looked like it fell that way, a little bit towards the north.

At that point there, the next thing that happened was we ran across some firemen. A couple guys from 24 Truck we came across, one guy with a broken nose who wouldn't even let us help him clean it. They were helping another firefighter. I think he was kind of limping. He also ended up -- somebody was talking about a firefighter that was having chest pains. Now we're basically on the promenade near the Hudson River.

Q. Okay. Go ahead.

A. So then we were trying to help him out with -- we had no CFRD equipment with us at this time. Somebody was trying to give him some water, trying to calm him down. We took his gear off him I remember, and I think that we saw a few of the guys walking around. A Jersey state trooper had said to me that the ferries are here and he said get all uniformed -- he said they're for everybody, but what he said is, if you get any uniformed personnel, they're going first. I know he said that to me.

At this point, like I said, for a lot of the time there was that eerie silence. The only way I could describe it to you where in that one point after the collapses or in between the collapses, it was like being out in nighttime during a winter snowstorm with nobody around you. Again, I wasn't hearing radio traffic, which -- there was plenty when I did start hearing it and like people were asking what happened. I knew, where I was, I couldn't help those people. We were trying to help whoever we had.

We came across Battalion Chief Raynis, who I didn't even know where he was assigned to at the time, but he had said to me at this point that they were again staging at Chambers and West, which meant that they were going to take everybody that they could find and bring them up to Chambers and West and restage anyone they found, I think, basically. I know as we got up there my own feelings were I couldn't believe we went up there to get ordered to come back down to start helping again because it's like I realized we probably should have never left in the first place.

Then I started hearing a few radio transmissions about -- intermittently, I heard somebody sitting there and saying we need more water, we got lots of car fires or something like that. I had no idea where they were at this point, but they had lots of car fires.

After that, we were back down there. We were in trying to help again around the collapse areas. I remember we were walking over with Firefighter Derek Wilson carrying some kind of tool into the area again. We actually walked under the pedestrian walkway that was the north one. It was partially still standing, actually being held by the high-rise rig on the west end of it, where it was parked underneath it, and at this point there was some stuff going on there.

Eventually they had ordered everybody away from the area again because of building 7. They were doing all kinds of roll calls at Vesey Street now, and this is later on in the afternoon. Basically, that's all we had to do. I mean, that's what we did that day from that point on, and then later on, I guess we were down there until about 10:00 o'clock that night with the guys putting water on fires that were there and even trying to get sources of water. So anyway...

Q. Is there anything else you want to say?

A. I don't know what else to tell you at this point actually. I mean, it's like that's where we were. It's like I said. I mean, I got very lucky telling my guys to stay in one spot. I mean, it was for a different reason than what actually happened. Then the other thing was -- I guess the thing I'm confused about is you hear so many stories about the north tower personnel and you hear guys that have actually told you they're not sure if they were told to evacuate after the south tower came down, because my first instinct after I found everybody was now let's get away from this scene again before this one comes down, not knowing they were coming down.

Q. Well, they did. A lot of guys heard the order to get out of the north tower. A lot of guys got out of the north tower.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KENNETH ESCOFFRY

Interview Date: January 16, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 16, 2002. The time is 1320 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER ESCOFFRY: Firefighter first grade KENNETH ESCOFFRY.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Firefighter Escoffry is assigned to Ladder Company 20 of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Ladder 20. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Kenny, in your own words, if you will just tell us what happened that day.

A. On the morning of September 11th about 8:45, I was relieved, and a few of us were standing in front of quarters when we noticed a plane came directly over the firehouse maybe around 8:45, somewhere around that time. One of the guys mentioned that the plane looked like it was really low. Before we could really think of what he said, the next thing we heard an explosion. We saw the smoke.

So the guys in the firehouse suited up and jumped on the rig. We didn't get a run on the teleprinter yet, but they went towards the direction. I guess they got the run as they were moving towards the direction.

At first we thought it was just a plane crash. Four of us were left in the firehouse. We turned on the TV, and we noticed that the plane hit the World Trade.

(Interruption.)

Q. Okay. Go ahead.

A. I was saying that the plane had crashed into the World Trade. Four of us jumped in the hazmat rig, and we proceeded down to the World Trade to see if we could help. Two guys went up the staircase from the squad, and myself and George in the truck, we reported to the command station, because we had no tools, no radio, no masks, nothing.

When we pulled up, we saw heavy fire, smoke. People were jumping. So we figured we couldn't do much up here without equipment. So we decided to go to the command station, where Chief Hayden and Chris was, and we asked Chris, the aide, if he knew what floor 20 was on. I believe he said they were up on the 27th floor, somewhere up in that area.

Q. This was in the north tower, the command post?

A. The north tower.

We hung around in the north tower in the lobby for a while. There were jumpers. After a while, body parts were flying into the lobby. Chief Hayden asked myself and George to check out a report of a fire that was on the second floor, the mezzanine.

We went up to the mezzanine level, and in the corner, which was exposure 4, we noticed it looked like it was jet fuel that was just running down the side of the building. The fire wasn't spreading or anything.

Within that 30-second time we were up there, an EMS worker asked us to come into the staircase to help him remove a person that collapsed in the staircase. After going into the staircase, within another minute or so, there was a loud explosion. I believe that's when the second plane hit.

Q. Let me ask you a question. Do you know what staircase it was? Was it A, B, C staircase?

A. That was the staircase in exposure 4. I'm not sure.

Q. You're not sure. Okay.

A. Once that explosion happened, the door to the staircase slammed shut. When we went back and pushed the door open, we couldn't breathe. The dust particles was all in the lobby. So we kept the door closed, and people that were evacuating down, we wound up evacuating them off that staircase, through a hallway that led back to the exposure 1 side of the building.

We evacuated them from there to the second floor, which was the mezzanine, and took them down to the lobby. We took them around to the mezzanine and over the catwalk that went to the building north of tower one, which I believe that's probably building six.

Q. The one that goes across?

A. Yes, north. The catwalk that you could actually see the cars pass under.

Q. Okay. This one here that goes across West Street?

A. No.

Q. This one over here?

A. Yeah, this is West Street. Where is tower one?

Q. Right here.

A. The catwalk I guess went across this street here, Vesey and whatever street this is.

Q. Oh, okay.

A. We led the people across, and they evacuated that way.

About an hour later me and George decided let's go out, because we were having difficulty breathing because we didn't have a mask. On the way out between tower one and six, we heard something like an incoming missile, and we started to run. That's when the second tower came down.

Q. Tower number two?

A. Right. That was the first tower that came down.

I was knocked down. When I got up, there was a hose -- I followed a hose out to the street with water flowing from it. So I washed my face and washed out my mouth. I knew George was behind me, so I called back. Finally he answered me. I told George to come towards my voice. We went back to the pumper and he washed his face, washed out his mouth. We proceeded to wet down our hood and put it over our mouth and nose.

We walked it seemed like about five or six blocks before we could even get to somewhere that we could breathe. We got up and started to walk back and forth looking for our company, hoping that maybe they got out. So we spent maybe the next 45 minutes washing up and walking up and down the side, hoping that our company would came out.

Q. This is West Street?

A. Yeah, West Street.

We didn't see our company. Nobody saw them.

I guess somewhere by the time we washed up and were walking up and down the west side looking for our company, the second one came down. So we never really got back towards the tower. We wound up walking to 1 and 7 and tried to get back in touch with Ladder 20. We tried to call back at our company, but all the phones were down so we couldn't get in touch with anybody.

So we decided to walk to 8 Truck. We walked to 8. Lieutenant Woods and some of the other officers were over there. That's when I realized from watching the TV exactly what happened. At first I thought maybe just a section of the building came down. Once I saw the TV, I realized the whole building came down.

That was it. The whole day we never caught back up with 20. Somewhere later on in the day we worked our way back to 20 Truck.

Q. Is there anything else you want to say?

A. The farthest we got was maybe like the third, fourth floor, helping to evacuate the civilians. Like I said, we had no lights. The civilians were coming down the staircase. It was dark. We spent maybe 45 minutes in the staircase helping people finding their way out. It just got so bad, we couldn't breathe anymore. We decided to start making our way out. Fortunately we did. Maybe 30 yards from the West Side Highway, that's when the first tower came down.

Q. Thanks a lot for your cooperation. I appreciate it.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: It's 1345 hours, and this concludes this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL Morabito

Interview Date: January 15, 2002

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 15, 2002. The time is 1030 hours and this is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview.

Q. Would the following individual please state your name.

A. Michael Morabito.

Q. Michael is a fireman third grade, assigned to Engine 228 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Engine 228 and this interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Mike, if you would just tell us what happened in your own words.

A. Okay. I was working and the alarm came in. It was a third alarm at the World Trade Center. We didn't even know a plane had crashed into it. It wasn't like a rush right away. We were relocated to Engine 205. So we were hanging around a little bit getting everything ready to go and then we saw on the news that a plane hit the building. So then we responded immediately.

We reported to Engine 205 and while we were in their quarters we saw the second plane hit and then shortly after that we had responded to Manhattan. First they told us take the Brooklyn Bridge. We started to go towards the Brooklyn Bridge. And then there was a little confusion. They said, no, take the tunnel. So we were stuck traveling back and forth, thank God, and we had taken the tunnel, the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel.

As soon as we got out the entrance, out on the Manhattan side of the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, we got hit with the first dust cloud and we had no idea what happened. We stood there for like a minute or two and then the dust settled and then we got out and helped two other people that were there. There were some civilians, there was some Port Authority. We gave them masks and everything to help calm everybody down a little bit.

We spent maybe five minutes there or so and then on the radio they said to proceed to the staging area. So we got back in the rig. We headed up West Street as far as we could. I don't really know what street we were on. I think it was maybe West End something, and parked the rig because we couldn't go any further. And we grabbed all our gear and started walking to the building, towards the towers. We were probably about a block away when we heard a giant rumbling sound. It sounded like jets were going overhead and then we looked up and we saw the tower start to fall and we just ran. We outran the dust cloud and got back in the rig. As soon as we closed the doors on the rig we got hit with the second cloud and then it was pitch black for like five minutes. As soon as that cloud cleared we got out and there was some personnel, Fire Department personnell running around.

We saw one of the doctors from Metro Tech was there. He was bleeding a little bit. We talked to him. He said he was okay and stuff. And then a lady came running over with an infant that she had covered up and she said, you know, she was nervous. So we got her in the rig. We gave the baby oxygen and we covered it up so that no more dust would get him. And we helped a few other people in the area. And then when everything settled down a little bit we grabbed our gear again and proceeded to head toward the Trade Center again.

We were waiting, we hooked up with another crew or two and we were down by where marine 6 I think was, by the water and we were waiting. We didn't know where to go. We were waiting to respond. We had no orders by anybody yet.

And another Engine Company had come with just three guys on it. It might have been a satellite or something, because they had all hose on the rig and they said they needed two guys to help. So me and I think it was a control man who was a detail that day had gone with them. We told our boss we were gonna go with them. We had our radio, we would stay in contact and we're going with the other company. We had taken a hand line and went up West Street, started putting out all car fires and we were heading all the way down to the municipal building. When we got there we were with rescue 5 and we were holding a hand line with them as they were doing the search. They found one fireman. That guy that they pulled out with his tooth broken. I don't know what his name was. They found him, so we helped pull him out. You know, made a chain, took him out, and then we held the hose line. It was me and I think two guys from Rescue 5 and the rest of Rescue 5 was searching and then there was a fear of collapse of the municipal building, the building with all the scaffolding. So they finally pulled us out of there and then we pulled back, and then we had a little break for a while.

At that time, I hooked up with my original company, all my guys and guys from the house after recall. And me and one of the guys from here, Mike Lyons, we went back in searching. We went through all the rubble and went under the overpass where all the rescue rigs were and as we were searching I came across another firefighter who was -- who said that they were trapped. Ladder 5 was trapped in the tower, what was left of the tower. So me and Mike Lyons went over to -- climbed to where the stairwell was and we hooked up with a guy from Rescue 5 and a guy from Rescue 2 and we helped rescue one civilian who was trapped on the 6th floor and pulled him down there from --

Q. From the south tower?

A. From I think it was the north tower.

Q. South tower would have been like on Liberty Street and West?

A. I really don't know where. It was where the guys were trapped, who brought out the lady.

Q. Oh, okay. The north tower.

A. Yeah. It was the north tower. That's it. That was what, Ladder 5?

Q. Ladder 6.

A. Ladder 6. They were below us with the lady. The lady was down there. We saw her. There was already a couple of guys there with her and she was calm and they said they had a chief down there and they were trying to get out the guys from Ladder 6. So we had to climb up and this guy is trapped at probably about the 7th or 8th floor and he was just sitting on a piece of concrete when the whole building came down. He was just lucky when he survived. And a guy from Rescue 2 climbed up above him, tied him up. I had shimmied out like a piece of conduit and he lowered him to me and I pulled him over, because we were over a big hole, and I pulled him over to Mike Lyons and a guy from Rescue 5 and pulled him over and, you know, his ankle, I don't know if it was broken or if it was fractured and we helped 6 carry him, because at that time there was really no one else there and we carried him up and down this big crater and everything. I don't know how far we went. It was pretty far. But then by the time we got across, then there was a whole line of firemen coming off so we passed them on to him and then we had gone back to our company and we waited there for a while and then 7 came down. They were running back in. I think we --

Q. They don't really want to know about 7. Wow, that was pretty good. That was good you were there. When you were coming up West Street, was there a large number of civilians coming down West Street?

A. Yes. When we first got there, after Tower 1 had collapsed, a lot of people had run through the tunnel and we were trying to calm everybody. We thought that the tunnel had got hit. We didn't know what happened. We were just trying to tell everybody to stay calm, don't even go anywhere yet. You know, we don't know if the tunnel is hit or what they're hitting.

Because there was a lot of rumors going around as you were going. That they hit the White House, they hit the Pentagon, they hit Air Force 1.

"Right now you're safe, so stay here and we'll see what's going on."

Then we proceeded up West Street. Yes, there were a lot of civilians but they were in an orderly manner. They were walking all along -- I know when we got out and we went by the water over there, I don't even know what that is. I guess that's behind West Street. Where Battery City is or whatever.

Q. The Hudson River.

A. Yeah. They were all walking by there. They were all in an orderly manner and everything and then we were just telling them to head towards Brooklyn. That's where everybody was going. And babies or babies and kids and people like that we were putting onto Marine 6. We told them just to get on Marine 6. Because they had some stuff there to help them, because there was still a lot of debris flying in the air and everything.

Q. Very good. Is there anything else you want to add?

A. No. That pretty much does it. I'm trying to think of stuff --

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: That's right. Thanks for your corporation. That was pretty interesting. The time is 11:00 o'clock and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT RUDOLF WEINDLER

Interview Date: January 15, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Today is January 15th, 2002. The time is 1755. This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Lieutenant Rudy Weindler of Ladder Company 40 of the Fire Department of the City of New York in the quarters of Safety Battalion 1 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Lieutenant, can you tell me what happened to you on September 11th?

A. Yes. On September 11th, I was off duty. I was in Nassau County and within sight of the World Trade Center. When I saw the smoke coming from the Trade Center, I got in my car and drove from the Rockaways to Long Island City, where I left my car and got into a Fire Department van which was leaving the Long Island City shops and going to the scene of the fire.

I arrived at City Hall Park sometime between 10:30 and a quarter to 11:00, and I went to the quarters of Engine 6 and borrowed some fire gear, helmet, turnout coat, pants, boots, gloves, flashlight. There was nobody in the quarters at the time. The doors were open.

So I started to walk towards the Trade Center, and apparently the towers had just collapsed or one -- I'm not sure which ones collapsed. All I know is the dust cloud was just coming east and people were scrambling all over the place.

I started walking towards the Trade Center down I believe it was Vesey Street, and I ran into a Fireman Ron Kemly, who I believe also had borrowed some gear from somewhere and was unattached to anyone. So we hooked up something and we began moving down Vesey Street. At that time the dust cloud was still flying around. The smaller buildings of the Trade Center were on fire. All the cars in the street were on fire, and there was a Fire Department pumper in the block, I don't remember what the company number was, but it was also beginning to burn. The tires were burning.

Fireman Kemly had told me that he heard somebody calling for help. We looked around, didn't see anybody at all in the street. As I said, there was a lot of smoke and a lot of dust and things flying around. Then he heard another call and we found a woman, a middle-aged woman, inside the Fire Department pumper whose number I really don't know, and she was burned, I assume from the jet fuel. I don't know how.

She was really talking incoherent. So Ron and I carried her, took her out of the pumper and carried her back east towards City Hall where we saw an EMS ambulance and just basically gave the woman to the EMS workers.

We then proceeded back down Vesey Street towards the Trade Center, where we saw several other firemen who were in various stages of gear, no gear. Some I recognized; some I didn't. At that point we were standing, I believe, on the corner of -- well, it was the southwest corner of the Church Street Post Office, and several of the firemen said they heard someone, again, screaming for help. They said they saw a police officer at a window in I believe it was 5 World Trade Center. I never saw the man. I heard the screams for help.

We went up an escalator to the plaza of, I believe, 5 World Trade Center. When we got up there, we heard some gunshots. It sounded like he was trying to alert us by shooting his gun. Again, I never saw him. But when we got to that plaza, the building was fully involved. There were no more screams and there were I-beams and stuff hanging all over the place, so we made a conscious decision to go back down to the street level.

The next thing I did was we saw a fire starting to show at windows in 7 World Trade Center, decided to go in and try and see if there was anybody in the building and/or put out the fires, and we did a search from floor to floor of 7 World Trade Center passing fire on floors 3, 7, 9. The standpipes had no water. We tried to extinguish a few fires with cans. When we got to 11, there was just too much smoke and we decided that, without water, if we went any higher, we'd be on fool's mission.

So we left 7 World Trade Center, back down to the street, where I ran into Chief Coloe from the 1st Division, Captain Varriale, Engine 24, and Captain Varriale told Chief Coloe and myself that 7 World Trade Center was badly damaged on the south side and definitely in danger of collapse. Chief Coloe said we were going to evacuate the collapse zone around 7 World Trade Center, which we did.

At that point there were fires in, I guess, all of the smaller buildings in the Trade Center complex. The only place we had any water was in the Church Street Post Office, where we hooked up some house lines. They were just a bunch of firemen, some of them I know, most of them I didn't, just trying to get water on fires in the smaller buildings of the Trade Center. Mostly it was futile.

At that point we -- I forget who it was. We needed water into a tower ladder, I believe it was 146's tower ladder, to put a curtain of water up between 5 World Trade Center and the Millenium Hotel. It took quite awhile. Somehow we got water. I don't know where it came from. The chauffeur from 146 or somebody else positioned it to put water up between the Millenium Hotel and 5 World Trade Center. From that point, we went into the Millenium Hotel, did a little search of a couple of floors. It was already evacuated, as far as we could tell.

After we left the Millenium Hotel, we went -- I'm not even sure what I did after I left the Millenium Hotel.

At some point, 7 World Trade Center collapsed. We were down the block. We heard it starting to go. We ran into a loading dock of some building on maybe Vesey Street or Dey Street. I'm really not sure where. We waited out for the dust to settle a little bit. I did have a Department radio. I heard a Mayday. I didn't know where it came from.

When I tried to contact whoever gave the Mayday, I got no response.

We moved back down the block into the dust cloud and realized that 7 World Trade Center had almost completely collapsed causing some fires now in the Church Street Post Office. We had entered the Church Street Post Office from a pile of rubble that used to be 7 World Trade Center. We knew we had water in that building prior to that collapse and hoped that there would still be water because there was fire on several floors. Again, we hooked house lines together and extinguished fires on several floors in the Church Street Post Office. I'm not sure what the address of that building is. That went on for a while.

Then we exited that Church Street Post Office and from that point went up on the pile and started searching voids, looking in holes and voids and trying to get into basements and into some basements below, I think, 5 World Trade Center, where we could actually walk down levels of a parking garage, I guess, just looking and listening. Never heard anything. We pretty much got to points where we thought it was just too dangerous to be and then backed out and looked for another place.

This went on, to the best of my recollection, until 3:00 or 4:00 o'clock the following morning, when I walked down to a little hospital by 6 Engine. I'm not sure what the name of it is. I had my eyes washed out and a doctor looked at me and several other guys, and then they wanted us to stay, but we just left. We laid down in 6 Engine for a couple hours, I guess, until the sun came up, went back to the site and started that process of either digging on the pile, searching voids. We formed up with teams of guys that I had worked with years ago in Brooklyn. At that point it was just either working on the pile, working with ironworkers cutting steel, not really knowing or not really having any game plan, just sort of going to where you thought you might be able to help somebody.

I really can't say where any Fire Department rigs were. It's all pretty much a blur to me. On a few hours rest, I ended up working on the pile until the sun went down again. At some point in the middle of the night, I walked uptown, got on a train, went to Harlem, laid down in my quarters, 40 Truck, for a couple hours, then back down to the pile, I don't know, some commandeered bus or van or something like that.

Q. You said at the beginning you went to the shops and got a van. Did somebody drive the van with you?

A. Yes. I had my personal car that I had driven and left on the sidewalk at the shops. The first person I saw when I pulled up on the sidewalk was Lieutenant Vasquez. I had worked on light duty there once. I said how do I get into the city? He said there's a van coming out. A van pulled out. I don't know who was driving it. He said he was going across the bridge -- he said he was going through the tunnel to the site, and I just jumped in the van, left my car on the sidewalk, jumped in the van.

Q. So it was just you and the guy driving?

A. Me, the guy driving, and then there was another officer in there. There was a guy driving, a Lieutenant, whose name escapes me, and myself.

Q. You said you were heading towards the Trade Center on Vesey Street when the building came down and there was a big dust cloud. Do you know Vesey and what, approximately?

A. All I remember is, when I was in 6 Engine's quarters -- I jumped out of the van. The van came off the bridge right by City Hall. I don't know what their plan was. I don't know where they were going. My plan was to get some gear before I did anything. So I jumped out of the van right at City Hall and I ran down to 6 Engine to get some gear. Then that took me a few minutes. I don't know if that's when the towers collapsed. I really don't know. All I know is that, when I came out of 6's quarters, the dust was everywhere. So I don't know if that was the first, the second. I really don't know.

Q. You said you saw a pumper. You don't know which one it was, but do you know what block it was on?

A. I believe it was on Vesey Street.

Q. Vesey and what?

A. Just west of Broadway.

Q. Okay.

A. It was definitely west of Broadway.

Q. You said you saw it when you first got there after you hooked up with the other fireman and then later on you saw some guys that you recognized?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what companies they were from?

A. Yes. Actually, I saw Jimmy Duffy, Captain of 23 Truck, and Abe Haiman, Captain of 30 Truck, and I believe Jimmy Hodges, who was a covering Battalion Chief from the 11th Battalion at the time. I hooked up with them after Fireman Kemly and I had gotten the woman from the pumper and brought her back to EMS, then started back down I believe it's Vesey Street, and then, when I saw Jimmy Duffy and Abe Haiman, that's when somebody from across the street was yelling that there was a policeman in the window of the Trade Center.

So I think all of us that went up to that plaza, Jimmy Duffy, Abe Haiman, Jimmy Hodges, Ron Kemly and myself, I believe we all went up to that plaza, but there was just nothing to be done. It was just all fire.

Q. Now, you said you came out of 7 and you saw Chief Coloe?

A. Yes.

Q. And Captain Varriale. Do you know which side of 7 you came out of?

A. We came out of --

Q. Facing the towers?

A. No. There's a street that runs between Church Street Post Office and 7 World Trade Center, which would be the east side of 7 World Trade Center. We came out of the door on that side. I met Chief Coloe and Captain Varriale on the northeast corner of 7

World Trade Center.

Q. Did they have radios, do you remember?

A. Don't remember.

Q. You said after that you ran into some more firemen that you knew from Brooklyn?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether they responded to the tower or came in off duty?

A. Came in off duty. Some of them were from 290 and 103 and some of them were from 214 and 111.

Q. But they were definitely off duty; they didn't come with their companies?

A. They didn't come with their companies.

Q. Okay.

A. Actually, the guys from 111, it was maybe six or seven guys and no officer, and one of the guys said we'll just hang with you and we'll see what happens. I had the radio, so that was a big asset at the time.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: If you don't have anything else, this will conclude the interview.

LIEUTENANT WEINDLER: Okay, Chief. Thank you.

BATTALION CHIEF KEMLY: Thanks for your time.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC ROBERTO ABRIL

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. MURAD: Today is January 17, 2002. The time is 0800 hours. My name is Murray Murad of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, your rank and your command please?

A. Paramedic Abril, Battalion 49.

Q. This interview is being conducted at Battalion 49 in Astoria station. This is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Would you please give us your perspective on that day, on what happened on that tragic day?

A. We were working. We started to work at 8 o'clock. We got a job for an OB comp, somewhere in Astoria, and we went to aid, to help one of the BLS units here, I think it was 5 Adam, with a patient. We ended up going 82 to Elmhurst.

When we were 81 at Elmhurst, we received -- the guy on 6 Zebra told us that we were assigned to the World Trade Center, because a plane had hit one of the buildings. I didn't believe it to begin with and I told Carlos that we had to go to the World Trade Center because there was a plane that crashed into the building.

We took off 63 from Elmhurst. We went down Woodside Avenue to Queens Boulevard and took the Midtown Tunnel through.

Q. Just one question. Sorry to interrupt you. Who was your partner on that day?

A. Carlos Lillo.

Q. Carlos was your partner?

A. We went down to the Midtown Tunnel, but at that point, there was only one plane had hit one of the buildings and the other one was still intact. So we went out to the other side in Manhattan. We went across 34 Street to Tenth Avenue. We went down Tenth Avenue and we took Broadway, West Broadway down to the World Trade Center.

We were stopped at West Broadway and Vesey by one of the Lieutenants there, he told us to bring our vehicles around to where everybody was staging. Instead the staging of the vehicles took place at Washington and Vesey.

At that point is when Carlos took his gear and said well, I'm going to go ahead and go to triage while you park the vehicle. We didn't know -- it looked serious, but we didn't know it was so traumatic.

I parked my vehicle. I asked the Lieutenant if I should leave the keys. He told me no, just to stay by the vehicle, but there were plenty of people pulling me aside to help them out. I remember a lot of leg fractures and extremity fractures. I found myself triaging people. Many of the Metro Care ambulances were sent away with patients, but I mean, when the Lieutenant disappeared, there was nobody else at the triage where they had parked all the vehicles. There was nobody else there.

The initial collapse, not the actual collapse, but the top part of the building collapsed on top of these firemen and cops on West Broadway and Vesey as I was walking towards the building. I was unable to make it any more, because there was a lot of dust.

We witnessed a lot of stuff. We witnessed people falling off the buildings. We witnessed a lot of firemen dying from the initial collapse. You know, all this time Lillo was trying to get to me. He got on the TAC two channel on the radios. He told me that he was on West Broadway in the middle, between World -- I think it was 6 World Trade Center and the north tower.

That's when he told me to come over and meet him, so what I did was I went around 6 World Trade Center to try and meet him and at that point is when the north tower collapsed and I couldn't make it there any more.

On the way back, again, a lot of people were pulling at me, telling me to help them and I got some of these people in the ambulance. I kind of drove up a couple of blocks, I think it was Warren Street, I see it now. I think it was Warren Street, where I stopped and let them out and then I went back trying to look for my partner, but I found myself picking up more people and putting them again on Warren Street.

Then I went back a third time. Then I found myself stuck treating an old lady that was in a wheelchair with her daughter I think it was. I tried to -- wheel her back to the ambulance. On the way back to the ambulance, I met up with a couple of other paramedics that they said they were from the Bronx. We were trying to -- it was all chaos. We didn't know what to do, where to go, so between the three of us, we kind of got together and tried to get some of these people out.

Finally again, put some of the patients in this ambulance. I think it was when the south tower collapsed is when we took our last set of people, but it was some of the parking police department, those people that give out the tickets. The last three that I took out with these paramedics and we took them out to, I think it was Canal Street or one of those streets, about 10 blocks away from the actual site.

I went back, but at that point I couldn't go back any more, because it was too much dust. It was a lot of smoke and actually there was a lot of people that needed help. I couldn't go back.

My main concern was to get my partner. I couldn't find him. I kept saying if anybody saw him, but I guess everybody was busy.

Q. Did you happen to find out where Carlos' last location was where he was operating at?

A. Physically I didn't go. I couldn't get there because of what I just said. But he told me it was between the building that we initially saw. He told me between the two buildings, come into the north tower, and that's what I was trying to do. So I figure he was between the 6 World Trade Center and the north tower. Somewhere around there.

Like I said, there was 3 collapses. The first one that the top of the building collapsed. I see here is the northeast plaza building. That building collapsed first.

Q. That was the south tower?

A. Yes, that would make it the south tower, yes. So the top of that building collapsed. Like I said, I witnessed 5 people got killed there. Then it was too much dust. That's when I think I saw Captain Rivera there too. I asked him if he had seen my partner and he said listen, I'm going to go back in there.

Q. Who was that, Captain Rivera?

A. Yes.

Q. Joseph Rivera?

A. Yes, JR.

Q. Okay, JR, fine.

A. I told him listen, I'm missing my partner. We got separated for some reason and I need to go back. I need to find him. He says don't worry about it. I'm going to go back in. You take care of these people and I will go back in and find him. He did. He went back in. That was about it.

When we were -- they didn't let us go to Citywide. They told to us stay on Queens west. The reason how I know that is because there was a lot of traffic and I remember in all the chaos, I wanted to make sense of why people were still going to Rikers Island. Why are people still going to minor injuries when we need a lot of help here.

I remember listening to the radio, to all the normal traffic that you would have, when I know these people would need help. When the initial collapse happened, all my masks ran out. I had like 20 of those -- I think they are class A or class one masks that we always carry. But I gave them out and as soon as -- 5 minutes they were all gone. I remember keeping, I said listen, I got only two left. I had one for myself and one for my partner. I can't gave give them away any more. Then I remember getting on the radio and saying listen, can somebody bring some masks, because I need a lot of masks over here.

That was about it. When I turned around and I tried to help these people before the north tower collapsed, the first big collapse, we were helping -- we were at, I think the American Express building. We had people that were burnt. We had people that had fractures and other people with psychological type of problems. We had staged them there, because there was really no control over anything at that point. That's when the north tower collapsed. It was when I heard Mayday, Mayday. Some of the firemen that were running back were telling us run, run, run. We started to run and now that I think about it, some of these people with fractured limbs, they kind of took off running.

That's it. Then after that, we just started to drive and we started to treat these people and I lost my partner. That was it.

Q. Is there anything else that you would like to add or that you can think of?

A. About the whole thing?

Q. Yes. Personal stuff.

A. At that point, what I didn't understand was why is it that we were triaging people on the first floor of this building that has a plane on top. I couldn't understand that. When I had a chance to walk in to see what was going on, there were actually close to 5 DOAs on the street. Some of them had no legs, some of them that had no arms. There was a torso with one leg, with an EMS jacket on top. I guess somebody wanted to just cover it. There was a fireman that had been hit by a body. I really didn't understand why is it that we were triaging people on the first floor instead of going somewhere else.

What else did we do? Then after that everything came down and we were away from the dust cloud and everything, we were somewhere around, I think it was West 23 Street, somewhere around there. You could still smell the dust and smoke and we just wanted to come back. We kept going back, but at one point it was useless because most of the people that could get out were already walking back and there wasn't too many people other than the regular hysterical people, there was no really injuries.

Other than -- maybe we treated a couple of eyes injuries, cops that were coming out. There was one cop that was actually crying blood. There was blood dripping down from his eyes and later I found out, the doctor explained to me that when you get concrete in your eyes it becomes rock and when you close your eyes, your cornea, your eye is bleeding. So I guess -- we just flushed the eyes and they kept going.

That's pretty much it.

MR. MURAD: Paramedic Abril, I would like to thank you for this interview. The time now is 015 hours. This concludes this interview. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT KEVIN BARRETT

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. MURAD: Today's date is January 17, 2002. The time is 0700 hours. My name is Murray Murad of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name?

A. KEVIN BARRETT, shield number 1465.

Q. Your rank?

A. EMT.

Q. What is your assigned command?

A. Battalion 49.

Q. Okay. The location of the interview is being conducted at Battalion 49, Astoria. This is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Can you just give us what happened that day in your own words?

A. Sure. Came into work, you know. It was a typical day, so it was my wife's birthday. I was going to, you know, I was talking to my partner, deciding what I was going to do for her. Take her out to dinner and stuff like that. Did our little routine, got breakfast, reading the papers and approximately about 9:15, we were told to go to the 59 Street Bridge and stand by and wait for further instructions.

We were told to switch to Citywide and upon listening to Citywide, they came over and confirmed a 1040 at the World Trade Center. 1040 is an airplane crash. We were sitting there waiting for instructions, sitting there with Lieutenant Scaringello and other units that were told to stand by the bridge and approximately about 9:20, 9:25, we were told to respond in to the World Trade Center and stand by at Vesey and West Street.

Upon hearing that we responded in. We followed another unit and we followed ESU truck 4 straight down into Manhattan to the World Trade Center.

Upon listening to Citywide we were told, being we were a HAZMAT unit, we were told to go to a different location. So upon arriving at the area, we told the Lieutenant, who was directing everybody, said we are a HAZMAT unit. He told us to make a right and to be honest with you, I don't remember what the street name was, even looking at the map, it was just so -- I was getting into what we had to do, my assignment.

So we get there. I saw Captain Janice Olszewski. I told her we are a HAZMAT unit, you know. We are here, 49 Henry, and she said okay, you stand by with me. Have your partner get your truck ready and we will use your ambulance as a supply truck if we need anything.

Upon coming down, everything was going good, people being brought down to us, being triaged. I was working with the Captain, Lieutenant Bruce Medjek, and was trying to organize everything a little bit better. I ended up talking to Paramedic Carlos Lillo. He kept asking me where is my wife, have you seen my wife. Have you seen my wife. I said Carlos, don't worry, she is going to be okay. She is around. We will find her. Concentrate on doing what you got to do, do what we are here for.

Upon that, a lot of civilians were coming and trying to answer their questions and the cops asked me do you have any fire line tape or anything that we can block the road off. I said yes, I have HAZMAT tape, so I got the HAZMAT tape out of my truck. I cordoned off the area. So the civilians, all the nosy people wouldn't come in and bother us so we could do our job.

Approximately 9:50, we heard this loud noise. I looked up and it sounded like another airplane was coming in. That's what it sounded. It sounded like a large engine, like you're sitting on the seat on the wing of the plane. That's the best way I can describe what it sounded like.

We look up and we saw tower two coming down. We just all ran. I lost my partner. I lost everybody I was working with that day. Let me backtrack for a second.

When we were putting up this HAZMAT tape, I turned around and I said to Carlos' partner, Paramedic Abril, I said where is Carlos. I mean -- by that time Carlos was gone. We don't know where he went, but we think he went in to look for his wife. We don't know.

Q. Do you know what tower -- was both towers still up or did he run -- do you know what tower he was heading towards?

A. No. Both towers were still up when we were --

Q. At what point did you actually lose Carlos?

A. I would say maybe roughly about 9:45. Somewhere around there. Just Bobby and I just turned around and he was gone. It was just -- I remember Bobby telling me he gave me his pager, because he has an alpha numeric pager and he said I will call you and let you know where I am. We never heard from him again.

Then like I said, when tower two was coming down, we just all scattered and a young lady was getting trampled on. I picked up her up and I said come on, let's go. We only got up around the corner. She went one way, I went another way. The last thing I remember is it started getting, gray, gray. It turned pitch black and I get up, I turn around, like I couldn't move. I figured out I was underneath a car.

I got up and I was just -- got out from underneath the car and I realized I was underneath a police car, praying how lucky I was.

Q. That's when the south tower came down?

A. That's when tower two came down.

Q. Which is, you are referring to --

A. I guess the south tower.

Q. Okay, because the north tower is still up, right?

A. Right.

Q. It was the south tower that came down. Okay, go ahead.

A. Then I got out. I got out from underneath the car. Made sure I was okay. I didn't see any blood or anything like that on me. There was two gentlemen behind me. I wanted to make sure they were okay. They were okay. I said okay.

We walked into a store and we just, you know, got some water, cleaned out some of the stuff out of our throats, because we were all just coughing and gagging and all the stuff that we inhaled and ingested. I asked to make sure they were okay. They were.

We walked into the store and I just started looking at people to make sure everybody was okay. All of a sudden, I hear my name called out and I end up hooking up with my partner again, which was another miracle in itself, because we just ran. [redacted]

I got into the store and we just -- I saw my partner and I was like you are okay. He was okay. He wasn't hurt either. Then we were going to go back out. We went back out to check to make sure we were going to go back down to the area, make sure everybody was okay, see what we could do and that's when the north tower started coming down.

We ran again. By the time we ran, we just got -- I don't know where we were, what we were doing. We just kept running. After the north tower came down, we were able to find EMT Moussa Diaz, another one of our co-workers out of our station. The three of us just hugged each other. It was like a miracle that we all survived that. It was just something I will never ever forget as long as I live. I was unable to get in touch with my wife, let her know I was alive, get in touch with my parents, anybody. My cellphone was dead. Couldn't make calls out because the towers -- the lines were down.

Finally at about say one o'clock my mother-n-law was able to get in touch with my cellphone. I told her call my wife, call my mom. Let her know I'm okay, I'm alive. I don't know what time I'm coming home at all. I was able to get in touch with my wife about 6:00 that night at my house to let her know I was okay, you know.

It was just a beautiful day turned into a disaster. I felt like I was in a movie at first, when you see everything, you know, typical movie. You would see a movie and everything is like a storm and a tornado and everything just turns gray and pitch black and I'm in the middle of this. It was like I thought it was a dream and then it was reality.

Q. All right. Is there anything else you would like to add to the interview?

A. No. Just that I'm lucky to be here to talk about it.

MR. MURAD: Okay. EMT Barrett, I would like to thank you for allowing us to give this interview. The time now is 709 hours. This concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT MOUSSA DIAZ

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. MURAD: Today's date is January 17, 2002. The time is 545 hours. My name is Murray MURAD of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. MOUSSA DIAZ, EMT, 3203 for the New York City Fire Department, EMS.

Q. This interview is being conducted at Battalion 49, Astoria station. This is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. EMT DIAZ, just give us your perspective on what occurred that day.

A. What happened was we had a job, pregnant complications, so I called for back up medics 49 Victor, Tour 2. We brought the patient over to Elmhurst Hospital. Upon getting our ACR signed, Carlos Lillo came running over and told us a plane just hit the tower, you know, let's come up available as soon as possible and head down there.

Got on the radio, we got in the ambulance and got on the radio, and we told them we were going to be responding, so we followed 9 Victor en route to the tower from Elmhurst Hospital in Queens.

Q. Keep going.

A. Elmhurst Hospital in Queens. From there, we drove down to the Midtown Tunnel. Took the Midtown Tunnel. Our destination was Barclay and Vesey. From there me and my partner -- 9 Victor went their way. Me and my partner went towards 1 World Trade Center, where the command post was.

Q. What was your partner's name, who were you working with that day?

A. Paul Adams, shield number 2212. We were directed to go to either Barclay and Vesey, right across the street from the 1 World Trade Center. That's where we met Captain -- I don't know her name. We had our first patient that had about 70 percent degree burns. We assessed her. We transported her to St. Vinny's. We came back from St. Vinny's, back to the same location. The Captain had told me there is a lady with a cardiac condition, so we sat her down on the stretcher.

All of a sudden we heard a big boom and I looked up and the tower started to collapse, so I instructed the patient, I told her make a run for it. From then we all ran. I lost my partner and a big black cloud of debris started coming around the corner from, I believe it's 5 World Trade Center.

Q. When you said you heard a boom, what tower -- can you describe which tower --

A. I believe it was tower one, because we were right in front of it. Right between, there is a street. There is like a path. We were against the building. 5 World Trade Center. I believe that was what it was, and 1 World Trade Center. It was directly above it and that's where the command post was.

When we heard the big boom, I looked up and I just saw the building collapsing. My patient was on the stretcher and I unstrapped her and I said make a run for it. We ran around the corner. Everybody just started trampling. I fell on the floor, and that's when a ball of dust started coming in between the blocks of buildings and my visibility was gone for a while. I ran into a pole, couldn't breathe and a cameraman, a guy had a camera I couldn't see and all I saw was a bobbing light. I ran over to the cameraman and he grabbed me and we started feeling for -- things -- things seem, you know -- we were losing air, trying to feel somewhere where we can get in and trying to open car doors and then we felt for a city bus. We opened up the door, went in, I was looking for buttons to turn it on. We turned this bus on and we started taking people inside the bus to get a little refuge, because there was no visibility.

From there, I thanked him for saving my life and stepped off the bus. Everybody else stepped off and we started running. Then another cloud came. We had some visibility and I had some sense of direction where I'm running towards. I ran towards -- I believe it was Federal Plaza. By the courts. I took refuge there here, by the Federal Building, the US Post Office. We ran up towards this way. We took refuge there. I got the fire hydrant that was open and I got some water to clear my face and stuff. We had like a little command post. People running up to me. I was by myself and asked me what should I do. I just had them sit down, because there was asthmatics, there was pregnant people, nothing really major.

From there, I went back because my partner was gone. I went back, I walked back and I walked back down West towards the location of the command post, but it was impossible because there was no visibility towards that area. That's when I saw EMT Barrett running out and EMT Monchery running out. They were from my Battalion. They were all dusted up and we just, you know, started hugging each other and stuff.

From there, I believe one of them had a radio, because I lost my equipment and everything. We heard that people needed help down at -- I think it was down Broadway and -- I'm not too sure. Couple of blocks over.

We went there and there was an ambulance. The Captain that was in charge of the command area was there and an ambulance. I don't know the people's names. We drove to a corner, because there was somebody in distress like two blocks down. It was just a guy that was in our situation, but he was stable and started to go on his way.

From there, they drove me to the West Side Highway to get checked out. I got triaged over there, mini triage, and I stayed there until the duration, until 1 in the morning basically.

The rest of the people from Battalion 49 that were there, we all went under the ambulances and we went down back to the station.

Q. Just a couple of questions. Actually, so you were there when the north tower collapsed. Was the south tower down already?

A. No, I was there -- I don't know which the first tower that went down.

Q. You were there for the first -- so that was the south tower that came down?

A. Probably, yes.

Q. Then you were there for the north tower, also, collapse?

A. Yes, I was there.

Q. Radio, did you have any radio communications?

A. I lost my radio when I got tr -- because when I was on the stretcher, I had the patient on the stretcher. I unstrapped her and I told her run. I unstrapped her and I told her to run and the people just started trampling on you. My helmet was gone because I didn't have it strapped on tight enough. My radio, my equipment that was on the scene was gone. My ambulance was parked a block and a half away and if I would have went there I wouldn't have made it. If I would have went towards the ambulance I definitely would have -- I was about a block and a half way away from --

Q. Is there anything else that you would like to add at this time?

A. Not at all.

MR. MURAD: Time now is 0600 hours. This concludes the interview. I would like to thank EMT DIAZ for this interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN JOHN LUONGO

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: The time is 1340 hours, and this is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the safety battalion of the New York City Fire Department.

I'm conducting with interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name?

A. John Luongo.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: John Luongo is the captain of Engine 84 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Engine 84. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. John, if you would please state in your own words what happened that day.

A. We were relocated from here to 16 engine? Yes, 16 engine on 29th Street, I think. It was on the east side, so we were just -- when we left here, we knew that both towers had been hit. We knew what was going on downtown.

As we backed into 16's quarters, the first -- the south tower was collapsing. The guys were recalled, and anybody who had stayed -- whoever was in their firehouse was watching it on television. As soon as the south tower collapsed, we were assigned to the box. We were instructed to report in on West Street and report in to the command center on West and Vesey.

We made it to the west side. We headed down West Street. We got -- I'm going to say down around Stuyvesant High School. I'm not exactly sure where we stopped our rig, what street that was, but we just couldn't drive any further. The street was just clogged with rigs. Maybe Warren. Warren, Murray, around there.

When we got off the rigs -- I don't know the battalion chief's name, but there were chiefs instructing us not to go to Vesey at that point, but to wait. I think they were creating a staging area down around Murray or Barclay, but that kept changing. They kept pushing us back and forth.

We had our roll-ups. We had extra bottles. We had search ropes. We had all our equipment. We were standing on West Street. Again, I'm not a hundred percent sure where exactly we were, how close to Vesey we were, but we were pretty close, because then while we were waiting for further orders, the north tower collapsed, and as it started to collapse, I just told my guys to hightail it out of there.

I just watched the collapse. I didn't know if the building was going to go one way or the other. I didn't know whether there was going to be a debris field, how far the debris would go. I was just watching the collapse, and then in a matter of seconds we were just enveloped in darkness, at which point we just heard a lot of screaming, not on the radio so much, but people yelling.

Some guys dropped their masks to be able to run quicker. They were having trouble breathing. It was just pitch black. I just walked to the side to one of the dividers, and I just followed the divider north until we hit daylight.

At that point, we were up around, I think, Manhattan Community College. I think we walked that far to get out of the dust. I got the rest of my guys together. We were all okay. Mike Oates, who was driving that day, asked me if he could try and drive over to -- what is it, East End Avenue?

Q. By the water?

A. Yes.

Q. By the Hudson River?

A. Yes, which he did. He brought our rig around, down River Terrace, North End Avenue, whichever, and then brought it around, and we actually wound up on Vesey with the rig.

We got into the relay from the fire boat. We hooked up to a hydrant initially, and that was -- we were running away from water. We had some, but we were running away from water, and then we got involved in the relay. We were supplying 224 engine a little closer to the site. They were probably right on West and Vesey. We were by the American Express building, and there was a couple of other engines between us and the water all hooking up into this relay, so eventually what we did with the engine was supply a manifold, and then a manifold was supplying --

Q. Hand lines?

A. Hand lines. There was a tower ladder operating for awhile, and then once we had all our rig and everything all set up, then we were just operating under the command of that, the West and Vesey command post, doing recovery, searching -- you know, search and recovery work, just on the periphery, though. We never really got into the main --

Q. The main collapse?

A. Pile. And I recalled Engine 39's chauffeur trying to get in touch with his officer, and he was doing it for awhile. It was quite awhile that he was trying to get in touch with him. I don't know if anybody knew where they were at the time.

I don't recall any Maydays or any actual transmissions from people who were trapped. That would have certainly triggered -- it was just -- it seemed like there were too many radio transmissions, and a lot of disjointed stuff, and a lot of unanswered transmissions.

There was -- I know there were rescue operations going on, and a lot of the rescue operation were taking over the radios, but I don't -- I remember Freddy LaFemina. I remember hearing him. I think he -- they might have gotten some guys out of either the hotel -- I forgot.

I know there was a fire involved, and they weren't able to get the fire out, and there were a couple of guys trapped, but I think they finally got them out.

Then I remember a lot of transmissions where people saw turnout gear, but the -- whether it was a rescue or recovery and most of -- most -- well, most of the responses were that it was a recovery, and they were told to forego the recovery until the site had been secured, and then, like I said, we just -- we left there about midnight, so for the rest of the day we intermittently walked, like I said, searched around. We didn't find too many body parts where we were. Most of it was down below where we were, and the engine stayed there for about two or three days.

Q. Just pumping?

A. Just pumping, yeah. People -- we would just get a company to relieve us, and we left, and we went down a few days later, and comandeered our own engine and brought it back, and they had given us a spare rig to work with up here, but we went down and got our own rig back and went back into service a couple of days later.

We were in service with the spare for a while, but I don't recall any -- you know, anything other than --

Q. That's good. It's kind of funny. Most people don't recall anything specific. I think everybody was so concentrated on whatever they were doing, they really weren't thinking about anything else. That seems to be the general thing.

A. Well, I know. When you are on the job and hear your radio is on, depending on who you are and what your job is, if you are a battalion chief, you're more in tuned to listen to an officer. If 84 says something, you might be more inclined to listen to that then if it's 84 alpha.

Q. Right.

A. Or 34 OV, he's going to be talking to his officer. Not that it's information you don't want, but you can only do one thing at a time, or two things at a time mostly, so if different units were talking to each other, you didn't pay attention to it because it wasn't involving you.

If someone called a Mayday or called something or -- like I said, the reason I remembered 39 engine was that he was so persistent, and he wasn't getting any response.

Q. They all made it out.

A. Yeah.

Q. Which was a miracle. They went back looking for a guy that was out already.

A. Really.

Q. They were out of the building, because I interviewed one of the guys, and they couldn't find this guy who was out, and he thought that the officer saw him get out, and they went back looking for him.

A. Really.

Q. Anything else you wanted to say?

A. [redacted]

Q. They would have gotten there early.

A. Yeah.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: That concludes the interview. It's 1:50.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER GEORGE HOLZMAN

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 17, 2002. The time is 1215 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name.

A. Firefighter George Holzman.

Q. Of Ladder 47 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Ladder 47. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. George, if you would please tell the story in your own words.

A. We relocated a few minutes after 9 o'clock to Ladder 6. We headed downtown. I was the chauffeur, so I was very aware of the traffic situation and just trying to get down there. I think everybody else was anticipating what had just happened. We hit quite a bit of traffic on the way down, especially near the Triborough Bridge. We finally got on the FDR. We got about, probably down to the low teens, when traffic just about came to a halt. We decided at that point to get off the highway and filter our way through the side streets.

When we got off the highway, the two towers were still standing, we realized that another plane had hit at that point or something else had happened to the other tower. We proceeded towards 6 Truck. Joe Lowney, the Lieutenant, knew the area from when he was a proby, so he was getting us through the neighborhood. We stopped to help a lady who wasn't necessarily involved in the Trade Center collapse, but just had some medical problems from I think all the upset --

Q. Give me a second George, to make sure -- okay, go ahead.

A. We stopped the rig and everybody got off the rig. I moved to the officer's seat to monitor the radio, trying to take down whatever information, which was lots of information at that point, where the command post was. I think we all just naturally assumed that we weren't going to be spending a lot of time at 6 Truck, considering what had happened.

At which point, the first collapse occurred, or I assume that from all the Maydays and because we were surrounded by buildings, we weren't aware that the whole building had collapsed. We all just assumed that a piece had fallen. There would be Maydays because of that. We probably were with the lady about 5 to 8 minutes. I called the Bronx dispatcher, I asked him to send us an ambulance, realizing that Manhattan really had their hands full.

Before I knew it the guys were getting back on the rig. Apparently the lady felt a little bit better. There was a clinic in the nearby area. We boarded the rig and headed towards 6 Truck. We just pulled up to 6 Truck. We were trying to get in the front door. We received a run to somewhere in the area of Fulton and Broadway. I parked the rig by St. Pauls Church. We were confronted with quite a few injured people, people that just were confused and dazed by the whole set of events. I think in a lot of ways, we were as confused by the impact of this, not realizing that the whole building had actually come down. We just assumed that a piece of the building had come down.

We worked on those people. We helped them in whatever way we could. The officer and the irons and can team went into the building, searching for this smoke condition. Radioed out to me that tell the dispatcher that 1020, the box, it most likely was just smoke from the area.

I started walking back towards the rig, the OV and the roof guy were helping me take care of people and I started walking towards the rig to tell the Manhattan dispatcher what was going on. When what we thought was another plane had hit another building, because we were on the side of the building that was pretty smoky and debris, cloud. The remainder was in our face most of that time. We assumed or we thought that there was another explosion, another plane had hit. We didn't know what had happened. To be quite frank with you, I don't think we realized how close we were to the Trade Center, geographically speaking.

At which point we grabbed everybody we could and headed probably about a block into Fulton where we found an office building that we could get into. We took whoever we had with us in there. We took all our medical equipment. I radioed the Lieutenant to stay in the building. That I don't know what had happened but it had been catastrophic, to stay in the building until we figured out what was going on.

We stayed in communications all the while, just letting everybody know we were okay and we were still around. We were in the building for probably two or three minutes when we realized that there were probably a lot more people outside. So we donned our masks and the three of us went out and we brought in probably another 6 or 8 people, including a quite pregnant Asian lady who I kept screaming at her, please, whatever you do lady, don't have this baby. I think she actually believed me. She realized that this wasn't a good time to be having a baby.

Anyway, we got everybody straightened out. I think there was one Firefighter we brought in, but you know, it's a shame how you just have no notion of who these guys were. He had quite a bad laceration to his hip. He went through a pane of glass in a building, one or two buildings up, and then for some reason retreated from there and then we found him out in the street, so we tended to him. I guess all together, we had about 15 people in there. Within probably 10 or 15 minutes, when things started to clear, we decided as a group to meet up with the officer and the irons team and we asked this group of people that we had to take the pregnant lady to, I think Downtown Beekman or whatever hospital was there.

Q. Beekman.

A. Because we were about two blocks away or somewhere in that area, so as a group they headed off, because there were quite a few injured and what not.

So everybody kind of helped each other and they took off. We met the officer. We headed towards the buildings, the Trade Center. We went down -- I believe we said Barclay to Church with our first attempt to try to do something, but it just didn't seem like there was any potential to do anything there. We looked up towards West and we saw an engine and a truck on the corner and we actually saw a Battalion Chief, so we decided let's head over there and we will get some direction and see what we could do.

The Chief asked us to force our way into any buildings we could. They wanted to charge the stand pipes or to have the ability to know where the stand pipes were and eventually charge them. We stayed in that area doing that for a while as well as searching under vehicles and whatever else we could do. Whatever you could do was what we did. There was no master plan at that point.

We stayed there for quite sometime. There were a lot of vehicle fires, there was a lot of debris that we were searching for people. Mostly civilians we thought at that point. That was I think what was in our heads, people that had fleed the building. Well, I will wait for that. I mean we were looking for civilians in our heads.

We stayed there for quite sometime when I don't even know who, I think it was someone, Lieutenant Lowney spoke to, asked us to leave the area, they were concerned about 7 World Trade Center collapsing. At that point we made our way back to actually where our rig was, was right by St. Pauls Church. We went to the command post, told them we had a rig, which they seemed to be happy to hear. It seemed to be the routing point for all the recall guys.

So we stayed there for not too long a period of time, but I want to say about an hour, somewhere in that area. Finally they told us to head over to the command post on West Street or the West Side Highway, I guess, where we went. Probably within a half an hour of getting to there, the 7 World Trade Center collapsed, so it must have been late afternoon at that point, 5 o'clock or somewhere in that neighborhood.

We stayed there probably an hour. We had something to eat, we got our eyes cleaned out. Guys got cleaned up, got out of their bunker gear, washed off, tried to clean their bunker gear as best as they could. I guess about an hour after that, we were sent down to the command post, which was right by the Customs building. We stayed there probably half an hour, 45 minutes I would think. We were hoping to be able to accomplish something, but they felt that we had been there all day and they really wanted to get some fresh troops in there.

They sent us back to the command post, where we probably spent another hour and then were finally relieved. We figured we would be going home and they sent us back to 6 Truck. We went back to 6 Truck. We stayed there for the tour. We were relieved in the morning and that's really it.

Q. Very good. Anything else?

A. No, not really, other than it just being a horrific day and an awful lot of peoples' lives.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: I know, and thanks a lot for being candid with us. We are trying to get something organized here. Thank you very much. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JOSEPH LOWNEY

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 17, 2002. The time is 1155 hours and this is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Please state your name. Lieutenant Joseph Lowney.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Lieutenant Joseph Lowney is assigned to Ladder 47 of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Ladder 47. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. If you would just in your words describe what happened that day.

A. Well, we were relocated to Ladder 6. En route to Ladder 6 we were stopped by an unconscious civilian in the street, and I don't recall the exact street. We stopped to aid the civilian. We rendered first aid to her, oxygen, and called for EMS. Then we were able to leave her and we headed towards Ladder 6's quarters.

Once we got to Ladder 6's quarters, we received a ticket for a response for a building fire on Fulton Street at Broadway. I don't recall the address. We responded to that building, arrived at that building, and were met by many injured civilians that were fleeing away from, I guess, the World Trade Center at that time. Some of the men were working on the people, helping them, and the rest of the crew started to examine the building for a fire.

As we went through the building, there were even more occupants in the building that were seeking our help, and while we were searching that building for the alleged fire, the -- I guess it was the second building had collapsed at that point. At that point there was pretty much havoc in the streets. Everything went black and there were many people that needed assistance and we kind of basically just were rendering first aid to people.

At that point we were unable to reach the Manhattan dispatcher via radio, so what we did was we broke into an office in the building that we were searching and we used the land line. We tried to call the Manhattan dispatcher via the land line and we were unable to reach them via phone as well. So we called the Bronx dispatcher and were able to contact them to let them know that we were okay and what our status was and what we were doing.

At that point then, we continued to assist people, rendering first aid and assistance. They were looking for direction by us. At that point then, we worked towards the site of the collapse.

As we got on the other side of Broadway, I'm not sure of the streets down there. Do you remember?

A VOICE: (Inaudible.)

Q. Hold on one second.

A. Okay. So when we got on the other side of Broadway, we worked our way down Barclay Street. As we got to West Street, we were met by an Engine Company stretching a line down West Street, and we were asked by some Chiefs to force entry into some buildings there so that they could use standpipes. We worked on that for a while and assisted in stretching lines down West Street, and I'm not sure of what the Engine Company was even at that point.

There was a tower ladder that was parked in the street, I think on Barclay Street and West, but there was nobody on it, and we used that for radio communications. Actually, at that point we heard the dispatcher calling on the radio for any unit that was operating that was relocated. So I contacted the Manhattan dispatcher and told them that we were operating at that point.

From that point on, we were kind of ordered out of the collapse area because they were concerned about another building collapsing. I wasn't exactly sure at that time which one it was.

We worked our way back towards the command post that was situated at Broadway and around Fulton, and from there, we had a rig, and we had to wait quite a while, but eventually the Chief had sent us down to the West Side Highway and Chambers Street, to the other command post, and at that point they just made us stand fast until, I guess, roughly around what?

A VOICE: 7:00 o'clock, I guess?

A. Yes, around 7:00 o'clock. At that point they had let us go down towards the site, and when we got to the collapse area, another Chief ordered us back out because we had been there all day and they didn't want our services at that point. So they told us to head back towards the command post by Chambers.

At that point, that was late in the evening, I guess about 8:00 or 9:00 o'clock. Then they had released up from there and the Manhattan dispatcher had sent us back to the quarters of Ladder 6.

Q. Okay.

A. That's about it.

Q. Is there anything else?

A. Well, while we were back at Chambers Street, we were triaged, I guess, from EMS. We had received some medical care. We were getting our eyes washed out. I think that's about it.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Okay. All right. Thank you. That concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEVIN HOWE

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 17, 2002. The time is 15 hundred hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name.

A. Kevin Howe.

Q. Kevin Howe is a fireman in Engine 84 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Engine 84. This interview is regarding events of September 11, 2001. Kevin, in your own words, if you would say what happened on that day.

A. Okay. I'm going to start in the fire house. Approximately 8:50 I heard a second alarm announcement in the Borough of Manhattan, 1 World Trade Center and the voice -- the men put on the TV at that time. We were watching and watching it and a short while later as we were watching it, we see the second plane hit the building and we knew it was terrorism, and now it wasn't just a small plane that hit. That's what everybody thought initially.

When that happened, my wife called on the phone. She's, you know, worried, don't get killed.

You make 60 thousand a year. With that I was on the phone and we got the bee-boops. I just said I got to go. What it was we relocated to 16 Engine on 29 Street on the east side. So when I got out to the rig, I was the back up chauffeur or so I thought that day. I went out to the rig and Mike Oates was getting ready to drive. He had just completed chauffeur training school and I remember it had a real meaning then, because I had already been told I was driving and I put my stuff on the rig like I'm a chauffeur. Now the chauffeurship had a real meaning this time, you know, you're gonna do the work.

But anyway, in the confusion, I left behind my bunker coat and I put my stuff on the rig, or so I thought. Mike Oates was the new chauffeur. He took us down to 29 Street. We backed into quarters and you know, I was just thinking I got to get a coat, I got to get a coat. I pulled off, what turned out to be Princiotta's coat from 7 Truck, is it.

Q. 7 Truck.

A. I took his coat and we went down and we watched it on what seemed like a couple of minutes in their kitchen. Then we got the bee boops to go to the Trade Center. From there I remember it taking a while. It seemed like a long time to get across town. We got across town, went down the west side, West Street, and I was in the back of the rig sitting backwards and I don't recall knowing if the building had collapsed.

I got there. We pulled up several blocks away on West Street and I got out of the rig and there was dust everywhere and we went and did what we had to do. We had to get our rollups and bring an extra air tank. Myself and 84 Engine started making our way towards tower number 1, which we had a pretty clear view. I'm not sure how close we got to it. As we were walking up closer, there were a lot of civilians going the other way and we were walking up and my thoughts were how the hell -- how am I going to make this climb. This is at least 70 stories, no way. I'm thinking no way. I know there is a way. 10 floors at a time, you take a break. With all the equipment and rollups, that was my chief concern at that point, like how the hell am I getting up there.

As we got a little closer, I remember seeing how much fire there was and there seemed to be like 8 floors of fire and I thought there can't be any stand pipes system. As I am having these thoughts as and I'm walking up, and we are getting close enough where I'm actually seeing -- I saw two images jump from the building, you know, 2 people, civilians and I'm thinking to myself this is fucking horrible, this is the end here, you know.

With that, I was able to -- I'm hearing like a rumble and I'm looking up and I'm seeing the antenna start to do this type of nonsense, swaying a little bit it seemed, and sure enough the building was coming down. That was tower number 1, the north tower. As it started coming down, we saw this ferocious amount of black cloud, a brown cloud that was chasing everybody. It was chasing us also. I remember I just dropped my equipment. I don't know what I did with my mask, which probably turned out to be foolish. I was just trying to lighten up and get out of the way. We ran. I ran along with everybody else. Our entire company. Getting out of the way of that building, because at that point, you don't know what's the collapse zone -- you don't know if it's doing a straight down number or if it's going to cantilever and topple. You really didn't know what the collapse zone was and you were basically running for your life.

I remember getting -- running like a couple of blocks and trying to find the Engine, regrouping and try to regroup and see what our plan of attack is now. We are all shot. It's still -- it's very fuzzy. I met up with the rest of the company and I remember we took the rig. We got on the rig. Did we get on the rig? We went around -- we did, we went around to the west. I don't what the last street is.

Q. Towards the water?

A. Towards the Hudson River. Drove down towards Vesey Street and we are taking a look and we made a left on Vesey. At that time there was a lot of fire going on. I think it was the Customs House was roaring. The 7 World Trade Center was roaring. All we could think is we were an Engine Company, we have got to get them some water. We need some water you know.

With that, we positioned the rig, I don't know, 3 quarters of a block away maybe. A fire boat was going to relay water to us. I don't know if I have things in the right order, whatever, if we were getting water out of a hydrant first. Jesus Christ --

Q. Captain said you were getting water. You were draining a vacuum?

A. It was draining away from us. Right. We had to be augmented. I think that's when the fire boat came. I think the fire boats supplied us. Of course you don't see that. You just see the (inaudible) way and you know, we are hooking up and we wound up supplying the Tower Ladder there. I just remember feeling like helpless, like everybody there was doomed and there is -- I just felt like there was absolutely nothing we could do. I want to just go back a little bit.

When we had first entered down Vesey Street, I heard a command post or a Division looking for 6 Truck and this came to my attention because that was my former company. I was with 6 Truck and 9 Engine up until March last year when I transferred in. I was very worried about those guys in 6 Truck, yet I didn't want to abandon my men with the Engine, because we were doing our job. We were supplying the Tower Ladder and we were doing our own thing.

I don't know what else. Do you want me to keep going what we did that day?

Q. Pretty much -- after the collapse, that's pretty much. You know, like after you were relaying water, that's enough.

A. It was just -- I remember a couple of guys coming from on the roof. This guy Russell and myself went out looking. We were searching for anybody or anything we could find. It was just mayhem and it was just a feeling of helplessness. If there was anybody, they were underneath big beams and girders and there was nothing humanly possible. I got to say, shortly after I heard them looking for 6 Truck, my radio died, my control man radio. That died and I wasn't getting any more transmissions. Guys were saying that they had to turn their radios off or whatever, because they were hearing people that were missing or lost or you know, or hurt. I guess it's kind of a blessing I didn't have -- my radio wasn't working and I wasn't aware that it wasn't working right away because we were all together.

So I'm trying to think of anything else, if I left anything out. I finally called my wife at 1:30 and she was happy to hear from me. I called from the bar across the street.

Q. The Mexican place?

A. I don't know, was it a Mexican place?

Q. I called from the Mexican place.

A. It looked like it was a nice bar you know, before it got taken over. I don't know. I'm trying to figure anything else I can remember. I remember them bringing -- they had an ambulance on Vesey and I believe it was Chief Ganci's body that they put in the ambulance. That was the first casualty that I saw.

It was just a very depressing day. It was a feeling of hopelessness and helplessness.

Q. I think we all kind of felt that.

A. You know, I don't know. Initially when you were there, you thought -- I said to myself there is no way anybody survived that, there is just no way.

Q. By some miracle 6 Truck and 39 Engine --

A. That was an incredible miracle. I saw the guys later on. I gave them hugs and everything. I was like, I couldn't believe it, you know. I don't know if it was the 6 -- guys that were stuck or the 6 recall guys, you know what I mean, but I was real happy to see them. I can't think of anything else that --

Q. That's good. That's good. That's all right.

A. Yes, I guess so.

Q. Okay. That's fine.

A. If you need anything else. I do remember us being pulled off the pile. We were down by the pile to search or looking around.

Q. Searches, searches?

A. Right. Searching for people or whatever. I remember being pulled off the pile like just before. It wasn't just before. It was probably an hour before 7 came down.

Q. It was about an hour before. Maybe an hour and a half.

A. I remember when 7 World Trade came down and everybody was like shell shocked. I mean this was a 47 story building. We all ran. We were like oh, my god, here we go again. It just gave us the creeps. But -- I don't know. After that -- and I really don't know what else.

Hopeless and helpless. Those are the catch words of that day.

Q. Yes, I think everybody.

A. You got to be getting tired of these interviews right?

Q. Well, you know what it is. It's somewhat interesting. Everybody saw a little something different, so to me it's interesting.

A. I know there is stuff I'm leaving out. Not consciously, but I just know things that we were doing and you know. Yes, I just remember that dust. It was (inaudible) masks. I was like, you know, I had to ditch my mask trying to lighten up along the way. Meanwhile I should have been wearing it, you know what I mean.

Q. It was still a good idea to get away from that.

A. This is true. I was thankful, very happy to get home the following morning, you know. Thanks a lot.

Q. I appreciate it. Thank you very much.

A. Let's get some coffee, coffee break.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: This concludes this interview. It's 1515.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JOHN HEER

Interview Date: January 18, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. DUN: Today is January 18, 2002. The time now is 8 o'clock. My name is Richard Dun. I'm working for the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name.

A. John Heer, I'm an EMT, Battalion 22, Staten Island.

Q. Okay. On September 11 can you just in your own words describe what happened on that day?

A. From around -- we left the station around 8:40. Around 8:45, we started getting calls, I started heading over towards the Verrazano Bridge for staging. They wouldn't send the job over, so we started heading down there, wondering what it was.

Before we got to the Verrazano Bridge, they said to set up the staging on the Brooklyn side of the Verrazano Bridge. Before we got over to the Brooklyn side of the bridge, they said they changed staging also to the opening at the Battery Tunnel. At this time I got a cellphone call from my wife telling me a plane hit the towers.

So I started trying to fix the PD radio, so we could listen to PD, see what was going on over there, because I told them we were going in and we knew we were gonna be in the Battery Tunnel at that time, me and my partner John Rothman. By the time we got to -- we were just about to head into the tunnel, saw the smoke coming out of the one tower. I was looking down playing with the radio. I looked up and saw another explosion come out of the second tower. I didn't actually see the second plane hit. That's when we went down into the tunnel.

We came out the other side. We were on, what's that, West Street, and we were directed to make a right. We pushed right up into staging up on West and Liberty, where you actually felt the heat from the building. There was a bunch of crushed cars, bunches of just other stuff laying around on the street. Cops directing people, in and around. We stood there for a little while so I could grab some equipment, stand out, I was like the first --

Q. Was there a lot of debris falling still at that time?

A. Yes, we should not have been there. We knew we should not have been there, but there was some Lieutenant, Captain, whoever was there, telling everybody to hang out, that's where we are setting up staging. Line up the units. Fine, so we stood there. That was like one time I grabbed the helmet and actually stuck it on. There was stuff. You heard it. I don't know if you remember as a kid you used to melt Army soldiers and they go ssst-pop. You hear that sound. That's what was coming off the building.

So after, I don't know, 10, 15 minutes, I don't remember the time, somebody said to us, you know, we really should not be here, you know, this is actually bad. There is stuff falling all over the --

Q. Was that an officer?

A. This is a Lieutenant. Lieutenant or Captain. It was an EMS Fire Department officer, yes. But he was definitely EMS. He said we should -- he was in a little bit of a panic, which is understandable. So we moved down around by South End. We moved up Liberty Street to South End. Just went around the corner and parked the bus there. This time we opened up the bus, we figured let's get the stretchers set up, and basically throw all we could on the stretcher. Long board, pulled the stretcher out and left it there.

There was a liquor store over there. The guy says anything you guys need, come inside, use the phone, the bathroom while this is all going on. I thought -- and the guy in the deli next door to him says look, can I close yet. I want to go home. I was like, well, do whatever you want to do, I don't care. So this time we started watching people jumping out of the building. My partner counted about 20. I saw maybe like 5 or 6, something like that. Still the same thing. Watching stuff hit the ground. Trying to listen to the radio.

Another unit pulled up. Some guy pulled up to us. He had a cut on his head, so a private unit gave him to us. Says here, we're gonna transfer him to you, or he can sit in my bus and do nothing if you want to. I'm not going anywhere right now for a while. Hatzolah was pulled in front of us. They had a lady having an anxiety attack, so we took our guy with the scratch on his head, and told them to take him too -- because our plan initially was let's go in and grab some patients and get out of there, because this is going to be nuts. So I wound up doing the right thing for some strange reason. That's -- I guess when we just started hearing the tower come down.

Q. Did you see any EMS officers that you recognized at the scene?

A. No, there was nobody there I recognized whatsoever. We were around a bunch of, as I said, there was -- Hatzolah was there, there was some other privates. There were a few EMS officers. Nobody I knew. At one point a Firefighter came over to us, asked us for a sheet to cover up a body part that was on the street. I'm sure he had -- that was before the tower came down, so -- and that's bad.

Q. The tower was still up though?

A. The tower was still up. You could see when we were around the corner you could see the top of the south tower. You could see the top. It just starts -- you hear the crumbling, like an engine roar and something started coming down like that and people just started scattering up the corner. People just started coming up to us panicking and stuff, so we put them in. We didn't start putting people into the liquor store where the guy wanted us. We started putting everybody into the deli where the guy didn't want us. He wanted to close up. But he was really nice once we all got inside. So we started pushing people in there, grabbing anybody, because the cloud started coming, standing by the door. This time I dropped my radio.

Q. Was there good communication on the radio --

A. It was anarchy on the radio. I'm sorry. We started hearing stuff -- the first time I ever really heard somebody screaming Mayday, which was for real. Everybody started screaming Mayday, Mayday, over and over again. I just was trying to hold the radio while we were running over the building, putting people in. You couldn't hear anything because people were screaming at us. So we are pushing them in the deli. I dropped the radio. Ran in, you know, it's taboo to lose a radio.

So anyway I ran back outside to get the radio while my partner starts screaming at me. Forget that. Went back inside. I think the deli guy was pretty much anything you guys want? We are trying to push people in the back, through the door. All this time, all you can see out of the window, it was just black. Everything was pitch black so we started -- we are going to get trapped in here. We are not getting out, we didn't know what was going on. Pushed people to the back of the store. My partner started saying like, there is no way out of here. I just like started telling him there is always a way of out of these places. They have to have by law some back entrance.

That's when we got everybody settled to the back where the cold cut racks was and stuff like that.

It still was completely black and some lady came out from the back door and said there is a hotel out back and there are people trapped up there. Me and John Rothman were the only ones in uniform that looked like anybody. Everybody else was civilians, so everyone is coming up to us and at this point we thought we were dead. We weren't getting out of there. I have kids, so I wasn't going to sit and die sitting in the deli.

I went in to the other building, went in through some back door and was went up some stairs and started screaming at the, you know, see if there's people. Started hearing some little voices in the background and stuff. So I was with John, and once again, he started screaming you opening those freaking doors? You don't know what's in there, feel the handle. That's kinda something you learn on TV.

So it was a family, a few families, all cuddled in a corner on, like on the second story. They said it was a hotel, I have no idea what it was. They were lying there. I was like you know, come on down this way. We got a deli down here, you can get water, whatever you need. We are all going to hang out down there and see what's going on. So I pulled them down. I guess there was -- because, I guess, I don't know, between 8 or 12 of them. I really don't remember.

That's when I found a back door that -- thinking there is a way out. So I pull the door open because (inaudible) and see it was just the cloud came back in so I slammed that door shut.

By this time out front, it started clearing up a little bit so we realized we were not blocked and we can actually get out. It was -- so some Lieutenant or somebody. I don't know who it was. I don't remember. I knew it was an officer, said we was going to start putting people down in the basement. I'm like --

Q. EMS?

A. FDNY I think. So we're gonna start putting people in the basement. I said everybody get off the floor, we are going to the basement for safety, because we didn't know what was going on. We didn't know if another plane was going to hit, if a bomb was going off. Some people go down. Other people are like look, I'm not going to the basement. I said look, I don't care. If you don't really want to go in there I'm not gonna tie you down and pull you down there. I have enough stuff to do here.

Went outside. It was like that, a snow storm. It was like muffled -- it was a muffled kind of -- like when the snow is really heavy and you are just seeing shapes moving out there, hearing Scott packs. This is where I split up with my partner, John Rothman, for a while.

Actually, before I split, sorry, I'm jumping the story here a little bit. He gave me a potholder with citrus seltzer water on it, because that's all that was in the deli. Hold this over your face, so we could breathe.

Went outside. John Rothman says, hey, I found Chief Grant. So it was like all right. Where is he. He says walking around, he's a little AMS right now. He is over in the other deli. There was another deli down the street a little bit. Here I grabbed the O-2 pack and went down and hooked him up to some O-2. So I'm saying to Chief Grant -- I really don't know him because I just transferred out of here. He says you know, are you all right. He is like just staring with a glazed look in his eyes, which is understandable.

Once again, my partner, John Rothman, takes off out of this store to look around for something. Chief Grant takes the non-rebreather and unhooks it from the O-2 tank. Just walks out with a non-rebreather on his face. He was like all right, he is all right. He is going to walk around a little bit, fine. Go walk around. I packed up my stuff. I started to find John. I said let's get the unit and get out of here. You know, it was moving down the street. I don't know how far we can go. You can't see anything down here. I don't want to start running over people.

So the truck is obviously covered with all kinds of crap and the stretcher and everything was out. I told him let's throw the stretcher in, you don't know if we'll need it. We threw the stretcher back in the bus, closed the doors up. This time the Lieutenant, I think he said Lieutenant, I don't know his name. This is the same guy before that told us -- we told him we were going to move around. We tell him we are heading down here. So, you know, we told him get in the bus, we are going to drive down the street.

We winded up getting in the bus --

Q. Is this still before the second collapse?

A. This is before the second collapse. We drove up to Albany Street, which is the next street, made a right, went heading down towards the water where there is like a little circle statue or something there. We hung out there. We got out, this time some guy came up to us, his radius-ulna was broke. We splinted it up. Let's get out of here, but we did the fastest splint job possible, and I said look, don't move your arm too much. He was a security guard or something. We wasn't a uniform status. There was some kind of uniform he had on. So I said don't move too much. Let's get out of here.

By this time, jumping ahead a little bit. We went down, left the bus there, turned it off. Went down to the water, made a left. Started heading down towards Battery Park. That's where everybody was going, because the cloud was all coming up from this way. We are still kind of getting some air so you could breathe, because you couldn't breathe. We got down to a certain point. There were boats pulling up.

Actually before the boats pulled up, sorry, there was a Chinese restaurant or something there, and somebody opened the door and there was about a 4 foot wall there that was -- I don't know how you are supposed to get into this restaurant, because that's the way we climbed over the wall and we started looking over and there were some firefighters, started pulling them up, because they were down by us. Families, little kids and stuff like that. Little kids started asking me, you know, why is this happening. I was like I don't know, I don't know what to tell you. You be with your family. It wasn't even her family. It was some guy was just, people were helping her out.

Pulled them all into this restaurant. That's when some boats started pulling up along, I don't know what pier that is over there. I have no --

Q. Glen Cove?

A. No, we were down here, all the way towards this plaza, then there is something up here, over here --

Q. The Waterway piers?

A. Oh, okay. There were wood rafters. Boats pulled up there and they hacked open the gates with axes. So we started loading more people. Told them, just get on a boat and get the hell out of here. We didn't know what was going on here. We are going do get hit again.

Before we even got into the Chinese restaurant, that's when the second tower started coming down. That's why I say, my story jumps around a little bit.

But the second tower, which is actually the first tower, tower one came down. We just heard a rumble and the smoke started coming around and people started running. I was like I wonder what they are running for, I can't even see anything any more, and so they took off. I slowed down by old ladies and stuff. You feel bad, you are racing and running past like 70 year-old ladies walking with canes. I said, you can't do that. As I said, we didn't think we were making it out anyway so we just ended up doing the right thing.

Started loading people on to the boats. We had another officer with a broken tib-fib fracture or something. She was splinted up with cardboard or something like that. We carried her over to the boat with -- I don't know if it was Hatzolah or some other private units. They are like are you getting on the boat with her. I'm like no, but if you guys want to go, go ahead, so the privates hopped on with her and they got out of there. Because I didn't even know where my partner was, again. He was not there again.

By this time, another 15 or so minutes, my cellphone started working again for a split second, you know, you heard that happen. Called my wife. She was like is everything all right. Yes. So she decided this was the time [redacted].

We started packing up, some -- I don't remember what Captain it was. His face is familiar. I'm really bad with names and he was around on a golf cart over there. He said, look, we're bugging out of here. We are moving out. We are heading down to the Battery Tunnel. I'm sorry, not Battery Tunnel, Battery Park. They are setting up staging over there. I'm like cool. So I said, yo, John, there's nothing for us to do over here. You can't see anything. There is nothing going back up there, because you couldn't see anything.

So we're gonna start heading back down there. We are like, all right. We will do that. Let's go around and see if we can get the unit. We go back around up -- we walked back up to get the unit, because we were useless, just walking around, when all our equipment and everything is up there. This time all our windows were busted out. All our equipment was gone. All of our personal shit was gone, except for actually this mug, because I had to save my sci-fi coffee mug. So I'm walking around with this coffee mug.

We get down to Battery Tunnel. I start walking down there -- and a de-fib. I had this mug and the de-fib. We came to a clearing, there was like a clearing, and there was a Lieutenant there. Once again I don't know the names. John would probably know who he was. He always does. The Lieutenant saw us walking down, he starts running up to us. [redacted]. He ran up to us, he said are you guys all right. He grabbed our equipment and carried it for us. I thought that was the coolest thing that you could do at that time.

He gave us some water and we hung out over by a rail for I don't know how long. Then we just started listening to the radio, Coast Guard coming up. There are jets flying overhead now. Every sound you hear, everybody is panicking and running everywhere.

Q. Both buildings are down?

A. Both buildings are down. If anybody screamed, or anybody ran in a little hurry in any direction, everybody was just following them. It didn't matter what was going on. Long story short, I guess. Finally get to the ferry.

Q. South Ferry now?

A. Yes, South Ferry. Not much really in between, pretty much hanging out, talking about stuff. Trying to get a sense of humor about the situation. Some people already moving around in those little carts.

We went out for long boards for a little bit, to -- the only place that had long boards at that time was Bellevue. A bunch of their own employees were just sitting there staring at us, and we're like, to hell with that. We are going over there. So we took a bunch of long boards. Headed back downtown. Hung out there for a while. Listened to the President's address. You know, that was really inspiring. Somebody put it over the PA system, one of the bosses.

After a long story, we finally said it's 11 o'clock at night, we're heading back to the Island, we're not really doing anything. It's only some walking wounded. Got to Staten Island, we didn't know how we were getting back to the station, so a bunch of firefighters, actually rescue 5, there was 2 firefighters. They were the only two that survived, were on the boat with us and we were all really quiet.

It was a morbid ferry ride back.

We hopped on a train. I didn't know where else to go. We hopped on a train. We got off at New Dorp. We called them up, called the station for somebody to pick us up. At this time I didn't know what was going on in the outside world besides what was going on in Manhattan. They were like yeah, we will send somebody down to New Dorp to pick you up. Get off the train there at New Dorp. All right. We get off the train. Nobody shows up. We call them, they are like oh yes, we are still waiting for somebody to show up. I'm like fine.

Then one car pops by. He says you guys need a ride anywhere. I didn't realize we are all covered in this shit still. Some little kids are asking us all about this. It's what you see on TV. That's pretty much what it is. That's the extent what was going on. Another car pulled up, so we're like no, no, we are still waiting for a ride. Finally, the third, fourth car pulls up and asks us let me drive you anywhere you guys want. My family is here. Giving us their story. They wanted to hear -- there was nothing really to tell them.

Anyway some gentleman did pick us up in a 4 by 4. Drove us back to the station here. Then I left, went home. [redacted] I went downstairs and turned on the TV and that was the first time I saw it all. It's screwed up. That's about it.

MR. DUN: This concludes the interview with John. It is 8:15 a.m. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER THOMAS DONATO

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF McGRATH: Today's date is January 17th, 2002. The time is 1612 hours. I am Battalion Chief Jim McGrath of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Tommy Donato from Ladder 85. This interview is taking place in the quarters of Ladder 85, and it's regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Tommy, if you will please state your name and just recall the events that took place as best as you can remember them.

A. My name is Tommy Donato, Ladder 85.

As far as I remember that morning I came into work my regular tour. I started seeing some stuff on the TV of the first plane. I remember calling my wife and saying most likely I'm going to get called there and I'll call you later, is basically what I said. That was before we got actually called to the job.

Then after the second plane hit, Ladder 85, as far as I remember, was sent. As we were on the Verrazano, I remember looking over to the left and seeing the billowing of smoke. I believe one building had collapsed by the time we were on the Verrazano. I'm not positive if that actually happened or not.

We get to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. We were going to go through the Battery Tunnel, but because civilians were walking out, they said we couldn't go in. So they turned us around, and we took the bridge, the Brooklyn Bridge.

As we get over the Brooklyn Bridge, we headed down -- I'm not really sure on the street. I remember heading down the street and pulling the rig over to the side. We filled the stokes basket with up with as much equipment as we could possibly fit of what we thought we might need. Then we walked.

We walked down the street that we were parked on and waited for what to do, an assignment what to do. We were standing around not knowing exactly what to do.

Q. Could we stop for one minute. I'm going to see if I can quiet the outside noise.

(Interruption.)

Q. Okay. Now you can resume, please.

A. So then a couple firemen were approaching us. They said the chief said they were commandeering some radios, so I had to give up my radio. They were taking them from truck companies that had multiple radios. So we were left with I think two or three radios after that.

At the time we were told to go set up the tower ladder -- I think was around 11:00; I'm not sure -- to put out one of the fires that was burning in one of the smaller black buildings. I think it was World Trade Center Five or Four maybe.

A couple things that stuck out in my head on that when we went to go set up, Ladder 7, which I worked with a couple years ago, was set up, and they were dumping water on the fire. Then one of the members from Ladder 7 came up to me and said something like, "Did you see the guys from Ladder 7?" I said, "Yeah, they're right there." He said, "No, those are the guys that just came down. Did you see anyone" -- he named the names of the guys that were working that day. Then I said I didn't see anything.

Then we started to set up our tower ladder. Something that sticks out in my head --

I'm struggling with this, but what sticks out in my head is as the tool measurers were coming down and we were setting it up, this salty old fireman comes up to me and he said, "Did you check the manhole covers?"

In the middle of things falling all over the place, buildings burning, this guy remembered to check to see if the tool measurers were coming down on a manhole cover, which kind of surprised me.

So then they aborted us from setting up the tower ladder because they were worried about now seven coming down. So then they pulled us away. This is where I kind of start remembering a lot.

We came around, I think we took Murray Street down the west side, and we stopped the rig and pulled over to the side and we all got out of the rig. We were standing, waiting for seven to come down. We were there for quite a while, a couple hours.

During that time a couple of the members felt like we were being useless just standing around. We wanted to do something. So we started trying to walk down, trying to get into the pile. We kept on being turned around from chiefs, because they didn't want us near seven.

Prior to seven coming down, this is the first chance that we -- we were starting to get hungry, so one of the members that I was with, he said we heard there was a box of fruit or bananas down the block, so we started walking down the block.

As we were walking, we had to actually get a little closer to seven. So we turned and looked at seven, and that's when all the marble siding started popping off the side because it was starting to go down.

I think we ran down I think it was Vesey Street -- yeah, it was Vesey Street that we ran down. Seven came down. We ran back to 85. As far as I remember, 85 came down -- I don't know what this street right here is.

Q. Greenwich. That's Greenwich.

A. We made our way to the base of seven. That's where we set up the tower ladder.

As we were coming down Greenwich -- was it Greenwich? I'm not sure. It was either West or Greenwich. There was multiple cars on fire throughout the block. All the hydrants, there was no pressure in any of the hydrants that we were around. There was a pumper set up on one of the streets, so we tried to stretch a line off the pumper because there was no pressure in the hydrant.

Tommy Delpino, the firefighter who was driving that day, suggested that we tap off the standpipe system in I think it was The Bank of New York, or maybe it was 75 Park Place. It was one of the buildings that was there. So we started stretching a line off that.

By then the radios, the batteries were dead. We had no communication. My captain at the time was on the front of the line with two other guys that I don't know. They're from a different company.

So I was actually acting as the radio communication between Delpino, who was at the standpipe, and the captain who was at the end of the line. He would tell me stop the water. I would run back and tell him. Then I would run back to help with the line. Then I would run back and tell him to shut down.

We worked our way putting out the car fires, which I don't know if there was ammunition, because there was a lot of cop cars, but there was explosions. Tires were exploding. There had to be about 15 or 20 car fires. We put them out as we worked our way down.

So then we were able to get 85 to the base of seven where seven had just collapsed. We set up 85 and started dumping water. It had to be around 7 or 8:00, and we stayed there until 7 in the morning the next morning, alternating the members in between the bucket and just dumping the water on the base of seven from the north side.

That's basically how the day went.

Q. Okay. By any chance do you remember who you gave the radio to when you gave up your radio earlier?

A. No, no.

Q. No?

How about the pumper that you said was on Greenwich Street, do you remember what company that was?

A. It seemed like it was an extra pumper, because it was like a 505 or a 515 number.

Q. Do you remember the name of the companies of anybody else that you operated with or saw besides you had mentioned 7 earlier?

A. No, I don't remember companies that were on the line. I don't remember any companies that we worked with that day. The guy from 7 was kind of walking around in a daze, looking for his guys. In fact, I met him like twice or three times that day. He kept on asking me, "Did you see anyone from 7? Did you see anyone from 7?" He mentioned the guys who were working that day.

When I rotated, I stayed in my same group, group 2. So Danny Suhr who was in 216 I worked with all the time, because I was in group 2. We lost him. All the guys in 7 were guys that I -- some guys you don't see. Some groups you just hardly work with. These are guys that I spent time at their summer house and stuff. So when I heard that they were missing, I was quite upset.

Q. Had you seen any of the guys from 216 at all?

A. 216, no I did not see any of them.

Q. Is there anything else that you can think of that might be helpful to us or that you would like to add?

A. No, not really.

Q. Okay. I want to thank you very much for all your help in providing us with this information.

CHIEF McGRATH: This will conclude the interview, then. The time is 1622 hours.

FIREFIGHTER DONATO: Thank you.

CHIEF McGRATH: Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN ROBERT SOHMER

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF McGRATH: Today's date is January 17, 2002. The time is 1539 hours. I am Battalion Chief James McGrath of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Captain Sohmer of Ladder 85 regarding the events that took place on September 11, 2001. This interview is taking place in the quarters of Ladder 85 in Staten Island.

Q. Captain, state your name and relate the events as you recall them?

A. Captain Robert Sohmer Ladder 85. We responded from quarters at approximately the time that the second building was struck. We had a very easy fast response. Our response area was to the Battery Tunnel, where we were supposed to meet other companies and proceed through the Battery Tunnel to Manhattan.

We got to the Battery Tunnel, we were the first company there. There were no other companies that were on the scene and we were stopped from proceeding at that point by the tunnel police, the TBTA police because they had feared a bomb had gone off in the tunnel.

We tried raidioing the dispatcher at that time for other instructions, or anything else they wanted us to do, but the radio traffic was so heavy we couldn't get through at that point. Other companies had responded in at that point and we were then instructed to go to the Brooklyn Bridge and respond to Manhattan side of the Brooklyn Bridge and get other orders from that position.

When we got there, we finally found where a command post was located, and that was at Broadway and Park, probably by Saint Ann's Street, is that what it looks like right there? I think it was opposite Trinity Church right there. At that command post there was numerous members there, some off duty, some on. They were trying to structure that command post at that time there.

They were trying to separate companies that had actual apparatus and guys who were just off duty. When they found out we had an apparatus, we were instructed to respond to between 4 and 5 World Trade Center. The second building had just collapsed, around that time we got to the command post, and we had seen members who were coming up from the street and at that time we had gone down, operated between 4 and 5, searching, using our Tower Ladder. We operated in that area for I would say approximately an hour to an hour and a half.

We operated in that position for I would say approximately an hour to hour and a half probably. There were 3 tower ladders operating at that point. We proceeded to search the areas we could. We operated our Tower Ladder on 4 and 5 extinguishing fire and we had members in the buckets. We had other members searching where we could search in that area for any victims or anything else we could find at that point.

As the day went on they started worrying about 7 World Trade Center collapsing and they ordered an evacuation from that area so at that time, we left the area with the other companies, went back to the command post on Broadway, where we were instructed, they were looking for companies to go to the west side to operate on the bridges, to cut members out that they had confirmed were pinned and trapped under the bridges on the west side.

A Battalion Chief was assigned to us. We took our apparatus to West Street to the north bridge, on that side over there, where we began to operate. We had identified different members who were deceased and trapped in rigs. We were about to proceed our operation there and this was in the afternoon, I would say approximately maybe 2:00 roughly, where we started to operate and then they asked us to fall back again due to the potential of 7 World Trade Center collapsing.

At that time, we had fallen back to probably opposite Stuyvesant High School, I believe it was on the west side there.

Q. That's uptown a little bit.

A. Right. They had us fall back to there. We stayed at that position until exactly when 7 collapsed. When 7 collapsed, we responded again. We had an Engine Company, a spare Engine Company with us and ourselves. We responded to just behind 7, which was, I think it was Greenwich, was it Washington or Greenwich? I think it was Greenwich. Is this Greenwich?

Q. It could be. I don't have a bigger map.

A. We turned the corner, 7 had just collapsed, the block that led into 7.

Q. Pretty sure that's Greenwich.

A. Greenwich and Park was covered with debris, there were burning autos and all debris. It was starting to extend into the buildings on both sides of the block. We went to hydrants in that area. We had off duty guys in our cells, but the hydrants had no water. We did whatever we could. The rigs actually were starting to become in danger of lighting up themselves.

We called trying to get water returned to us over here. Finally one of the members thought, we used it for a good period of time, we forced the door on one of the buildings there and used the water from the roof tanks. It was left in the gravity tanks. We took a two and a half line out of one of the doors. We were able to advance down Greenwich, stopping, putting fire out in the street, the cars and from getting into exposures.

We backed our rig into position at 7 World Trade Center. We searched the area of the buildings that were in the vicinity all there and then from approximately 5:45 p.m. that day, the 11th, until about 4 in the morning, 5 in the morning, we operated our Tower Ladder on 7 World Trade Center. Basically that was the extent of our day.

Q. Okay. Just a couple of questions if I might. Do you remember the Chief's name that you worked with when you worked over by the pedestrian bridge?

A. No, I don't know. He didn't have a Chief's jacket on. He must have went to a fire house, grabbed his stuff and he was -- he actually had a fireman's helmet on and another coat. I never caught his name.

Q. How about any names of the members that you were trying to dig out that were under the bridge?

A. I'm trying to think. We got down to the position. The company actually stayed up at a certain point because we couldn't get the apparatus physically down. I walked down to the position with the Chief where we were going to assess what we need and how close we wanted to get with the apparatus.

They were worried about 7 at the time. The decision was made not to do it, not to get anybody else hurt. That's when we backed up and they said let's wait for this other building before we continue any work, because where the bridge was was in the direct path of 7. It was the north bridge where we were looking initially.

Q. Do you recall any radio transmissions or anything that might be helpful in possible location of units or members?

A. The radio transmissions were so fast and furious. Anything specifically, at night I had heard them working on somebody who was trapped. They seemed to be in the south building. I believe I heard 78 truck at one time calling for -- saying that they had somebody there. I'm not sure, but I'm pretty sure 78 truck called for help, but my radio seemed to function for most of the time. Most of the other radios had gone out, but it seemed to me that the rescue effort that I seemed to have heard was in the south side some place, off Liberty, from what I do remember of it.

For some reason I do remember 78 calling.

Q. The units that you operated on Greenwich Street with?

A. I think it was 505 or 525 was one of the spare engines. 153 Truck worked on West Street for a while. I saw them over there by 7 World Trade Center. Then there was a second Tower Ladder that backed into position with us, which was -- I guess we operated mainly there at that point.

Q. Is there anything else that you can think of that you might want to add that might help us in researching this?

A. No, basically not without going into every minute. Once we got our assignments, for the most part we operated between 4 and 5. We operated with the Tower Ladder there effectively on those buildings that were within our reach. Then the other part was unfortunately we couldn't do anything at the pedestrian bridge but the concern of 7, which they had no idea which way it was going to collapse and they just knew it was going to collapse and they positioned us outside of it. We positioned outside of it so we could -- there weren't many apparatus around.

The apparatus were functional. We grabbed them and had a good stop as we came down that Greenwich Street right there, because there was no concentration of units. Seemed most people were there. The guys we had off duty and on duty. We were the only truck, I believe, operating at that time. But there was a lot of fire advancing north up Greenwich and it was -- it worked out good for us, it was a good position.

Q. When you first arrived and you were on I guess you were on Church Street between 4 and 5 World Trade Center, you said there was a lot of firemen in the area, do you remember anybody specifically or companies that you might have seen?

A. I think there was 7 Truck was one of the tower ladders operating on one of the buildings right there. There was a company that was north of us operating on 5. We were in the middle between 4 and 5 operating alternately there and wetting down the area into the Trade Center area itself where the rubble was still hot.

The company to the south of us was -- it was a double digit -- I don't know if it was 14. I'm just stabbing at numbers now. It was just so much debris between cars, it was hard to see what was good and bad, stuff like that. But that was our main position right there. I would say from approximately about at least an hour, hour and a half between 4 and 5. They made us evacuate due to the fear of 7 coming down.

That's when we went back to the command post, got the other instruction to work with this Chief, where we went to the west side, got as far down as we could. The Chief and myself went down to that area where we they wanted us to work. Seeing what we would need; torches, air bags, anything else like that to operate at that bridge. The concern there again, it was later in the afternoon, 2, 2:30, like I said. The fear then was 7. 7 was free burning.

Search had been made of 7 already from what they said so they had us back up to that point where we were waiting for 7 to come down to operate from the north back down.

BATTALION CHIEF McGRATH: Thank you very much for all the information that you provided us. This will conclude the interview then and the time is 1552 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER THOMAS ORLANDO

Interview Date: January 18, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 18th, 2002. The time is 1200 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER ORLANDO: Thomas Orlando.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Thomas Orlando is a firefighter first class in Engine 65 of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Engine 65. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Thomas, will you please tell your story in your own words.

A. From when we left here?

Q. Yeah, from when you got the run, yeah. Did you know that a plane had hit the towers?

A. We were in quarters and we were watching on the TV that a plane hit the twin towers. Then we got the run on the fifth alarm. We got on the rig and started responding down there.

The chauffeur went down West Street. On the way down there, en route, we heard on the radio that another plane hit the second tower. At that time we figured to ourselves that we were under attack and that we were going to something that we never went to before.

The chauffeur stopped the rig. We got there in, I'd say, about ten minutes. We stopped the rig I'd say about 100 feet north of the north tower on West Street. We all got off the rig. We grabbed our rollups. I was the control man. I had the control bag. The officer told us take an extra mask, which we were told to do, an extra cylinder, actually.

So we took the extra stuff, and we walked over with the officer to I guess it was the street. There was a command post in the street which was in front of I guess north of the north tower again. I don't know where --

(Interruption.)

A. We stopped the rig before the overbridge. We walked over to the chief who was running the operation at the time. I don't know his name. We checked in. Our officer told us that we were to go into the north tower and start working our way up.

We entered the building on the West Street side. We entered the north tower. We kept walking in. We walked into the lobby. The elevators were not working, so we started up the stairway the stairway at the time, I don't recall the number. We started working our way up.

We made it up -- every five or six or seven floors we just took a little break because there were a lot of people on the stairway, a lot of people coming down, just to catch our breath and whatever, take a little breather.

We finally made it up to probably around the -- I would say the 18th floor when we took a little break. At the time the building was shaking. It was hit with something. At that time we thought it was another missile attack, so we all just ran into the stairway and just helped cover us and other civilians and firemen until it stopped shaking. We didn't know what it was at the time.

After everything cleared, about might be five minutes, myself and the officer and maybe a few other ones proceeded to work up to the 20th floor. At that time we were told that the other building --

Q. Did you hear it on the radio?

A. I didn't hear anything on the radio, other than a mayday. My fellow partners said they did. I did not hear it. I was control man. I had a radio.

Q. Some guys heard it; some guys didn't.

A. Right.

We were told that there's been a collapse -- they didn't say what collapsed -- and to start working your way out. My officer, who was great at the time, had a lot of experience and he knew something was up. So he just said, "Let's go. We're going out."

At that time we started to proceed down from the 20th floor. We met the other guys who were with us on 18. We started to work our way down, with the civilians and other firemen, helping each other back and forth.

I did pass some people that I know. Captain Freddie Ill was on I think the 13th floor. We saw him. We asked him what was going on. He said he'd be right down. They were doing something. They didn't mention what they were doing. Obviously they didn't need a hand, because they didn't ask us for help. They said they'd be right down. I guess his company was on that floor.

So we worked our way down, helping civilians, other firemen. It was a very slow walk. On the way down I guess it was the dust from the south tower -- we thought it was smoke -- started coming up. The lights went out. There were no lights at the time in the stairway. It was dark. We thought it was smoke from whatever it was, but it was actually the dust from the south tower. We still didn't know it collapsed.

I'd say it took us 25 minutes to get out from the floor we were on, which was the 20th.

Q. When you got out, did you go out the same way you came in?

A. Yes. We got into the lobby. Some people were just hanging out, making decisions which way to go, trying to find their way out.

Usually when you go out of a building, in my case we usually find the fire engine. We move out to the fire engine to see what was going on, which was parked at that time where we dropped off, north of the north tower.

We came out of the building. I do remember a firefighter from I think 4 Truck asking one of us for masks because he had to go up to the 42nd floor; to do what, I don't know.

Q. You don't know the guy?

A. I don't know the guy. I don't know his name. One of our guys gave him his mask. It wasn't me. One of our other guys gave him his mask. He said he had to go up there to help rescue, which I think was on the 42nd floor. What they were doing, I don't know. I don't think the guy made it out; I'm not sure.

Then we came out of the building. My officer and two other firefighters were in the lobby for a second. We became separated for maybe a couple of minutes. As we walked out, we were watching out because there were still things dropping out of the north tower. We just ran, scattered a little bit to the front, which is West Street.

Chief Al Turi was there with a megaphone, Chief Al Turi, who saved an awful lot of people. He was just yelling for everybody to clear away from the building. He was screaming "Just keep moving. Don't stop." I still didn't know the south tower collapsed, because at that time when we came out all the dust and everything was clear. There was a little dust in the area, but it was blue sky. You can't see, actually, the south tower from where you are.

Q. Yeah, right. There's that big --

A. Right, right. You can't see it because it supposedly collapsed downwards. So we couldn't see the south tower had collapsed.

We just kept walking. I'd say we waited by Al Turi for a minute or two. I got in touch with my officer, who was still in the lobby. They came out and they met us. Once they met us, we crossed West Street. Al Turi was still there with the megaphone yelling for everybody to keep clearing away from the building, don't stop, just keep walking, move, move.

I don't know if some guys went south. I'm not sure. I know we went north because that's where our fire engine was and that's where we were going to go. As we started to walk, we just passed the bridge, the first bridge, which was on whatever it was.

Q. On West Street.

A. Yeah, the bridge. We just passed that. We were a bunch of firemen. Somebody just yelled, "It's coming down!" We just looked up, and the tower started to collapse. We looked up, and everybody just scattered all different ways.

I went up West Street. I just kept running up West Street, because that's where I figured I had to be to be away from this. Some guys I guess dove under cars. I know my officer and they went up the street which is right there; I think it was Vesey. Where are we?

Q. Vesey. They probably went that way; right?

A. Where is the south tower?

Q. The south tower is over here.

A. Where's West Street? We came here?

Q. Yeah, here's the north tower.

A. The north tower. So I would say -- there's a street right here next to Merrill Lynch.

Q. Okay.

A. I would say over here. Maybe Vesey Street, right. They must have went up Vesey Street. Because this rig was actually destroyed; right?

Q. Yeah, that was destroyed.

A. So they must have went up Vesey Street. I went straight up West Street.

Q. West Street.

A. I didn't even know what was going to happen, but we got separated. Then the building came down. I just turned around and I just saw this big black thing around me, which I didn't know at the time what it was. I thought this was it. I thought it was a fireball or the building around me. I just said I didn't think I'd make it; there's no way.

Then it hit me with a force, which was incredible. That was actually the dust storm. It just was total darkness, no sound at all, nothing at all. I just stood there for a second.

What am I going to do? I started walking around, walking into walls, walking into cars. You couldn't see nothing.

I finally just walked to an area where I saw an ESU car. I got up to it and I held onto it. I closed the windows in the car. I was going to go inside of it, but I said no, I better not. I held onto it in case something else happened. I didn't know what was going to happen. I was underneath whatever it was.

So I waited there for like whatever -- it felt like forever -- until everything cleared. After everything cleared to a point where I could see, I started to walk back to the area. My company was -- obviously they must have come out and passed me. They must have gone up the West Side Highway to where they were supposed to go. I walked back in, into the area, to see what we could do and if I could help and stuff.

At the time the magnitude didn't hit me. You don't think that there's people trapped. You think that everybody got out. I'm here, so everybody else got out. You don't think of the magnitude of the collapse.

At that time I came back here, and there was a bunch of firefighters over by the rig. Frank Gribbon was there. He was a chauffeur, so I started hooking up lines to help another chauffeur. We were putting out all the car fires that were exploding. I did that for probably around an hour and a half.

I couldn't see nothing. My eyes were shot, cut and stuff. I was just physically gone.

I was doing that for a while back and forth. Right in this area of Vesey Street, there was a whole bunch of car fires. We were putting them out. Then a chief -- who he was, I don't know. He saw the way I looked. I was talking to Ronnie, a guy from 16 Truck, the chauffeur -- 16 Engine, actually.

He asked, "What are you guys doing?" I said, "Well, we're just operating some hose lines." He said, "Were you guys in the collapse?" I said, "Yeah, we were." He said, "You guys are out of here. Just leave the area." He took my name down. He said, "I don't want to see you in here again." He made us leave the area. Why --

Q. They were probably trying to get a head count.

A. Right. He made us leave the area. He took my name and said, "If you were there" -- he made us leave the area.

I walked down to the west side and I met my company. At the time they knew I made it because we had radioed a transmission. I told the officer where I was. I said, "Lou, I'm over here." I knew they were out of the site already. I said, "I'm helping with car fires, doing what I can with whatever I have left."

Like I said, that's basically it. I remember going up -- there were two guys from 24 Engine who rolled up at the time and hooked up with us. They came up by themselves. They had no masks or anything. They hooked up with us. We said, "Where are you going with no masks?" They said, "We're going to go up." I said, "You guys are crazy, going up there with no masks."

They hooked up with us. I guess being with us it saved them, because they didn't go up any farther. They came out with us.

Q. They went up --

A. They went up with us. We said, "Why don't you work with us?" Our officer said, "Why don't you work with us? We'll work together." They worked with us, and they came out with us. I saw them later in the triage area. We were hugging and thank God they were with us.

Other than that -- then I came out of the area and they wouldn't let us back in. We just stayed there until seven or eight hours until they released us.

That's basically off the bat what I remember.

Q. Anything else?

A. No. Guys I've seen -- I know a lot of guys passing us, guys who were running up there. There was a chief who was actually upset at us because we were taking a breather on one of the floors. He was like, "What are you guys doing?" The officer was like we're carrying all this stuff.

Q. Yeah, you've got to go up 80 floors.

A. So where are we going to go? Whether he lived or not, I don't know. He actually ran past us also. Then we saw him a little while later on one of the floors. He was puking and stuff. So we said, "Chief, why don't you just relax a little bit. Where are you going to go?" He said, "No, I've got to go," and he left again. So whether he made it or not, I don't know.

Q. They may have told him go up there and tell us what you've got. So he was determined to get up there, and you can't run up 80 flights of stairs.

A. No, you can't, you can't. He wasn't in great shape. He was an elderly guy -- not elderly but --

Q. Older than me?

A. There were guys who were running up there just like -- and the civilians were great. They were coming down, giving us water, telling "You guys are great." We helped out a lot of people. They were all bunched up in an area, and we were just saying, "Stay to the wall. Just keep walking. Don't stop. Let us go up. You guys come right down." They were giving us water and Gatorade.

There were some people we saw who were bleeding. Some were burnt. We weren't sure whether we should help them. They were moving down. The best thing to do is let's keep moving, don't stop. Then on the way down we did the same thing, helped each other, firemen. Some people took our masks for some air, civilians. We did help out that one lady that 6 Truck helped out.

Q. Josephine?

A. I think we helped one floor with her. We just got her one floor, and then they took over. I guess they walked the rest of her. She was heavy, so we just couldn't do much with her.

Other than that, that's basically what I remember.

Q. Okay. That's fine. Thanks a lot for being candid with us. Thank you, Tommy.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: It's 20 after 12, and that completes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

F. F. ROBERT SALVADOR

Interview Date: January 18, 2002

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 18, 2002. The time is 1325 hours, and this is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta, the safety battalion, New York City Fire Department.

I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name.

A. Firefighter Robert Salvador, Engine 28.

Q. Of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the location -- we are at the quarters of Engine 28, and this interview is regarding the events of September 11.

Go ahead. Tell the story in your own words.

A. The alarm came in. We heard the explosion. My initial thought that the explosion was something out of the kitchen. It was approximately 8:47, 8:48.

We ran out to the front. We were getting on the rig. We knew it was an explosion, and then we heard a 1060, an emergency. A 1060 came over and said a plane just hit the north tower, commuter plane. So we really manned the rig, and then we finally got the ticket as we were pulling out of the quarters.

I proceeded down first the FDR Drive. On the FDR Drive, traffic was backed up all -- as far as we know, as far as I could see. The left lane was open for emergency vehicles, and we were following a couple of police cars, and we made it to the tunnel going to the west, West Street, from the FDR Drive. As we came out of the tunnel, the battery, the tunnel was in front of us. The cops were waving us in, and we proceeded in, and there were numerous parts of bodies and body parts all over the street, and we encountered -- we had seen five or six floors of fire from the north tower, confirmed fire.

I proceeded on. I dropped the lieutenant and the five firefighters off in front of the north tower. There were no hydrants in front of the building because they were taken already, and there were numerous amounts of engines and trucks in front of the building already. I turned up Vesey Street and proceeded to, I guess, West Street where Building 7 is. I made a left turn. Right there was a hydrant.

I proceeded to hook up, and as I was hooking up, the second plane hit the south tower. Debris flew into the streets and I remember ducking behind the rig because of all the debris that was coming, you know, from the south tower.

Then I stretched into the north tower. I started pumping water into the north tower, and by that time, I noticed there was another engine company there. It was Engine 4, and they were supplying the north tower from another standpipe. There was -- they were east of West Street from where I was. I was the only rig on that block that I could see right at that moment.

Numerous amount of people jumping and landing in the street, landing in front of my rig, by my rig. I say I don't know what time. The time frame I don't remember, but I remember a few firemen on the concourse level and a chief with a white helmet and I guess an officer, and there were maybe six or seven firefighters on a concourse level when the south tower was collapsing, and it came down so fast that the cloud either -- I turned around to start to run.

Either the cloud engulfed them or they ran towards Church Street, I don't know, but I ran, and the cloud just swept me and picked me up and threw me 20 feet, and I crawled under two parked cars, and I said my prayers.

After that was over, it was completely darkness. There was no radio transmissions at all. I remember feeling -- I got up, and I was -- made my way to the wall. Something landed on my ankle, and my ankle was hurting. I was feeling my way down the Building 7 towards Barclay Street, I think it is, and I picked up two civilians. I think one was a doctor and one was a D.E.P. agent, because he had a yellow jacket on. I think we both held arm in arm, and we heard someone calling from a building, and we made for the building, and we got out of the street.

It was total darkness, and you couldn't see a thing. I stayed in that building for about ten minutes. I made my way back out of the building back towards my rig. My rig was completely full of debris, and the motor was -- the motor was conked out. The motor wasn't on, so I know it was pumping water, so I took it out of pump. I tried to start the motor. It wouldn't kick over. I did it again, and then the north tower started coming down.

I heard the same -- same pancaking, like a machine gun coming and glass flying, so I closed -- shut the door, got out of the rig, and ran -- started running across the street. I wanted to run up Church Street, but I couldn't make it to the corner, so everything was on top of me, so I just took my turnout coat and put it over my head and knelt in the corner, and the heat was so tremendous that it took all the oxygen out of the air.

I couldn't breathe. It was so hot. I started feeling my way on the side of the wall. I guess it was the post office wall. I made my way to a little more deeper opening, and I remember somebody opening the door for me, and then the oxygen inside the building, and no oxygen outside blew the doors in down the stairs, and we were lost in the loading dock for I don't know how long, because it was totally darkness.

We found our way on top of the -- on top of the loading dock, and it started to clear a little bit, and in the corner -- we found six people huddled in the corner, so all frantic, and I tried to tell everybody to calm down. We got to get out of here, and we made our way up towards Church Street.

We came up into the center of the post office. As we came out, it was completely darkness out there, and I told everybody that, you know, as soon as we come out of the building, run north. That's left out of the building. I don't know how I figured that was left, but I did, and we got out of the building. Everybody run left.

So as soon as we came out of the building, all the people that were in the building ran left, and I noticed an ambulance. I could just see the silhouette. Me and this white-shirt guy, a Port Authority cop, I guess, jumped in the ambulance. The ambulance took us all the way down to Chambers Street, and I got out, and from there I went and walked up to the next two blocks, and I jumped in an ambulance, and my leg was swollen. That's all I remember.

Q. That's pretty accurate. Anything else you want to say?

A. No, that's all.

Q. Okay, thanks a lot, Bob. I appreciate your cooperation.

The time is 1335, and that's the end of the interview.

A. I do recall before the towers came down, before the south tower came down, 21 engine pulled up next to me, and they took whatever cylinders and whatever roll-ups, and they took my search rope and whatever tools I had.

That was Captain Bill Burke, and then 21 engine made a left on Vesey Street going up towards Church. I don't know if he grabbed a hydrant or not, but that's the last I seen of 21 engine, and then I also encountered Jeff Giordano, because he was on foot. He came and took my Scott mask, my spare Scott mask, and that's it.

Q. What company is Jeff?

A. 3 truck.

Q. 3 truck, and he took your Scott?

A. Right.

Q. Anything else?

A. That's it.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Okay, this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ROY CHELSEN

Interview Date: January 18, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 18, 2002. The time is 1345 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER CHELSEN: Roy Chelsen.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Roy is firefighter first grade in Engine 28 of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Engine 28. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Roy, would you please tell your story in your own words about what happened that day from when you received the alarm.

A. We were actually sitting in the kitchen, the lieutenant and I, and we actually heard the first explosion. We both looked at each other, and we were like, "Oh, what was that?" It seemed like right after that the alarm came in and we were on our way downtown.

We took the FDR Drive down, and you could actually see the building pretty much the whole way down. The whole three-quarters of the way up was engulfed in fire. We went down underneath the Battery Tunnel. We came up. It was still like flags falling. It seemed like it was very quiet. I noticed that Bob, the chauffeur, was kind of swerving around. Later on I heard he was going around bodies.

He dropped us off underneath the second bridge.

Q. The north bridge?

A. The north bridge up by the north tower. He dropped us off there. We looked up to make sure nothing was coming down, and we proceeded in. I think the revolving doors were kind of busted up, so I think we went through a window.

We reported to the command desk, the command post there, and we immediately started going up. They just said, "28, start heading up."

Q. Do you know what stairway you went up?

A. We went up stairway B. I believe it was stairway B.

From there on we really didn't hear too much transmission going on that I can remember hearing. I had the nozzle position. I had no radio. But I don't remember the lieutenant telling me anything. Later on I heard that there were a lot of maydays and a lot of transmissions going on, but we didn't hear any of it.

One of the only transmissions I do remember hearing, because we were sitting on approximately the 20th floor, that there was another plane on its way. At that point we were still not sure that it was a plane that had hit the tower. There was some talk from the civilians coming down that a plane hit. The consensus was that it was a small plane; Never thinking it was a 737, whatever it was, 767, whatever it was.

We made our way up to 29 or 30. We were again resting again. All of a sudden just -- I don't know if the sequence is right, but everything went black, and all the power went out. There was just this rumbling. I felt like it went on forever.

I believe 4 Engine was with us, there was 28, and I believe 8 Truck was with us. We all just huddled into the staircase. We were holding on thinking -- I'm a big person. I'm thinking the floor's going to collapse or the ceiling's coming down, but I thought that was it.

When the rumbling finally stopped, all of a sudden we felt this gush of air coming from everywhere. Just from every direction there was like wind blowing. What I heard later on, that was just the concussion of the air coming back up from tower two.

From there I believe we heard -- there was a chief that came down with a bullhorn, telling everybody to get out. I think he was from the 11th Battalion. That's what I'm hearing.

Q. He came down the stairs?

A. I think he was up a couple floors ahead of us. I don't know if he was with us the whole time. I know we were paired up with 4 Engine. 5 Engine was with us, but I heard later on that somebody in their company had a heart attack or chest pains.

Q. Yes.

A. They took him down. So I don't know who was with us the whole time. But he did come down and tell us to evacuate.

From there it was just asses and elbows. We all just started running. I didn't even have my mask on anymore. We just dropped everything. Actually between 20 and 30, 4 Engine and ourselves kind of joined together there. So we dropped everything and started running down on 30.

We got down to 19 or 20, and I know there were some cops down there. We found some civilians down there.

Q. Port Authority cops?

A. Port Authority cops. I saw city cops. They had their masks on, but they had ESU uniforms on.

Q. Right.

A. They were all huddling about. Everybody was still coming down. We were kind of waiting, getting everybody together again. A friend of mine in 8 Truck told me, he said, "Look out the window. Tower two is gone." At that point nobody knew what was going on.

At that point we were coming down stairway C, I think.

Q. You went across?

A. We went across, yeah.

Q. Was stairway B clogged?

A. Stairway C, I heard -- stairway B didn't go all the way up or -- for some reason from 20 over, we switched.

Q. Okay.

A. Then I heard coming down they said stairway C is pretty well wiped out down there, so it doesn't go down. I think that's what I heard, because from there on we went B. From 20 down to 1 we went on stairway B.

Q. Okay.

A. We kind of formed a line for the civilians, and we led them down the stairs because it was pitch-black and it started to get smoky. We led them down, 4 Engine, ourselves and I believe 8 Truck again.

Q. Did the cops come down with you?

A. I don't know. I don't know. At this point it was just like I want to get out. I heard that tower two is gone. I said, let's just get these people and let's get out of here.

We all grouped together again, like I said, and we started going down. We got down to the lobby. The lobby is like gone. There were probably 20 or 30 guys down in the lobby mulling around.

Q. They weren't trying to get out?

A. They were just -- no, no.

We went to where the command post was. We were standing there. Our officer was like, "Well, let's stay here." I kept saying, "Lou, I'm going to get out. I want to get out of this building." I said, "We can go out where we came in." There was a brick wall outside tower --

Q. The north tower.

A. The north tower. There was a brick wall. I said we can run along the wall and go underneath the bridge there and then shoot up West Street. He said, "Is everybody here?" I said, "Yeah, the company's all right here." With that we -- I think 18 Truck ran out with us, and we just hauled ass.

We got out and we got under the bridge. A couple bodies came down, flying down, just in front of our guys. We just got under the bridge and like, okay, it's safe, it's good. All of a sudden we heard this huge explosion, and that's when the tower started coming down. We all started running.

We lost everybody there again. I don't know what happened. I saw my cousin. We gave each other a big hug. That's when everything started hitting the fan again. I heard some guys dove behind cars. I just kept running up West Street.

As soon as that thing hit us, I think it knocked -- I'm not sure what knocked me over, but I ended up on the ground. Like Sal said, it was completely black. Now I can't breathe. You start running. I'm out of breath, and I didn't have my mask. It was on the 30th floor. I just started choking. I couldn't breathe because I'm sucking all that shit in. Somehow I happened to see a fireman walking to my right. He had a mask, and I grabbed it. He helped me with it until we walked out.

Then two guys from an ambulance grabbed me. They started giving me water. They had me hooked up to an IV. But then everybody started running again, something about a major gas leak.

Q. That's what I heard. A chief said they thought there was a major gas leak.

A. I said get this thing out of me. I'm running again. I can't sit here. So they took it out. I'm running with my hand on my arm, and I'm running north again. We finally met up with the rest of the crew on West Street.

I've just got to say, on our way down we saw 9 Engine with that woman.

Q. Right.

A. We saw her.

Q. 6 Truck.

A. 6 Truck, I'm sorry. We saw 6 Truck. We also saw 18 Truck. I think they were on their way up to. We said to them, "They told everybody out of the building," and then they came with us.

Q. That's it?

A. Yeah.

Q. Wow, that's pretty good. Well, thank you, Roy.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREMAN KEVIN CRONICK

Interview Date: January 18, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF CONGUISTA: Today is January 18, 2002. The time is 1115 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Conguista of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name.

A. Fireman first grade Kevin Cronick.

Q. Fireman Cronick is assigned to Engine 3 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Engine 3. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Okay Kevin, could you please tell us what happened that day in your own words.

A. I arrived at West Street with the rest of the company, Engine 3, and we disembarked from our apparatus. We proceeded to locate over toward the command post, where I believe it was Chief Ganci was the Deputy Chief in charge. Then we were just assembling there for further orders. We just sort of hung around there while things developed and the Chief was just waiting to assign us a duty, you know, somewhere, which he hadn't made any decisions at that point.

As other companies arrived, it started getting a little crowded by the command post, so Lieutenant Walsh made us move to the adjoining building, the building adjoining the command post. We were standing fast in front of that building. I remember seeing Captain Brethel had approached us just to give us some words of encouragement and told us to make sure we all stay together and that we didn't get separated at that stage. Then he left us and walked back towards West Street and that was the last time I had seen Captain Brethel.

Then shortly thereafter is when I heard this loud rumbling noise and we looked up and saw that the building, or the south tower of the Trade Center was collapsing. Then we just turned around and took refuge inside the building we were standing in front of. The building collapsed. Then after it collapsed, once we felt that it was safe to come back outside again, we came back out to the front of the building and we recovered our equipment, whatever we could find, went looking for our officer and any Chiefs in charge and we all made -- we all moved around to Vesey Street. It seemed to be the focal point where everyone was gathering.

Then from that point, we had moved further down Vesey Street toward the river, because there was a fear of the gas mains possibly exploding, which was the way I understood it. That was it. We got down to the river. We pretty much just kind of gathered our thoughts and tried to get everything, all the companies together to find out who was missing and who was still with us.

Q. Where were you when the second tower collapsed?

A. When the second tower collapsed, we were just down by the river I think.

Q. Did the dust cloud get that far?

A. Not really, no. It never reached that point. That was pretty much where we remained until we moved back into the area.

Q. After the second collapse?

A. That's correct. After the second collapse.

Q. Anything else you want to say?

A. After we left the river, we went back toward Vesey Street and we all stayed on Vesey Street pretty much for a good part of the day and then they wanted to get an idea of who was missing and who was still there. They proceeded to have all the companies join up and have a roll call to see who was missing and who was still out (inaudible). That was pretty much all I can remember at this point.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGUISTA: All right. The time is 11:30. That concludes this interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER JASON MCGIMPSEY

Interview Date: January 18, 2,002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: The date is January 18, 2,002. The time is 1045 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name.

A. Jason McGimpsey.

Q. Jason is a 6th grade Firefighter assigned to Ladder 12 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Ladder 12. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Jason, in your own words please tell us what happened that day from when you got the run to the fire.

A. We got the run. We went over there with one extra guy, who ended up on the rig there. We went over. I don't know exactly where we parked when we got there. Got out, and they didn't have an extra mask for me, so I had to go find a mask. I kind of got a mask together as we were going in.

Q. Where did you first report?

A. We first reported to -- we went into the building and we thought we were in the south tower because there was a Chief there that wanted all the officers to report to him. He said he designated the building as the south tower, so I thought it was the south tower at the time. Our Lieutenant went over there and got our assignment to go to -- start at the 14th floor and work our way up and make sure everybody was clear.

So we got up to the 14th floor, started to work our way up and we just got to the 19th floor when the first building collapsed. We were --

Q. You were in the Marriott?

A. In the Marriott, yes. At that point, we were trying to get -- it was kind of chaotic, the lights went out after the first collapse. I was trying to get all my gear together and somebody yelled out just forget everything, just go down, just get the hell out of here. Go, go. So everybody just kind of high tailed downstairs trying to get everybody together.

Q. Were you with any other units or you were just Ladder 12?

A. There were other people that were with us, but I didn't know who they were or how they ended up there or anything like that. We got down to about the fifth floor. We couldn't get down any further. There was debris there. So we were trying to figure out how to get out of there. We took like a corner room and there was another company that was with us, but I don't remember which company it was. We were trying to figure out how to get out of there.

We were going to have to single sign out the window, but the rope was on the 19th floor. We were thinking about using a hose line and we decided that wasn't such a good idea, so they said that somebody has got to go up and get the rope.

Initially I was going to get it because I brought the rope. So another guy, I was the junior man, so they wouldn't let me do that. Another guy stepped up and said he was going to get it. I was going to go with him and the officer said to stay here. We are going to go up and get it. The two went up to get the rope. As they were going up --

Q. Who is this, Lieutenant Petti?

A. Lieutenant Petti and Angel Juarbe. They went to get the rope and we stayed trying to figure out what we were doing. Tried to get in touch with the command post. We forgot before we went in there, they switched us to channel 3 and just because of everything going on, nobody thought to go back to Channel 1. We were trying to get the command post. There was no answer. We were trying to get anybody to realize. There was no answer.

They had a Mayday come in for a guy from 4 Truck, Brennan, from 4 Truck. [redacted]

Q. Were you aware that the south tower had collapsed?

A. We didn't know actually what was going on. We weren't sure if those noises were -- sounded like another plane, bomb, something like that, but -- it just was a big, we didn't really know what was going on because we were inside the building and then walking around we knew it was bad, just from looking out. We could see just from out the windows and everything. But as they went up we found a way out through the debris down to the next floor down, so we were -- everybody started to go down.

As they were going down, one of the guys wanted to wait for them. He actually -- before we started down, the other guys radioed back. They got the rope, I believe, I think they got the rope, but they were going to go after the guy with the Mayday.

Everybody was going down to the fourth floor. One of the other guys, Mike Mullan, was going to go up and see to help them out.

Q. Did the guy who gave the Mayday, did he say where he was?

A. I can't remember if he did or not. [redacted] Mayday Mayday Mayday. Nobody was answering. So that's just the way --

Q. I was just curious.

A. They went to try and find him. As Mike was going back up, I wanted to go with Mike and one of the senior guys, he told me to stay next to him the whole time. I went up to him, I said look, maybe I should go with Mike. He said no, just stay with me and he went down and I guess it happened, the first collapse. I didn't see there was a couple of civilians that they found. So they went down and I just didn't want to leave Mike, I went to go with Mike.

So I told Mike I was going to go with him and Mike ordered me to go downstairs and just from that time, from the top of the stairs to the bottom I got to the fourth floor and the second building had collapsed. Everything above our floor was lost in the cloud. Those three guys, they were lost in the cloud too.

From that point everything just turned black. I thought we were buried at first, so I masked up at first, because I don't know if it would be -- it was just everything just turned black so I thought I was buried. The second collapse was really bad because the whole building really shook and the noise -- it was -- it sounded like it was another plane. I was waiting for the fuselage to come in. It was so loud.

So after that, smoke -- the black started lifting and the light started coming through. The collapse had ripped apart the back wall of the stairwell we were on. So we were kind of like on a ledge of debris looking out once everything cleared up. We were trying to figure out how to get out. That's when I saw those three civilians were with us.

We were on the ledge. We were trying to figure out how to get out. There was a beam that was leaning against an I beam that was leaning against the building. So I yelled out to everybody that we got an I beam here. Not everybody heard me. So the guys that heard me went over to the I beam and we brought one civilian down. We went down the I beam. It was really weird because at the bottom, there was nobody around and then once you started walking, you kind of ended up like there was nobody. So we just kind of walked out.

We all kind of got separated in the debris. I went out with three guys and down the I beam and we ended up meeting up on the west side by the water.

Q. What happened to the other two civilians?

A. The other two -- it got confusing, really, after the second collapse, it really got confusing. I know we brought the one down and the other ones must have been -- the other ones stayed with the other guys and it just got -- there was so much going on. The other guys didn't even come with us. They might have taken a different way to get down. I know one of the guys actually -- we weren't even sure of accountability, where everybody was. And I know afterwards everybody thought that I was still with Mike, so it was kind of confusing after that.

We came back. We were on the west side there. We had a little Fire Department boat pick us up, a two man boat. They brought us over to the Jersey side. I kind of got my bearings over there, made a couple of calls, see if everybody was okay. Then once I got my bearings together, I hopped on a boat and came back.

Went back to the Manhattan side. The other two guys kind of just hung out back on the Jersey side. When I got back there I was trying to find -- I had been calling in, trying to find -- I was calling the Lieutenant and all the guys I wasn't sure about, trying to get in touch with them. Couldn't get touch in touch with them. I was looking for anybody in the company, trying to find anyone with the company, trying to find out what happened with the guys.

The company told us they thought because the senior guy that had me the whole time, after the second collapse, he didn't hear me yell to everybody for the I beam. I guess he went down -- at the time -- I didn't know everybody -- I thought everybody heard. He thought that I was upstairs with Mike still. So I tried to find him. Now I found him, just kind of got everybody together. Everybody figured out where everybody was at. We had accountability now. Told them the guys that were on the Jersey side. Then I ended up trying to stay. I stayed with the company for a while but my eyes got really bad after that.

I kept flushing them and I tried to stay as long as I could, but they put me in the hospital. That was it.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. That's all I can think of right now.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Thank you very much. I appreciate your help. I'm trying to put this thing together. It's 11 o'clock. That's the end of this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC PHILLIP ASHBY

Interview Date: January 22, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. McCOURT: Today's date is January 22, 2002. My name is Tom McCourt from the New York City Fire Department. Currently I'm interviewing Paramedic Phillip Ashby from Division 1.

Q. Can you just identify yourself please?

A. Paramedic Phillip Ashby, Division 1. Medication coordinator.

Q. Paramedic Ashby, can you tell me the events that transpired from your perspective on September 11, 2001?

A. Okay. At approximately -- it appears to be between 814 hours and 830 hours I responded from Queens to lower Manhattan for a plane into the World Trade Center. I got there --

Q. Who were you working with?

A. Myself. I parked my vehicle on what appears to be from this map, Broadway between Dey Street and Fulton Street. I ran down Fulton Street, where I immediately met the -- what I think was the first triage staging area for that operation.

I met the now Captain Olszewski, Lieutenant D'Avila. Who else was there? Bill Melarango, Lieutenant Bill Melarango, and a number of EMS personnel. We were doing triage in that area, in front of the Millennium Hotel, actually at the corner of Fulton and Church.

We were doing triage, treating a number of patients. It's hard to count now, maybe, I guess probably say altogether maybe 40, 50 patients. Just triaging.

Q. What were you seeing?

A. Seeing a lot of burns, couple of sucking chest wounds. Just mostly burns, multiple burns. At that time I really didn't see anybody jumping out the building, although I heard people that have seen that. I didn't see any, because I was too busy working. I was looking up actually, because there was nothing for me in front of me to see when I looked up.

While there I couldn't quantify the time, to tell you exactly how long, but I heard a large scream. Then I heard a couple more screams simultaneously.

Q. People screaming?

A. People screaming, and I just ran. I didn't look around. I didn't -- I just ran because you have been around these buildings as long as I have, you recognize a real screams from a fake scream and you realize something that if somebody is screaming that hard, it's something coming out of the lower abdomen that you just can't fake. It's just scared to death. I just took off.

Q. Which way did you run?

A. I ran up Fulton Street, stayed close to what would be considered the south side if you will, on the right-hand side of Fulton Street, if you are going east on the right-hand side of Fulton Street, next to the Millennium. That's when I turned around and I saw the building collapsing.

Q. You saw it collapsing?

A. Right. Well, about 3 strides until I run I actually turned around to see what I was actually running from after the fact. Not trying to get -- stop, making sure that I wasn't running from nothing at all, that I was running from something. I looked up and I saw the building lean over and that's all I saw. I just turned back around and tried to run even faster, but I stopped because where I was running to, the plume of smoke had already engulfed Broadway going north.

Q. So you were running into it or --

A. I was running towards Broadway, but it made no sense because it's like a wave, like water going down a canyon. That plume of smoke was just already coming down Broadway. I just, you know, said just -- I stopped. I looked and I said that wouldn't make much sense. I'm going to run into what I'm trying to run from. I turned around and the plume of smoke just as high as this building was, coming at me from the corner of Church and Fulton.

Q. Behind you?

A. Right, just coming around the corner of Church and Fulton. So I just -- I tried to run into the building. To the right I think was a bank or something, right on the corner there. I'm not too sure. But the doors were locked, so I really tried to go to the left a bit. By that time it got so dark and I was so overcome by the soot and the pulverized rock, that I just laid next to the subway station, which would be right here. Right there is the subway station.

Q. Where is that, indicate it?

A. On Fulton and in the middle of -- about a third of the way up Fulton if you are coming from Church on the left-hand side.

Q. Heading towards Broadway?

A. Heading towards Broadway. I stopped by the subway station. Not wanting to go down in the train station, because I realized that if I was going to die,

I wanted to die above ground as opposed to being trapped and suffering and knowing that I was going to die anyway. I wanted it to be quick. I didn't want to go down to the subway station and wait to die down there, because I really did think that I was going to die. There was no two ways about it. I couldn't see anything.

About two or three minutes of sucking in what I would consider to be -- when you think about, it would be something like throwing in your mouth powder and just trying to breathe as somebody throws powder in your mouth. That's essentially what it felt like to me. I mean there was no way you can salivate enough to get rid of it. It just kept on coming down.

Q. Was there anybody with you or you were all by yourself?

A. By myself. By myself.

Q. No other civilians around --

A. No. As I'm laying there ready to die, I can't see anything now because of my eyes -- somebody pulled me and they pulled me up. I guess someone just came out of the Millennium Hotel or even the bank across the street and he is feeling his way, but he is in a better position than I was, obviously, because he was not in the initial plume of smoke. He pulled me up on to Broadway and right between -- on Broadway between Ann and Fulton Street. Right (inaudible) or something like that over there on the corner. He pulled me into there.

That's when I was able to get some water and dust myself off and all that good stuff and really just consider myself fortunate. Just hacking up the dust for like an hour, two hours later -- I mean, you know, soot the color of this table here, which is cherry oak, cherry wood, for like an hour and a half. Actually more the color of that. More the color of that. A cross between these two. But whatever pulverized rock looks like, you know, I was coughing it up for about an hour and a half.

Q. Was there any debris field there also or was it just all of the soot and the dust and everything? Was there actual building material that came down?

A. By me, no. Well, let's put it like this. If there was I couldn't see it. I don't know if there was or there wasn't. But if there was I couldn't see it. All I know is that that was the only thing that was in my lungs. I know that I was limping after the fact, but the reason I was limping was not because anything hit me, because I pushed off so hard on my right leg, that, you know, I almost fractured the thing. That's what I think. I mean I have heard stories about -- fear is something else. It really makes you really do.

Q. Fight or flight.

A. Exactly, and you don't really examine it so much as -- I pushed up so hard on my right leg that there is no doubt which leg that I had left the scene with. It was just a very remarkable thing. That's it.

Q. What happened at that point after that, did you go back to the --

A. [redacted]

So I thought somebody launched a missile from the East River, or over the Hudson to knock it down. I mean that's what I'm thinking. If they are, if they are still out there to launch another missile, I got to get the hell out of there, because we were in a war zone right, exactly. I didn't think -- I didn't go and try to figure out my high school physics or my college chemistry to figure out, you know, the fire and the brick and the melting and the boiling point.

Q. Going back to when you were coming, did you see the building on fire, could you see the state of the building while you were responding?

A. Oh, yes. Oh, yes, it was something that was -- it was just -- (inaudible).

Q. You knew going in, you knew what you were going in for.

A. Yes. I knew. Put it like this. I wish I knew what I was going into. I saw what was happening, but it didn't compare to what I was going into when I was there. You know, the devastation was just something that being on the job for 13 years and like I said, being in the last bombing and being in train disasters and everything disasters, nothing could compare to what happened that day. Nothing. Nothing.

I hope nothing else, in my lifetime anyway, comes across like that either.

Q. By the time of the second collapse, were you still there?

A. By the time of the second collapse, I was at Pace. Right, I was at Pace.

Q. Pace University?

A. Pace University. I'm trying to get out of there again and as I'm trying to walk towards, not the Brooklyn Bridge, because I figured that would be another historic location for them to attack or launch a missile. I was trying to head towards the Manhattan Bridge and take my chances there. So I was at Pace and then -- actually I was walking towards the bridge when another building came down and I ran into Pace.

Because by now, you know, you don't need anybody to tell you what is happening. You know either -- I don't know if the second building came down, but I knew something with the same magnitude happened as happened with the first building that I saw. I ran into Pace and, you know, people were crying and everything else. I was just trying to just suck wind. You know, I went into (inaudible).

I was just bent over and trying to -- where they keep the food warm, just trying to get at least some semblance of air into my lungs, which was already congested from all the soot. Just bend over with that refrigeration device under my nose, you know, because at that time I was just trying to get any kind of air I possibly can, because I knew that, you know, just from a physiology standpoint, everything was so thick with gook. They don't do lung transplants. So I kind of figured whatever I can do to help, it was on my own.

When that scenario calmed down and a lot of the plume of smoke went away, I came out of Pace, again, still not knowing that the building collapsed, thinking that somebody launched a missile and trying to get out from -- and I came over the Manhattan Bridge and came back here --

Q. To MetroTech?

A. MetroTech. Got treated at BHS. Then I went back, because that's the only way I felt that I could bring some kind of closure, because now I was fully briefed on what happened.

Q. You knew what happened.

A. I knew what happened. There was no doubt and I didn't think that going home would be the place for me to actually bring closure than coming back and actually helping with the rescue or whatever it is, anything that I could do, would somehow bring me, being able to talk to somebody who was actually there. Not somebody who wasn't there. That's not what helped me, because unless you were there, you just can't imagine it.

That's what happened. I went back to the location. I spent another couple of hours late at night and then I went home. I came back the next day.

Q. How is your leg?

A. After three or four days it's fine. I mean I knew I was hurting. I figured, you know, listen, all in all there is nothing to complain about. Nothing to complain about. I'm walking. I stopped coughing up the soot that was in my lungs. Everything else is like I said, is a plus. I wasn't hanging out dangling.

Q. Anything you want to add that you might have glanced over?

A. Nothing. I mean the picture of me in Newsweek. There is a picture of me in Newsweek. That's it. A picture of me and Carlos.

Q. Carlos?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know where Carlos --

A. Didn't you see the picture? That's me bending over treating a woman.

Q. You were with Carlos right before --

A. Well, that's what the picture said. Did I see Carlos and know Carlos ran into the building, I can't say any of those things.

Q. You weren't focused --

A. Right, right. He wouldn't have to go into the building to have died in there. He could have died right there in that corner. It was not extraordinary to die. You can die right there in that corner. That picture, you know, placed him -- photographing the woman who I had taken off that chair. She just looked bad, and I put her on the curb, but she just looked bad. I mean she was not --

Q. Is she the one that was all bloodied up?

A. Exactly. I saw a picture of her actually in Time Magazine on the curb where I put her. That's if she's alive. I don't know if she is even alive today.

Q. You don't know her name?

A. I don't know her name. All I knew is I took her off that chair, I put her on the curb because that chair needed some real work, because she was not as bad as she looked. She was frail.

Q. Is that when you were doing the triage --

A. Right. Exactly right. That's where we were all doing the triage on that corner. Then I think Lois, who was a coordinator for Brooklyn, said that Ricardo Quinn's wife said that his hand was in that picture, because she recognized his bracelet. I don't know. She asked me did I see him, I said I don't know. I couldn't tell you who I saw. All I saw were the people screaming at me, which was Olszewski, because, you know, they were telling me that listen, you worry about patient care, you worry about triage. As a medic, you get involved in patient care, not triage. They ought to be giving you triage.

That's what I was involved in. So that's about it.

Q. Okay. Is that it? Anything else you want to add?

A. That's it.

MR. McCOURT: The time is 8:40. The interview started at 8:25. This concludes the interview. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT PETER ROSIE

Interview Date: January 22, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is January 22, 2002. I'm Paul Radenberg, Fire Department World Trade Center tasks Task Force currently at EMS Battalion 13. The time is now 13 hundred hours.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. Peter Rosie, EMT, Battalion 13.

Q. This interview is being conducted regarding the events of the morning of September 11, 2001. Peter, you can begin.

A. My girlfriend woke me up and told me to turn on the TV. I live on Second Avenue and 9 Street. I saw that one of the towers was on fire, so I went up to my roof. Figured I would just get in the way, didn't want to go, you know. Then I saw the second bird hit, so then I knew I better get busy. Threw on my uniform, jumped on my son's bike and went directly to Bellevue. I was there like in 3 minutes.

They threw a radio at me and I was on 06 Ida with a partner. I didn't know the guy. Jagoda. His name is Jagoda.

We took off directly from there and headed down Second Avenue. I remember passing my apartment. Got on to Canal and then shot down Broadway and ended up at City Hall Park. That's when we had patients coming towards us. I had no idea that the tower had came down at that time. I thought the debris and everything that I saw, you know, was from the fire. So I didn't have any visual of the tower coming down, but apparently it was coming down, because we got there at around 10 o'clock.

Then with all those patients coming at us, I was trying to triage like 5 people at the same time. 3 police officers, two female officers, I didn't know what was wrong with them. They were pretty hysterical. A male police officer with a cardiac condition and a male with his arm badly lacerated. He was bleeding pretty bad.

So I patched him up and there was a couple of other units there. We volunteered to take these patients on and I'm trying to see -- so I get them on the bus, you know, and start giving 02 to the cardiac condition. Everyone was pretty hysterical and I didn't get the story because I heard collapse, but I would never imagine that the whole tower came down. I just figured well, things had -- obviously -- would fall from the tower and that's how this guy got this trauma to his arm and he was going into shock. I tried to calm down the police officers as best as I can.

One of the female police officers just jumped on the stretcher, so I was holding on to the guy with the -- he was my main concern. He had the cardiac condition. I gave him O2. There wasn't much I could do other than that, take his blood pressure and monitor him, but I was concerned with this guy's arm, because it was barely attached.

So we shot to Bellevue and when they opened up the doors to Bellevue, just an army of people in scrubs. They were just terrific, you know, grabbing people left and right, triaging them, sending them to their respective areas. Went back to the station, hosed down the bus because it was a mess with the debris and BBP, as best as we could, restocked O2 and then shot back down.

Then I believe we got to Church Street and during this time -- I mean I have thought about it, you know, during this time, when we first -- that first time, when the first -- when the tower went down, I had no idea and we were off the site before I got any details, so I figured the second tower had collapsed as we were returning back to Bellevue with this person -- load of patients.

Then the second tower had collapsed by the time we arrived at Church Street and Barclay. I remember, because I believe this is World Trade Center 7. This is tower 7 here?

Q. That's the Post Office. 7 is -- yes.

A. 7. So it was right here, Barclay. There was much more debris.

Q. Barclay and West?

A. Barclay and West, yes. It was just dead quiet. At that time there was pretty much -- out of control was -- everyone was just trying to get their bearings at that time, you know. So the Lieutenants I did run into, he tried to get everyone around and take names. That's the best thing we would could do is just get a good idea of who you had with you right there.

But then we had -- there was an individual down there who seemed like he was just like wandering around and so I went and got him and he just -- he was out of it. He had breathed in a lot of the dust and -- I guess he was an EMT, but he was kind of like on his own type of thing. He had his kit bag, you know, and his badge, but more or less, you know, he got out of there. He was pretty much out of it.

Q. That was down by Vesey?

A. Vesey and West. So we transported him. We transported him to Beth Israel. Hosed down the bus again and made our way back to tower 7. We were here, then we were on this street. What is this? We were on Murray Street and --

Q. Let me get my other map.

A. Greenwich. Murray Street and Greenwich. Murray Street and Greenwich. The World Trade Center 7 had collapsed at that point. I can remember asking, because we had visuals before we left and then I had asked somebody, who was it, is it going to collapse and they said probably tomorrow. But on our return it had gone down too.

At that point we made our way to the staging area, you know, and became the -- what do you call us, we were the unit next to the -- what is the trailer where they take --

Q. The MERV?

A. The MERV. We were the hot something.

Q. Okay. The hot unit.

A. The hot unit, right. We were just transporting firemen back and forth all day. That was it.

Q. Okay. When you got up to the Bellevue station, do you remember about what time you got there?

A. You mean the first time?

Q. Yes, yes. You left your apartment and went to Bellevue.

A. I was at Bellevue at 9:40.

Q. Okay. When you came down over by City Hall Park, you had said that there were some other units there?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember --

A. I believe.

Q. -- who they were?

A. I believe it was a Presbyterian unit.

Q. Cornell?

A. That's it, and a Hatzolah unit.

Q. Okay. The fellow with the arm injury, he was a civilian?

A. Yes. I actually got his picture in Time magazine. Not Time, but People magazine. It was funny, because I went to Barnes and Noble. I don't mean to get off track here, but it was pretty amazing to see my picture in there and the guy who I transported. If anything, during that -- if I think I made a difference, it was maybe that first run, you know. I'm sure I made a difference all day, but that guy, he was pretty beat up.

Q. So from City Hall Park you went back up to Bellevue?

A. Bellevue.

Q. You came back on the next trip, your next trip in, and you were on like West and Barclay?

A. West and Barclay and then we were -- West and Barclay and we might have -- West and Barclay, not Barclay. Sorry. I was wrong. That's too close, because this was up in flames. Okay. So it was Murray Street.

Q. Murray Street?

A. Murray and Barclay. No. Murray and -- what was this again?

Q. This is Greenwich.

A. Murray and Greenwich, and from there everyone was trying to get their bearings, trying to figure out. At this point we didn't know where the staging area was, the main staging area.

Q. Right. The EMT that you were talking about that was by himself with the tech bag, was he a Fire Department employee?

A. No, I believe he was private, because he had that type of private badge, you know, the blue, the fancy blue one, looks like a detective. He just had a bag full of collars and I wouldn't take him for city.

Q. When you got up here --

A. Oh, when I got here, then I ran into my partner Jason Charles. I believe you are going to have an interview with him.

Q. Yes.

A. I looked and I saw a fireman and -- but it was Jason wearing a fireman's jacket. Have you spoken with him?

Q. I haven't.

A. I saw him and I was really happy to see him, you know.

Q. He is on our list.

A. Yes, I saw him. He has quite a story to tell. I saw him and he gave me some aspirin, because breathing all this stuff I got a pounding headache, you know.

Q. Do you remember who else was down in this area of Greenwich and Murray from EMS or the Fire Department?

A. A Lieutenant Murphy.

Q. EMS Lieutenant?

A. Yes. Lieutenant Murphy.

Q. Would you know where he is stationed or ever see him before?

A. No, no. I remember his name, because later on that night, it must have been 2:30, he grabbed me and he said that he had 8 New Jersey busses, bright shiny busses from New Jersey. We are in the staging area and he wants them at Battalion 4. You know, with the lights and the road block and all this shit that's going on, I'm like okay, let me get my partner. He is driving. No -- forget it, you take them. So like, I remember, what is your name sir? Because here I'm with 8 busses and I've got to get them to Battalion 4.

I mean I live down there, but getting through this maze. So I was pretty stressed out by then, because I'm thinking I'm responsible for all these. I'm on my own in this bus and to get them to 4. Please let me find -- I was looking for Canal. Not Canal, Houston. I found Houston. I knew what to do from there and I got those busses at 4. I'm like here you go, thank you.

Now what do I do. Do I go back to Bellevue. Do I go back to the staging area and try to find my partner. So I said shit, just go back to where I came from. Just getting back was a bit of a challenge, you know. On my own I think, like I'm listening to the radio and trying to get the big picture of what really occurred. It was weird because I didn't really have the full story, you know what I mean.

I got back and I found him. Once again we were -- then for the rest of the night we were there. I'm glad I got my partner back, because he would have wondered where the hell is my partner. He would have been stuck down there. I'm just glad that I was given that task and I completed the task and I got back and I found my partner and that was good.

I know you are more interested about what the occurrences at around 11 o'clock. So, sorry.

Q. No problem. No problem. Aside from Lieutenant Murphy, when you say your partner, you are talking about Jagoda?

A. Jagoda. He is Battalion 8. He is Bellevue.

Q. Anybody else down in that area that you remember seeing?

A. Around 11 o'clock?

Q. Yes. Well, when you were back here at Greenwich and Murray?

A. No.

Q. He was the only one?

A. He was the only one.

Q. How about?

A. Jason Charles is the only one that I recognized and that was -- I don't know what time that was. That was like on my third return back from transporting. I saw him you know. I couldn't give you any names. Really there wasn't that many EMS, you know. Hatzolah. I saw a couple of Hatzolah units and a New York Cornell, but I didn't see much Fire Department EMS.

I think because -- I believe there were mainly a lot more around the staging area, weren't there? You probably have a lot more knowledge than I do.

Q. Yes.

A. Compared to -- because we came in from this direction, at a fairly late period, you know. I think. So much I'm sure had gone on before all this from the time that the first bird hit and people were trying to get organized and here we are whizzing down just before it collapses, you know, from this direction. Didn't see much activity here, you know. Except for the Hatzolah and the Cornell.

Then it was so good to get to the staging area eventually and see more EMS and ambulance -- what's going on.

Q. Right, right.

A. I was like, I was trying to do ACRs on all these people, do you know what I mean? I was like damn. There was -- you couldn't talk on the radio.

Q. The radios were down or just too much?

A. Too much traffic. I figured and I'm sure my partner figured, if you don't have anything really important to say, don't say it.

Q. Okay. Anything from that morning that sticks in your head particularly or any comment you would like to add?

A. On a personal note?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, I was in the British Army for six years and I had two tours in northern Ireland. I had been familiar with explosions going on in Belfast. I was an NCO. It was weird because I thought I had left all that behind me. That was something that kind of no one knows about. There is no way you could really explain it to anyone unless you were actually there, you know.

Then this -- it's really horrifying over there, because it's not that big and it's more intimate. There is a lot more to deal with. There is a lot more you can deal with compared to something like this. Then for this shit to happen, it was like kind of odd like -- I think I was a little bit more -- I was prepared. I was pretty focused. I stayed focused.

But it was strange because I was still not really awake. I jumped on my son's bike and got on that unit. Here's your partner. Here's your radio. Boom. We are going down and it was weird because we had such a clear avenue of approach. The police were just waving us on and we were shooting down there and seeing everyone come the opposite direction, so it was very surreal. It was like what's going on. It was like let's get there you know.

It was actually a good feeling, you know, that traffic control was so good. That people were being -- people were leaving the area and we did have a good avenue of approach. We were able to get there at a good speed. So it was good. We got there and I'm sure that first load of people, the police officers and the guy were happy to see us. I was just pretty proud of everyone you know.

So that's it.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. Time is now 1320 hours. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT MELVIN RODRIGUEZ

Interview Date: January 22, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is January 22nd, 2002. The time is 2212 hours. This is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, title, shield number and assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

EMT RODRIGUEZ: My name is Melvin Rodriguez. My badge number is 2267. I'm an EMT for the Fire Department, and my unit was 15 David tour 2 that day.

Q. Melvin, were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on 9/11?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. In your own words could you please tell me the details of the day?

A. The details of the day were I was supposed to go home at 7. Somebody banged in sick. I had to work overtime. I worked the unit called 15 David. We had a job. We took somebody to Our Lady of Mercy. I noticed there was something wrong when I got to the hospital and there was nobody in the emergency room, because everybody was in front of the TVs in the emergency room outside in the lobby.

Somebody in the emergency room said your lieutenant, Angel Avila wants to speak to you. I picked up the phone, and he says, "What the heck are you doing? I need you -- you've got to be 63 to the World Trade Center. A plane hit the World Trade Center."

So we got our patient signed for by the nurse, and we went down to the Henry Hudson Parkway and went all the way down to Manhattan.

Q. When you were driving on the parkway, could you see the Trade Center at all?

A. I wasn't driving; my partner was driving. I was teching that day. As we pulled up to Manhattan, they told us to switch to the Manhattan frequency because we were on citywide. As we pulled up, we heard a lot of screaming on the radio. Somebody was calling, "Mayday! Mayday! The first one just went down."

We were down by Stuyvesant High School. There was a lot of dust. Everybody was picking up injured people covered in white soot. We had a fireman -- there was a walking wounded facility across the street by Stuyvesant High School and we had a fireman that was covered in soot, screaming. He opened his eyes and you couldn't even see his eyeballs because he was so covered in so much soot. We took him to the walking wounded. We rolled him up. There was a ramp there, an elevator. We took him up there.

We went back down to our bus, and the lieutenants had us stay by Stuyvesant High School.

Q. When you say "we," who are you referring to? Your partner for the day?

A. My partner was Dwight Scott.

Q. Dwight Scott?

A. He was here in the 15th Battalion. Yes. That's his regular unit.

Q. That's his regular unit?

A. Yes.

Q. When you arrived on the scene initially, can you just indicate on the map that I provided for you approximately where you parked your vehicle?

A. We were on the west side. It might have been Barclay or Murray. It was around there, by Vesey, pretty close there, or maybe Barclay might have been it. I'm not sure of the street. It might have been Barclay; Barclay, Murray or Vesey. It might have been -- I think it was Barclay, yes, because it was right by the Stuyvesant -- wherever the Stuyvesant High School is, it was across the street from the Stuyvesant High School.

Q. Okay. Could you just indicate with a number 1 approximately where you think you parked the vehicle?

A. I think I was parked around here.

Q. Thank you.

So now you arrived and this firefighter --

A. We arrived. We got this firefighter. We wheeled him upstairs. They had a gym up there. It wasn't Stuyvesant High School; it was on the other side of the West Side Highway.

We took him up there, and other people in the medical role took care of him. We went back downstairs, and everybody was trying to use the phones to call home and say they were okay.

It was like a line there. All the phones were down. Communications were down.

We had no idea it was two planes. We had no idea it was terrorism. There was no communication. We just knew there was one plane. There was still One World Trade Center building standing, and it was on fire.

When we finished with the fireman, we were around Barclay or Murray. They might have made us move back. There was a gas scare. I don't remember the time frame, but everybody started saying keep your ambulances away from manhole covers and sewers. Somebody yelled, "Everybody run for lives. There's a gas main leak. There might be an explosion."

I got separated from my partner because everybody was running. An ambulance went by with broken windows and the back doors open. I jumped in the back of that ambulance. We ended up going by the Chelsea Piers.

I really don't remember if that was when the second one came down, because to be honest with you it was so chaotic. I just remember little bits and pieces of that day. I don't remember everything in a sequence.

I remember the second one coming down, and we just stood there in shock. We were like, oh, my God. Everybody said, oh, my God. We had no idea this was going to happen, because we didn't know there were two planes. Me and my partner didn't; I don't know about everybody else.

There was no communications. I didn't find out there were two planes and this was a terrorist act until 18 hours later when I got home and I put the TV on and my wife -- because I called my wife as we pulled into the World Trade Center. I told her what happened. I love you, a plane hit -- she put the TV on, and then she found out it was two planes. After calling her, she saw the second one. She saw them coming down. So they thought I was killed.

So when I got home, she was crying, and we hugged each other. I finally took a shower because I had all this white stuff over me. I put the TV on and I realized, oh, my God, this is terrorism. We're at war. I thought this was an accident.

There was no communications. Everybody was so busy running around. A lot of us didn't know what was going on. That's why they say, oh, they were stupid, nobody should have been there, they should have known. Nobody knew nothing. We were just busy trying to help people. I didn't know it was two planes. To be perfectly honest with you, we still would have helped them, because it's only natural to want to help people.

That was the devastating thing about this. When the second one went down, we went in. You're expecting hundreds of people to be injured. You're going to help people. It was a dead silence. Everybody was dead. There was nothing but body parts all over the place. It was a helpless feeling. You're all pumped up to save the world, and there's nobody to be saved. Everybody's dead.

That's really what the shocking part about all of this was. The dead silence, the helplessness, the frustration, even guilt of being a survivor. You knew when you saw that second one come down all those people and the firefighters and everybody was dying. You couldn't do nothing. You were helpless. That's what really hits you.

After the second one went down, they said there was an ambulance and the lieutenants were telling us not to go in. I remember telling my partner, "Listen, this is bullshit" -- excuse my language -- "We've got people in there trapped. We're going in there."

So six guys. I said, "Anybody got any balls, get in the back of my bus." There was supposed to be an ambulance called 19 something, and nobody heard from them. They were supposed to be behind the apartments over there by Battery Park.

So six guys jumped in my ambulance and said we're going in, we're going to call this operation our guys. We're going to get our guys out of there. We went in there, we found the ambulance, but there was nobody in the ambulance. Hopefully they got out.

Then we came back. You wanted to do something, and you couldn't do nothing. Everybody was dead. It was just a helpless feeling. It was just a helpless feeling.

I just kept on working overtime down there. I worked the morgue 18 hours my next pass day. In the beginning when you worked the morgue, it was a tent by the American Express building. We, the EMS people, we had to go through the body parts.

You know, you get a body bag in and expect a body. There were no bodies. They were bags. We had to open up those red bags with our hands. Of course we had gloves on. And you had to go through those body parts, looking for anything to associate that remains with a member of the service, whether it was looking for a littleblue thread, a piece of equipment. I did that for 18 hours, you know, and it was rough.

I remember the respect the coroner showed by ordering tables. They didn't want to be putting body parts on the floor, treating anybody with disrespect. That's something I remember, the respect they showed for the remains of all those people.

It was just a horrible situation. I don't know how else to describe it. It's just been a horrible situation. [redacted]

It was just a horrible situation. I don't know how else to describe it. It was like living through hell. It was a sad, sad day. I don't know how else to describe it for you.

Q. I think you've done a pretty good job.

A. I thought I had seen a lot of horrible things in my life. In 13 years in the Bronx, I've seen the worst of everything as far as mutilizations, picking up body parts on a highway, 200 pieces, a guy run over by a tractor-trailer.

But working at the morgue and picking up hands with wedding bands on them, knowing that they belonged to some loved one and picking up torsos, wallets with pictures of kids. Those were Americans, you know, decent people who died innocently. It was pretty tough.

It's also brought the good out in people, and I think people are closer to God and people are -- I think we got too -- in this country we got too comfortable where we were so bored with our being -- having a balanced budget and living so good that we were so bored we started fighting amongst each other: Your color is different than mine. Let me start with you. Or your religion is different. And this woke us up a little bit.

People say we got caught with our pants down. We got caught without our pants even on. You know what I mean?

I don't know how else to say it. It was just a horrible thing. But it brought a lot of good out of people. More people are going to Church now. I appreciate everything I have now, things I didn't appreciate: coming home and seeing my dogs in the yard and them licking me and seeing my five-year-old son. All the things I took for granted then I don't take for granted anymore.

I don't know what else to say. I just hope all those people that passed away are happy in heaven and at peace with themselves. I don't know what else to say.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this interview in regards to 9/11 up till about maybe 2:00 in the afternoon?

A. Up till 2:00 in the afternoon? It's hard to get things in sequence because of the severity of the situation. It's like a horror movie you saw in, not slow motion, but fast speed. Your adrenaline was flowing. Sometimes bits and pieces come to you that you don't even remember. I'm like, oh, I remember that now, because your mind blocked out some of the things that were so horrible.

I remember when I was a kid I used to get the paper with the little drops of candy and you would bite the candy. I remember in the morgue picking up a face, just a piece of skin with teeth on it like that. The things you saw down there were horrifying.

Thank God now they don't have to do that. I remember the three people I worked with the first time I worked in the morgue, they had to be relieved. They couldn't take it. So I was there all by myself. I just tried to think these are families, people that were loved and they were good, decent people and somebody has to do this. If I could do it and show respect for their remains and treat them in a respectful way, I'm going to do it. That's the least I could do for these people, besides pray for them.

I remember the priest saying prayers over them before we even opened the bags. Everybody that died in the World Trade Center, their remains were treated with respect. They had a priest pray for them, for their last rites, for their souls, that they didn't suffer.

And I think the families that don't know that should know that, that there was nobody who had a family member's remains treated disrespectfully, without prayer, without respect, and I think that's very important that the families should know.

If I could do something, I would want that to be known, that the families know that we treated their family's remains as though they were our own families, from the coroners who ordered those metal beds so nobody would be put on the floor to the priest there that prayed over the remains.

I think if there's one thing I could tell the people of New York is that their family members' remains were treated with respect and dignity. Maybe that will bring them some solace in this whole sad situation.

That's all I can say.

Q. I thank you very much for conducting this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS LIEUTENANT NELSON VELAZQUEZ

Interview Date: January 23, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. RADENBERG: Today is January 23rd, 2002. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department's World Trade Center Task Force currently at EMS Battalion 14. I am conducting an interview with Lieutenant --

LIEUTENANT VELAZQUEZ: Velzaquez, Nelson, from Battalion 14 in the Bronx, Shield No. 372.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Interview start time will be 1308.

Q. Lieutenant?

A. On September the 10th, I worked the Tour 3, evening tour, in the Bronx. I proceeded to stay on for Tour 1, which is September the 11th, the night tour. I worked a double shift. Sometime around between 5:00 and 6:00 o'clock in the morning, when I arrived home, this was probably about the time when I went to sleep, and during the morning of September the 11th, I thought I was dreaming when I was hearing sirens and a lot of noise and commotion. The location where I was sleeping at my girlfriend's house has a view of the West Side Highway and West End Avenue on the lower east side, 62nd Street. My girlfriend turned on the News Channel 1 and she woke me up and told me that an airplane just crashed into the World Trade Center. So when I woke up, I looked out the window and I could see what looked like hundreds of fire, police and different types of emergency vehicles heading south. It looked like there was no other traffic on the highway or on West End Avenue going south. There was a lot of commotion on the street and this is far north of the actual event.

So I immediately put on the same clothes I worked on the double and I ran downstairs and I got on my motorcycle and I went in my personal vehicle and I rode down to near Warren Street where there's a College of Insurance and that's where I parked my bike, in the middle of the block between West and Warren going -- I don't know the name of the street that's eastbound.

Q. That's Greenwich.

A. Greenwich, between Greenwich and West, and I started walking south on West when a cloud of smoke started to come in my direction. I believe the first building collapsed probably by the time I was parking my bike on Warren. As I started to go west -- I mean south on West, I started encountering a lot of people running in my direction. Some of the people I recognized as fire and police and mostly civilians. I noticed that the smoke started to settle and it was basically a stream of dust, and I remember grabbing one EMS person and stopping her from running because she seemed kind of dazed and lost and I noticed there were vehicles in the cloud and I held her and I said, hey, it's already collapsed, you don't have to run anymore, and she was like frantic, like don't go over there. She was terrified. So there was an ambulance and a crew that was covered in dust and I just led her to them and they proceeded to deal with her, I guess. I told them to do anything just to keep her occupied, but I didn't want her to run any direction.

As the cloud started to settle, I went south, and there was like an overpass, a pedestrian walk, close to a building that was on fire. Apparently from the time I left my house to the time I got down there and parked my bike, a second aircraft had crashed and the first building had collapsed. There were people everywhere. It was total chaos. There was equipment all over the place. Basically, there were units coming in from a lot of different directions, private and EMS, and what I was trying to do, I met up with -- I somehow found an EMT by the name of -- now I can't remember, from Jacobi, Battalion 20, Fuentes I believe his name was or Flores. I can't remember.

Anyway, between me and this EMT and a couple of vehicles, we tried to set up like a staging on West up against the sidewalk. Eventually, because of the dust, we had to move north about two blocks, and before we knew it I had about seven units and about twelve people. There were mismatch units, civilian, FDNY units. The communications was impossible. There was a lot of radio chatter and poor reception. So basically I had these units that we were already treating people. We didn't even get a chance to make ACRs. We must have treated about 30 people with respiratory problems and eye irritation. We tried to have them standing into the wind so that the wind could give them some fresh air.

A few minutes after, then the next building came down. I didn't expect it to come down. It was a total shock. It was a very terrifying feeling. There were people crying, people were dazed. I didn't run when the second building fell because there were still too many people, and I didn't have any of the people move the vehicles because I was afraid they might run people over. So it's kind of stand fast, and the smoke and the dust came by like a wave, and then we started trying to regroup again. We stayed there for a couple of hours, we treated a few people, then we wound up moving north into the gym of the -- I think it was the medical college or Bronx -- Borough of Manhattan Community College, the gym on the second floor, and we started treating patients, we put out the mats, we started trying to dust people off before they came into the building, and we were treating quite a few people there. I noticed there were a few Bronx units from Lincoln. I remember Mr. Perez. I remember seeing Burgos covered in ash. They assisted me for a few minutes. Then there was a call to evacuate the school gym because somebody said there may have been a gas leak. By then we were already set up with school security staff. We set up hoses to hose people down just before we had to evacuate the building and we moved about another block north. Most of the vehicles, including the MERV, I remember, were south of Vesey or near Vesey.

During this chaos, there was a water truck, a Poland Springs water truck that was down there, and me and a couple people managed to go down there and take about ten bottles of water and we brought it to where we were at the staging we set up north of Warren, closer to the college gym, and we were irrigating people's eyes. Most of the people just wanted to leave. A couple of units transported a few patients.

We stayed there for a couple of hours, just gathering every unit that passed by me, I stopped them to see if they had a purpose or where they were going. Most of them didn't know where they were going. They were just coming in from all over the place. I held them for a while, monitored the radio, and they would ask for a unit. Apparently there was another staging southeast of me. I'm not exactly too sure. I think it was on Church. They were asking for units and I sent a few units in that direction. Once I saw that the units were not being utilized where I was, I sent them to the pier on, I believe it was 23rd Street Pier.

Q. The Chelsea Piers?

A. The Chelsea Piers seemed to be like an assembly area. So I sent quite a few units over there because they were not being utilized. But the period of time that we were at West Street near the college we had a treatment center and there was also a staging.

After those units were sent north to the Chelsea Piers, I went south, where the command post was. Apparently I stayed there for a few hours assisting any way that I can. I believe there was a school, a public school they were using as maybe a command post, and there were a few units there and I was directed to control those units and supervise them for a little while. It seemed like the sun was already starting to go down. I was supposed to go back to work at 1300 hours on the 11th for my Tour 3, which I never made. I wound up staying down in Manhattan for the rest of the tour until there were quite a few resources. I remember seeing a few chiefs.

Anyway, then from there I went home and that was basically my tour. My evening tour I stayed down there instead of my battalion.

Q. You parked your bike here on Warren, right, between West and Greenwich?

A. Well, I can't see the name of the street on the map.

Q. This is Greenwich.

A. Yes.

Q. And you said you had started coming down south on West?

A. On West.

Q. And you had said that you encountered the female EMT that was out of it --

A. Without a partner or a vehicle.

Q. -- and another ambulance crew that you put her over with them?

A. Right.

Q. Do you remember where that was?

A. Roughly, I think it was near Barclay.

Q. Down around Barclay?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you recognize the crew at all?

A. I remember the female. I don't know her name, but I think she was from -- actually, I think she used to work in Jacobi. I think she works out of Bellevue now.

Q. That was an EMS crew member?

A. An EMS person.

Q. You continued south, roughly this first covered bridge?

A. Right where the bridge was.

Q. Between 3 and 6 Trade Center?

A. It looks like it's on the northbound side of West by 6 World Trade Center.

Q. And that's where you tried to form up a staging area?

A. Well, that's where I was encountering a few more people, but the scene wasn't safe. There was still a lot of smoke and dust and I believe these adjacent buildings were on fire and there was still a lot of emergency vehicles coming in these areas and they were sort of blocked in. So we went up towards Barclay.

Q. So you were basically taking units that were already in this area --

A. They were coming from every direction.

Q. -- and brought them back towards Barclay.

Do you remember seeing any other EMS officers down there that you recognized?

A. Not initially. After the second building collapsed, a while after, and before -- I'm not sure if it was -- was that 7 that collapsed, the third building?

Q. I think so. That came down late. Well, not late, but like 5:00 o'clock in the evening the same day.

A. Right. Well, I remember when that one came down, I was at the command post that was I guess between Vesey and Barclay and there were quite a few supervisors and chiefs and a lot of fire suppression personnel. But most of my activities were a little bit north of that command post because we had to move several times.

Q. Anything else you'd like to add?

A. No.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. Thank you. The time is now 1323 and the interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT NAOMI NACIONAL

Interview Date: January 23, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is January 23rd, 2002. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department's World Trade Center Task Force. I'm currently at EMS Battalion 14 in the Bronx, conducting an interview with --

EMT NACIONAL: Naomi Nacional, EMT 5228 shield.

MR. RADENBERG: Naomi is currently assigned to EMS Battalion 14. This interview start time will be 1417 hours, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Naomi.

A. I was outside Bronx Lebanon Hospital on the concourse when I heard on the radio station first before the announcement went over the radio saying that a plane crashed into the twin towers. At first I thought it was a joke because the radio station does a lot of things like that in the morning. My partner was like, "Oh, my God, listen to this, what happened."

Before we knew it, we heard the announcement over the radio. In a few minutes they assigned us, which is very strange, I thought, because we were all the way in the Bronx, which is just kind of weird. We didn't hear them calling anyone else.

They called our unit, 14 Charlie, and we started heading down there. I was working with Julio Marrero. We took Second Avenue all the way down. I remember driving towards there and I remember seeing all the smoke. As we got closer, I just see the towers, and it looked kind of scary and stuff.

We actually got a call that was on a corner, not actually responding to the MCI. It was for a cardiac on the corner. I'm pretty sure it was something along the lines of Liberty and Trinity, that section over there. But we had a call.

I remember when we got there there was just so much chaos and commotion. There was no way we can find a person with a cardiac condition on the corner. It was just impossible. So we tried to explain this to the dispatcher. Them not knowing what was going on, they were just telling us, well, then come back to the Bronx.

We saw a lieutenant on the scene, and we pulled up to, I would say Vesey and West. It was not in front of the towers on the left side but somewhere adjacent to where you could look and you saw them right on top of you.

We pulled up on the scene, and there were all kinds of people, fire trucks and everything. We saw the building on fire right above us. I stood in the bus, and the lieutenant on the scene was informing us where to go.

My partner got out of the vehicle and was speaking to the lieutenant, and I was trying to speak to the dispatcher, because she was telling us to come back to the Bronx. I was telling her that the lieutenant on the scene was telling us to come out and help out.

All of a sudden I heard this noise that was just horrible. I would say it sounded like a gate rattling or something like that. I look over at the people, and I go to look up. But I was sitting inside the ambulance, so not realizing that there's no way I could see. I saw nothing, but I heard it. Then I looked back, and I saw that almost everyone was gone. It was just like in a second I looked and no one was there.

So I got out, and I started running, because everyone started running. That was when the second tower collapsed. It was right at the beginning of the second towers collapse.

We were running, and I got completely separated from my partner. I didn't really know where to run. All of a sudden it was like a beige snowstorm. All these people were running and asking for help. I didn't know what to do. I didn't have any equipment. I didn't have a helmet. I had nothing. I remember that the stuff was burning my skin because I had short sleeves on because it was still warm then.

I leaned up against the wall and I covered my head, and all the dust and debris engulfed everybody. This one guy, he was a big guy. He was about your size. He jumped on me for me to help him. I didn't know what to do. I think he broke his leg or something because his leg looked all weird.

There was no way I could help him, because I'm not that big in comparison to him. For him to jump on me for me to try to try to carry him away from there was just not happening.

I remember I fell to the ground because he jumped on me. I leaned against -- I felt for the wall, and I leaned against it. I couldn't see anything. I don't know why -- I don't know if it was psychological or anything, but I couldn't hear anything. I don't think that I was deaf, but I think I blocked out whatever it was and I couldn't hear anything. I was just trying -- I put my face in my shirt to try to breathe. It was too late. It was all covered up.

Eventually it seemed like a long time, but I don't think it really was. I started realizing what was going on. It was just weird. I got up, and I was walking around and looking for anyone from -- any PD, any fire, fire guys, and I couldn't find anybody. I just found all regular civilians that were running to me.

It was to the point that I was so nervous because I couldn't help them. I wanted to either take the shirt off or doing something, because they were just asking me what to do and I had no clue.

I forgot really what happened. I know

I was in a bank. Somehow I was in a bank. I found my partner there. I walked right up to him, and I tapped him on the shoulder and he was like, "Oh, my God, are you okay? What happened?" I was like, "I don't know."

Then we were getting people into the bank. This woman was having an asthma attack, and we couldn't do nothing because we had no equipment. So I was basically just watching her really suffer.

Then after that I don't know what happened. It was like a lot of gaps and whatever.

I remember when the second tower came down, stuff kind of fell around me. I leaned against a wall, and there was stuff out here, to the right and to the left and in front of me. I stood in there for a while. When I came out, it was like -- I must have been really close to the towers. You didn't realize when you were running or when you were walking if you were going in the direction of the towers or away from it, because all you saw was -- it was a fog.

What I'm thinking, I'm pretty sure I ran towards the towers instead of away from it, because I saw -- when that one collapsed, I saw less amount of people and more of the people I saw were people that were on the run, not really responding, or stuff like that.

I got out of wherever I was in, and I saw -- when all the debris was flying through the streets, I saw this one guy and he was helping a whole bunch of people. He was in a CVS. I think that was two or three blocks away. I had run a distance. He was helping all these people.

[redacted]

I thought it was kind of funny because I saw these firemen and cops running in there, and he was saving them. Some guy from the street that we underestimate, and here he is now like almost a hero, a regular guy.

I was in the CVS. There was a whole bunch of cops in there and firemen in there. Eventually we got out of there. Somehow I was in a gym. I remember being in a gym where there were actual weights and stuff and people.

I found this one kid that I knew from -- he was in Battalion 46. His name is Chris Londel. He is now I think in a photography unit in Metrotech from when I last heard of him. He helped me out a lot. He gave me his helmet. He looked after me. I never really knew him.

I just saw him once, and we just recognized each other. It was like this unspoken thing that we just wanted to stay near each other, because we knew that we were or whatever.

We went around trying to help out people. We took -- it was weird, stuff like bananas and tried giving them to people so they wouldn't get nervous. I don't know what we were thinking. It was kind of strange. I was sticking with him.

I found this other guy. His name is Charles. I don't remember what his last name is. Or maybe that's his last name. I just remember Charles. He's from Battalion 16. I saw this other guy, Carlton Smith. He's from 46 or 50 or something like.

It was just a crazy thing. I saw all the firemen, and they were all having this look on their face that they didn't even have to think about it. They just had to do whatever they thought was right and they didn't even know if it was right, just like complete look of doubt and belief at the same time.

As far as the towers, I don't really remember looking at them after that because you couldn't see anything. I just remember when I actually did turn around it was kind of stupid to me. I kept thinking to myself I always see in horror movies the girl will be running and turn around. Why does she turn around? What is she looking at? Keep running. I turned around and looked, and I thought why did I do that?

That's basically what I remember. Eventually I kept walking towards the highway, and I found a lieutenant. Supposedly she said that I was real out of it. It was just basically I was real tired. I wasn't hysterical or anything. I never really cried from the whole thing. Fortunately I didn't lose any immediate family members and so forth.

Q. When they gave you the job for Liberty and Trinity, the cardiac, when you were coming -- when you were heading downtown, did you reach Liberty and Trinity?

A. Yeah, we reached it at some point, and then we -- I don't know if we turned around, because all the streets were completely like -- you couldn't even tell. There was just private ambulances, all kinds of fire trucks.

Q. Jammed up?

A. Yeah. I remember being at the point and saying there's no way we can find anybody. There was just mobs and mobs and mobs of people. There was no way we were going to get out and look for somebody. It was obvious we had to either find a lieutenant and ask them what we should do or whatever.

I remember being there. My partner was driving, so I don't know if he went down and turned around up Trinity and then made a left on Vesey, because I know that we weren't on the left side; I'm pretty sure that we weren't. I think that's what happened.

Q. Was it at Liberty and Trinity that you found the lieutenant?

A. No, it was somewhere around Vesey that we found the lieutenant.

Q. Do you know who that was?

A. No.

Q. Do you remember any other EMS units that were with you at this spot there?

A. Actually we didn't see many EMS units at all in the beginning. When I saw them was all after the buildings had collapsed and they came in. The beginning when we pulled up, I think I saw one. I don't remember what bus it is. From what I heard, I think only two ambulances were really destroyed, and I think one of them was the one I was in.

Q. The unit you went down there?

A. Yeah. It was bus 311. I don't remember any other buses that were there. I remember seeing one command car and one other ambulance.

Q. So you were on roughly Vesey and West. West Side Highway or -- this is actually West Broadway.

A. I'm pretty sure it was West Broadway.

Q. West Broadway?

A. Yeah, because I don't remember seeing the highway. You know what I mean?

Q. Right, right.

A. I just remember seeing more and more buildings.

Q. So you were over here at Vesey and West Broadway when the first building collapsed?

A. I think so. I'm pretty sure.

Q. Do you remember roughly where you were when the second one collapsed?

A. I don't think I was that far.

Q. You were still in the area?

A. Yeah. I think I was only maybe not that far at all, like maybe Church and Vesey, because I had run, run, run, and then I went back to look for my partner or whatever I was doing with people and stuff. I think I ran the other way.

Q. Kind of back towards it?

A. I think so, yeah.

Q. Anything else you'd like to add?

A. I don't know what else to say. I'm just really sorrowful for all the loss, and I'm sorry for all the firemen. I just remember like their faces and stuff. The reason why I have this job is because I wanted to be a fireman since I was a kid. It was just strange. I don't know. As far as the World Trade Center and stuff like that, I don't really know.

Q. That's okay. No problem?

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC KAREN LAMANNA

Interview Date: January 23, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is January 23rd, 2002. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department World Trade Center Task Force. The time is now 1448 hours. I am currently at EMS Battalion 14 conducting an interview with --

PARAMEDIC LAMANNA: Karen Lamanna, paramedic out of Battalion 14.

MR. RADENBERG: And your shield number, please?

PARAMEDIC LAMANNA: 1620.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is regarding the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Karen, if you would give us when you were assigned to the job.

A. In actuality I wasn't supposed to be working then. I was on overtime. I normally work 3 to 11. The day before I had signed up -- I had signed up for overtime originally on tour 1 the day of the 11th or the day of the 12th. But an opening came up for tour 2 in the morning, so I decided I'd take that. I like working tour 2. Anyway, I wasn't supposed to be here. I would have been home.

Anyway, I came in. I got here about 7:00 in the morning. I was told at that time I was supposed to be riding a paramedic unit, but one of the paramedics didn't make it in. So they decided they were going to put me on a BLS unit, an EMT bus, 14 Mary in lieu of 14 Young, which was my normal unit, which is what I would have been normally working.

So I worked with Freddie Burgos and myself. We went into service, checked our vehicle. We went around the corner for a quick cup of coffee. We had just finished that, literally, and we were heading to our area. We got called on the radio, "14 Mary, switch over to citywide. We'll be sending you a standby." Okay. That was nondescript as much as possible.

The job came over. It came over as a possible explosion -- I think it was a possible explosion. Anyway, MCI at the Empire State Building. That's how we got the job originally. So we immediately switched over to citywide, told them we were 63, which is en route for the job, and off we went, flying like crazy to get there because we knew that it was going to be something major it was going to be the Empire State Building.

While en route, before going over the Third Avenue Bridge, I was listening to the mate chitchat going on over the radio, the 12th and whatever else was being given. I looked at my partner and I said to him, "You know, this doesn't sound like the Empire State Building; this sounds more like the World Trade Center." Sure enough, 30 seconds later when the job comes over it's the World Trade Center.

At that point they thought possibly a small plane had hit the World Trade Center. They didn't know what tower at that point, or at least we didn't know what tower at that point where we were. So we went, oh, boy, that's going to be something major.

So anyway, we continued on. We headed down the FDR Drive. About halfway down the FDR Drive -- the traffic was getting very heavy. Everything was being shut down. About halfway down, all of a sudden we heard screaming over the radio, "Oh, my God, oh, my God, there's another explosion, there's another plane." My partner and I looked at each other and went, "Oh, my God, we're in trouble now."

We continued down the FDR, and we got to the point where about a half a mile before the Brooklyn Bridge exit we were stuck in major traffic trying to get through. We were able finally to see the towers. All we saw was a lot of thick smoke, some flames.

We looked at each other and said this can't be happening. We felt like it was in a dream, that it was totally surreal. I'm like, okay, time to wake up now. Time to wake up. Needless to say, we weren't dreaming; we were awake.

Trying to fight our way through the traffic, with the help of the Police Department and all, we managed to get off the exit there for the Brooklyn Bridge, but we went down through the side streets.

I said to my partner, "I'm familiar with Manhattan somewhat, but when you get down onto the little streets like in the Wall Street area, it's like a maze." He said, "No, I pretty much have an idea where going," because we were looking for the staging area, which at that point one of the staging areas was listed as Liberty and West, if I'm not mistaken. So that's where we were going to go.

We zigzagged along and went through all kinds of streets. Along the way a couple times we got flagged down, the people that were injured and had already made it away from the trade towers. But at that point there were so many private ambulances and volunteers and everything else that we decided, look, they can handle whatever comes their way right now. We need to get to the staging area. We're always told to go to the staging area. So there we went.

So we futzed around. We got lost a little bit here and there. Finally we saw an AMR ambulance, and he was zipping along. It looked like he knew exactly where he was going. We said let's follow him, and we did. He did know where he was going. We ended up coming out onto West Street. I'm not exactly sure where we came out originally, probably around Rector or thereabouts, because I know it stops. West Street eventually stops and becomes a park somewhere.

So we came in right after -- like if you went from that direction, it would be from the park. Further down would be this street we came out on heading towards the World Trade Center on West Street. I think it was around Rector, but I'm not exactly sure.

We came out there, made a right-hand turn towards the World Trade Center. We went down past the first Marriott, coming from that direction.

Q. Roughly heading north now? Heading back uptown?

A. Right, yes, I was heading towards the World Trade Center. So there's a Marriott, then another building, something called like 72 Post or something like that. Then there was a little street, and then there was a steak house, Morton's steak house. Then there was another building, and right next to that building was I think Liberty, because the first overpass is there. Then on the other side, directly on the other side of that, is the second Marriott that went down along with the World Trade Center.

Q. Yeah.

A. So when we first got there and pulled into the area, we were just on the other side of that walkway, that first walkway. So we were sitting pretty much in front of the Marriott, the second Marriott, the one that went down with the World Trade Center.

Q. Okay.

A. It was total chaos. When we first pulled up, there was dust and things burning all over the place already. There was just totally a lot of debris. Everybody was running in different directions trying to get equipment and everything else.

I don't remember seeing a lot of civilians at that point. I just remember zoning in on all the emergency personnel. I know that when we first drove up we were running over body parts. That much I remember.

But we decided at that point we needed to find a place to park, somewhat safe and out of the way and in case we needed to get out of there quickly. We needed to get our equipment and get going towards the major scene.

So I backed up, and I ended up on this little -- it isn't there anymore now. It was like a little island per se. It was made out of cement, and there was some grass on it and things like that, which was right behind -- coming back now, right behind the walkway, the above, overhead walkway.

Q. Right.

A. First we parked there. There were a lot of other ambulances and fire trucks and everything around there. I don't know if you want to call it woman's intuition. I don't know what you want to call it. But I said to my partner, I said, "You know, maybe we should find someplace else to park. Maybe we'll wind up getting stuck in here. We need to maybe pull out a little bit further in case we need to get out of here in a hurry."

So we looked around real quick and we saw a spot that was open at the corner right in front of Morton's steak house right in front of that little street. I don't remember the name of the little street that was right there in front of Morton's.

He's like, okay, I'll back you up into the spot. So he jumps out of the vehicle. We backed up into the spot. I no sooner throw the vehicle into park, I'm just throwing it into park, and the noise started of the first tower coming down.

It was the most horrendous noise I ever heard in my life, and it's even hard for me to explain now what it sounds like. I know I've heard people describe it as thunderous. I'm sure it was thunderous. It was just many different things.

So I started screaming at Freddie, "Get in the bus." I didn't know what was going on, but get in the bus. "Get in the bus! Get in the bus! Get in the bus!" He jumps in. We start to roll up our windows. Before we know it, it's completely black.

It's not like any darkness I've ever seen as far as at nighttime or anything. You couldn't see anything. There was no daylight. You couldn't see anything out of the windows at all. All we could hear is everything falling on top of the ambulance, the hood and on top.

I started to panic a little. I'm like, "Oh, my God, what are we going to do? Let's get out of here." Freddie is like this and that, "You just stay calm. Calm yourself down. We'll be all right. Take a few breaths." I started to calm down, somewhat, as much as I could, but got my head together a little bit.

I said, "You know what? I'm going to put it in reverse. I'm going to see how far we can get out of here," because I didn't like the way everything was piling up at the ambulance. I figured any second something was going to come flying through the windshield.

So I did. I put it in reverse. But I really went slow. All I had to really do was lift my foot off in order to move a little bit, because I didn't want to take a chance that somebody even in the darkness was running behind us. Then I really would have felt bad.

So we went as far back as we could, and then we weren't going anywhere else. So obviously I had hit something. So I put it into park, and then we just sat there and held each other's hands and just waited it out.

The noise finally stopped. It took a little bit, but it started to become daylight. I just remember saying, "Oh, my God, look at this. This is awful." I took a split second to look over to where we had just been parked, and if we hadn't moved the ambulance we probably would have been dead, because there was huge, huge beams and girders and everything else sitting right where we were. I could see there was an ambulance in front of us, somewhere in front of us, that was on fire a little bit ahead. It was just like everything was crushed and mangled and covered with that big white, gray dust.

We decided let's get out, let's get our helmets on. We hadn't even gotten that far yet. Let's get our helmets on, let's get our equipment, and let's get out of here and get to safety and see what we can find as far as patients along the way or whatever.

We no sooner jump out of the ambulance when one of the EMTs that I know from the Bronx drops right in front of me. I'm like, "Oh, my God, Eddie." He was in extreme pain and everything. I'm like, what happened? He's like -- he doesn't know. He's totally in shock and out of it. He's screaming, "My arm and my back."

At that point I just scooped him up. We ran around to the other side of the ambulance. We sat him on the side of the ambulance for now until we could figure out and get our heads together and get helmets on and everything. He's complaining of his arm and his back. I looked at his arm, and I could see it was obviously broken.

In the meantime as we were doing all this, one of the EMTs from the AMR bus that we followed in came running over. I don't know who it is or was. He came running over and said, "Oh, my God, oh, my God, I can't find my partner. Have you seen my partner?" I'm like, "No. Who is your partner, number one. Number two, we're not even thinking that far yet."

I have one of us in front of me, and we're trying to get our equipment together. Something just happened. We're not exactly sure what happened. We're not seeing it like the people saw it on TV. We just knew there was a noise -- I mean, we could surmise approximately, but we didn't really know, because we were so close that we still had a lot of buildings in front of us.

So he's freaking out. He's running all over the place. Then another medic from up here in the Bronx, Joe Jefferson, I ran into him. He had been separated from his partner. So he had very little equipment on him. So we took his equipment, what he had.

Mind you, I didn't go out as a medic that day. All I had was a monitor and a tube kit. We took the monitor and the tube kit and what little equipment he had, and I think we had the trauma bag on us too. Yeah, we had the trauma bag. But nothing as far as drug bags or anything like that or anything with syringes. What did we do with the trauma bag? You know what, I don't remember if we had the trauma bag or not.

Anyway, we just threw everything on the stretcher, and we put Eddie in the stair chair. While we were doing this, another I think he was an EMT from Hazollah, a volunteer, came running over. He had been separated from his crew. We were like a rag tag bunch.

He said, "You know what, I'm going to go over to that building," pointing to I think it was 72 Post or whatever it was called, right next to the Marriott, "I'm going to see if it's safe in there."

By the time I backed up and everything, we were sitting in front of the Marriott pretty much, so it would have been the next building over. So he went running in, and he came back and said it looks safe, as safe as it can be. Who knows. We don't know what's going to happen now, this, that and the other.

So we just grabbed everything we could, grabbed Eddie and wheeled him over. We went into this building and took a really good look at him. It was like there were other people there, civilians and stuff from different places that had run into there, I guess, during the first collapse.

So we took a look at him, and he was really saying, "I'm really having a hard time breathing. I'm really having a hard time breathing." By this time we were able to do a somewhat more complete assessment on him.

We splinted his arm, and we took a look at his back. He had a huge hole in his back on the right side. We made an occlusive dressing and put that on. He kept saying as time went on, "I'm really having a hard time breathing on the right side."

So Joe and I looked at each other and went, oh, God, this guy is going into pneumothorax and we don't have the equipment here to be able to do anything about this. I'm thinking, Jesus, he's going to die right in front of us and there's nothing much we can do. There's so much we can do when we don't have all --

So at that particular point we had made the decision, all of us, that we were going to move farther up towards the park, towards Battery Park, for two reasons. Number one, we weren't sure if we were completely safe where we were. Two, we had to find an ambulance or something to transport Eddie out of there.

So I took the stretcher full of equipment. Joe took the stair chair with Eddie Martinez. My partner -- along the way we seemed to manage to find this big barrel, a tub, whatever, full of water. We said we're going to need that, not only for drinking but to irrigate eyes and whatever else.

So he's dragging that. I'm taking the stretcher full of equipment. Joe has the stair chair with Eddie, and off we go. Joe and Eddie were in the front, I was in the middle, and Freddie was in the back. We were all scattered. We were all about a quarter or half a block apart, but they're small blocks down there.

Q. Right.

A. So at one point I left the equipment because I wanted to go back and see how far back Freddie was to help move him along. In case he was having problems, I could deal with that and then we could switch off, so on and so forth.

So I went back and couldn't find him at first. I didn't know where he was. I'm like, all right, he'll catch up, type of thing. I didn't want to leave the equipment too long because the monitor was there. I don't know, whatever. I'm thinking more about the equipment at that particular moment. So off I went back to the equipment.

I no sooner get back to the equipment and I go no more than five feet, and the noise started again, the second one coming down. Of course I didn't know it at the time, but here it was again.

At that split second -- right after that I look up. Now the stair chair is empty, and Joe and Eddie are gone. I don't know where they went to. In that second they were gone. At that point I look around to see if I can see Freddie again, and all I see is this big mountain of debris and smoke and everything coming towards me. I'm like, screw the equipment, I'm running, and off I go as fast and far away as my legs would take me.

I'm looking for someplace to duck in. I couldn't find anyplace to duck in. There was nothing really there. This stuff is really right next to me. It was really right behind me at this point. I had to make a decision to do something, anything.

All of a sudden out of the corner of my eye I saw a black Jeep with its headlights and brake lights on. I went over really quick, and it's under one of those buildings that cut through from one street to another. So it was only like a little underpass.

Q. Right.

A. I couldn't get in the car, so I just stayed next to it. At that point it was all over me. Everything was on me. I couldn't see, I couldn't hear, I couldn't breathe. This stuff was so thick that I was breathing in I thought, oh, God, I'm going to die. I said, I'm going to die here alone, how nice. That's what was running through my head.

It felt like forever, and every once in a while I would squeak out "Help," just so I could hear another human voice. I'm not hurt per se, but I didn't want to feel like I was totally alone. Of course no one answered me because they couldn't hear me, because I couldn't hear anything and I couldn't see anything.

I don't even know how much time went by. It took a while. It finally started to dissipate just a bit, and I screamed out "Help" a couple more times, and I finally got an answer. They screamed out, "Where are you?" I'm like, "I don't know. Over here." I didn't know where I was. "Over here." He said, "Follow my voice." I'm like, okay.

I'm searching with my eyes again so I don't bump into anything. It's still pretty dark. I finally bump into him, and he's a firefighter from FDNY. I couldn't tell you who he was, to this day. I wouldn't know him if I tripped over him now. He was there.

Q. Right.

A. He said, "Okay. Follow me," because by that time now it's daylight again. It had dissipated. We just started walking out of there together. It was just a total mess. I mean, the debris -- the level of dust and debris was inches thick like a snowstorm, like three, four, five, six inches deep, whatever it was. Just the debris and fire and everything all over the place and people screaming and yelling and running.

I was having a hard time breathing. I was having a hard time seeing because everything was in my eyes and in my throat and in my mouth and everything.

We walked a little bit towards the park, and we came across this truck that said FDNY command center. So we figured it was a good enough place to check in to. By this time the radio's going crazy. We couldn't get a word in edge wise, and they couldn't hear me. I tried to go over the air to tell them I lost my partner and whatever.

Not that anybody was really interested, only because they kept saying get off the air everybody, not to me but to everybody, because they wanted to make sure they got the important stuff through.

So we went to the command center and knocked on the door. A firefighter let us in. The first thing I said to them was "Are we safe in here?" He shrugged his shoulders and "I don't know." I said, "Well, that makes me feel so much better."

He was like, "Where are you from?" I said, "I'm from the Bronx. I work out of Battalion 14. I lost my partner, I lost my vehicle, and what do I do now?" He was like, "Hang out here for now until we figure something out." I kept saying to him, "Well, are we safe in here?" I'm thinking, Jesus, I went through this twice. I can't go through this anymore. He's like, "I don't know." He was honest. He didn't know. I'm like, oh, all right, it still doesn't make me feel any better.

So then about a couple minutes later he said to me, "Well, I hear they're setting up a triage area." I'm like, "Okay, where?" He said, "Over at the Staten Island ferry terminal." Okay, where is that from here? I don't know that. I don't know Manhattan very well. He said, "Up a couple blocks or so into the park, in that area, Battery Park." I'm like, "Okay, just point to me sort of where, and I'll go. I can't stay here."

So he sort of gave me an idea. I said, "Well, thank you very much, and I'll find my way," because I just couldn't stay there. I didn't know what was going to happen, if something else was going to happen. Plus I needed to go where I knew EMS would be as far as being able to help someone else too and so on and so forth.

Off I went. I got about a block and an ambulance went by. I'm like banging, "Wait, wait, wait, wait for me, wait for me." I'm screaming, like a stupid thing. They finally stopped, and I jumped in the back. There's a doctor and a couple of EMTs. They were off to find a baby with asthma. Where they're going to find this in the midst of all of this, I don't know. I'm like, all right, whatever.

So we ended up going another block or so as far as distance-wise, and we ended up near -- the vehicle stopped, the door opened, and there was Jerry, Jerry -- he's one of the division ALS coordinators -- Bacchus, Jerry Bacchus.

So the door opens, and Jerry Bacchus is standing there. I'm like, "Oh, my God, Jerry, thank God. Thank you. A face I know." It made me feel a little bit better to see somebody that I actually knew, because by this time of course I had been separated from Freddie and all the people I had been earlier. I didn't know where anybody was.

He jumped in and started pulling things out and whatever. I was having a lot of trouble breathing, so he put me on a nebulizer treatment, because my pump just wasn't doing a thing. I have a little bit of asthma, but it only acts up when I get sick. So I did that.

In the meantime Chief -- a chief was there too. He used to work out of OMA. Now he's over at downtown -- at Gouveneer, Battalion 4.

Q. Hirth?

A. Huh?

Q. Hirth?

A. No, not Hirth. He's an older gentleman. He's at OMA. He's a newer -- he just made chief like right before that. He was a captain.

Q. Oh, Steffens?

A. Yes, Chief Steffens. That's it. Thank you. Chief Steffens.

He was there too. I had only known him from just OMA because I went there once. I saw him. He was trying to coordinate things. There were just a few of us here and there. There weren't a lot of us at all. There was only ten of us, maybe, give or take; a couple of medics, and I think the rest were pretty much BLS.

At that point we started getting a lot of people coming towards us as far as having difficulty breathing and stuff in the eyes and everything, so we started treating for that. Then it was decided we would start putting people on boats and get them out of there.

So we were doing that. We were putting whatever we could on boats and just sending them wherever they were going: Staten Island, Jersey City, Jersey, wherever, just to get them out of there, because we didn't know what was going to happen even next.

While we were doing that I remember hearing a plane flying overhead. I'm thinking, oh, my God, not again, not again. I looked up, we all looked up, and there were F-16s. I was like, oh, my God. We were in trouble then. Okay, that's a first, F-16s flying over New York.

Anyway, we eventually got most of them off onto boats, that came to us, anyway. A lot of firefighters wanted to be treated, and they went right back to the scene. There was just no way of keeping them out.

I also ended up running into Chief Brown, Bobby Brown. He and the person he was with were just walking aimlessly. I don't know where -- I think they might have been headed for the terminal eventually, but maybe not. Who knows. They were like in shock like the rest of us.

So I explained to him that I was with Chief Steffens over there in this port. There was a big port. I just remember the big port, a big circular port.

So we ended up spending a few hours there. Probably about 1:30, 2:00 in the afternoon some of these cell phones started coming back up again. People were able to get out a couple of calls. So I called my girlfriend and let them -- to let her know that -- she was hysterical. She knew I was down there. She could feel I was down there.

Q. Woman's intuition.

A. So I just told her -- I told her I was okay, I would get back in touch when I could, and I gave her a few numbers to call to call people, because I didn't want to tie up the lines. That must have been around 2:00 in the afternoon.

Then about an hour later we finally -- all of us moved over because people started -- there wasn't anybody else really coming to us in that particular area anymore. So at that point we picked up and we moved everything over to the ferry terminal, and we spent the rest of the day there.

We didn't have too many people coming. We expected a lot of people. But as you know, there weren't that many people coming out, some rescue workers who had minor injuries, lacerations and things like that. Throughout the day, I had just some difficulty breathing and all. I had to go back on the neb a little bit.

Most of the time it was just sitting there in a trance like almost, just like shock, trying to take this in but not really understanding. We heard little bits and pieces on the radio that was in the ambulance. We found out that the Pentagon had been hit and supposedly they were looking for four other planes or something. There was a whole big thing that they were going through. So we only knew bits and pieces.

Then around 4:15 or so, 4:30-ish? I don't know. Something like that in the afternoon is when seven went down. We couldn't see the building itself go down, but we saw all the debris and everything kicked up and the smoke kick up again. I went to someone and said what happened? They told me they heard on the radio that seven had just gone down.

So we were there just all day. I didn't get out of there until close to midnight. I didn't know anything about Freddie. For the most part I had been asking people all day. No one had seen or heard from him. Finally I ran into Chief Villani at 4:00 in the afternoon, and I was explaining to him that I was upset, I didn't know how my partner was that I came down with that day and everything.

"Who's your partner?" I told him who he is. "Oh, I saw him." I'm like, "Did you see him before or after the second collapse?" He said, "After the second collapse." I said, okay, that means he's okay. He was doing the same, he didn't know about me type of thing.

So around midnight -- well, before that they were sending people out little by little. About midnight my turn came up. The problem was I had no vehicle. I had no way of getting back up to the Bronx. So what happened was I got transported to Battalion 4. From there I managed to hitch a ride to Bellevue. From there I hitched a ride to Metropolitan. From there I hitched a ride to Harlem, and from Harlem to Lincoln. I mean, the crews were really nice about it. They went a little bit out of their way, but it was extraordinary circumstances.

Q. Right.

A. So I didn't get back to the station until close to 12:30, quarter to one. I was just covered from head to toe and everything. I was afraid to touch my hair that it would fall apart, because it was so brittle. I ended up -- I had to take off all my clothes and stuff before I went home. I ended up just putting like a hospital thing on. I was like, whatever. I finally got all that done, and I headed on out of there after 1:00.

By that time I had already spoke with Lieutenant DeSantis. He upset me a little bit during the day because at one point when I finally got -- those were the two phones calls I made. I made one to my girlfriend Lisa and I made one to him at 2:00 in the afternoon.

He gets on the phone and he's like, "Where are you?" I'm like, "I don't know exactly. I think I'm somewhere in Battery Park." I said, "I can't find Freddie. I don't know what's going on. He said, "Well, this is what I want you to do. I want you to find your partner, find your bus, and bring them back up so I can put them out as a line unit."

I'm like, "What? Do you hear me? I don't know where Freddie is. I don't know if he's dead or alive. I don't think I have an ambulance left." I said, "There's no way," and whatever. So I was a little upset about that. He didn't even bother asking me if I was okay.

I spoke to him later in the day. He was apologetic. He's like, "I'm sorry, I hope you're okay." I said, "Have you heard from Freddie?" He's like, "No." "I'm just telling you right now, I'm letting you know I will not be in tomorrow. I only need one day. I'll be back. I just need one day. I need to get my head together and whatever and maybe do some -- CSID or something."

So the next day I went to CSID. I took the day off. Then I came back on Thursday the 13th. Of course they kept me for overtime, so I worked a double, so on and so forth. Then I went back that weekend, because I wanted to try to get some closure. I got a little bit, but how much you can get? I had to try to make peace with it a little bit. I ended up catching pneumonia, so I was out a little while with that.

It's just funny how your minds works and the things you think about or don't think about. I remember when I jumped out of the vehicle and found Eddie and brought him there but then the bus started to make a funny noise, because all this stuff got sucked into whatever systems.

So I went back to turn it off, and I made sure I turned the battery off. I locked up the doors. I remembered, oh, my God, my backpack, should I take it? I'm going to take it. I took my backpack. I threw it on my back. I had that on my back all day.

It was just weird how you go through certain motions. The vehicle, as far as I'm concerned, was all locked up in the front. There was a lot of damage to the hood and other places to the vehicle. That was done -- that was between the two collapses. I didn't know what had happened after the second collapse. As far as I knew, we didn't even have a vehicle. Although that thing has nine lives. It came back again. We're not in it anymore. That was enough of 448 for me.

Although I do have one souvenir of that day that I don't leave. You know how they say American Express you shouldn't leave home without it. I have the key to 448. Of course they've changed the locks since then. But this is what I have left of that day to remind me. At least during the first collapse this vehicle saved my life, as far as I'm concerned.

They never made a stink about it, so I walk around with it everywhere. I know it sounds a little silly but, I don't know, that's how I deal with it.

Q. Whatever works.

A. One last thing. I just feel bad for all the lives that were lost. I knew a couple of people that had just transferred over from EMS to FDNY. I didn't know anyone else per se except by reputation or whatever. It was a great loss, not only FDNY but PD but also, which were always forgotten, EMS we lost ten people, not all within FDNY, but voluntaries, different volunteers, privates, everybody. They're just as much as important as anybody else.

But my hearts go out to their families as well as all the civilians that were lost that day. How odd, I'm looking at a picture of the World Trade Center, I found it. Beautiful picture, though.

But yeah, my heart goes out to them. I thank God every day that I'm here. There's days I wonder why I'm here, why was I spared when others had so many -- I'm not married, don't have any children, but others did. So there are days

I wonder why me, why not somebody else. I guess it just wasn't my time, but sometimes I ask why.

Q. I have one question.

A. Sure.

Q. When you were heading down towards -- actually when you were heading down towards the battery, were you coming down the West Side Highway?

A. No. I was I think going east -- oh, I had come from -- no, I came from the east. So I came off the FDR.

Q. No, after the collapses.

A. Oh, after the collapses.

Q. With Jefferson and --

A. Right.

Q. -- Liberty.

A. Right. We started -- here's Liberty. So we started -- yeah, we were headed towards -- I don't know, is that considered the West Side Highway or is it still considered West Street? I think it's still considered West Street.

Q. Okay.

A. So we would have been walking down West Street towards I guess Battery Park. I guess that's what it is. I'm not a hundred percent sure still to this day, but I think that's what it is, Battery Park.

Q. Yeah.

A. So we were heading towards Battery Park down West Street.

Q. Did you ever catch up again with Jefferson?

A. Jefferson I didn't see until weeks had gone by. But I had heard that he had suffered minor injuries but that he was okay. Eddie Martinez, it turned out he didn't end up getting a pneumothorax, by some miracle, I don't know how.

He got transferred -- put on one of the boats, not with us but somebody else put him on one of the boats, and he ended up over in Jersey City. He had to get some pins and stuff in his arm, and they had to do surgery to remove a lot of shrapnel out of his back.

He finally started making inquiries. He went looking for me and Joe Jefferson, because he thought we were the ones that found him originally after -- as far as I understand, he got there just as the second plane hit. So originally his time line was a little confused.

Q. Right.

A. He didn't realize where he ended up afterwards, because he started farther over. As far as I know, he started over near Vesey, I think, up towards Vesey and Church. So he ended up way over from where we were.

I got his number. He left his number with my partner, my actual partner, Dale, and I called him up one day and we talked. We had a nice conversation. He called us his angels. We weren't. We were just there. We took care of him -- I mean, we spoke for quite a while. He thanked me. He wanted to get together some day. He was going up north.

As a matter of fact, I saw him -- we had a Christmas party for the benefit of the two FDNY EMS that we lost Lillo and Quinn. So he was there, and he was doing much better.

[redacted]

Freddie, by the time I got back, he had already left to go home. I didn't actually see him until Thursday. The 13th is when I first saw him the first time. We just went over and like hugged each other with little tears here and there. We both lived through something -- we both lived through the first one together, and the second one we had to do separately. Neither of us -- didn't leave our minds.

I need to go on duty.

File No. 9110485

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC JOEL PIERCE

Interview Date: January 23, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is January 23rd, 2002. The time is 1416 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck, Lieutenant with the New York City Fire Department. I'm at EMS Battalion 57 conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank, and unit that you're assigned to.

A. Joel Daniel Pierce, paramedic 3927, 35 zebra, Battalion 57.

Q. Joel, were you on duty the morning of September 11th, 2001?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Can you tell me about the events of that morning?

A. My partner and I were sitting up by McCarren Park when we heard a signal 1040 go over the air. I didn't know what a 1040 was, so I pulled out my little Ready-Medic book and I looked at it and I told my partner it was an airline incident.

Q. Do you know who your partner was that day?

A. Eric Rodriguez, Paramedic Rodriguez, Shield 2526. So we heard multiple units being assigned immediately from Battalion 31 told to switch to Citywide, so I said this has to be pretty big. So I switched over my portable to Citywide and you didn't hear much at the moment until you heard, I believe it was one of the condition bosses in the city screaming on the radio, basically send everything that the city has to offer because it was pretty bad. So I told my partner, who was driving that day, to drive down to the waterfront somewhere by Kent, and I believe we came off of North 12th. As we rounded the turn, we saw the north tower on fire and we were just awestruck by what we saw. We parked the vehicle on Kent, got out, stood there. My partner called his wife. I just stood there staring, and then I watched eventually the second plane, I saw it. It looked like it was circling coming south, then came back north, striking the south side of Tower No. 2. I got pretty sick to the stomach at that point. Eventually, the Brooklyn North dispatcher contacted us and advised us that we were heading to Manhattan at that time, to the World Trade Center.

We headed over the bridge, the Williamsburg Bridge, and my eyes were just fixed on what was coming out of the towers, the smoke. As we got down there, we didn't exactly know where the main triage area was or staging area was. There was just so many people running all over the place, and my partner and I, we had no clue as to where we were going. Then we found ourselves over -- we came back around and we were on West Side Highway or West Street by Liberty noticing a bunch of ambulances parked on the west side of West Side Highway next to No. 1 World Financial Center.

So we pulled over, we set our vehicle up underneath the pedestrian walk on Liberty Street between West and I believe it's South End Avenue. We were there for a bit and I just stood there looking up at the two towers and I just watched people jumping. I must have counted about eight people. One of them was on fire as he hit the ground. I thought it was just a piece of burning debris coming down until my partner said that's a person jumping.

I was with some Captain. I don't know where he was from. I said, boss, this is not a good spot to be sitting. I mean, stuff from that far up can easily get caught in the wind and come over towards us. He agreed and we said let's get these vehicle around the corner on South End, and that's where we ended up. My partner drove the vehicle right over here, just around the corner of Liberty. That's where we put the vehicle.

Q. Where you made the X on the map?

A. Correct. Multiple vehicles along the side here. I remember seeing the Hatzolah MERV over here. I think that Rescue 2 pulled up over here, multiple Fire units. There were a lot of other units from Metropolitan, FDNY, EMS and other voluntary units pulling up, so they were all lining up and down this road here. The Captain asked me to make sure each unit was not going to block themselves in, at least one person would stay with their unit. I said sure. So I ran up and down, made sure they were setting up their equipment, have their IVs, if they're ALS, start setting up their bags.

As I came back to report to him, I saw that Chief McCracken, Chief Grant, their aides and some other officers were at the corner of Liberty Street and South End Avenue. Chief Grant noticed me, that I was there. I pulled him aside. I advised him what was going on over here and that I was going to head back over onto the West Side Highway over here and advise those guys to get around the corner over here. He said that's a good idea, let's get them off the highway. Just as I started walking back, just before that catwalk on the corner, some maybe 20 feet, I guess, 50 feet, I heard this sound.

Q. You were on Liberty Street then?

A. Yes. It was right around here, I guess where the E is on this map. It's around this area, this general vicinity where the group was clustered, McCracken and all the other officers and their aides were. That's when we heard that sound, again, and I swear it sounded like another plane coming in, just that rumbling noise, that steadily -- that continuous rumbling that was getting louder and louder, and I think the last words I had were, oh, God not another one. So we all ran. We got ourselves in this little corner right over here, right by the hexagon here, and we all just kind of cowered underneath this little overhang right up against the lobby windows. There was no place to run.

Q. The lobby windows of World Financial?

A. Financial, yes. The hexagon part.

Q. Okay.

A. There's a little corner right over here, and that's where we basically just crowded together and kept our heads down and the rumbling noise just got immense at that point and I kind of looked up and all I saw was this huge dust cloud going right between the two buildings here, between 1 and 2, right where the -- going literally between on Liberty Street, and it was just this huge wall, like this perfect wall of dust. It slammed into Gateway Plaza across the street from us and then it basically rolled right back at us and I said, oh, shit, this is it, here we go.

We were all holding hands with each other. Wherever you found a hand, you grabbed it and you just held on. Unfortunately, I had McCracken's hand and he's got some pretty big hands. He squeezed my hand pretty good. But I think we were all pretty fricking scared at that point. We were all praying quite loudly, too. I'm Jewish and I think I was saying Hail Marys. I was just joining what everybody else was doing. You just didn't know what was going on other than the fact that here was this cloud of dust coming right at you and you you're just convinced that this is it, this is over with, because you don't know what else is coming with it.

So basically I just held my breath and just waited and I just felt that blast of air and dust come right at me. The glass held up. We were pretty amazed about that. I took a breath, started gagging. There's a deli right on the side here. There was an open door. All I saw was this door, so I like created a human chain of people and I just led them through this door, this little deli. I said just follow this and follow the building, head south.

I went back, I don't know, I tripped on something, banged my foot and some guy fell on top of me. I picked him up, pulled him away. I came back to where we were and along the side, the westernmost side, It was like I noticed a lot of the glass was still intact, you could see like maybe four or five panes of glass still held up, and then I heard somebody banging on the other side. So I believe it was myself and someone else, we smacked the window out, walked into the lobby area of 1 World Financial Center, yelled inside if anybody was in there, and this guy yelled out, yeah. I said can you see my flashlight? He's like yeah. I said, well, walk into the light. Not exactly the words you want to hear said. But he kind of got to me and I grabbed him and I dragged him over to where the broken window was and said get out through here and go.

I proceeded across the lobby to the other side, closer towards Liberty Street, the northeastern corner, just on the other side of the pedestrian bridge crossing the highway, and I walked out. All the glass windows were completely smashed out on the east and north sides of the hexagon part. I walked out, walked around. I was like -- I just didn't say much at all. I was looking at all the burning vehicles. Nothing but burning vehicles outside, all the ambulances.

I walked off into the street area and I think that's where I found Chief Wells, Charlie Wells, who was kind of like crawling in the dust. I yelled out his name. He kind of picked his head up. I ran over to him, picked him up and dragged him over towards the World Financial Center, and I guess that's where the shock of everything really kicked in now because I just looked. I was like where the hell is the tower? Where is everything? Did they both come down? I didn't know. I just stood there and then he had to kind of verbally slap me, not physically, just like, Joel, wake up, wake the fuck up, we need you here, excuse me, we need you here on this, and I kind of snapped to it again.

I walked around, grabbed some helmets, cop helmets that were like laying all over the place, gave them to people who didn't have helmets, looked around, see if I could find anybody, see if they needed help. Most people were walking wounded. I think that was it, really. A lot of people were uniforms just totally walking around like they were ghosts. They were like it was just amazing what just happened.

I helped out moving things around, getting people, making sure everything was okay, inspecting some of the ambulances, looking inside, didn't find anybody in none of them. I headed back towards my bus because I realized my partner was missing. We went back there. I found him coming to me and he's like where the hell were you? I was like where the hell were you? He told me that he was -- we went back over to the ambulance and we found it completely covered in dust and debris, the back window was smashed out. It looked like it took a beating, just all this crap that was on it.

He says there's an evacuation in effect; we're getting the hell out of here. I was like, yeah, okay. So he said the vehicle's dead, it's shot, because it was running at the time, so it must have sucked up all that dust and it clogged up the vents and everything. I figured the best thing to do was, because I'm hazmat trained, I'm trained with the SCBAs, to grab my air bottle, he grabbed his, we grabbed our face masks, and then this ambulance was pulling away and we jumped in the back of that and we headed down South End, down towards the waterfront, as far as it would go.

Q. At this time only the first tower had collapsed?

A. The first tower had collapsed, correct. That's as far as we know. I mean, you couldn't see anything. It was just such a huge dust cloud, you just didn't see a damn thing, other than you did see some debris and it was like large pieces of building and just nothing but a dust cloud.

So we got down there. There was this church down there. We just kind of like all hung around, we just sat there, and we were like what just happened? I mean, we were just still -- everybody was in awe. More ambulances were showing up from multiple agencies. Again I was tasked with -- because I had no ambulance left. So it's like my partner and I were pretty much useless at the moment unless they actually were going to set up a true triage area. We had no equipment other than our air bottles. This one Lieutenant said go to each ambulance and make sure, if they're ALS, to have their lights flashing, and if they're BLS, to have them turned off, and each ALS unit set up their equipment appropriately, get their IVs hung up and get ready for casualties. I was like sure. So I ran up and down doing that, made sure everything was all set up.

After I finished that, I came back and I found my partner puffing away at some oxygen. I go what's the matter with you? He said I got chest pain, and he's like don't you dare call the Lieutenant over. So I was like, yeah, okay. So I was like is it because of the dust? He goes yeah. So I figured it was because he sucked so much dust in, like myself, and he said my chest is burning from all the dust. Like all right, just chill for a moment, I'll be back. I came back and he looked even worse and I was like you're going to the hospital whether you like it or not, and he started arguing with me. I said don't fuck with me, you're going to the hospital. They had a physician come over that was down there volunteering. So he looked at him, looked at his EKG, did something, he said you're going to Vinny's and that's final. So I said, listen, just do it, go, be safe, don't be stupid. I'll be all right. So, actually, excuse me, just before that, I was along the waterfront esplanade. I'm sorry.

Q. Okay. Go ahead.

A. Along the esplanade where people were coming down the waterfront there. There were a lot of people running down, so I was escorting down this way towards where the boats were to get them over to, I guess, Liberty Island or to the Jersey side or wherever the boats were taking them to. I saw this one boat with a camera crew on it. I don't know if you're familiar with it, but the Green Monster they call it. It's like a high-speed tour boat that races up and down the water around the island, gives a tour of the island. Well, I saw them. I waved them over and I told them, go around south, come around and turn to where the bulkheads are and start picking up people and get them out of here, and they listened to me. They actually did that. It was pretty good.

I remember seeing this one Lieutenant from I think Engine 229, that's the area up in Greenpoint where I cover mostly. So I was like you're from 229. He goes yeah, who are you? Oh, you're from that ambulance around the area. Yeah. He said, listen, do yourself a favor and get out of here. I think just as I was heading south again, that's when the north tower collapsed because I remember seeing another huge cloud of dust basically just cover this whole area going to the west side, all over towards the Hudson River area.

I made it back down towards just before the Battery here. I don't know what street that is. But that's when my partner started having more problems and he was told you're out of here, after we were at this one park resting for a moment. Now we're with all those ambulances. I'm just sitting there doing absolutely nothing. He's gone, I got nothing, and I was getting very itchy. When I start wanting to do something, I get itchy. I'm like I have to do something. I can't just sit on my laurels and do nothing. That's just not my style.

I told this one Lieutenant, I said, I'm going back up there. I'm doing nothing here. This is B.S. Why are we sitting here doing nothing? He's like hang out here Pierce, don't you disappear on me. Then I stood around waiting, waiting, waiting, waiting, waiting. It was just a waiting period and it was driving me absolutely fucking insane. I mean, literally, I was really going nuts. So I was like, listen. At one point I was like, I got no girlfriend, no dependents. I'm not worried. I don't know if it's like a superman feeling or something, but I had to get up there because I know people needed my help and that was it.

So I spoke with another Lieutenant. I don't know who it was. Maybe Lieutenant Soto. I said I got to go back up there. He says, well, let me go with you a little bit, I'll see how far it is. He was like how far away is it? I was like around four blocks. I lied to him. It was a little farther than four blocks. But we got up there. He became the triage Lieutenant and I was his aide for the day between One Liberty Plaza and Engine 10/Ladder 10. So basically we just stayed there the entire night, just transporting patients back and forth, getting up to Liberty triage, where I did some work in helping out as well. That's what I did all night. I maybe had a two-hour catnap on the marble floor at One Liberty Plaza, woke up again, not even, you know, something like that.

I remember at one point I was back down, I think I was down by -- in front of Engine 10/Ladder 10 -- no. I was in front of Liberty Plaza and they said they needed morphine down there. They found somebody inside and they were going to have to take his legs off and they need morphine. They saw me and they said are you a medic? I go yeah. You got morphine? I go yup. The guy who was with me, he said you're coming with me and they physically grabbed me. They said you're coming with us. They said you're coming with us, we need you now, we need your drugs.

At that point I found myself on the pile and I don't know if -- it felt like I was hallucinating because just looking around, I was up on top of that pile a good way in, it was hot and I was looking at all these holes down. It was like one wrong step and I'm dead. If I fell into that little hole, I'm dead and that was it, because I could see the flames below, you could see the redness. I knew if I went in, it was like the pits of hell. It was like Dante's Inferno, I guess you could call it. I was in the remains of the south tower, between the south tower and near the hotel, and it was something, just being there, all the way in. I don't know how far in I was. I must have been a good 200 feet in when I was going up and down these piles of debris. Then I got called out and I learned that they managed to free the guy's legs up, so that made me happy. I got out of there. I climbed all the way back, assisted with the hose pulling because they needed a lot of fire hose in there. So I was part of the hose line with a lot of other firemen and all the rescue workers.

I took a break again, headed back over to 10/10, sat there, drank, had some fluids, and I think that's where I saw Chief Tramontana. He came over to me. He says are you all right? I just looked at him. I was like how can one not feel all right? Look what just happened. I almost had a brush with death. He said all right, just take a break, relax.

I worked through the night. I met up with some other people, EMT Bruce Hydock, Battalion 57, EMT Richardson, Battalion 57. Who else? EMT Jason Steele, Battalion 57. Those are the only familiar faces I can remember. In fact, it's funny because you couldn't even recognize them at first because they had to remind me who they were.

I took a minor break and went back down to 10/10, met up with this Lieutenant, I forgot who it was, and I said, listen, boss, I'm going to take a walk over to -- over by Liberty and see what my ambulance looks like. I started walking down Liberty, but that was completely blocked up between Greenwich and Washington from the debris from the south tower. So I remember walking down Greenwich, down Albany, and coming back around. I found my ambulance and it was pushed over to the side, I think. I think some earth movers or something came over and pushed it over to the side out of the way.

I walked over to where I was taking cover, walked back, got something to drink, something to munch on, and I think that's when I was just like somewhere by Engine 10/Ladder 10, I kind of laid down for a moment on a long board, and I think that's where I really started to pass out, when I think Captain Olsen, I think it was -- I don't know who. I think it was Captain Olsen who ordered me to go to the command post, which was far up on the West Side Highway by I guess St. John's. I don't know where they set it up. By the school.

Q. The college or the high school?

A. There was a high school, some school, a public school.

Q. Stuyvesant High School?

A. Maybe that was it. That might have been it. He walked me inside there, and then I found a cot over by some triage area and I just walked over to it and just completely fell asleep. I got up like two hours later, walked over across the highway to the command post.

Q. How did you get back to your battalion?

A. I was driven back. Captain Burns saw me. A friend of hers was heading back to Brooklyn and he said he would give me a ride back, which he did. I headed back.

Q. Approximately what time did you get back to Battalion 57?

A. I don't know. Maybe 12:00 o'clock, I guess. I can't remember.

Q. Midnight you mean?

A. Day.

Q. The next day?

A. The next day.

Q. The next afternoon. Okay.

A. All I know is I was on the clock for about 32 straight hours. I was on the clock that long. Then I just -- a bunch of people approached me and [redacted] I showered up up there and cleaned up, had all my stuff put in red bags because there was just so much blood on them and everything.

That was pretty much it for that day. Then I didn't go back there to work, on one of the standby units, the ALS units, for like about maybe two weeks -- I stayed away from there. I was definitely there for a long time. People were telling me you were considered MIA for a long time. That's pleasing to know, to find out that I was missing in action. But I was, I guess, to some people. My radio didn't work at one point. I guess -- I don't know why it didn't work. So they said they were calling for you like crazy because they didn't know where you were. I was like me neither. There were no street signs. Everything was smashed down.

Q. Is there anything else you want to add to the events of that day?

A. I don't know what there is to add, if I've forgotten so many things or if they stick in my head. Maybe some things are just being recessed away and then it's going to come out in the wrong moments. I've forgotten a lot of stuff. I've forgotten names of people. I guess my memory span is kind of shot to hell a little bit. I'm still coughing a lot and I don't even smoke. That's all I can think of right now.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Okay. This interview is concluded. The time now is 1449 hours. Thank you very much, Joel.

PARAMEDIC PIERCE: You're welcome.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JASON CHARLES

Interview Date: January 23, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is January 23rd, 2002. The time is 2112 hours and my name is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department World Trade Center Task Force. I am conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name.

A. Jason Charles.

Q. Your rank.

A. EMT.

Q. Shield.

A. 5114.

Q. And your assigned battalion.

A. 13.

Q. Mr. Charles, were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster?

A. No, I wasn't.

Q. Did you respond to the World Trade Center disaster on 9/11?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. In your own words, could you please tell me about the events of the day?

A. Yes. [redacted] We got to Madison and 28th Street when we saw -- me and my son saw black smoke. I had thought it was just a regular structural fire. So I told my son, listen, let's -- my son, mind you, is only three years old. I said let's go check out this fire. So we start walking down the block and we get up to Fifth Ave. and a lady walks up to me and says a plane hit the Trade Center, and I looked at her like she was crazy. I said it might have been a helicopter, not a plane. So I kept walking. I got to Broadway and now I could see the smoke just traveling east over the city, and another guy walked up to us and said a plane hit the towers. So I speeded up my walking to Sixth Ave., put my son on a bike, and we got to Sixth Ave. and I saw the giant hole in Tower 1.

As I'm staring at the hole in Tower 1, I walked across the street, across Sixth Ave. to the west side of Sixth Avenue, to see Tower 2, and at the time Tower 2 was intact. It wasn't touched yet. I looked down at my son and I repeated to him I couldn't believe what was going on, and I told him, oh, my God, and I heard people calling, oh, my God, look, look, and as I looked up, the second plane hit the second tower and there was a humongous fireball rolling up the side of the building. What delayed reaction I heard was the sound itself, the explosion itself.

So I looked back down at any son and said (inaudible), baby, we have to go home, thinking to myself, Jesus, they're going to need every last EMS personnel in the city to go down. So I hesitantly scrambled along the street. At one point I lost my son for maybe a minute and I looked for him and then I found him. I got him back on the bike. We rode back across the street. I started dialing numbers to call my brother, my wife. At the time me and her were broken up, so we were just getting back together. So I started looking for anybody to call to take my son.

So I remembered the baby-sitter. So I shoot back down 28th Street over to Second and Third, taking my time, making sure I didn't get into an accident with my son. So it took me probably about ten minutes from Sixth Ave. to Second and Third with my son. We get upstairs, I knock on the baby-sitter's door, and she immediately takes my son out of my hands. She doesn't even ask me what's going on. So she takes my son and I give her something else I had on my bike, and she goes you going down there? I go yeah. She goes you want to look out my window? I told her, no, I'm going to get a better view.

As I'm waiting for the elevator, for some reason, the elevators broke down, both of them. So now I'm waiting another five, ten minutes for the elevators and I'm like getting more and more frustrated as I'm waiting for the elevators, and then I said screw it. I threw the bike on my back and I ran down 19 flights of steps. I got downstairs, I jumped on my bike, I got myself together, I checked the gears of my bike, made sure I had air in my tires, and then I took off.

I took off to 27th Street because you can cut through the blocks between the buildings, and I took off 27th Street, made a left, cut down towards Second, and then made a quick right going towards the Trade Center. I'm riding on the curb and I see a fire truck to my left and I speed up peddling and I jump off the curb next to the fire truck, landing probably about a foot away from the truck. A firefighter on the truck looks at me and he's like holy, you know, like he couldn't believe it, and now I'm riding next to the fire truck speeding down Second Ave., which is a slight downhill. I didn't even get the engine number. It was an engine truck, but I didn't get the engine number.

So I'm racing down Second Ave. with all the emergency vehicles, like following behind a fire truck. I come up onto a station wagon, I cut my brakes, and I just missed the station wagon, almost getting pinned between a bus. So now I'm flying, you know, I squeezed just between a bus and a station wagon to pull off to the left again to almost get hit by an ESU truck. So now at this point I'm passing 23rd Street and the space becomes tight between another bus and a van and I barely squeezed through that and I'm flying down the street, down Second Ave., and now I'm passing the Police Academy, which I think is on 21st Street, 21st Street between Second and Third, and I see a cop standing with the barricades, next to the barricade, and he's looking like he wants to go. He's like, you know, he looked like he was all amped as I'm passing him. He just wanted to -- it was like he wanted to jump in the next vehicle and go.

So I keep racing down there. I get to about Beth Israel Hospital, I don't know if it's 16th Street, 15th Street, and I start to lose all my energy. The first wave of emergency vehicles had left me at about 15th Street. I kept pedaling. I stopped at 14th Street because of the light. I wasn't about to get hit by another bus going crosstown. So I start peddling again as the light turns green and I start picking up my speed a little bit and then I hear a second wave of emergency vehicles coming and they gave me the second adrenaline rush. So I started racing with them and I'm racing alongside of the ESU truck for a good block and then the streets just opened up and they start going and the ambulances start passing me. I think three FDNY ambulances and a Metro Care ambulance passed me, and then the rest of them were cop cars, fire trucks, and I guess a Battalion Chief, a fire division suburban.

So I get to Houston. Second Avenue now turns into Christie Street and I jump back onto a curb, and at that point all of -- the second wave of emergency vehicles left me and I'm flying down the street and I jump off a curb again, landing next to a minivan, which I just missed, or it missed me, and as I'm coming down the street, I'm not sure if it's East Broadway that crosses Christie Street, but a third wave of emergency vehicles come down and I could hear them at least three or four blocks behind me. They start passing me and I start rushing with them and they gave me a third adrenaline rush.

I'm rushing with them and we all get to Canal Street, where everybody came to a stop because -- I'm not sure if it's Ladder 9 or Engine 9 was coming off the Brooklyn Bridge. It probably wasn't Ladder 9. But there was another ladder truck coming off the Manhattan Bridge and everybody stopped to let them go, and then I waved on the other emergency vehicles who were behind me to go ahead of me and they all flew down Canal Street for a block and hung a right on -- I don't know what street it was. But I know that, when I went behind them, as I ride behind them, now we're in Chinatown. As I ride behind them, I guess they were like special forces from the courts or the FBI building, in that area, federal cops or whatever, jumped in front of me and I yelled at him EMS, EMS, and he jumped out of my way and I kept riding.

At this point now I'm passing behind the courts. I got behind the courts and I go underneath like the Brooklyn Bridge overheads and I pull up on I think it's Reade Street, right next to City Hall, and then I see both the towers smoking like chimneys. I mean, it was like the worst sight in the world. As I pulled up onto -- I think it was -- I'm not sure what street, but it wasn't Reade Street, I'm not sure what street, but it was right next to City Hall -- I saw one person fall out the building. As I keep riding, I look over to my left and there's just a crowd of people staring like they couldn't believe it, and I'm staring at them and they're staring at the towers. I see detectives and FBI agents running around the street like they didn't know what to do, what was going on.

So I had my ID out prior to that because I was trying to flag down a vehicle as I was racing down Second Ave. to stop. I mean, I knew they wasn't going to stop, but if they did, good, I would have jumped in with them. But nobody stopped. So I had my ID out prior to that and I was flashing all the detectives and FBI agents and they're just waving me through.

I get to Broadway, Broadway and I think it's Vesey, and I slam on my brakes because a lady cuts in front of me. Now, at that point, I just started like lightly riding to look for a Lieutenant, an EMS Lieutenant, and I ran into an EMS Lieutenant about once I got to Dey and Broadway. So I identified myself as an EMS off-duty, and she was like good, we're setting up triage. They set up triage between Dey and the next street north of Dey -- south of Dey. Sorry. So she starts setting up triage and I told her I was going to be back. I was going to lock my bike up. I locked my bike up on Dey between Broadway and Fulton and I go back and I started triaging patients. I had no triage tags in my hand. So they had already had the triage tags arriving, so I started asking questions, you know, I had no ACRs neither. So I started asking them questions about their history, if they had asthma history or whatever.

Then I ran into another EMS guy who had a bike. I was sidetracked by him. He asked me where did I lock my bike up, and I told him over here. I took over to where my bike was. Me and him chained our bikes up together. We went back over there and we started triaging more patients. I ran into one patient who said she was having an asthma attack. Now, at that point I had went over to a Metro Care bus to ask if they had any albuterol. They didn't have any for whatever reason. So then I went -- I remembered where my Lieutenant went -- the Lieutenant I ran into. Sorry. I think she was from Battalion 4. I ran over to Fulton and Church Street, where there was another triage center set right in front of the towers, in front of the Millenium Hotel across the street from the towers.

At that point, I run down Fulton Street and a PA cop, Port Authority cop, stops me, and I flash my ID and he's giving me flack about, you know, you're not going down here. I'm like, listen, I've got an asthma patient over there on Broadway. He's like no, you ain't going down there. She's not getting albuterol today. I was like all right, you know Rudy Charles? Rudy Charles is a Port Authority cop, my father. He goes no, not today. So I can see he was just being difficult.

So I ran back over to Broadway and I ran into a firefighter named Firefighter Anderson. If I'm not mistaken, he's an IC for the fire cadets, the fire cadet program. I used to be a fire cadet. That's how I knew him. He gave me a turnout coat to wear because I needed to be identified as a city worker. So he gave me the turnout coat and I ran back over to -- and he was standing on Dey and Broadway. I ran back over to Fulton and Church and the PA cop was still standing there and he runs over to me and I tell him, you know, stay the fuck over there, and he's like all right, the FBI is going to stop me. So as I'm walking by him, the FBI cops looked -- the FBI agents. Sorry. They're looking at me and they're like, you know, they just looked at me and just let me go through.

So I get over to the Lieutenant. He was talking to a Chief and a Captain. I didn't get their names. The Chief had an eagle on his collar, so this was a deputy. So now I asked the Lieutenant was there any albuterol. She says go check the ambulance over there. I didn't get the ambulance unit or the bus number. There were two EMTs working on a severe burn patient, it looked like 30 percent of his body was burned, and they were working on him. I jumped on the bus and I asked for albuterol, and the guy turned around and he gave me albuterol and a nebulizer.

So I take the albuterol and the nebulizer and I run back over to Dey and Broadway, where the other triage center was. I get over there. Metro Care found their albuterol. Okay. So after all that running around, Hatzolah comes. They're coming in and now they have nine EMTs and I think two paramedics. I had told them we need at least three of your guys over at Church and Fulton because there's only two EMTs there, the Captain, the Lieutenant and the Chief, and he's like no, we're going to keep them here because everybody is coming here. I was like, guy, there's more people coming out of that building going to that triage center than those two EMTs can handle -- three. Sorry. It was three EMTs there. He's like no. I was like, listen, right now I need your help. I don't need you to give me your -- what's that called?

Q. Sarcasm?

A. No. Superior complex. And he was like all right, all right. So then I said I'll be right back, and then I ran back over to the Lieutenant on Fulton and Dey -- I mean Fulton and Church, and I get over there and I'm like, Lieutenant, we got a triage center that has too many chiefs and no indians. We need somebody with status to go over there and let them know what's going on. So she's like okay and she sends an EMT over there. I think he was a medic. I'm not even sure. But this guy I remember, a white guy about my height, 5'10", 5'11", he had shades on at the time, spiky hair, I think he's from Battalion 4, too, he walked over to Dey and Church. He started to cut up Dey to go to Church, which is right next to the Century 21 store.

So now, I guess, I saw him cutting up there, so now I made the decision that I was going to go into the buildings and start helping everybody else out because I saw the firefighters standing over there carrying people out and there were a lot of EMTs over there who weren't FDNY. They were like, I guess, from Bronx -- I mean like Brooklyn and Queens. So they were there and they had like EMT on the tape on their shirt and they were like helping people out. I started to head towards the building and these two EMT females, they had this heavyset lady. They were walking her over to the triage center. So she gets over to the triage center and she sees me and a Lieutenant and decides that she wants to pass out. So, all right, she passes out on the ground. So I started to walk past her because I'm like, well, they got her. Then I saw that the Lieutenant and the two EMS females were having a problem lifting her up. So I told the two EMS ladies to move and me and the Lieutenant picked her up. I grabbed her and the Lieutenant picked her up by the legs and we start walking over slowly to the curb, and then I heard an explosion from up, from up above, and I froze and I was like, oh, shit, I'm dead because I thought debris was going to hit me in the head and that was it.

Then everybody stops and looks at the building and then they take off. The Lieutenant dropped her legs and ran. The triage center, everybody who was sitting there hurt and, oh, you know, help me, they got up and everybody together got up and ran. I looked at them like why are they running? I look over my shoulder and I says, oh, shit, and then I turned around and looked up and that's when I saw the tower coming down. I saw the -- it looked like the top maybe 70, 60 floors coming off the building, and I had stood there thinking maybe the towers were not going to hit me. Then I looked closer and two pieces of debris fly over my head about 40, 50 stories up, flying over my head, and I was like, shit, I'm out of here.

I grabbed the lady and I tugged on her twice and she wouldn't get up at that point. She got up on one knee, actually, and then she wouldn't get up. Then I let her go and I started to run, and I'm hauling ass down Fulton, up Fulton actually, running east. Actually, as I'm running east, I stopped and I told myself what are you doing? Jason Charles, go back for her. So I turned around and went back to the lady. I get back down to -- I mean, it was only like ten steps. So I took another ten steps back and I get back down there and she's gone, and I'm like all right.

So now I look over to my left real quick and I see two firefighters running at me with this horrified look on their face. One firefighter was trying to drop his Scott pack and it got caught. The buckle that goes around the Scott pack around the waist got caught. So he was trying to -- he was unbuckling that while he was running. The other guy, he dropped it off his shoulders, but it looked like it got caught onto his arms, and then the dust hit them and then the metal crashed on them, and I turned around and I started running. I saw people -- as I'm turning around running, I picked up people who were coming out this corridor right in front of Millenium Hotel that leads you into like the mall plaza on Liberty. I saw people running out of there, like running against the wall, against Building 5, running north. Yes, running north.

So they were all -- they're running north and I'm running and in my head I'm like let's jump in that bus over there. I said, nah, just run. Then I'm starting to run and I see firefighters, you know, I mean, like when everybody started running, I'm seeing two firefighters drop their Scott packs, FBI agents took off, EMTs took off, and that told me this is a real situation, this wasn't nothing to take lightly. So that's when I had ran and left the lady, came back for her.

Now, as I see the two firefighters

(inaudible), I made the decision not to jump in the back of the ambulance that was parked right on the corner of Fulton and Church. I start running up the block. As I start running up Fulton, I see this lady who I left behind hauling ass up Fulton and her dress is like flapping in the wind, and I'm like look at her go, you know, and I'm just running and she had a nice lead on me, so she was like half a block up already. But I made sure I found her first before I left.

So I started running and now I'm panicking. I'm like, oh, man, I'm dead, I'm dead, and there's all these people in front of me and they're running slow and I'm like, oh, Jesus Christ, and I stopped running and I started walking real fast behind them because I wasn't going to push anybody out of the way. So there was an opening and I took the opening and I started hauling ass, but this older black guy falls in front of me and I jump over him and I stopped and turned around and two people scooped him up and kept running. It was like a football scene, like they scooped up a football and kept running with him, and they're running and then now I'm running. I almost started crying at one point. I'm like, oh, man, I'm dead, I'm dead, and I stopped running and said screw it, I'm going to die right here, let me take it as it is. Then something said, stupid, run, you know, run and die running. So I started running again.

At one point -- at some point, I'm not sure, but the building -- that horrible twisting metal sound of a freight train or whatever -- it's the worst sound in the world -- stopped. But then it started again. Then I started hauling ass again, and at one point I stopped, like maybe 20 feet before I got to Broadway, still on Fulton, flying up to Broadway, and I let everybody run past me. I said everybody go, go, go. Now I ran the rest the way down to Broadway and then I looked to my right down towards Dey and I see at least a 40, 50-story ball of dust rushing at us. I'm like holy shit. I'm like all right, run, and I kept running and I ran towards Vesey, and then Vesey, the dust came around there, but for some reason the dust didn't come up Fulton yet, not as fast and hard and as dark as it did at Vesey and Dey.

So now I had that trapped feeling and I thought I was really screwed because I knew behind that was nothing but death. If you sucked on the dust, that was pretty much it. So I yelled everybody over here and I pointed to a store. The store's name -- it was a delicatessen, actually. It's called Au Pain or Au Bon Pain.

Q. Au Bon Pain?

A. Yes, thank you, that famous delicatessen. I ran over there and like three other people followed me. One guy I remember stopping, like he was still on Fulton, running up Fulton. He had stopped dead in his tracks and covered his face. That was actually before the dust started rushing at us, but I thought I'd add that in. There was a guy, he just stopped dead in his tracks, he didn't want to run anymore, and I remember reaching for him and then the dust caught him and I kept running. But the dust coming up Fulton was a little lighter, and I don't know why it was light there, but it was dark as hell coming down Dey and Vesey.

So anyway, we run up to the store and I grabbed the door and I'm "open the fucking door," because it was locked and I had this look on my face like hurry up, like I was about to cry again, and the manager of the store scrambled through his keys and he ran over to the door and he unlocked it. By the time he got to the door, the dust caught us. I held onto the door and then I felt the door open and I opened it up and I shoved the two people in and then I closed the door right behind me. I get inside the store and I start cursing and I almost started to pick a chair up and throw it, if you know what I'm saying, through the window, but that wouldn't have made no sense because when I looked behind the window, it was completely black. I mean, it was like looking into hell.

As I'm looking, I see one person, it looked like a white guy with glasses, walking up against the glass of the window. I'm like holy shit. So I run back outside and the door was locked again. I turned around to the manager, open the fucking door, and he's like, oh, I'm sorry. I said leave this shit open, and he said all right. He opens the door and I opened the door and I yell outside. I yell outside and it sounded like I was yelling in an empty room, like the acoustics -- if anybody ever heard the acoustics in an empty room, it was like that, and it was scary. I was like holy shit. Then I closed the door and not even five seconds later, three people came, it looked like flies, to the door, tu-tu-tu-tu, like they all bumped into it. I opened the door, rushed them in, and they came in and they couldn't see and I asked the guy for water. I said wash their faces down, and he was like all right, and the manager and a few other people started washing their faces down.

Then more people started coming to the door and they started letting them in and they started washing their faces off. I washed one guy's face off. Then I told the lady, here, take over because I saw people -- the store now leads to the back. There's a back exit that leads into the building. I think the building we were in was 222 Broadway or 225. I'm not sure which one it was. 222 Broadway. So I go to the back and there's like 60 people in the lobby of this building and I'm like, Jesus Christ. I was by myself and I had no tech bag. The only thing I had on me was albuterol and a nebulizer, and unless I was going to blow into the nebulizer, you know, that was the extent of my medical care.

So at one point I started -- I tried to get the crowd's attention and a guy gave me a bullhorn. He gives me the bullhorn and I start announcing who I was, that I wasn't a firefighter, because I had on a firefighter's jacket, I wasn't a firefighter, I was an EMT and that my name was Jason Charles. They're like okay and they started listening. Somebody had asked me what happened and then two other people were like, yeah, what happened? What happened? I was like, Jesus Christ, they don't even know. I was like all right. I was like ladies and gentlemen, Tower 2 just collapsed, the entire building came down, and they're like, oh, my God. People started crying and stuff like that. But I gave it to that entire crowd. They held it together. I wasn't like they panicked like in one of those movies and flipped out. They held it together. So I'm like okay.

So then my next question was -- no. Someone had asked me can we go outside? I was like -- and then I know this is like really unprofessional, but then, at that point, I was just really aggravated. I was like you know what? If you want to fucking go outside, you know what I'm saying, and suck on that fucking dust, be my guest, but I suggest that you all stay in here, wait until it clears out in another 15, 20 minutes, and we can all go east towards the river and get out of here. They were like all right, all right. So they started calming down, and I was like ladies and gentlemen, does anybody have asthma? Like 30 people raised their hands. I was like, oh, Jesus Christ. So I started separating the asthma patients from everybody else, and I put the asthma patients back in the delicatessen so I could keep my eye on them had anybody broke out in a severe asthma attack.

At one point a medic came running in through one of the doors covered in dust coughing and I was like -- and there was a guy standing behind me and I was like, yo, big man, take him inside the delicatessen and watch him. He was like all right. So he walked him inside. Now, I'm still taking in asthma patients. I mean, it was like at least 30, now it looked like 40 because people just started popping up. So then they started -- they went in the delicatessen.

Then somebody brought to my attention a chick who had a laceration on her head, a woman, sorry, had a laceration on her head, approximately 20-year-old African-American female, and the lac was probably maybe half an inch wide, it looked pretty deep, she might have needed stitches for it. There was a guy who was applying pressure to her head with a cloth, and I was like let me see it, and he was like, yeah, she's bleeding pretty badly. When he lifted it up, it wasn't bleeding too bad. So she was pretty much okay. So I told him wait here. I'm going to go back outside and look for a tech bag or something I could use.

So I went back outside. At the time I had the bandana around my head. I took it from around my head and put it around my mouth. So now I'm walking outside and I'm asking people are they okay because now at this point people are just dazed. It was like one of those nuclear war movies where people are just in a daze. So I walked into a few people and I'm asking them are they okay, are they okay. One heavyset gentleman, I had to ask him, are you okay, sir? Are you okay? He's like, yeah, yeah, I'm all right. I said, listen, sir. Either walk east to the river or walk into that delicatessen over there. He said all right.

At one point I came up to a bunch of officers who were sitting on the cemetery that's right there. They were all sitting on the wall like they couldn't believe what was going on. I had asked if anybody was hurt -- no. I had said who's hurt over here? Who's bleeding? Because I saw blood on the floor. There was an officer who had little minor lacerations on his hand. I was like, listen, guys, you guys got to get out of here because Tower 1 is going to fall because for some reason I had just known that the tower was going to come down at that point because when Tower 2 came down, the ground was actually shaking.

So then I started walking. I got back over to Church and Fulton and I looked to my left and I could see it, but barely, a big piece of metal sticking into the ground. It reminded me of for some reason Planet of the Apes, the new one. So I looked at it and I was like, Jesus Christ, and I saw a Fire Marshal and like two detectives walk out of the dust over there, and they came over, you know, they came walking out. Before that, before I saw them walk out, I found a Battalion Chief's helmet, and I looked at it and picked it up, and I remember seeing a Battalion Chief, he hauled ass up the block, so he was okay. I remember seeing him run on Fulton before the towers came down. I mean, this guy was an older guy and I never seen an old man move so quick. So he was all right. So I took his helmet and I looked at it and I was like -- and I looked at the towers and there was debris still coming off the building.

Mind you, before that, which I found a little weird, before the towers fell, there were a lot of people falling out of the building like, you know, I don't know, like they were just throwing themselves out, like they were just lined up and going, like paratroopers, and at one point right before the towers came down that stopped. It was like the people that were coming out just stopped coming out the window for whatever reason. I found that a little weird.

As I was walking over to Tower 1 with the helmet in my hand, I had put it on my head. I'm like, you know, well, he's okay. I'm going to put this on and protect myself from anything falling off the building because I had nothing. Then I took it off again and I'm like, ah, I'm not going to put this back on my head, it's not even mine. So I'm like -- and the Fire Marshal, what is that? What is that in your hand? What are you doing with that? I'm like, okay. I'm like, it's a Battalion Chief's helmet. He's okay. He's like, give me the helmet. All right, here. I'm sorry, man. So I took it off because I think he had saw me because when I took it off and I looked behind me, he was already coming up, but he hadn't said anything. So I guess he put two and two together, you know what I mean. Me with a Battalion Chief's helmet doesn't quite look too well. So he's like, oh, and I'm like, listen, I'm EMS. He's like all right.

Then a detective came up and said we're pulling back to Chambers. I'm like word? He's said yeah because Tower 1 is going to come down. He said the same thing. I was like all right. At that point I looked up at Tower 1 and I could see that she was leaning slightly but not much, and as I looked over to -- I looked at the tower, I looked at everybody else and everybody else is hauling -- everybody is walking up, walking south towards Chambers. So the officer offers me some water, I take it, I'm starting to drink it as I'm walking, and I'm walking because he said we got to pull back. I'm like wait a second. I still got those patients in the building.

So he started -- they walked, and I ran up to an ESU truck. Some ESU guys were putting on Scott packs and I was like, yo, you guys got an extra Scott pack so I can go in the building and help you guys out? They were like -- and they started looking for Scott packs, and they were like, yo, we're out of Scott packs. So I go (inaudible)? He was like yeah. I said you guys going in the building, right? He said yeah. The only reason why I didn't go in the building because I had knew that the mall level was completely dust and for me to go in there with nothing on would have pretty much been suicide. So I said all right. They said go up the block to Broadway, there should be another ESU truck over there.

So I started back over there, and as I'm starting back over there, I looked down -- I think it's Vesey right between Tower 7 and the Trade Center and there were like at least four firefighters over there. It looked like eight, actually, because there were another two walking down. They were long-boarding a guy who must have jumped off the escalator that's like right there on Vesey, and they're long boarding him. I'm like all right.

So I walk over to a fire truck and I take a sip of water that was coming out of the fire truck, and there was this female from England who was on the 90th floor of Tower 1, who told me she had just barely made it out of there. When the towers came down, she lost both her shoes. So she was walking. So I said, listen, I'm walking back to the building over here, you want to come with me? She's like yeah. I'm like all right. So we started walking back. She's walking barefoot because she lost her shoes.

So we get back over to 222 Broadway and we get inside and I'm telling everybody, listen, I couldn't find any equipment, but we're going to have to get out of here because Tower 1 is going to come down. This sergeant, a police officer sergeant goes don't tell them that, don't tell them that. I'm like what? He was like -- I was like all right, whatever, forget it, then I'm not going to say it again. Then I go all right, ladies and gentlemen, if we're going to do this, we're going to get out here and we're going to walk east to the river, and I had said that twice, and then I made the mistake of saying west again and I was like damn. Then I said all right everybody, you know what? Screw it. Let's get out of here and just walk east now.

As we're all walking to the back of the building through the freight -- not the freight -- the loading docks in the back of the building. We get to the back -- we don't even get to the back of the building. We start walking back there and then I heard a ground level explosion and I'm like holy shit, and then you heard that twisting metal wreckage again. Then I said shit and everybody started running and I started running behind them, and we get to the door. For some reason, like straight out of a movie, two people ran through the door together and got stuck in the doorway, and I'm like, oh, my God, this is not the time. So they squeezed through and they got through and I squeezed through them and ran around them because I just wanted to see which way the towers were falling.

So I get to the loading dock and I run outside and there's people running out the loading dock east to the river like little rats out of a cage, like chu-chu-chu. Then I get to the loading dock outside and I see this 50, 60-story dust rolling down the block again. I'm like holy shit and I sort of moved too quick and fell down, and as I fall down, I look at a police Sergeant -- or a Captain. Sorry. He got covered in the dust because he didn't make it to the doorway in time.

I fell down, and when I fell down, the dust went over my head, and I said shit and I jumped up gapsing for air. At that point everybody is screaming get the fuck out of here, and they're like close the gate, close the gate, and the gate was moving like a snail, it was closing so slow. So eight of us jumped on the gate and started using our weight to pull it down and it wouldn't budge. I remember looking over to my right and seeing another EMT. Naomi is her last name. She used to be out of Battalion 16. But I saw her. She was helping us pull the gate down. At one point someone yelled get the fuck out of here, everybody get the fuck out of here, go, go, go, and everybody is yelling. It wasn't that yell like, you know, that roller coaster yell or you're yelling at somebody to discipline them. It was like that horrifying scream that everybody was relaying back and forward.

So everybody started hauling ass out of there, and I jumped back onto the deck and I'm like everybody get the fuck out of here and everybody is running. I must have been like the last person out of the room, and by the time I decided to get out of the room, being the last person out, the room was completely -- I mean the loading dock was completely dusty. It was like a fog. You couldn't see anything but the light that was illuminating the room.

So I got back into the lobby and the lobby was dusty and I'm like shit, I'm going to suffocate in here. I started panicking because I couldn't breathe and it was heavily dust to the side. You could see each other but you couldn't breathe. Now I'm panicking and everybody else is like looking for somewhere to breathe, and I remember sticking my face between an elevator door, like the elevator shaft, to try to get some air, and that wasn't working and I'm like shit,

I'm going to die in here now, suffocating, and then somebody passed me a wet rag. I put the wet rag on my face and I was able to breathe again. So I'm like all right, cool.

Then the same sergeant who told me not to tell anybody the towers were coming down, he asked me, you think we could die from this dust? I'm like right now? No. But eventually? Yes. He's like okay. So then we're all looking for a way out. So now the dust started to come down a little quicker than it did last time. So I walked outside and I'm just like, Jesus Christ. I couldn't even see. Particles were hitting me in my face. I'm like let me go back inside.

I went back inside and at one point I remember I saw a bunch of people run down to the lower levels of the building. So I started running down to the lower levels of the building and I see all these people in there. I went back upstairs to look for a Lieutenant -- a Captain, actually. I said, listen, Captain, I got like 60 people in this building. This is before Tower 1 came down. Sorry. This is before Tower 1 came down. I had told the Captain I had 60 people in the building. He said, listen, I'm going over to -- what's that around where the Liberty boats, the boats to the Liberty.

Q. To Ellis Island?

A. No. Where the boats leave from Manhattan over to Ellis Island. He said he was going to be --

Q. The ferry terminal.

A. Thank you. He was going over to the ferry terminal and he was like you're on your own and he left me. I was like okay. That's when I started looking for a tech bag and stuff. That was before Tower 1 came down. So anyway, I ran into another -- I ran into a Lieutenant. He says I'm going to South Ferry. You can stay here if you want. I was like all right, that's two for two, you know what I'm saying? (inaudible) I understood that they were scared. So it wasn't like I could say anything behind him. So I was like all right, I guess it's up to me.

So I went back over to Broadway and Fulton at that point and I just knew both the towers were down. You couldn't see anything, but you just knew they were down. There was no shadow or nothing. So it was like I went back into the building and I said screw it, let me start evacuating the building. So I started going down to the lower levels and I ended up in the gym of the building, the nicest gym I've ever seen in an office building. There were like eight guys in there and they're like what's going on? I mean, they were like what's going on but like is anybody leaving the building yet? I'm like, listen, you've got to go upstairs to Duane Reade -- because as a matter of fact, before I went downstairs, I heard all this commotion and I'm hearing voices and shit and I'm like anybody still in there? I went back to the loading docks because I heard the commotion because it's an area where you can go down to the basement levels before you go to the loading docks, and I heard all this commotion in that area and I couldn't for my life figure out where it was coming from. So I went up to the loading docks, I yelled again, no one responded. As I'm walking back to the lobby area, I see a crack and I see people moving around and I go what's that? Oh, shit, that's Duane Reade, and I'm like -- you know, there's people being handed wet rags with water by the Lieutenant and he's telling everybody to walk east.

Q. Is this a PD Lieutenant or an EMS Lieutenant?

A. EMS Lieutenant.

Q. An EMS Lieutenant.

A. An EMS Lieutenant. He's giving people water and a wet rag and telling them to go east to the river, go east to the river. So everybody, you know, they're walking east. I'm like, Lieutenant, Charles, 5114, Battalion 13. He's like all right. He said something. He said we're going to get everybody else out of here. I went all right. So that's when I made the decision to go --

Q. Do you remember who that Lieutenant was?

A. No. I couldn't remember for my life who he was. But I remember going back to the basement levels to get everybody else out because I knew there was people still downstairs. So I wound up in the gym. Those guys had a TV set and that's when I found out we were under attack, because prior to that I thought Tower 2 blew up because the engine from the plane hit Tower 2 and exploded inside. It was like stupid, but that's what I thought. Then that's when I knew we were under attack. So I sat there for like 10, 15 minutes, looking at the TV set, and then I was drinking some more water and I was like crazy dehydrated because the bike ride alone wore me out, you know, my legs were just complete rubber.

So now I'm drinking water and at this point I'm with the EMT, Naomi. So we're getting everybody else out of the building. So we got those guys out the gym, then I started going lower than that and started getting people out of the office. At one point I went to an office and people were still working. I'm like get the hell out of here. What the hell are you guys doing? They're like okay, you know, they're locking up their stuff. I'm like go. Don't worry about that shit. They're like all right.

So then I had started walking through the lower levels looking for more people and ran into a maintenance room, which was like the best luck in the world because I found boots, because at the time I had Sketcher shoes on and those weren't doing me -- they did me good running from the towers, but after that I needed something heavy-duty. So I found -- and like, you know, which was the luckiest thing in the world, size 13, which are like the hardest shoes to find. So I found those, I put those on, and I started -- me and Naomi and another guy, the maintenance guy, we started walking back. So we walked back upstairs. We walked back upstairs and we started telling people get out of here. So then I told Naomi, you know, listen, get out of here, you know what I'm saying? She's like nah, nah, I'd rather stick with you. I'm like okay, cool. So we stuck together for like at least an hour. At this point I was just like walking around on the streets because there was nothing else to do.

So now we went into a building. At one point I went into a building and I ran into a few PD officers, they were like just sitting in there. I don't know what building it was, but it was next to J&R Music World. So we get into J&R Music -- I mean the building next to J&R Music World and they're talking and I overhear the cop telling everybody, yeah, it came over the radio that one of the planes are heading towards the Trade Center and that one of the planes were already hijacked. I'm like, to myself, I'm like, damn, they heard all this report of they hit the buildings. How come no one tried to evacuate the buildings in time? Whatever. At that point, I didn't know how many people died in the buildings neither, but I knew there were people in there. So we're chatting and stuff and then all right, whatever. So I leave them.

So now, a guy, a detective, for some reason lost his shirt, so he's like shirtless. So I ran back into the building to get him a T-shirt that was in the gym downstairs. I get the T-shirt, I run back upstairs, and he was gone. He moved. So then now me and the detectives, we're bringing up T-shirts and sweat pants and stuff like that from the gym level because we knew that there was going to be some half-naked people running around, you know, cut, severely cut or whatever and we could use a lot of that stuff as bandages and tourniquets and stuff. So we brought most of that stuff upstairs and we put it in the lobby of the building. We took the Gatorade from the Duane Reade and stuff, we put it in the lobby of the building, 222 Broadway, and we left it there.

So I went back outside and I saw two firefighters like sitting on the ground. It looked like they were just winded, like that was it for them, they weren't going to do anything else. One was Oriental and a white guy sitting together. I went back outside. I ran into another EMS Lieutenant, I don't know who he was, and I was with him for the better part of the day, until I left. I never got his name or anything. But at that point he told me to go to this bus. They had a city bus with all EMS equipment on it, like the defibrillator, oxygen and all that stuff.

So I got on there and a paramedic was like do you need some oxygen? Do you want some oxygen? It looks like you need some oxygen. I'm said I'm all right, I'm all right. He's like here, take some of this, it's free. I'm like all right. So I started breathing on the -- I took some 02 because I had a bad headache at that point and oxygen was doing nothing for me, so I put it down and I took it off. The Lieutenant was like, all right, we're going to go over to 225 Broadway, the building right next to the Duane Reade.

So we all grabbed some stuff and we lugged it over. We get into the building. We get to the building, actually. We didn't even get in the building yet because for some reason they wanted to get into Duane Reade. As opposed to walking right into 225 Broadway, they cut Duane Reade open and they used Duane Reade as like -- you know, because they had all the medical equipment and they had peroxide and alcohol and stuff like that. So if we get in there -- we could go in there just to cut into the building.

So now we're setting up triage in the building. They're setting up saline bags and sodium chloride and stuff, they're hanging them up. They had a nice little triage center going on. It looked like a little hospital. So at one point I disappeared because I needed to get some Tylenol. I got me an Excedrin from Duane Reade and popped two of those and the headache went away. All right.

So at that point now, we were just waiting for patients and nobody was coming in. It was like, you know. Then we ran into another Lieutenant, Lieutenant Davis. I think he's from Battalion 4, if I'm not mistaken.

(Tape side two.)

-- towers and I heard six loud explosions, and those six loud explosions changed my mind real quick and I went back over to the triage center and it was like you know what? Let me wait here. I had no helmet. I had nothing that would have protected me from anything that hit me in my head. So I stayed where I was at.

I remember at one point, I'm not pretty sure what point it was, I ran over to a hardware shop that the Fire Department had broken into to use a lot of the masks that they had in there. They had the Scott pack masks, and I found a Scott pack mask that was laying there because a firefighter had took a new one and I grabbed his and I put filters in it and I used that to breathe with and see because the dust was just messing my eyes up.

So I went back over to 225 Broadway and I was sitting in there, and now at that point we're just all talking, can't believe what's going on. At one point, amongst -- it was three EMTs and two paramedics that I can remember -- four paramedics. Two were HAZTAC and two weren't. It was just quiet and we were just sitting there waiting, and then me and another EMS guy, EMT, we were just like, yo, we can't just sit here and do nothing. So me and him, I never got his name neither, but me and him grabbed a tech bag and we just went outside. So we started heading over to where Building 7 was at and they were like Building 7 is going to collapse, you can't go over there, this and that, and there was another building that they thought was going to collapse that was like right behind the triage center, the building that we were in. So we started walking around.

At one point I was like -- at one point I almost broke down because I had thought my father was dead because he responded to the '93 bombing and he's a Port Authority cop, like I said before. He responded to the '93 bombing. He was on West Street in front of the tower. So I thought he might have been over there. So I said, if anything, I'm going to walk over there, try and work my way over there and look for him. So I'm going -- like I started walking towards Chambers now to look for him because I'm looking for a Port Authority cop and I knew that that's where everybody pulled back to, which was Chambers.

So I started working my way over there and I run into a group of police officers who were sitting in front of BMCC, BMCC's garden. There's a garden and then there's an apartment complex and that's where they were sitting. So we had a conversation. They had no idea -- they knew what was going on, but they didn't know how bad it was over there. So I started telling them what was going and they were like, Jesus Christ.

As I started walking back over to Chambers, going south again to Chambers, because we were a little north of Chambers where we ran into the police officers, I started walking -- me and the EMT started walking south, I had ran into a firefighter. I think, if I'm not mistaken, he said Engine 9 or Ladder 9. That's where I got that from. He was looking for his boys and he couldn't find any of them and he had nothing on, only his bunker pants, and he looked totally bent out of shape. It was like at the time it didn't even occur to me to help him and look for his guys because I didn't know so many firefighters had died in the towers like that. Then anyway, I was really concerned about looking for my father.

So I went back off and then I ran into Pete Rosie. I forgot what unit he was on. But I ran into him and he was glad to see me, I was glad to see him, it was a face that I recognized. So we started talking a little bit. We talked. I gave him some Excedrins because he had a bad headache, too.

So we walked, me and the EMT now, we walked over to West Street and Chambers where they had like all the EMS and firefighters and everybody was just there waiting, and I ran into Jerry Toyloy of Battalion 13. I ran into him. We were talking a little bit. I ran into another EMS guy from our station, but I forgot who he was. Then I started looking for my father again.

I ran into a carload of Port Authority cops. I jump in front of the car and almost got hit, and they stopped and they were like, you know, they looked at me like what the -- you know what I'm saying? I'm saying you guys know Rudy Charles? They were like, yeah, you're his son, right? I said yeah. You seen him? They were like, yeah, he's probably still over there in Jersey. I was like all right, all right, that makes sense. Keep the older guys over there and bring in the new guys. So I found out he was okay and my day was a lot better. So at that point now it was just about helping anybody who came out.

For at least three, four hours after that, there was just nothing to do. The triage center we were in had to be evacuated because they were pretty sure that building was going to come down into it. So we all moved over to Pace University. At that point there was just nothing but cops. I don't know why there were court officers over there. It didn't even make sense that the court officers were there. This is my opinion. But they were there like just milling around. Cops, firefighters, everybody was just helping out bringing all the equipment over to Pace University. Then they had an even better triage center set up over there. They had like little beds and stuff. At that point I ran into a few EMTs I recognized. I went into Salguera from 16. Let's see. Who else did I run into? That was it. Then I ran into a few fire cadet buddies that I graduated with throughout the day and that was pretty much it.

At one point, I think it was Lieutenant David, he had said -- it was around 7:00 o'clock at night. He had said for us to go home because they weren't going to pull anybody out, and I knew they weren't going to pull anybody out alive, but just in case they had a flood of bodies they were going to pull out, I could help. But at that point I was just very drained, pissed off, upset, sad, scared. It was like you know what?

So then I went back to my bike. I went back to my bike, which was on Dey, and she was completely a mess. Her tires were burnt off. She was completely dusted. So I took the chain off and I lugged her up -- I put the bike on my back and I started walking towards Chambers, and I ran into a firefighter, who questioned me about the fire jacket I had on. He had looked at me and he was like what are you doing with that jacket? I'm like I'm EMS. He's like, oh, okay. I'm like you think I'd be stealing a bike at a time like this? He goes, it's not the bike I'm worried about. [redacted]

Prior to that I did break open a command car just for -- you know, if anybody wondered why (inaudible). I broke into a command car. I had asked a firefighter at one point to open it up for me. I asked him for an ax or a Halligan tool. He was like, well, who are you? I was like I work for EMS. He was like you got any ID? Just the way he said it pissed me off, so I didn't even show him ID. I walked away. I go over to a police officer and I go, guys, can you do me a favor and open up the command car for me? Without any questions asked, ID or anything like that, he went over to the command car, busted the glass open, and we got all the equipment out of there like that.

There were few little triage centers, as a matter of fact, throughout the day that were like set up that started being shut down and moved to a bigger triage center. I found out there was one in Liberty Plaza. So throughout the day I was just helping collect equipment. I was carrying the tanks, the oxygen tanks. The crate holds, I think, ten, twelve, and I carried like one of those a whole block before I decided I wasn't superman because those things are heavy. I asked for help and carried it the rest of the way. But before I would have to go home, I had to take that bike on my back and walk from -- at that point I was where Pace University was at -- all the way to Canal Street carrying the bike on my back, and that was pretty much it.

I got home -- I got to 28th Street and I remember people just looking at me like, Jesus Christ, look at him, like they couldn't believe it. I went into a funeral parlor because they had a TV on and they were showing all this stuff that happened, and I had never actually seen the planes go into the towers because when I was in the gym, at the point when I was in the gym, I just heard we were under attack and that the Pentagon was hit and the Trade Center and Pennsylvania. But I didn't see the plane go into the building until I got into the funeral parlor like hours later, and I sat with them and they were like, oh, my God, you were down there? They're like, yo, you want some water? You want something to eat? You know what I mean? That felt good that they acknowledged me like that. I'm like no, don't worry about that. I just want to watch this real quick.

Then I got home, back to my at the time girlfriend, now wife. I got home and she was crying. I got home and my parents had thought I was dead because my mother is in Florida and my father, he was in Jersey. My brother decides to go to sleep at 9:00 o'clock, so he didn't know what was going on until 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon. He woke up to my mother yelling over the answering machine. He jumps up and he knew something was wrong because the way she was yelling. He goes over to the answering machine, 14 back-to-back messages. So he started listening to them. My wife had called. They were looking for me. Everybody was looking for me and my father, and they had knew my father was okay because that call came in at 2:00 o'clock, but they hadn't received a call from me until like 5:00, 6:00 o'clock. So they thought I was dead and my mother is making prayer and they're like, well, if he's gone, he went to hell. I'm like okay.

So after everything was said and done, I had to report back to work here the next day. I called my Lieutenant. I said I was off at 8:00. He said, well, you have to come back at 8:00 o'clock in the morning. I thought to myself the hell I am, you know what I'm saying? At that point everything started hitting me. It was just like it started to bother me and I just got really sad and depressed. I got back into work eventually about like 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon the next day, but I wasn't rushing back in because I was so tired and drained and it was like -- and to be honest with you, I should have never left that day. I should have just stayed there until I passed out of exhaustion or something. I shouldn't have left because I was tired that day and those guys who stayed there like two weeks straight and I went home. So that's the only thing I felt guilty about. If anything I felt guilty, it was that. I mean, it was just like the worst day in everybody's lives. I mean, I couldn't believe it.

I remember what pissed me off going home was the fact that everybody was like laughing and looking like they were going out to the bars and still eating in diners. I'm like I know people are supposed to go on, but that was to me a little too soon. People were out there laughing in the streets and then there's laughing and they stopped to look at me like, oh, my God, look at him, look at his bike. It was weird.

That's pretty much it. I mean, anything else that will come to mind, I'm trying to write a little scripture about everything I went through that day. So, of course, stuff like that will come back to me later. I guess that's pretty much it.

Q. Okay. Is there anything you'd like to add to this interview?

A. No, not really.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN PAUL CONLON

Interview Date: January 26, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF McGRATH: Today's date is January 23rd, 2002. The time is 1450 hours. This is Battalion Chief James McGrath of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Captain Paul Conlon of Engine 216.

This interview is taking place in Brooklyn headquarters at Nine Metrotech, and it's regarding the events that took place on September 11th, 2001.

Q. Cap, if you would please state your name and just recall the events to the best of your recollection.

A. Paul Conlon, Captain, and I was working in 216 Engine S.A. on September 11th.

We saw the first plane hit on TV. We watched actually, from the roof, the building burn, the roof of the firehouse 216 Engine. Not knowing the area, I didn't know when we were going to respond. So I went down and started to do a riding list and a roll call and stuff in case we had to either respond or relocate.

Then I heard guys yelling, "Holy smokes." I went in the kitchen, and the second plane had just hit. I watched that on TV. At that point I called the roll call in front of the rig. I gave out the riding positions, with the help of Dan Suhr. He was the senior man working. Actually I had worked with 216 the day before, so I met him the day before. He was working both days.

Dan had the control or the hookup, as he called it, Ted Murray was the chauffeur, Chris was the nozzle, and Tony Sanseviro was the backup. John Johnson was supposed to be detailed to another company; I don't know where. We got a message from the battalion everybody was going to ride with five. John Johnson was a proby. I gave him the door. He was going to be our fifth man.

Then we got the run to respond to the World Trade Center. I told the guys we are eighth or ninth due on fifth alarm. I told them to bring their shoes, we would be there a while. We take off. We took Broadway. We took the Williamsburg Bridge. I switched over to Manhattan frequency right way, because it was a Manhattan box.

As we were going up to the Williamsburg Bridge, I just pictured there was going to be a lot of traffic. The Williamsburg Bridge was closed to all traffic already except for us, except for the Fire Department.

So I went back to Brooklyn frequency, and I tried to get through to let them know that the Williamsburg Bridge is a good route into Manhattan. I tried two or three times, and I couldn't get through. I wanted to get back to Manhattan to see if they had any messages. I never got that message through.

I went back to Manhattan frequency, and they were telling us that units responding to Two World Trade Center, the fifth alarm for Two World Trade Center, report in to West and Liberty and report in to Chief Barbara at West and Liberty. I guess I was thinking they don't want to get us confused with the One World Trade Center response.

So when I heard that, I knew I wanted to approach from the south so we wouldn't be getting mucked up with the One World Trade Center response. So that's what we did. We got off the bridge. We made a left, probably on Allen Street, heading that way, heading south. I think we made our way over to South Street, still heading south.

When we got around the South Street Seaport, it was all blocked up, not just with traffic but with construction material. We couldn't get down the block. So we had to go West a little bit.

Now we went down whatever block that is, maybe Broadway. I don't know, whatever it was, we went down the block. We got to about the south ferry, and we had some trouble getting through traffic. I got out of the rig to try to get us through, and Dan Suhr got out. He said, "I'll go to the left." I said, "I'll go to the right." We'll try to find a way to get out. We were stuck in gridlock.

I got a traffic enforcement agent. He stopped some traffic. So we get through, jump back on the rig. Now we got right there now. So now we're on West Street. We parked about three blocks from the World Trade Center, because there was a spot there to park. There were rigs there already. I told the chauffeur to stop here, we'll park here.

We got off the rig, we parked, the guys got their gear, and we start walking up. We probably walked up about -- I thought it was two blocks or so. At this point a truck goes blowing by us. It was either 105 or 102. As I saw the truck go by, I thought, boy, we probably should have tried to park closer, because we're going to be doing a lot of walking. You kind of second guess yourselves sometimes. But we didn't.

So we walk up. We find Chief Barbara. Although they said West and Liberty, he wasn't north of the south pedestrian bridge; he was south of that bridge. So he was somewhere along West Street between Albany and Liberty when we reported in to him.

There were two other companies there, two engine companies, 205 and 217. Chief Barbara told me, "Quick tell your guys to put their gear down, open up their coats. We're going to be here for a little while." I turned around. We all had an extra cylinder with us, and the guys had their rollups.

I started to give that order. I put my cylinder down and starts opening up my coat, and the chief said, "Oh, nope, you're going to go into the lobby command post now." I said, "All right." So I buttoned my coat. I picked up my cylinder. The other guys never even put their stuff down. We said, "Okay, let's go."

He pointed to the lobby command post. Again, you could see the entrance. You can point to the lobby command post. He pointed to the entrance of Two World Trade Center. From where he was standing, you could see it. It was probably 200 yards or something.

I look at it. There's burning debris everywhere. There was an engine company north of us, north of that pedestrian bridge, putting something out, putting out a car fire or a large thing of rubbish or something. There was burning debris on the ground. There were people jumping.

So we're looking at the scene, and Dan Suhr said something like, "Let's make this quick." I was thinking the same thing. I said to the guys, "Let's go." We start walking. We walked in a diagonal line straight from the command post to the entrance of Two World Trade Center.

We're walking. 216, we're kind of leading the way. Not so much leading the way, but we just happened to be walking first. The other guys were still putting their gear on, I guess. 205 and 217 were right with us, though, somewhere a little behind us, though. There were no companies in front of me as I walked.

We got about halfway there, and Dan Suhr gets hit with a jumper. He was right to my right and behind me. It was as if he exploded. It wasn't like you heard something falling and you could jump out of the way. He gets hit.

The guy's are like, "Oh, fuck." They drop their rollups. I drop the cylinder. Me and another guy look at each other, and at the same time we both said, "Let's get him underneath the scaffolding." There was scaffolding across the way on the north side of 90 West Street at that time. There was scaffolding up.

So we go to pick him up. He's a big guy. Other firemen stopped to help us pick him up. I didn't know who at that time. I've heard who since. I think all of 205 Engine stopped to help us pick him up, and I think two members of 217 stopped to help us.

I don't know who helped actually pick him up or who helped do other stuff. We were taking his coat off. We were picking him up. Someone picked up his helmet and things like that.

I called, "Engine 216 to command post. Mayday. I have a member with life-threatening injury." One of the guy says he still has a pulse. They took his pulse right on the ground there. We got him under the scaffolding.

When I called the mayday, I also called for an ambulance at West and Liberty, because they couldn't have gotten an ambulance any closer to us. I didn't realize where Liberty was, really. I thought I was at Liberty. I guess I was at Albany.

I called for the ambulance. I called the mayday. We get him under the scaffolding. Two guys come running up with a long board. Two firemen came running up with an orange long board. They must have gotten it off their rig.

I think they were from 217.

We put the long board down. We put him on the long board. We take off his coat and his mask, whatever wasn't off already. The guys were doing CPR. The ambulance came up pretty quickly. They came running down the block, two medics, or they might have been EMTs. They were medics.

Two medics came running down the block with a stretcher. They put the stretcher down. We picked up the long board, put it on, we strap him on. One of the medics opens up his bag and starts going through his protocol. He's starting to take out syringes, you know. I said to him, "Let's just get him to the hospital," because very often they go through that protocol and it takes a long time. He said, "Yeah, you're right." So he closes up his bag.

We wheel him to the ambulance and put him in the ambulance. As we were putting him in, as the guys were putting him in, I called again, "216 to command post for a police escort," because it took us a long time -- we hit a lot of traffic getting there, and I just pictured them having trouble getting out of there.

Right as I called for it, a highway cop -- I talked to Chief Barbara again. A highway cop comes by, and I flag him down. He comes shooting over. I tell him what we want to do. I didn't know where they were going yet. I asked the EMT, "Where are you going?" He said, "St. Vincent's." I went back and said, "They're going to St. Vincent's. Is that all right?" So he winds his way in front of the ambulance.

When I got back to the ambulance, Dr. Kelly was in there. I don't know where she came from. She's still kind of just about about stepping out. She's looking at him. She goes to step out. I help her down. She looked at me, gave me a shake of the head like he's not going to make it.

Two guys from 216 are in there doing CPR, and I closed the doors and the ambulance takes off. I look around and it's me and the proby. That's the only guy that's left. I look at our gear where we dropped it, which is between us and the entrance. I think we can get that in a minute.

I said, "Let's go back to the rig and we'll regroup. We'll find the chauffeur." So we start walking back, and the building came down. That was it. We just started running. I'm saying Hail Marys. I don't know if I was saying them out loud or to myself.

We start running, and we're on West Street, West and Liberty. We're right at the corner of 90 West Street. There's that blank area there that's a parking lot. There were cars parked there, I think, in the parking lot.

We start running. 15 Truck is parked in front of us as we start to run. For a minute I was going to dive under it, and I didn't. But I went around like the right side of it, and the proby went around the left side of it. He is taller than me and he's younger, so he's running faster, which is good. He's ahead of me.

But when we got around to the other side of the rig, you can't see anything now. I thought I may have seen him off to my left, but I wasn't even sure. I'm just running now. The dust is all around us, so I don't know where he is.

I make my way back to the rig, which was probably parked I guess between Rector and Carlisle, as I'm looking at it, because we were about three blocks from the building. I got back to the rig. I found the chauffeur. I said, "Is the proby here?" He said, "No." Then I realize the chauffeur doesn't even know that Dan Suhr is probably dead.

I just said to him Dan's -- he said, "Where are the other guys?" I said, "Dan was hit by something. He's hurt. He's hurt pretty badly." I said, "He's hurt." He said, "How bad?" I said, "He's hurt pretty badly." I said, "The other guys went with him to the hospital."

At this point I said I've got to go see if I can find the proby. Civilians are coming up to us. They're covered in dust. The chauffeur takes out the EMS water and starts cleaning them up. I leave. I backtrack and went back to 15 Truck, calling out, "John Johnson." I had to look at my riding list to see his name, who was working. You know what I mean? "John Johnson," I'm calling out.

I go back to 15 Truck, because I knew I had seen him there, and I started working my way up there. I looked under it. I started working my way north. I looked down a couple of these blocks. I don't see him. I went south of where the rig was a little bit. I don't see him. I go back to the rig. I said, "Is he here?" He said, "No."

Then all of a sudden he appears -- I guess 20 minutes -- I don't know how much time went by. He comes back. So for a little while I'm missing him too, but he's back. We're still helping people out. Then I said, "We've got to go back. There's guys buried."

We start walking back. At one point in there, a member of either 216 or 108 came running by with shorts on and a helmet. He was off-duty. He's heading north. My chauffeur starts running after him, so I'm running after both of them, saying to the chauffeur, "Come back and get your gear." He has no gear, you know. So he stops, turns around to get his gear.

Then the north tower is coming down. I don't know where we were, probably around Albany Street on West Street, when the north tower came down. We're not running now. We're walking/running away from it, probably running. We hooked up with a paramedic.

The proby has his mask on, and he has his face piece on. I had a mask on my back, so I turned that on this time. We're mask sharing in the street now as we walk away. I'm sharing my mask with the chauffeur, who is on my left, and a paramedic, who came up out of nowhere, on my right. I told him, "Just breathe normally."

We're kind of walking. Then we stopped and were leaning and trying to breathe, sharing the mask. When the dust settles enough, we went back to the rig. This time it kind of repeated itself, but there were no civilians around anymore, just some cops and paramedics coming up to us. They're gagging and they can't breathe. We give them mostly water to help wash their eyes out, and they took sips of water.

I said to the other two guys -- they're looking at me like "What are we doing?" I said, "We've got to head back there. Obviously there's guys buried." They said yeah.

We start heading back. We probably got to around where the command post had been, maybe not even. I don't know where exactly, somewhere north of Albany Street. There's a chief there. I don't know who he was. He had a coat on and shoes and pants, no bunker gear. He said, "We have no water." He's in shock like the rest of us. He said, "We have no water." He's got this face on. We said all right.

So we start walking back. As we were going there, another company came by, I think 286 Engine. They came by like double time. They came by like really fast. We're walking kind of in shock going back north again, and they kind of ran by us.

When I got to this chief, he was asking for water. We both got there at the same time, so we both turned around to go back to our rig to try to find water. I don't know where 286 went then, though.

We get back to the rig. We probably made a left onto Rector Place, looking at this map. I know we made a right onto South End Avenue. We checked like five hydrants on South End. They were all dead.

So I get on the radio and said, "Engine

216 to command post." We were going to tell them these hydrants are dead. I'm just picturing like there's some kind of command post somewhere and they're going to say, all right, South End Avenue, the main is knocked out. We have to go to the north -- I'm figuring somebody is figuring this stuff out.

I said, "The hydrants are dead," and there's no answer. "Engine 216 to command post." There's just silence. There's nothing. There's just complete silence. I call again. There's no answer.

Now I'm on the rig, and over the Manhattan frequency I heard a fire boat. I didn't hear where they said they were, but they said something about on location. I said to the chauffeur, "Let's just head to the river, go find the fire boat," and we will try to get some water. We tried to go that route.

That's what we did. We went up Rector Place, I think, got onto that esplanade. We went over curbs. We weren't on like a road, really. I see the fire boat. It must have been at Albany. It was at Albany Street. So we shoot up to Albany Street.

Just as we pull up, another rig came down Albany Street, came West on Albany Street, right in front of us. So they hooked up to the fire boat, and we started stretching. We started stretching two lines: the fire boat line, which was like a five inch line, and a three and a half inch line from that rig that pulled up there.

Me and this guy who I was a fireman with, Danny Williams -- he's a Lieutenant in 16 Truck -- kind of hooked up. There were guys coming in all the time. It was very hard controlling what was happening. There were about 30 or 50 firemen stretched from the river to West Street, and they're trying to stretch these two lines.

They would get snagged on something, and we would have to say, "Stop. We've got to back up 10 feet." So we spaced ourselves. He went closer to West Street. I went closer to the river. We kind of stayed in touch with each other to try to get this thing going, to try to stretch these two lines.

Then there was a chief that showed up down at the fire boat. He was helpful. He was trying to organize things down there. We told him what was happening.

After probably an hour and a half to two hours, we had a rig at Albany and South End, we had a rig at West, and then another supplying stuff towards the World Trade Center. The rig on West Street was supplying a tower ladder, it was supplying lines that were heading towards the World Trade Center.

Once that was all in place, I'm thinking it was a couple hours that had gone by. I said to the guys, "You've got to take a blow." I had to take a blow. I was ready to pass out. People were walking around with jugs of water. So we sat down by the river for about ten minutes and drank some water, took our gear off.

We put our gear back on. We went on South End Avenue basically up to the site. I guess we went through Two World Financial Center, out a window and onto the pile. I told the guys to wait outside. They were waiting out in the courtyard out there. I went out and took a look around.

There were companies operating on fires and this and that. I saw a rig down below. I didn't know what it was. It was like two stories below me. I went down and searched under it and stuff. I came back up.

I saw Nigro come out with I think 126 Truck from Queens. He was coming out onto the pile. He looked the way I felt. I said to him, "Chief, there's a rig down here." He said, "Return to the truck." He said, "All right, guys, that's the first place you can look. Check this rig down here."

I went back. There was a manifold set up in a window or something coming onto the pile. I figured maybe we could get a couple lengths of hose and hook up to that manifold and operate. There were some fires burning. Seven World Trade Center was still just smoke coming out at that time. There wasn't a fire.

I go back to try to find some hose. Fresh companies were coming in with lines and stuff. When I got back, it dawned on me that these guys are wondering how the other guys are. I didn't know if the ambulance made it, so I was kind of concerned about that.

So I said to the guys, "Let's try to find out how Dan Suhr is doing." The chauffeur said to me, "Can we find out how Dan Suhr is doing?" I said, "Yes." I was worried about the ambulance. I was worried about all of them.

So we found somebody with a cell phone. I found somebody. The two firemen found somebody. I called the hospital. I couldn't really get through. They were much wiser. They called the firehouse, and they found out that Dan Suhr had died and that the other two guys were in the firehouse and that they were safe.

So the chauffeur comes back. I don't know how long he knew Dan for. [redacted]

We start heading back. I told him, "Go back to the rig, and I'll meet you there." So they walk down to the river. They're going back to the rig. I find the chief on -- I don't know where. I guess on Liberty. I find the chief of the 11th Division, actually. I don't know his name.

[redacted]

Afterwards I realized how ridiculous that was to even ask. We lost 343 guys. I felt bad even asking. After he said no, I was thinking of course we can't leave.

I head back. Now when I get back to South End and Albany, there's 216 Engine hooked up. Somehow someone moved it. We're right in the middle of the relay now. There's the chauffeur operating the pumps. I said, "Ted, we can't leave yet." He said, "Yeah, you know, I don't want to leave anyway." We all had the same kind of feeling.

That was pretty much then. He operated pumps. I wanted to see who we were supplying. We were on Albany and South End. I walked across West Street. There was another rig on West. No, our line went straight to 207 Engine, which was on Albany between West and Washington Street.

They were supplying one of the standpipes on 90 West Street, and they were supplying a hand line that went they said a couple blocks away there was a fire in the basement of a building. The guys were operating that.

That's what the chauffeur of 207 told me. He said, "We're supplying 90 West, and we're supplying the hand line" -- actually we were supplying two hand lines, one that went through a basement and one that went north toward Two World Trade Center. I said, "All right."

So I go back. Now I know who we're supplying. The chauffeur said, "We're down to half a tank." There were like three or four rigs around him. There was another rig right next to us in the relay, and I figured all the rigs are operating since this thing started and they're going to start to run out of fuel.

So I tried to call the command post to let them know we need fuel. I can't get through. So I walked back to Liberty. I hooked up with a chief. I asked him how we could get some fuel. He said, "We're having trouble getting fuel." He said, "Sometimes fire boats have it."

So I walked back. I sent the proby down. He went down to the fire boat. He told them we needed fuel. About a half hour later, they showed up with a pickup truck with a 55 gallon drum of diesel, but they had no way of getting it -- they didn't have a hand pump or anything.

So we found a hose, and we started to siphon. We supplied 216 and all the other engines. There was another engine -- I forget who it was -- operating right next to us. So we've got fuel.

In the meantime a chief from Jersey comes up to me with a piece of paper with three names on it, and he said, "These are three firemen. They're in a hospital in New Jersey. In case you have them, at least you know, whatever." I don't remember who they were. So I walked back to Liberty, and I gave that to a chief I met over there. He said, "All right. Thanks. I'll take care of it."

Q. Do you remember the chief's name?

A. I wish I could. I'm sorry. I didn't know his name. I didn't know him. I met a couple chiefs that I knew. I met Jack Rooney. He asked me, "What did you do?" I told him. When I mentioned Chief Barbara, he asked me, "Where did you see him last?" And I told him.

Q. That was my next question. Where did you last see Chief Barbara?

A. I last saw him at the command post. Where he set the command post up, it was just north of Albany. There's a building there, One Financial Center. It was right at the corner of that building, his command post, and it was on the west side of West Street. This is West Street here, not really the West Side Highway.

The command post was just north of the corner of One Financial Center when I walked up to him. There was kind of a natural place to have a command post. There was a cutout, decorative concrete or something right there. This was an area that didn't have it. So he was standing there.

Q. That would have been just prior to the collapse, then?

A. Well, when we reported in to him, he was there. When I called for an ambulance, I'm assuming he was there, but I didn't see him there. But when it collapsed, we were closer to the building than that location. So I don't think he was there.

I thought about it a lot afterwards. He must have walked towards the lobby command post. That's all I can assume. You know what I mean? Like we're walking into the lobby command post. He must have been behind us walking in or something.

After we put Dan in the ambulance and the ambulance took off, basically the building collapsed. We were at the corner right at 90 West Street. That command post is across the highway and a little further south than where we were.

That doesn't mean that he didn't get -- he hasn't been found, though, I guess, so he couldn't have been there. If he was there, they would have found him, because there wasn't a whole lot of debris there, I know from afterwards. There was some steel.

That's where I reported in to him, Chief. I reported in to him at his command post, which was on the west side of West Street just north of the corner of One World Financial Center. That's the last place that I saw him.

Q. Can you think of any other radio transmissions that you heard that would be helpful?

A. Yeah. Well, I heard the whole transmission with the marine company chief -- what's his name -- that was trapped? I'm drawing a blank on his name. Santos or something? I'll think of it.

Q. Al?

A. Al, yeah. Santuro?

Q. Santuro? No, no.

A. Anyway, I heard him. He was trapped either in his car or under his car. When I was on the rig at one point and we're looking for water -- we talk about how dumb you are at sometimes -- I heard a transmission, a mayday, given.

Q. Al Fuentes?

A. Al Fuentes. Al Fuentes.

I heard the transmission of a mayday given I think by a fireman. It had to be a fireman. Over the department radio, though. The first thing I thought of, you don't give maydays over the department radio; you give only urgents, you know. Afterwards I realized, "For Christ's sake, if he's giving a mayday, he's trapped somewhere."

I didn't know the buildings collapsed until about 1 in the afternoon, that they came down completely. I knew there was a collapse. Until we were supplying water and I got there and looked and the dust had settled enough, I couldn't believe they both came down completely.

As far as other guys and other transmissions I heard, just a whole series of transmissions with Rescue 3 and Captain Tiso, who was trying to get to guys. He got in a little bit of trouble for a while.

Him and some other members, apparently they were up on the pile. They were in a bad spot. He stayed calm through the whole thing. It was amazing. But they had to backtrack their way out, and there was fire lighting up behind them. They needed a line.

Q. Was before the second collapse or after?

A. No, no, that was after.

Q. Afterwards?

A. Yeah.

And 6 Truck getting out. They were trapped for a long time, and they finally got out. "6 Truck, you out?" "Yeah, we're out. We're out in the street."

After the first collapse as far as radio transmissions, I really don't remember hearing any radio transmissions. I would swear that there weren't any, but I know there were because I talked to other people that said there were.

Q. How about do you recall any radio transmissions before the collapse?

A. Not really, other than -- no. We weren't there that long before the collapse. We reported in, and we were sent in. Then I'm giving a mayday, and they collapsed. That's the way it seemed.

Q. You mentioned 217.

A. Yeah.

Q. You said they were with you. But was the whole company with you?

A. When I got to the command post, the command post was two engine companies and Chief Barbara -- that was it -- and I guess his aide, although I don't really remember even seeing his aide. I kind of just remember him. I had never met him before.

When we got there, 217 Engine and 205 Engine were there, and they were just standing fast. Now we get there. I reported in the tenth due, the fifth alarm. I don't know what we are. He said, "Fine."

Then when he sent us in to the lobby command post, he sent all three companies, all three engines. All three of us were going to go in. We all started walking. I was walking in front of the other two companies, so I don't know exactly where they were. But I know they were with us, because we all picked up our gear. They were picking up their gear, buttoning up their coats.

205 Engine, all of them I believe stopped to help us. Since then I talked to a guy over there and they said they all stopped to help us. 217, I think two guys stopped to help us, as far as I understand it. I'd like to find out more about who it was. I don't even know who stopped to help us. But I think two guys stopped to help us.

It wasn't like I was taking a head count at that moment. I just knew guys stopped to help us. I know two guys came running along with a long board. I'm assuming they ran out to West Street to get it. I don't know if they ran out to their rig or where they got it. But they had the presence of mind to get a long board, and that's what they did. I think they were from 217. I think they were the two guys.

I don't know where 205 went. Once we were under the scaffolding and once the long board came and we were wheeling him down the block, it was me and my guys, basically. Once we got him in the ambulance, there were no other firemen around but us.

The ambulance takes off and --

Dr. Kelly disappeared. I don't know where she went. During the day I heard that she didn't make it. I'm dying, because I said, shit, I was just with her and I saw her.

Other than Danny Williams of 16 Truck, I believe either 284 or 286 Engine was running along with us, and that was after both collapses. So before both collapses, I just saw 205 and 217 Engine, and I really didn't hear too many transmissions.

Q. Is there anything else that you can think of that you might want to add to this or anything that might be helpful to us?

A. Other than on our side of it, on the south side, there were a lot of people there hearing the same thing. I know Visconti and Fellini, they really took over on that side, the two chiefs, two deputies. There was no unit designations, just "Chief Visconti, Chief Fellini, what do you need?" "I need two engines," or whatever. They were going back and forth. There was no radio traffic for a while.

As far as the rest of the day, we just spent it running up and down and checking hoses.

Then once I got relieved, I got relieved there about 5:30. I went out on the pile for a while, looking around. I wound up eventually making my way home. I was there and went back to work the next day.

CHIEF McGRATH: All right. The hour is 1525. This will conclude the interview, then.

I thank you so much for all your help and all your support for this. Thank you very much.

CAPTAIN CONLON: Okay.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER TIMOTHY BURKE

Interview Date: January 22, 2,002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

BATTALION CHIEF McGRATH: Today is Tuesday, January 22, 2,002. The time is 1611 hours. This is Battalion Chief James McGrath of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Timothy Burke of Engine 202. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001 and is taking place in the quarters of Engine 202 in Brooklyn.

Q. Timmy, please state your name and just recount what happened on September 11 to the best of your recollection.

A. My name is Timothy James Burke from Engine 202. I was working September 11. I got in at 8 o'clock in the morning. The first plane had hit a little later. We watched it from the roof of the building. Then they called us to a staging area around quarter to nine, I think, which would be the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. From the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel staging area, we watched the second plane come in.

As soon as the second plane came in, they sent us into the tunnel. We spent a few minutes in the tunnel. Seemed like a lot of traffic in the tunnel. It was rumored that they were blowing up the tunnel then. We got through, we drove over what felt like gravel, because there was so much glass and debris around. I saw a plane tire in an alley, body parts and people all over the place. We pulled up, as soon as we got up in front of the building, I think we were right in front of the Vista Hotel, they made a statement that we should keep moving forward, so our rigs -- we got back on the rigs, then we moved to position right in front of, looks like the Merrill Lynch building, which is 2 World Financial Center.

From there we proceeded to, that would be the staging area, which is the two garage tunnels. Their staging area was right at the throat of the garage tunnels. Our officer stayed with the command post and the engine and truck went into one of the garages where all the firefighters were starting to meet up.

As soon as that happened, the Chief ran over, started screaming that the engine should be on one side, the truck should be on another. That's the last I saw of 101. That's the last we saw from 101. Then they were split from us. There was just all engines on that side. A guy from 211 had a cell phone and we were all trying to call our families. At this point, this was a few minutes into the box, few minutes into us being there, I would say about 5, 10 minutes.

It seemed pretty bad that everybody was willing to get on the phone and try to call their wives to say good-bye or say whatever. Just the faces of people, you kind of knew that some of us were going to get hurt, because it was just too too too much going on. I had a radio and I was the nozzle man. I had a radio. There was a calling for water, they had no water, they had no water, I thought it was coming from Engine 10. I'm not sure. Then there was a call out that one engine was on the 19 floor, and that if they expect them to get to 34, it's going to be at least an hour. I forget the number of that engine.

There was a lot of chatter. There was chatter that a fireman was hit by a jumper, to keep your heads up, to keep an eye out on what was going on. We learned that was Danny Suhr. At one point, at the beginning of us getting there, at one point, we got off the rig. We got all our gear and we needed something else off the rig, so Bobby Norris and I ran to the rig and I looked at him and I wasn't going to go unless he went and he wasn't going to go unless I went, because it looked a little hairy, not that we wouldn't go. It was just we wanted to stay with each other, make sure everything was okay with each other because there was a lot of stuff coming down.

That's when I saw the guy from Rescue 1, Anginelli, the older guy, and I wasn't sure what he wanted. He looked a little old and I was wondering what he was doing. He wanted an extra Scott pack if we had one on our rig. We searched the rig for a Scott pack. Then I found out that he is not with us anymore. I remembered just speaking to him.

Then we faded back to the garage and they started sending companies in. It was like they weren't grabbing officers at this point and saying get your company together. They were just grabbing full sets of men. We weren't a full set of men, we were just me and Bobby standing at the line. Our chauffeur was sitting with our detail from 20, Pete. His wife was in the building.

When the plane hit, he called his wife to say, when the plane hit tower one, he called his wife to say get out of tower two. When we got to the box, he was sitting on the side just worrying about his wife. He was ready to go but he wasn't sitting with us. So when they started taking companies without officers, they started grabbing full groups of guys. They were just grabbing guys on either side of us.

Then there were still a bunch of guys there. Still guys in the streets, still everything going on. Another Chief came over and said you are going to be there for a while, start loosening up, because there was already radio contact that guys were falling in the stairs with heart attacks and stuff. Things like that. Guys were going down, guys weren't making the stairs.

Q. Do you know any specifics, any companies?

A. No, it was just -- I don't know if it was radio or rumor, but when the Chief came over, he said everybody, you are going to be here a while. Loosen up, loosen up.

Q. Do you know who the Chief was?

A. No, I don't remember. I remember one guy there was Metcalf. He was -- I remember him from proby school. He was a Lieutenant in proby school, [redacted]

[redacted]

The other Chief ran over and he seemed like a Chief for a little while, he seemed liked a little older. He says everybody calm down, you are going to be here a while. Take your gear off, stay cool, you don't want to heat up now. Some of the guys started taking their masks off, the jackets off. I remember we made a nice pile of stuff. I remember where our pile was. Then we were sitting there and waiting to get called in, then the radios are going, calling for water, calling for this, calling for that, you know, different things going on on the radio that right now it's hard for me to remember exactly all the chatter. But it was very -- seemed chaotic but not out of control, you know.

When we were standing there and like I said, people -- you just saw people moving, all people moving and if you looked at tower one you saw jumpers. You could hear the sound of jumpers. When you looked at tower two, you saw more flames. So I'm standing in the street, you could look for jumpers to your left and flames to your right, because tower two was more involved.

At that point I was going, where the hell are the choppers? That's my mentality, going where the hell are the jets, where the hell are the choppers. I am thinking there was going to be another plane and every time we heard noise people thought it was another plane coming in and so everyone would like flinch.

Then the building popped, lower than the fire, which I learned was I guess, the aviation fuel fell into the pit, and whatever floor it fell on heated up really bad and that's why it popped at that floor. That's the rumor I heard. But it seemed like I was going oh, my god, there is a secondary device because the way the building popped I thought it was an explosion.

When that happened, they all started fading into the garage, masses of people. I'm thinking this building is coming down. We are going to be covered by two buildings. I didn't know if it was a good idea to run for the garage at that time. I was really saying I'm going to be killed by two buildings, they are not going to find me until they uncover one building. So with the amount of people rushing me, we ran through the garage. We kept running through. The only thing we could think about was trying to get as far into the building as possible, which was weird. I just wanted to get deeper and deeper, further and further away, which was my mentality.

The guys were following us, me and Joe. We all ran up till we got to like a -- what looked like a workman's shanty, because it was plywood locked up door. Just a temporary door. Usually construction workers keep their tools in there. It's something I know because I used to work in the construction field. It would be like a tool lock or something, just something temporary made. I remember trying to break into there, just to get that much further in.

All of a sudden the noises stopped, the sound of the building falling stopped. We all turned around and it was dark now. We really couldn't see. We got back to where -- we went back to the garage as far in it as we were, we were all full of the cloud. The cloud was in there. All eating the cloud, whatever it was like, very thick. I keep saying it was like a 3 dimensional object. It wasn't smoke. It was like everything. It was like a sand storm. We only had bunker pants on at this time.

I was with Bobby. I don't know what happened to anybody else, but it was very silent after the building fell. Then all the Maydays started happening, the guys were screaming. You only tune into certain numbers. Like I heard 131 looking for their irons man. I just kept hearing that back and forth. Bobby Norris and I stayed together the whole time. We were like -- if I was going anywhere, it was with him and he was doing the same thing. I kept on saying to myself, where is 101, because that's my company. So where's 101?

I kept not hearing them and I knew it was a different group of guys that kept on saying they screwed up, something happened, they screwed up. Either they are all together or they are all screwed up. I kept hearing 131 looking for the irons man, the irons man answering back.

I think I heard Sean Albert from 279 call for his guys. I know I heard Sean call for his company. I think it was 279. I don't know. I don't remember exactly. I just remember 131, because 131 (inaudible), come on, speak. We didn't hear anything. I made a choice with Bobby to go get our gear. We felt that if we were going to be here for a long while, I want my helmet, my jacket, if I can get my cylinder. I actually had a size up of the garage because when we first got there we looked around the garage. So I knew exactly how far it was from this one stairwell and when we found the stairwell I knew our gear was 15, 20 feet up and that would be 10 feet from the entry of the garage.

So I went for it. I went for my gear, Bobby came with me. We grabbed our gear, we grabbed each cylinder -- Scott packs and I grabbed an extra Scott pack. We both, we both started falling back. Somebody had ran a search group to a back stairwell, which was a pretty good idea. From the stairwell I knew, it would have put us right into the atrium. So we didn't know if that was a good idea to go in there, the atrium being that cafeteria in between the buildings. It's not really a cafeteria. It's like a table area where you can sit down and have coffee, whatever. Part of a mall you would say, because the bottom level was a mall.

The stairwell I knew would lead us right into that area. So we didn't think that was a good idea to take, plus we didn't have our officer, the chauffeur or the back up man and it was just me and the control man together. Then Lieutenant Calkins was looking for us. We were calling back to him. I think he was already outside on the -- outside where the Moran's bar side is. I was right there, which is the Pier. Everything is whatchamacallit, landmarks, Moran's bar was the landmark. He was already out there, but Bobby and I were still inside. We actually thought of going back out the way we came in, but there was no visibility and when we got up for our gear, the aluminum facade was laying across the stuff. I thought it was duct work, because we had no visibility, and it felt like duct work. I'm going holy geez, the building came apart that much. There is pieces of duct work all over the place.

If there was visibility, we probably would have went out, knowing that we had an exit out the front, but there wasn't visibility, so we faded back again. That's when we got in touch with Calkins, and Calkins was calling back and forth to us. We finally hooked up. We went outside.

Q. Where did you meet the Lieutenant, in the garage?

A. In the garage, by the search rope. What Bobby and I did was one of us stayed by the search rope. The other guy would go out 10 feet and come back and we would work our way down, looking for things, looking if we could go any further from where we were.

This way we had an idea what was going on. We worked the search rope down to where I knew of a stairwell, because at least if we had to bail out I knew of one. We stayed at that point. That's where Calkins followed us, followed the search rope. We kept on saying we were on the rope, we were on the rope. He followed the rope down and found us. We proceeded outside.

When we had gotten out we were on the Pier side and that's another reason why it saved us, because we were isolated from the other building. We were here. We came out back here and we were here. The Winter Garden would be the atrium. So somewhere around here I had found a stairwell, but we didn't take that one. We took a stairwell that was over here. We popped out over here. There were just guys falling. I remember running. When the building first started coming down, I remember running and following guys from 204, because Ziegler had a cut on his hand, and I kept on telling him I was following his blood trail. So we made a little joke out of it, because he was doing pretty good.

That's before we lost all visibility. Then I don't know what happened to them. I knew 204 was in there with us, but I didn't know where 224 was. I didn't know where anybody else was. I just remember Ziegler from 204 before we lost all visibility. We popped out over here, we all got together. There was 5 of us, the whole Engine Company, and 3 complete sets of bunker gear, because we had no tools, we had no anything. Just 3 cylinders and three complete sets of bunker gear, because everybody went -- like I said the Chief told us break down and take your stuff off, and then the buildings came down and nobody had really a chance to recover their gear.

Then one guy was screaming, let's all get together, let's all get together. The Lieutenant says the first building fell, the second building will. Let's keep moving. We left. We started walking on the Pier. When we got around Moran's bar over to where the floating hospital is --

Q. Stop for one second, okay.

A. Back on?

Q. Yes.

A. We got out of the building and --

Q. You were heading north?

A. We were heading north under the Lieutenant's instructions that the first building came down, the second one will. Let's keep moving. So we moved around and we got to -- they had that ferry, that floating barge. We got there. The other building started coming down. We ran and at this point there was a good hundred firemen running, guys were tripping, we were worried about getting covered with debris. We actually got covered with the cloud again over on the Pier side up there.

We ended up getting separated a little bit again, but it wasn't bad because we were outside. When we got up to there, and I guess it's called River Terrace by this map. We were going up there, like I said the second building had fallen. Now we were cut off from the first building by being on the Pier side. So we had to walk around to get to around there, we had -- I think at this point is when we knew everything was all haywire.

Q. Did you hear any radio transmissions at that point that you recall?

A. Not that I recall. It was just hectic. Really was. We went up to the corner -- somewhere over here and there was two ferries. There was a couple of hurt firemen, we helped them on the ferry. I remember that. We were standing there and it was like I don't know exactly what time it was, but I knew it was the morning and then we looked at the officer and we asked if we can go try and get some water or something for us and for whoever needed it.

We went into Stuyvesant High School, Bobby and I, and we commandeered a dolly. We filled it with sandwiches and juices and we started handing them out to whoever needed it. We just started helping people on the Pier side. We started helping firemen and civilians, on to the ferry boats. They kept going back and then all of a sudden when we got that dolly filled with all the stuff, we got back to the Pier side and the ferry came in with water. We threw water on the dolly, we wheeled that dolly for about a half an hour around the Pier and wherever we were going. We ended up at West Street, I would say probably around Murray. That's the corner where Stuyvesant High School is, if that's the street. I'm not really sure if it was -- I think we were further down than Vesey. I think we were at Murray.

We ended up over there and then all the second wave of firemen came in and you could see the difference between the first wave firemen and the second wave firemen, because the first wave firemen had the look in their eyes like oh, my god, you don't even know what happened.

At that point we were just I think, everybody, the emotions were fried. Just wondering -- like, you wanted to do things, but we couldn't do anything. We got down there. At one point in the day we walked down there, we just got beat up with that sand storm again and we faded back. The rest of the day we were unloading trucks. We were just doing whatever little things we could do, but they were waiting for 7 World Trade Center to fall. I didn't call my wife until 4:00 o'clock that afternoon to tell her I was okay.

Then the Lieutenant called his wife because we couldn't get in touch with anybody or anything. We didn't know what the hell was going on. It was just people all over the place. Firemen kept showing up and they said anybody on the recall that wasn't there before the building fell, they looked like they were just going to work. All the guys who were there before the building fell had this gaze in their eyes, like holy shit.

Q. Was there any radio transmissions or anybody you might have run into that you might be able to add that might help us?

A. I don't know right now. Not really. Like I said, I seen Angelini looking for a mask.

Q. Did he get one, did you find one?

A. I didn't have one on my rig. I saw a couple of things in the water. They had no pressure. They had no water. I heard 131.

Q. You mentioned earlier that Engine 10 was yelling they didn't have any water. Do have any idea what their location was?

A. No, no. I think it was Engine 10 looking for water there. They had no pressure. There was people with no pressure fighting the fire. That's from what I remember.

Q. Do you know if they were in the towers or they were fighting fires in the street?

A. I'm not even sure. It was at the beginning of everything. It was basically I just remember hearing it. I just remember, holy geez, there is no water anywhere, because I heard everything was wiped out. They just kept asking people to hook up to the building from what I remember. They were trying to augment from as many places as they can.

Q. All right. Is there anything else that you can think of that you might want to add at this time before we complete the interview?

A. I think I gave you a quick version.

BATTALION CHIEF McGRATH: You gave me an excellent version. All right. The time is 1636 hours. I want to thank you very much and this will conclude the interview then. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ANGEL RIVERA

Interview Date: January 22, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 22nd, 2002. The time is 1130 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER RIVERA: My name is Firefighter Angel Rivera.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Firefighter Angel Rivera is assigned to Ladder 12 of the New York City Fire Department. We are in the quarters of Ladder 12. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Angel, in your own words tell us what happened.

A. Okay. That Tuesday morning I came to work at 9:00 the 9 by 6 tour. So I was changing clothes and getting ready for work. There was excitement going in the firehouse: It's a bomb, it's a bomb, the World Trade Center is on fire. I never saw the plane hit, the first one, but I was watching the news and we were practically glued to the TV set. There were rumors it was a bomb. Some of the people said it was a plane. Some people saw the plane. We actually didn't know what happened the first time.

We were here, just waiting to be called to go. The battalion chief was called first with Engine 3. They responded first. We were left behind. As the second plane hit the second tower, we were called. It was a fifth alarm on first call. We responded to the second fifth alarm going on.

Going down Seventh Avenue, everybody's looking. You can see the towers. It was terrifying what we were seeing from the rig: both towers, the black smoke pouring out. We got there. I think we came on Liberty Street and Water Street. That's where we parked the rig.

We got off the rig. We could see people jumping out. We could see body parts all over the place. We were told go to the second tower, report to the lobby. We went and we reported to the command post. I don't remember who the chief was.

Q. This was in the second tower?

A. The second tower, the second tower hit, yes. We reported over there. We were there about ten minutes before the chief told us go to the Marriott Hotel, go from the 14th floor up, search and evacuate all the floors.

So we walk all the way up, no problem. Then we hear the explosion and debris falling. We were looking out of the windows and see body parts all over the place. It was scary. It was very sad.

We searched 14, 15, went in one lobby, we came out the other way, we went in one stairway, came up -- when we hit the 19th floor, something horrendous happened. It was like a bomb went off. We thought we were dead.

The whole building shook. The brick coming out of -- the door to the hallway into the hotel blew off like somebody had thrown it all over the place. It shook all over the place. We were thrown on the floor.

We looked inside the lobby after everything calmed down, and everything was collapsed. The building was still shaking and we're still hearing explosions going on everywhere, so we decided let's get out of here.

After we decided to get out of there, we dropped everything. We had a roof rope; we dropped it. We didn't think about retaining our tools. We just wanted to get out of there. We ran all the way down to the fourth floor where we ran out of stairs. There were no more stairs.

On the fourth floor we were all safe. Everyone was there, including a couple of guys from other companies.

Q. Do you know what companies they were from?

A. I think 38 Engine or something like that. I can't recall.

We met on that floor, and we were all safe. We were all like -- we could have been over here. What happened, we looked out of the window of the hotel, the wall, practically, because the window was all blown up. There was no way out. The only way out was the roof rope.

So Lieutenant Petti, who was in charge that day, and Firefighter Angel Juarbe decided to go retrieve the rope. Angel said, "I'll go get it." Lieutenant Petti said, "All right. I'll go with you." So they went.

I gave them a call like five minutes later.

Q. Mention what channel you were on.

A. We were on Channel 3. It was very hard to communicate to the command post. We had no idea what was happening. We had no idea that everything was gone. We were on Channel 3 and calling. I said, "12 Engine, 12, where are you?" "We're there. We're on the way down."

On the way down they heard a mayday, "Mayday, mayday. This is Firefighter Brennan from 4 Truck. I'm trapped. I'm in the Marriott Hotel. I'm on the upper floor." Lieutenant Petti said, "Turn your pass alarm on so we can find you." He said, "I'm in pain. I cannot move. I'm losing consciousness. Please hurry." This is the last time I heard Lieutenant Petti say, "Keep talking. Keep talking. We're going to find you."

When we came down to the fourth floor, we encountered two civilians there, one older fellow and one younger fellow. Mike Mullan, which is another of our guys who lost his life, was with us.

When Lieutenant Petti and Angel Juarbe tried to find this fellow from 4 Truck, Mullan decided to go -- he was with me on the fourth floor. We were safe. Mullan said, "I'm going to go up and give them a hand." The proby, a brand-new guy, wanted to go, and he asked me, "Should I go?" I said, "No. Just stay with me." The proby stayed with me.

Mike Mullan walked one flight up, and then the most horrendous thing happened. That's when hell came down. It was like a huge, enormous explosion. I still can hear it. Everything shook. Everything went black. The wind rushed, very slowly [sound], all the dust, all the -- and everything went dark.

We were rolling all over the floor, banging against the walls. We separated from each other. I thought I was alone. I thought I was buried alive. After a while -- we waited and waited and waited, and when the smoke and the dust started to give way, we could see a little light from where the stairway went. So we said, shit, this is the light of heaven or something or this is the light to get out.

The older guy was beside me. I touched him in the dark. I knew there was somebody there. Shit, if we're going to die here, make it fast. When the smoke cleared up, we saw the light very, very slowly just getting clear. Jesus Christ. We were exhausted. We were depleted.

Q. Are you still in the stairway or did you get out into the lobby?

A. No, the guys that were in the stairwell -- I was in the lobby. The guys in the stairway just fell down. That was Heinz Kothe and two other guys. They fell down the stairs. They were trapped somewhere down below, and they managed to get out, dig themselves out.

Q. What company were they in?

A. 12 Truck.

Q. 12 Truck?

A. Yeah. Those were the other guys, who were all there in the lobby.

When that happened, these guys were trying to get down, trying to find their way to try to make a hole through the rubble to follow the stairway, where the stairway was, to get to safety. That's when the second tower came down.

When the second tower came down, we had no idea what was going on. We thought another plane, another bomb, another as a second device. We thought, this is it, we are dead.

When that happened, as I told you before, everything was black. It was like being inside a storm or volcano or something, something horrendous. We said we're going to die, we're going to die, God help us. I thought that was it, after that it was no more, no more talking. That was it. We were all quiet and said where are we, what happened.

The smoke cleared up, the ashes or the cement or whatever. There was a little opening. All the rubble had fallen and had formed like a ledge. First we walked out and we could see all the buildings building materials, all the beams, everything. I said, "Jesus Christ."

We tried to walk through that rubble. It's very, very dangerous. I had an older guy with me. The older guy said, "What am I going to do?" I said, "Stay with me. I'm going to get you out of here." He said, "But I'm an older man. I've just had heart surgery." Actually he said to me, "I don't think I can make it." I said, "Well, you're going to try, and we're going to make it." Actually he was very cooperative.

We walked out onto the rubble. We're thinking it can collapse also and we're going to be dead if we stand here too long. So finally we found out where there was a beam. Maybe God put it there. It was an enormous beam about 20 feet away from us that was against the building but to the level where we were, like it started where we were, all the way to the ground.

One of the guys said, "This is our way out." So we all went that way. But the other guys were eager to get out. You don't blame them. They all went that way. I have an older guy with me. What am I going to do now?

What happened, I told him, "Okay, do you see what they do? You're going to do that." He said, "No, I can't." "Yes, you can." He said, "Okay." I grabbed him by the collar here. I put him on the beam. I said, "Just make sure you keep your balance. Just slowly slide down all the way down. I'll be right with you." So that's how we got out to the bottom.

When we got out to the bottom, there was a lot of debris, a lot of water, a lot of poles, more beams that we have to walk through to get to safety. We got out. There was nobody around. There was a mist.

Finally somewhere in the distance we could see some like people walking, and there were some firefighters that were walking around. The old man, I took him all the way out and I handed him to a cop, to a policeman, which took him out to whatever, to safety, and he was transported to New Jersey or whatever.

This man is keeping in touch with me. He found me through the Men'S Journal. One of the guys here was interviewed, and he gave all the accounts. He mentioned my name, that I was the last one out, carrying this older guy. This older guy, which lives in Florida, found the article. He called the firehouse. Ever since we've been best friends. He said, "Thank you for saving my life. What a coincidence to be saved by a firefighter named Angel."

That's what I can tell you, Chief.

Q. Anything else you want to say, anything at all?

A. That's it.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Thank you for your cooperation, Angel.

FIREFIGHTER RIVERA: Oh, you're quite welcome, Chief.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: It's now 11:45, and that's the end of this interview. Thank you

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER CRAIG DUNNE

Interview Date: January 22, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 22nd, 2002. The time is 1225 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER DUNNE: Craig Dunne.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Craig Dunne is a Firefighter six grade, assigned to Engine 1 of the New York City Fire Department. We're at the quarters of Engine 1. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. In your own words, Craig, please tell us what happened that day.

A. We got the ticket about 9 a.m. We were over at the Garden on an EMS run. We heard the box come in. We heard the first couple units down there on the scene. They were screaming that a plane went into a building and had numerous fire showing on numerous floors, numerous exposures.

We took up from that run and came back to the firehouse. We got the ticket around 9:00. We knew pretty much that we were going to be heading down there. So we got our stuff down. We were pretty much on the rig. We just pulled up to the quarters when we got the ticket.

We headed down and we took the West Side Highway. I had the door position that day, so my back was facing the chauffeur. So I really didn't get to see much on the way going down to the towers.

We got there and parked the rig in front of the customs building just by the first pedestrian walk just north of tower one.

Q. On West Street?

A. On West Street, yeah. We were on the eastbound lane of West Street, eastbound side. There were a couple of parked cars. Lieutenant Desperito was with us. He told us grab an extra rollup, extra bottles and take our regular rollup and an extra rollup. He just said stay together.

We proceeded to go into the lobby of tower one. We got in there. The glass was down in the front. There was a gentleman -- you saw people that were jumping from the building. You had to look up and make sure you didn't get hit by any jumpers or anything. We saw a couple of people that were burnt on the outside of the building. There was a gentleman that was burnt inside when we went in.

We went over and got into the lobby and went over to where the fire command center was, the board. The fire command board was on the wall. There were a couple of gentlemen behind there. There were a few chiefs in there. I don't remember who exactly was in there.

When we got to the command post, whoever was the incident command that day, they teamed us up with 15 Engine and they told us to head towards the 70th floor.

Engine 1 and 15, we started proceeding up the B stairwell, passing other people coming down; no firemen, just a lot of people. There was no smoke condition or anything like that going up.

We stopped at 12. Actually there was emergency service that was with us also. I'm not sure what truck it was. There were actually two emergency services trucks, four guys, and some Port Authority police also.

We stopped at 12 and took a little break, let some of the people come down. That was maybe a minute or two. Then we proceeded to 22, where the Port Authority command post was, I believe was. That's where we were heading. I think we had -- the gentleman that was in charge of the Port Authority police was with us.

So we stopped at 22. Lieutenant Desperito and I believe one other member of Engine 1 tried to make their way down the hallway on the 22nd floor off the B stairwell to the command post. We were there three or four minutes. The elevator shafts were blown out, so they had to make their way around -- the fire came down the elevator shafts.

We were waiting, taking a breather. People were still coming down. All of a sudden we lost power in the building, and it felt like somebody was shaking the building. We didn't know what was going on, whether our building was coming down or something was shifting.

We all piled into the stairwell again. We were waiting for the boss to come to see what we were going to do. We weren't sure if we were going up or going down. Other guys weren't sure what was going on.

We really didn't hear much on our radios. One of the Port Authority police, I believe they said they heard a possible collapse, possible terrorist activity.

We proceeded to make our way down the same B stairwell that we came up on. It had to have taken us about 15 minutes to get downstairs. There were no civilians until between the seventh and fifth floors. We didn't say the building was going to come down, because we didn't know. We were trying to push them out.

Q. Do you know who gave you the order to go out of the building?

A. Lieutenant Desperito.

Q. So you got the word from the command center?

A. I believe it was the Port Authority cop heard of a possible collapse. We got to like the third or fourth floor, and you could see a lot of like white powdery dust was coming into the stairwell. When we hit the lobby, there were guys covered from head to toe in the white powder. I had no clue what was going on.

I got outside. We actually went out of the same door that we went in through the front lobby. I came out, and I was helping a gentleman out to the street. There was a couple of emergency services officers, and they grabbed us. They're like, "Get out of the way! Get out of the way!" We were like "What's going on?" He pointed to the left. Then the whole building was gone.

I didn't know the building came down until we got outside. I didn't even notice that building got hit. That must have gotten hit by the second aircraft on our way down responding to the box. None of us had any knowledge of that.

We made our way -- I think I was on the corner -- I headed north on West Street to the corner of Vesey and West, and we had everybody with us. I was actually going down the stairs with one of the other guys that was with us, Paul Bessler, that day. We wound up coming down together. The other guys were behind us a little bit: Kurt Long, Mike Yarembinsky and Lieutenant Desperito. Kurt was actually behind me.

Lieutenant Desperito was with Mike Yarembinsky, and Mike was kind of waiting. He said, "Go ahead." He told us to meet outside, make sure everybody was together to meet outside and wait on the corner of Vesey and West.

I believe we were there maybe two minutes, two and a half minutes. We heard the rumble, looked up, and the antenna started leaning and the whole building started pancaking towards us, coming down.

I had my mask on my back. A lot of guys didn't have it. I ran like 10 or 15 feet. I stopped and I put my face piece on, so I didn't breathe all that stuff in. I was just running up West Street. It was a dark cloud getting darker and darker and darker. I wound up coming out somewhere down by Murray or Park Place or something like that. Then I went back.

That's it.

Q. Do you know what happened to Lieutenant Desperito?

A. He was outside the building, supposedly. I don't know the whole story. He was outside the building, and I believe he got hit in the head with a piece of I beam, possibly. He got hit. He was outside the building.

Q. He made it out?

A. He made it out. He made it out of the building. He was almost there. Two of the firemen, I think one -- he's a lieutenant now. He said him and another fireman -- because he had his helmet on. They saw the Engine 1 headpiece. His helmet shield was still next to him or next to his helmet. He recognized that on the radio it said Engine 1. So they got him right away, they said.

I wound up going to the hospital that day. I had a pulled a groin muscle and my lower back and stuff like that.

Q. Anything else?

A. Like I said, we didn't even know the second building got hit. We really didn't see -- there was tons of people in the lobby. But really everything was going so fast, you really couldn't pinpoint. Even if I had noticed like people said they saw me in the lobby and it's like I remember talking to you, it's like it's --

Q. Like a (inaudible)?

A. Exactly, yeah. Everything is just kind of like fog.

Q. Okay. All right. Thanks a lot, Craig. We appreciate you assisting us. Hopefully we get something out of this.

A. Yeah, absolutely.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: The time is 12:45, and that's the end of this interview.

FRANK NOLAN

Interview Date: January 23, 2002

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 23, 2002. The time is 1100 hours, and this is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with the following individual. Please state your name.

LIEUTENANT NOLAN: Frank Nolan, lieutenant, Ladder 102.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

The location of this interview is at the quarters of Ladder 102. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Frank, would you please give in your own words what happened that day.

A. Well, Ladder 102 responded to the staging area at Hamilton Avenue on the Brooklyn side of the Battery Tunnel.

After the first tower came down, 102 was ordered by B.C. Coyne of the 42 battalion to evacuate the north tube of the tunnel. While doing so, 102 walked the entire length of the tunnel, split up into two teams, one led by myself, Lieutenant Nolan, and one led by Lieutenant Ciaravino, who was getting off the night tour. We just split into two teams.

I reported to Battalion Chief O'Connor of the 57, who told us to stay together and just search as many voids and we could, and Lieutenant Ciaravino led his own team. He was radio equipped, and I'm not really sure where he went.

We both split up into two teams and began searching voids. The first place we went to was -- I met up with a lieutenant from 10 truck, who took us to where the north tower lobby was, and we began searching voids and trying to follow the sounds of pass alarms, to no avail.

And that's about it. We worked for the next 20 hours or so until about four in the morning just removing bodies.

Q. You found bodies?

A. We found two civilian bodies, and we just helped remove them. Actually, I remember the guy's name, too, one of the guys' names, and that was it.

Q. When you went through the tunnel, you just walked through the tunnel, and when there was nobody in there, you continued on to the site?

A. Right. We walked through the tunnel. We were told that there was infirmed and elderly who were struggling to get out, but as we walked, the people were just passing us, and we found nobody in need of our assistance.

They just continued to exit to the Brooklyn side, and we continued on to the Manhattan side.

Q. Anything else you want to say?

A. That's it. That's all I can remember that day.

Also, yes, I was -- after leaving Chief O'Connor and searching various voids, I would every now and then go back to the command post with D. C. Hayden, who was in command, and he would send us to various assignments, and that was it.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Thank you for you are cooperation.

This concludes this interview. The time is 1110 hours. Thank you very much.

FIREFIGHTER DOUGLAS FERRETTI

Interview Date: January 24, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 24th, 2002. The time is 1400 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER FERRETTI: Douglas Ferretti.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Douglas Ferretti is a fireman in Ladder 47 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Ladder 47. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Would you please give what happened that day in your own words?

A. We got the run. We heard about the Trade Center on the TV. We got the run down to the Trade Center. We got relocated to Truck 6 from Chinatown. By the time we got to Ladder 6's quarters, the first tower had already come down. Then we got the call to a building close to the towers to check for smoke in the building.

When we checked out the building, it was due to the smoke from the towers. So on our way out, I was putting my stuff on the rig, and then the second tower came down. It was all hands for themselves. Everybody ran. I ran about two blocks. I saw a revolving door, and I went into the revolving doors, where there were about 15 to 20 civilians in there trying to get cover.

We waited it out from there on in. It was just trying to help people get out of the area.

Q. Did it turn black as night?

A. Yes. It was black about 10, 15 minutes, something like that.

Q. All you did is help some civilians out?

A. Yeah. That was about all we could do, really. We really couldn't get too close to it because we were directly down wind. We couldn't see anything. You didn't know what you were getting into.

Q. Anything else you can think of that might help us?

A. That's about it. That's about all that happened. That's it.

Q. Where did you guys go afterwards?

A. They had a staging area by the church there.

Q. St. Paul's?

A. That's the Church right here at the Trade Center? They had a staging area there. We hung out there for probably two hours. Nothing really happened, so we went on the other side of the wind. We went on the leeward side.

Q. What you understand was the dust particles? Were you doing a lot of coughing?

A. I had one of those dust masks.

Q. It worked pretty good?

A. Yeah. I had a good one. I had one with a valve in it.

Q. Where did you get that?

A. On the rig. My senior man, he had two of them and he gave me one.

Q. Wow.

A. I didn't take mine off. I tell you, when you took it off, it was abrasive. You could feel you were breathing something bad.

Q. Were civilians coughing?

A. Yeah.

Q. So it was irritating?

A. Oh, yeah. Your eyes are bleeding, you're coughing. I was --

Q. You think the wind would blow that.

A. I guess I was exposed to it for maybe 20 minutes before I put the mask on. You could feel right away that it could be detrimental to your health.

Q. If that's it, that's the end of this interview. Thanks a lot for your cooperation?

A. You're welcome.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: The time is 1410 hours.

LT. THOMAS PIAMBINO

Interview Date: January 24, 20002

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 24, 2002. The time is 1200 hours.

This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the safety battalion of the New York City Fire Department.

I'm a conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name.

A. Thomas Piambino.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Thomas Piambino is in Marine 1 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Marine 1. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Thomas, in your own words, if you would say what happened that day.

A. On 9/11, I was assigned to Engine 65, and approximately two, three minutes after nine, we responded to the World Trade Center box.

I had been watching it on television for the first few minutes, and we were aware of the fact that it was an aircraft that hit the building, but I wasn't sure at the time whether it was an accident or not.

Responded down the Westside Highway. We made pretty good time going down there. There was no traffic, and we got there relatively quick.

On arrival, I saw both towers. Prior to our arriving, on the radio, I heard Marine Company 1 transmitting another aircraft had hit another building. I wasn't sure which building was which at the time, but when we arrived, both buildings had been hit. Both buildings were on fire.

I could see at least eight or ten floors, from my opinion, at that point in the street that were pretty much fully involved, and at least both buildings on the upper floors.

The chauffeur let me off on West Street on the west side of the north tower, and we got out and the chauffeur proceeded south.

Q. That's just a diagram.

A. You know, where he wound up, I have an idea now, but up until this point for the past couple of weeks, it really wasn't clear to me what he did with the apparatus while I went into the building.

We went in through the west side of the building right off of West Street into the north tower. We went into, I guess, the -- I think the windows were out already. They were already blown out when we got there, so I don't even think I went in through a door. I'm pretty sure I went in through a window into the west side of the north tower.

There was no command post there, and they were just sending us up. I had no particular assignment. We had our roll-ups, Scott bottles and extra Scott bottles we were carrying.

We went -- I think it was Engine 39 we might have teamed up with, and, you know, there was a battalion chief there. I don't know what battalion he was from or what his name was, but we teamed up with 39, and we proceeded to go up.

Q. Which stairway?

A. Stairway B, and there were civilians coming down the stairway. The civilian evacuation, in my opinion, was kind of orderly. They stayed to one side, and we stayed to the other side and worked our way up.

I wasn't positive of what floors the fire was on. I didn't have any information. The handie-talkie information was pretty sketchy at best, and I don't know what point I heard this on the radio, but someone had said on the handie-talkie that there was a third aircraft inbound, and that is when I heard that, I specifically heard that, and at one point I guess -- I don't know what -- where we were. In retrospect, I know what it was.

The south tower had fallen, but at that time I didn't know what it was. All I heard was a tremendous explosion. The tower I was in shook really bad. It really shook bad, and my opinion, I thought it was another aircraft that hit the building.

We continued to go up. The emergency landing I think went out. There were still civilians coming down the stairs, and in my opinion, there was no one thing. There was no one thing that made me decide to get out. I can't tell you. I can't pinpoint anything. It was just -- I don't know what it was. It was just the culmination of intuition or what.

I just decided it was time to go, and I thought this was odd, too, was that something must have happened, because I think a lot of people were at that particular moment -- the consensus was that we were getting out. I received no handie-talkie communications to get out.

Q. Did anybody tell you maybe?

A. No one told me to get out.

Q. Because some guys have heard it, some guys haven't.

A. No, I was -- absolutely nothing. There was no handie-talkie communications that I heard. Whether they transmitted them or not, I can't say. I didn't hear it. I didn't hear it.

We went as high as -- I had five men manning that day, so I had four firefighters with me, and my intent was to go to the fire floor and do what we could do, and we were taking it easy, trying to pace myself.

What I would do is I would walk up two floors and wait for them to come up. I would let them stay. I'd walk up another two floors. This way we were alternating, trying to pace ourselves to get up wherever it was we were going.

I didn't know. I heard some radio transmissions that might have been from rescue. It might have been -- I don't want to mention names, but it was a rescue officer, 80 something. 80 something floor rings a bell with me about the fire floor, heavy fire or something.

Q. You think they made it up that high?

A. That's what my memory tells me. How accurate I'm -- you know, how accurate I am, I don't know. 80 something rings a bell with me, and, you know, something about fire conditions.

Now, what tower that came from, I don't know. I don't know whether I was hearing it from the south tower or the north tower. I don't know. I don't know. We made it up as high as 20. I made it up as high as the 22nd Floor, and about that time, I met -- I think my men were maybe on the 20th Floor, and I started to come down, and at that point in time, I just said, "It's time to go."

The stairway still had civilians in it, and they were still moving out, and we took whatever civilians we could take with us downstairs. We were not leaving them behind. I mean, we were not passing them to get out of the building.

It was painfully slow going down, and in my mind -- again, this is only my perception, my intuition. I just kept telling myself, I'm running out of time to get out of the building. Kept to myself. I was just running out of time.

We proceeded down the stairway, and we had some civilians with us, and we managed to get them down to the lobby. When I got down to the lobby -- the lobby was in bad shape when I went up. It was worse when I came back down. All the elevator shaftway doors were blown out, and there was stuff coming down the -- just falling down the shafts, and the civilians had bogged down at the bottom of the stairs, because they were afraid to pass the elevator shafts, and there were piles of rubble all over the place.

We kind of quietly pushed them out without trying to panic them. In the lobby, I think I saw some people from 21 engine perhaps. I'm not positive, and we came out the same way I came in on the West Street side, on the west side of the building, the West Street side of the building. Again, went out windows that were out. I don't recall it being a door. I'm pretty sure it was windows that were blown out, and I met -- or I seen Chief Turi with a bullhorn out on West Street, trying to facilitate the evacuation of the building, telling the guys to get out of the building with the bullhorn.

When I made it down to West Street -- prior to even getting to the street, there was bodies on the floor from jumpers. My recollection is there were civilians. I saw no -- you know, I didn't see anything that was Fire Department, but it was civilians, and I tried to keep all my guys together, and I made it down to West Street.

There was stuff just falling off the building, too. I mean, the building was just starting to fall apart, and when I made it down to West Street, there was a large building. They tell me now it was the Verizon building on my right-hand side, and my instinct was to keep that Verizon building between me and the towers, the whole company and the towers.

So we headed north on West Street, keeping -- staying close to the large building, and I don't think we were out of the building a minute, a minute and a half. We exited the building, and the north tower started to fall.

We were pretty much together at that point, the whole company. I know they were all out. I know specifically I had two guys with me that I know for sure, and I know the other two guys made it. The other two guys I had made on it out. I know they were out of the building. At that point, I really wasn't positive as to where they were, but I know two guys I had with me.

We started to go north on West Street as fast as we could. We weren't running, but we were moving, walking pretty fast, and then the north tower started to fall, and my perception was that when I looked back at the tower as it was starting to come down -- I was booking -- was that there was -- I thought it exploded, and I didn't realize it had collapsed.

It looked to me like an explosion, and you could feel the -- you could feel it coming, and they were still running away from it. I mean, you weren't going to out run it.

At that point, we all split up. I mean, it was like run, and each one of us took refuge behind something, and I wound up taking refuge behind an ESU truck, I believe it was, a Police Department ESU truck, I think, and I just rode it out until first there was the explosion or the concussion, and then there was very, very strong wind, and then there was the black -- black -- dirt black cloud, and you couldn't see nothing, and it became very, very quiet, and when it became quiet, the only thing I heard after that was somebody crying.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Thank you, Thomas, for your cooperation.

The time is about 1230 hours, and that concludes this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT EDWARD MARTINEZ

Interview Date: January 24, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is January 24, 2002. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department's World Trade Center Task Force. The time is now 1303 hours. I'm currently at EMS Battalion 17.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. Eddie Martinez of Battalion 17, EMT. Eddie Martinez.

Q. Okay. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Eddie could you start from --

A. All right. On September 11, we were dispatched to the World Trade Center for an MCI, a mass casualty incident. It was in the morning. We didn't know what was going on. All we knew was that on the news a plane had crashed into the World Trade Center. So we headed down there. We headed down towards the towers.

We took the FDR down, which was closed off to traffic. They had a special lane for the emergency vehicles, so we made good time getting down there. Once we were dispatched to Vesey and West Street, Vesey and West Street, upon entering the area, what we saw was like a total devastation from, I guess from the first plane that struck the tower. There were burnt cars. We saw -- it was like a grayish -- it was night. It was sunlight. There was a lot of light. It was a sunny clear day, but in that area it was a grayish area. The sun wasn't shining. It was like fog, like a big fog.

We saw, like I said, burned vehicles, some of them were on fire. The buildings were just destroyed. The surroundings, there was too much for the eyes to capture everything all at once. It was like overwhelming.

We were told to go to our staging area, which we attempted to do, then we would reverse back up. I don't know the street that we were on at that time, at that moment. Everything looked the same. I was the tech. My partner was driving at the time.

Coming out of the -- getting out of the ambulance to get the equipment to go to where our staging area was supposed to be, I commented to my partner that there were some burnt parts on the floor, which turned out to be flesh that were strewn all around the place. Everywhere you looked you see a piece of something. At the time I didn't know what it was until I came close to it. I saw it was a piece of flesh.

At that time we just -- they told my partner to turn the ambulance around and they had a new staging area, which was further away from the building, and we just made a U turn and went up, not that far from where we originally were assigned to and once we were there, we were -- I started taking the equipment out of the ambulance and I told my partner that I will see him in a little while with the first patient.

Well, he stood with the ambulance and I put all the equipment on the stretcher and put my gear on, my helmet and my coat, and headed down towards the towers. I was in front of the towers. I had walked a little distance, some distance from the ambulance, and I was attending a patient, somebody was hurt, it was on the ground. There were other patients all around, but this one was -- he was hurt.

I was talking to him when I heard a loud, like a roaring noise, like a loud loud roaring noise. At the time I didn't know what it was. I just looked up. All I could see because of the fog that was there, you couldn't see above. Your distance was limited. Once I heard that, I heard like a big explosion, a tremendous explosion, let me put it that way and a rumbling sound.

At that time I started seeing things coming down. I attempted to grab -- I grabbed the person that I was talking to and to get away from that area, but he slipped back down and at that time everything started coming down. So I attempted to run some distance, which I couldn't run, because it overtook me. Like I said, it happened like really quick.

I also felt myself airborne. I was airborne. I didn't get that far. I was airborne. I felt a force behind me and it slammed me down on the ground. I got slapped down on the ground. Everything started hitting me, whatever was falling. At the time I didn't know what it was. I thought maybe that the building that was on fire exploded. I didn't know. I found out later on that the second plane had hit another building, the second tower.

When I fell, I fell forward and with my hands extended. I still was getting bombarded with a lot of heavy whatever it was hitting me, concrete, whatever. I was getting hit hard and when I fell on the floor that I fell with my -- on my stomach, face down with my hands extended, something heavy fell on my hand and bounced off. At that time my arm was broken.

I also felt some sharp pains to my back and then I was inside some -- a dark cloud of smoke. It was so dark you couldn't see your hand. It was choking. It was like choking smoke. At that time, I had no idea where I was. I didn't hear no voices. I heard nothing. It was total silence.

I'm trying to find my way out of there with my broken arm. Holding on to my broken arm with the pain in my back, I just started walking in the direction that I fell, because I knew if I turned around I would lose my way, so I continued in that direction. It seemed like forever that I was in there. I didn't know -- it felt like it was walking in like suspended animation, that's what it felt like.

I continued walking and I heard some -- a voice, because I kept yelling is there anybody here, is there anybody here. I just kept walking and I heard a voice that just kept saying follow the light. I saw the light through the thick smoke. The light was like at a distance, but it was clear enough -- it was light. It was a bright light. It was clear enough to follow it.

So I continued following it. It wasn't -- as I was following it, I remember I felt a lot of heat. I didn't know what that was at the time. I got out of -- I started seeing -- it was like a haze. I saw -- it was a vehicle that was burnt up and when I got out of the smoke there was nobody around. Nobody with a light, nothing. There was nobody around. It was just total silence.

I walked a short distance and I saw Karen, that was one of the paramedics from my old station. I saw her. I came over to her and told her that I was hurt. At that time they got me, put me inside -- helped me over to an ambulance. I told them my arm was broken. At that time they checked my back and they found that I had a deep laceration to my back. I couldn't breathe on my right side. My left was okay, I felt air going through. But my right side was like -- I was having problems, a lot of problems breathing.

At this time they splinted my arm and they checked my back. They told me that I have a deep laceration to my back and they thought that I may have what they call a pneumothorax. Turned out, lucky for me, that I didn't have a pneumothorax, but I did have a lot of shrapnel inside my back. That's what was hurting me.

They were attempting to take care of my back, when one of the other medics that was on the scene -- he was leery about the place, because there was no safe area at this time. There was a lot going on. There was a lot of noise. I remember hearing still a lot of noise. I don't know if things were still falling, but all of a sudden we heard another rumbling sound and again with the smoke, you saw the smoke coming down and everybody just ran towards safety.

I ran into, I don't remember the place I ran into. I know I ran into a place that once I got inside, there was total -- there was a lot of smoke inside and a lot of people were every which way. They were going every direction. Nobody knew where to go or what direction to go.

I saw a woman there and she was like frozen with fear, I guess it was. So I went over to her and I tried to help her out. I tried to comfort her and telling her that everything is going to be okay, just calm down, because she was like almost hysterical, so I was taking care of her for a little while until I couldn't do it any more. I just like, I felt myself getting -- my breathing was getting worse. It wasn't getting any better.

So then at some -- I don't know who it was inside. I asked them if they had any oxygen and there were some EMTs, I guess from a volunteer ambulance corps. They came over and I got an oxygen mask on me. At that time they checked my back and his reaction was like, you have like a big laceration to your back.

My main concern at that time, although my back was hurting and I was short of breath, because of all that smoke that I inhaled, my arm had been splinted. I was holding my arm as a matter of fact, the splint wasn't holding, so I was just holding my arm.

But that woman just kept -- I didn't want nothing to happen to her. It was like, you know, a woman in her 50s or something, somewhere around there. So I -- she was more calm. I talked to her for a little while. She seemed much better. Then some medical personnel I think came over and I told them and they took her.

Then at that time they started running inward towards -- further into the building that I was in, because they thought that the building was going to collapse outside. I had no idea what was going on outside. I didn't know that a plane had struck. All I knew was that I was hurt. I said no, I'm not going further into this building. As a matter of fact, I want to go out of the building, because this is an unsafe area here.

I remember going out and it seemed like I walked for, I don't know how long a distance, because there were no blocks any more. It was just one big road, one big mess. I just continued walking and people were -- I remember two ESU cops, I think it was, grabbed me, because I was already too weak to go any further. I couldn't. I felt like I was going to pass out.

During the time that I got hit, when I was airborne, when I got slammed on the floor, I remember my initial reaction was to stay awake and don't pass out. I just kept repeating it to myself. Just don't pass out, stay awake, stay conscious and thank God, I did. I never lost consciousness throughout the whole thing.

At one time I couldn't get up. I couldn't get up, because I was being bombarded with whatever was hitting me and finally when it stopped, it just seemed like hours. It was probably just minutes or seconds. I finally got up. That's when I felt the pain in my back and I knew my arm was broken, because I felt it break.

They took me, I went to -- I remember seeing the cops coming over and I'm telling them that I feel like I can't go on any more and I was ready to fall. They grabbed me and they helped me away from that area. They put me on a boat that was going to Jersey City. That's where I ended up, in Jersey City Medical Center.

I remember coming out of that building that I was in and I saw a burnt ambulance, which later on they told me that our ambulance was burnt up. I don't know if that's the actual ambulance that I saw. All I know is I saw a lot of destruction all around the place; fire trucks and a lot of people that were hurt.

I was put on the boat along with some other firefighters that were there and taken to Jersey City Medical Center and they told me --

[redacted]

My partner, I wondered about him. He went in a -- I didn't see him. I was worried for him. When everything started coming down, I remember that he was with the ambulance. I didn't see him until two days later at the hospital. I had no idea what had happened to him. I asked some of the people about him. Nobody knew anything. Nobody had no information. All they knew -- well, everybody was in the same state that I was, in a confused state. Not knowing what had happened.

It wasn't until like two days later, because I was heavily sedated and on morphine, that I started -- they told me that the second plane had hit the building and that I was caught in the collapse of the building. 4 days later I was released from the hospital. I was there, yes, 4 days. Continued therapy until now. (inaudible).

Q. Okay. Do you remember roughly -- you had seen or heard on the news about the first plane hitting, right?

A. I saw -- I didn't hear anything about it until around -- well, I knew that the first -- I knew there was a plane crash into the World towers. I didn't know what kind of plane it was. I thought it was maybe years ago that a plane hit the --

Q. Empire State Building?

A. Empire State Building. I thought it was a small plane, but I remember when we were going down towards the World Trade Center we were on the FDR Drive. I saw -- we got a clear view. I said this wasn't a small plane. This was bigger than I thought. Then later on was when I found out that it was a 747, or whatever, that hit that. I didn't know and like two days later is when they told me. I didn't watch the news until I got out of the hospital, until three days later. I didn't want to hear about the news, the newspapers or anything.

Q. Who was your partner that day?

A. Benny Badillo.

Q. When you arrived at the scene, you said you came first to Vesey and West?

A. Yes.

Q. When you got there, do you remember any other EMS personnel down there at that point, any officers that you recognized, or techs, medics?

A. There were other ambulances from different agencies down there. I didn't recognize anybody offhand. Like I said, I was like following -- it was just overwhelming, what I was looking at. I saw other emergency medical personnel. I saw some PD and firefighters around, but I didn't recognize anybody that I knew, until after I came out of the smoke. That's when Karen -- she blurted out like -- I don't want to say because you had an interview. You have this interview.

She was surprised that it was me and I recognized her and her partner -- I don't remember her partner's name. That's when I recognized her and they took a hold of me. I walked over to them.

Q. When they had you move or had your partner move the bus, do you remember where or what direction the bus got moved?

A. I know, I believe he was facing towards the towers, because we went up -- we went like down, seemed like a little hill. We were going down and they told us move the ambulance away from the area. They had a new staging area because that staging area was unsafe, which I was glad that we moved, because anything there got demolished, where we were before.

So we made a U turn, went back like up a hill, not that far a distance, and it was facing the towers with the ambulance facing the towers and that's when I took all the equipment out, I told him I will see you later with the first patient and I walked down towards the tower. I was right in front of it when all that started happening. I remember (inaudible). I didn't know where he was. I lost him completely.

Q. Okay. Anything else that you would like to add or comment on?

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. The time is now 1327. This will be the conclusion of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT BENJAMIN BADILLO

Interview Date: January 24, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is January 24, 2002. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department's World Trade Center Task Force. Currently at EMS Battalion 17. The time is now 1410.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. Benjamin Badillo, EMT.

Q. Mr. Badillo is assigned to EMS Battalion 17. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. All right. Prior to getting the assignment, we had just came off another assignment. We were located at 176 Street and Morris Avenue in the Bronx. When we went available they told us to switch to Citywide frequency and to go downtown and then after that, all the information came in via the computer.

So we started going downtown. I took the Cross Bronx, no, I took the Deegan down the FDR, and on the way down there, they were just -- when we got close enough, I don't remember at what point we were at, but you could see the World Trade Center on fire and all kinds of things happening.

I was pretty much horrified as well as my partner. I couldn't believe it was actually happening or that we were even going down there. You see things like that on the news and stuff like that, but you don't expect to be in it.

So we are driving down the FDR, I was driving. My partner was just navigating at this point. We take the Battery Park tunnel and come up -- go under and come back around to West Street. We parked -- we got up to the World Trade Center. We got to -- it was right here somewhere. I know it was right before Vesey, pedestrian -- okay. We were between the two towers, so we made a U turn and parked on West Street right over here.

Q. By Liberty, just north of Liberty?

A. Yes, just north of liberty. At that point, we were being directed by a staging officer. I don't remember his name. We started getting our equipment together, on to the stretcher and everything. Helmet, jackets, everything we had we put on the stretcher. So as we started to go to the triage area, the staging officer told my partner, Eddie Martinez, to take all of the equipment, including the stretcher and everything to triage and the driver had to stay with the vehicle. So I stayed with the vehicle and that's pretty much the last I saw of Eddie that day.

Eddie walked with all the equipment around the first -- second building, right between the two towers and that was the last I saw of him. So I was standing by the vehicle. I am looking around and I see cars just -- a couple of cars, not much at this point, destroyed and I could see some bodies right before we parked, between the two buildings, laying around in the street and right near our vehicle you could see -- I didn't know what it was at first. Then I'm looking at it and it was just body parts, just chunks of flesh you know, just spread out here and there. That was a little freaky. I have never seen anything like that.

I don't remember what time we got down there. I know it was a little after nine. Maybe 10 after nine, 15 after nine. It was around there. I don't remember exactly. I know the first flight had hit. I don't know if the second airliner had hit at that point. So I'm just sitting around at this point. I really didn't have anything to do but just wait.

About 5 minutes after just sitting there, I hear this really bad thundering sound. I didn't know what it was. It just sounded like thunder, but it was like different. When I look up into the sky, out of curiosity, I don't know what made me look, I could see the top of the building coming down. I paused for about a second or two.

When I took my eyes off the building and back to the ground, I could see officers and a lot of people just running into the building, so I did the same thing, like any reasonable person would do, trying to save their own life. I ran inside -- I don't know if it was the Marriott Hotel or -- I don't know if the Marriott is shown in here.

Q. I believe it's in here. It used to be the Vista.

A. Yes, I don't remember if it was the Marriott or the building right next to it, because there were two buildings right near to each other. But as soon as I ran into the building, I took a right. I was just trying to get as deep into the building as I could in the lobby. A few officers ran in there and civilians ran in there with us.

As soon as I made the right, I tried to hide under a security desk and you could just hear everything came down. As soon as everything came down, the lobby and the lights -- the lobby filled up with smoke and debris. The lights went off. You couldn't see anything. It was completely dark. It was a really loud noise. I can't even describe it. But it was a really really horrific nasty noise.

As soon as that happened, I couldn't breathe. It's like the next breath I took was full of smoke and debris. I know I wasn't like not breathing for a long time. I would say about 30 seconds to maybe a minute. I was very scared. I couldn't breathe out. I couldn't take a breath. I felt all that debris every time I took a deep breath, going deeper into my lungs.

After a little bit, I finally took a breath and I was able to breathe a little easier, but it was still burning a lot. I couldn't see anything. I was really frightened at this point. Luckily some of the officers had flashlights so we found our way.

As we made our way back out to the lobby, there was some light at the outer part of the lobby. There was a light there. I still wasn't too sure about where we were at. At this point, I called my friend Maurice Lewis, he is also an EMT here at Battalion 17. I told him to contact my fiance and my family and tell them where I was at and to go home and try to calm down.

I looked -- the phones weren't working too well. We tried but I couldn't get through. When we walked out, finally got out of the building, I didn't know we were outside of the building, because it was completely dark. Next thing I know I heard a loud slam and a girl screaming. When I looked back, it was a girl from one of the private ambulance companies jumping out the back door of her ambulance, screaming, really scared. At this point I was scared. I freaked out for a brief moment. I guess anybody would.

Q. Right.

A. But I came to my senses pretty quickly. I was like I really have to calm down and get out of here. So this girl pulls me and an officer and she says oh, please come and check on my partner. He is sitting in the front. I don't know what happened to him, but he is laying on the side. We went to go check on him and he was just really badly burned. It was obvious that he was dead. Nothing we could do, so we kept on walking.

We kept on walking south towards Battery Park. On the way, I don't know how much time had passed before the second collapse, but we kept -- I was okay physically. At this point, I was breathing better and I could actually see my way around. I got on the radio. I was screaming for my partner, you know, I tried to go in there and look for him, but it was too dark. There was even more debris where he was at. I started screaming his name, but there was nothing I could do. So I just kept walking.

On the way down, we just kept running into some people. We all got on one of the big MTA busses, the city busses and for some reason or another, we didn't get kicked out, but somebody said we got to get out of the bus or whatever. So we got out the bus. I held this girl close to me to make sure she was okay, because she was in bad shape. We were helping some people out. There were a lot of people with broken arms and legs, so we were trying to help them out the best we could. A lot of confusion, you know. I really didn't know what to do next. There was no direction. There was nobody telling you what to do. Everything was destroyed.

The first thought on my mind is where is the train station, so I can get the hell out of here and go home. But then again, I knew I couldn't go home, so then I remember seeing a command car driving around and there was a Chief and a Lieutenant and an EMT in there. I forget the Chief's name. It was Mark Steffens, Chief Mark Steffens. The Lieutenant. I always have a hard time with his name. But he was one of my original instructors. I don't even remember anybody else's name.

They told me to get inside the vehicle and about two minutes later, we made a U turn heading south, because he was coming up north and then he made a U turn going south again, down towards Battery Park, and I could hear the second rumble and I already knew what it was. I knew it was the second building collapsing.

I just started screaming inside the vehicle. I was like get the -- you know, get out of here. Let's go, let's go. He was doing his best, but there were people running all over the place. You can't run people over.

We made it down to Battery Park. We are looking outside the windows and you could see all the ashes and debris and all kinds of stuff just going all the way down. It looked like, from what I have seen on TV, you know, when volcanos erupt and the ashes go all over the place and it is raining and snowing ashes. It looked like that. It was very very scary.

People were hiding at the -- taking cover, shelter by the fort down there or something. There is something down there near Battery Park. That's where a lot of people retreated to. We were down there for about an hour or two afterwards.

When it cleared out, we were helping people evacuate on the boats, going to Jersey. I was asking anyone if they have seen my partner. I remember Karen Lamanna from Battalion 14, she said that she had saw him with another medic. [redacted]

After that, we kind of just hung out down there for a while. We got everybody out. We moved over to the Staten Island Ferry, where all the people load up to take the ferry and stuff. That was pretty much the rest of the day there. I stayed there for about two hours and then I managed to sneak away. They didn't want me leaving, but I was covered in dust. I couldn't breathe very well. I was spitting up a lot of black stuff, junky stuff.

So I snuck away with -- I saw Mike Kenna, who is also an EMT here and Charlie Vitale. I snuck away with them just looking around. We were walking around, we just like -- I don't remember exactly what streets we took, but I know we went around the whole World Trade Center. This little square.

You could see -- I don't know which tower was it. I think it was the north tower, we saw the north tower, just like what was left of it, just burning and a lot of fire. There was ashes everywhere, everywhere. I don't know how far this thing went, but it was really bad.

Walking around, we came out to Rector Street. We saw one of the landing gears from the airplane. I was trying to look for my vehicle, because by this time it had cleared up a lot, so you could see a lot. I was trying to figure out where exactly I was. I couldn't find my vehicle. I mean everything was destroyed. I can't say it enough.

We walked around. I kept running into people. I ran into Felix Hernandez, another EMT here at the Battalion. There was a lot of people. I saw the Chief of EMS, Robert McCracken. He was telling us to retreat back to the triage area at the Staten Island Ferry, but I didn't listen. I just kept walking around. Like I knew what just happened, what was going on, but I felt very confused, lost. It was a bad feeling. I just didn't know my way.

At this point, okay, we are still walking around and we are just running into a lot of body parts and we ran into a person's torso, just no legs, no head, no arms, nothing, just chest and stomach area. We were tagging body parts, whatever we could find.

Then like 15 feet away I found a head to go to the torso. I don't mean to be so graphic, but I would just like to describe whatever I saw. It was just the brains hanging out of the skull, just completely flapping over, like you just opened up a can or something like that. Out of curiosity, I don't know why, but I just put on a pair of gloves and I picked it up. I just started moving it around and you could see the face and everything, but it was all crushed and everything, no facial bones, no eyes, nothing, so we tagged it and we went along.

By this time the Chief found me, he caught up to me and said get back to -- I was like, okay. By that time, later on, a few hours later, back at the ferry, I found out that Eddie was taken to New Jersey Medical Center or something like that, that he was going to be okay and so that was a little -- and I had gotten in contact with some of my family members. They were really nervous.

I just wanted to make sure everybody was home, my son. I called him up. Kids don't know any better. I just wanted to make sure he was okay. I stayed there until about 11 o'clock at night. I got a ride back to the Bronx and right back here to the Battalion. It was a really rough, long day and I was really stressed out.

I'm walking into the door and people are just looking at me like whatever, I just got out of a war zone or something. I was literally covered from head to toe. It was in my underwear, it was in my shirt, in any my ears, everywhere. So I looked pretty bad.

I jumped in my car and I went home. My fiance, I live with my fiance. She was pretty good. I started watching the news and I saw the planes hitting the towers. I didn't know it was like the worst part of the whole day. I couldn't believe they actually got that on camera and I couldn't believe just seeing it.

Then I got some more bad news the next day. That was pretty much the end of the day after that. I didn't want to come to work the next day, but being that I was physically okay, they made me come for another 12 hours, which is all right.

The next day I just heard that one of the firefighters who used to be an EMT, Hector Tirado, was missing, and pretty much considered dead at this point. Then another good friend of mine, she was an EMT for St. Barnabas, Imelda Reno. I found out that she was confirmed dead. That really hurt a lot. Because I knew Imelda for quite a few years. She was really a nice young lady.

Lieutenant (inaudible), he saw I was kind of disturbed by all this. He put us out of service and he suggested that I go talk to a psychiatrist at Jacobi emergency room. I took a few days off. I mean I came in, but I just kind of hung out at the station.

I didn't want to be bothered with doing 911 calls or nothing, nothing. I just didn't want to do it. I felt pretty good, but it just kept coming back. I was having trouble sleeping. To this point I feel pretty good. I don't think about it as much.

I guess I don't know if it's from the World Trade Center events, but I still have some trouble sleeping. I have spoken to some counselor, psychiatrist. It helped a lot to see that my partner was alive and okay. So thank God for that.

That was pretty much it. The things I saw and felt.

Q. Okay. When you guys first got in to Liberty and West, it was about up here that you had parked the bus somewhere?

A. Right by here somewhere.

Q. Do you know where the triage area that Eddie was headed for was?

A. I heard it was Church and Vesey, but Vesey is up here. I don't know how -- I know Eddie walked between the two buildings.

Q. He went into the plaza itself?

A. Yes, the plaza itself. That's the last -- that's the last -- that's where he was headed, but I don't know. Vesey is kind of far up here. Where is Church? Yes, Vesey and Church. I don't know if they had another triage area in the plaza itself, because there were a lot of vehicles parked around the buildings and the towers and stuff. That's the last I saw or heard.

Q. Okay. Anything else you would like to add?

A. No, I just thank God I'm here to tell the story. It was the scariest thing I have ever seen in my life. I never imagined to be involved. Like I said earlier, you sit at home, you watch these horrible stories on TV and you read about them in the newspaper, so many deaths, so many lives destroyed and to actually feel like -- that I'm a part of history you know.

I just can't believe that I was there. I couldn't believe that I was there. To this day I still can't believe it. Other than that, I'm doing pretty good these days. Trying to get everything back on track.

MR. RADENBERG: Good. Okay. Thank you. The time is now 1434. This is the conclusion of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC CAMILLE MARRONCELLI

Interview Date: January 24, 2002

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is January 24, 2002. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department's World Trade Center Task Force. I'm currently at EMS Battalion 20. The time is now 1534.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with --

A. Paramedic Camille Marroncelli, Battalion 20.

Q. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Could you begin with when you were assigned.

A. Actually, we were assigned -- we got on to the West Side Highway as the second plane hit the second tower. We had just gotten on to the West Side Highway from the Cross Bronx and my partner was -- he was monitoring the radio. I was trying to get through traffic going down there. He said a second plane hit the second tower. We hit a lot of traffic going down there so we were delayed. Our response time was delayed.

We finally arrived down there and we took West Street going down. It was clear, the West Side Highway was cleared from, I think it was 79 Street when they shut it down, so we were clear all the way down, going straight on down. As soon as you could see the towers from the highway, as soon as we could -- we got them in our eyesight, we could see that they were both burning. We kind of both wondered what we were driving into at that point.

We got down, like I said, we went down West Street and we got down as far as, I'm not sure, we were probably around maybe 6, 7 blocks from the towers. I don't know exactly the cross street location that we were at, but there were maybe 10 ambulances down there before us, but most of them were Metro Care units and Hatzolah units were down there. There was maybe two or three other Fire Department EMS units down there.

There were no Lieutenants, no bosses, we couldn't find anybody. We pulled up right where all the other ambulances were. Unfortunately, they were all facing the towers. I thought it was kind of odd that they would be facing the disaster. In the event that we had to get out, they had no egress.

Finally one of the bosses pulled up. I don't even remember what his name was. We were trying to get organized and he asked who was the senior person. It happened to be me there. I have a lot of years on the job. He stated to me that you are in charge of staging and triage. I said okay, fine. I had done some mock drills when I had been a boss in '95 in Manhattan and I had no problem with taking command of staging.

I just directed all the units to get in the vehicles and turn them around so we would be facing away from the towers. We were in the process of doing this and that's when the first building came down. Most of the people that were in the ambulances trying to move them just continued driving up West Street. I was on foot.

I jumped into the back of a Metro Care ambulance, as a matter of fact, and directed the driver to just drive, but what happened at that point was that the cloud that came up West Street, it just engulfed the vehicle, so we had to stop. Unfortunately for me, they left me in the vehicle. Everybody was scared. It was just everybody was so frightened, it was like survival of the fittest at that point.

When I was able to finally get out of the vehicle, you still couldn't see, because it hadn't dissipated that much. It kind of like shuffled along until this cloud dissipated and you kind of jumped into action, because it was pretty hard to miss a paramedic on the back of your uniform. Everybody was coughing and couldn't see. I kind of sort of directed people to the ambulance units that were there. I directed them to get all their sterile water, take it out and kind of showed some of the people how to irrigate their eyes and stuff and gave people direction, tried to elicit bystanders to help and so on and so forth.

I had to separate from my partner. I don't know where he went. We were just like -- everybody was in a fog at that point. Maybe 5 minutes had passed and I got my partner and we were trying to make some semblance of order. Look for a supervisor, find out what was going on, what we needed to do, where we needed to be.

Shortly after the first building came down, the second building collapsed, but at that point we were further up West Street, because we had moved from the first collapse, so we did the same thing. We got into the ambulance and we drove further up West Street. I don't know. We were there. It was just a lot of -- it was madness, it was confusion and it was -- I'm sorry, because it's --

We were directed at that point, not really at that point, but a while later, because there was just nobody to kind of give us orders where to go. When things settled a little bit they directed everybody to go to Chelsea Piers. So all the units went up there and that's when they -- I mean we sat there. We sat there and we didn't do anything because there was no way for anybody to do anything. We couldn't near the buildings, we couldn't get near the rubble because of the smoke and the fire and everything else that was going on, so we just -- it was just a feeling of feeling helpless at that point.

Everybody was eager to do stuff, but there was nothing really to do on our end. From what I understand from speaking with people afterwards, people who were on the other end had transported patients and so on and so forth, but we didn't have any patients until very much later on, when we transported some firefighters, but that was not until like when the third building fell, which was way later on.

Q. About 5 o'clock?

A. Yes. 5 o'clock. It was in the evening, but from the point that the second tower collapsed until that point, we were down in Chelsea Piers. I mean they brought us into -- near Stuyvesant High School. I don't remember what time it was. Maybe sometime in the afternoon they brought us down there and they made us sit there in case we needed to -- as I said, we wound up transporting 5 firefighters. They had minor injuries.

I don't know what else to tell you other than that it was very unorganized and it didn't get organized even into the evening over there with who was going to do what and how they were going to transport the patients and any kind of organization. They said set up Chelsea Piers at that point as a disaster area and it was like a mock hospital and they had everything and anything you needed in there, but still it wasn't being utilized, because we couldn't get anybody out from the towers and what not.

Other than that, I don't know what else I could tell you that would be helpful with regard to what happened. I'm probably missing stuff because I'm not -- maybe there is stuff that I don't want to remember. I don't know. It was -- as time goes on -- it's been what, almost 4 months now.

Q. 4 and a half months.

A. 4 and a half months now, but it's still very hard to talk about it, because it's just -- especially with people on this job that have -- I don't know. I was born and raised in New York and I grew up when they were building the towers. We used to travel to Staten Island when I was a kid and we used to take the FDR Drive down to where the ferry is and that's where we used to take the ferry and as a kid I grew up with watching these things being built.

Just the whole idea of those things coming down, it's still to this day it's very disturbing. It's still pretty -- I mean I know it happened, but when I go down to the city, it seems like almost like you are in a dream. I'm in a dream when I see that they are not there. So to talk about it is difficult. I never thought that I would be a part of such a bad part of history in this country.

I mean on the job, it's a hard job sometimes, and I'm part of a lot of the things that happened because I help people. That's a good thing. Maybe I was able to help somebody. That's good. But to be there and to not have been able to do anything because of the situation, it was very disheartening, because you train for a long time to be there at a time when you are most needed in a disaster.

Unfortunately it was beyond anybody's control, what you could and couldn't do. I have been to all these drills and it's just very different when it's real. It's just everybody, like everything goes out the window and people just -- I mean because of the extent of that catastrophe, how big it was, there were just so many people that couldn't make any sense of it, let alone act. It was just -- mentally and emotionally it was that disturbing, that it was so hard to kind of like get your thoughts together.

You react because it's second nature on this job and that's the only reason why people -- a lot of people rose to the occasion, because it is second nature. If you stood there and really had to think about what you had to do, you would have been more paralyzed than you were, because that's the time to act and not contemplate. Later on it's going to really kind of -- you contemplate it and it just becomes very disturbing; all the images and the images that we saw when we got down there; people jumping out of the building and it just seemed very unreal, but it wasn't, unfortunately. It wasn't unreal.

Q. Who were you working with that day?

A. I was working with Richie Natal.

Q. Is he an EMT?

A. He's a paramedic.

Q. When you first got down in the area, you said you were like about 6 blocks north of the Center on the west side. Do you remember what, aside from the ambulances, do you remember any other buildings that were around there, that might be like a landmark?

A. No, no. All I saw were ambulances and fire trucks and apparatus and police cars and that's all I was like concentrating on, with all that excitement, because you get very caught up in the adrenaline. You just get very caught up with what is going on. Things that aren't really -- and I guess it was, things on the periphery really weren't important, because you had these two huge structures in front of you that were just -- that's where your eyes were. All eyes were on those buildings. You just couldn't take your eyes off those buildings. So whatever was around me, I really couldn't tell you.

Q. The other Department ambulances that were in the area, did you recognize anybody that was part of the crews from those units?

A. From the voluntaries?

Q. No, from the Department, the EMS ambulances.

A. Yes, there was one of the Battalion 15 units. I think it was 15 Boy was there. There was another medic unit there, but I don't remember who they were. I don't remember them at all. They might have been from Queens or something, but there was definitely another -- because a lot of people from the station were assigned. Maybe we were one of the first arriving units down there because we volunteered.

My partner Richie is a bit of a buff. He was like let's go, let's go. I was like all right, let's go. Not to think that it would be something as catastrophic as this. A lot of Jacobi units were there. As I said, the only one that I recognized was this other unit, 15 Boy. It is an EMT unit.

Q. The Lieutenant that arrived there, you said you didn't recognize him at all?

A. No, I don't remember who it was.

Q. Any idea where he went after he put you in charge of staging and triage?

A. I have no idea. It was just, it seemed like, because there was so much to do, because everybody was just running around like chickens without heads. There was no semblance of order. It was trying to get people to -- a group of people to do the same thing for the same purpose, because it was very hard to get people organized.

They kind of parked their vehicles there and I don't know where they went, these people, so we had to get them to like -- because you couldn't move this vehicle unless this vehicle was -- do you know what I'm saying? So we are trying to get everybody to move their vehicles.

Q. All blocked in?

A. Yes. They were all facing the towers. If we had patients, we need to be going in the other direction. But no, I don't know where he went. He had his hands full, as did everybody else at that point in time.

Q. Anything else you would like to add?

A. No, other than I don't know, I think that there are a lot of the EMTs and paramedics that were down there were -- had every good intention. This is what we go to school for. This is what we train for, to take care of the sick and injured, and unfortunately, we were utilized, but not to the effect that we wanted to be, because circumstances that were beyond our control, but we were there ready and willing to serve and I think that for myself, being down there as early as I was and seeing the whole thing transpire before my eyes, if we could have done more, we would have.

I think that a lot of times we are just not given the credit. Just being there and having to experience something like that. People should get credit for that. Nobody should have to see something like that in their lifetime. It doesn't leave you. It stays with you. Hopefully people use it in a good way. Something good could come out of this, the way people view things, then it wasn't all in vain.

Unfortunately we lost a lot of people, the Department lost a lot of people and the world in general lost a lot with that event. Especially the people in New York. Especially people that are native New Yorkers, that grew up in the city and feel like they helped to make the city what it is today.

So it's part of like your -- it's your home. You feel like you were violated. You take it personally. I took it personally. I think a lot of people that don't live in New York that feel as they do for the city. There is a lot of people that work for the city. Civil servants. Obviously we love our jobs, because it's not the best paying job in the world, but there is more to jobs than being the best paying job in the world and when you are a civil servant in New York, I mean there are a lot of people in New York that you have to take care of.

That's part of what I guess the love for the city is, just being there to do what you are supposed to do when you are called upon. I think everybody that was from this Department, from EMS did their job and a lot of people did above and beyond their jobs.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

RUSS STROEBEL

Interview Date: January 25, 2002

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 25, 2002. The time is 1130 hours.

This is B. C. Frank Congiusta of the safety division of the New York City Fire Department.

I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name.

A. Lieutenant Russell Stroebel, Engine 278.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

We are at the quarters of Engine 278. This interview is regarding events of September 11, 2001.

Q. Russ, please in your own words describe what happened that day.

A. Okay, I was assigned to -- I was working in Engine Company 246 that day. We got relocated to Engine Company 234 now. We just came in around 9:30 or so. So we relocated to the quarters of Engine 234, and then about maybe quarter to ten we got dispatched to respond to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel on a fifth alarm assignment, so we were making our way down there, and there were a lot of people when we got to the Brooklyn Bridge coming off the Brooklyn Bridge evacuating Manhattan, so we stopped there momentarily to find out -- or to gain any information from the police that were on the scene, and there was a report of the tunnel collapsing, so we waited there to see if it was -- could be substantiated, and I asked the dispatcher if he wanted us to respond via the Brooklyn Bridge. He said just stand fast, and see what we can find out.

So after a few minutes, we ended up continuing to go to the tunnel. We got to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel on the fifth alarm assignment, and we were there a few minutes, and then we got ordered to go back to the Brooklyn Bridge to respond via the Brooklyn Bridge, so we went with other fire apparatus to the Brooklyn Bridge, and then they wanted us to go over the bridge at well-spaced intervals, which we did.

So we ended up going over caravan fashion, and we went down Broadway to -- past City Hall, and we parked the apparatus somewhere around there, got off the rig and took CFR-D supplies, and we made our way down towards the towers, which I believe both had already collapsed.

We went into -- this is 5 World Trade Center? And we assisted in -- actually, we ended up getting some extinguishers -- the 42 chief, I believe it was the 42. I'm not a hundred percent sure, but we were operating with them, and he had ordered us to round up any extinguishers we could, because there was a civilian trapped in the -- I guess it was in the basement part, because we went in the 1st Floor down the escalator, one story, and he was trapped in some debris from the collapse, and there were small pockets of fire there.

So we went out and got some extinguishers, what we could find, came back, and we were putting out the pockets of fire while the truck company was disentangling the civilian. They put him on the Stokes stretcher. We had CFR-D supplies. We put oxygen on him, and he was heavy, and ended up assisting pulling him up. They used a utility rope or a life rope, and they pulled him up the stairs and got him out.

After that, we got separated from the chief, and basically were looking to find out what we could do to help, so we came back out and went back to the rig, and then we supplied an engine that was supplying the tower ladder putting out fire, and they were moving.

We ended up -- we were there till about ten after three at night. We did some other things, just assisting with some hose stretching, whatever. It was a little disorganized in terms of orders were given, and people were going back, and there was water supply problems, pressure problems.

Then was it 7 World Trade Center?

Q. Yes, collapsed.

A. That collapsed.

Q. Around five o'clock.

A. They had figured they knew that building was going to come down. It was just a question of time, and everybody was awaiting that.

When that came down, we were in a safe area in the building. The last thing we ended up doing was relieving Engine 47. It was supplying the rig that was on -- I think it was on West Street for whatever building that was in the back there that was burning.

Chief Esposito was running that sector down there, and so we were there basically until we got relieved about ten after three.

Q. Anything else you want to say?

A. I think, you know, just the tough part was, you know, everybody did what they could do. The tough part for me was just basically trying to maintain some sort of command structure and accountability, so the chiefs knew where I was, and I knew where my men were, and that was -- because we lost the chiefs that we lost, that was weak. I mean, that made it difficult to try to -- like I said, I just didn't want to go out and do whatever. I wanted basically to feel like I was operating under a sector.

BATTALION CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Thanks a lot for your cooperation.

The time is 11:40, and that concludes this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER WILLIAM CIMILLO

Interview Date: January 24, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KEMLY: This is Battalion Chief Ronald Kemly. Today's date is January 24th, 2002. The time is 1350. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual, Firefighter William Cimillo of Ladder Company 49, from the Fire Department, City of New York. The interview is taking place in the quarters of Engine 68 in the Bronx, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Would you please tell me what happened to you on September 11th, 2001.

A. I was working on the engine for a guy, one of the members here, who went away. We had an accident on the Degan. About 8:30 in the morning. We came back approximately quarter to 9, when they sent us right back out. We noticed on TV that there was an incident down at the World Trade Center. We heard something over the radio, but we didn't know exactly what it was. When we got here, we realized what had happened was a plane had hit the World Trade Center.

They sent us, 68 Engine, down to -- we originally thought we were going all the way down to the World Trade Center, they sent us to a staging area at 35 Engine in Manhattan. We got there and were there for maybe five minutes. A bunch of Bronx companies were there, about five of us, five companies: 83, ours, 64, somebody else. I don't know who it was.

When we got there, we were there for five minutes. They sent us right down, right down to the World Trade Center, on the west side. We responded down there. It took us a little while to get down there.

On the way down there, the first building had come down. We had no idea that the first building had come down at that point. We were on the rig. We heard something about a collapse, but everybody was thinking that it was just a floor or whatever.

We had no idea the first building had come down, or even that that first building was -- ah, that the second building was struck by a plane. We had no idea.

We get down to West Street, and there was emergency vehicles everywhere. So we had to park maybe eight blocks away. I'm estimating about eight blocks away.

We grabbed our gear. We looked up and saw how much fire was in tower two, which was the building that got struck first. Since we were on the west side and that was the north tower, that's the building we could see clearly. We saw fire everywhere.

So we started grabbing our rollups. We figured we were going to hump -- have to put out some of the fire, realizing we're going to have to walk up numerous flights. We put our masks on, we grabbed our rollups, grabbed all our tools that we knew we were gonna need and proceeded to walk down West Street. As I said, we were parked pretty far back because there were so many emergency vehicles there.

I guess in the time it took us to go from 35 Engine to where we were, tower one had already collapsed, which we had no idea that that building was even down at that point. Nobody translated anything to us what had happened.

We were walking down there. They're like, "You're going into tower two. Get up as far as you can and help out." We're walking down the block. We get to about -- less than half a block away from tower two, and I just remember looking up and the top of the building just teetered and I saw the radio tower wobble and the whole building just came down on top of everybody that was there.

There were companies that I don't know who they were that were 30 yards ahead of us that were a little bit unfortunate because they got caught. We were just further up behind to turn around. There had to be about 50 of us turned and ran in every direction we possibly can to save our lives.

The whole building came down. We got engulfed with that plume of smoke and debris and clouds, the cloud of dust. I finally made it into the lobby of a building, I think up by Stuyvesant High School.

I met up with the lieutenant and started looking for the members I was with. It took us about an hour or so to find everybody. Thank God everybody was all right.

We went back down afterwards. We dropped all our equipment when we ran, everything. Everything we had in our hands, we just dropped we lost our masks, our rollups, everything. So we had no equipment at that time.

We went down to see what else we could do, but it was complete mayhem at that point. Then we went back to Stuyvesant High School and met up with everybody, and they just told us stay here, stay here, stay here. And we stayed there the rest of the day.

Q. Those companies that were in front of you, could they have been some of those Bronx companies that responded with you?

A. I'm not sure. I really can't tell. There were so many guys there and too many companies. Basically the Bronx companies that responded, we stayed in a group as we went down, because we all responded at the same time. We stayed in a group, and we were walking down West Street. We were just about to enter the building when it came down on top of us.

Q. Who was your lieutenant that you said --

A. Lieutenant Zanat.

Q. And he basically stayed with you the rest of the day too?

A. Pretty much, yes.

Q. Okay. Unless you have something further, if you remember anybody else that was there that you saw.

A. The usual stuff. You see guys you know when you respond to these things. Other than that -- it was just complete chaos.

Q. Okay. If you have any else -- if you don't, then the interview is over.

A. That's it.

Q. Okay. Thank you.

A. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL BYRNE

Interview Date: January 21, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is January 21st, 2002. The time is 1:48 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Mike Byrne from --

What company?

FIREFIGHTER BYRNE: Engine 21.

CHIEF KENAHAN: -- Engine 21 in the quarters of --

FIREFIGHTER BYRNE: Engine 16.

CHIEF KENAHAN: -- Engine 16.

Q. Mike, just tell us the events as you recall them from September 11th.

A. We got the ticket after the second plane hit. We went down and parked on Church and Vesey off from the north tower under that pedestrian walkway. We went into the tower, we were in the lobby a couple minutes. There was only one chief there. We really had no direction what to do.

Captain Burke decided we would either go up on our own or wait for someone. We went up, started our way up. We went to the bank of elevators. We pulled a lady out of the bank, one of the banks. We used a rabbit tool. Most of the banks were blown off. The doors were charred and dismembered, some of them.

Like I said, we were in the lobby for a while. There were jumpers, a lot of jumpers. A lot of companies coming in and out.

We decided to take an elevator up. 13 Truck took us up. I'm assuming it was a low riser. It was one of the only elevators that were clear, and it looked like it was working. 13 took us up to -- first they took a couple guys from my company up. Then I went up with another guy, came back down and got us, went up to the 24th floor. The whole company was there.

We walked up three more flights to the 27th floor. I don't know the time we were up there for, but however long we were up there, that's when the other building came down. We didn't know it at the time. The whole building shook. We hit the floor. Guys were saying, "Pop the door. Pop the door. Pop the door." It stopped. No smoke, no nothing. We thought something was coming down the hallway, maybe.

Again, I don't know the time frame from that time that elapsed. We got a report maybe 69th floor, 64th floor, partial collapse. After that -- there was one chief, I believe, up there. I'm not sure. He told us to start our way down, make your way down, everybody out.

Since I didn't hear that on the radio. I just heard it from -- start your way down. We were there with Captain Billy Burke, who we lost. We're like, "Let's go, Cap. We're all out." He said, "Start your way down. Make your way down. We'll all meet at the rig." Again, we're like let's go. He said, "Start your way down. We'll all meet at the rig."

I had a radio. We started our way down I believe it was the B staircase. I'm not sure. It could have been A. I talked to him three times on the way down, once in the stairwell, once on the 19th floor as we were switching over from the B to the A or the A to the B. Again, I'm not sure. I spoke to him once in the lobby.

It was the same thing all the time, meet at the rig, meet at the rig.

Q. Did he say he was on his way down?

A. I didn't even get that, no. We still had no idea the other building came down.

On the way down, like you said, people we saw, we saw guys from 8 Engine. These guys from my battalion that I knew. I saw them on the 8th floor. I saw guys, like you said, you want to know guys names that were coming in. I saw guys coming in there.

Q. That were lost?

A. I saw a guy from this house, Lieutenant -- I forget his name. It's on the wall.

Yeah, we got out into the street. It was clear. I didn't even know what happened until I was in the street about a minute. We were walking north.

Q. You were on West Street?

A. We went north on West over the overpass. There were thee of us now walked out. We walked out with 65 Engine we were just looking around. I was basically dazed, what the hell happened, what the hell happened, what the hell happened. Did the building come down? As you're saying that, the other one started coming down.

I just ran up West Street, still going north. Other guys from my company ran across the street. You ran and it caught up to you, hit the floor and just waited and covered with shit.

That's about it.

Q. You can't remember anybody else whose name that you saw in the building that's missing; right?

A. Rob Parro. They found his body. He was with Freddie Ill. Three guys in the lobby, Denis Germain, Dennis Mulligan and George Dipasquale, all from 2 Truck. I saw them in the lobby.

One of our guys, as we were walking down the stairs, went back to get the captain again, and he started helping a guy from 13 Truck, the only guy from 13 Truck that made it out. They carried a civilian down.

Those guys from 13 took us up. I remember seeing 44 Engine in the lobby. I guess they came together. It could have been 22. I saw -- I forget his name, Lieutenant --

Q. Have they found his body?

A. No, I'm trying to think of it. I'm sorry.

Q. That's okay.

A. He's on the wall there too. Kenny Phelan. That's the lieutenant. I saw him in the lobby. He was covering for a day. He just got made.

Q. Okay. If that's it, thank you, Mike.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 1:54, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER THOMAS TURILLI

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The date is January 17th, 2002, the time is 1635, AND this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Thomas Turilli of Engine 47 in the quarters of Ladder 2.

Q. Thomas, just tell us the events as you recall them from September 11th.

A. All right. On September 11th, we were watching the news and they broke in and said that the first tower had been hit by a plane. We were watching that for some time, and then it appeared another plane had hit the south tower. At that point they automatically made it a fifth alarm and we responded.

We parked on West Street, I think it is, as far as this map is concerned. Yes. We were making our way in with my officer and the guys I was working with. Just a lot of glass breaking, there were like car fires going on on the side of the street. We actually went through an overpass and we were standing underneath that just waiting for the glass or anything, just so we can actually -- we were actually going in the hotel lobby. I'm not sure what hotel it is there.

Q. Marriott? Between the towers?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. That connects the two towers?

Q. Right.

A. We went in there and then we saw Chief Galvin and we saw other companies. I saw Ladder 2 there, 22 Engine, 13 Truck. My officer said try to find a stairwell if we have to walk, so me and another guy went and saw there was a maintenance guy working there. We went up to almost like, I guess like an atrium, and we walked up that way and I saw a maintenance guy there and he said you can pick up the stairs from the third floor on up after walking up like I guess an access stairs from the lobby up.

I came back out, told him we can find a stairway over there, and he said, all right, that they want us to go to the south tower, which is I guess the first actual tower to fall down. He said there was a report of fire actually on -- the lowest report of fire they had was on the 33rd floor at that point.

There was kind of a little chaos. We didn't know really where we were going to go, guys were deciding to take elevators, not to take elevators. There was a security guy there who said, actually, I can get you up on an elevator if you want to follow me. So we went with 22 Engine, 13 Truck and us, walked I'd say about maybe 100 feet. We went through like a turnstile. But what he was actually doing is he actually led us through the lobby of the hotel into the north tower. We were actually, you could say, in the wrong tower at that point.

They went up. I actually had the control that day and 22 Engine went up. The elevator came back down, 13 got on and said, listen, if you guys want the elevator, we're not coming back with it. You've got to send somebody up. The officer actually said for me to give my radio to a senior guy there, Louie Cacchioli, and he took the radio off of me and he went up. We were waiting in I guess like a little almost like a cutout area of the lobby, an elevator bank. One elevator was only working out of like four elevators in that bank.

The door closed, they went up, and it just seemed a couple seconds and all of a sudden you just heard like it almost actually that day sounded like bombs going off, like boom, boom, boom, like seven or eight, and then just a huge wind gust just came and my officer just actually took all of us and just threw us down on the ground and kind of just jumped on top of us, laid on top of us. There were rocks falling and all that. The lights were still on at that point and all of a sudden the lights went out and you couldn't see anything.

At this point, there's a guy from my firehouse on his way up in the elevator. They got up to the 22nd floor and 13 Truck got off the elevator. He said to the guy -- this is before the actual collapse happened. He said to him stay here with us, stay here with me, because if this elevator closes, I don't have any tools. As soon as he said that, the elevator closed and that's when the actual collapse of the building happened. He made his way out into a stairwell and he made his way down.

When we were down in the lobby, like I said, the lights went out, there was a lot of dust and all of that kind of stuff. After about a minute or so, everything kind of calmed down. My officer just told everyone relax, just hold onto each other. He was radioing the guy upstairs to see if he was all right. He was making his way down. He said he was in the stairwell with 13 Truck, he's coming down right now.

My officer knew how to actually get out and we just held onto each other. There were security guards and some civilians, and he just told people, just hold onto us, like a human chain, just grab onto another person and we'll make our way out. We went about 20 feet, 25 feet, and we saw a light. It turned to be a light of almost like I guess a restaurant area. He said no, that's not the way out, and he said just keep on going straight. In about another 25 feet to 30 feet, there was windows, I guess, lobby, ground-level windows that were blown out, and we just walked out of there.

Two guys I was with said they were hurt and everything. So my officer, myself and the few guys who said they were hurt, we walked them across the street and we brought them to an ambulance. At that point we were kind of standing on the street and I looked to my left and actually I noticed the tower was down. I didn't even know what it was when we were in there. It just seemed like a huge explosion.

Then my officer said you all right? I said yeah, I'm fine. That whole time he was actually going over the radio with our control man saying you making your way out? He said I'm out in the street right now. I'm fine. So my officer said all right -- you could hear Maydays going over the radio at that point. It was just so many, I really didn't know where they were coming from.

Then we started walking actually back towards Tower 1 and a cop and a Battalion Chief came up to us and said just start running the other way. The other tower is coming down.

Q. Who told you this; a cop?

A. A cop and a Battalion Chief. We were kind of like standing next to them. I stayed with him -- I was with the Battalion Chief at one point and I started running up the street and I kind of lost track of all the guys I was with. The two other guys who I actually brought to the ambulance, the ambulance guy said you've got to get out of the ambulance. They just started running towards the water. We started running, myself, the Battalion Chief, the cop, my Lieutenant was with me at that point, up West Street, and you just heard a rumbling, a huge amount of rumbling, and I just dove under a car, and I was with a guy from I think 138 Truck.

The tower came down, the second tower came down, and then just a lot of chaos, you know, the same thing it was like inside, it was dust and all that other stuff flying around. I think it was like five minutes before things cleared up, and I saw a light and it was just the light of a rig, the flashing lights, and then it seemed like more and more guys were coming out of the cars or wherever they were hiding. I met up with my officer and the guys I work with, and they were just saying everyone just go back a couple of streets just to regroup and then we'll go from there, and that's about it.

Q. Okay. That's it?

A. Yes.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: All right. Well, thank you, Thomas. This concludes the interview. The time now is 4:45.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER EDWARD KENNEDY

Interview Date: January 17, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today's date is January 17th, 2002, the time is 3:28, and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with firefighter Edward Kennedy of Engine 44 in the quarters of Engine 53.

Q. Ed, just tell us the incident as you recall it on that day.

A. We weren't dispatched until the second plane hit. We were watching. It was in the house watch we were watching as -- you know, we turned the TV on like everybody else, saw that there was a hole in the side of the building, weren't sure whether it was a little plane or was it an implosion or an explosion. But as we watched the TV, all of a sudden the second plane flew in there and hit, and with that we knew right away, we thought it was an act of terrorism.

A minute or two after the second plane hit, we were dispatched to 2 World Trade Center. So as we got ready to go, everyone got in, we took off. Instead of going to 2 World Trade Center, they gave us information on the radio to come down 11th Avenue, that the police had cordoned off 11th Avenue, and that's the way we went down. They had it all cleared. 53 Engine, as a matter of fact, was right ahead of us. We just followed them down.

We parked on West Street. I really don't know exactly where because there were so many rigs and stuff but back a ways. We had to walk down a few blocks to get down. The lobby command post at that time -- we took extra bottles with us, and the lobby command post was set up across West Street. I guess it had originally been in the towers, I heard, and the flames had come down into the lobby and they had moved across West Street up in front of I guess it's --

Q. The Financial Center?

A. -- the Financial Center. They had the command post set up there and they lined us up and they told us that there was a -- I thought it was a parking lot. From what I understand it was a loading dock. So they wanted the engines lined up on the entrance, the trucks lined up on the exit. So we lined up there. The officer had checked in already and we were standing across from 1 World Trade Center and looking up, I had the hose on my shoulder and my mask on and, of course, I'd never seen anything like it, 20 floors of fire. I'm looking up and I'm supposed to go to Yankee Stadium that night and it's 9:30 in the morning and I knew right away, I said, whew, I ain't going to Yankee Stadium. I never thought the building, looking up at it, would fall, but I did figure that -- I knew right away that we couldn't put the fire out. I didn't think we would be able to put the fire out. I figured the fire would have to burn out. It was a minimum 20 floors of fire I thought.

As I looked up, some debris was falling and then people started jumping. The scary thing is, as the people were jumping, I was counting, and I got to 15 before an officer from 16 Truck finally said, guys, we're losing our focus. Don't look. We can't help those people. We have to focus on maybe putting out the fire or trying to help the people we can. Turn around and maybe look in.

That's what I did. I turned around and looked in and there was a priest there, one of the Fire Department chaplains, Father Delindick I later found out. I never knew who he was. But one of my members, the guys in my company asked him if he would give us absolution. He gave us a general absolution, said a few prayers, and he said to be careful and with that, shortly after that, people still were jumping and stuff, an officer came and said 44? We were instructed to go down West Street.

So we left our roll-ups and our masks because we were going to go down West Street. We were ordered to go down West Street and make sure that a lane on West Street was kept open because vehicles were coming in via Brooklyn, coming around the east side drive, coming up the drive, all kinds of cops, emergency vehicles, fire apparatus and everything, and they wanted to make sure that emergency vehicles would be able to get through north and south on West Street.

So as we headed down West Street, I did get a look at the second building, which was far worse than No. 1. When we were standing across from 1, you really couldn't see to No. 2 as well as -- you know, you could see the smoke, but you really couldn't see how bad it was. When I looked, you could tell it was worse. It a lot more fire, it seemed, and it just seemed worse. But as we walked down, we were telling guys, you know, keep your rigs on the side. We walked in front of the hotel, keep your rigs on the side, make sure that we can get through.

As we walked down, there's another overpass on Liberty, right on Liberty and West. There's another overpass. As we got to there, there was a Hatzollah ambulance there, two Jewish fellows, and they were a little nervous and they were asking, if we have no helmets, what are we going to do? We told them, well, don't walk out. People are jumping, debris is falling. My advice to you would be get in the ambulance and go south, get away from here, because stuff is falling down.

As we said that, I turned to our left, the officer was there, there was an SUV burning on the left-hand side. Now, there's an escalator that comes down off of that overpass. It's a walkway down. It was right next to that. His thoughts were, even though there was like 45 floors of fire, that this might in some way lap up into the air and maybe catch, you know, set that on fire. So when he said maybe we should put that fire out, two of our guys said okay and they ran from under that overpass. They went west. There were rigs park there, a squad and a couple other rigs, and they went over there trying to get Purple K extinguishers or some kind of extinguishers.

As I looked over by the Marriott, I could see 65 Engine was on the corner, hooked up, and hooked up into the Siamese. That's one thing I can definitely recall that. I'm trying to recall a lot of different things, but that I definitely remember seeing. But as the guys ran over, I also saw that there was a company, I don't know where they came from, there was a company, they were hooking up to the hydrant which was right on the corner of Liberty. They had the same intentions. They had grabbed a length of hose, just hooked up to the hydrant and were starting to open up the hydrant just to put the fire out there also.

So when I saw that and I saw our two guys were going over, I said to the Lieutenant, well, I'm just going to walk south down here a little bit, tell these guys that are pulling in, 113 Truck had just pulled up and they were on the west side of the street and there was another rig coming up, and as I said to the guy with me, Richie Boeri and I, I said to Richie, well, okay, we're going to walk down there and just tell these guys not to block, you know, keep the road open. We took two steps, there was a tremendous boom, explosion, we both turned around, and the top of the building was coming down at us. With this I just turned to Richie and said run.

I ran half a block down, stumbled. My helmet came off. I was like a fox looking for a hole. I just saw a car, saw the back of a car, dove under the car without my helmet, covered up and held my breath as all the debris and all the wind and everything broke the windows on top. I'm thinking I've got my back -- I don't have my mask. My mask I left up by the command post and now I've got my rear end underneath -- you know, the gas tank is right on my back and I'm thinking, if something falls on this, I'm dead, and I'm thinking, well, maybe something is going to come down the side and I'm just holding onto my head and just praying to God that nothing kills me.

So I was trying to hold my breath. I was trying to get the stuff out of my mouth. I opened my eyes twice. It was pitch black and it sounded like a hurricane coming through. The glass on the car was breaking and it was just, you know, as things settled, it seemed to me it was like 15 minutes. It probably wasn't 15 minutes, but it just seemed to me like it was about 15 minutes. I was underneath the car and then all of a sudden it kind of lightened up. You could tell it kind of calmed down, everything lightened up, and I was pulling stuff out of my mouth, trying to breathe. I had pulled up my hood to try and get it over my mouth so that I could at least breathe a little bit.

I started talking on the radio to see if any of our guys. I called for the control man. The control man was with the other guy that I said that had gone to get the Purple K or extinguishers. When the building exploded, they ran down Liberty towards the water, and I only got in touch with the control man. The backup man -- I mean the nozzle man didn't have a radio. I said Mattie, Mattie, are you okay? He told me I think I have a broken ankle. I think I have a broken ankle. I said where are you? Where are you? He says I'm heading to the water. I'm heading towards the water. So I said, okay, you head to the water. I said have you seen Bobby? Have you seen Bobby Reeg? Have you seen Bobby Reeg? He said I don't know where he is. I don't know where he is. I said okay, Mattie, head to the water. We'll meet you at the water, I said, but you're sure you haven't seen Bobby? He goes I don't know what happened to him. I haven't seen him.

So with this I roll out from underneath and it's like snowing, it's like ash, it looked like snow, and as I rolled out from underneath the car, I noticed that the officer, my officer, who was a covering officer, had run and he dove -- I dove underneath the rear of the car. He dove along the driver's side, along the curb, put his face down there, and he was there. I turned around and I saw him, but as I turned around and I looked in the street, there was a Chief yelling in the street. He was in a daze. I went over to him to see if he was okay and I touched his shoulder and he screamed out ahhh! I said whoa, this guy got a broken shoulder.

As I turned to my left, I turned around, Dr. Kelly from the medical office was standing right there. I asked her how did you get here? How did you get here, Dr. Kelly? How did you get here? With that, she didn't even have time to answer me because the guy that I was with, Richie, who I didn't even think of at first, had turned around and he was standing there and he had blood all over his face. I screamed to him, Richie, are you all right? Are you all right? He said, yeah, I just got a cut on my head. I got a cut on my head. But his face was all bloody. But I knew he was all right, so our main concern now is we're missing one guy. We're missing Bobby Reeg. I told it to the officer, he's all right, I'm all right. Mattie's got a broken ankle. He's heading to the water. We know Richie is there. He's hurt but he's okay. Now we're trying to find Bobby.

Dr. Kelly said she's going to take -- some other firemen came over and they said they're going to come with us, they'll be all right, we're going to take them to the ambulance. Fine. So now we start to try and go back up West Street, but 113 was on fire, there were pockets of stuff burning all over the place, cars were burning. It looked like a war zone. So the officer and I decided, okay, we've got to go get Mattie. We'll see where Mattie is first, then we'll meet Mattie and we'll try and find Bobby after we get Mattie into an ambulance, make sure he's okay.

So we walked down Albany, but before we got to the water, there were people with broken legs and stuff, they were loading them in ambulances, and our eyes were really bothering us. We were spitting out stuff. There was an open store there. We went into a store. There's another road between Albany, as you go down Albany, before you get to the water, there's another street in here, which I'm trying to find out. End. It says End Street. End Avenue?

Q. That might be West End.

A. I don't know if it's West End Avenue, but there's another street in there, avenue, and it's right by Gateway Plaza, right on the corner there. There was a store there and we went in there and we got some water, tried to rinse our eyes out, which really made it worse, but gargle and try to get some of it out.

I checked a couple of ambulances to see if Bobby was in the ambulance. He wasn't in the ambulance. So I got in touch with Mattie on the radio. He said he was over by the water. We walked down one block, down to the water along -- heading up towards the harbor because that's where he was, right on the corner by the harbor. He had come in that way. We met him and as we were standing there talking, we just sat him down on a bench, people started screaming and started running from that area of the harbor, the marina, and the second building started to come down.

Just lucky for us that there was a police car, a police van there, and we jumped into the police van. We got Mattie into the police van with a couple of cops, and the building was kind of shielding us from heavy debris, but debris still came over and the dust and everything, and at least we were able to breathe because the engine was running and it was air-conditioned and at least we were able to breathe.

At that moment I'm thinking, well, maybe I should go in the water because there were boats in the water. I'm starting to get a little paranoid now and saying maybe I should take my stuff off, jump in the water, get in a boat, at least I'll be all right, because I didn't know -- at that point I didn't have any idea, you know, I didn't see the other building come down. We just heard it rumbling and crashing and people screaming that it was coming down and we ran and jumped in.

I mean, I never knew the first building that came down, No. 2, I didn't know that the whole building came down because I really couldn't see. What I saw was the top of the building, the top quarter of the building come down, and I never knew until later on that the whole bottom, that the rest of it had pancaked down, because I couldn't see because of all the dusk and the smoke and even, I don't know, how many minutes later, however it was.

Basically, we got Mattie. After we had come out, we tried to rest him and everything was pretty chaotic. Somehow alongside this plaza here, what do they call it, around the plaza, it goes down to Battery Park, right along the water, the walkway there, there was a guy with a golf cart and he had some people on it, and we got Mattie on the golf cart because he had a broken ankle, which really was hurting him a lot now. We put him on that and the guy took him down and what he did was he got on one of the boats. They stopped those boats along there and he got on a boat and he went to Jersey.

So now the officer and I figured we've got to try and find Bobby. So everybody we came across that we recognized, people from 16 Truck and whatever, we tried to look for Bobby and we searched for Bobby. We went back out to Albany Street and tried to walk up, and it was totally chaotic. We really couldn't get up that way. So we walked our way back up Albany, up by the marina and up through, and got down into Liberty Street. We were on Liberty Street and we came out into there and it just look like something that -- it looked like a bomb, of course, had gone off, almost like a nuclear bomb. That's all I could think of. I've never been at war. I equated it to being like when I saw something like when I was a kid and I saw Godzilla in the movies or something, when he crushes those buildings and stuff like that, that's what it looked like to me.

At that moment, we knew he was in that general area, but there were crushed vehicles, I mean, guys now were trying -- there was water there. I don't know where the water came from, but there was like puddles of water and stuff. I don't know if it was from hoses or whatever had been stretched. But guys were trying to climb up and look in all the stuff and stuff was still smoking and burning and stuff was teetering.

Finally, I don't know who it was, some Chief or somebody, somebody said, I want everybody on the radio, everybody back out, back out. So they wanted them to back out like into Liberty Street, back away from it. Guys were upset with that at first, but he said we have to assess the situation first. We want to make sure nobody else gets hurt. There was big metal beams and whatever they call those stanchions and stuff that were stuck in the ground, stuff was piled, stuff was teetering still. It really wasn't a safe scene. So whoever was in charge at that point on the radio was saying everybody back out, let's back out, let's size up everything, let's get everybody together, then we'll assess the situation and we'll go in and try and search and find out what's what.

So we did back out. We backed out back to the marina because then our eyes again were starting, especially the officer I was with. By the end of the day he was blind. He couldn't see at all. I was walking him around. But we went back to the marina and someone had set up a little hose there. At this time now there were boats starting to come in, like some police boats had come in there and stuff like that and they were taking people periodically, they were taking people. Now the fire boats were starting to come in and pull along, so a couple of us, we decided, you know, somebody got together or one of the officers said let's go, we've got to stretch some lines out.

So we stretched lines. We went back down by Albany Street and we had pulled out lines and we were stretching lines back out there and they started pumping and trying to put the pockets of fire here and there out. But I was between Albany, the marina and Liberty most of the day trying to find Bobby. Everybody we came across, we tried to get in there, and we walked. We finally were able to get from Liberty back down to Albany walking among the stuff and seeing stuff turned upside-down, but we couldn't find Bobby anywhere.

Finally, after about three or four hours, three hours of searching for him, I came across a guy that was the battalion aide from 13 Truck and I asked him if he saw Bobby, and he said he saw Bobby. He says he was alive. He says he knows he's hurt, he doesn't know if it's his shoulder or what, but he was slumped and they had put him in an ambulance. So that made the officer who was a covering officer feel a lot better, and at least I know, well, he was okay. I saw another guy that was driving, a guy in my company, I can't even think of who he was driving, one of the Chiefs that got killed, but he told me he definitely saw Bobby, too. Most of the day we spent -- we tried to get our eyes -- we tried to get into some -- there was a drugstore there that they had opened up and we tried to get some saline, we tried to get someone from the ambulance, they washed our eyes out because we were having the problem with the eyes and spitting up.

But right in here by Liberty, by Gateway Plaza, there was a hotel that's right there. That was on fire. Then again we stretched lines up there to try and get that fire, put that fire out. There was a fire on the 7th floor. We got the lines up there. There was enough water in the tank up there to just put out that fire. It wasn't really big, but there was a fire up there.

We were just basically standing around trying to coordinate, trying to find out what's going on and helping people, whoever was hurt, and asking if you'd seen people, coming across people, you know, do you know what happened to this guy? Have you seen this guy? It really was a total disaster, so for a while it was out of control.

Maydays? I did hear a Mayday. I did hear a Mayday for 65 Truck, and the way I understood it, I thought he was buried in his truck. I later found out that the chauffeur from 65 Engine was the guy, when I said in my story in the beginning, by where the escalator was coming down, he had taken a length of hose off of his engine and hooked it right onto the fire hydrant and was opening the fire hydrant when the building came down and he was caught right by that escalator that was coming down from the overpass on Liberty. He was buried in debris underneath there, and the Mayday was coming from -- I guess somehow he got a Mayday out, and I thought that he was in the fire engine, but little did I know that the fire engine was buried and whatever.

That was the only Mayday that I remember, and to tell you the truth, the only guy that really stands out in my mind that I remember being on the radio was Chief Visconti. I remember him talking and giving directions and this and that. But this is as the day was going on and, of course, there were so many transmissions going over. I remember him screaming about 7, No. 7, that they wanted everybody away from 7 because 7 was was definitely going to collapse, they don't know when, but it's definitely going to come down, just get the hell out of the way, everybody get away from it, make sure you're away from it, that's an order, you know, stuff like that. I don't really remember too much of the transmission about 6 Truck, but I ran into 43 Truck and they were telling me the story about it, so I kind of knew about that.

But most of the day we were just doing what we could, stretching hoses here, hanging out by the boat, going over by the marina, washing our eyes out, going back up into this area by Liberty Street and Gateway Plaza, and most of the day was just doing what we could, what little we can. Somebody was coming over here, humping hose here, humping hose there, searching through debris, looking for people.

Finally, one of the guys in my company who was on light duty came, he found us and, I don't know, sometime around 6:00, 7:00 o'clock, we made our way up to try to find my company. I heard that they were there and that the guys had come down and I had made my way back up the west side through the back way here, over by 2 World Financial Center, behind there, by the Winter Garden and up, somewhere on Vesey, and made my way up to the school, what's that, Stuyvesant school, where they did my eyes, which felt good.

Then I ran into my company and I hung out with them for maybe an hour there, and then my officer told me, you know, you're doing no good anymore being here, you've been here long enough, to go back to the firehouse. I don't even know what time we went back to the firehouse. Basically --

Q. That's it?

A. That's it in a nutshell.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. Thank you, Ed. The time now is 3:48 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PAUL BESSLER

Interview Date: January 21, 2002

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 21st, 2002, the time is 1:05 p.m., and this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Paul Bessler from Engine 1 in the quarters of Engine 1.

Q. Paul, just tell the events as you recall them from September 11th.

A. Okay. I'll start with Engine 1's arrival to the building. We responded to the north tower and we proceeded up to the 22nd floor. When we got to the 22nd floor, there was a staging area for I believe it was the Port Authority Police, and our proby was having chest pains, and my Lieutenant, Andy Desperito, gave an urgent for Firefighter Craig Dunn, probationary firefighter, which kind of slowed us down a little bit. We would have continued up, but we wanted to make sure he was getting assistance. His urgent was given and it was answered. I don't know by who.

So we were going to proceed up. He was in good hands with the Port Authority cops. While we were in the hallway, we were taking a breather, the south tower fell. We all thought it was a secondary explosion or maybe a plane, but we never knew that the south tower fell. We just knew, whatever it was, that it was really bad. So the lights had gone out and the ceiling tiles fell and we all turned our flashlights on and went into the staircase to get shelter because the shafts were open. On the 22nd floor, some of the elevator shafts were actually open. I don't know who had said it but they said, you know, get into the staircase, and we all went in the staircase. The emergency lighting was on.

Andy actually started going up the staircase, which, in my mind, I thought he's not going up the stairs. After what just happened, this is not good. There's something we don't know. He was on a mission to go up the stairs. The brothers were up. Just at that point, my radio came clear as day, "Imminent collapse. This was a terrorist attack. Evacuate." That's exactly what I heard. I think that was Chief Picciotto that was giving the order. We relayed that again, hoping that the brothers would hear it above us, and I remember the look on Andy's face, like apprehension that we were going to leave this building.

Q. What's Andy's last name?

A. Desperito. Andy Desperito.

Anyhow, he looked at me and told me to take Craig, the proby, and get him out safely, which I did. I grabbed Craig by the collar and said come on, we're getting out. I started going down the stairs, everybody behind us. We came a cross that woman, Josephine Harris, who was saved by Ladder 6. I stopped for a moment, and just as I did, the staircase kind of got clogged because we blocked the landing and just for a moment I looked thinking how can we help this lady? All of a sudden I hear somebody yelling go, go, we got her. I look up and it's Andy and sure enough he's going to help everybody, Andy, you know? We started going back down the stairs again because I figured, okay, she's not going to be left. We continued on our way.

We got to about the 4th floor and the emergency lighting now was dim, covered with white powder and whatever, and we caught up to the civilians. They were kind of backed up. What happened was, I guess, it was dark at the bottom of the staircase and I shined my flashlight and started yelling for people to move and, eventually, with our lights, they were able to see and it kind of flushed everybody out and all those civilians were able to get out of the staircase ahead of us. I was expecting like a pileup. I didn't expect to be able to get out of the staircase, to tell you the truth.

When I got down to the lobby, now the lobby was a disaster. It was slippery. It was just -- you know, it wasn't the same lobby that I came into it seemed. We got to the lobby and there was a Chief. I don't remember who he was, but he screamed at us and pointed, and he pointed towards West Street, which we went out right to the building. When I got to the apron, I looked up to see if any more -- there was a lot of jumpers and people were still jumping and we looked up to make sure it was clear, put our heads down and we ran out.

Q. Just one thing. When you said he was screaming at you, he was telling you to leave?

A. Yes. Go, go, and pointing towards West Street, just yelling, go, go, go. I expected maybe to hang out in the lobby for a little, you know, not thinking I was in danger. So we went out. We realized. We said, you know, he's ordering us to get out, so we did, and that's how we kind of got separated from our guys because now he's telling us to go, so now there's a distance between the guys in the staircase.

So we get out to the apron, look up to make sure it's clear. I was with the proby. I didn't want anything happening at this point. We just crossed the barricades and started walking and there was all that white dust in the street. It was like a five-inch snowstorm, like just fresh powder. We were actually making footprints in it. I didn't see anybody outside except for just the jumpers. I mean, we really didn't see anybody and it was really bizarre. It was surreal. It didn't make sense. There were so many people on arrival and now there's nobody, and we never knew the south tower fell still.

Just as we got towards the walkway, I looked back because I heard what I thought was another jet, and it was the building on its way down already. My guys had just came out. They were on the apron and they were just going to cross the barricade and stuff was -- the debris was on its way down and we just ran. We had our masks on. Our face pieces were actually on because the proby was having problems with chest pains, having difficulty breathing, so even when we were on the 4th floor, I made him put his mask on and I did the same thing.

So we had our masks on and we were running towards Vesey Street as fast as we could with all our gear, and as we were running, thinking we're never going to make it. It was just ridiculous to think you were going to make it. We both wound up getting knocked down by the blast, I guess, from like a pressure wave. It took us off our feet. My helmet flew off. We got up and just continued running, and then the dust cloud just engulfed us, and basically it was over our head like two or three blocks but down. It kind of went -- it's hard to explain on tape, but the dust cloud had gone further up the block, higher. The lower section was like a few blocks back. So it kind of stayed on us the whole way, and all the guys I knew were behind us in it and I never thought I'd see them again, you know.

We made our way out of there. I got Craig to an ambulance and they took him immediately, and just as they were putting him in and prepping him in the ambulance, they said there was a gas leak and we heard some secondary explosions and all the ambulances and ESU trucks kind of took off in the other direction. So now I'm running by myself in the dust with nobody left from my company, and I started calling on the radio, you know, anybody from Engine 1? I was just asking anybody seen Engine 1? I didn't get any response at all. So it was just a lonely feeling. I didn't quite understand what really took place.

After a while I found a couple of guys that I know and they said that there were guys looking for me, so I knew that a couple of my members had made it. In the back of my mind, I just never thought -- I was hoping Andy Desperito was okay, but I kind of didn't think he was going to -- you know, it was too close for us, so anybody behind us, I really didn't think they made it. I found a couple of my members and found out about Father Mike and found out that -- I guess it must have been maybe 40 minutes to an hour, they already had found Andy. They found his body. It wasn't confirmed but it was confirmed to me by guys I trust.

We made our way back to the command post, which was now on Vesey Street, I guess, and we didn't know what to do. We were there, we had no boss, and we just kind of wandered around aimlessly thinking what can we do? We can't go look for our boss. We've already found him. Like what are we supposed to do at this point? So we decided we would just go back to the firehouse and try to deal with everything and kind of report the story and try to find out who made it, who didn't, from the truck.

That's pretty much it. I mean, sparing all the details, you know.

Q. All right. Well, if there's anything else you want to add --

A. No, that's pretty much it. I got it wrapped up into a short story now.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: Okay. Well, thank you, Paul.

FIREFIGHTER BESSLER: You're welcome.

BATTALION CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 1:13 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER FITZROY HAINES

Interview Date: January 25, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 25th, 2002, and the time is 11:53 a.m. this is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Fitzroy Haines of Ladder 15 in the quarters of Engine 4.

Q. Fitzroy, just tell us the events as you recall them from September 11th.

A. The alarm came in at 8:45. That particular day I was going to work that morning the morning tour. I was there waiting to leave, me and another gentleman. When the alarm came through, the dispatcher said all units stand by. There's an explosion at the World Trade. That's all we got here.

That day Lieutenant Levy and Captain Farrell was working. They shot downstairs and said everyone get dressed because you know we're going. We're right here.

I was already down, not dressed, but I got dressed and I was the first one to come out. I noticed -- the buildings were to my left -- white smoke and paper floating our way. I yelled back to everyone, "We've got something pretty big there."

Right before the rigs came and pulled out, Doug Oelschlager and Scott Kopytko pulled up. They were working that morning. Scott bumped me off the rig. I told him he had the eyes. He said okay, and he went with the truck.

I parked Oslagger's car, because he pulled up on the first bay here, parked his car across the street, then came inside. Being the World Trade, I figured it would be on the news. So I walked into the house watch, turned on the TV, and I saw that I guess it was the north tower was on fire. I just know it was which one of them, it was way up on like the 80th floor, whatnot.

At that moment another firefighter, Tom Ryan, who was going to be detail to someone else, came in and said, "They're going to need a lot of help. I'm going to go over there." I asked him if I could go, because I was off and I'm a proby. I didn't want to get in trouble. He said, yes, just stay close to him. I said okay.

I was already still in my bunker gear.

As soon as he grabbed his gear, we went out in the street, and Battalion 4 was shooting up the street. We flagged them down, and we jumped on with them.

The chauffeur wasn't sure if he should take the tunnel or the street. By the time he had an inkling, he was already halfway through the tunnel and he got stuck. Tom and myself had to jump out of the car and run -- rushed through the tunnel and clear out the tunnel, because at that end the cops didn't know what was going on. We really didn't know what was going on either.

By then I guess while we were in the tunnel, that's when the second plane hit. I still didn't know it was big commercial planes that hit. I noticed that it was like no traffic on the other side of the tunnel.

The police officer that was out there started sending the cars back through, because by then we couldn't have backed up because there were more emergency vehicles behind the chief. We just wanted to get everyone through.

As soon as the chief got cleared, we jumped right back in. We were coming up, and I noticed that 15 Truck was by the Mayor, kind of far down from the Trade Center. I asked Tom should we get out here for our guys. He said no, stay with the chief.

I figured that was kind of weird that they were so far down. Come to find out later that they had cut an air hose and that's why they seized up a couple blocks down. I guess they got out and walked the rest of the way.

So we pulled up in front of the south tower because there was really no one in the street. We didn't see any command center. The chief told the chauffeur go down towards the north. As soon as we did, we saw the command post. I believe that was seven financial, right in the parking lot.

Q. On West Street?

A. On West Street. We were on West Street. It was more like --

Q. Near the Winter Garden atrium?

A. Yeah, right there. They were in the parking lot.

The first thing I thought was it took us all of about seven minutes to get there, but I noticed that the Mayor, the Commissioner and a lot of other officials were already there before us. I thought that was kind of weird. I found out later that they were there for a meeting earlier. So okay.

I don't know which chief it was, but he put Tom and myself under I think it's Captain Brethel, I think was his name. He's the captain of Ladder 24 with Engine 1, I believe. He was supposed to be in charge of all the fat guys that are coming down to volunteer and whatnot.

The reason why we didn't go in the towers was because we only had one Scott pack and we were waiting for more gear and more cylinders to be released. So we were under the pedestrian walk bridge that's in front of first World Trade, about ten yards away from the command center. We were staged there. We were there for quite a while. The only thing I was doing was just counting the bodies that were jumping.

I would say after a good 20, 25 minutes, the captain came up to us and said, "You guys really don't need to see this. Just go down West Street like a block and a half towards Vesey Street and stage there." So we walked towards Vesey Street, not all the way. I took off my clothes and staged there.

By the time I did that, that's when the south tower collapsed. Everyone just said "Run." I was in the street, but there were just too many people. I noticed there were too many vehicles and people coming down the street. I felt that was kind of dangerous. I jumped back on the sidewalk because I know the fence -- there's a chain link fence that runs all the way down West Street. I knew if I couldn't get out of that crowd that would be a safe reference point if I walked all the way down.

So I ran all the way down. A couple seconds just before the cloud came over me, I knelt by the fence and put my hood over my mouth and let it come over me. Then I got up and just followed the cloud out.

I found one guy that was sprawled out. I picked him up, helped him out. There was another female. She was just walking. I told her the right way to walk out.

I walked out of the cloud. I let it settle for a little bit. Then I went back out and got my coat because I had staged it, and came back. By then I found Tom, who I went down with. We were down I guess around Barclay then, staged around Barclay street, because we were waiting for everyone to form back up to see if we could get anyone out of the first collapse.

But the main chiefs that were there were just telling everyone stay put, stay put. They were sending whole companies and units down to see if they could get anyone out of the collapse.

By then I noticed -- we found I believe it was Bob Humphreys, the Engine 4 chauffeur, was walking towards us. We helped him off with his gear and tried to wash the debris off some and whatnot.

We were there for like, I guess, 19 minutes or so. That's when the second one collapsed.

Q. Now you're at Barclay and West?

A. Yeah, Barclay and West. All this day I never left West Street. When the second one started to collapse, we went down further towards the high school that's there. I think it's --

Q. Stuyvesant?

A. Stuyvesant or Lafayette?

Q. I'm not sure.

A. It's either Stuyvesant or Lafayette High School. That's where we went. We walked all the way down there, staged there. Pretty much the remainder of the day I was there, because the chiefs didn't want anyone going back in. They were trying to get a head count of who was actually there and whatnot. That was pretty much it. I stayed there for the remainder of the day.

Q. Thank you, Fitzroy.

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 12:02, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER CRAIG CARLSEN

Interview Date: January 25, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 25th, 2002. The time is 1:50 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan from the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Craig Carlsen from Ladder 8 in the quarters of Ladder 8.

Q. Craig, just tell us the events as you recall them from September 11th.

A. We were down at the medical office going for our annual medical. We got into the medical office. We heard that a plane had hit One World Trade Center, the north tower. When we got into the medical office, of course the TVs were on and everybody was focused on it.

It was approximately five minutes to 9. As we were watching the events unfold, we realized our company was down there for it. That's when we saw the second plane hit. At that point we decided to find out from -- we had our medicals, and find out if we were supposed to leave or stay for our medicals, which we got permission to leave, and we left the medical office.

We went out into the street and commandeered a couple of cars. Some people went in one car, and another person and myself had gotten into an ambulance along with another lieutenant that was down at the medical office, and we proceeded over to my firehouse to pick up gear, we realized we had to pick up the gear to go down to the job.

We pretty much got over into quarters of Ladder 8 at approximately 10 after 9 or so. We picked up our gear and proceeded down to the Trade Center. We almost caught a ride from Engine 235, and they had no room on their rig. They proceeded down, and we caught the next -- just a van that was going downtown.

As we got down to the location, we got dropped off a couple of blocks away. I don't really recall what street we got dropped off on, but I think it was Barclay and West. The lieutenant and I traveled down to where Ladder 8's rig was to find out, see if we could hook up with Ladder, looking for the command post.

I proceeded into One World Trade Center into the front lobby. Just making it into the door, I ran into 3 Truck, members of 3 Truck, which told us that there were numerous people trapped in elevator cars and that they needed forcible entry saws.

So the lieutenant and I went out to look for forcible entry saws. Of course most of the rigs that were around the area, the first few rigs, there was really no tools even left on the rig at that point. So we had to go to -- I couldn't even tell you how many rigs we looked in before we actually found the saws.

On my way back in towards coming back to Ladder 8's rig, coming around the rig, I had found a saw. I don't remember exactly what rig was from. I came to a complete halt because something came down and hit the street, and I didn't realize what it was until I looked up further and saw that there were bodies coming down, quite a few of them, which had to stop me in my place because I couldn't really get back into the building because of it.

At that point the other officer that I was with, the lieutenant, decided -- we hooked up together, and we decided that we found where the command post was now I guess relocated across the street on West, straight across from One World Trade Center.

We decided that before we went back in the building let's see if we could pick up some masks and a radio before we got into the radio, and also check in with the command post. By this time I guess it was probably 20 to 10 or so.

So we went over to the command post, which at that point my company that was at the medical office had just gotten there also. We all decided that we should just team up as a team before we went in to keep as a unit. Of course we checked in with the command post, and we were told to stand by. We checked in with Chief Ganci and a few other officers at the scene.

As we were waiting around, they told us to just stand by. They were doing something with the eight track system. They were trying to find out if they can figure out how they can control it. So they just us to stand by.

We waited around I guess 10, 15 minutes. As we were standing there looking up, we were getting an idea of -- doing like a size-up and you could see there were numerous people hanging out of the windows. Of course other parts of bodies dropping.

I guess about three minutes later you just heard explosions coming from building two, the south tower. It seemed like it took forever, but there were about ten explosions. At the time I didn't realize what it was. We realized later after talking and finding out that it was the floors collapsing to where the plane had hit.

We then realized the building started to come down. At that point everybody at the command post took off into -- there were two garages across. I guess it was by Two World Financial Center next to the Winter Garden, just a little bit south of the north bridge. Everybody took off into an underground garage.

I made it in about 20 feet inside the door, and I tripped over an EMT who I guess broke his leg and was disabled. I pretty much just stayed there and tried to comfort him. Before I had gone into the garage, I grabbed a mask.

At that point, that's when the building started to come down. It was already coming down, and you could see the force of air coming towards you. I was just trying to drag the EMT down the ramp. That's when the blast came, and now you're just trying to don the mask.

I don't remember -- time is now -- I don't have a clue with it. It seems like when it finished collapsing I heard somebody scream that we were trapped. We figured that the whole building came down on top of us and that we were trapped inside underneath the garage.

I decided to just crawl out to see how far, if anything was actually up against the building and what-have-you. I just crawled out and did a search of the area of the command post and whatever else as far as you could go. At that point, that's when we realized that we actually weren't trapped into the building.

We just waited for the dust to clear and did a search. I found a police officer lieutenant that needed help and took her out. I took her through the building and just her off on Vesey and West Street to other police officers, making my way through the building.

I started heading back down towards number One World Trade Center just from Vesey and West, going towards the north bridge. On my way back down, I was just looking, and I saw my company coming out of the building or actually from underneath the north bridge, 8 Truck coming out. One, two, three, four, five guys. I was happy to see them, that they got out. I knew they were in the building, but I wasn't absolutely sure what building they actually went into.

As I ran into them, we just started heading back up north on West Street. We made it to approximately Vesey and West, which is just north of the bridge. Then the second building started to come down.

At that point everybody just took off in all different directions. As far as I know, we just went north up West Street. I would guess we made it up to Barclay, maybe, and whatever it was knocked us down, the force of the wind or maybe pieces -- I had a Scott pack on. It knocked me down. I had lost the face piece. I just crawled underneath a DOT truck, one of the trucks, and just waited it out. This time I thought we were so close that I was not going to make it.

Pretty much the same thing, when it all started to clear a little bit -- you had a hard time just worrying about breathing. Same thing, when it started to clear, you did your searches, you picked up who you could, and just traveled northward.

Of course everything was covered up and you didn't really -- I don't recall what members that you picked up because it was pretty chaos. You did what you could, and that was about it.

Q. When the north tower was coming down, did you have any indication? Did you hear the explosions again? Did anybody warn you like they heard on the radio or anything like that?

A. I didn't have a radio, because we were coming from the medical office. So I never did get a radio. So I wouldn't have heard that, if somebody had said it.

You did hear the explosions. Of course after the first one -- the first one was pretty much looking at it like in awe. You didn't realize that this was really happening because you kind of just stood there and you didn't really react as fast as you thought you were going to.

The second one coming down, you knew the explosions. Now you're very familiar with it. Of course when I looked up, all I could see was the antenna coming down. You pretty much just pick up and take off. Everybody was on their own, I guess.

Q. All right. Thank you, Craig.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL MACKO

Interview Date: January 25, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF KENAHAN: Today is January 25th, 2002. The time is 2:23 p.m. This is Battalion Chief Dennis Kenahan of the Safety Battalion of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter Mike Macko from Ladder 8 in the quarters of Ladder 8.

Q. Mike, just tell the events as you recall them from September 11th.

A. On the morning of September 11th, it was a few minutes before 9. I was listening to the radio in my yard, and I heard a report of a plane hitting the Trade Center, or sketchy reports of a plane hitting the Trade Center.

I went to the front of my house, where you could see the towers from my neighborhood, and I saw a large fire in the north tower. I'm pretty sure it was the north tower.

I called my mom, told her to pick up my kid. I figured it was going to be a real large job. I was going to go down and maybe help out in the street or something, do what I could. I knew the guys were going to need help down there.

I jumped on my motorcycle, stopped at the local firehouse, which is Ladder 130. The officer there said they did have a recall. I got on my bike and raced off to Manhattan. I went through the Midtown Tunnel, made it to the firehouse in a relatively quick period of time. They had police lanes set up and everything through the tunnel. A lot of emergency equipment headed down to southern Manhattan.

I got to the firehouse. The firehouse was empty. I jumped into my gear. I went outside on Varick Street. An ambulance that was going down south on Varick Street stopped. I jumped in that. They made their way down what I think was Barclay Street. That's about as far as the ambulance took me.

He stopped. I got out. It was pretty much like a war zone at that point. I hadn't even known that the other tower had gotten hit at that point. I saw a few rigs. Not too many people around. I tried to look for some tools. I had my gear on. I didn't have a mask. I was actually looking for a mask.

Q. At this point the first tower was already down?

A. No, nothing was down at this point.

I made my way onto West Street, still looking for a flashlight, a radio, some equipment that I could use to maybe try and search or help out. I end up going south on West Street. I ran into a couple guys, one guy from Squad 18 and a detail that I've seen from the previous night.

We were making our way down West Street. We got just about south of the north overpass, about 50 feet past that, when the first collapse occurred. I looked up. I was awed by -- I thought it exploded at the top. Everybody I guess at that point started running, and I luckily ran north where I came from to try to run out from under this -- which happened to be a collapse, realized I couldn't. I was going to stay under the overpass.

I realized I couldn't get out from under the collapse. I dove under an ESU truck that was facing north on the west side of West Street. I dove under that and waited for the building to come down.

When the building did come down, I actually thought I was trapped, and the truck was blown off me, pushed off me, I guess. It was not there. At that point I was just really shocked and didn't know what was going on at that point. I didn't know -- I was really, really shocked.

I ended up hooking up with a guy from 18 Engine or Squad 18. Scott, I think his name was. We made our way across West Street to the World Financial Center and broke through a lobby window in there and made our way out the other side of the lobby.

At that point I encountered some I guess emergency personnel that were trying to help, you know, guys that were coming out of the collapse at that point. I sort of assessed myself and found that I didn't have any real physical damage. [redacted]

What seemed to be a few minutes later, the other tower had collapsed. At that point I made my way along the water. I was more toward the water at that point. I ran across some guys from my company. We gathered up and to figure out who was missing and tried to get a hold of who was missing.

I ended up coming back to the firehouse. I found out one of our lieutenants was unaccounted for. We made our way back -- I made my way back down towards what is now called ground zero and worked down there with what seemed like maybe 100, 150 members and chiefs, trying to do what we could to help out the situation.

I worked down there until about 1:30, 2:00. I was pretty exhausted. It was a real hot day. I did some work on a line, gathered some equipment for Chief Pfeifer, got him a mask and stuff, got some rigs running, got a pumper running. All the rigs were shut off. I moved one or two rigs into position, got them pumping some water. A lot of fires burning.

That was about it. About 2:00 I was pretty exhausted. I made my way up to Stuyvesant. That was about it for my participation in the fiasco or whatever it was.

Q. Thank you, Mike?

CHIEF KENAHAN: The time now is 2:29, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

MR. ANTHONY DeMAIO

Interview Date: January 28, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. FEILER: Today's date is January 28th, 2002. The time now is 944 hours. This is Lieutenant Monty Feiler with the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank and assigned area.

MR. DeMAIO: Anthony DeMaio, assistant deputy director, fleet services, 58th Street.

MR. FEILER: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York. We're interviewing him regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Also present for the interview is Investigator Fabiola Quevedo.

Q. You can go ahead and begin on the morning of September 11th, how you first became aware and what your actions were that morning.

A. Like work any other day here. It's a shop. I actually had left the building. I think I ran up to the post office and came back. On the way back from the post office, I saw there was smoke coming from one of the towers. When I reached the shop, at that point no one knew what was going on, although it seemed like an accident.

Most of the guys, most of the supervisors, were already up on the roof so they had a clear view of what was going on. I proceeded up to the roof. At this point we didn't know what was really happening, although it looked like an airplane or something struck the building.

I came back downstairs. At that point it was on TV. They had the TV on in the supervisors' room. At that point we didn't receive any call yet from our boss.

Q. About what time was that?

A. This was right after that first plane hit the first tower.

I came down here from upstairs. At this point when I was down here -- as soon as I made it downstairs to find out what was going on, what we were doing, the second plane hit the building, the second building.

Sometime in the next couple minutes we got a call from the control room over at 34th Street. That's when Tom McDonald, our boss, he requested that we all report to the area. Normally we do that on a fourth alarm duty or major accidents. In a major incident, one of us from either side, depending who was involved, responds. In this case he requested us all down there.

Me and Mike Felice, my boss, Mike Felice, left here, headed into Manhattan, which was -- everything was jammed up. We took the Midtown Tunnel. As a matter of fact, as we're going into the tunnel, there was four -- we were trying to follow a police car down into the tunnel. There were four firefighters on foot -- they couldn't go any further with their personal car, because everyone was told to report down there -- which we picked up and got them into lower Manhattan.

We dropped them off. We get down to West Street. We were pretty far down West Street, as a matter of fact.

Q. Do you know where you dropped off the firefighters?

A. The firefighter was on -- if I'm not mistaken, it was on Broadway. As we were coming down, I think on Broadway. Broadway comes down; right?

Q. Yeah.

A. Yeah, it was on Broadway somewhere. He was not completely downtown. It was somewhere in the teens, I believe. We ended up dropping them all off at that point, because one of the guy's firehouses was there and then from there they all --

Q. Do you know their names?

A. No. I didn't know who they were. We just knew they were firefighters, because they were asking police in front of us for a lift. They couldn't go any further, and we ended up taking them.

I think when we pulled up it looked pretty far down. We were probably parked around I think it was Murray or Warren when we pulled up to the scene. At that point when we got out of the car, we realized that the first tower went down. There was no tower there. We already realized that something happened.

We were trying to raise our other halves from 34th Street on the radio. No response. When the tower came down, we knew that they were there before us. We were starting to get a little concerned. There was no response. Communications were down. We weren't able to communicate with any of our mechanics. We weren't able to communicate back to the shop.

So we're starting towards the scene. It had to be maybe -- we were practically underneath it. We were on the other side of the pedestrian bridge. Definitely we were on the other side of the bridge. All of a sudden -- yeah, we were, because the pedestrian bridge goes over to the high school.

That's when we heard the rumble. We looked up, and the second tower was coming down. We turned around. We run out of here. I lose my boss. I couldn't find him for a while. I continued running north. Then after a while everything started to settle down, I started to work my way back.

At this point now -- we still couldn't find anybody. Now I even lost Mike. I couldn't find him. What happened was Mike had ducked into the high school. That's why I knew where we were, because we were already past that bridge. When he ran back, he saw someone had made it into the high school, and he ducked into the high school. I didn't notice that. I just continued going up.

After everything settled down a little bit, some of the dust settled down, we started to work our way back again. At this point we found McDonald, Tom McDonald. He was all covered in soot and dust. He was all right. A few minutes later we ran into the other guys we were looking for: Tom Curty, Andy Diamond, I think Lou Morbelli was with them also. They were there actually before the first tower came down. They were there before we were.

Basically that was it up to the point where the tower came down. Then it was just like trying to find where everybody was. We didn't know where all our guys were. We knew there were a lot of guys down there, a lot of the guys from the emergency trucks respond. We spent a good time just making sure we found where they were and they were okay.

Then we just started to go through -- everything started to settle down, and we started to go through the place and try to make sense of everything. It was (inaudible).

Q. Where do you think you were at that point?

A. Most of the time after the building came down, we were probably underneath the pedestrian bridge, in that area.

Q. On West Street?

A. Yeah, on West Street. That's where they set up the command post.

Q. Oh, okay.

A. Once it was a little -- after a couple hours when everything started to settle down, we started to -- actually before that we did a walk -- we did a search. We searched through one side. We came like through the Merrill Lynch building, I guess -- no, the exchange, American Express building, which was across from the towers. We walked around through the back of that.

When we came up on -- over here somewhere. It was actually -- I forget the name of the street. North End?

Q. Had the second building collapsed yet?

A. Yeah. No, what happened, like I said, we were walking towards the scene. That's when we heard the rumbling and the second building started coming down. That's when we ran.

Q. So you got there after the first building collapsed?

A. Yes, after the first building collapsed and just prior to the second building coming down.

Basically what we normally do at any operation, normal operation, is make sure that the apparatus is fueled, make sure that everything is running, there was no problems mechanically on it, whether it's apparatus or ambulances or whatever it is.

But in this case we had apparatus that was totally destroyed, partially destroyed, abandoned. We spent the next week basically trying to salvage anything that we thought was salvageable that we could kickback into service.

Our concern was that we lost so many pieces that if there's anything here that we can get back into service, you know, get it back to the shop, get it cleaned up, get it working, and get it back to the house, at least they'll have something, because there was a lot of pieces gone.

That's what we spent the next week doing, basically, is finding apparatus that was abandoned, getting them to run. Most of them had all the glass blown out of them, full of soot, dust and debris. Getting it back to the shop. Same thing with ambulances.

Then we tried to make -- we kept a running log of what we found along the way that was beyond repair. We were pulling them into the shop whatever possible so we could keep track of at least what we had.

Basically that's what we did.

Q. Is there anything else you think is important?

A. That's it.

Q. On behalf of the department, I want to thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

MR. MICHAEL FELICE

Interview Date: January 28, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. FEILER: Today's date is January 28th, 2002. The time now is 1003 hours. This is Investigator Monty Feiler with the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank and assigned area of command.

MR. FELICE: Michael Felice, department director, Fleet Services.

MR. FEILER: Regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you can just tell us on the morning of September 11th how you became aware of the incident and what actions were taken.

A. Approximately 8:45 I received a page on my pager, and it stated that it was a third alarm, a plane crashed into the World Trade Center. I looked outside, and I basically saw it was a beautiful, clear day. The first thing that came to my mind is a small little Cessna flying around Manhattan and maybe the wing clipped the building.

So within minutes I received another page, and it was a fifth alarm, a plane crashed into the World Trade Center. At that point we put the news on the television, and we actually saw smoke coming from the tower.

Basically what happened at that point I realized that it was more serious than a small Piper wing clipping the tower. I went up to the roof of this building, and I had a clear view of the tower and I can see smoke just pouring out of the tower. At that point is when the second plane went into the south tower. The south tower was struck with the second plane.

At that point I came downstairs and I picked up my coat and my handy talky. Tony DeMaio and myself responded to the incident, because we knew that there was going to be plenty of apparatus there. We were going to bring mechanics there to make sure that everything pertaining to fleet services was under control.

So we left together, and we had a problem getting through the Midtown Tunnel because of a major traffic jam. We also picked up some firefighters that abandoned their personal vehicle heading towards the Midtown Tunnel. They came with us. They got in our car.

A Police Department van was in front of us, and they sort of made room for us to get by. Once we got by the major traffic jam right over here in Long Island City, heading to the Queens Midtown Tunnel, we were flying at that point. There was no traffic in front of us, and we shot through the tunnel, shot downtown.

We got to the scene, and I guess we probably parked -- we got down to West Street, and I guess we were around -- it would either be Murray or Barclay, somewhere in that area, because there were fire trucks lined up. We got as close as we can get.

Then we grabbed our jackets and our turnout coats and radios, and we walked towards the tower. Generally we would go up as close as we can get where the equipment is and see if anything was operating at that point.

While we were walking towards the north tower, at that point the south tower already came down. The south tower already came down, and we were walking towards the north tower. We probably would have walked right up to the command post.

We passed underneath a bridge, a foot bridge. We passed underneath a foot bridge. I remember that. I'm looking at this tower, and Tony DeMaio was with me. I can remember telling him, "Tony, I don't believe what I'm seeing. I can't believe this, you know, the smoke pouring out."

All at once as I'm looking at it, I see chunks of the tower starting to come down and it was picking up speed. I can remember saying, "It's coming down." Right at that point firefighters were rushing past us. I almost got knocked over. I turned around and said, "Tony, run."

I can remember turning around, and things were flying out of my pockets. I couldn't worry about that at that point, because I was running. I ran to the left, and Tony ran to the right. I'm looking back, and I said, "God, look at this!" I can remember saying that. I could see this cloud following.

The corner of my eye, I saw firefighters diving into a doorway. There was a woman standing at the door holding this door open, a steel door, and they were diving in. I said I'm going to go in that direction. So I went to the left, and I went that building.

When I got into the building, it was a school. Right after I got in, the door was slammed closed. At that point is when all the soot and debris was whooshing by. When I got into the building there, I see firefighters laying on the floor coughing up smoke and stuff. They were laying down on the ground.

I was concerned for myself at that point also because I said I don't know really where I am and how safe I am. All I know is outside there's a big building coming down, and is it going to come on top of this small building and just crush it? I don't know.

I was in there for approximately, I don't know, maybe ten minutes. It seemed like forever. Basically when we opened the door to go out, you can just about see your hand in front of your face at that point. There was a lot of dust still in the air. The building was down at that point, but the dust was all over.

I tried to raise Tony DeMaio on the radio, and I couldn't get him on the radio. I was getting nervous because I didn't know -- I knew he ran to the right, but I didn't know if he was able to get himself protected somewhere.

I was walking around looking for Tony and any of the mechanics. I knew that Tom Curty was there. About a half hour later is when I sort of met up with them. For that half hour I was trying to raise whoever I could on the radio, and I was getting no response. Finally we met up.

Q. What frequently were you using?

A. We were using -- you know, I don't remember.

Q. Was that the 400 frequency? The 800 or 400? The fleet services tower?

A. Right, right.

We met up, and we all got together. Probably by now like an hour passed by. There was so much soot and smoke and dust in the air you couldn't even at that point get too much closer to the tower where the tower was yet until things settled down a little more.

The rest, we just tried to recover whatever vehicles we could recover to get them back. We knew that there was a lot of vehicles that were gone and a lot of vehicles that were disabled that maybe could be repaired.

Then for the next week we did the best we could to get whatever vehicles we could repaired and back on the street so the citizens of the city can still have the protection that they had. We lost almost 100 pieces, and we probably repaired 200 pieces to get them back out on the street.

We were towing them into the shop here. All the windows were blown out, and the mechanics were digging in and getting all the dust and concrete powder out. We were cleaning with hoses, putting glass back in them and getting them back out, you know.

We spent the next week doing that. We were working 12 to 16 hours a day, 7 days in a row, 7 days a week.

Q. The firefighters that you dropped off, do you know where you dropped them off?

A. Yeah. One firefighter asked us to be dropped off at his company. I don't remember the company, but it was on the way, and we just momentarily just stopped in the middle of the street, virtually. He said, "Okay. My house is right here." I said, "Okay. Good luck."

I said, "Most likely, your company's gone. They're down there." What I meant by that, "gone," I meant gone out of the firehouse; they're at the job. He said, "Okay." I said, "Good luck."

The other two guys, they came with us all the way down to the job.

Q. Okay. So wherever you parked your car -- you said it was West Street and --

A. It was on West Street, right on West Street. We got as far as we can get. Then it was just fire trucks and ambulances.

Q. Did you get their names?

A. Excuse me?

Q. Did you get their names?

A. Of the firefighters?

Q. Yeah.

A. No, I did not. It was just chaotic.

Q. Did you ever get to the command post?

A. No, never got to the command post. We were heading basically -- that little traffic jam we hit heading to the Midtown Tunnel. If we had been able to get right to the tunnel without that little bit of a traffic jam, we would have been at the command post, because we're only talking two minutes in time.

I didn't waste any time. There was no time wasted picking up the firefighters. We were stopped. They just abandoned their car. They abandoned their car on this viaduct heading to the Midtown Tunnel, their civilian car. They had a helmet in their hand and a coat, and they got in our car.

The two of them came right with us down to the scene. One of them we dropped off at his house. I forget what house it was. I didn't think of getting their names.

Everything was -- all I could remember was on the way was seeing people -- it was unbelievable. No one was crossing the street. People were just standing on the sides, looking at the tower. There was no traffic. Nothing was moving. We were flying downtown. Nothing was moving. Nothing in our way. Everything was just stopped. People were just on sidewalks. They weren't crossing the street. I can remember that.

We weren't talking much in the car either on the way down. It was like everybody was nervous because we didn't know, you know. I've been to plenty of different things before, but nothing like that. Of course nobody has.

Q. Is there anything else you think is important that you want to add?

A. I can't think of anything right now.

Q. The department thanks you for cooperating with this.

MR. FEILER: We'll conclude the interview at 1015 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KIRK LONG

Interview Date: January 28, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today's date is January 28th, 2002. The time is 1115 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER LONG: Kirk Long.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Kirk Long is a firefighter assigned to Engine 1 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Engine 1. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Tell us your story.

A. The alarm came in while we were coming back from an EMS run. It was before 9:00 in the morning. They had stated that a plane went into the towers. As we passed Sixth Avenue, we could see the World Trade towers, and we could see smoke coming from the towers. I kind of told the guys on the back step it was probably a terrorist attack because it was too nice of a day for this to happen.

Arriving at the World Trade towers, we went to the command post. We talked to Chief Pfeifer. Lieutenant Desperito talked to him in the lobby.

Q. Of the north tower?

A. Of the north tower.

Q. How did you get in there?

A. We walked through the main doors. I'm not too familiar with that area down there. At that time there was a lot of glass laying around. Mostly we were watching people diving off the top of the building than we were watching where we were walking in.

Again, we went to the command post with Andy Desperito. They gave him the fire warden's phone to use when we got to the 11th floor, to the 22nd floor, which they told us there was a command post with the Port Authority on the 22nd floor.

We made it up to the 22nd floor. We stood there for a couple minutes. I believe Andy Desperito talked to the battalion through the fire warden phones. We did locate somebody at the end of the hall, but everything was blown out. The ceiling had fallen. The drop ceiling had blown to the floor. Some of the walls were blown out. So Andy and I had crawled down the hallway to get to the Port Authority command post.

After that we went back to the members, and when the building started to shake. I don't remember anybody telling us to get out, but there was a Port Authority person with us and I believe he had orders to leave. Again, I think that's maybe why we were going.

Let me see what else.

Q. Do you know what stairway it was?

A. I believe it was B. Again, I was watching every person coming down, looked at their face, just to make them happy that they were getting out and we were going in and everything was okay.

We were also with 16 Engine on the 22nd floor. When the building shook, I was right next to an elevator shaft with Andy, crawling down the hallway. I was waiting for a flame to come up from the basement because I believed something in the basement blew up. Nothing like that happened, so I was waiting for a flame to come down from a plane. Nothing like that happened. Still at that time I never knew that the south tower had gone down.

I guess at that time we talked to the Port Authority. I believe he had to leave, so I think we were going as well. So Engine 1 and Engine 16 start to walk down the stairs with the Port Authority. We came across a lady named Josephine.

I helped her out for a while. I really don't remember what floor she was on. I was helping her out. I was blocking traffic a little bit, so they told me to go ahead and go and the next group of guys were going to get her.

Walking down the stairs, sharing my mask with a PB officer, a girl. She was having a tough time breathing. So I gave her my mask to use on the way down.

Also I came across an aide from the 2nd Battalion. Castano I think his name was. I did some work in his house years ago on Staten Island. Like I said, he was in the 2nd Battalion. He was in the stairwell waiting for the chief, and then he was going to come down with us.

Making our way down the stairs, there wasn't too many people around. We were like the only company coming down. We reached the lobby. Again, somebody there told us to leave. I can't remember that part.

There was a heavyset lady at the front doe trying to get out. There was so much broken glass. So I took my gear off, laid it on the ground so she could roll out and get out of the building. As I was leaving, there were still guys running in.

I get outside, still helping people out, still not knowing the south tower had gone down. We get outside, help some old man out. We helped him halfway down the block, I guess. We heard a noise like the plane was still coming in -- like another plane was coming in. We turned around to look, and that's when our building was going down.

I was covered up with debris. I couldn't see anything, couldn't talk, choking from all the dust. I had my cylinder, but of course I was out of air from walking down all the steps and helping out the PB officer.

Another firefighter found me laying on the ground. He helped me to another building, which this was some clean air inside the building. There was a lot of mothers and babies there. I was ready to leave. They were a little shook up because I was covered up with all this dust.

I was leaving, and they started to cry. They didn't want me to go without them. So I stayed for maybe 10 or 15 minutes until it cleared up a little bit. Then I walked them over to the west side where there were boats and fresh air.

After that I cleaned up with the rest of the members of Engine 1, all but Andy Desperito, which I later found out that day that he made it out but he didn't survive.

Later we talked to the chief, let him know who was alive and who was missing. Then we reported back to Engine 1 just because of everything was going on. And that's about --

Q. That's about it?

A. That's about it, yeah.

Q. Anything else you want to say?

A. Not that I can remember now, no.

Q. Thanks a lot for your cooperation. I appreciate it.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: It's 25 after 11, and that's the end of this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PATRICK MARTIN

Interview Date: January 28, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Today is January 2th, 2002. The time is 1230 hours. This is Battalion Chief Frank Congiusta of the Safety Battalion of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

FIREFIGHTER MARTIN: Fireman Patrick Martin.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: Fireman Martin is assigned to Engine 229 of the New York City Fire Department. We are at the quarters of Engine 229 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Pat, in your own words, if you would please tell us what happened.

A. We heard the second alarm come in for the World Trade Center. We were still in quarters. From our quarters you can see the World Trade Center. We have a veranda. We went on the roof. We were watching. Roll call happened. We all went down to the apparatus floor. We thought that we might be going, so we were readying ourselves.

We were out in the street. I saw the second explosion happen on the south tower. I thought it was a radiant heat explosion to the building. I didn't see a plane hit, but we saw the large ball of fire. It seemed seconds after that we got dispatched to go to the north tower.

As we were responding, we heard the total recall come in. We took the Brooklyn Bridge over. We got one flat tire as we were going. We kept going. I guess we were traveling west on Vesey Street. We came to West Street. There was no way to go south. So everybody got off the rig other than the chauffeur. The chauffeur started heading north.

We started walking south on West Street. We got under the first pedestrian walkover. We could see the people jumping. We could see a lot of people jumping. You could hear them.

We were going down, and it seemed like there was a command post along West Street approximately -- I guess it would be this Merrill Lynch building. Maybe it was a little further down. They told us to move 105's rig. That was the first assignment we got. 105 was parked in the middle of West Street, and they wanted to clear the way for the ambulances to get through.

So we put down all of our gear. I wasn't assigned chauffeur, but I am a chauffeur. So they had me get into 105's rig, and basically we backed it up maybe 100 feet or so to get it to the side of the road.

At that point there the lieutenant said, okay, just stand here. We'll get our gear together, and he'll go get reassigned. Time was weird. I don't know if he came back and had gone back or he was told to go to another command post. But we were standing there for a while. Basically we were on West Street in front of the hotel.

That's where we saw Timmy Stackpole standing there. We looked and he was just on the west side of West Street, basically, just north of the south pedestrian bridge. I don't know how long it was after that that the towers came down.

We were looking up. You saw the smoke coming out. We really didn't have an assignment yet. Our lieutenant came back. I can't remember if he actually gave us an assignment of what we were going to do or what, but it was right then that we heard the noise.

My lieutenant said he looked down at the first floor, and he auto see the first floor of the south tower like exploding out. I looked up. I looked up, and the sky was filled with that debris cloud. You could see the debris coming down, pretty much toward us. We were standing underneath it.

At that point there we made 180 degree turn, and we started running south on West Street. I'm pretty sure we made it under the south pedestrian bridge. I don't know whether we got all the way to Albany Street or not, but we were able to make a turn and we were alongside the building.

We didn't know that the whole tower had come down until later on. We heard it and we knew -- the whole sky was filled with the debris. You could see it coming down. Whatever it was was coming right at us. So we went.

When we were there, there was a bunch of civilians there, a bunch of firemen. We were all choking. The cloud came in, blinded, choking. We told a couple civilians to pull their T-shirt or shirt over their face.

I had my mask on. I didn't use it because I knew I was still breathing and I didn't know what was going to happen in the next ten seconds. So I said my Hail Marys.

There was pretty much a good quiet there for a while. There was an eerie kind of silence. Then you could start to see again. Civilians were starting to cry and carry on. I gave a little bit of air to people that were complaining that they couldn't breathe, told them to go toward the water, go west.

At that point I had no clue where my company was. There was nobody there. I started calling out for 229. I heard nothing.

Q. You heard nothing on the radio like to get out of the building or anything?

A. After the silence, the radio became really crowded. So my looking for my company didn't seem that important rather than the maydays that came through.

I headed down toward West Street where

I saw my company the last, and I found my lieutenant. I was control man of the day, so I had a radio, he had a radio. We decided to split up. He made me go further south. I went not much further and decided, you know, just calling out to try to find our company.

Again, time-wise I don't know how long it was. I never found anybody. He found two more guys. One guy was pretty much blinded by the dust. He couldn't open his eyes. So he sent the other guy and the guy who was really hurt with his eyes and took them to I guess it would be the Hudson River there. I guess there was a boat there that was going across to the hospital. He put the two of them on.

Then I met my lieutenant again, and he wanted me to go on the boat. I told him I wasn't leaving. We were still missing one guy. So after I told my lieutenant I wasn't leaving him alone, we split up again. This time I came up. I came up because we were by the water. We came up Albany. I went north on whatever street, End Street, to about Liberty Street and went back to the debris field. There was a lot of debris here.

Then I heard the noise again. I don't even remember seeing anything of the north tower coming down. I don't know if I saw it or not. Climbed out of the debris field, and I was alongside Liberty Street. I know I made the turn here.

In the building there was like a cutout where I could get like underneath the building. There must have been a door there; I can't remember if there was. This time I remembered I was all by myself thinking, oh, now I'm going to die by myself. I could hear the building shaking as the building was coming down. You could hear the whole building shake.

Again, you couldn't see, you couldn't breathe. I pulled my hood over just my mouth and my nose to try to keep the heavy dust out. I didn't use my mask. I just waited until you could see again.

When you could see again, I looked on West Street. There was nobody moving on West Street. I couldn't hear. There was no noise on the radio.

I must have gone back toward Liberty -- toward End Street or End Avenue, because I couldn't get into West Street. I found my lieutenant. At this point here we couldn't find the other guy. He started asking for him on the radio. We were still missing one guy.

We looked around. We decided at that point we weren't going to separate each other. We were going to stay together now. We looked around the debris field. We looked around this whole area where we were. We couldn't find anybody. Time was moving along.

We couldn't get in touch with our chauffeur, so then at that point we decided to go -- we had to go all the way up to this park to get around, because you couldn't go along West Street anymore. So you had to go up. I think we were on the other side of -- I don't know. What is this school? The school is that far?

Q. The school is up here by Chambers Street.

A. No, that's way too far.

Q. You probably came around to Vesey, because then you could come on Vesey.

A. All right. Vesey was where everybody was kind of staging later on?

Q. Yes.

A. Yeah, we must have come around this park. Is this all building here?

Q. Yeah, that's all building.

A. Yeah, then it must have been here. Yes.

Q. You could have walked through this building.

A. I don't know. The tall park, I don't remember where it was. This was all gone. We found him I think it was further north like they kept on pushing him north. Then we did find him.

We stayed there for a little while, went back along West Street, and eventually -- I think the last guy we found on the north side of West Street. I don't know how he got there, but he said -- he didn't have a radio. He said he said, "229, this is Fireman such and such. I'm okay." He said somebody on the radio said, "Okay," thinking that it was us, and he started going to work. We never heard any of that.

Now there were the four of us. At that point there we went back to the debris field. We did some hose stretching. We really were pretty done by that point to do any kind of rescue work. We helped guys stretch lines, and they had us stage at different spots along the way.

We were lucky.

Q. Anybody that walked away was lucky.

A. When the first tower came down, it was obvious if we would have ran one way -- if you went down Liberty Street -- we could have went to Liberty or north -- we were dead. We just ran this way, and it was the right way to go. We all went the same way; how, who knows.

Q. Anything else?

A. No, not that I can think of.

CHIEF CONGIUSTA: The time is 12:50, and that concludes this interview.

Thanks a lot for your cooperation, Pat.

FIREFIGHTER MARTIN:: Thanks Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT HOWARD HAHN

Interview Date: February 1, 2002

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. FEILER: Today's date is February 1st, 2002. The time now is 936 hours. This is Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank and assigned command.

MR. FEILER: Lieutenant Hahn of Battalion 50.

LIEUTENANT HAHN: Of the New York City Fire Department. We're conducting an interview in the Division 4 conference room regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Also present is --

MS. MAGGI: Diana Maggi.

MR. FEILER: Of the Bureau of Investigations and Trials.

Q. What I'd like you to do is if you can just relate a scenario of what happened on the morning of September 11th, how you became involved, and go up to the second building collapse.

A. I heard the initial crash over my scanner. I contacted Captain Sickles of Battalion 45. That day I was detailed to Battalion 45 as their conditions car. I went back to the battalion. I picked up Captain Sickles. He was on the phone with citywide. They told us to respond in to the scene.

We responded down to the staging area, which was at that time Vesey and West. Upon arrival I parked my car near north and Vesey. I went directly to the treatment area or triage area at 3 World Financial Center, American Express building. Captain Sickles went over to the command post or proceeded to the command post.

We started having a treatment area outside the American Express building. After approximately 10 or 15 minutes we felt that it was safer to go inside the American Express building, which we did.

About 10 to 15 minutes after we were inside the building, the first tower came down. At that point we moved towards the rear of the building, and then someone started telling us there's a possibility of a gas leak. So we started moving north along West Street, north towards I guess Murray Street, when the second building started coming down.

At that point we started -- everything basically became chaos. Everyone went left, right. There was no control at all. Most of the equipment was left in the American Express building around the streets there.

After the second building settled, I heard over the radio that they were setting up a command post at West and Vesey, with that, I proceeded over to that area, and I started taking instructions from the -- I think at that time it was Chief Goldfarb.

Q. When you first heard the initial incident over your scanner, were you on duty?

A. I was on duty as conditions 45 that morning.

Q. You said you called --

A. I called Captain Sickles and advised him that I heard this on the scanner. I know he has a scanner too. He told me to respond back to the battalion. I know he got on the phone with the tour commander, who apparently I guess instructed us to go directly into the scene.

Q. Captain Sickles went with you?

A. Yes.

Q. In your command car?

A. Correct.

Q. At any time were you given any instruction over the radio or telephone where to respond to?

A. Over the radio we heard staging was set up at Vesey and West.

Q. You responded after the first building was struck but before the second building?

A. Correct.

Q. What route did you take down there?

A. We went through the tunnel, FDR Drive. We got off at I guess it was the Manhattan Bridge, because traffic started backing up. We started proceeding through I guess the Village or whatever it is down there, on the streets.

Q. Did you get any further instruction on the radio?

A. No.

Q. Did you stay on Queens or citywide?

A. At that time we were on citywide.

Q. When you got into the area, where did you park your vehicle?

A. When I got there I parked on Vesey Street close to North End.

Q. By that time was the second building hit?

A. Most probably. I don't know the exact time. I think it was probably already hit.

Q. Then you made your way over to the American Express building?

A. I made my way over to the American Express building where Captain Pinkus was the command officer of that area.

Q. Did you see any other EMS people?

A. There were approximately -- at that time when I arrived there were at least eight units with stretchers and equipment at the American Express. There were numerous units already at the scene.

Q. Did you know any of them?

A. I'm trying to think. I know there was a unit from Roosevelt Hospital. I think it was 9 Boy. There was at least one Hazollah unit, with two ALS, maybe a city unit. I'm sure exactly. There were at least eight units on the scene with their stretchers and equipment by the American Express building.

Q. You were able to set up patient care or triage?

A. We set up basically -- were setting up triage and patient care, that area. Then we started to move it inside the building as a safety zone. So we were inside the building approximately five, ten minutes before the first building came down.

Q. What happened when the building came down?

A. Well, when the first building -- originally we set up at the front of the building, just inside, so if we saw anybody coming we could get them inside. When the first building came down, we moved towards the rear of the building closer towards -- the furthest, towards Four World Financial, this area over here, back of the American Express building.

Then they were talking about possible gas leaks and so on, so we moved out of the building and we moved to some other buildings along I guess it was North End Avenue. There's I know a school there that we went to. Then they evacuated that area because they were worried about gas leaks. We started moving all the way up, going up West Street.

Q. You stayed with Captain Sickles?

A. At that point -- no, Captain Sickles went originally to the command post. I was with Captain -- Jace -- Captain Pinkus. Chief Carrasquillo came in at one point, and we started running around. Then at that point it really became chaos and there was total loss of control.

Q. That's when the second building collapsed?

A. No, we basically were towards the rear of the American Express building I think more here when the second building came down. Then we started running. We were down near Vesey and West Street or Vesey and North End when the second building came down, but we were inside both times.

Q. Did you see any patients at that time?

A. There were no real patients coming to us. We had a couple patients that were full of dirt and stuff, so when the first building came down we got inside, but at that point they really refused treatment, those patients.

Q. Your command car stayed --

A. My command car originally stayed at West and Vesey. As a hole cleared up, I moved it up. I was able to get around, and I moved it up to the command post. Then I went off to do other triage areas and so on. Captain Sickles gave the keys to my command car to Dr. -- the one who's in charge overall from the Fire Department. The one who took over Giordano's spot or whatever.

Q. John Clair?

A. John Clair. He gave my keys to the command car to John Clair. He took off for wherever, and I didn't see the car for two days, and my equipment was in it.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important? Any recollections you want to share?

A. It was a hell of a day. Initially the first three hours (inaudible).

Q. Were you ever able to use your radio or your cell phone?

A. My cell phone on and off I believe I was able to use.

Q. How about the department radio?

A. Yeah, I was able to get through, but the transmissions was very hard. It was very hard to control. You're doing basically your own show.

Q. Anything else you'd like to add? No? Okay. In that case, we want to thank you for your cooperation?

MR. FEILER: The time now is 945 hours, and this concludes the interview.
